The men obeyed starting to work without delay. Near the men working under these officers was a long line of frieght cars and here thousands of Glandelinians coming up began firing upon the gaiders, the christians however capt ring cattle, pigs, and children and driving the Glandelinians away with heavy losses and then the whole train of cars was set on fire.

Everywhere could be heard the bellowing of the cattle, the grunting and squealing of pigs, and the squake of chickens combined. The ties were also burning, and the Angelinians were also beginning to destroy the rails. A few minutes after the raiding of the cars the noise of approaching wagons could be heard, and the Angelinians about a thousand or more dashed in that direction, and came upon a number of farm wagons carrying children from a burning asylum three miles away no doubt with the intention of murdering them where no one would see it going on. The Angelinians at once stopped the drivers and took them prisoners.

''Come children, come with us, get off those wagons.''shouted one of the Angelinian officers.''The idea of trying to slaughter children even in the midst of a battlefield.''

The children terrified as they were, nevertheless obeyed, and the Angelinians set the wagons on fire and took the horses. Other big columns of raiders swept over the other fields in countless numbers r ruining everything that they could not carry away. Even heading for the main farm house went many of the raiders yelling and hooting like man madmen and firing at the Glandelinians who still opposed them. The cowpasture itself was swarming with the raiders, and some Angelinians riding up to the cowboy whose name was Edward Huff ordered him to surrender the cattle. One of the Vivian girls Angeline was the one who ordered him to surrender, and amazed that only a child should order him he refused not knowing that she was in ernest and believing that she was only one of the ppayful children whom Allenberger had working for him.

''Drive the cattle out.''Angeline shouted to the men.''I'll take care of this stubborn fellow and she then ordered him to dismount leveling her pistol at him.

''I meantwhat I said.''She ejaculated with a pretty smile overspreading her pretty face.''This is no play on my part, and I'm not one of the child prisoners as you think, but the daughter of one of the main christian gene generals. I do not care to do any shooting under any conditions but just thr same I'm bound to have you know that I am just for present commanding these Angelinian raiders here. So you are my prisoner. Dismount and mighty quick.''

The man ce obeyed with a sun sulkly look and several of the Angelinians coming up led him away. In the meantime hundreds of the Angelinians came dashing tward the house yelling and firing at it. Allenberger, his wife and his two pretty little girls were at the window and they in dismay and trterror saw the Angelinians with frightfully distorted faces swarming up to the house with flaming torches and blood shot eyes. His wife at once rushed out to plead to the soldiers to spare her house.

''Oh pleaase do not sack my house.''Begged the woman peticusly.''Oh please spare it.''

''It's our orders madam ''Said a lieutenant.''Can't spare it unless that little girl over there in the cowpasture directing the driving of the cows says so, and which I know she won't. Go and plead to her if she will listen.''

It was quite a distance to the pasture and the Angelinians were already swarming tward the entrance. she reached Angeline however, begging as piteously as she knew how, near to children clinging to her dress in abject terror of these ferocious Angelinians who were making terrible fires, and filling the air with clouds of smoke from burning, trees, barns, outhouses, and all the haystacks. Angeline looked at the woman intently, and at her frightened children, and then at the house with scorn, and shook her head.

''No''Was her answer.

Another rush of men swept by with flaming torches and bloodshot eyes tward a big wooden barn, others coming back with one thousand horses.

''fire that other barn over yonder in that wheatfield and the wheat also.''Shouted Angeline.''The Ten turning to the frantic woman she said in answer to their continual pleading;

''No madam I cannot spare your house under any conditions for if I do so I will displey my instinct. The soldiers were fired upon by your hired men without provocation and snipers pay the heaviest penalties. Us Angelinians are ordered not to spare a single thing no matter what it is.Your house will be ransacked and fired as it is my orders.You glandelinians who side with this great rebellion have no right to reside in calverinia which is not your country es ec especially in the region of the rebellion, and as you did so you must suffer for it then. Us christians are bound to surpass the c terrific onslaught upon kinderninen army by you very glandelinians and we will do so if we have to lay waste to the whole territory.''

The barns and haystacks were already going up, the barns burning like furnaces. Fences were being broken broken down and the poor woman was frantic when she saw the Angelinians already going into into the house. Suddenly one of the generals came dashing up it being Stanck and Angeline saluting sind;

''This woman is pleading for her house. shall I order the men out?''

General Stanck looked sharply at the wo man and halting his horse suddenly said;

''You will have to pay a very heavy price for your house and its possessions. Otherwise I will not save it.''

The poor woman did not know what to do. She knew that Angeline though a little girl was a superior and the daughter of one of the greatest of the christian generals. In order to save the house she offered to give the remainder of the cattle.

''All the cattle are already within our possess ion.''Said general Stanck.''And also all the horses and other an animals. We want something else. See the men are waiting for my order. Offer something or we will ruin everything. We will do anything, cruel as it seems to our supress this rebellion of glandelinia. And this onslaught upon kinderninen men had got to be put down. It is lasting too long already.''

Just then violet came up, and took in the situntion.

''Well hurry up.''Said the general cooly.''I haven't got time to wait.Offer some thing or your house goes up in flames.''

Violet felt sorry for the lady, especially her children,and said;

''Haven't you got something you can give? Anything you wish? But it must be something. Otherwise we will have to sack and burn your house. If you own the farm you can spare something. Give and we'll even withdraw the raiders and spare the rest of the farm. Hurryurry the men are impatient.''

''You bet they are impatient and I won't ask again.''oared general Stanck.

''I'm a Cathâ ic Catholic''she answered sadly.''My h usband is a prisoner among your men for firing upon them and will be killed for it now and yet only taken for defending the farm which he had a right to do. You call yourselves christians, yet you want to destroy a poor womans only home. I have nothing to give, but if you were christians you would spare my house.''

General Stancks face whitened at this answer which stung him to the quick.

''hat's that!''He demanded. ''Dare to speak to me like that you glandelinian female fiend. Why I'm a better Catholic than you are down you. Boy's)))---.''

''Oh please don't '' screamed the woman falling on her knees and raising her hands in despair. I ''I did not mean to say such things. Think of your own home. You would not like to have it destroyed. spare mine please.''

''I have more than one home that was destroyed.''Declared general Stanck fiercely and with a maglacent look that made the glandelinian woman shrink.''And by you very glandelinians. Even when I was a little bly boy in Calverinia w living with my father, I was made an orphan with my two brothers and one sister on account of you glandelinians assassinating my father and mother because they refuged some little child slaves, and even last year during the first portion of this war my own daughters suffered untold horrors and then were massacred, and now you fiendish glandelinians add to it by terrible abuses, rebellions against God and all christianity and by terrible persecutions. Most of you are Free Masons, those hated Masonic Glandelinians by whom many of my countrys children have already been butchered by, and two of my children have escaped death ten times before they at last perished, and yet ye laugh behind our backs. Heavy is the price t save your home. Glandelinians are not allowed to own property in this country unless the rebellion is supressed.''

''Not my children.''Begged the woman.''I would rather die than part with them.''

''So would I rather die than part with my own and yet they are gone.''Said the general furiously. And I would not have your children for all the money in the world. I do not want my hands spo l spoiled with Glandelinian guttersnips brought up by their parents on the road to hell and away from God, and centepedes. And no children can place those already butchered. And if I wanted I could take your children away right now. To save your house give information of the best point of Federals flank and also give fifteen thousand five hundred dollars to the support of the christian army. You are rich, and you have it. Fork it up, and give the iinformation or down burns your house.'' give me back my husband and I' ll give you one mio million five hundred thousand dollars and the information.''Said the woman.

''othing doing on that line.''Said general Stanck with a wicked sneer''He a noninstant, a farmer fired upon my men without any provocation and the penalty is death if your farm hands had not fired upon the soldiers and who were also all captured, this raid would not have happened. You got to give up the price I proposed or other wise all your possessions and money shall be taken away, and your house destroyed in the bargain, and you made also a prisoner.''

''The woman hesitated and he understood her hesitation and said'|

''He dare take me for a black liar! Ten thousand furies.Your house goes up in Green Boys find the money and sack and burn the place. you officers arrest her.''

This was obeyed and soon several men came back with a trunk full of money rolls, each containing a ten thousand dollar bank note, and these general Stanck kept within his possession.

''On with the destruction.''Shouted the general.''And chop down all those trees that border the fence. Hurry Violet, take your r raiders and forge around the asylums and raise everything there.''

Then wheeling his horse he was o f in a moment while twelve thousand of the raiders swept in the dirgution of the asylums. Reaching the railroads again they came upon twelve thousand glandelinians who were advancing to save the farm. At once there was a merry fighting both sides charging back and fo th forth but at last the glandelinians were swept back with the loss of I,922 to that of the christians I,224. These glandelinians were driven as fas far as the asylum, the Angelinians destroying h the dispensary, the Boiler house and laundry belonging to the asylums. The central building was also destroyed, but coming upon the cottages where sick children were kept the Angelinians again met a considerable force of glandelinians.There was some fierce fighting around the buildings which lasted several minu minu minutes and for a time it seemed as if the glandelinians were getting the better of the conflict, when the Angelinians suddenly reinforced defeated these glandelinians and scattered them like stuff not losing over four thousand one hundred ninty three. The glandelinians lost three thousand two hundred. Nothing was done to these buildings however neither to the asylums for the christians were not inclined to harm any of the children as they were mostly all Angelinians and Calverinians. he children nevertheless were frightened at the approach of the raiders and scattered from the playgrounds like sheep before a hre herd of wolves. There were children who did not get away for in fleeing they tripped over a twig. They were Margert Ford, Angeline ishee and Jennie Turner who had been carrying on the glandelinians in the location. he Angelinians treated them al right and telling them not to be afraid of christian soldiers, and telling them they would not be hurt. They at first hardly believed it for they dreaded at first that the christians were glandelinians in disguise.

But they soon found out their mistake for the Angelinians only set them free telling them that the rest of the buildings would be spared. A portion of the main body of raiders came upon another large farm not far away and here encountered the housing Angelinians of glandelinians who had themselves been sacking the farm ransacking and burning three of glandelinians who had themselves been sacking the farm ransacking and burning the buildings. The glandelinians here were superior in numbers and opened a furious fire checking the ANgelinians for several minutes.

''Form form into line.''Screamed their officers.''We must not let them get the best of us or we wil be effectually routed.''

The troops did form a long line each man twelve feet apart and they returned a fire that was hot and then as more Angelinians came and rushed forward, the glandelinians had resolved, the Angelinians dashed after them attacking them furiously and taking many of them prisoners. Now Stanck gathered his raiders together and resumed his charge with his whole force which had gon on however during the raid, and soon did General vian wanted making the furious turning movement, the battle along his lines raging fiercely.

For one million one hundred thousand of the Angelinians made a quick and furious charge the glandelinians indeed being throwing into the greatest confusion. A fatality among had attended the charges for at very attack generals had fallen, but as fast as they fell there were others to take their places, but now the spirits of the Angelinians began to fail as Stanck fell severely wounded. The quick eye of Violet and her sisters roved to and fro over the battle fields in a vain endeavor to discover one fatal mark marksman but amid the wild confusion of the conflict, it was impossible to distinguish them, and they resolved to try another method.

When the word was again given to advance general Tom Maurice Benlilligan leading the charge the vivian girls curbed their fiery steeds and glanced over the battle smoking fields with their glasses again. They saw the gallent advance of the millions of troops and of the soli soldiers dropping in countless numbers and pouring deadly volleys into the enemys lines, and at the same moment saw bluf puffs of smoke curl up from a column of bushes at the left of the troops, and the general and three others fall as their comrades had done.

Quick as thought violet and her sisters put spurs to their own horses and drawing their little sarp sabres dashed forward.

There was a line of boulders around which had sprung up numerous trifty roots making a complete hiding place.. Here five landelinian sharpshooters were concealed rifles in hand coolly picking off the christian officers. As violet and her sisters approached the grey grayccats raised their heads with grim smiles of satisfaction on their faces when like a whir,wind seveeral Angelinians rushed down upon the sharpshooters cleaving their heads to the shoulder just as a shell brought down all of the horses the little girls rode, and the troops cheered by the death of the fatal marksmen rallied to a new charge but again were unsuccess ful though it was found that general indermine was being fully relieved of the pressure on his own right and left by this time..

During all this time general Robert Vivian learned that general Manlet the main commander of this fiercely battling army was sending forward immense divisions with the intentions of reaching the hills of Cheesetown first. He also la learned that of general Manlet succeeded he could force Hanson and himself out of his almost unassailable position and foil all att empts of Hansons christians to capture the city of Phelantonburg. ghe he rode over to general Hanson who had seen that indermine foes were finally repulsed and said;

"Your excellency, since you have repulsed indermines assailants the third time I wish you would allow me to take my force which I now can still reenforce steadily and race the enemys positions for Cheesetown, for the enemy are intending to get there and take possession of the hills which are in a position to infilade my lines. If they get there first we are surely beante beaten no matter how many attacks we could make."

"All right."Said general Hanson."I'll reinforce you with more men and swell your command to twenty three million and you can do it.You must get your positions stretched across the point first and take immediate possession of the hills."

General ivian however was not able to make the intended attack, as proposed but he got to the point first anyway and finding this out general Manlet had sent one half of hid force to engage general ivian at eleven thirty, and had all his batteries open a galling fire upon general ivians center and the battle was once more in full sway. Aroused by a firing more tremendous than ever before general ivian was compelled to order his other troops up and now it was seen that big forces of glandelinians under general Edward Zimmermann was attacking in full strength and again the carnage was general all along the line.

The firing along general ivians whole line had now become so terrific that the battlefield seemed to be burning and swelled by heavyreinforcements promished and sent by general Hanson ivian he had spread the men far and wide through the woods, and on the hill tops and the landelinians came rushing forwardin many divisions these divisions throwing themselves heavily against the christian lines whose firing vfilled the woods into a very seething inferno and made the hills look like volcanoes iner in eruptions.

T he battle became f e fiercer and fiercer and every division that faced the fierce christian fire were cut to pieces and forced to recoil. puring the fierce struggle Violet and her sisters with their boyscouts were doing f frantic s signalling, but there were several lonely spots at one point of t he signal line where the boyscouts were allowed to signal on horseback. The horses continully came into camp without their riders, and so other parties of boyscouts set forth to discover the fate of their missing comrades b t no trace of them were to be found, and there seemed to be no firing at this point whatever. Thus minute after minute a riderless horse appeared until the boys shrank from their post at the signal stations for there was a nameless dread of being selected for a mark, from some secret foe. Those who would have advanced to the cannons mouth shrank from this new unseen danger.

Lots were cast and minute after minute some por poor boyscout went forth to meet his fate distined to greet his comrades never again. yi Violet and her sisters had watched the affair with the keens keenest interest and disdain and resolved to shift the matter throughoutly themselves.

Violet toruned to her sister joice and said;

"Let's signal to the Angelinians at that point. I know the danger we are to incur and am prepared to meet it. We may as well die as any more of our poor boyscouts. I am firmly resolved to solve the mystery that hangs over the fatal spot."

Then turning to a lieutenant of the boyscouts she said;

"I request you to let a large company be ready to come to our relief If I give anxa an alarm by shouting or shooting."

"All right violet it shall be done, but please be wary and cautious won't you? We hate to lose you little girls."

"I'll be as slick as a savage never fear."Laughed violet."We are too clever to be tricked.I know that some landelinian sharpshooters are picking off my boys like that all right and am bound to pick them off in turn."

When it was known it was their purpose to offer themselves to signal at that dangerous point the other boyscouts regarded the little girls with wonder and admiration and parted with them with the fl feeling that they should greet them no more. Left alone violet and her sisters commenced their signalling with their flags, doing it in the very same point where the other boys had been. It was getting darn dark now on account of heavy smoke clouds from some great far beyond the battlefield and so the little girls surveyed the ground all around wit very closely as they signalled now with signal lights. One one side was a large swampy tract of land covered with tall course grass and concluding that danger would come from that location the little girls kept their senses all alert pacing back and forth while waving the lights, then all of a sudden amid the swamp grass they heard a low sound and as it approached the little girls concluded it was some wild hog or puma as numbers of said animals were prowling around near this location. But as it came nearer and the tall grass parted at the top as though some large body was making for the spot they occupied they watched it more curiously soothing their horses which showed signs of restiveness. As the parting grass came nearer still and the grunting sound louder the little girls cocked rifles and fired. To their surprise six huge glandelinians, all snipers arose sprang up and fell back, and all was silent. violet and her sisters then continued their signalling well knowing that their friends would appear to their help. In a few moments a hundred and fourty boyscouts hurried to the spot.

"hat made you fire? what have you seen?"Were the hurried inquiries.

The little girls explained in a very few words what had taken place and the boys hurried to the spot pointed out in the tall grass where they found six totalwart glandelinians lying severely wounded with ugly cutlasses grasped in their hands dripping with blood. One of them was mortally wounded and dying fast. for half an hour they had approached the unsuspecting boyscouts who did not think it worth while to alarm the others either by firing at a wild harmless hog and so the wily glandelinians could spring upon them dispatch them with one blow drag their bodies into the swamp the glandel nians not being literally the child butchers, but doing this in a fierce endenvor to stop the signalling of the boyscouts. Violet and her sisters were indeed praised for their brave deed by the boys for it was indeed an extraordinary occurance.

All this while the battle had raged fiercely with Edward Zimmermann and general Hansons whole line. Indeed it was during this part of the battle that that poor violet and her sisters witnessed the most impressive se scene in their lives. It had been a fearful scene of slaughter. Zimmermann had thrown forward his main left center in all twelve ten million glandelinians streaming across the open disdaining all cover and with nothing of a surprise in their attack suffering the most hedious losses, but not giving in until absolute impossibility of an the attempt was proven beyond a doubt and when the flower of zimmermanns army had been almost annihilated.

They made three desperate onslaughts before giving way and then again the tide of Zimmermanns divisions came on to the attack many flags rising out of this dense horde of glandelinians whose drums and war cries could be plainly heard for this miles. These masses continued extending across picknells right front untill they were enveloped by them the ranks being one hundred fifty deep mostly rifle and swords men on horseback they being the Onarian Curdes.

A forest of multi-colored banners and brilliant crossed flags waved over their heads each man having his own regular standard these flags being regarded with the same feeling of loyalty and reverence by those who fought under them as are the colors of the Angelinian regiments. The thirty thousand Angelininn artillery availed them selves of such an opportunity for such a huge target it was impossible to miss, broadside after broadside of grape shells and canister dropping into the yelling crowds mowing them down in perfect waves and tearing thousands of big gaps in the solid line of attackers. when the christian rifle fire opened. The glandelinians fell in hundreds of thousands, swaths of banners sinking to the ground but rose again and fresh bearers replaced th ose who had fallen only to fall in their turn. ut it seemed that nothing could stop these astonished divisions in gray. They never paused a while once their only object was to get to close quarters and they pressedon with unfinished valor and ardue ardour though there was no gleam of success to encourage them. with a strong growing consciousness that they could hardly touch their foes they came on for two miles in the face of the pitiless hail of bullets and ghastlies from the cannons. ut flesh and blood could not stand it. he big columns faltered, broke up into fragments, fell back leaving an appalling proportion of dead and wounded on the ground, then again rallied and went onward to be crushed to fragments, rolling gathered for fresh strength, cut to pieces again, only to rally and going at it again, but it was futile though five mill ion went at it again and again, not not a man during this s charge reached the christian line. They fell like corn before the tornado. Only fourty thousand under general pickson got within a hundred feet of general laders brigades and from a fold in the ground caused most of the christian losses, but an infilading withering fire mowed this brigade of glandelinians down with the wounding of general Caltles pickson. Again, and again, and still again it was attempted with the fury of desperation but again they reeled back half annihilated.

From the christian fire all along the line the whole of Zimmermanns forces had been cut to pieces and rolled from the fields within four hours with the loss of millions, the woods and plains seemed to be blasting volcanoes of flame and smoke the earth both and ground and everything of description was torn up by terrific explosions

Zimmermanns army made another charge and was again cut to pieces and the whole christian line was obscured in walls of smoke while a drum drum fire of artillery from ten thousand cannon tore and shattered Zimmerman s three wings of assaulting forces like the tornado does to a small weak wooden house and the firing had grown so fi furious and frightful that it deafening all the survivors temporaily and some of the wounded for lifesand literally shook many of the men off their feet and uprooted trees from the viberation.

Poor Zimmermann strove with frantic fury to rally his troops his whole command being in terrified confusion and the vastness of the columns of christians that advanced to mak a counter assault upon his crushed lines increased his anxiety while his own cannons were brough up brought up and poured more than three thousand three hundred shots per minute. General Kindernines forces under general Henlay johnson had been rein forced by fifteen million more and these had in seried lines surged forward simult aneously and it was in vain for Zimmermann to check the furious onrush of the fierce Angelinians who issued from the region for the distance of eighteen miles like a cloud of human beings the terrific onslaught recrushing Zimmermanns lines only to be driven back mangled themselves. But it was of no use for Hena Henlay went at it again with might and main. In the meantime learning of the disaster and during a slight d lull general M3ldonia icknell brought up his whole force to the aid of Zimmermann and with the shrieking Yel lls as of millions of demons the Angelinians resumed the attack rushing forward and delivering such a sledge hammer blow that the whole of Bicknells lines and Zimmermanns combined was rolled up from the field once more with the loss of all their guns and fourty general officers. At the same time general Robert Aronburg having far greater numbers than the Clandelinians crushed itself in a thunderous onslaught against general Zoe Raes forces, the gray line swayed for a minute but parks of artillery had come up to their relief and fearful was the roar of musketry as icknells troops tried to rally and again it could be seen that Zimmermann was doing his utmost to rally his panic stricken survivors there being only six million out of his whole command left. Division after division by Manlet was sent forward to rally them but they reeled back crushed to fragments and then general Zimmermann was killed by a shell burst, and Zoe Rae went down mangled and bleeding, and general Schiller, Aberdeen, johnston Vivian, Ressurection Darger Dargin, Vivian Hendon, Cousin- time, Henry Darginin, Hanson Jennington, James Calinton, Mabbie Cabbible, Eddie Sprud Sprueder, Henry Reeling, and James Callahine were all wounded, while generals Goglornia Johnston, Johnson Hendroe, Follie Henry Floe, James Floie, and Jack golis all brothers were killed, while generals Henry Readonnia, Hannonia Jensin, general Frank Shirtsleeve, George Cattail, and Callenhine were killed also. General Bicknell himself was wounded, Cornsoe killed, Shoeman wounded, Adele-de-garbe wounded and general Shoemannia West also killed. Shoemannia Westinghouse was severely wounded. All Clandelinian generals. Icknell though he was severely and dangerously wounded retained his command and having recieved heavy reinforcements and while Zimmermanns force was withdrawn to cover repelled the heavy onslaughts of the Angelinians tearing their main line to pieces but it was in vain, mulitudes upon mulitude mulitudes of glandelinians again being mowed down, and finally Icknell being wounded two more times his army was a ain thrown into great disorder and panic and retreated in the wildest confusion the christians crushing his line all to pieces, capturing great numbers of prionsers and general bicknells among them.

Icknells men realizes that their best leader was captured lost their panic, and driven to a frenzy rallied despite the slaughter and made a headlong counter charge breaking the christian line all to pieces reca t recapturing the great general, and jimmie and Germaine vivian, and Maurice Castello and other great generals who rallied the Angelinians and hurled them forward again got severely wounded for their desperate efforts. The Clandelinians were retreating all along the line. There was now a lull, and then deciding to follow up the advantage gained general Hen lay at twelve o clock struck again. During the lull generals Nicksonia Mc-Whirther, Federal Johnston, and Thomas Mc-Hollester and Dargin had arived with their own forces and took the place of Zimmermanns command which had almost been annihilated.

So the christian wave struck upon the new forces of Clandelinians and the roar of battle was ten times as bad as before. The Clandelinians nder these commanders had spread out in a line thirteen miles in extent the Angelinians throwing themselves in heavier columns upon the Clandelinians and before these mighty onslaughts the Clandelinians had to fall back all of their leaders being wounded, Federal Johnston probably mortally wounded.

Mc-Hollesters army and Mc-Whirthers were threatened with annihilation the carnage had increased so furiously but general Thomas Federal Johnston had now come up with heavy reinforcements, with general smash-in-the-head Francis and other commanders and a fierce counter charge was maden all along the line and soon the whole christian line was retreating once more tward their own positions, Hansons whole command of assaulting columns being thrown into confusion and then the christian general Hanson Johnston wit went down with several severe wounds.

Simultaneously general Kindernines whole army was suffering terribly. Along his lines the slaughter was terrible and hearing of the occurance general Vivian had tears in hiseeyes and almost we t wept.

However it happened that the wicked Clandelinians did not follow very far. Terrible as was its defeat and repulse and also losses general Hanson vivian was not discouraged though almost broken hearted and though his aid was lying on a stretcher he continued to direct his men. The Vivian girls themselves were in sorrow for this had been a terrible blow. They had not expected such an outcome of this furious carnage, neither had they expected to see Hansons assault crushed so miserably.

"It's too bad."Said Jennie walking up to a tree with her sisters after ceasing their firing. Hansons army lost nearly ten thousand four hundred guns which were captured by the enemy, as I heard....."

"Yes and many of the christians are prisoners."Said Violet."It indeed is a terrible battle. I thought it was going to be as fierce as Calverine and Mc-Hollester was."

"It is a good deal worse."Said Joice. The firing is terrible. And my how that Richard Zimmermanns army went to pieces in the destruction of his army. No wonder he failed to win and went to his death....."

"I thought we were not going to lose any more battles...""Said Angeline.

"Yes but you know it is not over with yet..."Saif Said Catherine.....

Nicholls furious advance upon general Shoemans army also as violet and her sisters knew too well had met with disasterous effects in their own attack against the Clandelinians under general Jubilino Phillipino the conflict along his lines having raged for an hour and had been as at other points for a-while in favor favor of the christians, but happened to be that through some cause Bicknell had been flanked and swept back with the loss of 265,983. The whole christian line under general Bicknell had been shattered with the total loss of four hundred and fifty thousand in killed wounded and prisoners, while the first loss reported were in Clandelinians killed wounded and prisoners. Even now other officers had come up to Violet and her sisters telling them that many of their best beloved friends were gone, and even the colonel of their boyscout force.

"Why the colonel of my boyscout force and twelve of his staff officers during the battle along his lines fell victims to the six Clandelinian sharpshooters with their outlasses."He said."I escaped by the mercy of God and His Blessed Mother."

A great cry of terror and horror escaped the lips of Violet and her sisters these first impulse was to avenge their loss, but they remembered that the guardian angels wouldprotect those boys at least from massacre.

"O God."Exclaimed violet trembling a little her horror unabated"It is too awful Truth and it seems as if our nation will be threatened with the most awful defeat of the war if we do not make up for general Hansons repulse and----and---- and---and"

She was interrupted by the furious galloping of horses and another officer came riding up-

"You dear children are wanted at general Vivians headquarters right away, and as fast as you can get there."Said the general with a salute.Three strange little girls wants to see you!"

Violet and her sisters gasped in amazement.

"Three little girls to see me!Why are they!"

"I do not know!"Said the general."But you are wanted right away."

"All right we will be there."Said violet.

And the little girls were soon on theor horses. They started off immediately almost deafened by the continual roar of the great battle but had not gone very far when there was rushing with fearful strides fifteen Clande Clandelinians and the foremost was a giant Clandelinian officer in a thick green uniform made a sudden rush with drawn weapons shouting;

"The little girls are under arew a-arrest as spies."

"It's the glandelinians."Gasped Violet."Look out for him sisters. He's got a bad look in his eyes."

Then suddenly from behind the trees came another squad of graycoats and two of the Richard graycoats sprang at the officer. They were graycoats their features being obvious and course. Violet and her sisters feared that these three formost Glandelinians were sure to intercept them and upon quick impulse Violet drew her pistol, took aim and fired. One of the Clandelinians went sprawling on the ground, but the other two who were some yards behind, and even many of the others took aim at Violet and her sisters bringing down their horses simultaneously and one bullet knocked the pistol out of Violet's hand and also a bulllet grazed her chest and she sank to the ground stunned but not hurt as a heavy metal had been in her waist pocket which flattened the bullet and preb prevented it from entering one of her lungs. Angela who alone was not thrown when her horse was shot down quick y took aim at the savage Clandelinian and fired the brute uttering a howl of pain and also went sprawling, then she brought several more down. Another Clandelinian rushed upon Joice and with brutal force beat the horse with the butt of his musket and then rained blows upon him the victim falling upon the ground with an awful dissing groan the ground reddened by his blood. The Glandelinian with cont orted features turned from his horrible work but Jennie brought him down to earth with another shot from her pistol just as he was about to turn upon her. Suddenly five more of them rushed forward from the small coo column of Clandelinians Joice and Angeline and her other sisters who had recovered their feet by th is time taking aim and firing.

The whole five of the soldiers in gray dropped but the other Glandelinians were only maddened and charged vo for the little girls shouting;

"surrender you little vipers. We have got you and you know it. You cannot cope successfully with us so you might as well give up now, and have it over with."

Jennie again fired but the bullet glanced off the mans skull..... with a wild howl of pain he chargedcste straight for Jennie who in firing another shot struck another Glandelinian behind her assailant bringing him down. Jennies assailant was on a horse and he tried to ride her down but she dodged behind a tree and fired, both the horse and the man sprawling in a tangle heap of briars.

"Logo Look out for that fellow he will kill you sure." Yelled joice as she saw the landelinian charging again at Jennie with the fury of a demon but this time on foot. Jennie rushed out of the way of the frenzy stricken man and raising her pistol quickly shot him between the shoulder blade and the neck bringing him down. he other Glandelinians charged for joice and her sisters and if it had not been for violet, they would also have they would also have been overpowered and probably killed. Drawing her other pistol just as they came she fired two shots in quick succesio bringing them down.

It was at this moment a large force of Angelinian cavarly came up and routed the assailants of the little girls and even carried the little girls out of range of the main columns of the foe tward general Vivians headquartors. It did not take them long to reach general Vivians headquarters and the little girls were admitted by several guards and brought before the great general. Standing before the little great gen eral were three little girls and violet and her sisters recognized them all right. hey were Gertrude Angeline, Jennie turner and Angeline nichoo, and they had with them three others whose names were Catherine, Hettie, and Daisy Aronburg whom they had seen before leading the child rebels in the child slave rebellion.

Violet and her sisters were almost r tranxfixed by the scene of these six beautiful little girls and at last Hettie spoke out in words of the sweetest tones;

"I and Daisy are the other sisters of Annie Aronburg who was murdered by the Glandelinian general Federal, at Calverine and we have come to plead to you dear friendsand ask you little girls to force general Federal to atone for it or the war will be lost. Federal at Ches Cheesetown had thousands of saintly-little children massacred and I have been sent by general Whin Whilliamsburger Zimmermann way from Calmanrinia to ask you little girls to get Hanson seize the town and save the children from that horriblo butcher. It is a sad thing that these little children have been seized and imprisoned by thade those Glandelinians and somehow they must be rescued before it is too late."

Twenty minutes passed before violet and her sisters could give any good answer they were so filled with awe. At last violet said;

"We will get them rescued at all costs but general Hanson cannot do it as his army is already re ulsed and he will refuse to resume any attacks just now."

Impressed by the appearance of these little girls violet and her sisters decided to have the battle of Shelantonburg won at all costs and told general vivian who had went out at their appearance what the c three new children wanted, and who they were. This was an extremely dangerous task to fullfill but the little girls were bound to accaplish it at all costs. They had intended to start immediately, and even the very looks of those little girls had made violet and her sisters fol fool very sad.

It made them imagine their own sufferings all over again, and they marvled that they su escaped such horrors now, though the war was much worse.

They had suffered a good deal but not like during their time in Calverine. The conflicto there had been well fought but here in the state of Calvorinia and Glandolinia in the proceeding years the fiercest conflicts ever imagined or the world ever thought off had raged. Remembering the crushing repulse of Hansons charge at Grahams lanes violet and her sisters felt weary, sad, and disp ndent and ov also miserable over the deaths of over seven thousand four hundred officers who had died in this most frightful battle. General vivian was sad at heart over Hansons failure to carry the enemys line and had no confidence of winning the battle now no matter how long Hanson kept up the engagement, and despite all the different kinds of sad music that evening he tried t his best to keep his lines together.

In the meantime general indornines force under Henlay was in confusion and retreating from the region in a tumultious mob of men. Manley had directed in person the counter assault and followed up his advance, but now had no chance to m ko a junction with Shoemannias assaulting line for fresh forces under general Double Day Federal had come up at eight o-clock and obstructed his path and the Glandelinians made a withdrawel

At night all the christian generals were stunned over the news and general Double-Day-Federal fearing that general Vivians army would be badly smitten if he ordered an attack the next morning warned him to be on the defensive, and determined to stand his own ground. General Manlet did not wish to attack on the morrow however as he mourned his own losses, but he saw that it was necessary but he did not intend to engage the strong positions of Hanson and vivians but directe general Raymond Richardson Federal to storm Double-Days lines at ten oc ten o-clock withhall

the violence he could assume telling him that he must force Double Days lines at all costs. All of general Vivians officers were sad and down cast over Hansons fearful repulse and general Indornine and Henlay themselves lamented the loss of two of their christian divisions. It was indeed a sad occurance and a sad bitter repulse, the christian attackers under Hanson and Henlay that fatal afternoon having been fairly thrashed, it being the greatest repulse they had ever suffered during theowar up to this time.

The defeat was twice worse than that at Emainic Creek, the enemy having carried all before the, them like general wellington did to the French at the battle of Waterloo. Violet and her sisters realized that to do as the littlebgirls wanted the soldiers must capture villiages and this was done that very evening. he Glandelinians threatened with defeat were fiercer in their raids now running in every village to thep their path of advance, destroying even orphan asylums and carrying off the children. Farms after f farm, villiage after villiage and towns in a quarter of an hour were in flames being set on fire by the the furious Angelinian soldiers who had no mercy now. Even cowboy ranches were destroyed and the cattle were confiscated, and the cowboys no matter h what nationality they were made prisoners for resisting them. It was an awful sd scene for a raid. he captive children w were sent sent to other orphan asylums out of range of th e dashing Glandelinian soldiery.

Furious and cruel indeed were the Angelinians when beaten and they even raided the ose asylums which had been spared when Allenburgers home was desto destroyed and carried the children away, and how they lamented and cried and screamed at the sight of the burning homes. Bridges were destroyed, railroad trains carrying troops of Glandelinian soldiers were wrecked by the scors, the Glandelinians taken prisoners were shot down, railway stations were ransacked andburned, destruction of every description occuring. At Red Rose Lane a large party of Glandelinians having made their appearance rushed upon the raiders in a desperate onslaught resulting in a conflict which made the losses on both sides in w fifteen minutes over ten thousand in slain and wounded the crashing of musketry having been terrific.

Then the raiders having been worsted withdrew.

In the meantime general Hindernines retreat had been covered by general Double Day Federals lines and so within an hour that night general Henlay had been able to rally his mangled forces and with tears in his eyes dread the certain end, as he could hear the terrific roar of battle along general Hansons lines.

The rebel inhibatants of Cheesetown were frightened by the near approach of the terrific conflict and made hasty preparations for flight that evening, and they had no sooner left when one of the christian batteries were to trained upon the town shelling it to the ground and flames of burning hoses, of villiages and towns and reddened districts reddened the sky for scores of miles, mingled with scores of thousands of brighter flashes from bursting shells.

General Jennings wounded as he was had that evening taken a considerable force on a scouting tour to see how the furious battle was turning out and from a slight rise of ground he could see the enemys lines in titan throes with Double-Day Federal, and hear the thundering batteries of thousands of guns. He watched the separate movements of the opposing lines and also took in a good survey of other adjoining christian batteries which he saw were being placed into a position to dominate the Glandelinian attack.....

"We will have to chop down trees all along our lines to night." Said general Jennings as he looked tward his front. "To make an impregnable maze for the enemy as are still ing pressing Hindernine h hard and fast."

Then thousands of trees were being cut down and the work continued on without interruption though some petty attacks had been made by the foe and repulsed.

Some Glandelinians had been under general Phompos Thompson Starring. Jennings had with the help of a portion of his long line of fallen trees managed to give serious resistance for fifteen minutes, and though his workers had been overwhelmed and forced to retr t retreat several times the heavy firing at this new location brought other christian columns to the spot and the Glandelinians were at last compelled to retreat.

Violet and her sisters also had a scre thrilling t ime for screaming shells were during the early part of the night passing through the tree tops above their companies of boyscouts and exploding, raining fragments which dealth some havoc among the boys. The scouts quickly retreated retreated but another broadside crashed among them, killing twenty, and maiming fifty five more. A shell narrowly missed Jennies head and another unhorsed violet. The survivors hastily picked up their wounded and hastened along s several other broadsides being fired but only tearing leaves and branches from the tr tree tops.

"Quick" Gasped Violet. "Or we'll be killed."

A shell exploding under Jennines steed unhorsed her giving her a bad fall, but however she was not inju red, and staggering to her feet she went on the boys and little girls a at le last reaching a safe spot where the broadside of shells could not reach them. Fifty of the boyscouts had been killed or wounded.

"This must be terrible." Said violet as the firing in the dire ction of Double-Day-Federals lines seemed to increase in redoubled fury and noise. "Danger seems to lurk anywhere now adays."

"But it is on account of this terrible battle." Declared Jennie. "Dangerous as it is accidental spying is safer than real spying or scouting."

"How about disguising our boys as Clandelinian boyscouts and defiantly maki make another scouting tour?" Asked Angeline. "You know we are braving all these dangers for the sake of Jesus Christ."""

"It's all right." Said Joice. "Let's do it right away...."

Her sisters agreed and preparationswere made. Violet and her sisters took seventy boys in the uniform of Clandelinian boyscouts on another scouting tour and from a high rise of ground they did indeed see the condition of Clandelinos forces on account of thedesperate disaster caused by the enemy and also saw how desperately Double Day-Federals lines were covering Henlays retreat thousands of men being at work firing off the big guns and taking the killed and injured from the works. Fearing that they would be discovered by the assaulting Clandelinians the scouting party hid behind any kind of shelter where they could e asily see the movement of the wicked Clandelinians.....!!

It also could be seen that Double-Day-Federals men who were not in action were making abatis out of fallen trees, but th that the fire of enemy sharpshooters was mowing down the workers like flies and that the work could not proceed untill the foe attack had been repulsed.

"This is too much." Thought Hettie. "General Double-Day ought to shell those Clandelinian sharpshooters peppering the workers. If general Double Day manages to form an unassailable position then he will be able to hold untill general Henlays forces are fully rallied, and comes to his help and then the battle would be won." She told her ideas to her sisters but they declared that his batteries had all they could do to mow down the main line of assailants.

"And general Vivian r proposed to do the attacking come what may." Said Joice "Mayb e we can drive back the Clandelinian sharpshooters by setting fire t o the grassy meadow over there."

"It's a dangerous task." Said Jennie with an ominous shake of her head. "There we would be exposed to a perfect storm of minnies from those sharp shooters who are shooting down the workers in such frightful numbers...."

"Let's sent only some of the boys to do it." Suggested Jennie or Hettie rather. "They can do it without deted detection in the dark."

"All right we will." De lared Violet."

She called three of the boys over to her and told him what she and her sisters intended to do.

"I'll attempt it alone." One of the three boys said. "I'm supplied with mat hes matches."

The boy set off to do as she told him taking care that he was not seen. He had a long distance to go to reach the bullet swept plain and as he crawled onward through the tall dry grass he kept a sharp lookout for any of the grayscoats. In the meantime amid all the distant smoks and sea of flashes of battle Violet and her sisters saw a Clandelinian officer approaching from another direction and decided to capture him. The little girls were quite a distance from their scouting force but they had no fear that the attack would be foiled. Ye he little girls made a swift rush at the officer on horseback and bore him to the ground. The officer w went down fighting like a demon but Violet and her sisters were strong little girls and despite his desperate struggle succeeded in getting his pistols and ammunition belt and even his sabre. They even managed to bind his hands and feet though they were slightly brusied in the battle.

"What do you strp striplings mean by attacking me like that? Don't you know that I'm an officer!" Shouted the man in a rage.

"I know you are n an oofficer officer and you are a prisoner also." Answered Violet pretending t o sase him. "You are an important officer and a scoundrel."

"What's that! You dare to-------"

"Never you mind." Interrupted Violet sarcastically. "You are prisoners among Angelinians and will die for insulting remarks tward us if you dare to use them."

Seeing a dangerous look in her eyes the grayscoat did not say another word d though he scowled fiercely.

In the meantime the fire bug had already set fir fire to the high grass in the plain he smoke rising in vast roo rolling clouds hiding the boy from view of the wicked Clandelinian sharpshooters. He was back in fifteen minutes. Violet and her sisters sa saw that the fire spread in an al alarming rate tward the Clandelinian sharpshooters who in horror abandoned their sniping and fled. The little girls then went on tward their lines again taking the sullen and enraged prisoner with them.

In the meantime the Clandelinians under general Anton io Filliop Fillipuss fell upon a park of Henlays rear under Maul ·andley who was making movements to the right by the help of the glow from the raging fires set by both sides and by the terrific battle. In the struggle Antonio was killed and his Clandelinians rolled back w t with frightful lossoz.

Geleran General Henaly had managed to rally one quarter of his force but did not know what to do! He did not dare counter attack general Federal that indomidable fighter of the Clandelinians and he feared if he did so another cutting up of his army would follow, and a repulse probably more severe than before.

He also feared that if he counter attacked general Federal would sent a large force to flank him a second time and place his division where his enemy wanted it. General Henley knew full well that general Raymond Richardson Federal was not a man to be trifled with under any conditions either in war or in public matters, for he had known this wicked man all his life, had been persecuted by him when a young lad of eighteen years when Federal himself was governor of California, and brave general though he was general Stanley feared this dreadful Clandelinian warchief who in reality was the highest general next to general John Manley himself and had full command of all the other armies operating under general John Manley and Nebuma Manley and the other wicked Clandelinian rebel chiefs and child murders murderers probably more wicked than any od the devils themselves. At nine o-clock all the christian forces had been withdrawn to their positions and all awaited the approach of morning and the outcome of the renewal of the struggle h which would rage along DoubleDay Federals lines.

General Costellio Stanley during the latter part of the night had made manuevers and changes of positions and reinforced general Stanley his brother and on the morrow these two generals were the first of Double Days men assaulted by the Clandelinians the attack being made by the Clandelinians un er general general Frank Canterninia and Osborne Thanhouser and so terrific was the assault that the carnage became so dreadful that nautre could not survive at this point and these commanders on both sides went down mangled and bleeding, and Costellioe johnson who took Costellio Stanley's place was compelled to withdraw his divisions the Clandelinians however having recoiled from a fire of great violence from general Henry James Jennin s batteries.

The Clandelinians however soon rallied and resumed the attack pressing on and forcing themselves over the log barricade barricades and bayonets and clubbed muskets met in such a frigt frightful tumult that it could not be described and two more of the enemys best leaders general James Bernard Hubbard, and general Ginger Hanson were killed. however the pressure of the enemy became so tremendous that Jennings men were forced to abandon their works and retreat tward the abatis of fallen trees. The main portions of Hansonins columns adfanced advanced to the rescue of general Jennings being sent by Double Day Federal and in a short time reached the long line of abatis and ad Jennings columns filed behind it they rallied still more, the Clandelinians advancing through Mildreds Orchards in the face of a heavy fire.

With white fury the survivors pressed on tward the abatis hundreds of thousands of Clandelinians rapidly reaching it and they strove with the fury of desperation to force their way through. The other divisions soon reached the barricade also and now the main portion came upon it.

Thanhu Thanhausers immense divisi s divisions now under Stanck Hansonis attacked at other points simultaneously and despite the abatis general Jennings feared that he would not be able to hold his ground for the whole assaulting column were storming his lines like a typhoon storms the trees of the shore and many thousands of them were fairly tearing themselves through the abatis though they were picked off as fast as they came.

Soon the main column were forcing their way through the abatis and though his men redoubled their energy their whole line was soon bent backwards by the fierce impact and a hell of slaughter seemed to break loose on both sides.

Only half an hour has passed since the struggle recommenced and over ninty thousand had fallen in slain on the christian side Thanhausers divisions attacking like ten thousand furies, and now Jennings alone was overwhelmed the great christian reali general realizing that he could not hold this position and so he was compelled to order a withdrawel. The long line of abatis however was set on fire by the Angelinians with flaming torches this checking the onward rush of the enemy for several minutes.

The fury of the battle had redoubled redoubled along other parts of t he christian lines. The Clandelinians attacked Double-Day Federals left. General Gannonian was also sent by Hanlot to crush Double-Day-Federal and the battle was so genera, general now that general Vivian who was forming his lines for defense in case it should be attacked also wondered what it meant. He soon found out for glancing in that direction with his field telescope he saw the cause.

"The enemy has attacked Double-Dar Day-Federal with all his violence." He said to his other officers with great anxiety. "If he fails to hold, then all is lost and Hanlot will get away without or striking him another blow."

He sent an orderly to arouse all parts of his own lines and started sending forces forward to render aid to Double Day Federal as Hanson had to keep his own troops together to repell an assault should the enemy attack his lines a again.

Notwithstanding the terrific fire the Clandelinians continued the attack for four hours upon Doubledays left hewing their way through the abatis and half infiliaded at this point the christian defenders withdrew and so it happened that a great gap was left in the center of Double-Day-Federals line and the Clandelinians charging three times with the utmost fury succeeded in carrying the blazing abatis. At every point the Clandelinians were making the most desperate attempts to break thrygh.

"Hold your ground boys at all costs." Shouted general Jimmie Bolan amid the dreadful uproar and producing a note to his officers which an orderly had just brought. "General Vivian had formed a good part of his own army for action, and is sending heavy forces to reinforce Doubleday Fe Federal."

With the fury of a raging avalanch the Glandelinians came on still cutting their way through the other portions of the abatis but for their su ccess generals Bernard Mac Nace and Hansonia Dane fell mortally wounded the scene now being like an inferno of the infernal regions. Double-Day Federal himself was sending forces to those already hard pressed while six hundred calibre cannons were being placed into position so as to sweep the entire center of the attacking enemy and when these opened up and was added by othef other christian cannon the noise of musketry was completely drowned out the big guns of Hannons command drowing out other sounds and those of general Henry Nolan and Jimmie Gannonias mangling whole regiments of the assailants, as the attack of the Glandelinians had become appalling. Nine hundred thousand from one part of Doubledays lines and five hundred thousand from another reinforced the others who were driven back and though the Glandelinians still attacked with a fury that was incredible they went down in frightful numbers but the Glandelinians were now within a few rods of the christian lines, and now rushed instantaneiou ly and with indescribable fury upon the solid purple lines the Glandelinians along th the left finally carrying all before them, Montleys brigades being annihilated and he himself killed.

Double-Day-Federal saw this serious break and rushed forward great forces to the rescue throwing millions upon the Glandelinians tearing their line to fragments again. However this favorable circumstances did not entirely exempt the christian lines under Gannonia Jimmie, Jennings, and Everette True from the effects of a terrible confused tide of men mingling together in the wildest hand to hand fighting over seen.

At this point the Glandelinians were more like wild mobs and struck against the christian line like a tidal wave and in the hand to hand fight that followed the whole of Gannons line was swept and torn to pieces amid a mi most frightful din of firing point blank, the clashing of musket butts against each other, the ring og s of steel on steel and the zing sang of sabres crossing togother, and there was a frightful pandemonuimn of confusion.

The whole line under Gannon failed to hold though they had cut down wh ope whole surge of the enemy but they fought stubbornly as they slowly retreated, contesting every inch of the ground.

In the meantime the long gray line under general Henry Canterinia the brother of the other man by the same nale name had made ten terrific onslaughts each lasting a full hour these being made against the christians under general Geblines froce but ten times were crushed and mangled and swe swept back before they finally rallied and made another assault which they finally won and forced the christians to recoil in panic the Landelinians following in utmost prep precipitation.

Dbo Double-Day tried to check them with his main batteries and cover the retreat of the other crushed and mangled columns and all through the horrible din of the battle could be heard the shrieks and moans of the hundreds of thousands of wounded, shouts, outeries, groans, sighs and curses. Three hundred thousand had already been killed and the poor wounded seemed sensitive of their own hard fate while countless numbers of exploding shells roared like thousands of earsplitting thunder crashes per in minute above and about the about them sending a storm of dirt and wreckage all about the troops and killing and wounding many. It was indeed a hedious scene and a man could not take a step without treading on the dead wounded and dying.

Manly hundreds of thousands were badly mangled. Even now the whole of Icknells army had stretched into a line ten miles long and these now took the place of Federals torn and mangled forces wh g which had been withdrawn and before Du Double Day could reform his lines Icknells Landelinians rushed forward with almost preternatural fury and the yell of the foe was odious, horrifying, and deafening. This time the Landelinians swept the whole of double Day Federals line back under general Marsh Mellow but was again repulsed and after the enemy withdrew again it was seen that countless bodies of soldiers were torn and racked by the fearful shell fire and mangled beyond description. Many of the dead were almost cut to pieces many having their bodies even torn open and their intestines exposed. For seventeen miles lay broken and unbroken an burning cassions their masters horses, and cannoneers crushed beyond recognizing under them while mounds of broken folia e was burning in a fierce smudge. Thousands torn and riddled by bullets lay almost buried on top of one another almost bathed in blood and many with the frontal part of their bodies gone. It indeed was a fearful sight showing the real horrors of such a battle.

A severe number of christian generals had fallen also they being James Hennie Phelan, Henry Dargine, and Richardson Logan who were killed, while ten others Bonillian Saunders, Heller Henryson, James Camillia, Zoe Henderson Vinian, Cain ger Georgeia, Forwardinie Jennings, Joseph Hemmingtonia, giania, Thanhauser Franklin, Kidlat George, Henry Osborne, and Henry Milderinia were severely wounded while two others generals Hansonia-Mc-Hollester and Mc-Hollester Hemmington were taken prisoners by the frenzied Glandelinians who refusing to submit themselves as prisoners were assassinated.

The uproar of pandemonium of noises and the roar of battle still continued all along other parts of Double-Day Federals lines indescribable numbers of Glandelinians again attacking with the fury of a hurricane but again they were checked and thrown back.

Nine hundred thousand Turmerannia n then rushed through Grahams Lanes and through the streets of the burning town of Cheese town where hell from the christian guns again seemed to be let loose. Hindernines columns came up from Double Days left wing at this moment and he met the rush of the men formly under Thanhauser but the onslaught was so vehement that his lines were shatt ered and he himself wounded. General Nero commanding Double Day Federals right wing also recieved the assault of Henry Gatermias Glandelinians, and also those under Zoe Gannon, Meldon Jennings and Jesse Baldwin. This onslaught indeed was more terrific the Glandelinians again threatening to sweep all before them all these christian generals going dow were wounded and then general Canterninia went himself down wounded severely and was borne from the field . Hansonia tried to rally his Abyssinkilian columns ut he could not and he was borne alon along in a rushing human current of mixed men in purple and gray who were using their weapons hand to hand like frenzied demons. General Hampline Johnston also tried to stem this terrible current of confused men but his men forced could not stand before the irrestible tide his own line also being borne along like a reed in the path of a tornado. Bindernine trying to aid in rallying Gatermines troops fell severely wounded, and then generals Manning Jackson and Thomas Scanlon also tried to stem the rout and fell shot through the heart.

Poor general Double-Day-Federal saw this terrible sea of confused men and said to some of his staff;

"We must sto this at once or my whole line will be swept back. We got to main tain the rest of the line or we will be totally routed."

Whole divisions of Angelinians under general Thomas Nanceine and Handon Pence were rallying the troops at Snydiers creek while being in danger of a regular Gatlin sale slaughter and al of his line being torn to pieces general Henry Gatlin withdrew. General Germaine Fe ieldings christians were also in force on Gatlin-Day Federals right but the christian general was fearfully wounded. General Pierre ivinia was bound to help Double day check the sweeping attack of the enemy if he could and sent division after division to the rescue, the Angelinians being steadily reinforced and the assailants being terribly overwhelmed were again thrown back in confusion.

But Federal and Bicknell brought up heavier columns from Manlets center and these reformed the recent attackers who came on again and in the violence of the assault tore an immense gap in Vivianias line. Vivinia fairly leaped into this gap and although he was fully exposed to the terrible fire of the enemy he soon rallied the panic stricken Angelinians who tried to make a sweeping counter charge but met a check that again mo mowed down hundreds of thousands with generals Gainsbury Franklin, Richard Jamesonia, Neldonia Saunder, Gallenin Henryson, Hansonian Turklin, Hannedinia Pierre, James Henlay, Francis.C.K.Bushmann, Max Hinderninia, James Costellio, Zoe Costello, Henry Costellio, and Bernard Costellio who were all wounded, while those Gatlin killed were Bicknell and Donald MacDonand James and Fred Hanson all brothers, Gatlin others killed were Richard Logan, Henlayinton, Snowdropping Powers, and Gatlin arrow, while James Bicknell Jennings, James Costellionia, Mannington Hanson, and Mansion Vivinia were captured as they tried to rally the crushed christian front.

Yelling with demoniacal fury the Glandelinians again threw themselves forward in the attack driving upon James Bicknellians Abyssinkilians forcing their way again through the massive line of christians. Overwhelmed these Abyssinkilians after scattering whole divisions of Glandelinians recoiled the survivors of the foe sweeping all before them once more. Vivinias columns also gave way in a pandemonuimn of unspeaked confusion the continued onrush of the Glandelinians now being unmanageable, the Glandelinians with the wildest yells ever heard in the annals of warfare rushing like an outburst of a great flood through this gap and the impact beca e so violent that the right grand division of Double Day Federals line cut up and also d almost decimated a one quarter of its whole number-also gave way.

Upon all points of Double-Day-Federals lines the Glandelinians had surged, and poured though galled with gaps, an and oceans of fire and smoke, and oceans of destruction, and oceans of blood seeming to be spilt, piles upon piles, and long retrons of dead and wounded the Glandelinians tearing after the christians like a stampede of wild bulls and steers during a great fire on a plain. Zoe Rainers whole christian line was also scattered and for Double Day Federal the advantage seemed indeed to be lost even though along his center the foe were at a standstill the christians here still holding Double Day Federal having already lost over 456,999 in killed and mortallytwounded, while 661,445 to 661, 661,554 were all wounded making a total of 1118,553. Federals whole loss in the entire battle with Federal and Icknell was over 1,423,432 in killed and wounded. The foe loss was 5,678,999 in killed and wounded and still the battle raged.

The fury of this battle with three names known as Pholantonburg, Cheesetown and Wagladar had been more terrific than Jennie Vivian or Mc-Hollester Run combined and all this while many of the retreating christian columns could not help from trodding on hundreds of thousands of the bodies of the slain and by nine o-clock in the morning the whole of Double-Day-Federals line was fr crushed and mangled, Double-Day was severely wounded and even generals on the side of the foe called Layboy Johnston

Eddie Miers, James Finland, Coffie Ganson, James Crowley, Henry Johnstonia, Mc Gabbie Hickey, Hanson Mablinia, Thomas Glanian Cainia, Child Hatred and James Pieface with all their commands carrying All before them routing Double Day Federals lines and changing his retreat into a stampede stampede. General Vivianias line had again tried to make a stand but they in turn were again cut up and thrown into great confusion and the rout also extended along his lines and soon the whole of Double-Day Federals christian army was retiring in a tremendous disordered stream of human beibgsSuccored by general Thanhuasers men Violet and her sisters knew that the Angelinians who were retreating were in for hot times for the Glandelinian persuers were all Gurdes and Zimmermannians. The little girls were forced to walk or run nearly three quarters of the way during the swift and headlong rout. All this while Violet and her sisters were wondering if this would mean another horror to them or would this be the culmination of the seven days bloody battle a battle seven times worse than Sunbeam Creek. All the while of the long three hours persuit they were forced along with the frenzy stricken Angelinians. However general Hanson covered the reat retreat of general Double-Day Federals lines, and these were rallied and then the Glandelinians not daring to assail general Hansons unassailable position again withdrew.

Though again general Hanson i via Vivian had been outwitted his battle had been a sort of victory but the battle was so terrible that both sides would not reveal their total losses.. Hanlet was able to escape three days later after the battle, but general Hansons army was not in a condition to persue just now and remained intrenched at Phelantonburg.

Six days later after the battle Violet and her sisters were sent to general Whilliams burger Zimmermann near Phelantonburg with a messen message. They must needs go through the city and after a three days trip without any experiences Violet and her sisters found themselves found themselves far out of reach of the great battle of Phelantonburg or Grahams Lanes and within sight of the city which they believed was Calmagrinia not yet in the hands of the christians and in possession of a wicked Glandelinian horde under a strange general. As they came near the town they learned that the Glandelinians used all the houses in the city for child slaves who had been held there all through the war already and after the message was delivered to general Zimmermann Violet and her sisters decided to go to the city on their return to the christian lines and see what went onthere. The little girls of courxe course went in disguise. Tward the afternoon the fifth day after their trip they entered a child slave house in the disguise of boyscout inspectors and here they saw the worse horrors of their lives. Violet and her sisters indeed witnessed a heartrending scene. Just as they entered ten children had swooned under a terrible beating from iron piked lashes. It was worse than anything they had ever seen before. The little children stripped naked were literally mangled by the cat-o-nine-tails which tore their skin like knives. Violet and her sisters could see the horrible gashes on the bodies of the children who in truth had died under the scouraging. Then the Glandelinians before their very eyes had torn their bodies open and scattered their entrails all over the floor it indeed being a horrible sight for the Vivian girls to witness but they did not dare betray themselves and so they could do nothing.

"I could make out a way to get these children to break out."Said Violet to Joice "but it is well for them to remain prisoners for a while at least for the Glandelinian Glandelinian guards are armed with grenades which they would hurl at escaping children even at the cost of their own lives. They would rather kill themselves than let any of the child prisoners get away. We'll find our all details here and then have Zimmermann besiege the city."

Upon no one in the Angelinian world, in Calverinia, or Angelinia, has the horrible Glandico-Angelinian war imposed a heavier burden, than upon the little Calverinian children. By battles, countless numbers of the little children were made orphans,, even starved from lack of food and provisions, and made to witness scenes that would try the nerve of angels themselves, even mutilated, the lot of the little ones in the conquered regions of Eastern Calverinia during the Kintergarten massacre was a hard one indeed.

It is not mentioned why it is that the wicked Glandelinians hate little children belonging to nations not their own. It was the opinion of many correspondents who had witnessed all these shocking horrors that the Glandelinians hate children just be cause they are christians, and that children especially who are little girls andwho are pretty were the special objects of the enemity and fury of the foe, and that little children, boys and girls who wr were not good looking, or homely were regarded more in the favor of the foe and spared such horrors as the prettier ones witnessed.

But it was not so. It is not because they were christians, or neither because they were pretty, for children no matter what they looked like shared the same in the frenzied fu fericoty of the foe.

Children who had had been known to be infdeels infidels were even treated worse, eih either tortured beyond what we can ever think or compare, and carried off to the worse slavery, and branded anywhere on their bodies so they could not escape dtection in case they ran away from the slave planatations. The Glandelinians it was predicted won many wars on other nations h christian or not, and even powerful nations at that, and had carried off hundreds of thousands of children.

Children carried off from other nations shared a better fate however than those who were Calverinians. Even many years before the bloody Glandico-Angelinian war child slavery had been going on, even before a great war in eighteen fourty one, andthis horrible ten years war did not end it..

Much is written of the cruelties shown to the Negro Slaves, especially in the book called "Uncle Toms Cabin, " written by Harriet Beecher Stowe, even muchof the slavery has been acted in great plays and moving picture shows, but these slaves were in heaven, compared to the child slaves, and there was no little Eva to comfort them either, l k like in "Uncle Toms Cabin".

The child slaves suffered as only the damned could suffer, and before the war so many died that appeals were sent to the sister country called Abbieannia to put an end to the slavery. As long as it lasted or despite its most shocking horrors, horrors which would even be too shocking to hear or read, the child sls slavery was not the cause of the rebellion of Glandelinia a,in agains t Christianity.

Backed by Abbieannia the Calverinians had rose in rebellion, After rebellion, and as in later years Angelinia and Abbieannia interfered a good deal with the child slavery the main struggle that horrified the nations soon broke out cut with the suddeness and unexpectedness of a sweeping cyclone.

At first the foe as stated, early in the war contending against the Angelinian armies were heavily overwhelmed, and with the exception of Pullaway, and Crowley, and Eva Crania, and Terminie, lost nearly every battle, but later up to the time now written when their armies had now recieved good commanders, who could do anything required of them, began to carry their successes, at every point of Eastern Calverinia in particular, and some good points at other portions of Calverinia, devastating all parts of Calverinia as much as possible, ad dominating it with the pressure of a s gigantic ste steam-robler.

The biggest overthrow of the war of the rebellion, was the vanquishing of the biggest christian armies in Southern and Eastern Ca Calverinia already starting. The foe armies led by many great gene rals generals overthrew all before them, and was now actually having the very civilization at their mercy. So sweeping now was the success of the foe in the east that all the nations already stood apa appalled.

Abbieannia was even now pounding her iron hurricane upon the western coast of Calverinia, bombarding, the cities, of Calverine,

Vivian Wickey, Aronburg, Federal, Julo Callio, and Norma Catherine, Evangeline St Claire, and other fortified places, and the main christian commanders in the west, being directed by Hanson Vivian, and his brother, and Evn Even Evans, and Whilliamsburger Zimmermann, were already starting to hurl many large armies eastward anew, and it was now stated that by the superhuman efforts, the enemys success was finally being stayed, by being disasterously defeated at Gretchen Saunders where a whole Glandelinian army was destroyed. This overthrow of the christian armies in Eastern Calverinia caused the enemy to capture evey every p important point, and fugitive men, women, and children, who were fortunately to escape that avalanch of death and destruction, reached Abyssinkile, half naked,, half starved, half ffrozen, and with terrified children seperated from parents, and relatives, while all behind there seemed a red hell pit of horror.

The foe during this ''Reign of terror'' as the Kintergarten massacred was called massacredecover 18,233,090. ion wh women and children within two years and caused over two hundred million dollars worth of damage.

The fugitives who had fled before the advancing foe, fled in all directions, and many failed to reachshelter of any kind, and many conflargrations were raging in the east, that it was knownas ''The world on fire''. How many many children suv survived is not mentioned, but what the survivors went through made many of them go insane. For all the long distance they fled, no one stopped for one and it was all the Angelinian, and Abyssinkilian aurthorities could to refuge the fugitives, and feed the starved ones, and clothe them, especially who happened to have the good fortune of reaching Angelinia or Abyssinkile in safty. Abyssinkile recieved 7,000,000 refugees, who had nothing with them which could be called belongings, and all were so terrified t with the scenes they had met with, that many died in the Abyssinkilian hospitals. Countless numbers of children were orphans, sick, wounded, disg disfigured, distorted, starved, frozen, and suffering from all afflictions, andeven so frightened that they tried to avoid, nuns, soldiers, and even priests, and feared their own parents, and relatives.

The sadeplight of the fugitives, especially the children could not be described. It seemed as i they had fled from hell itself, with all the fiends after them For such things committed by the wicked Glandelinians, it would be better if the Angelnia Angelinians had not given the Glandelinians any quarter at all. The only way to learn the real description is not to read it, in this manuscript, but to have been a sole eyewitness itself.

No nation ever heard of, suffered as much as Angeln Angelinia on account of the dissilusionment of her sister country, Calverinia. Throughout the whole war up to this point so terrible and most continuous have been the indescribable atrocites to which Calverinia had fallen victim of the Glandelinian fury, that the very name of Calverinia, and even Angelinia had to the view of most of the other nations o of the world become synonymous with martyrdom.

The suffering of the Calverinians and Angelinians doing the great national catastrophe has been greater than any known in our own History of the world. None of the fearful horrors perpetrated in the various zones of the great world wa war in Europe, or all the wars put together, even the massacres of the Armenians can compare with the tragic lot of the unfortunate Calverinians.

It is my own purpose to outline in this story the nature of the Calverinian question, and to briefly state the reasons f for which the wicked Glandelinian armies during the fearful war sought to annihilate the Calverinian women and children, and the methods resorted to by the Glandelinian aurthorities for extrgmination.

The big massacres which occured recently at Jennie Riches before the battle of Phelantonburg, and those at Calmdrinia, Jennie-Wren-Town, Crowley, Phelantonburg, Norma Catherine,, Vivian Wickey, Julo Callio ,, Mc-Hollester, Glorinia,, Jennie Turner, and in the fields, and the rapid development of the dommineering and fierce chauvinis Chauvinistic attitude of the ferocious Glandelinians, soon dispelled all the illusions of the Calverinians, that the many Angelinian armies were able to protect them, and convinced them that the horrors would continue untill Glandelinia was overthrown. And will the success of the Glandelinians in preventing the Abbiennians piercing the fortifications of Vivian Wickey, and Julo Callio so far made the Glandelinian generals feel like great conquelors, and awakened in them the hope that the time would come when they could wipe out not only the christians opposedto them, but also the Catholic and Protestant sections combined. During the whole war even up to now, the treatment of the Calverinians became so intolerable in especially the Month of July 1913, that the very Abyssinkilians aurthorities appealed to the Abbiennian governments to relieve the Calverinians.

It was believed that months of negotiation, and an arrangement would be made whereby the Sublime Power would permit the appointment of two Angelinian, and three Abyssinkilian inspectors, who were to mediatate with the Glandelinians.

Had this been done, all nations would have looked upon Abbiennia as to blame for not forcing to end an end the wicked cruelties of the Glandelinians. Instead however the Abbiennians put in their protest with an iron hail of call cannon along the Glandelinian and Calverinian coast that shook the world in so many desperate bombardments all at once. Sometimes a hundred seaports were bombarded and shelled at once.

Many victories of the Glandelinians however h gave for the Glandelinian generals their longed for opportunity to lay hold of the women and children of Calverinia.

At the very beginning however the very Glandelinians were goaded into committing the great Kintergarten massacre. In the main Eastern part of Calverinia they had notified the va the inhibatants of the various towns, that if any one among the non-combatants, should render the slightest assistance to the invading Abyssinkilians, they would not stop to investigate, but punish the entire race for it.

For the beginning during the late part of the first year of the war a little before June, they had tried to forcibly draft the able bodied Calverinians into the Glandelinian armies, withouthowever however intending to give them arms, only with with the intention o making them build roads or do some similar menial work, but the Calverinian aurthorities had formed great armies of their own and which were more dangerous to tamper with than the armies of the Glandelinians.

Finding the Calverinians fully mobilised to aid the Angelinians at the very full progress of the war, the foe involved their plan to destroy if possible all the Calverinians not mustered into armies.

Now as three of the powerful Angelinian states wre were at war with haughty Glandelinia, and two other nations were Angelinia s Lillies, Protestentia, and Blomlinia,, andMickencile Abbiennias ally, the Glandelinian aurtherities were incensed, and blaspheming God, thought the time opportune to make good the massacres planned. So at the beginning scores of towns of the Calverinians in the east were pillaged at one time, and the final and worse measure, used against the Calverinians was the wholesale deportation of millions of feeble old men, women and children, from their homes, and their exile in the Calverinian deserts with all the accompanying horrors on the way, and assaulted every now and then by the fierce anisanguninary Gargolians.

The fugitives had no means of nourishment, and the victims fleeing from the approaching enemy, had to walk on foot, exposed frequently to the attacks of bands of black hooded Gargolian Kurds, especially organized for that po purpose.

Cities, towns, villiages, and farms were literally uprooted by the hundred, familes were seperated, men, priests, religious of all sects killed, wol women and girls cruelly mangled, an countless numbers of children thrown into the eastern rivers by the ferocious Gargolians. Mothers even strangled to death their own children, or threw them into streams to save them from both the Glandelinians & Hand starvation. Children were seized from pr orphan asyums anylums, their very entrails were torn out, and their gutted bodies, left exposed to all elements, and to rot. The stories contained in the reports recieved of Abbiennia from absolutely trustworthy eye witnesses, and the pictures of the scenes snapped by war correspondents surpassed the most beastly and diabolical cruelties ever before perpetrated or imagined in the History of our own world.

Glandelinian aurthorities had stopped all communications between the other christian nations, in the naive belief that they could consumate the wholesale crime of the wareboefore the outside worldwould hear of it. The massacres were too dreadful to imagine, and even the overtaken fugitives on many occasions were subjected to the most cruel and outragsious treatement. Despite all communications being being cut off, the information about the great massacres filtered through spies, the Abbiesannian Geminii, the Consuls,, Missionaies, foreign travelers, and even Abyssinkilians.

Hundreds of thousandsof little children alone had been forced into the path of seething forest fires, locked up in the burning villiages, and towns, placed in housesby scores of thousa and either burnedalive, or thrown into the rivers, ur crossed and qua tered.

Added to all these sights of the frantically flesing mulitudes, the scene of burning towns, v. villiages, forests, plains of grass, and cities, and most extensive forests, and the smell of many burning corpses was dreadful to behold. Farms were ruined by the wholesale,

Who can describe such pictures, perfects endless strea of old men, women, and children, passing by, with blood streaming d weeping... ..

Scores of big towns and villiages, even cities had become a series of cemeteries of nearly all the women and children alone of Eastern Calverinia. All the remaining Calverinian refugees from many varicus towns and cities had fled to Abyssinkile, and those who had died on the way to Abyssinkile, came there simply to find their graves, the effects of the bitter cold of the Northern Calverinian country, and of starvation and exposure, and exposure to all kinds pfagllagues· of plagues,, ambuscades, and complications of other unspe able horrors.

Another terrible thing in Calverinia was the tortures to which the children alone had been subjected for two months at a time. Feet, hands, chests, were nailed to pie pieces of wood, the children were even crucified, nails of fingers, and even toes torn or pulled o and also their eyebrows, the Glandelinians even pulled the hair from the heads of the children, their feet were hammered with nails as th do with horses, and then made to walk under the cat-o-nine-tails, ot were hung by their thumbs, toes, or tongue, others were hung with their feet up, and their heads down over filthy closets and latrees.

All kinds of turtures were subjected to the children, the cutting with knives, the thrusting of red hot instruments down their throats lashing with scourges, and many other things that were too horrible to relate.

Children who were crippled were treated with the most horrible atrocities, such as being forced to walk without crutches, and children who had suffered with accidents such as having their leg cut off were forced to walk in spite of it without crutches, and when they fell were lashed untill their skin was running with blood, and covered with thousands of s different sores and cuts.

OH HOW ONE COULD WISH THESE HORRORS HAD BEEN REVENGED.

In order that pr s prisoners outside might not hear the screams of ag of the poor victims, men stood around the prisons where these atrocities were committed, with bi bands dr drums and whistles and kept up an infernal racket with all their instruments. When the wicked Glandelinian aurthorities heard that many of the Calverinians were escaping, large scouring parties were sent all over, o in order that the fugitives would fail to reach Abyssinkile. As this massacre of Calverinian women and children judged by the numbers involved, and the methods used, was the greatest horror ever written, and which could never be perpetrated in the history of humin humanity in this world the question of the reader will often be asked;;

''How many Calverinian women and children were actually murdered, or died of exposure and starvation? How many were driven into a miserab exile, before rescued by sweeping hordes of Abyssinkilians????''

The total population of women and children in eastern alvei o Calverinia was decided as2,600,000. Of these 182,000 escaped into Northern Angelinia, and 44,000 into Tripongolia. Between 1,600,000 and 2,800,999 escped into the country of Abyssinkile.

150,000 escaped to northwestern Calverinia. To this fugire To this figure must be added the relatively small number of survivors who escaped death, and who were living in hiding, or scattered in inland provinces. We must conclude that 10,000,000 Calverinians were carried out of their homes, in their villiage towns and cities and scattered into starving fugitives in all directions, or trapped in the path of forest fires. The murdered alone, nombered about 10,223,090. The remainder still at large in Calverinia in pitiful want of the barest necessities of life hold out their hands to the christian fellowship of powerful Abbiesannia.

Angelinia's and Abbiesnnias oblivious guilt.

It now come dear reader to a matter of crucial interest. In how far are the governments of Angelinia and Abbiesannia responsible for the murder and deportations of the helpless Ca Calverinian women and children? Let me say most emphatically, the Abbiesannian and Angelinian governments could have easily prevailed it from progressing after it started. The strenuous and repeated efforts of the Angelinian generals would have been successful, had the governments allowed the justified measure of all Glandelinian prisoners had they done so. They had appealed to the aurthorities to allow them to forcibly stop the extermination of women and children by destroying the foe armies captured, and not give them any quarter, untill the foe desisted in their useless cruelties.

But all their appeals was fruthless. In their numerious interviews, with the government officials of Angelinia and Abbiesannia, the generals tried to impress them that the world would consider their nations equally responsible for the crimes of the wicked Glandelinians. They urged that even from an econ economic point of view it was not to Glandelinias advantage to win the rebellion when their savage Turmerannian armies should destroy the constructive elements of the Calverinian country, as that would mean the economic ruin of the Glandelinian Empire. Then in the event that Glandelinia should win war and rebellion and become the ruler of Calverinia once more, they would find it an empty shell. When the generals found that their arguments were of little avail, they suggested to the governer Generals of Angelinia the desirability of bringing pressure on the Foreign Office of Abyssinkile to the end that instructions be sent to the Glandelinian Ambassador in Mormonuia to insist upon a cessation of the violent atrocities or withdraw from that christian countr country. This resulted merely in a note from the Glandelinian Embassy to the Glandelinian aurthorities, protesting against the horrors perpetrated by the fierce Turmerannians. The purpose of this note was merely to absolve the government of Glandelinia from all responsibility. It had no practical effect whatever.

There is not the slightest doubt in my mind that the Angelinian armies in the east could at the very beginning have stopped these horrors, by massacring all the Glandelinians either who did it and even prisoners taken in battle. This would surely have had the desired effect as the Glandelinian aurthorities had the greatest horror of seeing their fellow men slain in cold blood. Only the Abyssinkillian aurthorities had the right decision, and Angelinia and Abyssinkilian aurthorities and even Abbiesannian aurthorities opposed them and did not allow them to punish the Glandelinians severelybas they deserved.

The two nations Angelinia and Abbiesannia suffered heavily for their mistake. Thier aurthorities thought it unchristian like to massacre prisoners taken in battle. But are they foolish enough to allow the outragsious terrorizing,----the cruel torturing---the giving of children to slaughter, or slavery---the debauchery of women, girls, more, the slave of many of them to slave pa plantations at one cent each, the murder murdering of hundreds of thousands per month, and the deportation to God knows where, and starvation to misery, and disease inthe Calverinian deserts, of other hundreds of thousands of millions, the destruction of thousands of towns and villiages and scores of cities, thousands of miles of forests---and the wilful execution of this whole devilish scheme to annihilate th Calverinians, Angelinians, and Abbieanniens, and Abyssinkilian wo children and evn even men, will the Angelinian aurthorities allow this to go unpunished, because they do not like to have the murderers executed by the wholesale? will the Glandelinians be permitted, aye, encouraged by their cowardice, by notstriking back, to continue to r treat all Calverinians in their power as "Unbelieving dogs."

It is even wondered if the four hundred million Abbieanniens in control of Calverinia and Angelinia are going to again condone like before these horrible offenses by the wicked Glandelinian Empire? wi they like Manley, take the bloody hand of Glandelinia, forgive her, decorate her as Manley has done to his officers with the highest orders? Or will hereafter definite steps be promptly taken to rescue permanently the remnants of these find old civilized christian Calverinians from the fangs of the fierce Turmeranniens?

The most frightful, and lno longest massacre of the whole war was th main portion of the Kintergarten reign of terror starting on the eight day of June and reaching its climax on the last of the same month 1913. The Glandelinians all Turmeranniens under general Richard Tamerline started it at the town of Cecilia Decie, and thence onward, causing to add to it nearl a billion dollars wo damage. It was claimed that the Glandelinians were goaded to commit t massacre from the reason that the people of the towns of Lady Decie, and dgewater(CalverinieEastern)) sniped the Glandelinian soldiers as they were passing through killing andwounding about nearly two hu thousand Glandelinians,the persons having fired upon them from street doors, roofs of houses, alleys, and windows and other secret places. It happened it is true, for the people did commit the act of sniping, but it was doubted if this really was the cause, forh the massacre had been decreed by general Johnston Jackon Manley on September 1912, and it was carried out in spite of fierce opposition from the better and more sensible Glandelinian generals.
Buchanan Manley's armies all Zimmermanniens and Neo-Hollestiniens, the worse of all Turmeranniens committed the worst scenes, and town after town was razed to the ground untill within two weeks over fourteen hundred villiages and towns had been totally devasted, cities havocked worse than by earthquakes, and set roar roaring seas of fire, and over eighteen million children alone had been murdered, entirly and many more millions died in exile.

The quickness of the outbreak was too sudden to be realised, it began at the town of Cecilia Decie, and then progressed northeastw and westward. untill towns known by the o name of all saints had been razed to the ground. In one little section 1,000 priests, and two hun bishops and sixty six cardenals, 3,366 Sisters, and twenty two thousand religious of all sects were cr cruelly massacred. The massa was commanded by the generals, Bicknellian, Francis Federallson, Thomas Fedderal, Thomas Federal, Tomas Federall, Richard Tamerline, Phellinia Tamerline, Tamerline Bonillion, Rickson Tamerline, Logan Tamerline, and general Raymond Richardson Federal, and the two Manley directed it all from their own points in Western Calverinia.

Within those two weeks the scene had become like a behemoth charnel hell,, and seas of fire swept forests to a great extent, and one single o forest fire sometimes swept a wooded ridge at one time to the length of thirty six miles, and an average width of sixty miles, burning all before it, and consuming ee evr every town, villiage and city in its path. In eastern Calverinia during this regi of terror sixty six forest fires were burning all at once in many scattered territories, and simultaneously a thousand explosions occurr everywhere daily, while all in the path of hellish ruin hundreds of towns, villiages and cities had been burning nearly all at once.

Edge water was the only town untouched, for the fact that a big chris ian army was situated there and prevented the enemy from advancing two the town. All the tortures that was enacted here was too horrible to relate, and God alone could estimated the millions of vile crimes and Sacreleges committed against him and all sects of his Holy Churches by the Glandelinians, such as insults to images of Christ, the Blessed Mother, and all saints, Holy Pictures, the Blessed Sacrament and the degrading crimes againstbthe Holy Eurcharist was the worse o all.

Thousand o s of Glandelinian horses were given Holy Communion
ht for spoof and insult against God, and priests were at times ced to walk over an image of Our lord and the Blessed Mother, t because they were afraid to do so, or afraid to disobey them, but that three Glandelinians would take the priest by the arms, and pull him forward under blows of a lash or rawhide whip.

The Glandelinians after committing these vile crimes, and whole ale massacres, would then recieve Holy Communion in mockery, and only ve witnessed could describe in more greater perfection all the sacreleges and insults to God as these Glandelinians committed.

It has been stated in many accounts of the wickedness of cities in this world and of their destruction, and yet in Calverinia the hollest cities recieved worse than the wicked ones.And Angelinia and Abbieannia stood for all this without raising and striking with a revengeful arm a terrible blow that would have shortened all these dreadful crimes and atrocities against God and Christianity.

The K intergarten horror was the most complete overturn of all time in the Angelinian history. It was the massacre of a great mass of people, when also the Glandelinians attempted to sweep away all the privileges possessed by the Angelinian nobles and the clergy the intolerable survivals of fuedalism to the idea of the enemy.
When all these previligos were swept away, and the Glandelinian traters drunk with their own successes, began the attempt to enforce and enforce absolute equality, the aristocracy of the Calverinian rich was suspected, and those who sympathished with it likewise.

Then broke out anew the reign of terror, when the dripping blades of the Glandelinians rose and fell everywhere sparing not even Angelinian generals captured in battle, while the armies of Glandelinia strove to drive the foreign christian soldiers from Calverinian soil.
The slaughter of so many Angelinian generals, and so many men women and children, in Calverinia, and the destruction of so much property sent a thrill of horror throughout all the world, and ten nations threatened to unite against Glandelinia. But the reign of terror was not this blind and indiscriminate slaughter as is sometimes supposed.

It was a deliberate attempt to crush all christian resistance on the part of the Angelinian armies which we were so heavily overwhelm ing them. When the battle of Danton came with the christian armies under general Robespierre and the foe armies under Federal Johnston, the Glandelinian generals seeing the frightful disaster to the Glandelinia n army which was almost destroyed and routed thought that the time for a moderation in the massacres had come, but the wickedest of the Glandelinian generals did not agree, and so the massacres continued with redoubled fury to revenge the disasterous defeat. The Glandelinians were mad for blood and frantic with fear that the christian success would be restored, andso raved and attempted to revive the terror.

At this critical time just before the great battle of Atlantonburg,general Hanson Vivian had by draft formed immense armies under Hanson Francis who was appointed to command the armies against the Glandelinian reign of terror. This happened just near the beginning of June. The next few weeks were full of color and great interest. Cross ing to Eastern Calverinia his armies began to strike here and there, and soon brought a gr great part of Eastern Calverinia again under Angelinian control. The Glandelinians now raved like legions of maddened demons and stormed with the ferocity of their reign of terror making it reach to its height. Sent to the town of Lady Decie, one of the christian armies was successful on land, but the Glandelinian admiral Plantonia, destroyed a christian fleet at the battle of the River of Our Good Mother, and here the christian situation became exceedingly precarious. But the other christian armies directed by Hansonia Francis crossed the eastern mountians as general Francis Hannabell had done and fe fell upon the Glandelinian possessions in northeastern Calverinia, and within three days the many Glandelinian armies simultaneously
and within three days the many Glandelinian armies simultaneously crumbled before him and as a final result, more than three hundred seperate Glandelinian armies within those two weeks were reduced to about fourty, but still in places the reign of terror still raged.

Great military roads were strewn with orpses, the streams which had been spanned with noble bridges were smashed in floating bodies, and the birge bridges destroyed.

It was literally in the eastern part of Calverinia a war of hell but at ederstraight, Blessed Virgin Ridge, St Augustine, St Fridols, and Immaculate Conception Run the Angelinian armies began to prove themselves invincible and the Glandelinians overthrown in these bloody battles began to retire southward. The Imperial eagles of the glags of Angelinia entered the city of St Ann in triumph. All of the northern part of Eastern Calverinia with the Glandelinians humiliated and stripped of all territory were shut out o of the Confederation of the Blessed Virgin River, into which other Calverinian states were formed. The Turneramnians and Condenciminns with the aid of other Glandelinian armies fought desperately to main the existance of the reign of terror, struggling furiously to regain their lost terretory only to meet bitter defeats at Marie Louise and Slanderton and of the overthrow of four hundred thousand Glandelinia at the battle of Gertrude Angeline where only fourty thousand Glandelinians survived. The christian armies marched to Cecil in Decie, where a hundred days battle had raged, ending with Edgewater and St Helena wherem illions fell all these spelling terrible disast for the Glandelinian armies.

The Glandelinian soldiers fought bravely as alwa many of their armies in the east were very poorly equipped, and mis led. The plans of the main christian generals in the eastern drama war worked perfectly, splendidly, and their armies moved as steadily and as remourselessly as a tornado. The foe armies fought with the utmost desperation at the battle of Worth Gravelotteing but were all overthrown and the remainder forced to sare surrender. Sedannia also a battle in which the Glandelininns fought as equally as desper but also was a terrible disaster in which the Glandelinian generals his whole army was captured. The Glandelinian chief general in this location was taken prisoner, and the victorious Angelinians with the allies marched to the Eastern Calverinian capitol still held by the enemy called Estaer. Resistance here by the foe was also in vain though perhaps no other city in Calverinia ever resisted the christi so endurably, tenaciously, and desperately, but famine and everythin else to make a complication of horrors intervened and it surrendered to the christian also.

The main horrible scenes of this great Glandico-Angelinia war wa the ravaging fires set by the enemy. The burning of towns, cities, villiages, and hemlets by the wholesale was indeed terribly terrible in the extreme, but far more terrible was the gigantic fo fires caused by the many Glandelinian firebugs. Much is spoken of the havoc and ruin wrought in many great wars, mentioned in the history, but they all combined do not compare with the destruction wo wrought by the Glandelinians in all parts of Calverinia already far. Who ever read of the brutal "American Indian wars" without thrill? Yet in their massacres the Glandelinian soldiers were far the than the most barbarious savages, and committed massac too horrible to be pictured in any way. And all this they do to dei God. W My heaven s what will they do next?

Even now the most greatest disasters of the Glandico-Angel war was beginning to manifest itself. This was occuring elsew than Calverinia or Angelinia, and that was in those christian nation which were not taking any part in the great war. Food conditions growing bad in Abbieannia, and other nations began to suffe r bad i all industries. It was from Calverinia and Angolinia that most prov ions had been recieved by these nations, and the innocent on lod ing nations now found themselves nil in recieving supplies.

Supplies could not be sent on account of Glandelinian rovers of the sea, such as submarines, battleships, crusiers, torpedo boat chasers, and other ships of war. Many ships had been at the beginnin the war been sent out even under the escort of warships and torpedo boats, but these hellish Glandelinian craft sunk many of these provi ships either by terrific gun fire or by blowing them up with torpedo stopping and detaining others, and towing them to Glandelinian port whr where they were interned. Ships of no nations ap; approaching the region of the Calverinian shores were safe, and many who had known the menance of the Mc-Whirthian seas near the Angelinian coas steamed their way into the danger zone, and either were sunk or captured.

It was a perfect sea not of Submarines, and dangerous Mines. Since the war started ten thousand ships of all nations had been either sunk or seized and their passengers and crews taken prisoners and jailed without reason. This horor horror upon water started a great scarcety of food and provisions for Abbieannia, prices for a pint of butter was already two dollars, or five dollars a pound, apples, and all kinds of fruits were fifty cents a-piece, outrageious prices, but not from profeetering as it was really on account of the food becoming totally exhausted, being so scarce a that it was even hard to find the stores that sold it, and in other countries already it was impossible to obtain any kind of Calverinian fruits altogether. Prices of everything seemed to be going sky high, sugar was seventy cents a pound, and only rich people were able to buy it, and clothing was so high that people among the poor rather go in rags than buy food, and all kinds of provisions began to become so scarce that the prices seemed to rise in jumps and bounds.

This may have been the cause of Abbieannia immediately entering the war several months a fter the Angelinians started it.

In many nations factories that had obtained goods from Calverinia and Angelinia were now closing because such goods could not be obtained, and it seemed apparent that if something wa not done soon millions of men and women working in the factories and shops would be thrown out of jobs as the factories would soon be compelled to close and shut down.

If this happened millions would be rendered desperate from povert/ The main victims it seemed was threatening to be the children of all the other christian nations. All sweet substances such as candy goods, were made only in the con countries of Calverinia and Angelinia. Nuts and other goodies seen at Christmas and other Holidays were also sent from Calverinia. Already with the capture of the fortifications of Mc-Whirther Point by the enemy, which guards the big d ty of Vivian Wickey, and with the adjoining Calverinian islands, known as the Boyking and Kingiomoneans in the possession of the enemy also all such provisions had been stopped by the enemy who seized everything eating all themselves fat as the enemy had also blockaded all western Calverinian seaports the conditions became more complicated than ever.

The war growing in force as the mon months went by it was apparent as no attempts could avail in capturing the fortifications that the sugar famine was already threatening to grow worse, and the nation of Mackencile reported afamine in her southern states.

It seemed apparent that the whole world was in great danger of suffering from the effects o of this great war which was so extensive in so few a number of months, and whose outbreak had been so sudden.

The material for making good buildings was becoming scarce, outside of food, and erections of buildings seemed in danger of being stopped until something could be done to succor Calverinia who was being deadly devastated by the wanton enemy of God. Even on account of the treachery of the Glandelinian war rovers of the sea, all sea traffic was being stopped. The Angelinians had interned thousands of Glandelinian sea craft, and were building warships out of them. Ships were followed to enter Angelinian ports, but were seized and those on board deported south to Glandelinia.

The first Christmas day had already seemed to have passed, probably one of the saddest christias days was this one, not only in Calverinia but in the other nations, for it had been a giftless one as this tragedy had been also caused by the seizure of the great Mc-Whirthian fortifications, and also the city of Aronburg and Admiral, and also that of Vivian Wickey, the three places reported being bombarded by christian armies, and fleets day and night just as frequently as Julo Callio, and other besieged o Calverinian cities.

Vivian Wickey the lagrest city in the world in this story was garrisoned by an army of one hundred million Glandelinian soldiers, as ih inhibatants having been completely evicted and deported eastwad outward by the foe and driven into exile. The city which was reported to cover a distance of one hundred miles in width, and sixty more in length had been dee defended by the Glandelinians with the greastest success tha far and the d ty was now protected by added land fortifications builded by the foe to resist any s i seige that may be made by land armies to help the christian fleets that were shelling the fortifications.

In the year of eighteen fourteen one the Abbiesannians seeing the beauty of the city of Vivian Wickey, and seeing it defended, had started the erection of the fortifications, which though soon stopped by a great storm in eighteen seventy one, was completed by the Angelinians and Calverinians themselves.. The fortifications are a series upon series of most gigantic forts guarded or defended by over one million great cannons, great stone palasades, and instead o of being builded on lev ground are builded on low hills of great abrupt de or ascent. The extent of these fortifications was nearly ninty miles fronting the sea board of the great city, and of the main heavier guns all the fortifications had three hundred and sixty five thousand nine hundre ninty nine bigger guns. The unfortunate Calvsinians had been overcof overconfident on account of the strength of the fortifications, the Calvei alverinian government thinking they would not be captured by the strongest force even if they were not strongly garrisoned, and despite the advises and entreaties of the main guardians and aur thorities the fortifications had not been well guarded, and so at the outbreak of the war the enemy had easily secured a stronghold wo which could have been able to hold the whole wol world at bay.

All christian ships that were then in Wickey bay about fourteen thousand three hundred, and of all sizes were interned, the fortification and city was seized, and the population though not threatened with massacre were deported and driven from the region at the point of the bayonet and compelled to leave all their belongin behind not being allowed to take anything with them, not even a piece of bread.

The crews and captians of the ships that had been seized had been brutally r jailed, and then contempetiously released and deported This was a great disaster indeed to the Calverinians, and hearing of Hanson had at once sent mighty armies and fleets to besiege the city and fortifications and to retake it, but nothingh ad been accomplishe as jet despite all the vigorous cannonding that was mastered upon it.

The capture of these fortifications was indeed a great disaster no to Calverinia or Angelinia alone but to the wholeoworld, for their capture caused the other nations to be shut off from these seaports by the Glandelinians, and so all commerce commerce with christian nations stopped, and everything else with it.

In the countries of Calverinia and Angelinia all kinds of beautiful Christmas presents were made, and only, andno other nation had men of tarlent to make any kind of hristimas prs presents. The conditions of the Angelinian and Mc-Whirthian seas were usually very treacherious on account of sudden and violent typhoons which no ship could survive, and the only sea safe to travel on was the Calverinian sea.. The only seaports able to transport all articles across the placid Calverinian sea, was Vivian Wickey, and Aronburg and Federal. The other seaports usually did the work also but not so good as these three greater seaports. There had been lots of hope concerning the seaports of the Angelinian countries, and other seaports of Calverinia, but the aurthorities did not dare to put u ships from these seaports for along the Angelinian east all kinds of Glandelinian warecraft floated as thickly as swarms of bees, and the rovers of the sea would sink any christian ship that would dare venture out. Some attempts had been made by strong measures but of no avail, the Angelinian ships and warecraft might as well have been made of paper.

A month after the beginning of the war pi r prices began to jump in Abbiesannia ,, as well as the safe safe suffering i the other nations, and the worse of all threatening was a great famine of toys and all other kinds of Christmas goods. No one at all in the other na had the tarlent of making any kinds of toys as well as no material on account of the climate could be obtained, and material of any kind in those countries when tested were found to be useless. If the famine continues or really goes in great headway it will indeed make great sorrow and menthal misery among little children, who no doubt will then belief that Santa Clause would be abandning them or that he was taken prisoner by the Glandelinians and slain. He was once taken prisoner alright, and wonderful to say it was Violet and h sisters who rescued them. him.

the children of all nations no doubt would suffer alike on account of all this, even in Abbiesannia too. But despite all this suffering was not as bad among little children as it was among the children in Calverinia in the path of the enemys advance and ravages. At the beginning of the war the nations of the wol worldd did not expect it to be much of a war for though conflicts were many they were not even as severe as battles had been fought in other wars, but later on the conflicts began to grow so fierce and deadly, that many nations planned an immediate intervention but intervention just now was not so easy to accomplish on account of the capture of Mc-Whirther, and Aronburg and Federals towns. Indeed all the nations of the world was becoming shocked, surprised, and startled because from correspondents who managed to convey the news of the war, reported of the severity of the proceeding battles of the latter months, having given to the nations a vivid description of the great battles of Evangelinia Crania, Sexton Run, Sunbeam Creek, Jennie Turner and the ferocity of the series of great series, and the horrors of the Kintergarten "Reign of Terror and the many bloody battles raging in the east. The war surely was assuming a maddened ferocit that seemed to becomea hellstorm of horror, with so many of the fiercest battles, the most consuming fires burning in so many places at once, and wide spread devastation, and throughout the whole early part of the war series of most desperate attempts had been made by all fleets of the warring christian countries, tovretake the fortifications guarding Vivian Wickey, and of Hansons most desperate attempts on land, and of his failures at Evangelinia Crania when he was so severely and disasteriously repulsed.

Vivian Wicky was indeed seeming to be very difficult to be recaptured, but the fortifications of Aronburg and Federal was resisting just as desperately. The bombardments sometimes became so severe that it shook the whole coast line of Calverinia, and when the fortified positions on the Blengiglomoneam and Boyking Islands were bombarded simultaneously, the roar was so terrific that it was reported that millions of fishes of all kinds were literally killed by the concussion, and hundreds of cities and towns reported broken and shattered windows, and that furniture and all household goods fairly danced the jig from the vibration. Sixteen times during these bombardments over six million cannon were in action all at once and made a din as if a world of volcanoes were trying to blow their insides out. Fourtt Fourteen times already fierce attempts of the enemy had been made to capture Angelinia Agathia which caused a canon duel for the length of twenty eight miles for ten weeks, and battles whose fiin firing lines were sometimes the same length, and such slaughter that only the Angels would dare to relate them. Still fiercer conflicts were already had had raged throughout eastern and Western Calverinia, but most had been victories of the foe.

The first bloody wreke wreck of the wicked and apparently hapless Glandelinian cause occured at the battle of Bennetts in which the christian army practically destroyed a whole Glandelinian army which when surrounded and cut off from all means of escape fought desperately to the last man and refused to surrender. All this while the famine and dantics, that little children loved had been threatening, Also the scarity of fruits, and great pestilences, and general and famines. Abbiesannia was doing her best to succor the smaller christian nations with provisions she could spare, but her own ships had to be protected by squadrons of great Abbiesannia battleships, torpedo and destroyers, and other war craft.

Over the situation of Mc-Whirther the Abbiesannian governments had become very angry on account of the series of vehemnt and violent attempts to retake Mc-Whirther, the Blengiglomoneam and Boyking islands and Aronburg and Federal were failures, with results of bloody sacrifices. In one great attempt to retake the fortifications on the islands in which nearly fourty thousand warships of all sides partaked hundreds of christian ships were torn to pieces by the gun fire of the enemys shore batteries, and from the cannon barrage from the forts, and many were sunk. With within two weeks about six thousand ships with cabins wrecked, all masts gone, without smokestacks, and some perfect derelicts came into the seaports of Abbiesannia for repairs, and so many wounded were unloaded unloaded that a score of Abbiesannian towns were crowded to overflowing. It was a conglomeration of evil tidings of the bloody war that other christian nations recieved from coresspondents.

All aurthorities, and officials who had been responsible from carelessness of the capture of the Mc-Whirthian fortifications by the enemy were courtmarshalled by general Jack Evans, and shot as traitors.

The central portion of the Calverinian coast boasts of one of the best and biggest cities in all the Angelinian world, and probably the strongest fortifications next to Dolores Mc-Hollester or Angelinia Agathia. The whole Calverinian coast is nearly ten thousand miles long in this story, and Angelinias nearly equal in length. The Mc-Whirthian fortifications after the war of eighteen fourty one had been started by Calverinians they were all altogether about fourty five forts and put so close together on every low hill and ridge that a regular city of world fortifications could do no better. Though called the Mc-Whirthian fun, each section had different names. The main big fortifications were called Fort Cedernine, Blanck, Eva rania, Mc- Hollester and St Damineanian. The main and strongest fortified stretch of forts was the one called fort Marcucian. Others were Forts Silverbell, Angeline, Marcucian II, Demby, Andrew, St Phillip Collyer, Copperani, Francis-Atlanta, Lucille Rickson, Glorinia, Evangelinia St Clare and fort Fairbreadth, and the fortifications of Damanation.

These o fortifications having so man guns it was indeed surprising that the Clandelinians found them so easily to be taken from the small garrisons that were stationed there. It was indeed more easy for the Clandelinians to capture these fortifications than it was for a child to succeed in getting his parents to buy him an ice cream cone, but who can have any idea how hard the christian fleets, and armies found them to be retaken.

About sixty great attacks haibeen made during all this time upon these fortifications and during all these months they held successfully against all the attempts, and ruined so man many christian ships that all nations held their breath in astonishment.

So terrible was the din of the bombardments that the noise was heard further than that heard from the eruptions of Mt Calverine and the din was so continuous that the whole country of Calverinia trembled. It is no doubt that if in the region of the Mc-Whirthian fortifications, had there been ten Mt Calverines in eruption at one time they would not have been heard very plainly and o for nearly all this time since the war began nearly a million cannon was reported be thundering in one solid solitary bombardment, and the sky was so shaken by the explosions of innumerable shells that the din was earsplitting at the distance of two hundred miles, and worse than a million salvoes.

On account of the racket people fled from the region entirely, and trees were shattered by the contin al concussion. The whole coast line of Calverinia was shaken the worse, and windows broken in all the cities the full length, and even the coast of Angelinia viberated fiercely and damaged windows in houses, but in Glandelinia though the the shocks were also felt they had no effect so far as to cause any damage, though every household article in every city along the whole stretch of coast of the three countries viberated eih either like St Vitus dance, or the Irish Jigg, and it was indeed the most great wonder of all that no cities were damaged, excepting those closest Vv Vivian Wickey, and those not severely. It was believed that the cities wr were not ruined is that most of the concussion was higher and did not viberate the ground so much as could have been, but this was at not so as the viberation was so severe on the ground that trees were uprooted and even killed, and no one within the region for sixty miles could keep their feet. The fortifications of Mildred Greshburg, Gil Glronia, Francis Atlanta, Jennie Turner, and Cedernine alone kept up a cannonading for two weeks incessantly that was flabbering to the enemy himself, and also flabbergasting to all nations of the universe. For six times big christian fleets commanded by Admiral Zimmermann and Mc-Hollester, and other admirals, started one of the biggest of the battle tempests on June fourteenth 1913 by storming the shell batteries on shore, and attacking the fortifications of Martha Ford, Jennie Turner and Evangelinia Crania. It was a dreadful bedlam of cannons which spread to other fortifications untill a war of titans raged. While the duel was in progress ten desperate assaults were made also on land by christian troops and marines, but all these failed most disgracefully, and with frightfulo losses to both sides in privates and officers.

In one attack 100,000 cannon broke into action at once and increased in titan throes until all cannon on both sides were in an uproa to deafen those in heaven. Many other attempts were made in June also including fourteen desperate and bloody attempts to take fort Cedernine on Turmerhill. The region here was worse than the scenery of The valley oof a thousand smokes, and the din rolled in out echoes that sounded like a million volcanoes in eruption. All these attempts were in vain. The fortifications held bravely, and eighty christian generals were killed in this battle of Turmer Hill.

If a Saint resists sin desperately, so fiercer was the resistance of the foe in this great battle inferno. But During the same time two Mc-Hollester Ablehannian fleets was annihilated in the mouth of the Ann River in trying to force their way between the gauntlets of the forts of Marcucian, Angelin, Vivian, and Andrew and St Phillip, under the full fire from the guns of Lucille Rickson, and another fleet of 10,000 ships reduced to eight hundred in attacking the shore batteries of Evangelinia Crania. Admiral Zimmermann was wounded in this great contest, and all his crew killed or injured and his flagship a derelict. Admiral Mc-Hollesters fleet succeeded in passing one of the forts but could not run past the others, as thousands of fire rafts were sent down the river against him, and he had to withdraw the remainder of the ships and resume the seige and bombardment.

Mc-Hollesters chief officer was mortally wounded during this war of the nations as it was called, and one Admiral killed, when his flagship blew up. The bombardment caused great fires every where outside the fortifications, and one or two of the great forts were on fire. Nothing at this time happened to the city however excepting that three quarters of the number of houses suffering from broken windows, and injured fi furniture which was shattered from being made to jump around the rooms too much.

It is estimated that no battle in the war time far has ever been known to make such a hellish clamor, or even produce such far reaching shocks. Thousands of cities, towns and villiages were beginning to report broken windows and furniture and church steeples and of wagons which jumped about in the str streets like wild colts, but however no houses were ruined or wrecked, though many did suffer a good deal from the continual shaking up, and most of the inhibatants step out in the open rather than take chances of having the houses cave in upon them.

Of course Mc-Whirther was the most clamorous battle duel in the war so far, but Vicksburg and Federal ranked second though not so continuous and incessant, or so wild, but never in the first year of the war was these conflicts so in unindurable in their shocking horrors. Great destruction of property, houses, ships, lives, an inferno of explosions, of charging, and counter attacks, lasting fully for hours, and one single bombardment of all cannons on both sides lasted fully eighteen hours and three quarters, and it was the most intensive series of battles and artillery duels of the whole northern drama of the war.

It is remarkable to state that half of the number of the opposing sides were engaged at a time. The foe were in possession of the fortifications, cities, and hills around it, the christians occupying other ridges and besieging the cities with the help of their fleets. Most of the struggle centered in the fields when it came to cavarly and infantry actions, and the cannons of both sides threatened to level the two cities to the ground by the concussion and din.

Throughout the seige of these cities here was only a great series of artillery activity, as most of it was being fought by cavarly and infantry, but at the seiges of Vivian Wickey, and Julio Calile the cannon duels were all one continuous uninterrupted duel that kept the whole world ever shaken by the earsplitting salvoes, though of course many desperate infantry and calvarly battles were also fought at both places, but not untill the early and latter part of the third year of the war when it reached its highest sway.

General Rickson Mc-Allister who commanded the Clandelinian forces at Vivian Wickey, and the Mc-whirthian fortifications was certainly a hard general to be whipped. There had been three generals before he took command, but the, had been killed during the dreadful artillery battles. Already during the bombardments and battles, the foe had lost 18,987,000 men in killed and wounded, and two hundred generals. The christian losses in privates was 23,406,000 in killed and wounded, but no losses in generals were reported.

In the meantime general Whilliamsberger was also very active elsewhere and was indeed proving himself to be one of the most invincible christian generals of them al all indeed? Many other christian generals had been moving also with their forces at Zimmermann orders, but was suffering severe repulses in all their attempts while Zimmermann was always forging ahead.After his great victory at Jennie Turner or Kittens Riechards Run and after driving Manleys routed army to such a stupendous distance without hardly a halt and capturing one quarter of his artillery left behind in the mad general Zimmermann not being able to findManleys army in its secret refuge decided to leave an army to watch for the appearance of the Rebel Chief and to hinder his further purposes, while he moved forward with the remainder of the christian forces. U Unknown to Zimmermann Manley was moving northward, and by the time Zimmermann started his own movement northward it was reported to general Hanson that H Johnston Jose Jackson Manley was not far from Phelantenburg with a new army and threatening to throw him out.

General Zimmermann frustrated in his intentions of laying seige to Vivian Wickey, by his battle with Manley, now marched his armies northwestward by rout of the long Vivian Hills, while another big army belonging to him moved forward, with the intention to help strike a hard blow against the besieged Clandelinian at Julo Callio as was Zimmermanns intentionsbefore, but Zimmermann needing the other army but did not intend to strike at Julo Callio just then, but decided to move straight northward to besiege Vivian Wickey, which was more important.

After some long tedious marching general Zimmermanns two armies reached the vinicity of Madge Evans but found no Clandelinian army there to oppose them. After a days halt the long advance was resumed untill the armies got to Flanders where several months before they had met such fierce opposition. Reaching Jennie Turner after three days marching the two great armies against halted, for rest and encamped three days and then marched onward again. Two other armies ma rolling in in the vinicity of Julo Callio and Jo Madge Evans was reported to be coming to make a junction with Zimmermanns great host. At Cellcelli a large force of Hobbonites was seen encamped, but great as they were and under general Flantery too who engaged Zimmermann before, they were too frai frail in size to oppose such a large christian army, and though at first the Clandelinian general made a show as if preparing for battle, he nevertheless slipped away in the night, and retreated eastward between the valleys of the mountians. One of the Angelinian quickly pursued, and trapped the Clandelinian army. After being besieged for two days general Flantery finally surrendered and Zimmermann captured a Clandelinian army of five million men.

This success without even a battle surprised general Zimmermann indeed.He recieved many reports dut during his long advance on complications of disasters in the north, but notwithstanding all he heard, a and the serious condition of the land and bad rivers, General Zimmermann fairly smashed his way onward through all obstacles and now without a battle he had six big Clandelinian armies retreating before him. Several times he had expected the Be to engage him but not so. It was apparent that only Manleys army hadthe spirit enough to fight a battle with him. Battles were raging all around where, and S Zimmermann had now been advancing for a month and had been at all activs. His purpose was to move upon the region of Logan Zoe Rae Run near Vivian Wickey. His army moved onward and he reported several times to the Angelinian government that no Clandelinian army dare engage him.

However soon something was starting. The seried armies of the foe had united into one and was found to be commanded in person by general Jack Manley.. The Clandelinian army had taken up positions in the town of Demas, and before general Zimmermann expected it one of his armies was suddenly assaulted by overwhelming numbers of Turmeranian and after a total engagement of half a day was totally routed. Zimmermann had come up in time however, and threw his second army in the way, and after most sanguinary fighting held the mighty tidal wave Clandelinians at bay. General Jack Manley was wounded at the height of the contest but still the contest raged on a battle extending for four miles, and again one of the most sanguinary of the war. General Logan Rees christian army one of Zimmermanns was also assaulted and four hours fierce fighting in which woeful numbers fell was pressed back and defeated in the wildest confusion with the christian commander killed but Vivianna and Vivianna was sent to this point by Zimmermann.

Vivianna and Vivian anna was pressed back at all points, and he himself with his chief officers wounded, but fortunately night closed the scene and the enemy withdrew to the cover of their works. On t On the morrow Zimmermann threw his whole army upon the Clandelinians and the battle was as fierce as before. Robert Vivianconia captured from the enemy the great Jackson Ridge, but he was wounded severely, and half of his command out down. But nevertheless all attempts of the foe to retake the ridge met with annihilation.

Hensonia took the enemys position on the right held by general Jule Child, and sustained fifteen great onslaughts made by ten million Clandelinians each time, and the battle was a regular slaughter of humanity. Each time the enemy came forward insuch numbers their battle line was so galled and torn up that a confused and panic retreat occured. At the same time on the main center Zimmermann got to the front in time just as the battle was at its highest fury. The christian center had moved forward all at once a line of men ten miles long, and charging through an inferno and driving the foe back at all points. In this charge however the whole christian line had been fearfully gapped and torn and every regiment had every flag torn to shreds by the storm of bullets and bursting shrapnell.

At two o-clock a large portion of Jack Manleys army was still holding. It took untill four o-clock for the christian lines to reorganized and then the attack was resumed and soon a good portion of this section of the foe was retreating in hopeless confusion.

While seeing to it that the other big divisions were being brought around to encompass Manleys rear general Zimmermann threw their main armies forward, and after one terrific charge lasting four hours, and which passed in feronity all comprehension drove all of the foe from the entire region winning the battle. It was another scattered rout, but on the following day general Jack Manley despite his wounds had exerted his strength so much that he rallied most of the army, and then retreated in an orderly manner northeastward, but always keeping far in front of Zimmermanns army which advanced after him as swiftly as christian soldiers could march or double time.

During this frightful two days battle of Demas the christian generals Francis Evans, Walter Starring, Jenetiens, two other great Antonians, and Dicknell were wounded, and Nore Vivinnia was badly disabled but this did not b made it any more difficult for Zimmermann for though these generals were wounded, his army was still strong and most powerful and though these generals were left behind at Angelinia Agathia to get healed up he had placed at their request other great generals in their stead, and these christian generals by their vigorous and swift advance formed a regular war storm of Angelinian soldiery, that soon made Zimmermanns whole army a perfect an avalanch, and at whom the enemy believed it was all the angels of heaven that was advancing and not christian soldiers. The movement and advance of Zimmermanns army during this great upheavel in the west war indeed was sweeping away all opposition. The battle of Demas had been a terrible reign of terror for the Clandelinians the fury of the battle and the awful reign of terror for the highest Clandelinian generals.

Sparing even the highest Clandelinian generals. During the month of May general Zimmermann had after a two months advance now obtained possession of all fortified towns in the Upper southern o part of Calverinia in possession of the enemy capturing every army and garrison. The region of Robespire Dantonia was soon reached where in the war the greatest disaster of the foe killed, when their army was destroyed, and their general Louis Turner killed, and where ten new armies had been hurled upon the Angelinians but not such strong resistance as to be swept away by the irrestible christian tidal wave of advance.

To the enemy general Whilliamsburger Zimmermann proved to be a great terror. After his two months steady cap ampaign ,and defeating the Clandelinian army under general ack Manley, his series of great armies crossed the great Mc-Hollester ain at many points, and soon began to strike strike vigorously here and there anlas repeatedly as the waves of the sea in a storm capturing a number of Clandelinian armies, and fortified towns without even a battle and soon brought all this part of southern Calverinia under his control, and was sending new armies eastward and westward to help in the work of crushing the Kintergarten horror.

All the while during his long advance general whilliamsburger Zimmermann had heard of the great reign of terror in the east of its horrors, great battles, destruction of po property, and blind and indiscriminate slaughter of hundreds of thousands of women and children and he had all he could do to control his soldiers for they were all mad for revenge and frantic with fear that the perpo people of Western Calverinia, with their property and immense forests would soon share the same fate the fury of the Glandelinians already raving like thrillions of hell. Zimmermann had decided that no such disaster should occur if he could prevent it and made such attempts to crush the foe armies in his way that as soon as his armies here and there fell upon a x score of Glandelinian armies causing nearly a score of battles at one time the Glandelinian armies crumbled before them.

The soldiers of the many Glandelinian armies directed by Manley L who dared to oppose the advance of the "Terrible Wrath of God" fought with the same extreme bravery as was their way even against the great and overwhelming christian tide, striking blow for blow, and using all kinds of manuevers, and movements, and attempting to flank general Zimmermanns armies as often as possible and putting all kinds of obstacles in his way, breaking down bridges, heaping up the roads, destroying fields of corn and setting fields and grassy plains on fire, and even putting forest fires in his way, out the plume of the Angelinian generals worked pefe perfectly andcore correctly.

The superior knowledge of the enemys country possessed by the many Angelinian generals and other officers under Zimmermann and even by the point of Calverinia indeed outside of where Zimmermann the wicked hand Glandelinia was outgeneraled at every step. It came afterwards to be known in Angelinia that there was not a common soldier in any of the christian armies who did not know the geography of Calverinia and even Angelinia and Glandelinia by heart. The next battle between Zimmermann and Jack Manleys army was fought on June fifteenth 1913. Is was very a and sanguinary lasting two days andso great was the outcome and advantage on both sides for some time that both the Angelinians and the Glandelinians were overconfident of victory. At times it seemed as if the enemyswould really win. Then again it seemed as if the christians were going to be victorio us. Finally all Calverinia records the crushing defeat of the Glandelinians at this battle known as the "BATTLE OF RANDOMCNALLY.6"

ZIMMERMANNS army moved as re morselessly as some gigantic machine. Ja Jack Manley fought the second battle of Spencer, then being outgeneraled retreated to Evansville but did not fight here though he tried to check Zimmermanns advance by placing obsticles in his way. Then from there Manley retreated to Lucillie, and thence to Lotte, and again to Gravewhite but halted at Cedamnia where he threatened to make a stand. Zimmermanns army was then concentrated at Jennie Francis Anna During a raid at this point at one night one of the main Glandelinian generals was captured. Jack Manley a at continued his retreat untill he reached the town of Furneranna where three days his army resisted against Zimmermann as tenaciously as fi but despite it all all resistance was in vain and Manleys armies began to flee panic stricken, and many surrendered, or deserted.

At some points the foe was parcially rallied and the resistance redoubled but again in vain. The Glandelinians were humili and stripped of ernormous amounts of provisions and of territory all which had once been in their possession, and Manleys army was cut off the west, south and east, and shut out of the Confederation of Glandelinia and with the series of bitter defeats near Nancy struggle in vain to regain the lost territory. Fu four million four hundred thousand Glandelinians surrendered here. Over eighty million Glandelinians had opposed general Zimmermann and bal barly only hundred of thousands escaped in that awful overthrow.....

The situation of this great war with general Jack Manley a Whilliamsburger Zimmermann was indeed peculiar. Zimmermann had succeeded in smashing down the Glade Glandelinian attack at the battle Lenton creek.. and which had resulted very disasteriously for to the ee enemy which made them unable to present the Angelinian armies under Williamsburger Zimmermann from crossing the little creek. It is true that during other times of Zimmermanns alvance the Glandelinians after their crushing disasters at the town of St Anthony and other well defended points had finally cheek one of Zimmermanns armies, but to keep them at bay was entirely out of the question. Jack Manleys army did attempt in the early part of June to strike Zimmermann a staggering blow especially when J Zimmermanns first great armybreached the town of Jennie Jennieton in northern Calverinia but Zimmermann frustrated them. One of Manleys armies did su ceeed in recrossing the creek at the north bend and pouring across the open country, but got no further than the little town of Aurh Aurthor in which the Glandelinian attack was then disasteriously wrecked. The result after the battle of Lenten Creek then was a gradual backwardflow of dejected for armies twerd the north.

As Zimmermanns advance was continued the enemy made some desperate attempts to check his series of armies, first at Ermine Run and near the old time battle ground of Xa Saxton Run, near the great Mc-Hollester Run. These manuevers favored the enemy as some slight successes but only saved their sadly defeated armies from further disasters and did not at all check the advancing cri christian tide not any better that a ship could check a tidal wave on the sea.

Bradley, and several other conflicts were christian victories, and with the fall of Norma Burokee, and Callio Town which the Angelinians had seized with their entire garrisons, a good portion of Jack Manleys escape was finally cut off from the two rivers, and the losses of the foe was intolerably severe in the engagements, and very little success in saving general Anthoys divisions was obtained elsewhere untill at the time the Kintergarten horror was at its height in the east, the most of general Jack Manleys forces with the fall of Creps went down into a bloody wreck. Uu Usually the Angelinians in Zimmeramnns army were all Abbiesannians, Abyssinkillians, Concentinians, Domdobians and Tripoliglonlians and all these always proved to the landelinians to be a dreadful christian foe indeed a foe relentless, and remorseless and determined to overthrow the rebellion against God and christianity.....

And these sects of christian troops were led by generals equally as good or probably even better than the two Vivians and others whose names have been so frequently mentioned.

These christians always fought likedemons, and though wounded in a number of battles however survived them all fortunately, always kept any landelinian army at bay, destroyed some, captured others, and crushed every attempt to prevent Zimmermann from marching for Logan Zoe Ra Rae Run.

It was at this time in June when again fierce Glandelinian armies made desperate attempts to capture the stronghold of Dolores Mc-Hollester usually known as Evangelinia Agathia. Zimmermann came to the scene with thirty mighty armies. Two score of Glandelinian armies were thrown upon his twenty in a few days but six of them were destroyed, and the seriesof fierce battleswere were that were fought for the possession of this gigantic fortress was a series upon sieries of disasters for the foe who lost twenty generals andmillions of men in every battle. There had seemed great danger of the foe winning here this time for sure because so many Glandelinian armies were concentrated whichif had been accomplished accomplished would have made the christian cause very very precarious, but the foe won no advantage here at all against Zimmermanns army these foe forces being under Frank and Sac Sanche Manley, and Manlet, with the other generals Pugnose, Saten, and Federal, each army meeting disaster upon disaster and such heavy losses that never could they be correctly estimated. In all over two gen hundred Glandelinian generals were killed and three hundred wounded. The fury of these conflicts at Dolores Mc-Hollester with Zimmermanns armies, and the two Manleys, was simply tremendous and made another war of the worlds, and though only lasting several weeks was worse than the entire war in Europe, between Germany and the Allies, and hundreds of thousands of cannons thundered incessantly. Zimmermanns cannons tore ten of these foe armies to pieces within ten days, scathed the whole region with the terrific terrific shell fire, and ripped and tore to pieces extensive woods that had been recently torn spart by other battles here, and the whole scene for the distance of thirty miles was a vast morgue. Here Zimmermanns career reached its first high tide. Before Mc-Hollester or Angelinia Agathia was a vertible Verden of hell to foe forces wh attacked it now it was worse than any one can comprehend. All throughout the year the .a many christian nations of the world had watched and waited anx for the news of the outcome o of the struggles at Angelinia Agathia with great apprehension and anxiety, for they knew that all christiani would fall into utter ruin should Zimmermann be beaten here. But Zimm was not beaten and after two weeks of it the losses became so costly t the enemy leaders that they all began to think it was sucide to make further serious attempts to the gigantic fortress of Calverinia and Angelinia a vertible Gibralter of heaven and which had destroyed a ma of Glandelinian armies before. The losses of the enemy was indescrim in these battles and the Glandelinian government beseached general John Manley who was operating at other sections of Calverinia and near Phelantonburg at the time to order general Frank and Sancoe Manley his two brothers to lay off of Angelinia Agathia and get away with what they had left, before general Zimmermann makes a movement that w trap their armies and cut off their retreat. The two Manleys obeyed, but Zimmermann persued and d o drove all before him for fifty miles before the two Manleys escaped in the recesses of the high mountians Calverinia.

Angelinia Agathia about sixteen miles southeast of Glorinia Zoe Rae R
the scene of the wars mightiest battles was believed by the christian aurthorities to be the strongest guarded city in the world but they feared nevertheless that if ever the attemptscof the enemy had turned out successful the Glandelinian armies could have struck the besieging christians at Julo Callio and Norma Cathering and evn even Vivian Wickey a crushing blow that would have staggered Angelinia, bu the crushing blow came to the enemy instead, which not only broke the full force of the foe attacks atb Angelinia Agathia, but caused the of foe armies under these two Manleys to finally flee southward as a fugitive army beset on all sides by christian enemies during Zimmerma persuit, untill they reached their refuge in the hills. On several occasions during their attempts on Angelinia Agathia the enemy enemy armies had been compelled to fight fiercely to break their way through when surrounded by overwhelming christian armies, and check fierce and driving christian counter assaults only long enough to draw away and save the armies from total destruction. At one point Frank Manley had succeeded in holding a great christian christian attack in check untill the escape of one of his armies was insured.

General Whilliamsburger Zimmermann was one of the supre generals of the christian armies, nearly as high in rank as the two G e great Vivians and he worked so vailently that he made himself a g Napoleon of Angelinia and made one of the most metw meteoric advances of the war, and his ways wasindeed so terrible that soon he a christian''DOG'' dreaded by all of the foe generals. The two Vivian had also several times checked the enemys attempts on Angelinia Agath and threw the Glandelinian armies from the region. It was once when even Zimmermann stayed a great advance of General Manlet at Lucille Jorden and without a battle either, captured two forces of the enemy near Madge Evans, one army at Sunbeam Creek June the eighteenth, and crushed a large force of the enemy in a raid upon Angelinia June
He took two other places, captured great privisio troops, saved general Bicknells army from being trapped at Starring Ford and held back all attempts of the enemy to crush his invasion Calverinia. He as well as the two Vivians were making a deadly barri for the vast armies of Glandelinians, and it seemed just now as if hopes for Manley to win the rebellion was in vain.

THE BATTLE OF MARILLAC. SEMINARY.....

While general Whilliamsburger Zimmermann was making his great Mc-Hollester run campaign general Jacksonia Adams Evans had been making his own campaign northeastward with the intention of making a junction with eih either general Vivian or Hanson his brother. He h a series of armies also but near Marillac Seminary he was forced to h in his advance because of a great Glandelinian army under general Francis Schmidt who opposed him. This little town is situated on the banks of the great Mc-Hol Hollester Run River. Evans was rally i ing for another battle foe he had not been engaged for a long time and he knew if he moved upon the enmy enemy at once and let the foe know of his main strength the Glandelinian army would run away as usual.

the plans of general Jack Evans was to pretend to lay inactive for a short period and also to make demonstrations in as small a force as possible to entice the enemy to either attack him or attack the foe instead.
These plans worked splendedly for the movements made gave the enm enemy leader an idea that the christian army was smaller than it really was. He then refused to a retreat, but to attack was out of the question just then. From the beginning of June untill the middle of the month both armies lay inactive only glowering at each other like two dogs who wish to fight but who are afraid to start it. On account of the slowness of the enemy to attack Evans grew impatient, and decided to force the enemy into a battle for to lay like this inactive so long was only delaying his advance tward Phelantonburg.

Evans had thirteen big armies and the enemy had an equal number of forces, but each smaller than those of Evans. The thirteen christian armies were under general Atlanta Francis, Greenburg, former, Lucillie Rickson, Logannia, Vivianna , Vivianana Johnston two brothers, Vivian Robertson, Hansonia Franklin, Mc-Whirther Hansonia and other generals whose names will be related later.

Evans finally goaded the enemy into the battle by harassing the menemys rear after checking all their po purposes to retreat after the foe leaders had discovered the strength of the Angelinian army, and who the christian general was. It was a battle raging for eighteen hours and was one of the first bloodiest battles of the war that Evans himself fought with the enemy. The battlefield was very extensive, and portion of it raged closed to the Mc-Hollester Run River. The first part of the battle started right on the plains of Penu, and extended gradually along the whole line of the first army of General Evans. The strength of both sides in the engagement on the first part of the struggle was equal, but the enemy had better positions, more artillery and more ammunition than the christians did. The christian forces were facing the eastern section, and the foe west and southwest. The enemy were in possession of the banks and hilly ground near the Stanck River and the christian positions stretched across the wide plains, and through a wooded country and low foot hills and the whole christian line stretched in the form of an angle. After the battle it recieved the name of "The bloody angle.."""

It was not the intention of Evans commanders to have all at once a general engagement as the ground was very uneven, it being Evans purpose only to bar Schmidths advance untill the time would come to strike him a real blow that would compell his surrender. Nevertheless Evans saw the possibility of pushing on if he desired to reach Phelantonburg in the ri right time, and so he decided to either capture or overthrow the whole Glandelinian army p opposed to him, and to strike a blow against the thirteen Glandelinian armies in rapid succession and such a ows as to stagger the enemy.

He finally after four hours captured the wooded positions held by the enemy but not without desperate fighting, and then f drove his heaviest forces upon the main right wing of the Glandelinian army striking it a terrible blow and vanquishing the whole force with supreme slaughter.
Then gathering other great forces Evans threw them forward and drove back one of the enemys big armies in the wildest confusion but in the frightful mass the christian general Lucille Rickson recieved a mortal wound, and Evans recieved a report that he had lost thirty generals and many men.

He nevertheless was not daunted and learning that the foe forces had rallied near the Seminary struck with overwhelming numbers, and once again compelled the enemy to fall back just as news came to him by messengers of the destruction of Hansonia Johnstonias Glandelinian army who had tried to counter charge and who got ambushed by christian troops and artillery. Seeing how things were progressing, and being determined to win general Francis Schmidt threw upon Evans assailants heavy reinforcements, and galled the christian armyso terrifically with artillery, musketry, and machine gun fire that for a time the christian advance could not progress any further.

Evans saw this splinded rally on the enemys part and after ten o-clock mustered against the enemy two great armies under Vivianama and Zimmermann Saunders, these forces being hurled upon the ce enemys left and center almost simultaneously. The attack was one of the most gigantic of all and was sofurious that its violence passed the comprehensi comprehension of all christian officers but nevertheless it was dis mysteriously beam beaten, the best and strong divisions of men beingbadly torn up with their commanders all down and the survivors were routed back to their own works.

This repulse of the christian armies gave the enemy generals great confidence, and with the cry of "God cannot help them now, thirteen Glandelinian divisions rushed forward and made a tremendous counter charge. This made one of the worse scenes of the battle h thus far now when the christian commanders directed by Evans made the most determine attempts to overthrow the furious Glandelinian attack. The fury with w the assault raged was something awful and was made against an overwhelm force of Abyssinkilians and Abbieannian ls. The Glandelinian forces sto and raged with their attack for four hours but could not carry the chr ian position on account of the teeming christian cannon which so repeatedly tore the Glandelinian coocolumns and biggest armies to piece and caused the main commander to withdraw the sadly depleted troops w had lost fifteen generals and nearly fifteen million men.

It indeed was like some hellstorm of battle and the main foo general at this portion called Kittens Richards was killed. T s ws was on of bloodiest parts of the battle and extended for thirteen miles. On the christian side general Gallilie was wounded but his troops surged acro the wide plains fourvtimes and drove the foe fro their positions alm at this point with losses too great to be estimated and with a more frightful number of generals killed, wounded or disabled for life.

The Abbieannians, Angelinians, and Abyssinkilians supported by Tripoligonlians, Concentinians, and Domdobians, accomplis a little more than a massacre along this point, the inferno of battle turned into a reeking hell of slaughter. Schmidth seeing this disaster hurled his main squares upon the christians, but the Glandelinians forces were again torn in pieces and was compelled to withdraw hastily tward their p own positions, their general Chamberlane being seriously wounded.....

They were however reinforced by general Francis Schmidt and here they made a pugnacious stand against further christian assaults, but were soon driven from even their own position. Gallilies christian troops was storming the enem/s main left wing most waldly gaining a sweepi success by two o-clock, but could not hold the advantage the/ had gai as their leader had fallen and were soon swept back all the distance they had won, but nevertheless they fairl/ destroyed all attempts of enemies of God to counter charge.

The christians also capt. captured a position on the banks of the Gl river but lost it again b for they had been unable to retain it as th

Glandelinian batteries poured an annihilating fire upon the position from the hills in the rear.. During a lull in the late afternoon gene Jack Evans changed the positions of the christian line and then by long and more furious fighting terrible to behold, the christian armies began again to move forward capturing some of the other foe positions though by this time Francis Schmidt had brought up all the re aremainder of his forces and after desperate counter charging the positions were rt retaken b/ the foe and the Angelinians driven back to their works.

The Glandelinians also tore the main christian line to pieces that under general Frobeck and gained such sweeping successes that all these biggest christian forces were driven from their positions, the main army under general Evans....?? General Evans had beensucces elsewhere and pushed on to Marillac Seminary and soon restored order in the broken and retiring christia armies. The battle tward evening was then resumed with redoubled violence..... The disordered armies amazed at general Zimmermann Saunders brave stand rallied, and within another hour repelled the enm/ on new ground, while Hansonia hurled sweepingattacks against the enemys positions and cp captured them o the right though at fearful losses, and his two new nephews were killed amid the dreadful carnage.

His brother who personally led the charge was found dangerously wounded and reported captured by the enem/ who retook their positions by making a wild counter assault, and then sweeping forward to storm general Evans's lines with all their force. The battle was still rag even when night drew on and though at the close the enemy won the advantage by repulsing thelast cmage they nevertheless drew off from the battle later, and all his efforts in the o morning could not get enemy to resume the battle. It was very fortunate that general Jack E was not defeated in the battle, and of how the battle turnedout depe

s whether Hansonia Saunders his main aiding commandr commender held his own against the enemys desperate attacks upon his own forces. This great battle had a complication of great disasters, dis astors too dreadful to be explained here. The worse of the disaster of the entire battle occured to the christian armies.....

At the time in the early evening when the battle was at its highest fury the christian forces under general Rudp Rudolph Holler and Francis Schloeder were struck a terrible blow by general Federalsons main divisions of Gargolians and driven two miles from their main positi ions without any hope of being rallied by any commander or any hopes of rallying themselves. Simultaneously general Dargins fierce Mc-Hollestinians pressed hard upon Schloedors troops driving them into the Daisy Lane where they were fairly annihilated and the christian general wounded. General Bicknell who had not then been active threw his army upon Dargins Mc-Hollestinians making a heavy concentration but Dargins troops drove him back upon the plains with fearful slaughter and two of his christian armies met annihilation because they refused to surrender. Despite his brilliant success e en to the close of the battle general Dargin was seriously wounded, wa and was borne from the field. This disaster was so serious that after the enemy recaptured all their works by night fall no efforts of the Angelinians could dislodge them any further, and such a result of the struggle made the battle finally turn out as a draw with no advantage on either side.

Scores of disasters occured along the christian lines as well as an explosion that wiped out a whole army, but the worse was the annihilation of general Vivinnias brigade and ninth corps, and the surrender of his infantry under Meltforder and the crushing to fragments of his whole line. Many cities had their their windows erased by the concussion of the battles roar. It was a fiercer battle than even Jennie Turmer but lasted over eighteen hours before general Vivian Robertson fell wounded, and Hansonias two sons were killed.

The actual number of cannon that was in action du ing during the whole battle was not estimated, but as all the batteries on both sides were in incessant action, either repelling great onslaughts, or fighting artillery duels between lulls in infantry fighting this battle made a din with all the crash of musketry, explosions, and bursting of shells and shrapnell that was far surpassing any battle on land so far. If general Evans had not depleted the enemy in this great battle the foe would have been able to keep him from advncing, and would probably marched on the besieging armies at Julo Callio and ous crushed the christian force there, and not only that but attained possession of Angelinia Agathia, and still further would have been able to make an attempt to invade Abyssinkile and probably Abbieannia Hans own country, and then what would have been the result.

The battle of Marillac Seminary caused for poor Violet and her sisters known as "The Vivian Girls" more sorrow than any they had ever experienced yet or since the Glandico Angelinian war or rebellion commenced.

Their two loving brothers who were generals in Evans command during during this d oody battle were severely wounded, all th their best friends except Evans were wounded or killed, and it was reported that from their father general Robert Angelic Vivian who was concentrating armies upon Phelan tonburg was slightly wounded while out scouting. The latter report is not confirmed, though it is probable he had been slightly wounded and brought to his headquarters to be treated.

Even during the latter part of the battle, six of Evans generals by some blunder during the concentraion of the christian forces upon the enemys position had been for some time seperated from their commands and this had almost caused a disaster though would have been fatal for the whole of Evans christian army. General Jack Ambrose Evans however got into communication with them and so the disaster was averted though all the week after the battle Evans exerted his utmost to find out the culprit who caused the blunder. Blunders don't go in Evans command. The penaltyis death.

It was certain now that the first yea r of the bloody war was now at its rumpreme fury. How much longer the great war will rage is not known yet. It is completeful doubtful just now despite the look of the outcome if the enemy wil be worsted as all their main commanders are well skilled, and already many of the most skilful christian commanders are either killed or wounded.....

Even general Vivian one of the supreme commanders of all the main christian armies and the dictator of all Angelinia, Calverinia, and Abbieannia, was disabled slightly, and that whillimsburgar Zimmermann and Evans, and Hanson Vivian, and the Vivian Girls were the greatest of heroes known.

They have unflic unflinchingly faced dangers that the bravest soldiers had cowed from, and suffered moredisasters and sad experiences than could be ever imagined. Indeed one of their best friends and best guardians was Evangelinia Aronburg, sister of lit little Annie Aronburg who had been murdered by wicked Glandelinian soldiers under general Raymond Richardson Federal. She was always known as "The little fiery avenger" and had not only por protected the little Vivian Girls, but tried to to repa repay Federal for her sad loss. But surprising to relate two of the Vivian Girls shot general Federal in ambush which the these two little heron heroines and their sisters had made for him, and wounded him seriously.

This occurance took Gertrude Angeline as Angelinia Aronburg called herself by such great sup surprise that she did not know what to do, and her sup surprise was greater still when once general John Manley the main leader of all the foe generals was soon after reported wounded by one of the little girls. Violet and her sisters however it is feared have already gon too far in doing this for the Glandelinians have been aroused to a greater fury by the wounding of two of their great generals at the hands of the little Vivian Girls, and God hlp help them if they do not stay within the christian lines after this, and what shouldhappen should the enem win the big rebll rebellion.?

This great general Jack Ambrose Evans was born in the city of Francis in the state of Mexicana(Abbieannia) o of well-to-do-parents. At the time he was born the child slavery then existed in Calverinia and his parents folishly believing that nothing unusual would occur, went to Calverinia as the climate wastoo severe fo them in Abbieannia.

Everything went well untill general Jack Ambrose Evans was a pretty little boy of four eight years. Then agreat and terrible Calverinian rebellion broke out and the Glandelinian aurthorities blandythe Angelinian aurthorities o for it.

Many helpless inhibatants of Calverinia who sided with Calverinia or the Calverinian insurrection were imprisoned, and Evans father and mo and mother among them, and Evans carried off to be made a slave. He was sold to place after place for the dirty sum of less than thirty dollars. The first slave owner who b bought him was a wild drunkard, a poverty stricken man, and a wicked Mc-Hollestinian who hate God because he was poor, and not re rich..

Jack lived a life of untold misery and poverty with him for two years, and then his master sold him to obtain money for booze a to buy a house. Jack then was transfered to an institution where he fared a little better than in his younger days, but here he did no remain long. Longing for frr freedom he ran away but after being at lz la large o for two weeks and half starved he was picked up by some Angelinian nuns and placed in an orphan asylum. This asylum was soon raided by the wicked Glandelinans who sacked and burned the build ing and carried off the children.

Then came the worse time for Jack Evans. He probably lived like the lost souls in hell.He had been sold to a steel mill owner and was compelled to work as hard as a man possibly could.

The heat was terrific, and the boys and girls dropped by scores every day, but through it all until he grew to be eighteen years old, Jack Evans stood it without mishap. Seeing that his tortures was making Evans a young hercules instead of ruining his health as was wished, the owner decided to get rid of him and sold him to a plantation owner for fifteen thousand dollars.

This slave owp owner was except ionally brutal but somehow as a was afraid of Eva s Evans and sold him to his brother, who owned a Lumber Company. From here on account of his super humnn strength he was sold from place to place untill finally from his being so good and brave his last owner who even had the two Aronburg girls as slaves also, granted him special previlages.

this owner however took sick and died, and his son inherited the place. Though a Glandelinian by birth his son was a Calverinian citizen; and through reasons of God's Mercy was a man fully against child slavery. He knew the nature of Angelinia Aronburg and her sister Annie, an enemy of the slave boys. First he did ork them considerably, but one day a Glandelinian trustee shot and killed his own mother because though h being a Glandelinian she was good to the child slaves, and also a Christian and a Catholic. The loss of hismother not only broke his heart, but enraged him. He had many friends who favored him in all things, and who also owned slaves.

All these slaves numbered about fourty thousand, mostly all boys at this section and who were treated especially good by their masters.

The owner of Jack Evans decided to originate a Child Slave rebellion and as his fellow slave on owners leagued with him he decided to pull it through no matter what the consequences.

Through the outbreak of the rebl rebellion Jack Evans fought his way to freedom. The rebellion was overthrown through the assassination of the main rebel director and leader Annie Aronburg. The slave masters who originated the rebellion are now christian generals and one of them was Nienstien.

From his life of slavery andmisery Jack Evans recieved the best of luck. After fighting his way to freedom, he fled to Abbieannia after being persued and followed for hundreds of miles, on trains, through towns, into caverins, through woods and where ever he went. At Abbieannia he was safe the worse child rebel there had ever been in the rebellion. Here he obtained a job in Abbieannia as a Janitor in a certain Abbieannian hospital, met the Vivian Girls for the first time, and became their best friend.

Four months before the outbreak of this great Glandelinian rebellion against Angelinia and Abbieannia Jack Evans entered a military University at Abyssinkile. His life was well known by mostly every every body and one month saw him the best trained soldier in all the Academy. Even then before the outbreak of the war Evans had been well known by Hanson Vivian and his brother Robert, and had won their best firendship. When the war was opened Evans immediately enlisted into the Abyssinkilian army as a captian.

His fame had been spread broadcast and two months later he unexpectedly recieved the commission of a major general in chief. At first many believed he would not accept the commission and so urged him to do a do so.

Evans throughout the first year of the war showed great bravery a as already described, and showed himself to be a man that the enemy dreaded even though he was only twenty years old. Despite being a great general he allowedhimself to be called colonel and captian like his younger brother John Evans. General Jack Evans mostly kept his armies in close touch with the main ones, under either general Hanson Vivian, Robert Vivian, Zimmermann, and many others, and proved himself himself to be a good fighter.

He even recieved a higher commission than being aplain general of the Vivian Girls, the most pretty daughters of general Robet Robert Vivian, a honor anyone would wish to have if they knew the Vivian girls like he did. He rescued them from inconceiab inconceivable perils that was so great that no one else dared to face them, and when he was captured on a number of occasions with them, he not only liberated himself and his young charges, but countless other prisoners besides..

All that he really did cannot be written here. But so good was he to these saintly little girls, that he hardly throughout the war met with any bad luck. The only bad luck he recieved was in the third yes year of the war when his forces recieved a shocking defeat at the battle of "The Ane Angel Guardian orphanage at Cromer Andrean. It is usually known as the battle of Cromer Andrean.

Out of the very deep shadowed past of wicked Glandelinias history history reaches the long mighty arm of the Manleys read, to signal whole-sale slaughter and, with the sabre replace the crown of Satan over the world, and the rule of rank wickedness and oppression of the helpless. From behind the hidden graves of wicked foes comes the most violent command for a pogrom all over Calverinia, a orgy of slaying of Calverinians in the west as a fiting celebration for the crowning victory of the Glandelinians at Vivian Wickey. This is the warning told in the secret records of Glandelinian conspirators who met in Vivian Wickey early in the spring and plotted the cold blooded skalling of Calverinia woma whoman and children in western Calverinia by hundreds of thousan and the unleashing of the Glandelni Glandinian armies in a maddened wild murderers. In their own words they conspired to drown the hateful commune in Calverinian blood in a massacre worse than those heard of an witnessed in the east. The secret records of the plotting generals were secured by colonel Herman Turman Craddock a christian Geminian by, noted aurthor, war correspondent, translator of importan Glandelinian work works and languages and authority on Glandelinias main war plans. These astounding revelations stripped from under the and secrecy of the wickedp lotti plotters, was published in many Angelinian newspapers untill the governments were terrified and began to relent in their orders of not allowing the Glandelnians to be pun for their wicked deeds.

Through the Glandelnians one may always indeed see the unfolding plot to make the Angelinian world gasp still more staring with the guardedmeeting in the secret Turmerannian rendezvous. Here meet the Mc-Allister general and his cronies all those who hoped to find favor of the massacres. These conspirators take the pledge of blood an and murder, and they took under conditions such disasters as the tragedy of starvation and plagues that at present confronts the Calverinians. They planned to use the churches of Calverinia for the scene of the most vile plots and to incite the loyal Glandelinian non combatants of Calverinians to violence against the christians. They plotted to divide Calverinia into sections for slaughter, each section to be commanded by an executioneer. Spies and agitators were appointed to undermine the morale of the communities struggleing for life against starvation and disease. All it seemed being being made ready to smear red Calverinia with more red. And the plotters realized what the horror of the world would be if these reco ever were revealed and the scoundrels in their plotting were backed by a fifty million dollar fund drawn from secret stores of stolen Calverinian gold for the success of the bloody interprise. They were entrusted, secret and sealed, only to tried agents themselves involve in the plot. Despite their precautions Herman secured all the stenographic reports .It is not the first time by far that Herman had uncovered a story of the keenest internationzal interest. It was Herman who brought to light the astounding intimate corresponlence be Manley and the Glandelinian king, the notorious letters between the which showed all of Manleys plans to overthrow christianity. It was Herman again who despite the opposition of the Abbieannian censor icated to the Abbieannian Hearst papers an interview with the Glandelinian generals who told him all their intentions should Angelinia be overthrown. Herman also gave the world its first story great massacres of christians in Eatern Eastern Calverinia. He even exposed the forgeries of some Glandelinian generals for a world wide revolution. These and many other achievements had been Hermans. They read like mad weaving of some tremendous nightmare. A Piece stolen the Glandelinians was also secured by him. It ran as thus;

Oh Angelinia, your beautiful summer, bending over the sown
In the fertile peace of tillage, Ripens our harvest,
The hurricane of horrorible war had mowed down the heavy grain,
How many cities and hemlets on fire, lie in ruins under their cinders,
What cruel Glandelinian Atilla's,
Wishing to bruise thy soul, dares to throttle Calverinia?
Angelinia, thy x children are there.

The Golden Angelus in the villiage spires, Clang out a wild roccan, Erect Heroic Angelinia, exalt our souls,
By the menory of our Ancestors, Calverinia of Sacred soul
We shall know how to defend three, To fight with pride, Neath the folds of the flag. Already from Calverinia to Abbieannia, From Angelinia to Glandelinia, Already with immense uproar, the Glandelinians are yellingowith fury, and singing victoyry victory and Liberty,
For Glorinanna is their's.

As bright Junde day sun poured its radience into the comfortable comfortable living rok room of general Hanson Vivians headquarters kindling it with a warm but somewhat sultry glow. But the warm brilliance apparently aroused no kindred emotions in the soul of the young children seated on a lounge, on the contrary about their faces there hovered an air of sadness and much glo gloom, as with head resting upon their folded hands, and eyes a dark lustrous, soulful depths-- ---gazing out into space they sat perfectly motionless. A newspaper that lay open beefre them before them remained unoticed. The door of the room opened to admit an elder child of not so much child like like appearance in her face being Gertrude Angeline, and she was attired in a rich purple cot coat and dress and wearing a black rounded sailor hat apparently heavily flumed.

"Violet, and your sistr sisters. &&The little girl exclaimed.
"Yes Gertrude," And Violet smiled, a faint pensive smile while her sisters did not even look up.
"Why are you and your sisters so sad dear?"
"See Gertrude the newspaper has the announcement of my successful scouting expedition."
"Why so soon? And that makes you blue and also your sistr sisters."?
"I was thinking if some people only knew."
"nonsense Violet. Who in the world could know." "Don't you and your dear sisters be silly. That is all past and gone, and you and your sisters are actually cruel to let it tom torment you and your sisters so."
"Yes I know Gertrude, but---"
"But nothing." Interrupted Gertrude. "Now don't think anything more about it, there's a dear."
And what that Gertrude put an end to the matter as she thought, with a kiss and a gentle or caress.
"I'm going to general Vivians lines on some war business, Dear Vivia Vivian Girls and probably shall not be home to lunch with you.
You will not mind."
"No Gertrude, but come back early won't you. General Hanson Vivia is coming for dinner this evening. Poor man. He will have to run the gauntlet of congratulations to day I suppose for his quick siege of Phelantonburg."
Violet and her sisters when alone once more, far from heeding Gertrude Angelines counsel, allowed their melancholy to gain over them s and their thoughts, they felt as if they would liked to have cried, but they could not. They had every reason to fell happy too, for their successful scouting tour mak marked the goal of one of their highest ambitions for they had discovered all the points of the enemys fortified works, and had secured plans, and all intentions of the enemys generals. In al all things they did Violet and her sisters had always been successful and to complete their triumph they had won the love of all the christian generals who knew them or not, and won the complete love of many boyscouts and even general Jacksonia Evans.
A trouble however was threatening them something of which they was accused of which was a nightmare to their happiness. If only they could be set free from the horrible phantom that tortured their thoughts, if only they might risk p imparting the trouble to their uncle or Evans, or their father. But no. They feared to do the honorable the bravest thing, they could not face the consequences in case they would believe it true. When early that morning the announcement of their successful tour appeared in the Ch Calverinian newspaper, it seemed that a million voices cried out. "It should not be." Some how that announcement appeared to be a publication of their accused guilt, and they feared that some unknown witness would come forth to taunt them with it.
"Pardom me Miss Violet."
The voice made Violet start, and she almost cried aloud. But it was only one of her little boyscouts holding out a silver card plate. Violet and her sisters read the name on the card "Colonel Sherwood."
"He is a correspondent on the Abbieannian Eagle." I have heard of him" She explained to the boy. "You may tell him that I shall see him."

A few moments later a young colonel was ush ered into the room. He was dressed in a smart decorative uniform, and was decidedly attra attratively , and his was an individuality that immediately makes itself felt, and one realizes that he was an officer, a man who ''Does things despite any opposition.''

''You are the daungers of his excellency, general Vivian, known as the ''Vivian Girls.''

''Yes, you wish to interview me and my sisters in regard to our successful scouting tour do you not?'' was Violets answer.

''Exactly. I am a wawar correspondent of the Abbiennman Eagle.'' There was something strange and disagreeable about the soldiers eyes, the little girls thought. They seemed to pierce like steel and made Violet and her sisters extremely uncomfortable, a sensation which only increased as Violet alone went on to relate particulars concerning their work and effects of the scouting tour. When she had finished the reporter sat for a moment silently regarding her and her sisters and finally asked a little insolently;

''And is there not something more?''

''Something more? What do you mean?''

''I mean to imply that there is something you forgot to mention. You have said nothing about your secret.''

Violet and her sisters fairly gasped, their bodies seemed to turn turn suddenly cold, and then a moment later followed the reaction and the blood came coursing to their cheeks, and their hands clenched untill the nails dug into the flesh. They tried to control themselves to late the teletale tell tale sign of horror had clearly manifested themselves.

''Our secret.''? Violets voice was scarcely a whisper. ''How dare you? Explain what you mean.''

''Violet I am very sorry to have to perform this unpleasant task, but it must be done for the interest of the christian cause. I know all. You are the one who shot down and seriously wounded general ''lenstien after you and your sisters in the guise of boyscouts store his map and plans to pose them as capturedfrom the enemy.''

''Stop''Cried the distracted little girls. What proo po proof has have you of this accusation? Tell me that?''

''listen and you shall be convinced of the futility of a denial. I was at his headquarters last night in order to write up the affair. I was in the sun parlor with the general and a number of others. You were among them and I remember admiring the map and plans that the general and his host of officers were examinging. Then through some cause some heavy firing started up and the room c quickly cleared, and I with the restwent outside to see what the cause was. Suddenly there was great excitement. The general had found map and plans miss He said he knew he had them in the sun parlor, so thither he hastened as quickly as he could. However I reached there before he did, to find the room unoccupied except for seven boyscouts looking exactly you do when you go out spying in disguise. Those boys were just leaving, their faces were just as white as your gown is now, and just as they are now. Shortly afterwards you appeared w to your fathers headquarters with two of o two of your boyscouts. The excitement had made you ill. But I knew the reason for your hasty r leaving.''

''And why have you kept this to yourself yourself so long only to torture us with it now?''

''Because it will make a better story now that you have announced your successful scouting tour. You see I have antiop a anticipated that you would plan this so that you would not need go too near the foes lines. All this scouting was a bluff on your part..''

''What you do not mean to publish the story?''

''Wh what else would you have me do?''

''You shall not or I'll shoot you in an act of desperation.'' And she drew her pistol. ''I have never been in general wienstiens headquarters and neither have my sisters. who you saw looking like us was some spy and not us. We haveproof from any general here that we wr were not in general wienstiens headquarters.''

''So that is why the case was suddenly hushed up? Because generals are in league with your traitor movements. I never suspected it.''''

Despite the fact that she had leveled a pistol at him the colonel took out a pad and pencil from his bag and began to write.

''So you see you have no right to expose us now for something we have not done.''Violet began.''

''Indeed''And the colonl colonel raised his eyebrows a trifle.''The story is just as good as ever. All Angelania still wonders who the e seven strange spies are. the soldiers never quite believe anyone else guilty. Your names in the case will create quite a sensation.''

''You do not dare wathouty fathers permission.''Cried Jolice.

''Dare? When I have your own confession? Abbiennian newspapers have taken a chance on less foundation before .''And the reporter had the brasseness to smile.

''But what of our reputation?''

''You are traitors and deserve to be exposed...''''

''Oh.'' Violet could not restrain the pent up emotion any longer, burning tears of shame and anger commwelling up in her eyes; she begged and pleaded with with the colonel only to meet with an icy indifferance. She even got down upon her knees--- she proud Violet Vivian--but a cynical smile was all she recieved in return. The Colonel had risen to take his departure when from the adjoin adjoining room there came the sound of a childish voice very fa familiar to Violet and her sisters. At once rushing to the door she called out;

''Jennie Turmer. Thank heaven you have come.''And then turning to the reporter she said now with an air of command.''Stay here.''

Jennie Turmer appeared in the doorway and despite her size, her uniform and facial expression and her saucy eyes gave her a very commanding appearance a sacr sacerdotal dignity.

''Violet and o your sisters what is the matter?''

Violet pointed a shaking finger to the official reporter.''

''Ask that colonel.''She said.

But colonel Sherwood deigned not to offer any explanation.

''Jennie''Said Violet''He knows our secret.He is going to publish it in the paps.''

''Ah so you too are in the story.''The reporter interrupted tun turning to Jennie Turmer.''More interesting still.''

''As the spiritual adviser of Violet and her sisters I have the privilege of their confidence.''Replied Jennie Turmer.''May I ask whether Violet or her sisters have informed you that complete reparation has been made and that it was some others who did no the job and not them.''She has,but I do not believe it.''

''And you still insist on publishing their story. Surely you do not desire to ruin a fair name of any one colonel. General Vivian will place you before a firing squad for it.''

''Your simplicity is really charming.''And colonel Sherwood favored Jennie Turmer with a patronizing smile and a slight shake of his head.

''I would be glad to return the compliment were it possible. You have aconscience, can I not a;p appeal to it?''

''Conscience? A war correspondent has no right to have one. In this case however, I am acting according to justice. Violet and her sisters are traitors, and have wounded wienstien and stolen his property and as such is a e nemience to Angelania, they should be exposed, therefore in order that people may nt be decieved by their fair exterior.''

''But their secret is inviolable.''Continued Jennie Turmer ''and neither you or any one else has the right to disclose it on private authority. Why what would become of human society were secrets thus divulged. You no doubt have certain secrets that you would give out to no one, and you have a perfect right to protect them for upon the inviolability of personal secrets depends upon each ones reputation. Do away with a mans or a womans reputation and what incentive in a natural way do you leave that pr person to try and lead a respectable life, to labor and to seek after virtue and success.. Why it is for example that the criminal finds its wellnigh impossible to reform. It is because his reputation is gone, no one will believe in his sincerity, no one will give him a chance. Now here are Violet and her sisters the best children in the world, just on the point of their best success, they have the respect and esteem of the erld, and in the excitement o of a moment it is said they sinned, when they did not do what they are accused of but seven Olandelinian boyscouts instead, and they have been caught, and their work is atoned for by the firing squad. You intend to take away their greatest in incentive to live a virtuous and upright[illegible] life by blasting their reputation in the eyes of the world by your f[illegible] reports. You will do an irremediable wrong, and will be placed in fro[illegible] a firing squad for it. I wa warn you general Vivian is a dangerous en[illegible] if he is aroused because his daughters reputation is injured. To injur their reputation is to injure his."

Colonel Sherwood who had been standing with a bored expression on his face now made answer;
"My dear you cannot move me by any ammount of preaching. This story means my promotion, it is the greatest scoop that the Abbieann[illegible] eagle has made in months, we shall be the envy of every other paper i[illegible] Calverinia. Give up all this for sentiment. Ha Ha. Absurd. The whole s story appears in glowing headl n headl ines in to nights edition.
I wish you good morning."
So saying he gave his head an impertinent toss, laughed again and le[illegible] the room with a mocking bow."
Poor Violet and her sisters. They had been standing tense all this w[illegible] with wild eyes riveted upon the colonel who intended to wreak their lives, but now they ran to their defender and wept as if their heart would break. Jennie Turner was too full of indignation to be of much consolation to them her eyes flashing like the little spitfire she w[illegible] her mind she was searching for a way by which she might baffle the newspaper and check the story before the mischief was done.
"V_o Violet I have it."She suddenly exclaimed, and puttin[illegible] her and her sisters gently aside, she went to the army tape telephon[illegible] taking up the reciever without waiting to look up the number.
A pause, and then;--

Jennie Turmer then hung up the reciever, and turning to Violet her sisters said with a confident smile;

When she had gone Violet and her sisters found it impossible to control their excitement. Luncheon time came, but she touched n[illegible]

It was late in the afternoon when Violet and her sisters learning of how the seige of Chelentonburg war progressing and also that the foe had intentions to make a desperate attack upon the besieging ch[illegible] christian lancers when the first opportunity presented itself decreded to go out on another scouting tour, and had done so when suddenly they observed a large party of Turmeranniars on horseback doing something that looked mighty suspicious to them. To approach these Glandelinians of cours it would have been suicide but nevertheless the little girls knew that something was up. And the little girls also made another good discovery. It was suffocatingly hot with alow barometer and a lurid heavy sky which usually predicts some usucual disturbance, typhoon weather as a Calverinian might have said. All of the Turmeranniams were not wearing their coats but were sittingoon their steeds in gray shirtwaists.
Wishing to find their surroundings Violet and her sisters continued to stare out at the dull monotonous country with eyes as hot and brooding and sullen as the lurid sky, now thickening into a dark opacity as the daylight waned. A storm was evidently approaching. The atmosphere was suffocating and such heavy air as there was to breathe seemed charged with a sort of pi poisonous depressent. The faces of the approaching Gargolians were humid, some congested, and the officer who had made some unusual exertions was panting for breath and his horse was puffing like a railroad engine. Violet and her sisters being far from the christian lines and close to the enmy's position wondered how they were going to pass up the night.
As the Gargolians were approaching too close to suit the brave little girls they at once made for a small house near a wide stream which appeared to be the treacherious Stanch River andreaching it went inside.
Inside indeed they felt as if buried alive in a misfit coffen not far removed from the infernal regions. As they waited for the Glandelinians to pass persipiration ran from them in little rills, but without the agreeable sense of depeltion to be found in a Turkish bath. That day the temperture had been one hundred twenty in the shade one of the hottest days for a Calverinian June Month on record.
"We'll be sudden masses if we stay long in here through such a fear u fearful hot night. Sa Said Violet.
The air that came through one of the windows was hot and oppressive.Being tired out Violet and her sisters while waiting for the Glandelinians to pass drifted into an unrestful sleep but was awakened toward midnight by what seemed to be a crashing and banging and pattering of the house and a fine spray upon their faces as they had lain close to the open windowThe little girls then discovered that the appeared to be caught up in a fierce storm or cyclone of some sort, while the roar upon the roof of the house was as though it was under a gigantic waterfall.
"Some storm. "Thought Violet."I believe we have pitched into a cloudburst," Violet and her sisters presently droppedoff again but this time their sleep was fraught with troubled dreams.They thought some wicked Glandelinians had put them abroad a wrecked ship which had been taken down, and was sent driving toward a maelstrome. Then suddenly it rea reached the brink of this and they felt it plunge down side into the vortex."All is over they thought to themselves with a sort of resigned relief, and at that moment there came a most terrific noise of falling accompanied by a rending splitting sound, and ending in an appalling crash.
Violet and her sisters awoke suddenly and flung up their hands. They struck a hard smooth surface with which slanted down across them and completely blocked their exit from the window. The house appeared to be moving swiftly and was keeled over at a slight angle to the other side and the air was in the distance filled with muffled shrieks, shouting and the roar of waters. Amazed and excited, and half angered one of the Vivian Girls reached for her light but found it gone. She thrust up the curtain of the window but the darkness without was impenetrable indeed and there seemed to be a flood pouring down the glass. They were tempr temporiarly impro p impr soned in a small space and immediately guessed that with the sudden movement of the house a wardrobe had fallen half half way over them. They managed to get out easily enough after desperate efforts, and found themselves floundering in water almost up to their chests. The distant cries and screams seemed to grow fainter, and from a little distance came a smashing splintering sound. S The little girls heard somebody somewhere roaring for help and then added to this was the noise of torrents of water that seemed to be cascading over the roof as a river flows over a da dam with hurling such sucking gurgles.. In these few terrible seconds Violet and her sisters had realized what had happened. The Gargolians had been right just what they suspected blowing up the dams of the river and that it had resulted in a fear a fearful and sudden flood as sudden as a cloudburst would have done it. When they heard like rain was waves splashing upon the roof or window occasionally, as a windstorm was still raging outside. And here in a floating house they were imprisoned protected the only ones in the house but nevertheless the brave little girls did not fell themselves helpless. If this had happened on a cooler night when probably the little girls would have been sound asleep they would have been drowned like rats in a trap. And all of this had happened in stygian blackness. The house was at an angle of fourty five degrees and like people aboard a sailing vessel in a gale the little girls managed to crawl and scramble untill they managed to find their way up a stairway in the darkness. Reaching the top of this they came into a room which was slanted at a lesser angle while the water was gone here. They made their way to the length of this, Violet in the lead and on reaching the open window here paused with an exclamation of dismay.

"Good Lord are we at sea."?

It Indeed looked it. The black water was swil swirling past two feet below them while waves were crashing over the roof occasionally in solid sheets. Then as they stood there a sud su shudder seemed to shake the house and it lurched over at a greater angle.

"We've got to get out of this and quick." Said Violet. "The house is apt to go to pieces at any moment. We are as to say shipwrecked in Calverinia. But we have got to swim for it. I see land on the other side now as day is starting to break again.

In the meantime while Violet and her sisters had succeeded in swimming across the flooded regions being good x swimmers flood had swept ele elsewhere after the bursting of the dams by the enemy. All the people of the towns on finding their houses flooded in the darkness of the night lost the jesting calm which they had so boastingly displayed during the daytime How fear of the supernatural came over them all and with anxiety they sought more protection to avert the danger. Woman began to shriek with terror on finding their wretched lanes converted into deep canals. Women and children were taking refuge in the garrets while the men with their trousers rolled up to their knees were splashing about in the water carrying their tools of all sot sorts to places of safty or tugging at some dog horse or mule who would be balking at going too deep into the water. The dreadful flood lasted for ten days. Fierce as it was however no lives were lost and the christian lines was not effected.

Even during this time while Violet nd and her sisters were having their experiences with this extensive flood a most a astounding occurance was enacted within the christian lines that not only startled the christian troops but the whole world when it heard of it through war correspondents and spies. During a gigantic raid in Eastern Calverinia a very Wicked Glandelinian general had been capturedwith his whole army and the army was deported. The general had been transfered from one christian army after another under strong escort untill he was brought within general Hansons lines. This wicked Glandelinian prisoner was not only a general but a grand duke of Glandeln Glandelin and also the main one who fully planned the wholesale massacres of Calverinians in the east. The Angelinian generals in Hansons command had no idea of this but nevertheless the capture of a general indeed is something very important to note and a as he was on of very high rank, he had been closely watched. But now to the astonishing thing that happened. When the general had been brought before Hanson Violet and her sisters had been in the very place with him.

At so important a capture the very courto courtroom of Hansons headquarters was fr fairly crowded and Hanson was the one who was to recieve the prisoner. Then suddenly a strange fellow wearing a blue gray citizens clothes, a fierce looking fellow rushed in and shot and mortally wounded the Glandelinian general right before them all The strange man fired six shots and only five missed. One shot ripped into Hansons chair case, passing between his legs. Two struck the Glandelinian general in the right side of the abdomen. Two others missed and the last shot hit the Glandelinian general in the forehead and crashed through his brain.

The spectators who were mostly officers were thrown into wild confusion. General Hanson jumped up from his chair and tried to rush the assassin who over he was. A number of red cross nurses fainted and more of the other officers pushed and fought in their scramble to surround the assassin and did so. Other wicked Glandelinian prisoners when they saw their gen great general shot down fainted. They were carried into their own quarters where they were revived by a number of soldiers. General Francis Mc-Hollester was also in the room when the shooting occured. General Hanson had recieved reports later that some of the other Glandelinian prisoners were armed.

"I firmly don't believe the strange man meant to kill me." Said general Hanson satisfied that the man was seized. "He certainly looked wickedly at the Glandelinian general before he shot at him. One of my officers informed me that there were other men in my court room who looked or dressed like Glandelinians and who intended to do some shooting too. I believe the shooting was meant for the general all right. I'm going to find out when the assassin is tried."

"All the while the prisoner had been in the camp this strange man on two previous occasions had been ordered by different company officers to vacate the camp but refused to obey these orders." Said Violet "I believe he surely has been laying for this Glandelinian general for some reason. His refusal to obey an order from my sister Jennie caused Violet to put him into custody and he was sentenced to the hoosacow for fifteen days. When he came this time into uncles headquarters the way he made a motion made it appear to me as if he was taking three steps toward me and when he whipped out his pistol and fired I thought it was meant for me, and was utterly astonished to see the Glandelinian general go down. I was between a bench and the Glandelinian general. This general was held in the highest estoem by all Glandelinians and this news if it leaks out will be a shocking surprise to the world."

"Yes and the shooting occured as soon as the Glandelinian general had been marched up to Hanson." Said Jennie Turner who was also present. "At first I thought it was meant for general Hanson instead. The Glandelinian general was standing before the bench and the stranger suddenly appeared, walked cau casually forward muttered some works in glandelinian and then before any of us could realize what he was doing he drew his revolver and began shooting apparently at us. The Glandelinian general fell and as the spectators and officers crowded forward to the two forms on the floor as another Glandelinian also had been shot from which officers in vain attempted to keep them back other persons ran in from adjoining rooms and soldiers outside having heard the shots also came in. General H.C.W Launder and a force of other men were summoned and added to the pandemonium by their cossack like attempts to browbeat the panic stricken specat spectators into submission.

Two days later the trial of the assassin began."

"Who did you really intend to shoot w?" Was Hansons question.

"The Glandelinian general." Was the abrupt answer and on the witness stand the defendant fully described how the Glandelinians wronged and killed his mother and sisters before his eyes, his own wife and children and all his relatives, and massacred all the people of his town called Lady Decie. Then he told that he had visions of his mother who reproached him for letting the Glandelinian general who was the main cause of the greatest massacre of all ti es occur live. He also told of how so many scenes were before him that it was enough to drive a devil crazy.

"But was it true that the people of that town sniped the foe soldiers and thus goaded the glandelinians into that massacre." Asked Hanson.

"Yes they did but that don't give the Glandelinians any right to commit the massacre." Said the defendant. "They could have pn punished the snipers alone."

The defendant was of slight stature, but fierce looking like an uncharist in features, his face was narrow, his forehead high and his mechalony eyes lay deep in the shadows cast by heavy crescent shaped brows. When the defendant justifed his plea of not guilty by the statement that his conscious was not troubled, and that the shot was meant for the glandelinian general and no one else general Hanson who acted as judged asked him how that was possible and the defendant whose name was omitted answered;

"At least I have not slaughtered an entire half a nation of helpless women and children, and religious persons of all sects neither discreated the Holy Churches of God and committed any other wrong."

Little Violet Vivian herself was appointed prosecution pro prosecuting attorney and she began his examination.

"Surely mister you must realize that to kill a man no matter who he is or what nationality as you have done is wrong!"

"If it is wrong to kill one man like him is it to it is to instigate the massacre of thirty million people."

"How do you know sir that the Glandelinian general was responsible for the horrible Kintergarten massacres!"

"Every Calverinian and Angelinian knows it."

''How?''

''Certain dispatches were made public right away during the scene of horror by many correspondents and spies, and even by the great Geminie and all other great detectives. If there had been any doubt as to the origin of the cold blooded villany which has plunged an entire eastern race of Calverinian christians into death throes those telegrams and correspondents and other papers and letters suffice to fasten the guilt upon the glandelinian general whose very name I know.''

''Of what dispatches are you speaking?''

''On September the fifteenth 1912 I know that the Glandelinian general wired to the Glandelinian aurthorities.''The government of glandelinia a has decided by command of the King and the Manleys, and his other great chiefs c mpletely to extre exterminate all the Calverinians living in the eastern part of Calverinia before the christian armies can do anything to prevent it. To the same adress on the March last was sent the following message:

''Under the pretext that they will be looked after by the administration as exiles all the Calverinian children who have been collected and are being cared for must without exciting suspicion on orders of the war Minister be seized and assassinated. One of the other dispatches sent out by the Glandelinian general himself had decided last April that the entire eastern Calverinian population must be reported and it read:

''Their destination is the ''Nowhere.''

''What dd that mean the no-where?''Asked Violet.

''Just what the ords say. Its the way the Glandelinians speak of massacre.

''T he words might be constructed as meaning that their destination was to be also kept quiet?''

''No miss, it meant nothing of the sort.''It meant that we were not to be really deported. We were to be extirpated. The meaning of the deportation under the wicked Glandelinian rule means deportation into the beyond--in breif into the no-where.''

''Why d you believe that such messages were sent.?''

''I was shown the complete complex of the messages at Pandora. All the Calverinians know they are true.''

''You admit do you not sir that you are completely incapable of considering the glandelinian general impartially?''

''Do Historians consider Nero Impartially? Or Pontius Pilate? Or Judas? Or the Manleys and other w cked great men. Yet Nero only caused one city to be burned, butchered only a handful of christians, while any glandelinian general is fully responsible for the murder in cold blood millions of people.''

''Did the Glandelinian general tolyour full knowledge kill any one personnily with his own hands.''?

''I do not know of any such case but other generals did.'

''But you admit that wesaw you kill the glandelinian general with your own hands don't You?''

''No I did not kill him with my own hands. I killed him with a pistol. The pistol was my own instrument of punishing him as the Glandelinian soldiers and Kurdish Gargolians who massacred my country men and women and children were the instruments of murder of that glandelinian general who I assassinated right at your f vert very feet.''

T he courtroom suddenly rang with loud and sustained applause. The defendants pointed answer had aroused the enthusiasm of all who were acting as jury and nothing could qui quench it. In vain Hanson threatened to clear the courtroom. The applause had run to its full course. Slowly it died away.

''I will now word my question differently''Said Violet.''It was really your intention to kill the Glandelinian general, and not Hanson or one of us, was it not?''

''Yes of course. He is dead is he not.''

''Then you do admit your guilt.''?

''I do not say so. I am not guilty no more than if I was to kill a maddog. My conscience is serene and clear.''

''When did you first conceive the idea of murdering the Glandelinian general?''

''About two months before the shooting me mother and others appeared to me in a vision. I had gone to bedand some time in the middle of the night, I thought I woke up feeling very vol cold and terrified. It was a bright oonlight night, and all around me as far as I couldsee were seas of bodies stretched on the ground, in streets of burning towns and cities, and a hell of fire and desolation was all around. At first I thought they were lost souls the scene was so horrible, ad then I remembered they were the dead bodies of my countrymen w women and children as I had seen them when I escaped with my life. Thousands of the them lay with their throats or bodies cut open entirely. There were women and young girls who had undergone every indignity and atrocity before they were put to death.Children were hanging from trees, and every other thing with bodies fairly torn open and insides gutted. The more I watched the more clearling the dreadful details appeared to me. Babies and older children whose brains had been dashed out were lying across their mon mothers bodies. Others had rags tightly around their mouth and noses or throats, and women and childre n children who has had been slashed to bies in entirely were lying in their own blood. Hell with all its horrors I'n ould not equal this. It was a worse scene than all pictured in Dantes Inferno.

l white bearded men, mostly all of them priests were lying there with agony still their faces for they had been torto tortured to death. Then as I looked many of the bodies seed to be rolling their eyes, and others were pointing their hands at me.
on top of a heap of corpses there arose a womans fin figure. I looked with dreadfully horror and I saw that she was my mother. She was dres dressed as I saw her when the glandelinians took her away to murder her. The blood was streaming down her face and there were several great wounds in her breast. Her face was pale as a sheet and she lo ked at me with eyes that burned into me. She pointed her finger: I could scarcely endure it for I was mad with agony and terror. She opened her lips and spoke to me.''

''What did your mother say to you sir?''

''She said''My My son you know that Colonal General Berlin murdered your nation and all those that you loved, and loved you. You know that he murdered your father and your mother, your brother, sisters, and your wife and children. You know that he is being transfered from army to army and yet you are making no effort whatever to avenge the innocent blood of your Calverinian par patriots shed by this fiend in human form. I'm ashamed to think that I bore such a cowardly creature. Do your duty or you are no longer a son of mine.''

''You say you heard your mother say this? Did you really hear her voice?''

''I believed that I heard it. It was not like an ordinary dream. I know that I had gone to sleep but I believe that I awoke and saw the w ole vision of the massacre and my mother right there before me. I went to sleep again and woke very tired and I immediately felt that my mother had been in the very room.''

''Did you decided at once to obey your mothers suggestions?''

''Yes but for a time I could not get the chance for he was transfered so often from army to army untill he was brought to this one and all that time my mothers spirit appeared to me again and again. Day and night I was haunted by the vision of my slaughtered mother, father and familay and wife and children. I felt that I was being driven on by a sh stronger power to do the will of God.''

''Describe how you felt?''

''I felt as I had a million times before that is i it is an unspeakable shame th at christian nations who profess to believe in God, The Father Son and Holy Ghost and His Blessed Mother and all the Saints and the Saviours Golden Rule should stand idly by and see a large section of a christian nation exterminated-----exterminated with as little mercy as would be shown to noxious-vermin.''

''Had you not formed a desire for revenge on the glandelinian general long before this?''

''After I have recieved proof that my father, mother and whole family and relations had been killed by the order of this Glandelinian general I had longed to kill him. I wandered through Calverinia facing inconcievable perils everywhere in search of him, followed him every time he was transfered but he was then hard to find. I had time for reflection and I began to wonder:would I be wrong to kill him just on account of the wronge to my family and wife and children. I even began to think that he might be a wrong headed man who was forced into crime by his wicked political countrymen and hg higher generals such as the Manleys and the others, and the government aurthorities. But the vision of my mother appeared to be again and convinced me that I should strike for the sake of my massacred fellow country men and others.''

''When did you make your first move tward carrying out the sugfestion of your mother?''

''On the daywhen I visited the christian army under general Hansonin wienstien I heard some Angelinian officersspeaking and I turned and recognized Berlin as a prisoner among the,. He was accompanied by a handsome and elegant young officer. I knew it well from pictures I had seen of him.''

''Did you decided then and there to murder him?''

''I hardly knew. I only know that seeing at closerange like the man at whose door all Calverinian abominations can be laid stirred me as I never have been stirred before. I felt as if my own heart was bursting. T here he stood haughty and di gnant when the Angelinian officers questioned his captors, and he was smiling and speaking to the christian soldiers amiably as any normal decent minded kind hearted man would have done. I saw him shake the hand of an Angelinian officer and when the Angelinian officer told him that he would not be a prisonerfor long if he h gave his parole he actually showed concern. Think of it. The man whocalmly asked when telegraphic reports concerning t he Calverinian deportations began to come in''How many are there still alive.''Would show pity for wounded Angelinian soldiers who were doomed soon to die from injures.I tell you indeed the blood pounded in my veins and hammered in my brain. And it came to me that it was a monsterous preposterous thing and an injustice that this man should be alive and happy depite being a prisoner with an undisturbed conscience when the bones of millions of his victims lay bleaching in deserts, rivers, or rotting at the bottom of the sea.''

''But you said before that your conscience was untroubled, and yet you murdered him! How do you ex explain that?''Asked Violet.

''T he task had to be done. Fate assigned me the dy duty to do it. That'sall.''

''What do you mean by that, that the task had to be done?''

''So long as general Berlin was alivesand on account of his promished parole there was a possibility of his return to the Glandelinian army for a glandelinian ve never keeps his parole. If he returned that would be equivalent to the signing of the death warrent of every Eastern Calverinian who escaped so far no matter where they went or w at country. The fangs of the rattlesnake had to be withdrawn. It was a mans duty t o draw them. I acted as the rattlesnakes dentist that is all.''

''Then you admit that your resolution to kil' Berlin hardened after you had seen him a prisoner in glenstiens army?''

''Yes I realize it had to be done.''

''What move did you make next?''

''I found out where he lived or was taken and hearing he was going to be brought to your uncles command, I followed him here in the guise of a war correspondent, and, got admission into the camp?''

''And then?''

I was walking up and down outside my tent that day when I saw Berlin brought into general Hansons headquarters. At first I was undicided what to do. Suddenly I heard the voice of my mother again very distinctly telling me t to cast aside my weakness and indeterminationand to play my part like a man. Then I drew my gun and ru ran down the company street until I reached Hansons headquarters. When I got inside I rushed up to the glandelinian general and covered himwith my pistol. He could not escape me. I said to him!

''Berlin u you shall have the same mercy you gave my dear ones and my country men and m more. My dead mother has commanded me to execute you murderer of half a nation. Coward that you are you purposly allowed yourself to be taken by Angelinians because you feared that j s justice would overtake you and you would suffer from the rage of the Calverinians. Here and there through your wanderings Ifollowed you you treacher ious glandelinian snake and at last I have found you. To day now you die right at the feet of the christian general. I shoot you down as I would a dog.''

''I fired at him and missed him. Six times I fired and twice I hite him and he dropped dead. He hated to die for it is said he had great wealth, a high commission, was in high esteem of all glandelinia, and still hoped to be set free on parole or be exchanged and return to glandelinia and rule as a Grand general.''

''What did you do after shooting general Berlin!''

''First of all I convinced myself that he was really dead. I made sure that there was no fear of his coming back to life.''

''And then!''

''I threw the pistol away and being surrounded by furious Angelinians gave myself up.''

''Why did you do that! Why did you not run if yourfelt you was justified!''Asked Violet.

''Oh I could not escape. It was like being surrounded by a wild enraged mob.''

''But you could have escaped the crowd couldn't you!''

''No. The Angelinians, privates and officers seemed to grow up out of the floor of the courtroom around me like mushrooms. They seemed very angry. Several men began beating me and they were other glandelinian prisoners who the Angelinians forcibly restrained. One man tried to step a burnl burli burly Angelinian from interfering but he pushed him aside and I was prevented from a severe beating from the prisoners.''

''Did the glandelinian prisoners hurt you!''

''I did not feel their blows. I was too much exsited, too enthusiastically excited. But Indisliked seeing their hot, perspiring anger distorted faces so close to mine. I loath the pr presentpresence of a glandelinian as a woman would a toad.''

''What happened after that!''

''I was taken into custody by the Angelinian soldiers at Hansons orders.''

''You made no resistance!''

''No''.

''Had you hoped of making your escape after kil ing the glandelinian general whose name you said was Berlin!''

''No I did nothing wrong.'' T here was not hing I should e be ashamed of.''

''Y u had made no preparat ions for leaving the christian lines, or even Calverinia y quickly after the murder!''

''Certainly not.''

''You must have known t hat the Angelinian generals would sent theirsoldiers to get you!''

''If I had thought about it at a'l I would have known t hat of course. But you see I did not think of it. I hard n certain work to do a d surely did it. It is all very simple.''

''Where did you get t he $100,000 mik you had about your person when arrested in the court roo !''Asked Violet.

''I stole it off the Glandelinians justbefore I was driven away from home by the Angelians.There is much hidden treasure in the possession of the enemy now waiting to be unearthed. Some day I may be able to get it.''

''But one hundred thousand dollars is some immense sum. How is it youdid not spend the money you had in course of your wanderings.!''

''I did spend a lot of money, far more than the sum I had with me for I had more than that before.''

The assassin was then examined by the Angelinian men Attorneys for the defense. General Kindermine asked him!

''Is Solomon Saundersburg your right name.!''

''Yes!''

''Where were you born!''

''In the city of Calverino.But when I was quite a small boy my parents moved to the town of Lady Uscio in Eastern Calverinia where it is much cooler than in the west during the summer.''

''How big was the family!''

''We were five boys and three gr girls.''

''Do you remember Glandelinian outrages and persecutions as a child!U''

''My parents spoke of it to me as going on elsewhere. But during the big campaign a series of glandelinian forces were making our town was not molested untill the n snipers started firing on glandelinian troops as they were passing through. Then by order of the glandelinian committee all the christian schools were closed and a manifesto was read stating that all prominent citizens who were not glandelinians by birth were to be deported as the town would be burned to the ground and the were executed.We were all led away, and my parents and other relations were butchered by the Gargolians, and the other scots of wicked glandelinians. Mu My father was taken away to be killed before the rest of us were driven out into the desert.''

''What did your mother do!''

''Like everybody else she bought an ox cart and a donkey and loaded the cart with the household goods as simple cooking untensils, blankets, extra garments and all the provisions it all would carry.We realized we might be seperated and my mot her distributed among us what paper mo ney we had in the house. Gold and silver as well as valuables such as jewels and family heirlooms we buried under the cellar of our house at dead of night.''

''Where were you to be taken to!?''

''We were not t old.We had traveled only a day and a half when the guards attacked us and plundered us.''

''Did this frighten you!''

''We had expected it of course. That is why we had hidden away our principal treasures in the depths of the earth and had placed the paper money in odd places about our persons, where we hoped the guards would not look for it.''

''What odd places for instances!''

''Well I had placed some of my paper money in between the soles of my shoes and the sole, some some in the lining of my cap, some in my vest lining!.''

''Did the glandelinian soldiers did not find your money!''

''Yes the paper money--no.Some small coi cions they found which we jingled in our pockets purposely to mislead them. That they found and in edibly took.''

''What did the fierce glandelinians doe after plundering you!''

''The caravan was about to start again when we became aware that there was a great commotion panic in front of us. I went to the top of a little hill and saw what was happen ing in the forward part of thecaravan.''

''Many thousands of Calverinian women and children and also men tied together in ropes. The glandelinians either cut them down or drove them into the river with whip and bayonets. Some of the Calverinians tried to struggle forward toward the shore but the glandelinians drove them back with swords and clubs. Scores upon scores hundreds of women and children were then treated in a manner I dare not describe. Many of the older men women and children were beaten strangled, suffocated, and beaten or cut to death and then left lying in their blood. The prettiest of the children were roped together and carried off to be sold into slavery, or to be tortured likewise. Presently it was the turn of my part of the columns to be attacked. My btothers and I do prepared to defend our mother and sisters, but were unarmed and helpless. I saw one glandelinian brute split open the body face of my brothers with an axe when he tried to save his youngest sister from the clutches of the glandelinians. What became of my other brothers I do not know. Some one struck me on the head. Unhappily I was knocked senseless at once. Oh I cannotgo on.''

The assassin suddenly interrupted himself with sobs. It was the only time during the trial that the accused man broke down.

''I beg of you to spare me the agony of telling in detail what happened I would rather die on the spot than to have to tell of the dreadful deeds that were done there in my presence--while I was helpless to hinder what was going on.''

"For your own good I insist that you tell the rest."

"I was too weak to rise, much less to offer any resistance and so I was forced to look on in half consciousness while those devils violated my mother and sisters and then beat and stabbed them to death. After that I fainted away."

"How long was it before you regained consciousness?"

"I cannot tell correctly of course, but I think about fourty eight hours or more must have elasped before I came to my senses."

"What gives you the impression of that length of time?"

The Calverinian murderercould not reply to that question. The hunted haunted look in his eyes became intensie,intensified. His lips twitchedand the Counsel was obliged to give him time for rest. General johnston then took up the questioning.

"When you awoke were you alone?"

"There were lots and lots of people lying all around as far as the eye could see they lay as thick as straws under the white moonlight, asleep as I thought. Suddenly I realized they were all dead."

"How did you realize this? Was the moon moonlight strong enough to see by?"

"Oh the moon was bright enough. But I did not need to look closely. And I did not look closely. I knew---the calverinians broke off for a moment and mentioned his lips I know by the oder. The death stench was all around me. It was that too that told me I had been senseless for at least two days and two nights. It was that too I think that finally brought me too."

"What did you do?"

"I Crawled away from that field of dreadful unutterable horror, and disgust lashed me on,and gave me the strength to move on which otherwise I might have lacked. I have only a vague recollection of how long it took me to get away. I seemed to crawl along among corpses for an eternity there were so many. But when dawn broke I was clear of that field of decay and death and had reached a small villinge. No one wanted to give me shelter bu because the offense of rescueing or succoring a calverinian was punishablebby death. But an old Calverinian born Glandelinian woman took pity on me.She gave me refuge, hid mecanwy, and bathed and dressed my headwounds. As soon as I was able to t ravel she supplied me with al,the food I could carry and I set out at night."

"Where did you go to?"

"I had disguised myself as a glandelinian, hoping to make my way into Abyssinkilo. But I lost my way. Finally I fell in with two other Calverinians who had escaped death in pretty much the same way that I had."

"And then?"

"We wandered about for several weeks traveling by night, sleeping in the woods through the day and living on herbs, wild berries and eatable roots. Finally we found we had crossed into the region of one of the christian armiesand we knew that we were safe at last."

"Did any of the persons of the town of Lady Decie escape massacre but yourself?"

"I learned afterwards that only three people escaped alive out of two hundred thousand. None of my own nearest relatives survivied. I heard this from the other two survivors who I met afterwards in Abyssinkilo."

"How long did you remain in Abyssinkilo."

"For about two months. Then the town of Lady Decie fell into the hands of the christians and I returned to my home town hoping to be able to recover some of the treasure. But I was unable to do so. Not a stone of our house was left standing. Only a few families remained some twenty souls in all and they had been forced to embrace the Glandelinian Religion in order to save their lives, the cowards that they were to sell their liv religion for the sake of their lives."

"What happened then?"

"The Angelinians were driven away away again and I was obliged to return to Abyssinkile. The Glandelinians began to hunt down and massacre the few survivors of our race who were yet living in Eastern Calverinia."

"Where did you go then?"

"I wandered on foot into western Calverinia where after some months I reached one of the christian armies. Afterwards I worked my way into Pholantonburg where I knew I would meet my countrymen and perhaps a survivors of my own family. When I learned that general Berlin had been brought int o genern Hansohs lines I came here."

"Did you come with the intention of killing general Ber, Berlin?"

"No. It seemed to me that they footsteps were guided by a higher power."

"Did you know that general Berlin was direct author of the kinrergarten massacres ot merely an agent of the Manleys?"

"Yes. I was shown a letter in his own handwritting in which he said;

"The Calverinians must be wiped out, exterminated in the interest of the futire future success of the glandelinian rebellion against Christianity and God. As long as so many Calverinians survive as an organized community they will as soon as opportunity presents itself rebel against us and embroil us with foreign powers. The memory of the old massacres during the eighteen fourty one war will always serve as an excuse to incite them to rise against us or bring outsiders to their help. We need their Eastern territory for cur own armies and to carry on the rebellion."

inhabitants of the Calverinian cities countryies, and towns, and villinges will be escorted by our troops into desert places and there will be lost to night or cease to trouble us and the world."

It seemed apparent apparent that thetest ton ti mony of the Calverinian was sufficient to convince the jury in Hansen vivianscourt that he ought not to be held for his act.. Many other witness ed who were summoned fully corroborated his heartrendg evidence concerning the dreadful massacres of the Calverinians in the east.Colonel Paschian the officer of anAbyssinkilian regiment and one of the few christian officerswho had witnessed the great massacres gave a particularly moving story of the dreadful scenes he had pass ed through and of the many pitiful and bleeding survivors who hadbeen picked up in Abyssinkilo.Another officer who had witnessed the massacres also and a well known historian gave also a general and full confirmation of the story, and described the great massacres and reign of terror and of the other terrible scenes caused and enacted by the Glandelinians. General Hanson vivian and all his generals with him strange to say had up to this time been ignorant of those massacres and this testi ony produced such amazement among them all t hat it cannot be described and Hanson before seeing to what should be done to the prisoner had an investigation made and found every thing true.General Sander Zirner ann the Angelinian military commander in Eastern Calverinia during the world massacre also had sat through the trialand had general gave a fully testimony of all he witnessed during the reign of terror in the east and the amazement was still greater. The trial lasted three days.

The Calverinian defendant had three lawyersThe second a doctor made a part icularly eloquent defense. He compared the Calverinian defendant first to Whilliam Tell the Switzerlands great hero who killed his countrys oppressor.

"Could any court of just ice be found on earth now or then that would condemn William Whilliam Tell? The doctor demanded of the jury of generals. "You know that would be quite impossible. You know that no twelve right minded men possessing even an elementary sense of the gi higher justice would have condemned Whilliam Tell. And compared to the defe defendants provocation to killing the wicked Glandelinian general Berlin, how insignificant was the provocation suffered by Whilliam Tell. Gessler to punish Whilliam Tell for his great patroitism commanded him to shoot an apple fro the head of his son with a bow and arrow, a form of shooting in which Whilliam Tell was an exe expert. Whilliam Tell seemed to make preparations to obey this order, but instead of shooting the apple from his own sons head he waited for gessler in a secret spotand sped the arrow through the heart of the hated tyrant h instead. And now take the case of this Calverinian defandant who just met and killed general Berlin right in your very midst. If you require a personal motive, gent lemen of the jury, the Calverinian had in it in abundance. It was not the possible death of his relatives h that confronted him. He had actually witnessed the massacre of his nearest relat ives and parents and the usual outrage before being killed. But to the Calverinians undying honor be it said that the massacre of his own relatives was not his chief motive in killing one of the worse monsters on human form who called himself a general. Not even the foul wrongs sustained by his entire race formed the main intention of his deed, rather he hoped to prevent the reccurrance of the Kintergarten horrors, to save what remained of his own people from general Berlins abominations in the future, in the event that the future should again invest the wicked glandelinian general with power for mischief in case he was given parole or exchanged. Under such circumstances it seems almost a travesty of just ice to even arrange thi this man before a tribunal. His innocence is so self evident.I'm sure you would not convict him if he had shot the wicked Manleys for the same offenses and still they have done alike."

The Calverinians first defending counsel was the most frou fatious of the three able attorneysdelegated by the Ag Anglican Angelinians to defend the unusual Calverinian patriot. He had achieved considerable notoriety during the early part of the war because of his d willingness willingnessto undertake the defense of many foreign spies before the many imporial courts of Abbiennia. The defense of the Calverinianmassacre was conducted by this attorney along entirely different lines. He cited paragraph fift y one of the main penalcode which states that no man shall be held res responsible and ac accountable for a crime committed in a state of mental irresponsibility or at a moment when his freedom of will had been impaired by untward circumstances or undue emotional strain.

"As a fatious writer puts it the attorney said"A man who does not lose his mind is suffering certain injuries but no mind to lose."

Compared Compared to the impassioned fervor of the three officers summoned to defend the Cal Calverinian assassin, the arrangement of the prosecuting attorney general Hansonin seemed effectu' effectual.

"We must not lose sight night of the fact."He said that this crime was the direct outcome of shooting down a man in cold blood before us all. General Berlin though not so high in rank as a general in the army, was in his higher state of Grand Duke a more higher man than any of t he Manleys, and was one of Glandelinias greatest leaders. That he was assassinated right before us all in the courtroom while being only a more prisoner of war before us akes it imperative for us all to deal cu courageo courageously with the murderer no matter how unpopular and unfa orable the verdict may be. His assassination of so great a Glandelinian has brought the whole nation of Angelinia into grave danger for all of Glandelinia dll will exert her up utmost to revenge his death. It is our duty to prosecute the assassin to t he ful power of the law. It is a disgrace to Angelinia to let a man free that deliberately showshot down in cold blood a great Glandelinian general right at the very feet of the highest christian generals and in particular bfore the very eyes of iolet and her sisters.."

T he prosecuting ttorneys words made little impressionupon the officers and soli soldiers in the courtroom and when all the testimoney was in the jury withdrew They were gone for fully two hours and sixteen minutes. They re turned with a verdict of "Guilty on the ground that despite his wrongs and sufferings, nevertheless he was fully responsible for his act. However general Hanson did not favor the verdict and neither did Violet and her sisters and after another debate the Jury had to with draw again. This time they were out only one hour and fifteen minutes and this time returned with a verdict of "Not Guilty on the ground that the act of the Calverinian th ugh deliberate and responsible was nevertheless justified for the Glandelinian general had been held to account for the murder of so many helpless Calverinians. The Angelinian officers in court went wild with joy. They applauded, hurrahed, and clapped their hands. They crowded around the Calverinian, some embracing them, and others kissing his hands. The Calverinian smiled sismiled sadly his face a trifle flushed and he recieved the ovation in silence that was dignified.

Thiswas nothing something indeed whichstartled thewhole World, because thiswicked Glandellinian generdl was t he chief cau cause of the worse asacres the world had ever heard of " andwhich had the whole world startledover its occurance.

CHAPTER SEVENTY TWO....

QUAKE CAUSED BY GIGANTIC EXPLOSION ROCKS ANGELINIA AGATHIA, AND VIVIAN WICKEY. SHOCK SWEEPS HALF OF ABBIKANNIA AND CALVERINIA. HUNDREDS OF GREAT CALVERINIAN CITIN SHAKEN , AND SUFFERING SEVERE DAMAGE. V COUNTLESS THOUSANDS KILLE THROUGHOUT NATION. GIANT SKYSCRAPERS IN CALVERINE CITY SWAY AND CRASH INTO THE STREETS, IN AVALANCHES OF DEBRIS. PANIC SWEEPS ENTIRE NATION, THINKIT THINKING IT IS A GREAT NATURIAL EARTHQUAKE. BIGGEST EXPLOSION SHOCK YET FELT DURING THE WAR. WHOLE ANGELINI N COAST LINE FEARS THE RESULT OF THE MST MOST SEVERE JOLT. SCORES OF MILLIONS PHONE IN FEAR OF HORRIBLE DISASTER. ANGELINIA AGATHIA AND VIVIAN WICKEY HARD HIT.

DOMED it was reported that the probable most terrific explosion of the , and the most terrific ever seen or heard, made or caused a general concussion like a most severe earthwuake, and which was the mostextensive ever felt in bbikannia, Calverinia, and also Angelinia and that the center of the shock the twenty greatexplosions occuredwas reported to beatthe mouth of the nburgs Rum.The shock rocked half the state of Abbikannia at about nine ty four oclock in the morning. The east, middle westand and southeastern verinia felt the concussion and 4 hs extreme west with terrible and most stating results as will be told in other chapter.

The shock produced by the twenty ex losions was felt most sharply thin the whole besieging armies of ohrs christian armies at vivian vickey city itself was shaken, and with such force that the highest buildings were ed violently, and collasped bringing ruin & many others and entombing streets with oceans of wreckage.Millions of soldiers within the besiging istian lines fled from their swaying barracks or were covered by the canvass their toppin toppling tents.Panc panic was everywhere.None of the barracks ruined except that many windows or nearly al of them had their glass attered out, and the beds and other furniture on thefloors danced the very jig for a moment , or shook the shkmnis.

 mast a/s also swayed with greater violence through vivian wickey town and ppler Liegburg Landing and Tataria, and Moldenburg and other points of the ging christian lines and severe havoc was wrought.

yi Angelinia Agathia wi which is as far away from vivian wickey Chicago is from New York felt it severe enough that all the houses suffered broken windows, toppking chimneys, besides nearly fourty thousand houses completely razed.

 million dollars worth of dishes were also broken,furniture of all kinds ly li leaped or chimneied.Church steeples crashed down, clocks in countless mbers stopped and hundreds of thousands of people were driven from home, ses, orphan asylums and other buildings in great fright only to be slightly re injured by terretents torrents of glass tyat fell upon them from the wn windows of higher buildings.

 lless thousands of persons in Angelinia Agathia telephoned all the newspaper ces believing that they hadexperienced the edge of some terrible natural quake that no doubt had devestated some sister city with great loss in lives.

ficial records however were not avail able but unofficially the Angelinia ian weather bureau observers said the quake had been off too sudden occurence of so of too short a duration to come from a natural cause.The particular peculer seismic disturbance was sharpest north of Angelinia ia especially in the northern residence and apartment sections of the city along the land adjoining the Krminis iver that runs through that region.

ly every house holder felt sure that the mysterious shock was caused by most terrific explosion at a long or short distance, and so many telephoned telegraphed to distant towns asking the location of the blasts.

 generals of the besieging christian armies at vivian wickey sent estimated the ation of the shock at one to three seconds at Angelinia Agathia.It appeared to from the southwest through the heart of Julio Gallio, Norma Catherine, Whirther Manet, Mic-Whirther proper and Vivian wickey section No.Two and , with almost devastating effects. effects.The Aronburgs un stream is seven hundred miles south of Vivian ickey.Nearly a thousand were killed in vivian wiskey, and eleven thousand injured but they were mostly Clandelinian soldiers and non,combatants.In the main section of the besieged city, particularly terrible panic followed the sudden shocks.Crowds of frightened non-combatants, and others poured into the snow-covered streets turning anxious eyes up tward the roofs. They also recieved showers of glass from the windows of taller buildings.The quake struck hardest in Julio_allio, and it wwas reported hundreds of thousands of rebel soldiers working in their own barracks in the Clandelinian encampments were knocked by from their feet by the concussion or injured by falling debris and the like.In many sections it was reported that pictures and plastering was shaken from the walls of buildings in Angelinia Agathia and tables and chairs overturned, and though there were many thousands of houses completely razed, and a hundred thousand damaged there were little injuries among persons and no one reported killed.

Since the great war started such peculiar earthbtremors caused by violent explosions have not been felt anywhere in the Abbisannian countires since the terrific explosion sh some where near Jennie _ivian town during the big battle there of the great Abbisannian war munition shipments factories in the upper sunbam creek s also shook the whole country, and broke windows in cities and towns hundreds of miles away and razed Jennie _ivian town to the ground as well as Lieghburg Landing.

In Pandor a city fifty miles away from the city of Calverine, workers and others in the many great buildings felt the structures sway with such violence and rock so and so many windows bro en and plastering falling so heavily that they were driven panic stricken, and towers and church steeples quivered q qith such violence that they came down.The streets below recieved a perfect blizzard of falling glass and cornices that imperiled scores of thousands bdow.

Wealthy guests and others of the twenty story Pandora hotel feld in confusion from all of the upper floors only to be injured by hundreds by the falling plaster and wreckage.Many of those most severely injured were those who in their haste haste refused to wait for elevators which were desperately struggling to handle the emergency travel and the extra demand for speed.Only the most heroic efforts on the part of the matron and the attendents averted a most disasterous panic, in the Chapel of the Angel _uardian P Orphan Home for little girl children when the sudden concussion of the distant explosion rolled them about like marbles in their seats, and caused large sections of the ceiling plaster to come down upon their heads, injuring many.The stain glass wi dows most beautifully decorated with poly Pictures were completely shattered out as if struck by a cyclone, and the sanctuary Red Light Lamp hanging before the blessed Sacrament swung back and forth with such violence that it struck one wall and rebounded to another with considerable noise untill the lamp was shattered.The upper part of the alter crashed down, and a beam of the ceiling gave way with a crash. Yet Yet none of the children were injured.

All the buisness buildings and also all the residences swayed just as valently and as fiercely in the sudden tremors and as in others of the Calverinian cities countless numbers of citizens, men women and children, inadequately clothed some almost naked fled in in onse crowds into the streets only to also recieve showersof glass falling from the windows of high buildings.

Phea Phelantsburg two hundred miles southeast of vivian wiskey reported three distinct most violent shocks, that committed very severe damage w such as razing ten thousand houses completely, wrecking nearly a score of thousands more shattering out the windows of all the others, and killing hundreds and injuring thousands of people.One hundred and fifty thousand buildings were partly wrecked and every street traffic was completely parlyzed.

Also here scores of thousands of persons were cut and injured by showe ring tore torrents of falling glass from high buildings and also falling bricks and cornices.Here the shock only lasted two seconds.Yet a million fled into the streetstreets and in scanty garb and there was confusion and great excitement everywhere.In the same city a most immense audience listening to a speaker orating on the great war fled from the great Convention Hall in wild panic when the sudden shocks fairly vaulted many hundreds out of their seats, and caused all the lights in the building first to flicker and then go out completely leaving them all in intense darkness.One of the occupants of the balcony seats raised the cry of "Earthquake" and everyone immediately fled.

Yet no one was injured here though plastering fell probably by the ton load, and windows werocechattered out with great suddeness and one wall almost burst asunder.Othe wal s wse cracked and hundreds of big and small pictures on the walls fellwith a resounding crash.The noise of the great explosion could be heard faintly here.It sounded somatying very heavy pon pounding for ten seonds on the distant earthephe city of _orothy Gale, fourty miles southwest of Angelinia Agathia reported expwriences much more severe than that with her neighbor or _ivian wiskey and it

It was est estimated that the damage severe or slight had extended as far north or south as the southern towns of the State of Abysninkilie.However no severe damage of any kind was reported in _orothy Gale.Jennie Wren town, so far south as the state of Angelinia experienced a shock or concussion of two seconds duration according to reports, buildings throughout this city being shaken many thousands with disasterous results.Hundreds of persons were killed, thousands injured and a half millionrendered homeless, and having lost all they had.All the long telephone service was put to a complete stop, thousands of street cars and engines were jolted off the tracks, and many fatal collisions occurred.....

The experience of Crowley even still under a seige, and the christian lines there was brief and sharp enough to inflict incapable damage the observers there estimat ing the time of the tremors at from twenty to twenty three seconds.Houses by the were crushed into total ruins, a million were wrecked, all the rest had their windows out, and the loss of life was fearful.The streets were piled with debris and two million persons were rendered homeless.Street alleys were filled up, and unknown numbers of min non-combatants and soldiers were buried in the ruins, and over sixty thousand were reported injured.Among the beisgers the damage also was very severe.Thousands of army barracks were leveled t o the grounf ground a million and five hundred thousand were damaged and ten thousand soldiers were killed, and one hundred and thirty thousand injured, thirty thousand fatally.

Very pronounced shocks were also felt at Ester Starring, but with very great damage was reported outside of windows being broken.Newspaper offices of the town of Angeline Junction, and Clorinia in common with other cities throughout the area of the shocks prd produced by the explosions were deluged with millions of calls from as many puzzles and puzzled and frightened citizens.

Little _irl Knool _ownfourty miles south of Angelinia Agathia Also her Neighbor _ig _irl Knool and _hamberlane, Wadge Evans city and the le _urmer quickly reported severe Shocks in o which considerable damage was done.

No loss of life however occured in thes these places here.In the town of Little _irl Knool the many telephone exchange buildings , hotels, hospitals, and orphan asylumns a d and otherbig buildings reported that every one of their telephone recievers were knocked from the hooks, and coats and c ps and other clothing fell from racks and hall trees on every floor of these buildings.

Many of these buildings had windows shaken out.In the hospitals and asylums panic panic ensued, and the nurses, sisters, and other attendants had all they could do to quell the confusion when the glass in the windows were blown or shattered out, and the long window curtains and draperies flapped like flags in a fierce gale.Part of the small city as well as Big _irl Knoll and Big Evans city was plunged into total darkness when the eletric lighting system was disordered, and power plants damaged.

Plaster was knocked from the ceiling and walls of many thousands of buildings, and a train entering Jennie _urmor city and loaded with christian soldiers was thrown with the rails by the concussion but none of the soldiers were injured.

In Big _irl Knool the shocks being somewhat more severe aroused the patients in all the hospitals and every home for children, and also asylums for the insane and contagious diseases, and atendants had the greatest difficulty in calming them.Pictures were rattled violently on the walls, and the furniture was shaken throughout every one of these buildings in the city, and all the window panes were out.

After fifteen full seconds it was reported that every building in every part of the city rocked violently with a lateral north to south motion.

At Cha hamberlane amateur observers placed the duration of the shocks there at five seconds.But the shocks h nevertheless were extremely violent, and not a building there exce ess escaped some slight damage.There was no loss of life however though many were reported injured by bricks, faling plaster, or by being thrown violently to the ground.A million queer incidents occured.

In the town of _ona ten miles north of _hamberlane people experienced very sharp shocks.Buildings were also wrecked, a r railway station collapsed, killing hundreds and a thousand killed.Pounding of elevators against girders in the shafts caused the occupants of the larger buildings to know that the quake was caused by some awful explosion, and not a natural earth convulsion.

No shock was felt for ten seconds and fifty thousand buildings were completely razed, and hundreds of thousands of others badly wrecked.Gc lorian a, gretchen Grove, and Annie Aromburg, and many other smaller towns of southern Calverinia, reported severe shocks with the usual accompaniement of wrecked buildings, cars off the tracks, people thrown off their feet, rattling and falling pictures, stopping of all c,ocks cracking of plaster, etc.

In the town of g gretchen gretchen water was thrown out of a large tank on the roof of a twelve story building deluging thousands of people below, while buildings throughout the city rattled and swayed violently, and were somewhat damaged in the severity of the concussion.

he city of Francis Atlanta sent in the reports that the explosion shocks were felt plainly there but without any damage being done.People in many large buildings become confused and panic stricken and made for the streets as quickly as the they could and one man who had not realized what had been occuring soon had all the fire departments in his district on the run.Clocks in all the most important buildings stopped at the moment of the shocks.One of the main seismographs at the Francis Atlanta University caught the disturbance at eight fourty five in the morning and several moments later the need e was still q uivering.

he shock was next reported from Mic-ollester fourty miles north of Angelinin Agathia near Lucillie ockson city, the seismograph at St Anns ospital recording shocks at 8.45.At this big city the location of the shock could not be determined without study.Here however it was vo violent enough to cause considerable damage.every house reported all windows shattered.Tremendous showers of glass fell into the streets, church steeples co'n collasped, and street cars jumped off the tracks so quickly that a hundred were wrecked and many pasas passengers hurt or killed in them..

early a hundred thousand buildings were seriously damaged, and a million wrecked enough to need re e repairs.he only loss of life however was in the wrecked street cars.Strong seismograph records were also observed at the city of Sacramento (Abbiesannia).But no shocks of any importance were observed there.An official there who was a se.s seismologist at the St Peters University asserted that the strange and sudden quake started to register at 8.45. and continued untill 8.5. or those few moments theforce was so great that the needle of the sensitive seismograph was driven completewyl off the scale by the shock as the official said.The greatest disturbance he declared was cross country from south to north and estima ed the center of theshock at about five thousand miles from the University of Sacramento.

tthe city of Abbiesnn fourteen miles south of Calverine city the shock tremors lasting five seconds was felt with startling effect.The distinctt tremors were felt by the occupants of all the highest buildings in Abbiesnncity.The shocks occured at '. 8.45. and lasted only three seconds.he structures surged back and forth as if a violent tornado was s.starting.A moment later another tremor was felt by many but this was only the duration of a seond.

Reports from the same city stated that countless buildings rocked to their very foundations.Tentants in many of the buildings in the down town districts fled to the streets in consetr consternation.At the same moment residents of the cities of on, on Randall/ Radcliffe, and Albrahambra noted the sudden shocks but not as severely as those experienced in Angelinin Agathia, and the section surrounding her.the distinctness of the tremo s at Angelinin Agathia as compared with the fainter recordings further southward or northward at first caused it to be believed that it was a real natural earthquake, either caused by the crust of the oceans bed somewhere near the mouth of the Arcubur s r i up to have slipped from the violent concussion of the great explosion.When Emperor ivi n ca called up the museum of Natural is'tory where a siesmograph also records quakes the one there in chargw answwsd;

''there is no one here su just now but myself, but I can say that the seismograph has been jumping like some wild jazz dancer--must have bea a violent earthquake somewhere near here''

Many further reports indicsed indicated that the explosion may have shaken the whole western and northern coast of gal erine or Calverinia and also all the way dow down the seaboard of the state of Angelinia and probably further.In the city called Saxton junction many of the mosthighest curthorities said;

''the whole town fairly shook the shimnie and the mayor of the town tepe telephoned th t this ''small city'' has been like the branch of a tree waving gently in the breeze.In the po police headquarters of this same city where no shock was fe/t felt the pe phone rang at nine oclock and some exep excited person demanded;

''where was the big explosion, nd what caused it!''

Fromthis call the police thought some one was playing a joke on the department until untill the headquarters was suddenly deluged with similar calls mainly from the northern sections of the town.Our guests in all the hotels in the little city reported feeling severe shocks a little before that time.

Although the terrible and devasating phenomena was recorded in this little town only one report of serious damage was recorded by officials that of the shattering out of wijdows of one house, and the breaking of a set of dishes on a pantry shelf in a lunch room.the owner of each place told the police he believed some Angelinian Vandal mes must have got in and overturned the pantry of dishes when he heard some one c coming and broke hisxway through the window of the other house in his efforts to escape.

he shocks caused great alarm and panic in the magnificent country Orphan ylums for girls and boys on the outer limits of the town.he inter superior of he girls was having some kind of an intertainment for these early war orphans den the huge prism chandelier overhead in the showroom quivered and rattled most olently for more than eighty seconds.The bui building itself which was made of the heaviest concrete, and the thickest steel shookand if it was a living thing ying a violent fit.

he sister superior herself said;

''e felt two distinct distinct waves of tremors each to my knowledge lasting bout fourty secon w seconds.They seemed to be followed from afar in the distance by a strange low pounding rumble that caused the whole building to violently tremble as if we were struck by a terrific cyclone.We were all badly scared I can tell you.the children were panic stricken indeed and it took some desperate efforts to quiet their fears.''

Later reports from every section of western Calverinia told of the disturbance being plainly felt.In general ivians headquarters at jennie Vivian own, according to his report, that the shocks caused a set of tubular chimes to sound, and all the trees outside within t he christian lines and in the woods beyond to fairly shake the shimnie.....he sudden and strange oscillating motion of the earth caused the pendulum of a grand fathers clock in his headquarters to beat against the glass case with such force tht that the glass was shattered outhe general told telling of his self pla ing chimes; added;

''My headquarters moved violently backwards and forwards from southward to northward northward for at least a moment.I hward a dull rumble like thunder in the far distance..''

Although in Angelinin Agathia the main wa weather bureau iw on top of a twenty eight story building the officials thus did not feell the shock they declared that nevertheless that they had heard the explosions which made a most strange sound like somthing something heavy pounding upon a hardwood floor.Persons in thefloors below who also hard the explosion said it they felt the shock, and also calls from many other towns reported similar shakings.everyone in the city of Angelinin Agathia felt the shocks prou produced by the explosions without ever attributing them to their real cause.

Ordinary earthquakes produced by nature herself o are more or less common in this country but needless to say they are not very severe ,according to the saying of the Angelinin Agathia local weather forcasters.''It is very seldom indeed one is able to personally to experience the tremors of the earth that are always constantly being recorded by the seismographs.This shock already felt was no doubt caused by some tremendious explosion or series of explosions.''''''

''And at the same time of the convus Convulsion''said another'' I was dictating to my assistant that a most wide blizzard storm was go going to sweep over Calverinia for April when suddenly it felt to me as if the whole world was rocking. I heard a low rolling boom like distant thunder, and I thought I was being struck dizzy from some blow, and was also having sudden illness.All felt the same including my assistant.Then we including every one else noticed the many lights in the buildings either going out or quivering violently and at first we were very sure that we were experiencing a natural earthquake shock of unusual intensity for this reason.It began at 8.25. and lasted to my reckoning for over twenty seconds.''

Emperor vivian himself said he was almostwithin reach of is Throne when he felt the building suddenly tremble with great violence as if from the instant outbreak of a terrific cyclone.

''At first I thought one of our old fashioned Terrocian Typhoons had struck s ''He said,''But as the walls and the floors continued to sway and the window frames rattled violently, I swung a weight from the door knob or door jam of the main entrance.Then I felt sure some kind of an earth shock had visited us because the weight was moving with the swing of the structure.All of my couriers felt the shock, and to my feeling the tremors continued for fully thirty seconds.''

Among those in his place plep palace who w also felt the disturbance were the Ladies of the oyal court, and also Count De iffe.

''I was sitting at the window watching the blinding swirl of snow''the count said.''when suddenly I noticesthe building was sh king shaking as if it had St itus pance.''At first I thought I had become dizzy from looking at the snowstorm and called to one of the Dukes.

''Did you notice the building shake!'' I asked him.

''Yes indeed''he re; replied.''Look at the water in the glass fish case.''

It was splashing as if someone had violently shaken it with the purpose to scare the fishe.he tremors continued for about ten seconds or at least it took that long before the shaking of the water subsided.'' the count and his friends felt about six heavy distinct shocks. The count he said thought the sudden tremors occured at '49... 8.49. and to his idea lasted eighty seconds or probably a little longer. During that period he told others that the windows and tables shook the shimmiy, and a perceptible wavelike movement of houses outside was noted. Many in the place alarmed to feel the building sway and tremble beneath them, called up telephone operators asking for the cause. At the same time Empress Vivian, noticed the very building suddenly quiver, pictures on the walls sway back and forth, and flower vases on the table in her r room to jiggle. She felt as if her heart was in her mouth. (probably it was and she swallowed it). It was the most peculiar sensation she ever felt.

"Thank God it did not last long" she sad said.

Emperor Vivian again delared that the extent of the mysterious shock would indicate that it was the greatest since fourteen Fourteen twenty one. He had telegraphed to Angeline Junction City nearly three thousand miles away asking scientists there to find out the exact cause of the tremors.

"We seem naturally to be on top of the strange disturbance." he said. "and that fact almost makes it extremely difficult to determine to the exact cause of the concussion from my Pala e Palace. It may have ben from some tremendous tre mendous exp lso explosion because theshock was like it and not a natural earthquake.....The last heavy explosion felt here was later re recorded at Jennie Vivian s own."

The sudden strange earth tremor caused by the distant explosions also shook half of the country or State of Abyssinkile. In that State however itwas reported that it was nowhere severe enough to wreck or throw down buildings. And in various sections of that country its sudden distn distinctness varied being most evident in the most southwestern section. It varied also in its duration, a second to perhaps ten seconds.

And all southern as well as northern parts of the country of Abyssinkile felt thethrilling concussion of the distant explosions, the swift definite trembler playing a shivery prank lasting almost ten seconds. It was also felt by the Angelinian citizens at their own city of Vanity Fair south of the Angelinian Boundary line. The moment of the concussion was approximately nine o'clock. Vanity Fair time.

Reports from all cities and towns affected but without disasterous results indicated that all of the Angelinian State was visited by the undulating concussion of the great explosion. As in the city of Angeline junction reports from everywhere told of buildings swaying slightly, cracking plaster, trea ing of windows, wildly dancing furniture and more definitely countless numbers of anxious hearts, and millions of strange and funny freaks. The seismograph, those delicate instruments which record the slightest tremors of the earth, recorded it also in northern Abyssinkile, and extreme northern Abbieannia, but only from many Calverines and Angelinian towns-tha . that the quake like concussion spilled water out of fold fish bowls, owls gold fish bowls, rattled or smashed pict pictures on the walls and set tables and other inanate objects to capering around.

And without the slightest doubt it scared millions of people, for in Narcocism City, twenty miles north of Angeline junction, the guests of many big hotels and other high buildings ran panic stricken into the streets, many turning in an alarm of fire, while in countless other hotels, and tall apartment buildings in many cities, the tenants sat for a few moments in awful silence, or dashed excitedly into the halls and corridors. In Angeline Junction city, it was felt most noticeably along the sea front, particua particularly on the near far north side. Countless numbers of people called police and news paper offices by the telephone to find out what caused it, or what it was, whether it was a real quake or an explosion and what all the scentists at the countless thousands of observatories had anything to say about it.

In the big city of Gertrude Angeline fourty miles north of Angeline Junction, and some of the other northern Angelinian towns of Northern Angelinia every one of the residents reported that the concussions or shocks made their lights flicker o-n co completely out, or strangely on and off, windows in many of the buildings were shattered out , and furniture was so violently jolted that many were wrecked. In Gertrude Angeline a table near the window of a large apa apartment house was jolted so violently that it fairly leaped out of the window and crashed to the street below killing two people and injuring six. Persons living in all the tall apartment buildings of Gertrude Angeline City were alarmed as tons of plastering fell from walls and cal ng or as pictures crashed to the floor. Also residents of the upper stories of the countless hotels and the like felt the buildings sway violently under them, saw their reading lamps fall to the floor or move completely out of place, and not only heard their pictures rattle on the walls but saw many of them come down with a resounding bang. Large crowds of them called to the excited clerks downstairs and reported the strange and [illegible] concussions. Everywhere throughout the Country or State of Angelinia the same emotions were recorded from the extreme west and extreme excitement and alarm of the utterly i unin in uninitated to a nonchalant int erest from those who said; "oh it was caused by some explosion alright. I've been at Jennie Vivian Town, and the Lieghburg Landing where two bad explosions occured during the battles, and therefore I know. By the way did it do any damage? It do did more than comprehending as far as reported."

At the big universities of the Gertrude Angeline City many estimated that the explosion causing the shock was about eight hundred and sixty miles from the city. The seismographs at one of these universities recorded the severest shock at exactly 8:45. slighter concussions were recorded ten seconds later. In the Gertrude Angeline Courier Journal Office a telegraphs operators instruments were shaken loose from the table and a gold fish bowl fell fell on him giving him a free shower bath with fishes and all.

Martin dispatcher on the Mid-Hollester and Pandora Sendon Railroad telephoned the Tribune Office of that city for information soon after the shock. He declared that he had received reports from many cities all alongthe line from Pandora ("Abbieannia") that somewhere near Aronburgs Run great damage had been done and terrible loss of life inflicted. That hundreds of thousands of lives were snuffed out at Anna Aronburg city.

"They thought in Gertrude Angeline city, that the deopt would collaspe." he declared.

In the city of Sacramento (Abbieannia) all of the men ran out of the round houses, carshops, and other places, in panic and confusion, so violent was the sudden concussions.

The mayor of Gertrude Angeline city at that time being on one of the upper floors of a three story apartment building said all the tentants in the structure were alarmed as every movable object either jiggled or swayed violently from side to side.

"I did not know what I should do" he said to a friend. "We felt doubly alarmed because the shock was so severe. I had been with a birthday party of children in full progress and I did not know whether I should have brought it to a speedy end or not. In that room the postures swayed violently or slammed against the walls with force enough to break the glass in them, and three plants rocked violently on the pedestials in the corner of the room that they fell off. Is there likely to be another shock."

"It must have been the concussion of some great explosion." his friend answered. "I have experienced them at Lieghburg Landing, and Jennie Vivian." Another superor of a Ladies convent was another who had observed the strange things to happen, and from the nature of the shock knew it was from the concussion of some terrific explosions because she also had experienced them before.

"I was leading one of the classes in prayer in the chapel, when the sanctuary Lamp swung back and forth with such violence as if to fly off its fastenings." she said. "the stained glass windows were shattered as if a cyclone had struck the building and the whole structure shook like as if it would collapse in a moment. The pupils became panistricken and I and many other sisters had great difficulty in quieting them."

All of the employees of the Abbieannia, Pondinia, and Panrola Pandora Railroad that work on the fourth story of the Pandora St Station in Gertrude Angeline city, were rocked about with startling violence, and many thrown to the floor. One of the tape telegraph operators told of being swayed about so violently in his chair that he and the chair went sprawling most disgracefully to the floor. Another telephone operator, who was a woman, was also completely knocked off the chair. The whole building swayed so violently that one of its walls cracked, and many windows went out completely. Many inside thought the station was going to collaspe and there was a panic among the workers, and wi waiting passengers. The bucket under the water cooler only one third full was splashed about so violently, that plenty of the water was spilled over the edge and on to the floor.

At the Main Hotel guests reported to the manager that pictures rattled so violently on the walls that nearly all of them came tumbling down, and that every one of the chairs and tables, and even beds, and all kinds of other furniture jumped up and down, or skid about the rooms. It was the same at another big hotel. The night clerk in charge later said that more than half of the uguests were injured by falling plaster some fatally, and all the others complained of feeling the sudden shocks, and also being frightened by the unusual antics of the furniture and pictures.

A day c e clerks at the Aronburg Hotel sa said that the guests there also had been driven to panic and all fled into the streets the building having lurched so violently that all of the windows werecompletely broken out pictures on the walls rattled and fell, and guests in the upper rooms came bumping into one another as they ran, filled with great excitement out into the wide halls, and pelted wity with showers of falling plaster.In one womans apartment a card gme of four persons was in animated progress.guddenly the whole building seemed to jump up and down, and roll around, and the tables and chairs slipped around on the floor.It was over before anyone knew what it was allabout.But nevertheless they continued on with the game.Countless ou other reports of a similar nature were made from all sections of the city, such as a great blizzard of glass falling from all the windows of high buildings down into the streets.The serious explo explosions no doubt had extraod or extraordinay fo force for it sent the vigorous concussion throughout the northwestern part of Calverinia with unaccountable devastating effects of which I will relate in proceeding chaper chapter.

he sudden unexpected concussion tremors were easily noticeable for about six-teen seconds at 8:45. and although they were not strong enough to cause great damage everywhere, they as stated b6ore shook the whole Calverinian stat6, as well as a part of Abyssinkile, and from Northern Abbisannia to the Erminie un and from the stat6 of Glandolinia as far south as Vanity Fair(Glandelinia) and to t he Abbisannian state of Pomdobia.In the extreme northwestern part of Calverinia, great osters of population, Pandora, Mic-Hollester, Calverine, Saxton and Lucillie Jurden, Abbis-Ann, Meldon icknell, and others, the shocks were severe enough to cause great damage in every destr iption, and to alarm and drive to panic and confusion scores of millions of people.In some of these northern Calverinian cities especially Meldon icknell and Lucillie orden guests were injured by the score hundred as they hurried into the streets from the almost razed hotels, and nearly five hundred were caught in the debris and killed or fatally injured.

In other parts of Meldon icknell itself all the public buildings, and all kinds of show houses and theatres were vacated just in time their patrons mistaking the first shocks for the outbreak of a serious cyclone.

Pandora many high buildings of steel and concrete felt the shocks so severely that not a window escaped being broken, and a cloudburst of glass and even window shases fell to the streets injuring and killing many people below and covering the sidewalks with windrows of shattered glass.reports from many observers said that the tremors or cuncussions lasting more than ten seconds were the strongest ever felt for a century in this galverine ian metroplis.One of the Professors of a Pandora University declared that probably the place of orign of the devastating shock was about one thousand four hundred miles from Pandora city.

"But nevertheless it may be north, south, west, or east as far as our data goes" he said."This sudden quake is fully a hundred times as severe any any ever felt in Calverinia since this observatory was ere cted in eighteen ninty two.At a mac maximum disturbance the needle would move back and forth more than six inches on t he moving paper itself.At this distance from the scene of the probable great explosions the concussional movements of the earth was only three to five tenths of a millimeter.That does not seem to sound like anything very much at all, but a movement of three or sixth tenths of a millimeter would be enough to cause panic n anywhere.This shock threw the needle completely off."

One of the main professors of geology at the greatest University in Pandora said that the far reachingbof the shock would without the slightest doubt indicate that the concussion was the greatest in extent for viberations cause by probable explosions and also the most in intensity the world had ever seen.

ince the beginning of the tremendous war there had been great explosions causing concussions like earthquakes of varying intensity.Most of these so far have been so to speak confined in the region of vivian vickey, but the war records shows that the explosions that almost leveled jennis vivian town to the ground was felt over nearly the same extent of area as this one this morning.Since that time there has been explosions of great and unusual force causing causing shocks of tremendous severity, notably the probable Aurandecallio blast, and the Marcuccia and Jennis Vivian explosions."

The loud creaking of woodwork, the crass crash of falling glass, and an undulating floor brought instantly to their feet an immense audience of fifty thousand people in Pandora unction.They had been listening to a loud speech on the outcome of the war when the shock came.Rattling and breaking crockery loudly banging windows, and smashing glass, swinging and falling chande l cnahdeliers and ob overturned furniture aroused them as well as falling plaster.

The sho k shocks was felt in all parts of Pandora city, but indeed with variations that were local in violence.The sudden tremors apparnently shock with such violence in some blocks as to absolutely raze buildings, and giving a vigorious shock to the next one without doing any seiu serious damage.

Reports from all over the country immedintely after ten olcock shows that the sudden shock had also been experienced in m ny parts of southern Abbisannia and generally along her seacoast.Many women and children were cli slightyl slightly injured and some seriously hurt at Nort hern sacremento(Abbisannia) when the large audience in a theatre during a play of "Uncle Toms Cabin" stampeded for the doors as all the plaster of the ceiling crashed down in tons of debris all over them, and who feared the whole building would collapse.The shock here showed the time of its duration and occurance by stoping the clcks in the offices of the theatre.Maps and pictures on the high walls slid about and the long chanc chandeliers rattled before the plaster collase a collasped, and the floor umu undulated most fearfully.Other cities reporting the violent effects of the vibermions, were Zannagustopolis fourty eight miles northeast of Angelinia Agathia, Brigando and Brigano one hundred miles west.In Brigano the streets were quickly filled wit h countless thousands of persons nervious over the shocks, only to have showers of glass fall upon t hem from the windows of tall buildings.Brigano and also Brigando repored great alarm over orphans in asylums and they gave attendants immense trouble and excitement before their fears over the shocks were quieted.At Zannagustopolis over one thousand nine hundred families had narrow escapes from death and injury when their wooden dwel lings were r ased by the concussion, and two large wooden apartment buildings crashed in like a child house of cardswhen violently jarred by the concussions.Two other wooden houses which stood about ten feet p apart tilted untill their roofs crashed. No one was injured.At the same town countless numbers of topsoh telephone believers were knocked from their instruments, and at night that part of the city was darkened by eletric light plat trouble.

At Gottruba ten miles still further north, all the telephone and telegraph trunk lines were completely disarranged.Many clocks there stopped at eight minty five.At Angelinia Agathia clocks all over stopped.At Jessica town eighty miles east of Dorothy Gale City reported that the shock lasted fully over a minute the seismograph needle being thrown completely off the recording drum. Jessica and all her adjacent territory on both sides of the Mic-Hollester and Pere Pandora railroad line reporting the shocks to be severe enough to cause great panic as countless numbers of persons were hurt in all kinds of ways, and by all kinds of falling objects.The streets were crowded with panic stricken people thousands rushing out of their violently swen swaying houses.The shocks were indeed very proem pronounced everywhere and very severe.

All windows in the buildings of Jessica were shattered out,, thousands of steeples fell, and many houses were wrecked wre cked.The seismograph instruments indicated theshocks occured one thousand five hundred miles or one thousand six hunred miles from Jessica.The shocks began recording at nine o'clock in the morning and the worse was reached at approximately nine thirty. The lights in a millworks went out when the building was violently swayed.In all public buildings and a,s also theatres panics were narrowly averted.

CHAPTER [illegible] Twenty-Two.
CHAPTER SEVENTY THREE.

THE GREATEXPLOSION AT ARO NBURGS RUN.
ITS TERRIFIC FORCE.:...!!
ON ACCOUNT OF THE CONCUSSION OF THEEXPLOSION AND ITS EFFECTS MANY TRAINS ARE REPORTED LOST IN CALVERINIA.
FORCE OF EXPLOSIONS CONCUSSION HURLS SIDE OF MOUNTAIN ON THE RAILS OF THE MIC-HOLLESTER AND PANDORA RAILROAD

THE most tremendous and si disasterious war catastlysm of the terrific conflict which could ever have occured during thexistance of man on the earth,, took plase on the fourteenth of October in the year of 1912 when a most terrific explosion and earth concussion immeasurable in their force and terrifying effects burst forth withthe same astonishing and frightful results, even almost worse than the extreme violence of the mo t titanic volcanic eruptions in the world ever known or recorded.

It outrivled even the most terrific volcanic disturbances of Mt Katmai in Alaska or the volcanic disturbances between the Islands of Java and sum atra.Indeed the awful explosion put to shame all known disasters on record either caused by naturecor men.

At one spot near the mighty Aronburgs run River the enemy had been gorking for over six months most sec retly underground storing away(imagine it) more than onehundred stores of a thousand tons each of high explosives and as many tons of gun cotton in a number of mine galleries with the vile and una unfiar designs to start off the ser es series of most terrific explosions on record.The mines had been exploded by one electric a battery where connecting wires had been placed under underground.The purpose of the enemy to explode the terrible mine was to prevent the advance of the mighty armies of general Concentinian Aron urg Aronburgs upon Vivian wickeyand reinforcing the beisgeing armiesunder general Vivian and Mansin.

This most stupendous explosion causing a catastrohpe catastrophe far beyond what even the enemy expected ,caused a record breaking flood, nd and made its effects felt over the entire world itself concerning this story anyway and instantly focussed the full attention of all scientiests sciantists in every nation.

With characteristic enterprise all Geographic/// and historic and also all other Socities besides the Gemini hurried Representives to the devastated regions upon reciept of the first news of the v olent eruption like explosions and then set immediately to mature plans to outfit strongly armed expeditions to foll w follow on and make a throughc t study of what had really caused the fearful conflargration and raging floods so feirce and enormous as to be out of all proportions to cause terrific avalanches on the hil hill and mountian sides and kill more people than any disaster ever known before.

It could be said that the whole world was greatly affected by this greatest of all explosions.Not only the states of Calverinia, and Angelinia, but also Abbisannia, Abyssinkile, and landellmia, the whole of Blomlinia and Protestentia, and even far distant Normannia and the Be glengiglomenean and Catherine Isles were all shakenbadly wn enough to cause severe damage in cities and towns, and tidal waves alone along their whole shores.

Ob Over the skies of Abbisannia, more than thirteen thousand miles away from the scenes of the explosions the vast clouds of debris thrown up by the eruptions of explosions were visib/e visible and caused the skies to be overcast for more than two days.

The results of the series of great explosions were strangely felt all over the whole United Kingdom of Abbisan ia, one of the main effects being theheavy rain and thunderstorms and unusual cool and hot wrather for more than a month and ex fullweek caused either by the concussion of the air or by the shutting off of so much sunlight by the explosion dust and smoke, and from the smoke clouds of so many city and forest fires then raging.

The vast effects of the titanic explosions could have been illustrated in this das fashion;

It destroyed six good sized cities and ten villiages in the same fashion as J Mt Pelee destroyed the cities on her island in the year of 1902.May 8Th.

Vivian wickey is as far away fro, the scene of the explosion as New York is from Richmond Virginia.The column of smoke clouds and flashes and rising debris were seen in vivian wickey, the smoke for a long whi ewhile and a full day and also the clouds of debris thrown up by the explosion.

The sound of the explosions were plainly heard in Gertrude Angeline City and many other towns and villiages and even at Angoline junction that were as far away from the explosion as New York is from Houstan Texas Texas.The gun powder fumes tarn ished brass in all towns and cities throughout the whole nation, even as far as Mandellinia city in the rebel state of Mic-Hollestinia, 10,000 miles away from the explosions.All linin in every city and town throughout the nation which had been hung out to dry was so eaten by the acid n in the strange powder fumes as to either turn black, or fall to pieces.The noise of the explosions caused such terrific concussions that one hundred cities and twice as many small towns and villiages were razed to the ground, a thousand were damaged, and all cities and towns in the whole nation, every Abbisannian state, reported allwindows broken, trees shaken to pieces, corckery in w pantries broken, street cars thrown off the tracks and millions of different and most astonishing freaks.

Debris falling from the skt after the explosions accumulated more than a foot deep in hundreds of cities and towns as far away from the explls explosions as Philadelphia is from New York city and places as far as that from the explosions remained in three hours of intense darkness even so impenetrable that a lentren held at arms length would not have been visible.Towns also that distant were shattered shattered by the concussion and air waves.

The explosions had such terrific force that had it occured in the city of vivian ickey or Calverine, it would have destroyed all the buildings and completely depopulated either one of the,.So great were the forces of the explosions that at a distance of thirty or fourty miles from it the earth from the shock u opened into vast yawn yawning chasmns which filled with water from the resulting floods which had destroyed everything in its path.

The pile of debris hurled by the explosion would have reached the top of the highest foothills.On the time of the explosions the debris hurledup began to fall all over Western Calverinia and northern Angelinia State.The city of Angelinia Agathia, Dorothy Gale, and Betsy Bobbin and Jessida and also Evangeline Explains and Lucillie Dickson and Glorianna were also sufferers though more than two hundred miles from the explosions and thecause was notknown untill it was ascertained that great explosions had occured.

All the Socities and news paper concerns in the nations of the whole world with the most remarkable interprize sent representives and news paper men tothe devastated regions on the first news of the terrible explosions.An q area around the e plosions half again bigger than the State of Texas and Mississippi together was covered with debris of all descriptions which was enough to destroy all but the hardest plants.

At the time the explosions occured two big towns were blown off the ground, and where the debris of these towns went was a mystery to the scientests.

It may be supposed to be scattered all ove r the country.The resulting floods mentioned in the preceding chapters had onemillion times the dess destructive force and power of the Johnstown damburst.

It was reported that on account of the concussion of the explosion terrific explos- ion especially inone part of the Mic-Hollester and Pandora river valley a vast section of a long and high hill rolled completely into the valley and was said to have completely damed up a portion of the wide Mic-Hollester Run va river about four and a half miles above Lake Delilia.All sections of Calverinia as said before were parts representingthe nations most beautiful grounds had been harrassed by the concuss on of the explosion and panic resulted for hours in every city in the nation entirely.Near the mountianous regions of the city of Calverine thirty or three or more great landslides of most devastating effects to villiage town and river occured and also were reported to have hemmed in scores of long passenger trains of every single line loaded with people or with soldiers. One trains were reported to have been buried.Even in the far distant city of Calverine pavem ments and buildings were cracked in every street and scores of hundredsof buildings were reported to have been reduced into junk heaps, and all kinds of railroad lines entering the city hundreds in number completely or crippled and all the Resort ofMt St john therd there was reported to have been a landslide that buried a town.

According to the rec reports given out the great fast Aronburg Limited train of the Abbisannia-Bondonia and Calverine railroad bew between Pandora city and Calverine was said to be either stalled or hemmed in by some great landslide or avalanche in the vinicity of Aronburgs Run junction and many other trains of other railroad lines were also reported hemmed in or wrecked by slides and falling objects.

tunnels at many mountian valleys and other railroad lines had collasped and all traffic over the railroad lin s were blocked.Many special trains were racing thruly to the rescue but it is reported that nothing can reach the devastated region.

The sudden and secondary convulsions of the air and ground caused by the tremendous explosion shook it is said many long lines of coal and other cars from their sidings and perch and others on an overhead docks and they allran wild down the steep inclines piling up at the bottom and bottling up the exit to other main li lines and other places there, making it impossible to bring engines u out of roundhouses for either emergency or regular use.The villiage of Flanders near Jennie Turner shaken four seconds suffered slightly however.

In spite of the long delays caused to hundreds of trains and thw the wide a area covered by the wreckage hurled by the explosions or caused by hundreds of landslides thousands of war correspondents, sight seers and news paper repprters and even tourists in a d and near the scene of the explosion were reported to have escaped and were doing their best to make pictures and write reports and s stories on the distaster.No severe material damage had been comitted at Evangeline St Claire xi city though the populace of that place rushed from all their buildings and also their homes at the momentof the violent shocks.Many of the bigger buildings groaned and swayed and cracked frightening their occupants out of them.One big hotel which apparently bore the brunt of the explosion shock in that city collasped, a number of big churches were damaged badly, and patients f of the wrecked St Francis Hospitalwere dragged from their beds and from the ruins and taken to a place of safty.None of them had a fatality but many of them had been injured nevertheless.Bridges over every streams and river in the whole region throughout all parts of that section of Calverinia and thouse of the Mic-Hollester Aronburgs Run and Erminie River hadcbeen hurled off their bases or sprung out of line by the concussion.The town of Million Run a town of over two thousand people was reported to have been wipedout by the descendingmatsi materials hurled so high up by the explosion, and a score of other towns being on fire were in danger of total destruction.The second Aronburg Limited known as the Evangeline St Clare fast train and the Calverine and Pandora fast train number 23456, were also hemmed in by an ernormous landsi landslide of huge rocks and debris of every description near the villiage of Torn according to the reports of the war corres pondents and special trains which had been made up at many cities and sent to the scene were reported unable to approach at any quarter because o great floods of awful and unusual proportions were raging probably the results of the explosion.

All of the stalled trains however as the reports wired to Ang linia Agathia were safe, the trains only being hemmed in on all sides by the huge tons of rocks and debris from the landslides which occured as a result of the terrific concussion of the explosions.

These terrific slides which trapped the many trains of so many different lines were said to be across six large streams branches of the great Norma Run River and which forms the source of the huge Mic-Hollester Run River.

Thousands of substations and other places along all p railroad l n lines in that location from Pandora city to Anna Aronburg city a distance of nearly two thousand miles were damaged by the concussion.Mostof this damage was reported to be on the Mic-Hollester and Pandora railroad lines along the banks of the great Erminie Run River.At this location the tremor of the explosions was divided as the reports reporters declared into two distinct shocks the first and most violent last ing more than three seconds, while the second one lasted a second.Before the shocks even ceased people from every town and villiage throughout the nation rushed into the streets.Numerous chimneys in every cityand town were tr toppled into the streets, all clocks of every kind stopped, and damage was done to all house hold articles in the list.Terrific damage was reported to every mine in the region of the shocks most violent section where countless thousands of working men were said to be trapped u ndergro n underground.The shocks caused all buildings in the big city of Vivian wickey to tremble most violently and threateningly l light fixtures in every building swi swinging very badly and outside telephone and other wires were snapped from their fastenings from the air concussions.Merchandise were shaken from the shelves of stores at Angelinia Agathia and here people also had been as said before hurrying into the streets.The tremor caused many windows to shake and tremble and rattle, and hanging lights in all buildings to either sway v o violently or come down.

It was feared that the coal and other mines near the fortified city of Angelinia Agathia had been damaged but investigation soon foundvthis to be unfounded.

The sho shocks created a panic among the mobolization camps at Dorothy Gale city and one of the officers said that the high tower of one of the long fortifications swayed with an arch like movement but did not collasped as it had been feared.Many windowswere blown out there by the air waves..A landslide from a high hill also near Angelinia Agathia fellacross a portion of the Evangeline St Clare river and here a line of passenger coaches were shaken from the siding in the citys railway station and ran wild down a steep incline before they were stopped by a blockade o f of coal cars that were switched into their path.They were not damaged however.....

Angelinia Agathia and Dorothy Gale and other places in that location as written in preceeding chapters was said to have experienced ten distr distinct shocks and many other cities reported less numbers of shocks.All reported differentThe bridges of the cities of Angelinia Agathia and Dorothy Gale over the Evangeline St Clare river were sprung out of their places and were dangerous to street car and other traffic.....Chamberlane and Rosa were shaken fourteen times and all the people panic stricken rushed into the streets.But no buildings were hemmed.There were three greater s shocks near the town of Topsy and when the excitement died down after the shocks the ci citys first thought was of the thousands of men working far below in one of the most gigantic mines in the world but the slips and other workings of these mines continued to go up and down with regulairty and no damage under ground was reported.

Slight concussion shocks were said to have been felt at about eight oclock the night of the day after the terrific disaster had occured, especially at the Calverinian towns of Galinia Belling, Santa Cruze and many others about fifty nine miles southwest of the city of Angelinia Agathia and two hundred and fifty to three hundredmiles north of the scene of the tremendous explosion.....

In the districts most disasterlously shakeg by the explosion there were many people in there from Angelinia Agathia, Dorothy Gale city and elsewhere but these were reported safe no o e one of these being injured.

Yet as it had been said some parts of Angelinia Agathia itself had been was in ruins as the results of the strange ten succession of explosion shocks lasting intermittently for nearly ten seconds so early that morning, when all the people of the city had been surprised and wondered where it came from and what the cause had been. Strange to say many smaller cities over wherethroughout the nation were reporting slight tremors of short duration which were declared more pronounced than the big one which had devasted so many cities throughout the nation and laid waste a good part of the city of Angelinia Agathia.

Near Dorothy Gale city there were some explosions of pretty great violence late in the evening one at five thirty oclock, and the other at ten fifteen which caused little damage butinterferred greatly indeed with the work of relief and rebuilding of wrecked fortifications and increased the panic among those who had fled from their homes early in the morni morni g mor morning.

The number of those killed in the city of Angelinia Agathia by the terrific concussionwas not estimated and this may be due largely th that the most severe shock of the explosions occured so early that morning, when the districts outside the main limits of the towns suffered the hardest.Other surburbian regions of Dorothy Gale city and elsewhere though shaken quite heavily escaped serious loss of life but not property damage.

It Ange Angelinia Agathia itself the property damage was estimated atnearly eightymillion dollars, and Dorothy Gale as fourty million dollars.

The big water reservoirs the main source of fresh water supply for the city of Evangeline St Clare had collasped before the h shocks of the explosions and its their released torrents o of water swept away bridges, some large towns, buildings of country homes, all trees in its path and large acres of soil down into the bigger rivers.The water also leaped over the main bridge a concrete structure and even forced it out of its place but this bridge however was said to be holding and was saving the city itself from being flooded by the torrent though it did not save the city u just then from being cut off from the outside world.

The walls of St Johns Dam miles above Evangeline St Clare held however and by connecting a series of old main water pipes it was believed fresh water could be brought to the city thus preventing a water famine.Although the residential section of the city of Evangeline St Clare escaped the worse of the explosion disaster one million of the inhabatants of the city were sleeping in tents the following night.Most of these were and are not at all homeless but they refused to enter or reenter their homes thinking it a natural earthquake and that it would continue.All cots and tents rushed by the first re lief trains from Pandora were put up in all parts of the cities of Angelinia Agathia, and Dorothy Gale, especially wherever there were available places for them.But the authorities of the cities of Angelinia Agathia and Dorothy Gale declared that they did not need any help from the outside, and would themselves rush help as soon as possible to the regions so terribly devastated.Therewas no need also of any martial laws in these cities though semi mat martial law was forced however as a protecting a protection against valdal vandal spies that may enter the city in the night and therefore soldiers and sailors and police with bayonets and deputy sheriffs lent by all surrounding counties ept every stranger out of the quake shaken area of Angelinia Agathia and Dorothy Galeat all hours unless they could show important governmental passes.Citizens in Angelinia Agathia whose homes had stored in were now being fed at red cross food stations, which got their full supplies from larders of luckier citizens of the city and donations from stores and other places.Bread ran out in in the evening but the open highways south of Angelinia agathi Agathia assured more supplies in no time.

There had been many remarkable rescues and super experiences. In the debris of one dwelling house on state Street Angelinia Agathia, the rescue crews digging frantically since about seven in the morning found women and children who were still breathing but badly injured. they were rushed to the nearest hospitals. The citizens of Angelinia Agathia and her sister city had proved to have only one general keynote and that was optimism. The two cities already had started to lift themselves out of despondency late even in the morning and all citizens contributed a heavy relief fund which reached ten million dollars inside of three hours and three quarters. All the representives of the Dorothy Gale and Angelinia Agathia banks added nearly twenty million to this to be a loan administered for the upbuilding of the wrecked parts of the two monsterous cities. The city coul council also met as quickly as possible and set up great funds, its only limit the needs of the homeless citizens.

Emperor „ivian himself went up that evening to inspect the ruins of Angelinia Agathia.

Coming up from the north tward the zone of disaster the first signs of any damage were noted at Ventura Street on the main highway into the city itself. Wreckage of big buildings were scattered all over. Most of the people of this districts were in the streets but they did not look dejected and most of them were even even almost laughing or talking together. Proceeding southward from Ventur a street about seven p PTP.M. the sky seemed to be strangely obscured. Over the last line of foot hills visible in the distance the sky was overcast with a strange dun colored cloud or murky haze. Through thischace the setting sun still produced a p temperature in the ni ninty eights one of the hotr hottest days in the city for so early n the year. Entering the main section of the city by way of Carrillio Avenue his carriage was halted among some three thousand persons near the main city bridge over the Evangeline St Clare River. for many blocks here there was complete evidence that this part of the city had been flooded by some mysterious cause. The aspult surface had been completely washed off the streets in many places, and in other streets it had been buried in a foot of silt. Many big trees were thrown down by the concussion and left lying on the streets. The rescue crews were getting the streets cleared and found this bridge safe, and for several hours it was Angelinia Agathias only link with the outside world. He followed the course of the street southward into the center of the town seeing every place and front yard and every street corner and good parts of the debris littered sidewalks with its lage large groups of people with the belongings they had taken out of their houses to save. The collection ranged from oil stoves to every thing of description. A mile from the southern surburbs which was the heart of the damage zone of Angelinia Agathia the many collasped houses began to be observed by the Emperor. Nearly all of these were of brick and some cement and concrete construction, stucco houses were crashed but standing and had only the southern windows out.

It was also noticed by the E pe Emep Emperorthat all the brick chimneys and big factory smoke stacks which crashed through the roofs or fell down to the ground fell northward only not fell south west or east. The carriage proceeded slowly through many streets which strangely buckled pavements, with big geysers and large bubbling springs from broken water mains every few yards. The center of the town was covered with a sea of tents the tents being lightless as the main powerhouse of the city was one of the buildings demolished, and even lamps were very scarce.

Yet efforts were being made with the approach of darkness to arrange for some source of illumination for these tents.

The section of the city fac ng the river which early that fatal morning staggered under the blows og of the rending explosion concussions was now with the approaching of night surveying its greatest losses and began fighting back. No community of any city ever took and absorbed punishment inflict by a far away enemy made explosion with more stoicism and calm. Purple jackets and soldiers of all kinds patroled the heart of the districts in ruins but never was there the least sign of looting or disorder. There was no frenzy anywhere, no rushing about to mark the fury caused by the disaster. The number of dead which were not estimated as yet were or had been collected and pickedup as quickly aspossible, upwards of hundreds of bodies. close to ten thousand injured were being cared for, and even as the long trains of ambulances moved off to various hospitals there followed in their wakes trucks and wagons loaded with battered bricks and twisted steel and other wreckage. The work of cleaning up had already begun. City manager Francis and the chief of police utilized naval reserves, the National guard of the Mobolization camp and war veterans and even citizens and police together with reserve troops and f officers to police the ruined parts of the city.

General Ben Hanner liaison regular army officer of porothy Gale City reported to the Manager of Angelinia Agathia on orders of army headquarters to extend any aid desired from the regular army forces from the main moboli ation camps.

ure effective patrol of the disaster area of the explosion was arranged by limiting all strangers and visitors to those hab having an official night or ss issued by the chief of police only. The main streets of the city in the mediated area was a picru picture of calm but sad ruin for fourteen districts. Not all of the best buildings were demolished but all had suffered damage, and many al been twisted and even smashed far beyond repair. The large imposing facade of the Allenton ivian bank on the outer limits of the city appeared from the ustrass front as beautiful in its simplicity as ever, but in the rear down the ehole side all rooms and banking places were exploded the wall having come down ither end as straight as if cut with a ki knife, while at one end of the structure the west a jagged crack ran down like a lightning streak through the solid concrete.

The San Marcos Bank a four story banj bank of the most solid construction occupied principally by the National banks concern seemed fromvits northern and western and eastern ends to be unharmed. But its southern part lay flat. The santa Barbara Orphan Asylum which fell before a tornado twenty y3 years before was partly wrecked by the concussion of the distant explosion. Its front wings were masses of crumpled debris and one of its towers was leaning over. The ig Angelinia Agathia telegraph and railroad station of the Mic-Hollester and ndora lines had all four walls still standing but its roof was parcially s stroyed.

o strange distinct sounds not loud but continuous could be heard when ever one ld walk through the area of destruction, the tumbling of bricks and mortar as workers remove dangerous walls, and the hammer of many builders rushing up temporary structures or repairing the half damaged ones. Throughout the main residential districts particularly in the west and north side the many small frame houses d brick houses in all cases of knocked askew, some with their fronts fallen out the chimneys and gables gone, and yards flooded by broken water mains and strange to see yet children playing in the water, splashing and s dancing in its midst.

Some of the richest homes in the city were damagedato re extent. One great freak of the explosion shock done only in a seconds time es this;;For all the distance as could be reached by the full force of the air ves and earth concussions and up and down the coast, and along every railroad ght of way, and in every city and town, and along country roadways, telephone d telegraph wires had been whipped back and forth with such violence on their oles that they became so badly tangled that it would would take many days work to et them into comaiusion againIn line with a suggestion made earlier in the day y Count De Biff all concerns in the city adopted a plan to raise twenty two illion fivehundred thusand dollars revolving funds for the reconstruction of the lled buildings and onehundredmillion dollars for the relief of those outside e city far away in the main stricken districts where the loss of life had been rightful. At the same time or the same meeting attended by the leading citizens f Angelinia Agathia a ten million two hundred thusand dollar emergency relief nd for the ruined districts of far away Big girl Knool was suscribed. The mayor f Angelinia Agathia and many others were the heaviest subscribers. At the mer meeting hich was held near the ruins it was announced that the program of reconstruction ould be under way the following day. And despite her own mishap relief trains rrying l many car loads of police officers and macical and other supplies rived late in the evening at Big girl Knool from Angelinia Agathia and Dorothy le city. Medical officers and doctors also came with them but remained when it s seen that their services were not required. All the red cross workers manned d relief stations which were opened at all points in the devastated areas most heavi ly damaged by the concussion.

In every town and city and village heavily shaken by the explosion ires were everywhere on the job fighting many big and small fires but thankful ms poured forth from many thousands andhundreds of thousands of hearts at ng not that the conflargrations were unf under control and could not spread.

An oppressive pall of a strange golden haze hung over the whole sky m dawn to sunset, typical of exploded gunpower and other materials of the terrific ast no doubt said many who had gone through other great explosionsof the war so rNot a breadth of wind was passing over the city and the day had been unusually illry for that time of the year.

In the El Patio street many spanish like made structures of most historic sites and which figured prominently in the colerful days when Abbieannia first became christian nation were the only ones to remain near intact. Theri their tile roofs re piled in shattered bits in the p patios which were the scenes of so many ngelinian festivals and celebrations of old times. One building which had been the ld the palace of the first ruler to reside in Angelinia Agathia lay in dusty ilar. The beautiful green shutters were broken and twisted in the heap of gray nd white clay once the social gatherings place of Angelinia Agathias gay belles nd caballeroes. Another r uin was the old Santa M aria Orphanage a relic of the days f Angelinias first christianization.

The night shades of the warm and sultry evening was now approaching, and persons coming into the stricken regions f from the outside saw most of the homeless citizens of that section of the ruin strewn city of Angelinia Agathia making rea y ready for the night on the outside.Old men women and even children in all parts of the whole city itself were observed to be carrying out household goods, bedding, and couches and other adicles and even bedsteads, and preparing for slumber if it was possible in the peculiar warmpth outdoors.....

Most of the children as it could be seen from their actions and laughing ways and even by playing with one another regarded this as nothing but a lark, and it was even seen that thevery elders smiled and laughed and talked together.The men however during the day had not been idle and most eletric trolliers had been switched on and revealed in a ghastly yellow light the fearsome ruins of the buildings..

It was said that Baron Anfeles c was injured in a fall of five stories when his building was destroyed by the force of the explosions concussion and his son n and two daughters were said to have been killed.The Baron with his wife and son and daughters were at the palace with Count Sanders.Their great room was suddenly crashed t four to five stories to the palace gardens.The Baron was plunde plunged down with the avalanch of wreckage, while o thers in the same room managed to save themselves by suddenly stepping backvtward the wall.

His son and two daughters were in an adjoining room which also plungedowith the debris burying their bodies with that of his wife and many others the barons injuries consisting ofv of five broken ribs, a fractured le g, broken collar bone, injured eye, the loss of all his front teeth, and cuts and bruses and a broken nose.

Among the many who escaped without injury were many nobles and friends of the Barom Baron.Franklin anders the butler of the Baron told pf the death of the Barons wife son and two daughters.They he said occupied the room above that of the Baron.In another rouj rirectly over them was the Barons brother.Above these rooms in a large cupola surmounting the center block of the structure towered a tank containing onehundred thousand gallons of water.At the very first shock of the distant explosion the tank crashed downwatd downward carrying with it all the portions of the floors even those in which were located the Baron and his relatives.

The butler made his way from the [illegible] as far as he could but there a pile of wreckage [illegible] building as dashed frantically to the roof.Then he came back and helped thr survivors over thepiles of k jagged bricks and broken timbers.

It was indeed a most glorious day for a large number of glandelinian prisoners held in the prisons of the Angelinia Agathia city.The rear and front walls of three army prisons strong almost as fortresses crumbled at the first blast and many of the glandelinian prisoners fled to freedom.

"I have been through onehundred and fifty three natural earthquakes but never one like this that was caused by an explis explosion."said Emperor vivian."It just took my own palace the strongest and most beautiful building in the nation and which I consider nearly as strong as one of the Mic-Whirthian fortresses and shook it back and forth as if it were a big ship on a rough stormy sea."

Duke Alto also in Emperor vivians palace told his own thrilling story as esp3 especially of his own experience.At the first roar of the explosions and the first air and earth concussion he went to the first floor where a sick general of the Dorothy Gale mobolization camps was confined.Lifting the sick officer to his back the duke proceeded to the stair way, when with the ninth schock he fell through a hole in the floor below with the sick man on his back.Neither were injured but were in danger of being entombed before rescued.

Emperor vivian himself h gave an eye witness of his own of the explosion concussions.

"It was very early in the morning probably not even six oclock six o clock the being sultry rainy and everything exceedingly quist.Later I noticed as the sun came out that far in the distance to the southwest that quite a large cloud most peculiar in form and color rose high up and spread out on top like a huge musroom.Two others followed.There was far in that direction a crunching sound that put me in mind ofa million Blengiglomenean Creatures rouring their signal cr es cries.At the time of these sounds it appeared as if the ground was trying to rise up, the windows blewout as if with a windstorm and the building swayed like a storm tossed ship at sea.Terrified I quickly leapedout of bed and the floor seemed to suddenly rise up and hit me.I stepped again and it seemed as if it was impossible for me to even reach the door.I then dashed for the open air and began to bang on the doors of neighboring houses to rouse the many occupants and get them out into the open before something happened.Then I heard great noises in the distancelike a salvoes of explosions and in the distance I saw the walls of big houses fall and collapse, and then from somewhere a ong the horizon a series of bright blue flames such as they use at fourt of July Celebrations at Americus lightbup the heavens and then flash out while the clouds increased and spread out along the whole sky dense and solid as that of an approaching storm.Night behold

as similtaneously I heard a sound of terrible rending and crashing and a noise like many explosions and crashing shots.Two blocks away I saw the walls of some big houses and a countachome lean over gradually and then i with another shock collapse leaving the occupants lying in bed, some covered, and some uncovered.

Then at the most terrific boom in the distance the ground seemed for two seconds or more to roll like a cano or shi ship hit by a big wave.Yet there was no excitement.Then cr came crash after crash from more houses.Then all was over though a peculiar dust haze obscured th the distant parts of the city and the distant cloud spread far over the sky.We built a big bonfire and cooked coffee and ate our breakfast outside.The damage as I witnessed down on the main streets was great..Ten miles on all sides was practically destroyed the buildings mostly on the outskirts of the city facing south and we st.But I believe we can rebuil rebuild it within a month or more.We will in invistigate the cause of these scenes and find out whether it was from some distant volcano in sudden violent eruption or whether some great explosion occured."""""

One of the most narrowest escapes recorded was that of a little girl of ten years of age who had rose early in the morning to b get some break fast for her parents and sisters.As she was returning on her way home she heard the first boom and felt the first shock.A moment later a large fissure opened up in the walls of some big building opposite her through which a most astrong stream of water from some broken pipe or main issued and struck the child in the chest with such force that it threw her almost clear across the street and hurled her over and through a lot just as a five story wall crashed to the street where she had been just passing through a moment before.

On the following evening after the terrific shocks had occured it was said that in the cities of Angelinia Agathia and porothy Gale combined,, nearly sixty five thousand bodies had been recovered from the wreckage of the two stricken cities.... The disaster indeed it it best to say climaxed a series of most terrific explosions and explosion concussions which could ever have shaken any place in the past, and probably in realty never such a disaster will ever o occur or will or could ever come to pass.

It was believed that the full force of the shocks which had greater effects than the worst earthquake in the world centered near the region of Aronburgs run and elsewhere in that direction but in cities and towns as far away as Calverine and Angelinia Agathia and others it only was felt with force enough to only result in partial destruction of those places and smaller loss in life though of course course the damage and loss of life was severe enough.A report recieved from another place to Angelinia Agathia stated that twenty seven hundred persons had been killed by the explosion quakes which leveled buildings in the town of Santa Anna broke all the water mains,, and started great fires which according to news paper reporters and the like,, was also raging in one section of the city of big girl Knoole.

Santa Anna Town known as one of the best playgrounds in the country or state of Calverinia and mostly for the wealthy was said to be the seat of the homes of many wealthies families but nevertheless righteous persons.The surburb of Angelinia Agathia was also known to be the home of righteous millionares who were doing their own level best to support the cause of their war stricken country.

Yet no worl word had been recieved at this time as to the amount of damage wrought in this section of the city.Assistance to the stricken parts of Angelinia Agathia was rushed by all parts of the city itself not affected by the disasters.

CHAPTER SEVENTY FOUR

MORE AGGOUN ACCOUNTS OF THE RESULTS OF THE GREAT EXPLOS ONS WHICH SHH SHOOK THE WHOLE NATION OF CALVERINIA AND HER STATE, ALSO HOW IT CAME TO BE THAT ANGELINIA AGATHIA WAS ROCKED BY THE CONCUSSIONS. FINAL CHECK OF THE NUMBER OF DEAD SHOWS THAT ELEVEN TO TWELVE THOUSAND WERE KILLED IN ANGELINIA AGATHIA ALONE.

TUGS and many other boats from Angelinia Agathiacarried to the city of Angelinia Agathia down the Evangeline St Clare R ver all kinds of relief supplies which should have been sent to the regions more stricken as Angelinia Agathia was able to take care of herself.The main red cross at Angelinia Agathia had arrangge a, already to send doctors and other persons tothe region of Aronburgs un by the fastest fastest trains.

These trains were already rushing to the scene, and in the location of the city of Jessica itself hundreds of thousands of wagons and automobiles we were clogging all kinds of roadways both north and south, and also east and west in an effort to reach the quake regions with supplies and provisions.

In every town and city t o throughout the nation and also outside the places water dams, oil tanks and water mains were all reported to have collapsed and that in many places great floods were raging.The great Mic-Hollester and Pandora Railroad lines was unble to indicate just how much damage had been done to all parts of their lines.The round houses of this line in every city and town were reported to have collasped, and many lines of their tracks had been said to have been put out of conn xonf comsission both norg north and south of C l Calverins and other places.Many through trains were reouted around the scenes of the explosions concussions,cespecially going by the Mic-Hollester Run River Valley but all kinds of feeder trains and locals were traveling slowly eath way to reestablish rail traffic as close as possible to all points necessary.

At the town of Dannon fourty seven hundred persons were killed onbaccount of the violent earth concussions that as said before partly destroyed the city of Angelinia Agathia.All the principal buildings were said to have been completely demolished throughout the city. One important buioding said to be a twenty story hotel was reported in ruins as well as another one on the principal street.The St Anns school loaded with children at the time was said to be a mass of wreckage also.A big church also was apile of debris.Another hotel whose name was not mention was reuled into fragments by the force of the shocks.The shockshere were felt before six thirty in the morning and all of them were said to be mostvterrific.Hundreds of relief trains were rushing to every place in thenation said to be demolished with doctors, nurses, medicines foods and other provisions.Rum ors reached the city of Angelinia Agathia over telegraph wires said that from severy five hundred to nearly ten thousand were dead at Santa Canna and there was no estimate of the nu ber number of the wounded.Also it was reported that the roof of the Sendon Railroads roundhouse at Angelinia Agathia had fallen in and that nearly fourty persons in the building werekilled and all the engines demolished.

The chief railroad station at Dorothy Gale city was totally wrecked and other damage done on the railroad line allthe way up to Pandora city.The railroad tracks at Napels Run were badly twisted and big oil tanks at Ander were wrecked and floods of oil became a perfect sea over the land andcatching fire made the most specular fire scene in the world.Even all railroad north of Pandora city were either disabled or blocked by many landslides.Thousands of photographers police officers and t railroad officials were rushed from Dorothy Gale city to Pandora by railroad and automobiles.Yet peculiar to say every stricken was preparing as much as possible within their means to aid each other and all doctors and red cross nurses that could be gotten together after the first news of the awful tragedy reached Pandora from Angelinia Agathia on rushed special trains and hurried but found no signs of this city being wrecked thou h many windows had been shaken out.The board of supervisors ofv Angelinia Agathia County assed a resolution offering Angelinia Agathia all the need needed to send to the main stricken regions terribly shaken by the explosions.And yet there came a special message to Emperor vivian at Angelinia Agathia stating that every wrecked city and town was preparing to go the limit to aid each other.Millions of men were being sent out at every possibleplace to reestablish communication and all trains scheduled to leave Angelinia Agathia for the northwest were reouted over the main Mic-Hollester Run Valley route.One passenger train loaded with soldiers was sent over the vallet routeto proceed f as far north as the track conditions would permit and then if ness if necessary to return to Angelinia Agathia.All telephone companies in the whole of the nation even Abbieannia announced their lines were alldo down.

The Telegraph lines near Angelinia Agathia however were not much out of commission and the Internation Newsx service corresponde correspondents in Angelinia Agathia had talked over the telephone to Dorothy Gale about thirty five miles or more south of Angelinia Agathia.This inc indicated that the tremors felt in southwest ern Calverinia that morning centered near Aronburgs run and the most severe damage if any was confined to that spot.It was said that ten hospitals in the city of Angelinia Agathia were wrecked and that many of the patients were killed or injured.The news paper men reported also that most of the country we was asleep when the first shocks of the explosions came shortly after six oclock.He They reported that there were series of most violent shocks andvthat all the people were terrified into the streets many fleeing even in their night clothes or with nothing on at all.Yet the main damage had been seen on the outskirts of Angelinia Agathia..Yet only four houses hadlarned and this despite the fact that most of all the water mains had been broken.In every building however every chimney was cracked and dishes broken in the pantries but no serious damage done in the main interior or the north side.

ABBIEANNIA FEELS SHOCKS OF EXPLOSIONS.

It was also stated that the quakes that were caused by the explosions rocked parts of Abbieannia a and Concentinia and that they were felt all over the entire section from north to south and east and west according to the reports from Pandora Abbieannia.In this city buildings were swayed and even forced to shake the animals and some even were cracked.Every one rushed into the str streets and a near wild panic and the most tremendious excitament was aroused as the whole tremor lasted forty minutesaccording r to reports a starting at six oclock and lasting untill twenty five minutes more.

In northern Angelinia there was a blockade of the railroad lines near Gertrude Angeline Ru city on the Mic-Hollester and Pandora Railroad lines as the result of the concussion shocks in that region which was said to have devastated a good portion of that city.According to other reports w which was given more credence than others huge boulders and avalanchesof rocks and other debris and also wreckage and debris of all kinds falling from the sky like rain blocked a score of railroad miles railraod lines, and many hill and mountian tunnels caved in.Also crews were said to be working day and night trying to clear the right of way of every road with steam shovels and other materials but nevertheless that the roads would not be opened untill a week had passed.Thus seven hundred different trains were delayedcand reached their destinatio s some even two days late.No train wreck however was recorded.

It was seen in the big city of Dorothy Gale itself that a ha a larne number of big hotel hotels and other large strudtures had been shorn of their walls o fo of their walls orplaster on all four sides as neatly as if a knife had been used to cut all these walls away away.Some buildings had been wrecked in the same fashion as if a tornado had struck them.Bedrooms and other room in many of the wrecked buildings stood revealed all the furniture untouched presenting much the same appearance like that of the key stone comedies with open sets and the like.All the clocks in every town and city shaken severely stopped at the exact time of the shocks.And one of the remarkable most peculiar and dramatic escapes was that of a nun in a large convent. She happened to hear the Mother Superior calling and went to her room.She had stepped one foot across the threshold when she was mysteriously thrown clear aco across the stroom the hall by the apparent banging or slaming of a door.After getting to her feet she made one more attempt to enter the room and reached there in time to see many persons and some of the sisters and scholars go down with the entire side of the building which buried every one beneath the avalanch of wreckage. This sister who escaped with her life was divided from death only by a scant moment of six inches.She declared to those who questioned her that the sensation to her was like a railroad train rushing fullspeed through the room.Her fa first act was to go down on her knees and thank God.

CHAPTER SEVENTY FIVE.

DESCRIPTION OF THE TOTAL DESTRUCTION CAUSED BY THE EXPLOSIONS. THE EXPLOSIONS ARE SAID TO HAVE KILLED MORE THAN ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND TOWNS N AND CITIES ARE RAZED IN THREE CALVERINIAN STATES IN THE ARONBURGS RUN REGIONS.
FROM ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND? ONE HUNDRED FIFTY, T O ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND, SEVEN HUNDRED FIFTY, ARE SAID TO HAVE DIED FROM THE RESULTS OF THE EXPLOSIONS IN ABOUT TWENTY EIGHT TOWNS AND SEVERAL BIG CITIES.
FIVE MILLION ARE DECLARED HURT .
EVEN THE DEATH TOL' GROWS AS PEOPLE OF THE STRICKEN AREAS COUNT THE BODIES.
CALVERINIA ONLY THE STATE SO HARD HIT..

THE EXPLOSION or series of explosions which had crashed so fiercely like as many terrific volcanic eruptions and shook so many states and the whole of Abbiesannia itself could never have been worse if a million violent tornadoes had torn through that p part of Calverinia at the mouth of the Aronburgs Run.The explosions which were heard for nearly one thousand miles caused considerable damage also in Abbiesannia.In the Region of Aronburgs Run(Angelinia State) a probable total ofv of 3,621,000 persons mostly non-combatants were said to a have been killed or injured according to all the estimates available about a night later and whose reports astounded as well as horrified all the whole nation. All communications with the explosion shaken and torn regions of Aronburgs Run were entirely impossible untill nightvfall after the first shaken parts were reportes, and it was feared that t he horrible lists of victims will steadily grow to a most immense proportions when the rural districts were heard from. The evening of the morning when the shakes were first observed and reported throughout the whole nation estimates began to come in reaching Angelinia Agathia first from all various sources and with ever increasing totals placing the dead at more than one hundred thousand at Aronburgs Run and the injured as far as two million, six hundred and eight y four thousand.The destruction of property in the towns fairly shaken down or blasted into the air by the concussion was too ormomous to compregend, ten big towns near the mouth of the river being almost entirely wiped out.

Such beautiful and populous places as Dickson Junction, J and Lucillie Meldonewere completely razed to the ground as if the worse typhoon in the world had struck them.In the Aronburgs Run town of Annie Sanden only three persons were said to have escaped injury or death out of a full population of over five hundred thousand.The number killed what the estimates c declared was at about eight y thousand.

At Lucillie Weldon where the dead totaled more than twenty thousand, all buildings of any kind, school houses, public buildings, orphan asylums and immense as well as small residences were shaken down or shattered, and all the wreckage crashed down upon all those inside burying them under tons of debris. At Mellonton town the later estimates placed the dead at over ten thousand and the injured at three hundred thousand or more out of a total popuation of little less than five hundred thousand.All the buildings in this town was also razed as if a tornado struck it and in school buildings and others only few children escaped unhurt, while eighty eight hundred bodies as the report said had already been taken out of the ruins.As soon was seen by the reports the disaster was the most terrible of all times.Many times throughout the existance of the nation terrific storms even out of all proportions for even a typhoon had swept along the coast of Calverinia or Abbiesannia, causing damage exceedingly heavy as to say and resulting in terrific loss of life but never on such a scale as this. The Calverinian town of Manindiana suffered almost as much as the others.Princess Jennie Town reported also 10,000 dead and four times as many injured and all the buildings shattered beyond redemption.And the latest tabulation at Gretchen junction placed the dead at seventeen thousand five hundred and se e seventy five, and three hundred thousand hurt.Madgeevans Ville also reported ten thousand five hundred and seventy dead, when communication wires came up late that same night, and probably one hundred thousand or more injured probably fatally.Rosey Town had a loss of five hundred dead, and more than twenty thousand killed.Of course t hese towns were far from the scene of the explosion but yet near enough to suffer very severely from the tremendous concussion.

In some places were the shock or concussion was more sudden and where it was felt the hardest countless numbers of the biggest buildings were hurled from their foundations, and tm grain elevators in Madge Evans ville had been overthrown completely as if the worse earthquake in the world had suddel suddenly occured. As reported the shocks were not half so severe as this in vivian Wickey though it was about half as much furt her, but the concussion laid waste to a number of smaller towns south of there, and many farm buildings.Along the railroad right of way for hundreds of miles near the scene of the explosions telegraph wires, were fairly shaken down q as well as the poles.Many who had the chance to witness the explosion declared they had even observed the smoke from it at a distance of more than a hundred and fifty miles.They saw an immense cone of rolling smoke rise high into the air as if some distant volcano had been in violent eruption, and they ov observed a perfect cloudburst of wreckage and everththing come Incomplete cloud had then split into two sections, and swept northeastward over land and over some other towns creating some slight darkness it was so thick.

Despite the nation being thrown into the fearful throes of the war the relief that came to the stricken districts was almost as quick indeed in its perfect ness as were the terrific explosions in destroying such an immense amount of property, nd so many thousands of lives.Hundreds of relief trains bearing thousands of surgeons doctors, red cross nurses, workers, and immense supplies of medicine and provisions and food were dispatched from Angelinia Agathia, Dorothy Gale, and many other important places as well as many other points in the nation within a few hours after the horrible disaster became known.Emperor Vivian himself as well as his berher ordered all the troops necessary from t he Mobolisation camps at Dorothy Gale and all the medical corps that could be spared to proceeded to the devastated regions as fast as the trains could carry them.

While the news of the true facts of the disaster did not reach the christian allies of besiegers at Vivian Wickey before one oclock the afternoon of that strange day of the shocks it did reach Angelinia Agathia by telegraph and wire less around three oclock, and it was nearly dusk before the whole nation n knew of it.It caused the greatest sensation, as well as the worse angere that fatal night, in the town of Ricksen Junction scores of thousands of rescuers mostly soldiers with the help of lights made from bonfires out of the wreckage as well as other lights were searching desperately for the bodies of the many victims of the distant explosion which caused such devastation during that awful morning.Despite the fact that the work started as soon as soldiers and others could get there it was declared much too early to estimate the exact number of the dead, which for this town many of the rescuers feat feared would probably mount to over two hundred thousands.

All buildings of distant towns that had not been razed by the concussion including public buildings, Homes and churches and the like had been suddenly converted into temporary hospitals, and also morgues.Eight thousand five hundred bodies had been recovered in the work from morning till night fall.And the number of the injured that had been ttaken out numbered as they said about three hundred and sixty five thousand, thousands of them who may die.

From the wrecked towns and citieschundreds of thousands as quickly as possible had been rushed from Aronburgs Run, in automobiles, trains, wagons and the like, and and on special trains to all near by towns and cities not affected by the concussion where they were recieving care as soon as they arived there.Scores of thousands of the injured too badly hurt to be removed were being cared for in the ruined towns by doctors and red cross nurses soon after the disaster. The town of Dickson Junction was a picture of sad terrible ruins.All the strongest buildings were completely demolished or shattered, and all the streets were strewn with windrows of wreckage.Even all kinds of tangled wires, and even splintered trees littered the streets.Even naked walls from which the last of the structures had been hurled down stood out as grim silhouettes.And all of this was thrown into fantascic contortions by the final flames from a hundred fires which were then springing up here and there among the ruins.All the fire departments from all the surrounding towns that had not been so badly damaged were aiding the local departments in their desperate efforts to check these flames which were threatening to destroy all those parts of the beautiful city not hurled to destruction by the awful concussion of the worse explosions ever recorded in the world.Yet as they did succeed in putting down one great blaze another would spring up in another section, and burn worse than the first.And throughout it all the firemen had been constantly called on to leave their work and help in the rescue.And the scene after the concussion was one of the most pathetic suffering that any one could ever conceive.Countless masters of dead and injured were strewn thickly about the streets, and among them panic stricken, and wild or half insane from grief and confusion ran frantic men and women, or loudly screaming and crying children many almost unclothed, seeking their loved ones.

o many people, including women and children even were seen as they sought desperately amo g the ruins for clothing and valuable s lost when the buildings crashed down into such heaps of debris and rubbish. From the near by mobolization camps soldiers by countless thousands streamed into the wrecked town, and rushed to the aid of those in the homes or where they had just been seeking also to do what they could. T hose also who had fortunately escaped o -the terrible wrath of the shock also immediately joined into the rescue work. All soldiers also went on guard to keep order until the Main National guard arived.

In ucillie town and also Meldon the number of dead and killed here in the concussion of the terrible explosions was estimated later in the evening tovrun between one hundred and fifty thousand and four hundred thousand most of thr the victims being children kiled either in school houses or pr orphan asylums and other buildings all caught under the crumbling debris of these structures. Thepopulation of this city was estimated at six hundred thousande

At a very hour that late evening nearly eight thousand eight hundred and eight y eight bodies of children alone were taken from the wreckage of the buildings, and it was said that of the school buildings themselves not one of the pupils escaped. ore than one hundred thousand men women alone were injured severely most of them being taken by the fast trains to Gertrude Angeline ity, and Angoline unction, and othert others to Carbondaler, Calverinia.

No buildings in this towns even including the railroad station were left standing all having been hurled into a mass to total destruction. Rescue work in this town was greatly hindered b at night time by heavy wet snow intermingled with sleety hail and rain and by the absense of light, and by high winds, and by the dim shine of a old fashioned Angelinian lamps and lanthrens used by surviving partents and others who were searching the ruins of the schoolhouses and orphan asylumns for the little ones. At this town the greatest loss of lives were caused in the collaspe of the school buildings and the homes for children. he top stories of every b iolding in which were situated the best of class rooms toppled first at the concussion, and then before any one could save themselves the walls of the lower parts gave way burying beneath them countless nu b mbers of the pupils in the schools. Here and there continually flames burst from among the wreckage also hempering the rescue workers to the most greatest extent.

o fierce was the blasts of the explosions that debris, earth, big stones, planks, and timbers and whole trees, and long pieces of fences torn loose by the explosions were hurled as far as Carbondaler sixty miles distant. Great confusion beyond dewo description followed this most awful catastrophe and lack of organized work was also attributed to the panic caused by the disaster, and the following uproar of the elementle elements.

From the town of Central Calverine the retabulation that night placed the loss of life as a result of the concussion of the horrible explosions in the near by towns as follows;

Ricksen unction, 100,000, Lucillie, 800/ 800,000, Meldon, 140,000, Manindia, 80,000 Princess' Jennie own 5,000, Madge Evansville, 34,000 and Rosy own at 100,000.

Train No. I of a Southbound Aronburg pecial of the Mic-Hollester and Pandora t hat left Angelinia Agathia at nine thirty that night stopped at Meldon town with empty coaches and filled them with thousands of bodies, as it was said by the conductors of the limited. herewas not a single building of any size or of any strength standing in this city. The reports declared. Countless numbers of soldiers qndxalso railroad men and others who came through the stricken areas before night fall said that the wreckage was hurled many milesfrom the path by the very shock of the explosion, a d that it would probable several weeks before an accurate westimate of the real number of dead can be made. Hundreds of doctors , and countless numbers of n nurses, went abroad aboard many special and other Abbiesnnian line Trains that left Angelinia Agathia tward night fall for Gertrude Angeline City and from relief headquarters to r treat the injured of the cities damaged so severwly by the explosions.

eneral Judges who was in Lucillie ity untill eight oclock in the night said he had been close to the scene of the explosion and that he saw what appeared like a volcano eruption worse than any he had ever observed in pictures, and also observed that wreckage of every destruction besides huge stones clouds of earth and everything called for foliage hurled for miles, and that thirty big stojes crashed through one big building, and that the rescues were planning to rip and tear down the walls of this ruined building to get at the killed and injured that may be in the structure.

very big public building, such as churches, Homes and Asylums, and all the hospitals were said to be already be filled with the wounded taken there from Luc il Lucillie ity.

Meldon owns entirel population of over five hundred thousand was at first said to be completely wiped out, only thirty three persons having been reported to have escaped fromvinjury. Not one building has been la left standing. o terrific was the concussion of the great explosions within thevinicity of ickson unction, Lucillie Meldon city and Princess Jennie own, thousands of eye witnesses declared that in many cases bodies of dead soldiers were blownfor about ten miles and a half from the location of the explosion and the towns shaken down to their foundations. he reports also said that Madge Evans ville, ney own and andindiana and scores of other small cities and towns sustained the most severe damage out of proportion for any earthquake of a natural cause to ever inflict. A great row of big Grain elevators in each of these towns was hurled fourty hundred feet from their foundations by the sudden violence of the concussion, and dumped into heaps of crumbling ruins. Other reports said that all schoolhouses and asylums for children in each of these cities and towns had been shaken down, and the buildings had been filled with children and their teachers or attendants. o complete was the devastation that no real or accurate estimate of the full loss of lives however however was y t given.

Las many persons were reported to have been killed or injured in some large towns in orthern Angelinia state near to the boundary line of Calverinia as a result of the concussion of the explosions which shook down many towns in Angelinia.

dores of thousands were also believed to be fatally wounded or injured and countless numbers of persons were missing. he wreckage was so tangled and so terrible that it made a check up of the numbers of dead and tye amount of propo property damage a matter of guessing. Three thousand others were knoc known to have been killed in two Country Schools and Orphan asylums, when the concussion also desolished these buildings.....

)Orders were abruptly given to all christian forces not needed just now to meet any rebel forces to leave at once aboard special trains for the sir city of ucillie unction which accordingly to all the rumors and reports recieved at Angelinia Agathia and other main cities suffered probably the heaviest damage of all on account of the concussions which swept southwestern Calverinia with such devastating effects that early morning all places within that vinicity and the armory near Aronburgs un and also at Ange Annie Aronburg city were being eprovised into general hospitals to care to for the more severely injured from this stricken regions. nd the frequent reports came in continually that the great fires which followed the concussions which shook down Lucillie and Meldon were still beyond control, and that the fire was within one block of the railroad station of the latter city.

General Dellion who was in charge of an Angelinian mobolization camp near the scene of devastatil devastation said that following night;

"City of Princess Jennie own completely destroyed by worse earthquake shock the world will or ever will hear of. oncussion of explosion most terrific. hole town is burning up. It is impossible to estimate the real number of all those killed there, or either thenumbers of the injured. me enemy incendaries caused the explosions by setting fire to immense munition works at town of Orient al. All the people hundreds of thousands in number are completely homeless. all have lost their belonging. Panic is everywhere, and fathers have lost children, and children their parents. Countless thousands believed beneath the ruins. what is needed immediately is the biggest Red Cross united that can ever be mustered, and all doctors and nurses than that can arive, and five million tents for the many stay homeless. We are transporting as many soldiers from the mobil mobolization camps as we can to the scene. The roads are nearly impassable. Forest reported set on fire from explosions."

Late the reports recieved at Dorothy Gale city and also at Ozma own and Jecuis Jessica late that same night placed the loss in killed and wounded at about three hundred thousand killed, and more than three hundred thousand injured in the city alone. One hundred thousand were said to have been killed at Jennie Vivian town, see seventy five thousand further south, and at least that many at Aughburg Landing, and five thousand or more at Norma Catherine itself, and that the whole population of the town of Rosey Ville was completely wipied out this town being fiftr fifteen to sixteen miles sst of Madge Evans ville. Madge Evans ville a city of over four hundred and fifty thousand people was said to have been completely wipied off the map by the shocks. While general Edward Jordon at Dorothy Gale had not yet called on the troops of t the Mobolization camps there the local company of troops of the National guard at Ozma Ozma town on the aurthority of its own commander began patrollingthe stricken regions, and were still assisting in the rescue work and in the attempts to put out the big fires then raging.

Three hundred persons were killed at St. Elizabeth city late that same afternoon when a munition works was blown up by landelinian Vandals according to a meager information rec recieved at Angelinia Agathia that night. The dead were the employes of the place. Two persons also were killed and twenty injured m ny many seriously at the same town but at a different point when a severe explosion followed by fire practically destroyed a powder mill. Richardson Andersonia the foreman was killed also in the same building when it was demolished.

A long „ic-Hollester and Pandora train also left Angelinia Agathia late thev evening of the disaster being heard of, with many doctors aboard bound for the region shaken down by the concussions, and the road furnished them free transportations.It was also announced that other trains were on the way with physcians and medical and food supplies to the sufferers of the explosions, and all the red cross headquarters throughout the whole country also began to mobolize their disaster relief personel for services in the regions razed by the explosions and their concussions, and it waxxsaid that all personel necessary would be dispatched from every place not in the hands of the rebellion troops, and other points as rapidly as possible.

At the town of „ohannapolis twenty six persons were killed, and about one thousand one hundred and fifty injured many of the them fatally when the concussion of the explosion hurled this little city down to the grounds.Every building was either wrecked or damaged beyond rebuilding, many being swept off from their foundations by the strange and sudden violent vibrations and finally burned up by fire that followed.About sixty thousand persons were rendered o homeless with some of the railroad lines in that location trying to obtain all kinds of cars and coaches for the homeless as temporary shelter.Before the sudden cu concussion all the strongest brick buildings crumbled as if they had only been made of dirt and ashes, and the city was completely leveled to the ground.Among the sea of debris one one could have observed the many homeless searching for the belonging of which they hoped to find, esp especially bedding clothing and the like to protect themselves against the chill april weather and storms.A hundred and eighty six bul buildings were burned up completely by fire following the disaw disaster.Several nuns were also reported dead a hundred more also were known to be injured many of them fatally and property damage estimated to run into millions of dollars which was caused by the same concussion that overthrew the town of Norma Dane to the ground. ixty children were seriously hurt, and ten killed, when the concussion overthrew an immense school house.Two other children were reported dead in an orphan asylum in the part of the town where the damage was the heaviest.All the telphone communication as well as telegraph was cut off and reports coming in were only vague however.From Gertrude Angeline city a large detatchment of intern and general physcians and nurses, and large qu quantities of medical supplies and other provisions were sent from this city to Johanna poils on a „ic-Hollester and Evangeline St clare train.Six teen nurses in charge of medical supplies and food sent from Gertrude Angeline city also left on another train late that night.In the town of gaul also twentybhundred persons had been killed about sixteen miles north of Angeline „unction when the concussion also was severe enough to overthrow many houses in that region.There was also considerable damage at Englewood where eighteen were killed and seven hundred others badly injured.One thousand houses were razed and many more damaged.

In the meantime all first aid to the stricken cities was ordered by Emperor „ivian at Abgelinia Agathia at six oclock at night as soon as he heard of thedisaster.„ost of the troops that could be spared from the Mobolization camps at god Dorothy Gale was ordered to mobolize and proceed with all possible speed for the ruined city of Lucillie „unction and „icksen junction.The troops were to be commanded by Count De „iff, who also had been c in charge of the general militia.The „peror of Abbiannia also issued an order to medical detatchments of all regiments t mobolize and await orders to proceed to Lucillie and Meldon and other portions of the area of destruction.The da detatchments in all had about the three hundred and d fifty army doctors.These ordered to mobolize are the medical corps of the One hundred and fourty fourth Infantry, the IIO gaverly and other brigades.Company Lbof the Abbiannian division under general Mere had also been ordered to proceed to the stricken town.

Emperor „ivian himself was at the mai Mobolization camps at Dorothy Gale city on a general tour of inspection of his own, andstill wondering what the strange shocks had been so early that morning when the first news of the horrible disaster reached him.He immediately notified the chief general of the camps, and the troop movements were ordered.It was rumored that the concussion leveled a score of big towns and some big cities to the ground, and that it would be probable that any amount of troops would be ordered to those places in a very short time.

The message that „peror „ivian had received came from Gertrude Angeline city and which as ran as follows;

"Towns near here razed by shoc shocks with terrible loss of life. Many of the towns are burning.Relief is needed at once."

Themessage from „peror Vivian was as follows;

Mobolize the armies there immediately and have the troops proceed to the stricken regions.Wire all conditions there and all your recommendations.We want to lend all poss b possiblehelp possible help as soon as possible."

ord that rapidly reached the city of Angeline „unction was that all wires were down in the vinicity of the stricken cities and towns.In order that the generals in charge of mobolization camps could act immediately the message to them sent by Emperor „ivian was sent by wat way of „annaguston olis, and would be relayed toard „ivian „ickey if possible and from that point to Anna Aronburg city, and thence to Garbondaler.

"Abbiannia stands ready to do all in its power to relieve those who survive the explosion disaster in the concussion zone."Emperor „ivian said after a conference with his „igh Lords and Barons.„hile there is no accurate word of the numbers of lives o lost lost, an many troops as possible are being sent to the stricken territories as quickly as possible.....

Oneof the eye witnesses of the terrible disaster gave an ai eye witness story of the death of prob ably more than a thousand children in the school buildings at Princess Jennie „own and orphan asylums also and of the most awful destruction of t he beautiful town.The story was given by a foriegner himself and which he tried later to publicate to the whole world.Though a foriegner this man we a telegraph operator for the Angelinian army at Ge rtrude Angeline which was only eighty miles from Princess Jennie „own, and on recieving a flashy news of the destruction he quickly got there by railroad he being indeed the only and first outsider to arive, and he found the city a mass of leveled debris without countless thousands of dead and injured either strewn in the streets or among the windrows of wreckage.

"It seemed to me there was not an entire building or structure left standing in the whole town" the telegraph operator said.Immense mobs of people women and children together were hurrying out on t he roads, north south, east and west with only a few belongings clutched in their arms more for protection against the wi snow storm then raging than anything else so far as I could see.

I went directly to the first of the sco schoolhouses reported in ruins after running and walking and climbing over wreckage for about three and a half miles and the first thing I sawthere, and which cut me to the very heart were the bodies of more than fiv fifteen hundred little children laid out on boards, matresses and blankets.here appeared indeed no one there who would cla m them, so I felt sure the people whom I had seen so panic stricken on the roads either were their parents or some kind of relatives but later I found out that the parents of these children of the blasted school had eit her been kiled or injured, and those who were not dead were being hurwied by either train wagons or at auto trucks to Gertrude Angeline city or a „angeline „unction and special ambulances as well as trains also to Carbondaler and Meldon bicknell.The principal of this one beautiful school was killed as I heard as well as three quarters of the teachers, and many of the rescuers who knew the school were working t here trying to identify thechildren.Some of the very rescuers were covered with bloody bandages from their own injuries, and some of them staggered in their walk.They probably had escaped barely with their lives.....

some one t old me that about twenty five hundred bodies of the little children had been taken from the ruins and piled up just outside of the debris strewn playgrounds and in the streets and a search was being made for others in the ruins.„hile I too stood there for ten minutes at least I saw the rescuers take a score of the bodies away, and bring others out of the building when by then appeared to be a mass of smouldering ruins fire having destroyed what the explosion concussions had not leveled to the ground.

The whole schoolbuilding had almost completely caved in and what few rescuers then were on hand were trying desperately to uncover the others of the pupils and locate the large number of the unfortunate teachers who were missing.I then walked out beyond the school grounds and reached near the city limits and saw many more dead people women and children togethe some of the children being only eight months old or six years of age.They were dead and as their baby clothing had been torn from them it appeared to me that „landelinian medals had been at work.

Whatsurprised me most was a strange and astonishing scene.Every tree that was standing outside of the city and every fence had all kinds of garments, bed clothing and every kind of house hold goods hurled against every side of them. This indicated that the force of the explosion may have created a series of air waves that though not felt like wind may have had the force of a tornado or hurricane.I even saw immense amount amounts of furniture, thousands of automobiles and clothing of all description scattered everywhere for miles, and saw thousands of people fleeing from the burning town with hardly any garments on their own bodies.

About half of the city already had been practically destroyed by a fierce conflagration and concussion, and nearlyhhome and residence and every kind of factory no matter how big and tall they may have been were flat on the ground.

I was also surprised to see fourty five big pullman railroad coaches completely piled up in one immense windrow of wreckage and could almost have believed that some terrific cyclone struck the city and not the earthquake shocks of the awful explosions.When I saw another long railroad coach just outside of town that looked like it had been blown from some passenger train and which had been blown from the railroad right of way to the outer limit street of the city and which was also wrecked, but no ground here could I see any bodies.

Hearing I would be drafted into relief service I volunteered what aid I could, and some of the soldiers told me the bodies of the dead were first taken to Gertrude Angeline City in the south but that the host hospitals there were soon filled and that the many injured had been taken to Angeline Junction north of Princess Jennie Town.Aut omobiles, wagons, and carriages and the like were stretched along Princess Jennie Town roads north south, east and west for nearly three miles and a half, a very short time after the disaster had been known.

The fire departments of Gertrude Angeline City and Carbondale and also elsewhere had been sent by special trains to Jennie Princess town but the many firemen were unable to do anything and therefore they also pitched into the herroing rescue work.I could see many of them digging the bodies out of the schoolhouses and orphan asylums nd and also other buildings.

I also met two beautifull pittle girls each about tn years of age on the road on my b way back to the christian lines.Their very faces were be bleeding and their clothing was badly torn up.One of them was talking to the other and said;

"How did you suce succeed in getting out when the building fell"?

The other answered;

"I climbed out ffo from under the wreckage.How did you get out;?"

But the other one said she did not know.They were sadly wandering up the road In that heavy wwet snowstorm and seemed not to know where they were heading for."

Indeed some idea of the tremendous power of the actual explosion itself may be realized when the blast itself hurled thirty fifty ton capacity coal cars and three box cars two miles and a quarter into a town not razed by the concussion.About fourty five hundred bodies mangled and torn were found by the citizens of this town under these very cars presumably due to the whilr wind effect of the strange blas blast.

More than one hundrrd thousand one hundred persons persons have already been known to have been suddenly killed and at least six million injured on account of the tremendous concussions of thegreat explosions which swept with also devestating effects through northern Angelinia State, outhern Calverinia, Southern Abbiesnnia and others.The following day after the fifsts reports of the dead and injured had been known new despatches were adding to the death toll which placed it at le nearly two hundred thousand.The concussion of these explosions was worse than any actual natural earthquake ever felt in any devastated part of the worl countries ever visited by them in the whole world, and the shocks were also theworse ever experienced by the Abbiesnnian country for nearly two centuries and especially from real as well as from explosion shocks, more than twenty eiht cities, and towns being totally devasted by the concussions besides over two hundred others being razed in places.The southern parts of Calverinia and the northern parts of Angelinia A State suffered the heaviest of the destructions In the city of Mildred Greenburg Junctio alone which waw closest to the region of the great explosions more than fifty thousand bodies had been counted within the fourty eight hours time after the disaster, and the death toll at first for this city alone was inaccurately estimated as far as near four hundred thousand.Her Neighbor town known as Lucillie reported a loss of life from three hundred and fifty thousand to four hundred and eighty, and the dead in Angeline Run numbered more than one hundred thousand..Two other cities were literally leveled by the concussion being Gram Graham and Sellen with eighty six thousand known dead in the former city, and one hundred thousand in t he latter.

However a swift wireless message relayed through Angeline Junction City(Angelinia) on the following morning and comi g coming from a chief dispatcher whose name was not given but who belonged as an employer to the Mic-Hollester and Pandora Railroad at Lucillie estimated the dead at that city from five hun l hundred thousand, to one million two hundred and fifty thousand out of a population of three million, and placed the loss to the railroads there as fifty million dollars.....

The dead for the northern part of the Angelinia state(get late) was believed to number two hundred thousand according to reports from Jennie Turner and Madge Evans. Allenville and Lenore reported also from between twenty thousand t to one hundred thouwand killed.At Grec Gretchen Cross roads where at a town by that name six hundred and seb seventy five werekilled more than four hundred bodies vhad been alreax already counted in the streets.....

Any smaller villages and towns shaken down by the concussion virtually were destroyed by the concussion while big fires in many places as well as fierce rains and wet heavy snowstorms and wild gales addded to the horror and havoc and sufferings.So terrific was the force of the explosions near the mouth of the great Anna Aronburgs un river that bodies of slain soldiers and civilians and outer fields of every destructions were reported hurled for scores of miles, while cannons, big guns and wagons, and large heavy auto trucks and railroad coaches and ammunition cars near the scene of the explosion before, were later found there to the outer limits of Gertrude Angeline City more than thirty miles away.

On the second day after the disasterous concussions it was estimated that between eighteen million, and one hundred million were rendered homeless, by the concussions.Here the concussions did the worse of the damage the viberat ions lasted less than three seconds.The shocks and terrific [illegible] the terrible explosions flattened hundreds of thousands of the most heavily constructed buildings with worse results of the strongest natural earthquakes and violent winds, and afs also with worse results than the destruct ions done to the lighter dwellings.Many in school buildings, or in their own residences were the main and special sufferers.Fires were said to be raging in many of the wrecked towns and cities and more or less than hundreds of millions of dollars worth of wreckage delayed parts of the larger death lists.Nearly all the destruction was about fifty miles away from the explosions even.Next to Calverinia state and Angelinia, the vors worst sufferers were in Southern Abbiesnnia and Western Angelinia with also fatal echoes of the concussions coming from southern Abbiesnnia and northern Calverinia .

On the second day also after the catastrphoe the Red Cross, all soldiers that could be spared from mobolization camps, also army aviation forces railroad rescources and the like piled into many of the special trains and all kinds of relief rrom the largest cities of Abbiesnnia, east Sacramento, Gertrude Angeline, Angeline Junction, and the like with an ernormous host of contributions from smaller cities also, concentrated on southern Calverinia and northern Angelinia.The towns heaviest shaken by the concussions were reported to have been completed erat reased from the map by conflargrations, while all others were laid completely into ruins.But only two little homes and a large village in the city of Princess Jennie townwere only remaining.The fourty four dwellings left standing at Lucillie town of one thousand one hundred thousand seven hundred and fifty people were badly damaged and not fir fittfor habitation.Even at the big city of Anna Aronburg itself over one hundred miles away from the explosions one hundred thousand city blocks were practically flattened, and seventy five hundred blocks in the residential section had been swept by flames.

In the stricken districts in southern Calverinia the concussions took its toll in all the hardest shaken places in less than three seconds.....

An Angelinian officer who was at the time directing theplacing of some guards at the Anh Anna Aronburg Mobolization camp saw the flash of the explosions though so far away as it was.He gave this description of it;

"I instantly felt a tremendous shaking of the ground, heard a series of crashes like the loudest thunder ever imagined, and saw terrific flashes far away on the horizon followed by immense black rolling clouds of smoke, geysers of earth wreckage and every kind of material, after which tgere was a blinding flare, an increase of the cloud and a crash as which no mightiness of the sound they word can dpict.I was almost stunnded by the crash, and a terrific shower of debris later fell upon t he whole camp scaring many within who believed it was some sudden volcanic eruption commencing near the Aronburgs Run."

That soldiers in many encampments not fr far from Anna Aronburg town which were devastated by the crash of the distant explosions itself and this catastrp catastrophe were saved because of their occupation was indicated in a report from New Aronburg near the region or near the town of Lucillie.

Right hundred thousand of the soldiers were in the lower qu artersof their barrqc barracks, when the explosions occured.They heard a astounding crash, and felt the awful concussion, and fearing a disaster flocked to the windows. All of the window panes had been shattered out.When they were able to look out they found a terrific explosion had occured for most of the camp was ruined and the ground covered with all kinds of debris which came from which they knew not where.There was t he customary freaks which accompany the shocks, freaks just like those following the passage of cyclones and tornadoes.One of the first most interesting was reported from this same encampment where a rescue worker reported to having found a heavy pitch fork driven by the wooden haldle handle through the brick wall of one of the barracks.

At Anna Aronburg town fifteen big schoolhouses were razed, and it was reported that as it was schooltime and the buildings had been occupied by children, none of them had escaped withoutrecieving injuries, while eight hundred and eighty eight little bodies had been taken from one of the school buildings since the night before. The total ruin path of the concussion was less than two hundred miles in width over southern Calverinia and northern Angelinia but it wasbelieved that divisions of the viberations must have hopped over the underground in several other s other direct ions.

Any one could have started from Anna Aronburg going eastward, and after reaching the town two other to3js towns, Ricksen junction, and Lucillie on the Aronburgs nun side of the river would have gone over into Meldon city, and saw all the devastation there.wi with its various offshoots the concunn concussions apparently with all its devastating effects may have traversed nearly eight hundred miles of both countries, shaking even with some what devastating effects, the better cities known as julio Callio, norothy, Gale, Angelinia Agathia, Calverine and Abbiesannwhere the damage and loss of life was also somewhat heavy.while details of the main desolation left by the terrible concussions came on cri ppled lines of communication, relief even on the second day was still being rushed into the stricken areas from all the near by and far away towns not in the path of foe armies .Scores of thousands of relief workers, countless numbers of doctors, nurses, immense amounts of medicine and supplies were also being dispatched immediately from all big cities and other points in Angelinia itse,f itself.

Stillmore troops and provisions were rushed into the explosion shaken districts on orders of Emperor vivian, who also with the vivian girls the latter who were somewhere near vivian vickey issued an appeal for aid. In all the towns already ruined by the b viberations, especially in northern Angelinia state large but local bridages of milita were mobolized for guard duties, to look out for landelinian vandals, and for giving relief.

It was also announced that b a bill authorising five hundred millis million dollars for relief funds would be introduced in the Abbiesania legislature as soon as possible.Loss of life was reported from one hundred and twenty six towns and cities,, most of them in southern Calverinia and northern Angelinia, but in most cases it was believe that the death and destruction visited many others in the earth shock swept regions of the war stricken nation from which reports had not as yet been recieved.Countless numbers of volunter workers and the like the nightbefore under the handicap of darkness and a fierce snow storm and because of the prostration of all kinds of lighting facilities in all places w orked throughout the night recivering what dead they were able to find, aiding the countless inh injured, and keeping guard over the stricken territories.

In other cities not visited by the disaster school houses, all large churches churches armories and all other available places were pressed into use as morgues and hospitals.And in many insances also it was necessary to move the many dead and injured to all near by towns, and fara buildings, and mobolization camps because of the lack of shelter of any kind.Countless numbers of immense bon fires were formed to provide light and warmpth for the workers and guards while in all instances all the lights of hea automobile headlightets that could be brought into use were taken.According to all available reports the shocks came in all its valence without any w warning wi xwhatever and all the inhabatants of the territories shaken so disasteriously had no time t flee from their wrecked buildings.Stories of the shocks and their errativ behavor came from many points.It was also said that the force of the literal explosions themselves caused air waves of such irrati le energy that entire blocks of buildings of every city and towns were crushed or shattered, mine tipplings throughout the whole country were destroyed by the concussion, the concussion literally uprooted trees by the thousands, and snapped telephone poles and others and and also trees like matches.

he explosion shocks also hurled many buildings hundreds of feet as if a terndo struck them, while many grain elevators were leveled to the gren ground.

At Anna Aronburg where the worse blow may have fell every building was reported hurled down or wrecked, with the loss in that town alone placed at half a hundred million dollars, and great loss of life.small loss of life but immense proper ty damage occured in three southern Abbiesannian state towns, Nero, St Poé Peters and blessed vig Virgin junction all on or near the Erminie river.But it was as said before in southern Calverinia and orthern Angelinia that its most devastating effects were felt.

Most of the cities and towns in southern Calverinia and northern Angelinia which suffered the worse from the concussion we re in propers prosperous regions and heavily guarded by immense armies, and were known for their immense farming mining and other industries, fruit growing sections and also great dairying. All the most modern buildings in all of the cities and towns, many but even recently constructed despite the heavy toll of war, hundreds of upto date mines out in the country, including large ones which ever established a record for a days tonnage were destroyed, ass adding thousands of millions of dollars to an unestimated property damage and great loss of lives among the entombed miners.

Aiken Junction the biggest of the damaged town having a total population of 70,111,000 and which is located about sixty miles north of Gertrude Angeline city in t he heart of i mense national and ir private farming districts and fruit growing con countries were the he was the hardest hit.Lucillie own was the center of not only a coal mining country, but also of great farming industries as well as all kinds of industries ever known on any such list, and likewise not far from Gertrude Angelina city but closer was equally as much affected.It has a population of over eighteen millo million in all.Meldon city was noted for its immense trading point and was located on the Abbiesannia, nondinia and Calverine Railroad.It had a population of eight hundred and eighty six thousand.

Princess Dennis own was a most prominent station stop on the same railroad. many factories, schools, orphan asylums and railroad shi shops, and yards were located there.This city was wiped out.And the cities hardest hit by the concussion were these besides Wedge Evans ville, osy own and Manindiana with the losses in killed and in injured just as observed in first pages of chaper chapter. It least two hundred thousand or more werebelieved to be dead in Northern Angelinia with the prin principal damage to Anna Aronburg and Anba Aronburg junction. Millions were homeless and supplies were looked for as eagerly as possible.

o he total dead in Calverinia stood at slighty more thanthree hundred thousand, whice two hundred and twenty three thousand deaths were locally reported throughout other parts of the shakon nation, most of them in the hundreds of cities and towns somewhat violently as shaken.No loss of life was reported in Abyssinkile, also though some damage was reported in the southern towns.

It was not clear whethe r this was an isolated concussion but there was a possibility that it was the slighrest and most far reaching shock from the explosions at Aronburgs un.

Yet the reports of the most terrific damage in southern Calverinia piled up early the second day after the disaster.All homes and houses in smaller towns near that location were reported also destroyed either by the concussion or flames, and only one building was left standing in osy own.The north end of Gertrude Angeline city itself was later discovered to have been completely demolished, and most of the wreckage wasstill burning.Countless thousands of citizens, and organized fire squads and fire departments used dynomite in an effort to stop the conflargration.

Meldon city itself was literally obliterated with a loss of life of almost its whole population.A score of other small towns including, Vic-Hollester, Eganmia, Hendon, and ubanin suffered severely but not toa totally and were able to render some aid to the more stricken places.

One of the most harrowing and pathectic pathetic reports that shocked as well as angered the nation came from all these wrecked cities, where every orphan home and school house was destroyed with total loss of life.The air waves caused by the explosions dumped off the top story of one school house, and the lower walls crumbled before the concussions buryi burying all the children and every teacher, none of them escaping death or injury.

Countless witnesses to the wors probable worse catastrophe said that in every one of the towns they saw myriads of bodies of the little school child ren or those from homes and orphan asylums being piled on matressess, blankets or on everything available, with even few to claim those of the ruined schools as most of the adult population had been either killed, or had been removed to hospitals in far away townsor mobolization camps and the like.Mestony also was told of many of the injured men survivors of the disasters who though severely injured themselves some probably fatally and with blood streaming from their wounds trying to render aid and comfort to other injuries untill they dropped.In many of the ruined villiages and cities great fires completed the destruction of the school houses and hons for children as well as other buildings making it probable that many thousands of the bldies bodies may never be identified.

School buildings were also destroyed at orthern Gertrude Angeline city but if there has been any the loss of life has not yet been ascertained. own mining towns of m n many scores of thousands of people each suffered heavy loss of life and property with about one third of its population l killed and all the buildings completely demolished.It also saw the destruction of many miles the largest onescin their world.

he main sections of Gertrude Angeline city as well as the city of Angeline junction and Marcucian which escaped damage were the rallying points of immense rescuing forces in the northern part of Angelinia state.All their most important buildings, as well as every home and hospital and armories were filled with countless thousands of injured transported there by swift trains from towns and cities totally wrecked by the concussions.

All kinds of Red Cross Relief was now being handled through the central divisions at Gertrude Angeline city and the headquarters at Angelinia Agathia, and oroty orothy Gale city sent instructions to general vivananna director of disaster relief atAngeline junction city to the earthquake zone.

The first Gertrude Angeline city train left that city at night oclock at the hour the disaster became known with more than three hundred doctors, four hundred and fifty nurses, and a thousand assistants aboard. This special train carried four cars of medical supplies and ten cars of tents and fourteen of provisions. Most of the personnel was assembled through appeals by telegraph.

This great explosion disaster so far may have been the sixteenth such disaster since the great explosion near Jennie Ivian town, which also shook the whole of Calverinia and which caused heavy loss of life and large property damage near the scene of the blast where one hundred and nine thousand persons persished. The Lieghburlg Landing explosion killed sixty seven thousand soldiers, while again one hundred and nine thousand persiehd early in feb in the disastrous explosive artillery storm and battle of Delight's junction one of the first worst disasters of the war. Lurty thousand deaths also were reported to have occured in an explosion shock near Calverine f a few months before.

By thr the early morning of the se con d day one hundred and fifty two thousand bodies had already been recovered, yet from one hundred tovore hundred and fifty six thousand more were believed to a have been killed, while one million two hundred and fifty thousand persons were being brought to all emergency hospitals in all cities and towns of Angelinia state suffering from serious injuries.

Major general Hansonia Johnston of the Abbiesnnian National guard now in possession of Carbondaler town and whose troops have also taken charge of the situation, had closed all roads to the stricken cities to prevent rebel armies from coming to cause more harm. Even the city of Gertrude Angeline was closed to all visitors.

"The known dead at Gertrude Angeline city is about eighty six thousand" said the general. "The final death toll I'm afraid will mount to at least one hundred and fifty thousand as the norty s north section of that beautiful city has been completely leveld to the ground. Property damage will reach hundreds of millions. It is impossible to estimate anything as yet. Parts of the city is still burning near the ruined sections at least. Hospitals in this city is completely filled and also in Angeline junction. In Gertrude Angeline city, the number of injured persons brought there from othe ruined towns are estimated to nearly one million five hundred persons. Private homes are even taken care of the injured."

The city to day even was believd to be burning in many places. The main buisness se ction of the north side of the city was completely wrecked and streets were impassable so filled were they with p les and debris, and wrecked street cars, autos and wagons. The concussion at this point left about eight million persons without shelter-- approximately two thirds of the citys population. The whole city however was left for a time without water and lights, when all the power plants and water works were wrecked. About one hundred and fifty city blocks of Gertrude Angeline were laid waste, two hundred blocks were razed or damaged, and seventy blocks in the resident ial section burned by fire.

Some of the most beautiful homes in the city of Gertrude Angeline on the north side were destroyed. Also great military headquarters for the area of devast ation had been established at Gertrude Angeline city by general Herman of the Calverinia National guard. A brigade also from Angeline junction was stationed there and other troops from a number of near by towns. A large committee of the Angelinia state legislature arived in the afternoon of the second day to try if possible to gather first class information of the damage with a view of recomend ing state and national relief measures. Thousands of surviving citizens also of the ruined towns had been ent enrolled by offigers as searching squads and also with the purpose to keep a sharp look out for Vandalinian Maldan vandals. One trainload after another of doctors and nurses who were steadily ariving from all points were admitted, and some were taken to basements of churches which were not completely leveled. Also the whole nort hwest norcer of the city of Gertrude Angeline was completely razed, and conditions there were as bad as they were in the districts where whole cities and towns had been completely razed.....

The concussions completely turned many housew end over end, and devastated block after block as if a cyclone had leveled them. All the beautiful southern Calverinia cities appeared to have suffered the heaviest loss of lives, and the biggest property damage. Smoke still poured from the debris of the burning cities, while the surviving citizens of these towns searched the ruins for other dead or for the btheir belongings which may have survived. Most of the most desperate rescue work had been greatly hampered by the fires, and fierce storms of the day before, and it was therefore said by many that countless numbers of the injured had been completely cremated in the blazing debris.

The number of persons who were burned in their homes in these s scores of ruined cities and towns after being crushed was still unknown according to general Vivianna. One of the war correspondents made a tour of one of the wrecked and burned cities at three oclock in the afternoon of the second day and counted eight hundred and eighty five wrecked automobiles and other four wheelled structures in one block.

fires by the hundred everywhere still glow and even flared wih increasing fury, and the streets, and even the country yards o roads outside were filled with the armies of homeless people. In many of the devastated towns food and provisions were found to be scarce. What resturants were not wrecked in those towns were trying to obtain food from other cities. The north side of Gertrude Angeline city was razed with the exception of one hundred houses near according to reports recieved from there. One big school house there was completely demolished and they estimated that the dead children there numbered from eight hundred thousan eight hundred, to fifteen hundred. They reported that many of the children who were taken from the ruins were mortally hurt.

Dynamite was used during the night and fol owing day. Among the buildings razed by the charges in Gertrude Angeline city by the expls explosives was the great St Peters Church. Fire department companies from all over the city and from state by towns not injured by the concussion had been responding continually to the calls for help and assisted in fighting the blazes in Gertrude Angeline.

Also a part of the west end of the city of Marcudian was completely destroyed by fire and although citizens formed fire fighting legids to assist the fire departments nothing could be done to check the conflagration. At Marcudian city the number of dead was estimated at seven hundred.

From one hundred and fifty six to four hundred and fifty children were said to have been killed in an a orphan asylum in Gertrude Angeline city most of the victims being buried under the ruins of their home, or trapped in the flames that burst out after t he big structure had tumbled into a mass of ruins.

All that day and the following night the fatalities were increased by steadily increasing reports. Yet the list of dead, based on unconfirmed reports showed also in other towns far away.

At the norty north and northwest section of Gertrude Angeline the severest of the shocks was not more than ten se seconds in passing. Yet the concussion did the work so complete that it appeared if as if a great cyclone had swept by smashing all the buildings and dwellings in a twinkling, and yet in the wake of the shocks came a fire which almost completed the work of total destruction. The Abbiennnin, Vondinia, and Calverinia railroad depots, and immense railroad yards there were also destroyed. Approximately thirty five hundred persons were killed, and upward to two thousand injured while at work in this location. Big railway coaches had been shaken completely off the tracks in all kinds of postures, and one long likeline of freight cars were thrown off the tracks in such a position that it resembled an enormous serpent wriggling alpng the ground. The Aberdeenia School also for children, at North Avenue and fourteenth streets Gertrude Angeline city, was leveled to the ground, as also the St vincents Catholic school between Elmore Avenue and Stanck Boul. Other school houses were badly damaged on same location. Eighteen hundred and fifty five children of the Catholic School were reported to have been killed, sixty hundred are believed to have lost their lives in the other two schoo s schools, and the same number in the destruction of the other schools. At Gertrude Angeline city especially at the north strict martial law has been passed i to effect and travel to and from the city in that direction has been restricted to only doctors and nurses and soldiers and relief workers. No visitors were allowed to enter the city from that direction or from inside the city either.

The explosion concussion on occured in all its forcewithout the slighrst warning. An hour before the explosion occured a terrific snowstorm was threatening. Old in the ruined districts of Gertrude Angeline city only five hundred buildings were reported to have withstood the awful concussion and air waves. However it was in the school houses where death was said to have taken its greatest toll. Eight hundred and eighty eight bodies were reported to have been taken from the ruins of one school house that first night. But the rescue work was greatly retarded by the lack of proper lighting, and by fierce winds and blinding squalls of big snow flakes. Olf Olf Old fashioned lantrens and flash lights furnished the only means of illumination for the large numbers of workers, who toiled in deep wet slush and facing the fiffty five mile an hour gale, and it was believed that many of the injured little ones probably hundreds of them died before they could be reached by the relief parties. Also as in the other wrecked towns physcians and nurses facing the fierce storm and darkness were called upon to tax their physical capacity.

The most saddest and pathe tic stories were told by many survivors of what happened around the school houses. Odies by hundreds were piled up in the schol school yards where probably only a few hours before the little ones had enjoyed themselves at play. Few were ever claimed as their parents were among the the killed and fatally injured. A stirring story was told of one principal who was seen searching the ruins for her own two girls while at the same time still seeking to rescue others that had been entrusted to his care. Freak incidents were numerous as reported by eye witnesses of the explosions themselves.

At the Mouth of the Aronurga [illegible] un it was reported that the explosions had such awful fury and force that the debris and earth and materials of every description were hurled so high and so far that pieces of everything even fell on the house tops, and into the streets of Gertrude Angeline city, and others many miles away.

At the scene of the explosion but about twenty miles from it at that it was also reported that a block train elevator was hurled off its foundation by the concussion and air waves, and wrecked beyond redemption. Also a brakeman on the Minneollester and Pandora railroad who witnessed the great explosion described it thus:

"A series of lu loud crashes of thunder, proceeded by fifteen blinding flashes like lightning, after which there was an immense roll of smoke and wreckage of every destruction that puts me in mind of having seen a picture of one of the worse volcanic eruptions on record in the world.

"There was also very much indications of the concussion that left death and destruction in its wake as the journey south on the first relief tow train was made and these scenes grew worse untill the town or city of Nickson junction sixteen miles north of Princessies Jennie [illegible]own was reached reached the whole city appeared as though the hand of assasrs of giant wrecking as crews had descended or as if a wild typhoon of the spirium Tearing variety had struck the houses down. All the houses most of them lay flat others looked as if they had been torn or shaken from their foundations, and thousands of others through some freak of the shocks stood crazily uptilted on their sides. Thousands of box cars lay batt om side up overturned probably by the concussion and air waves countless numbers of wagons and motor cars and sleighs were also wrecked by fallen debris, and all buildings within sight lay in a great mass of tangled wreckage. Here and there could be seen walking amidst the wreckage here lone person or large groups of persons, while into the much tangled mass of wreckage and splinters that had once been a home rescuers dug and probed in their grim search after other victims of the great tragedy facing the cold wet snow and windsot storm as if it was not raging at all.

"Train loads of bodies had arived at Carbondale an hour or so before the relief special reached Carbondale and most of them which were brought in were the bodies of little school children or children killed in homes from six to eleven and twelve years or over who pe perished when the buildings collapsed.

Even for mile outside of the city the countryside appeared as if a hurricane of terrific force had passed.

Piles of ties which had lain in orderly rows along side the railroad tracks were scattered along the right of way, and the little or big farm houses with the ramshakle out buildings gave more evidence that the powerful concussion of the explosions had descended in all its fury on the community. The same condition prevailed near all the other ruined towns in the concussion stiken districts.

All trees were standing in half angles or half fallen, the cities themselves were laid flat, many of them completely obliterated. The countless numbers of survivors appeared to be perfectly stunned and half crazed by the tragedy of war. All of them even could not hardly realize what really had happened whether a cyclone or an earthquake had struck them, and those who had succeeded in penetrating the regions worse hit came back with stories of hundreds of thousands of dead, and and millions of injured and vague estimates of the extent of the catastrophes.

Also from the town of Orin the medical detatchment of the one hundred and fourty fourth infantry under the command of general Stanck entrained at seven thirtyhoolock at night for the e earthquake area. They had been mobilizing at the moment the news of the disaster reached them under orders from Angelinia Agathia and carried full equipment and provisions. Company L. M. D. C. H. K. I. and K and headquarters company were also mobilizing.

Seventeen hundred persons were known also to be dead at Nombi town as a result of the concussions. The u number of dead and injured in the main rural districts outside of this town could not be estimated because of impassable roads and totally paralyzed wire communications. At the village of Erminie also near Nombi town seven hunr hundred persons were killed, and sixty thousand or less injured, while eight hundred persons were not accounted for also as a result of the concussion. More than one hundred and fifty thousand people were made homeless twenty eight thousand houses having been leveled by the concussion.

Another city especially the west section of it being also badly stricken was Jennie [illegible]urner and Madge Evans. The known dead as a result of the concussion reached sixty thousand one hundred and sixteen in Madge Evans city, Thirt thir teen at Benton Barclay, fourteen thousand at Jennie Aberden, and at least thirty five thousand at Stanck according to the lists made at thetime.

The west end of Jennie [illegible]urner City was also terribly devastated. And the following down in that city as well as all the other wrecked towns and cities presented pictures of ruin and desolation and sorrow and misery that that rivaled the worse of the war stricken portions of France and other Countries during the most hotly days of that great struggle. As far as eye could ever see the whole landscape was a sea of irregular mass of debris of all kinds. Two hundred and fifty thousand buildings of Jennie [illegible]urner in the north and west portions of the city were leveled by the concussions. An early estimate by the city authorities placed the property loss at more than fourty million eight hundred dollars. It was extremely difficult in many instances at first to determine accurately details of the picture of Jennie [illegible]urner in ruins. Here a whole house had been shaken clear from its foundation, at another place a wall had fallen out, while in other cases what had once been homes and factories and other great buildings was nothing but immense heaps of smouldering wreckage. From the field north of Jennie [illegible]urner the dark outlines of countless rescue workers probing the wreckage for bodies were constantly visible. At most every place could incessantly be heard the pitiful cries of the injured still pinned beneath the burning wreckage. Some of them were drawn out just before breathing their last, while many others died where they were. Yet in Jennie [illegible]urner one of the most pitiful sights that greeted some of the rescue workers was that of men many poor mothers lying terribly crushed and mangled while a tiny infant or small or older children also horribly injured were crying lustily or screeching. At another house the body of another woman was found on the ground with a deep gash in the head, she apparently met her fate while endeavoring to flee from her toppling house. In some instances could be seen a father or mother in rags and wounded carrying the limp form of a five year old child or older, walking dejectedly in the path of the rescue workers in piles of wreckage that untill the day before constituted their homes. In some cases their wives and other children would be found in the debris, and others the children terribly injured. In many cities outside of the stricken regions the morgue were by this time filled to overflowing with bodies of the unfortunates.

On one side of a wrecked school the bodies of eighty children lie in one group. Even every delivery truck, every car in this city was converted into an ambulance, while thousands of private machines and hundreds of wagons and sleighs were pressed into service hauling off the dead, all hotelmen's houses were closed and all had joined in the work of rescue. Soldiers and policemen patrolled the stricken regions of Jennie [illegible]urner, and also aided in the work of rescue where ever possible.

Eight hundred dead, at [illegible]lenstere, three hundred near Sandon,, two hundred at spring Hills, and one hundred at Glenville was also the concussions felt in northern Calverinia according to meagher reports available since early yesterday. An uncountable an estimated number were injured, and the property losses are expected to reach millions of dollars. At a dead however in Jennie [illegible] from the concussions would probably exceed a sixty thousand. The village city of Weldon in the State of Angeline Vine, probably was the hardest hit by the concussions. the death toll there being reported as far up as one hundred thousand, with fourty thousand bodies lying in the streets and among the wreckage, and only a few houses remaining standing and they themselves were badly wrecked.....

Also in the lights of that days horrible development twenty fivethousand more are believed to cover the death list in the city of Princess Jennie [illegible]own and its immediate vicinity, while fifteen thousand more were known to have been killed in Madge Evans [illegible]yl Ville and three thousand in busy [illegible]own....

Attempts however had been made on the second day to estimate the probable damage beyond the statement by others that it will run into scores of millions of dollars. All the efforts on the part of the thousands of workers were being put on the recovery of the bodies, and the quick relief succor of the countless thousands of the injured. The National guard troops which had arrived from the cities of Dorothy Gale, and Angelinia Agathia and others, were in complete control by this time of the storm area at Princess Jennie [illegible]own and Madge Evans [illegible]ic [illegible]ty, and to the others. General William Henry Harper Baldwin of the Abbinamia National Guard also left Angelinia Agathia early that morning by the [illegible]le-Hollester and Western railroad for southwestern Calverinia. Also many of the local Red Cross chapters had taken all the charge charge of the relief work in all the stricken towns and cities, and the relief measures were now progressing very rapidly and were accuratply.

The city of Nickson Junction and also Lucille was also hard hit. Be many relief trains bearing thousands of the injured who were fatally hurt in the concussions which swept southern Calverinia that fatal morning s scheduled to reach Gertrude Angeline city at two oclock in the afternoon of the second day was delayed five hours in leaving Nickson Junction, and had not even reached Dorothy Gale at an early hour that day. The death toll at the city of Nickson Junction had been estimated by many officials at two hundred and seventy five thousand, with onehundred and fifty thousand fatally injured or in danger of perishing in the fires when the concussion leveled the city of [illegible]ickson Junction to the ground. A doctor was treating his little patient in his own home. The doctors wife and herself standing by the childs bedside as well as the child herself were killed when the house collasped upon them.

Another man in the same building escaped but suffered a broken collar bone. The city of Dickson Junction was indeed completely destroyed, and hundreds of thousands that day were seeking shelter and food. No full estimate of the dead so far however had been attempted. The most emergency calls had been sent out for all the doctors and nurses and tents for the homeless that could come. Big fires follw followed in the wake of the explosion earthquakes adding completely to the difficulty of rescueing those imprisoned under the wreckage and ruins of the demolished buildings. Company H of the eight hundred and fourty seventh Infantry the Gertrude Angeline City Unite of the Angelinia state National Guard left that city during the night aboard two special trains for the city of Meldon which according to advices recieved here suffered probably the most heaviest damage in the earthquakes which shook southern Calverinia with such devastating effects.

With two hundred and fourty five men ki killed, and hundreds of others injured as well as many women who were not expected to live and seven thousand others more or less seriously injured, the town of Anna Maxwell had as it was reported completed checking up on the havoc wrought there by the concussion. Property damage would run into millions of dollars. Of one building only that for some strange reason or other [illegible] was a large school house out in the country with more than fourteen hundred children within its walls. It was unharmed except for the windows shattered out and plastering fallen to the floor from the ceiling. At Leander town about three miles south of the other town a big mill a lumber millwas was demolished causing damage of more than two million dollars.

The later town was leveled the debris being thrown over all the streets stee st roots. Six hundred school children had been re reported to have been injured and one hundred killed when a large rural school house in the vicinity of that town was leveled to the ground by the concussion. A report that ten hundred had been killed at Nellie fifteen miles north of Maxwell remained unconfirmed eve tward the night of the second day as communications with that city had been severed by the shocks.

Even before the earthquake shocks caused by the sudden explosions came the weather was very stormy. The terific shocks only lasted a very short time. Even the Gertrude Angeline City fire department lost a number of their own fire trucks at the city of Dickson Junction when they were caught between falling walls. Both the cities of Dickson Junction and Princess Jennie Town lost all their best and biggest city water and eletric lighting plants in the destruction which accompanied the shocks. Nearly five hundred thousand houses big or small many of them newly constructed were leveled at any part of the latter city. The houses were all in a section of the city were most of the residents were of the laboring class for the support of the armies. Virtually all of these men were working out in the farm fields and therefore none of them were killed or injured. Had they quit work a few minutes sooner and gone to their homes the death list might have been increased by one hundred thousand names.

All of the big mines outside of the strick stricken cities wo will not be operated now for many months officials of all the companies declared as they had been badly damaged. The most pitiful stories of the most greatest suffering and grief were continually told by the rescue workers. Hundreds of surviving children cried for their parents, and frantic relatives searched for their loved ones. The bodies of seventeen hundred children all less than two years old were among the first eight thousand bodies taken to the morgues.

CHAPTER SEVENTY SIX.

HOW

HOW THE AWFUL DEATH TOLL GREW IN THE WORSE DISASTER OF THE GREAT WAR SO FAR.....SEARCH CONTINUEING? SHOWS INCREAE OF NEW FIGURES OF THE NUMBER OF DED CAUSED BY CONCUSSIO OF GREAT EXPLOSIONS.
THREE MILLION ARE FOUND TO BE INJURED THROUGHOUT DISTRICTS HURLED DOWN BY AIR WAVES AND VIBERATIONS. GRAPHIC STORIES OF GREAT DISASTER.....'s

NEXT THE APPROACH OF T HE THIRD DAY:2 of the disaster come to nigh the reports that came late in the afternoon from the earthquake stricken territories of southern Calverinia, northern Angelinia, southwestern Abbiesannia, and southeastern Angelinia and other placesplaced the known dead as the results of the devastations at probably 799,000...he injured was reported by many tovtotal over three million, of which five hundred of them were considered totally mortally injured. The Associated Press casualty list from Angelinia Agathia city declared that the number of dead in all of those cities and towns was about five hundred and seventy seven thousand. The Angelinia and Abbiesannia State stricken areas had been virtually cleansed already, and burials by the thousands were being made in this countries. In many villages, chems; hamlets and towns and some small cities in some parts of southern Abbiesannia, and Northern Angelinia, and also Calverinia were yet not heard from...he list of the number of dead of these states moved about nearly a hundred thousand, and fifteen thousand fatally injured. And the number of dead in the city of Dickson Junction was climbing to higher estimates. As was known there had been found as far as two hundred and fifteen thousand, and many wounded were even dying of their injuries..

Lucillie City also gave a higher death list, ranging as far up as one hundred and twenty five thousand. Yet the death lists in other cities and towns were somewhat unchanged in numbers. At the city of Princess Jennie town all of the bodies despite the two days terrific snow and winder windstorm had been recovered, and also most of them at Meldon. Most of the roads still being passable made rescue and relief workers carrying on more expeditions..The property loss of the ruined Calverinian towns and cities was already being estimated atthree to four hundred million dollars...The soldiers in the devastated regions were now planning to bury all the dead found amid the wreckage, and it was planned that there would be trench burials as there was a complete shortage of coffins and facilities. There was also much better progress being made in caring for the countless numbers of the injured, and the greater numbers of the homeless and destitute. From all parts of the country the heaviest contributions were flowing into the devastated districts, providing money and all comforts that was possible. Attention by soldiers of other columns was being made also to the devastated rural comain communities. Strong forces also had been concentrated at the ruined town of Ruckskon junction because of the rumors of approaching Scandelinian armies. It was estimated also by this time that more than one third of the full population of the city of Madge Evansville had been wiped out, and that one third thenumber of this loss were children under three years old to ten. Even by this time the news of the terrible disaster had reached other parts of the world and the king of the Nation called Protrastotia and others had wired and cabled condolences to the Abbiesannian nation and offered help if she would only accept it in crushing the wicked rebellion of the Scandelinian countries.

"A terrific black cloud mingled with clouds of all colors, and a terrifying flash followed by a deluge of debris over the country side for scores of miles" was the description of one thankful survivors of the terrible explosion. "The ba black cloud thrown by the explosions was so thick and wide and so full of debris that as he spread over the sky for miles it shor shrouded the country side in darkness as black as midnight" "was another." The noise was a million t imes louder than the loudest thunder and the ground shook as if a thousand volcanoes had blown up into the air."

At the devastated city of Manindiania large numbers of ch ldren in leveled tene tenement houses were pulled either saftly or with injuries from the wreckage of what had once been their homes. Their mothers and fathers and others lay mangled and crushed.

The frightful numbers of dreadful mutilations, and crushed limbs and bodies out of proportions in numvbers for any disaster and i the fact that in many cases wounds ground full of dirt and other debris could not be attended for hours brought the horrid specter of l lock jaw.

The unfortunate groups of towns and cities of southern Calverinia, and northern Angelinia which paid in the loss of lives and property heavier than any others throughout the nation on account of the concussion, with the beginning od sunrise the third day after the disaster began anew the horrid task of removing and preparing their countless numbers of dea dead and taking inventory of their few material remains..That their total loss of life would exceed seven hundred thousand was still more evident than ever.Into what horrible big figure their injured would come to something as problematical as what sums would cover their immense losses in their homes, business houses, and on all others.

Ficksen Junction, Lucillia, Meldon, Maninindia, Princess Jennie town, Madre Evans ville, and Posy town all in a section covered by a sixty hundred miles each was digging out from its horrible disa ster.In between them were a few other hamlets and towns and smaller cities and also villages and farm houses which also wore the black band of mourning..Yet the city of Ficksen Junction continued to lead the list of actual dead with only two hundred and ten thousand account for.Then Followed Lucilia city, withs registered dead of one hundred and fifty six thousand and many thousands dying, and great possibilities for one much higher than even Ficksen Junction.Madons high list at one hundred andsixteen thousand was still rising rapidly in the death list.Casulaties in the other cities and towns also ranged higher and higher.The tremendous concussion power of the series of terrific explosions as well as the sudden and fierce air waves move moved a one hundred and fifty thousand ton steel bridge extending over the Erminis River for three miles from its foundation.The great span weighing thousands upon thousands of tons, was moved sixteen feet on its piers, as the officials of the Mic-Hollester and Panrod Pandora railroad estimated.

Even yet after the two days had passed the checking of the devastated regions had not even progressed far enough to permit even a rough estimate of the property losses although sums of scores of millions and still more were mentioned from many points.Officials all over the country of Abbicannia and her Loyal states, as well as from Angelinia Agathia and Dorothy Gale, and especially the officials of the government and red cross nurses and the like characterized the explosions and the schocks caused by them as the greatest disaster since the terrific cyclonic storm which swept the Abbicannian east shore in the Easter Season of eighteen fourty one., when in the towns and villages devastated by the great wind, one billion five hundred million dollar worth of property was laid waste, and scores may hundreds of thousands lost their lives.

Additional light on the characteristics and behavoir of the great explosions vibrations and concussions was also provided by the go government officials. He declared that it was probable some battle had been raging along the region of the Anni eAronburgs un close to the mouth of the stream and that for vile purposes the enemy had blown up some powerful ammunition facturies and mution works in that location.It wasxsaid that the rebel army under whom it was not known then being victorious advanced harmlessly over the region of lower Aronburgs Run w estward, changed the course of the advance northward tward Vivian Vickoy,, and then took the path of advance straight eastward along the banks of the Mic-Hollester Run River. here the major force of the enemys advance was halted for a time but one part of the army rushed off on a swifter advance tward Phelantonburg.

As the main relief measures got under way countless stories of the unprecedented misery in the devastated areas came in from all points.More and more of the tr temporary morgues and hospitals were filled to overflowing, even the dead had to be transported to army base hs hospitals and elsewhere, while millions of frantic men women and children searched the long long lines of mangled dead for the missing dear ones.

In countless instances doctors and surgeons were compelled to perform any kind of operations out of doors in the fierce storm and cold, or in the many roofp less buildings without the aid of anesthetics.Also the terrible paralysis of all kinds of lighting sysyems, and also water facilities in all the wrecked towns added to the discomfort and confusion, and through a second night of fierce storm and horror and despair and sorrow countless relief workers could not even use candles or lantrens to guide their efforts of mercy.There was no dangerof food shortage however, as the trains had brought everything that was necessary, and the militia around those locations was increasing by scores of thousands every hour.

In extreme southwestern Calvprinia where the most twrrific havoc was wrought in the four towns or cities or Ficksen Junction, Lucillie, Meldon and Orincess Jennie town all in minining countiesxand farm lands and the like within a fifty miles rai raduis of Gertrude Angeline city the main relief senter for that near point the toll of dead and injured continued to mount ad as additional bodies were continually taken from the snow soaked and covered ruins. To make matters worse an april cold wave was coming on with the tepperature below hirty, thirty above zero.

In the total area the death list was above the seven hundred thousand mark, while between three million and four million were said to be badly or slightly and as well fatally injured and scores of millions were homeless.Yet the relief and rescue workers said they were afraid the loss of life might reach up to one million.The property loss in the whole area was estimated so far as777 777,888,999.And there the horrible disaster of the war fell largely on countless numbers of persons of fgoodly and limited means, so some hundreds of thousands out of work out account of facing draft for the war.Countless numbers of women and scores of thousands of more babies appeared continually on the death list.Countless numbers of entire families wre wiped out.One man who was a soldier on fourlo fourlough searching through an army morgue in the base hospital for his wife and three children found his babies side by side in one room horribly mangled, and his wife in another.He swore that he would have revenge on the enemy if he went to perdition for it.

Countless scores of thousands of the bodies were horribly mangled, sco scarred or burned, all of them beyo nd recognition.Identification in thousands of instances may scores, had to be made by rings, rosaries, pocket books and letters and other personal belongings.

The main government, red cross, private institutions and individuals combined in the hugest taks of the world of caring for the hundreds of thousands of the injured, giving shelter, and hunting bodies everywhere, while additional workers and state troops, including all the medical unites were due to arive on other trains.Instead of funeral plans being made the many dead were hastily buried in long trenches and that multiple seri services were made.In the city of Ficksen Junction where within twenty four hours previous only one hundred and eighty thousand bodies had been recovered, eighteen million or all of the populat ion were said to be homeless. Il all the buildings in that city had been demolished and all the power plants wrecked.Countless numbers of the residents were killed in the destruction of all the school buildings.

More than fourty five thousand bodies anewchad been recovered at Lucillie Town which virtually was completely obliterated.More than a dozen other Calverinian cities reported from ten thousand more to fourty thousand dead.At the city of Allenby near the scene of the terrific explosions a house was by the blast blown into the top of a tree where it clung, the building having been a mile and a half from the scene of the explosion.Yet the house was not injured.Countless numbers of the witnesses declared to war correspondents and even pas paper men that the cities and towns in the region of the worst shocks were wrecked o in a few seconds.One descriped the appearance of the distant explosion as the rolling thick black clouds of some immense approaching cyclone and that over the country side for scores of miles the wreckage which had been hurled far into the skies fell like deluges of water and hail.

Many committee from all cities and states legislatures visited the stricken regions as soon as they could get there on the fastest special trains, and even Emperor Vivian Himself who also toured the districts e was expected at Gertrude Angeline city that day to give general aid directions to the full relief measures.

More than seventeen hundred and fifty five wagonsloads of tubes of the anti-tetanus serum, the last available supply from Gertrude Angeline city was rushed to the districts devastated by the shocks.

In northern Angelinia all the relief measures possible were still going forward in increased amount rapidly under the direction of the governer in the city of Gertrude Angeline.On Of the many towns devastated in northern Angelinia the northern section of Gertrude Angeline city suffered the most.

With fourty seven thousand bodies recovered it was yet believed that the death list even in that city might moug mount up to one hundred and twenty thousand.The whole northern part of GertrudecAngeline city was virtually wiped out and systematic work at rescue was help up for a time because none were left unij uninjured in that section of the city.Strong military lines from the main armies had been drawn about the entire area.At Marcusian which counted twenty thousand dead, the twenty two miolion shops of the Mic-Hollester and Pandora railway were leveled to the ground throwing more than four thousand men and women out of work.Most of the buildings near the shops also destroyed were those of the workingmen.And indeed the loss of life would surely have been greater had it not been for the fact th t that the workers left the railroad shops just a few hours before the concussion struck.Also the second largest railroad shops a block away were leveled with a ten million dollar loss.

Anaccentricity of the concussion was suddenly revealed in the case of an engineer of the Mic-Hollester and Pandora Railroad who rode his whole train straight through the devastated districts when the wreckage of houses and everything imaginable was falling all about him and he recieved only a few scratches. A mmrting fell on the cab of his engine and crushed it in, but nevertheless he Rel bravely on ,and pulled hisctrain saftly through without any injuries to his one thousand passengers.The train was go going north.

"I saw the buildings falling"He said"I thought it was a big earthquake."

It was announced from the cities of Dorothy Gale and Angelinia Agathia that the national head quarters of the red cross, with its chief mperess ivian ta ing taking the initiative had set in motion its entire machinery of mercy to the injured and homeless.Many of the military officers of the vast armies took supreme command of the devastated areas, with general ivianna in charge of the full operations.From all cities not harmed by the shocks additional nurses, doctors and others assembled by the call departed for southern Calverinia with medical equipment.,very one in all cities including children were even raising money for the relief quota.

COUNTLESS NUMBERS OF DEAD ARE STILL FOUND AMID THE SEA OF TERRIBLE RUINS..:::::::::::::

THE whole southwestern part of Calverinia, and also northwestern Angelinia even after the third day had passed , presented one of the saddest and biggest funeral aspects ever seen in any part of this world.With the cessation of the first frenzied efforts to relieve the millions of suffering, the count the enormous amk ammount of dead, and toestimate the terrible ammount of damage that followed the shocks of the most disasterous explosions the world could ever boast of, and the most disasterous recorded in the whole war so far, organized relief work even in all the ruined cities throughout the nation went forward quietnly and under any difficulties with system and quick dispatch..

But death, injury, sorrow, misery, horror, fear, and horrible despair and destruction remained the aftermath of the terrible explosion concussions that shook the whole country for mofe more than five thousand miles with almost disaster at every city vs visited by it.The places that were dotted with the biggest and most propserous cities and towns were the most heaviest shaken.Even on the afternoon of the third day the list of the known dead had climbed up to more than seven hundred thousand.The numbers of injured were mounted upward like the termonether under a hot fire.Throughout all the places many hundreds of thousands of the injured were being treated throughout thewholenation, and yet many countless numbers of the injuredcwere still unreported.Others were being treated in their private homes and in tents, and army barracks of troops and encaupments to where they had been taken.Countless numbers of gangs of milita army enginess, and work men and the like were desperately turning over the debris of the ruins of the railroad sho shops, stations and yards and other places in an effort to recover the bodies of all the dead or injured workmen who were known to have peished there.The number of missing shop men were placed at aboutd twelve thousand.Fire in all of the disabled shops and other working buildings of the railroad prevented the workers and soldiers and other recuers from even going near the ruins outside of explosing them.The ruins of the Mic-Hollester and Pandora railroad shops were expected to yeild from six to twenty thousand men qll killed according to the estimates of the relief workers.

The countless thousands og f homes which burned after the shocks leveled thm had not yet been compleely searched.The scores ofvthousands of bodies which were burned beyond recognition were already buried n in long trenchesor cremated entirely.Burning of bodies was a frequent occurance as there were so many.Gertrude Angeline, Angeline junction, and other cities of northern Angelinia shared a common sorrow each having suffered heavy losses in the ranks of its citizens, and the way the death list was continueing to mount, and mount, and still mount it seemed evident that Gertrude Angeline city would soon take the list o lead of all the cities in killed or injured beneath the ruins.

So far the city of Dickson Junction perhaps so far sustained the most tragic loss it being estimated hat one third or more of its dead were children of prh p orphan asylums and schools and also of private homes, most of the children being under three years of age.There were seven thousand killed, sixty thousand or more considered inju injured fatally, and eight thousand also unaccounted for, and one hundred thousand made homeless in the large city of Maria Osborne Angelinia state, the many of the injured of which were transported to hospitals at Carbondaler and other xities, the city of Carbondaler of which had been at first one of the bloodiest scenes of the war.

The towns of Dorman, Hansonia Dille, and Gravewhite were not so terribly shaken shina by the concussion but nevertheless these three cities and many other towns and villages nearby also made terrible sacrifices to the shocks.Approximate figures placed thedead at Dorman two thousand, Hansonville four thousand, and Gravewhite, six thousand in killed.Hundreds of thousands of the dead, whole towns by the hundred destroyed,xand unteld property loss throughout the whole nation made the task of unraveling truth from rumors that staggered not only the war stricken nation but the world as well.

The sad ,heartrending, grewsome work of sarching the mass of wreckage at the city of Dickson junction, Lucillie, Maldon, Princess Jennie Town, Madge Evans Ville Macindiana and Roxy Town the heaviest sufferers in this section of Calverinia continued throughout those three days and nights without a moments ceasing, following two nights and a day of terrific windyvand stormybweather, and which had torn out the earlier reports of the great and astonish astonishing losses.And the tale of the heroic work of rescue was yet only begun.All the relief workers from the outside world, as well as the news paper correspindents and the like glued upon a scene of appalling destruction that no war yet had ever caused, the greatest horror at the biggest cities.Also at Gertrude Angeline city the whole northern section lat is ruins.Therefore in the city of Carbondaler, and of those of the unwrecked portions of Gertrude Angeline na near by nd many others were thronged to overfl wing with anxious friends, and relatives of the countless homeless and injured.Dickson Junction folk alone.Each train from the devastated city carried more and more refugees from there to either Gertrude Angeline or Carbondaler.Each train or truck also bore more dead.The dead seemed never to stop increasing in numbers.The banks of both the Erminie and Mic-Hollester rus as well as the shores of Aremburge rus were littered with debris.The streets of the ruined cities werealso crowded with the homeless people not know whether to go and were bewildered to even think what they were doing, and many of them almost crazed from grief and horror.Among the largest corncerns wiped out in Gertrude Angeline city was the Reliance Cahlois Booking and printing company, the Garage of the Abbieannia Pendinia and Calverine railroad, ten roundhouses, the whole railroad yards full of smashed coaches, and twenty other large factories. Fire breaking out a few minutes after the shocks, fire completed the wind committed by the consussions, and on the third day only charred embers remained where only three days ago had stood so many beautiful and quiet homes and residences and more pretentious dwelling places.

In the evening ninty hundred more dead was the las latest estimate of the great casu a ulaties caused in and around Gertrude Angeline city by the concussions according to a message sent to Angelinia Agathia and which was received as soon as it was to be sent from the Gertrude Angeline railroad station post office.Many big school buildings were destroyed and the messages declared that many of the dead were pupils of the razed schools, and also of orphany asylums.The north section of the city as well as some of the interior had been leveled, and a large city of tents extending for miles had been esa stablished to care for the hundreds of thousands of injured, the message added.It had required three days and nights of continual labor and efforts to remove the dead in the entire north side of the big city was converted into a sea of leveled debris.So streag was the shocks or consussions that loaded fright cars and even passenger coaches were shaken off the tracks, and even turned over, but it could not be learned whery er any of the passengers were killed or injured.

The consussions that had leveled the nerty side of Gertrude Angeline city brought togethermany men who had served together in the early starting part of the war.It wastheir second meeting since the rebellion was began.Soldiers in many large s mumbers were guarding the roads, and railroads and other by ways leading into those many towns, villiages, and big cities in which the shocks ravaged such damage in order to prevent a congestion of automobile traffic and to prevent curious visitors from coming too near.Countless patrols were stationed everywhere to guard the roads from even Angeline junction city to Carbondaler with Dickson Junction and others in between, and from Gertrude Angeline to others with Angelinia Junction between.For miles and miles it was reported the high ways and others along side railroad tracks leading into the devastated area of every city and town were blocks blocked by countlessx numbers of automobiles and wagons which could only move slowly in the devastated area. All these contained provisions and food.From all visitors who had succeeded in getting to these regions before the law was passed ag in against their coming it was reported that women and others took up a collection along the lines of visitors autombel atu automobiles and in a short time they had recieved a hundred times much more money than they ever could have expected that was to be raised for the destitute and homeless, and for the burial of dead.

Tward evening the list of known dead in Gertrude Angeline city mounted to four hundred and fifty one thousand for that place alone with additional deaths and the recovery of more bodies out of a population of four million five hundred thousand..Of this number one hundred and twenty five were dead in the centre sections, and fourt y one thousand at the east sectiej.Latest unofficial estimates placed the number of injured in the city at four hundredthousa d thousand, with three hundred thousand at the centre and norty north and one hundred thousand more at the extreme west.

Toiling through darkness to find victim of the disaster.Gertrude Angeline city takes the lead in horrible loss. Fearful scenes.

The full and entire realization of the wors probable most appalling disaster which befell all the cities and towns of southern Calverinia, and northern Angelinia within a radius of twenty five hundred miles throughout the region dawned on the morning of the fourth day after when after another nights toil in the darkness to recover the countless injured and dead, recapitulation of the disaster of the explosion shockscor concussions showed the number of dead in the ruined part of Gertrude Angeline city climbing steadily above the five hundred thousand mark with between for that city alone two million and three million injured and property loss of nearly six hundred million dollars.....

For all parts of the ruined city of Gertrude Anh Angeline relief measures were still under way or cintunising and further increments in full force and power of personell housing facilities forvthe estimate eighteen million homeless foodstuufs and medines medicines was contunied from Federal, state, and also private resources.....

- Trainload, upon trail load from every line not interferred f with by the glandelinians,, came fro every point with supplies and arived at Gertrude Angeline city early in the morning, and shortly afterward the twenty first medical regiment of three thousand men and two hundred and twenty eight officers arived from Angelinia Agathia.

Emperor gobert vivian was also due for Gertrude Angeline city for a conference with all the military officers there and also of citizens who had escaped the rv ravages of the explosion shocks, and who were rallying to the assistance of their most unfortunate brethern.

It also was understood oje of the main objects of theconference would be the possibiei inoculation against all kinds of threatened dies diseases of those cities and towns in the devastated regions.All of the towns and cities wrecked by the concussions of the explosions, or by the explosions themselves went without gas light or even water and everything else badly needed, although Gertrude Angeline city the largest city hit and which apparently suffered most heavily had the steam engines of many places riggedu p to replace the destroyed pumping plants, and streams of water, weak but regarded as sufficent to prevent an epimedic was sent through the many swe sewers.

On account of the terrible and most ernormous numbers of dead there would be no tm time whatever for any funerals in any of the stricken cities or towns, but it was said that with a measure of direct order being restored from the cbe chaos which prevailed after theashocks leveled everything arrangements would be made for interring the dead in long trenches or by cremating them by the end of one week if the weather permitted it..Few bodies remained unindentified and therefors it was not necess ary to hold any of them hardly for identin identification.

Throughout the whole region affected countless numbers of whole families were wiped out and indications were they would also be laid to rest in long trenches of it necessity cospelled to be cremated.Additional army troops continued to pour int the stricken areas that l n night and during the days proceeding the dis- aster l along with thousands of doctors, hundreds of nurses, n y hundreds of thousands of nurses, supplies and food stuufs.The militia mostly arived to r protect the ravaged regions fo from the enemy.No formal proclamation attended thr u influx of the millions upon millions of soldiers but many thousands of them continually par patrolled the devastated districts under arms and warned off all who could not display military passes or give sufficient reason for being in the zone, not that they were not permitted even if they were visitors but because who could tell who may not be glandelinian val vandals or spies among them.Nevertheless visitors and sightseers by the trainload invaded the devastated districts during those four days but did not block traffic as was feared and also s did a l they could to render aid for they felt so hart sick at the scenes.One man who was a foriegner reported he drove his wagon for two hours and [illegible] as a hard road in the devastated area his progress being impr impeded by the curious Angelinian motorists.These people however did not come from what e would call more curiousity because they wanted to see the scenery of the vestage.They wished to see the extent of the damage, the ral nature of the suffering and the other horrors for revengeful methods against the enemy.

Many of the victims by the fourth morning had recovered suffiniently from their harrowing and sad experiences and a to recall their sensations and give good or coherent accounts of what had happened.One of the boyscouts who with over fifty three hundred other boys in the Barracks school near Gertrude Angeline city when it collasped before the very first shock of the concussion said to a reporter;

"I was at that timestanding with several other boys against the north wall of the army barracks fir boy scouts in that mobolisation camp when I heard a peculiar sound like terrible thunder in the distance.There was a terrible rolling of the ground, and the other boys all around me started screaming and crying when the building shook like as if it had a terrible fit.Hearing more revere detonations and noticing the sky was dark with peculiar black black cloudy and seeing peculiar flashes I began to pray but did not as yet pray out loud.The bricks were falling all around me like a hailstorm, and as I opened my eyes again I saw many of the boy scout being buried beneath the brisks and timbers and other wreckage.Many of them either had their arms upraised or tried to leap out of windows and the like as the bricks and wreckage fell and buried them completely under them.The wall which I dared to stand against did not fall despite the shocks of which I believe I counted six sixteen despite the excitement.When the earthquakes and queer thundering noise was over in as many seconds I crawled out of the wreckage and quickly summoned help from the soldiers who were running up from every direction.Many of their barracks were down but still many others were still standing with only the windows shattered out."

Colonel Schloderins in his headquarters in the ruined encampment at porothy Gale though so far away, with five other officers felt the whocks destroyed a small part of that city said;

"I felt the fierces o shocks and as the sky far in the distance appeared like a titanic eruption breaking out the windows crashed in, the house swayed violently like a ship tossed by wild storm waves, and the furniture moved about like crazy things and everything in a miment was bunched up into the room.At other shocks proceeding the walls crashed in, tons of timbers and other materials came down just after we managed to crawl under some of the furniture. A big piece of timber hit my arm and broke it at the elbow.The rest of the officers in my room were not hurt..finally the whole building collasped and we were entombed and were for hours before we were rescued.It was so stuffy in that shattered room almost entombed by wreckage that we could a hardly breathe."

A trees nurse in the northern part of Gertrude Angeliu Gertrude Angeline city who was sitting beside a sick girl and refused to leave her when the shocks rocked the wreckage down about her ears gave also the following account;

"We heard thereoar of titanic explosions and looking tward the direction of the sound I saw far up on the horizon and reaching to the zenith an enormous series of clouds like that usually observed at the approach of a thunderstorm.It was charged with all kinds of debris, and trees and everything shooting upward as thick as clouds.It reminded me of a line of distant volcanoes simultaneously explosion with extraordinary violence.A minute later to my fancy there was a greater upshooting of such clouds proceeded by heavier crashes and terrible noise, the house trembled violently, and then came a shock that seemed to lift the house clear off the ground and hurl through the air about twenty feet and then came crashing down again..he little girl ill of of the measles told me to be brave and it's still, that whatever it was was now all over.

"hen apparently a second later there was another terrible detonation like the pounding of many big hammers on wood, and the west side of the house crashed in with a loud rear.The house shook like fury and all the windowswere shattered and the little girls bed danced so wildly during those few seconds that I was afraid she would be thrown out..owever we were on the east side of the building, and therefore neithe I or the child was hurt.

The main army relief organizations established general headquarters in a warehouse near the Abbieannia, condinia Calverinia railroad with general Heller in charge.

Upon the arive/ arival of a number of car loads of supplies and provisions he general announced that a special train would also go to Gertrude Angeline city in the afternoon with one million five hundred thousand cots, two million double blankets, as many pillows, one million stoves, and nearly two million tents.A full duplicate of these orders would also be sent to Ricksen station by special tr in train he said it.

''We are surely now fully abreast of the entire medicial situation.'' one of the main army doctors declared.''We also seem to have an over amount of nurses in the areas.As far as the injuries and deths and sorrows ans miseries are concerned the worse would soon be over.The aftermath of such a disaster caused by the violent foe however is still to come I'm sure.What I dread the most is the terrible epide mic epidemics and therefore we are taking immediate steps to guard against them.Many hundreds of thousands of the people are said to be returning to their ruined homes and either trying to reside in them or recover what belonging that may still be left.The many medical regiments which arived continually since the disaster happened is doing all possible to take care of the situation.

A great supply of lock jaw serium was brought to all parts of the devastated districts from many cities and towns nearest the horror scenes, nd and was said to be sufficient to prevent the outbreak of tetanus.It however was explained by many doctors and even nurses that there would be no compulsory inoculation, but wherever any patient under the care of the army health authorities is to be believed be believed it in danger of such disease the serum would be given immediately.

The officiers of the railroads advised that they had placed as many cars as would be needed at Gertrude Angeline city and was willing to give more wherever needed for theuse of the many refugees of either the disaster or of the foe, and representives of many cities of Angelinia stae came there with offes of one million eight hundred thousand dollars in money food, and supplies f if it was to be needed.

Jesse Parhenheimer men who lived nearer the scene of the explosion and who at the time was returning home from Gertrude Angeline city with his wife and four children in a long army sleigh loaned to him by the military related his experience and described a strange fantasy of the explosions.He heard the crashes and seeing a cloud of debris hurled clear over his head in the sky swing into a railroad viaduct to escape the coming shower of wreckage and earth.As he was about to step from the sleigh, the whole viaduct was blown away by the air waves as if a tornado had occured.Next as he said, the sleigh was tossed into the air and hurled a few hundred feet with his wife and children in it.He also was hurled five hundred feet by the shock alighting without injuries near the Mic-Hollester and Pandora railroad tracks.His wife and four children were found later in a another house and not one of them were even injured either.He added that the last time he saw of the explosions was of the immense clouds still overspreading the skies and making strange darkness for half an hour.

inding many of the lost relatives was indeed one of the most principal tasks of the Red Cross workers and others which confronted them.Some of the members of one family were being cared for in the city of Gertrude Angeline at the part not wrecked, while still other members who had been belei believed among the dead were taken either to Angelinia Agathia or Dorothy Gale.and said the horrible confusion and most pitiful sights wrought by the explosions and shocks in southwestern Calverinia and orthern Angelinia there shone on the fourth day after one bright ray of great encouragement, the continued fruit of the incessantwork of the Abbisannian Red Cross, which established temporary headquarters everywhere they could to take care of the immense droves of survivors that came in from the devastated areas.Clothing , food, and other supplies were given out.Also those fortunate to escape injury were cared for in private homes and in public buildings oin cities not ravaged, and where suitable quarters could be es q established for the countless members of the sad and homeless. Sometime after the disaster probably about three days later this was the stirring appeal that came from mperor ivian himself)

''The wholestricken region of southern Calverinia and northern Angelinia is loo ing to the whole of Abbisannia for instant help.The regions havocked by the disasterous concussions of the explosions will not have the rehabilitation it needs if the whole nation does not come to the aid of those regions stricken, and if all the big cities fail to raise as much money as possible.Not a penny not a single dollar is being sought anywhere that is not needed.not a cent sought will be wasted.It is the duty of the people throughout the whole nation of Abbisannia as a large population center and as well for the sake of Christ, and the cause of the country to raise this money.Troops are being sent in ernormous numbers to to what is poswible and to prevent the enemy coming on and taking possession of what the shocks have left.''''

Indeed with this stirring appeal the mperor o ivian of Abbisannia spurred to action the members of every particular professional division of the National Association of Commerece.

he meeting called by Emperor ivian and his highest lords and the like in conjunctin nction with all the association chambers was held in the mperors Palace it lf and was attended by countless numbers of people and others of the high rsons of rank.Other spakers were Empress ivian, ount De iff, and some of the rons and Lords.While all the high Healh Commissioners throughoutthecountry n all the biggest cities were recieving a call for more doctors, nurses and pplies and while a force of soldiers was being held in readiness for imediatel mediate departure at these headquarters of the halth departments, mperor ivian and others at the meeting in his palace urged all in the nation to go out nd getthe things needed most of all--more money.mperor Henson ivian himself ade a speech as spirited as that of hisbrother mperor ivian.He read telegrams m general iviananna a,d and others, describing the actual situation throughout e southern part of Calverinia and the northern parts of Angelinia.ount De iff ad the lists of the many places and professions represented with their surprising ount contributions at the time of the disaster at Jennie ivian and Lieghburg eading.At that time just to support the seu seige and provide for the soldiers d others rendered homeless and shelterless a ca ll had been sent through ut roughout the nation of Abbisan ia Abbisannia for only one hundred thousand ollars.he response had been nearly five million dollars in a week.

mperor ivian in his address pleaded for speedy relief.

''I have just recieved a quick telegram from general iviananna whose vacuation camps are at Gertrude Ash Angeline City''said the mperor of bbisannia''stating the situation as one of the most acute of the war.The ne is great and most widespread.All big cities throughout Abbisannia in the st even during the early part of this war has shown themselves generous to ilide parts of the nation.I remember all the aid that came to Baldwins camps ivian ickey following the horrible battle of Delights unction and its disaster s results.also of the terrible explosions during battle of Jennie ivian. w the calamity that has happened is ten times more greater and more sudden, d almost right at out own home door.The fact is that the situation is e most critical of the war so far far worse than millions of reports that have en recieved would seem to indicate.The enemy has done this to crush us if ssible,vbut we can do all in our power to show that in due time we ourselves ll crush the wicked rebellion instead...''''

e mperor of Abbisanniavthen authorized the collection of subscriptions among ll persons and city employes in the nation.Before the meeting came to it an d thenumy licensed lenders divisions of the associations soon gave in reports at their quotas of many hundreds of thousands of dollars in Abbisannian money had n r p rapidly raised..It awas also freely predicted at the same meeting that e quota of every city would surely be exceeded by at least two hundred million d illars bring the ammount that was hoped to be raised as soon as possible to about e hundred million dollars.''As soon as all the necessary money is raised and e provisions preparedofor''said mperor ivian--all experts will be sent into e areas devastated by the explosions and the shocks, to work in connection with e rescue wor ers and the rd cross,, so those agencies may see that the wisest ssible efforts is pr surely made of money and therefore prevent any overlapping uplication o of work and rescur ues.

The day before the explosiojs occured and the shocks, or the morning ereof,was a dark and gloomy and stormy day throughout the nort hern and southern rt part of calverinia, as well as over a portion of northern a Angelinia.It d been snowing very h rd all morning with a high galeof wind.Just before the ath it snowed harder, and the air grew so dense that nothing could be seen for hundred feet.Then came the explosions making concussions like that of fear- arthquakes.However in thevregion where the explosions actu lly occured there s no stormy weather though the sky had been overcoast with dark gray uds and the weat her was windy from the northwest.Those who witnessed the losions far away described it likecone of the worse volcanoes in the world in full eruption.They stated that from what they belie ed they saw a million or e things seemed to fill the air.There were clouds of earth, bricks, boards, achinery, stoves, furnaces, poles large cans, garments, large sizes of houses r fragments of houses and even pieces of living beings.Large animals also were n i to fly up into the air, and the wreckage was hurled for a score of miles.

One woman who was a matron of a distant country orphan ylum was by the window when she heard a strange noise like a terrific becami g ening roar, and the sky in the northwest suddenly darkened.

She stated her experience thus;

'I was surprised to see outside of the window large black clouds in the northern ky, and everything of destrioption in materials began to fall from the skies ound the building.As these things began to fall I thought some distant volcano d become suddenly active.I then went down stairs as the buildingswayed from a shock and opening the door down on the entrance of the first floor of the builing I saw a series of great walls of rolling black clouds mingled with wrecked

, andoseeming to drive in front of it as well as on top of it immense white billows that looked like volcanic steam or ashes.There was a deep roar that succeeded each crash in rapid succession, and it sounded like cannonading, but many many times louder and more vidid.I also saw a number of crimson red flashes shoot high into the sky, and flaming materials of every description fell down making the q exact picture of a volcanic eruption I had observed in volcanic history.
''It's a hi big volcanic eruption''I cried''and its likely to devastate everything around here here yet.''
In that far distance the air was full of everything, clouds of boards, myriads of trees, and their branches, pans, big stoves, furnaces, large pipes, machinery, wagons, clouds of earth and churbeery all rising high up together.I saw far in the distance whole sides of brick buildings flying together and stricking against each other like huge rocks and shattering themselves to pieces.
The great shocks continuing it seemd to me that i I must arouse the chil ren in the building and get them them outside and therefore I shut the door again, and started up the stairs stairs.Then the worse concussion or earthquake came suddenly and something that was strange to me which I could not account for seemed to hurl me q against the wall of one of the rooms.The whole building shivered like a person having a violent fit.It rocked back and forth with such increasing violence, that everything with a creaking and a groaning that I could not describe began to fall in.Fire seemed to flash in great puffs from the dist distant sky.
Fearing a terrible disaster to the children I tried desperately to get away from the wall but the strange pressure whatever it was caused by held n me against it so that I could not move.When one of the rear walls fell in with a thundering crash.The roof also crashed in and something heavy hit me on the head and knocked me down.How long I may have been senseless I of coul courss course do not know.However when I came to my senses again I was buried under boards and timbers on top of which was piles of bricks and other debris.Terrible screams and cries came from all parts of the wrecked building.Near me was a red wagon of immense size which seemed to be holding some of the weighty wreckage off of me.
Then came the leader of some of the rescue workers.He saw me and calling to some of the men he had with him, they lifted some of the heavy boards,, held the wagon up, and one of them took me by the arms and pulled me out.I and they then started for the other parts of the ruined building.I found to my surprise my own raincoar down the comp street of the little town hanging on a telegraph pole that had withstood the concussion.I was wearing it before the shaking commenced.How it got on to that pole and ontop was a tremendous mystery.
In a few minutes there was a great crowd of red rescue workers about the leveled orphan asylum,children were screaming, praying, and cy crying.Many persons were weeping silently.But every one of them was now trrying to dig out the children who had not been killed.
After many hours work and when the numbers of rescuers increased to five hundred ge soon got out a large number of them.Many of them were only hurt, and thank od anscpis blessed ,other that they were alive.Many children however were killed.''

What happened at the orphan asylum was told by a little eight year old girl who had been injured and who was nowlying in a bed at a army base hospital not far away from the place.
''We were in the playroom of the upper part of the house, when we heard loud noise like a series of funny thunder claps in the distance and it suddenly got so dark that we could not hardly see.All the children went to the windows to see what they believed was the approach of a big snowstorm with black clouds.We saw the flashes in the north but the teacher or matron in charge got mad at us, and made us go back to our benches again.And all that we could see at the windows was that the sky was black, like midnight almost, and that the red flashes came again and again.Then came a sudden series of awful thunders there was s a sudden tremendous shaking of the building, and the walls seemed to suddenly fall in all around us.When the floor gave way at one end of the building and it was like sliding down a cellar door.The ceiling also fell in and what happened to us then I cannot describe.It was terrible.'' Another inmate of the orphan asylum said it was like the whole world blowing and shaking up.Her brother and sisters were in the same building.
''when the shakes commenced the matron of our classroom started to pray and I and many of the children knelt with them.Then the house at first seemed to me to swing around and sway back and forth, and that the world seemed to grow as black ad as midnight, and everything to fall in or turn over and over.
Yet I did not know what it was all about.Nevertheless I escaped without being hurt.''

One of the sisters of the orphan asylum saw says that something strangely mysterious like a blast of wind which yet she could not feel at the time of the shock blew a number of the children clear out of the windows, while the rest fleeing to the lower parts of the building when it started to fall in clung desperately to everything in the place for protection.
''I was in the first floor of the house when the earthquake shocks came and trying to gather up the children orderes to them to make for the nearest of the firescapes for safty.As soon as many of them had started for the windows the wal s seemed to suddenly fall inward and outward at the same time, one by one, the ceiling fell and everything crashed down leaving the fire escapes standing explosed like a long peculiar tude tube.The strange draught at the same time prowced by the shocs came suddenly with such force that many of the children not caught by the debris was whisked out of the windows.The wind almost did the same to me but I hung desperately upon the window sill, and bent over one of the other children nearest to hold on to him before he was forced out.Then the shocks slackened up, and I almost collasped.I could not hardly hold my head up I was so weak and dazed, and col lasped on the remaining floor of the building.Pretty soon came the rescuers and by night fall most of the bodies had been taken from the ruins.Fifteen of the injured children were dying and eighteen others had internal injuries.''
The fourth day c after the disasterous shocks had now passed, and even that following night t he south western part of Calverinia and northern Angelinia still remained prostrated, and in the midst of the desperate struggle to rise from the vile exte nsive sea of ruins and smouldering ash heaps nothing could hardly be accomplished.The disaster of five day ago had sax declared before in this story come with such unexpected suddeness and with such dreadful fury that it really left the whole districts of those two countries of Abbiaannia stunned, shaken and almost demoralized.
Hundreds of whole towns of any size, and thousands of communities had been wiped out by the shocks and fire more than eight hundred thousand had been really killed in Gertrude Angeline city took the full lead in the death list and propertby loss and many millions of persons men women and children had been found injured, and nearly fifty million had been left homeless.
Gertrude Angeline City, Angeline junction, Marcucian, Rickson junction and many others lay in the region most heavily shaken by the explosions and in them there was suffering and horror and fear and h unger and homelessness and death that surprised the whole world itself.
Hundreds of t he smaller communities consit consisting of grops of small frame or brick houses, farm buildings,, houses around small mines and other places and country schools and orphan asylumsalso suffered severely.
The towns of Princess Jennie and Rosy Ville two of the smaller cities of just a few million buildings were completely wiped off themap not by the shocks but by the great fires t hat resulted.The whole northwest c section of Angeline junction city had been laid into smoking ruins.So was the whole of Marcucian and at the very a edge of this Angelinian city a few blocks from the wic-Hellester and Madera Railroad Station not a single dwelling or any other kind of house was even left standing or in a possible rebuilding condition.Two great railway bridgew crossing t he Aronburgs un streams in this location had been hurled off their bases and twisted and turned out of shape by the air waves and viberations of the gre great explosions.....

CHAPTER SEVENTY SEVEN.-

THROUGHOUT SEARCH AMONG THE EXPLOSION AND EARTH SHOCK RUINS SHOWS THAT FULLY EIGHT HUNDRED AND NINTY TWO THOUSAND DIED. CALAMITY MOST DESOLATING IN THE EO WORLDS
V ANNALS. ALL CITIESYAND TOWNS TOTALLY RAZED BY THE SHOCKS! MANY MILLIONS RENDERED HOMELESS.
WHOLE NATION SENDS SWIFT RELIE TO STRICKEN DISTRICTS.

THE DAMAGE to these big steel bridges alone was half a score of million dollars apiece bridge officials declared. nd yet so great was the danger from approaching Glandelinians armies and othe^fi feesthat order had not yet come out of chaoes and throughout the whole r region the most wildest and uncontrollable panic, fear and pandemonium reigned e n countless number of Abbiesmnian and Angelinian soldiers and othes were everywhere throughout the two nationsi national states i on duty in the areas of suffering and ruin, and hundreds of thousands of surviving citizens had organized themselves to the aid and were digging in the ruins of the homes. Most of those no doubt who were probbing into the wrecks were seeking to recover a part of what no doubt had once been their belongings. Hundreds, nay t housands of t hese could be seen pulling and tearing away at the masses of brick and stone and wood lying in such hopeless confusion with a courage that showed the utmost determination.

Many others dug and probed more grimly and sullenly. Countless numbers of loved ones were there when the fearful roar of the failing wreckage and the terrific shocks of the explosions started so suddenly. They were gone to only Heavon knowns where when the horror and the bewilderment of the horrible disaster had passed. here they down somewhere under the piles and windrows of wreckage. These rescuers and people and suv survivors worked and toiled desperatly and yet with a silent steadiness and almost tore and rended the flesh from their hands and fingers.

Mn Many of the Angelinian generals and other officers made tours of inspection of the devastated areas which was now in charge of general Robert vivianana. Generl Hanson ivianana was also on the ground as personal representive of the very emperor vivian himself. Bu both these had their officers and men and others checking off the lists of dead and wounded still being found hour by hour, but late on the night of the fifth day neither would yet attempt to estimate the loss totally as the numbers of dead continued to increase.....

Throughout the whole nation came the cries and pleads of from the tern and devastated districts!

"Raise as much money as possible, send trainloads of provisions and the like, send supplies and nurses and doctors, and help and armies, but for God's sake keep the unnecessary visitors and the others away. We do not need them here and they are only a hinderance."

And indeed this was the three fold pei petition which countless officials in charge of all the relief work throughout the whole region sent out to Dorothy Gale city and Angelinia Agathia as these two cities awaited alert to do more and more what they could to help in this most stupendous disaster of the world.

And all big cities throughout the nation answered the petition immediately and exactly. For evey big city and town continued to sent the maximum of hl help in doctors, nurses, bacteriologists and others who were badly needed in the st stricken areas, and all these were dispatched hastily, while the officers in command of the soldiers were given strist orders not to allow any curious persons no matter who they were to enter the regions. And for the rest the many trains which left the Mis-Hollester and Pandora Railroad throughout the four days and nights continually and there were many of them carried everything of description on the line of fresh a eggs, clothing for people and children, coffins, and all kinds of canned meats, thousands and millions of yards of wire and other material to repair telegraph p wires, cots, ambulances, tons of cotton, ca vaccine surgeon instruments, everything and also many troops of soldiers but curious people were forbidden on any trains.

A desecent of i or if that was to be impossible a sanitary or trench burial and the cremation for the hundreds of thousands of dead. Ernormous medical conforts for the millions of maimed, the dying, wounded, and others. helter food and thelike for the livi ng and homeless. Big armies for protectionagainst ap ro approaching landelinian hordes that may come th" t way. That was the way all the big cities of the nation not harmed by the war sent their sympathy. nd yet allthis cost lots lots of e money and it was with millions of dollars that most of these cities were mostly concerned. Emperor vivian in one hour it was said organized a large committeeof fif five thousand five hundred which in turn mpletely and hastily organised thrilling meeting that morni g morning in all the Angelinia An Agathia city council chambers to launch a score of million dollar drive and the like.. All experts of any kind were to be sent into the zone of horrible devastation with the purpose to work in connection with all the organi c organizat ions of the red crossso that the two agonisies would be able to fully see that the d wisest and most best expenditure was to be made of the men money and to prevent any overlapping or duplication of work and rescources. At the time these meetings were working hard to translate the sympathy of all big cities into dollars, and other money and the money into every kind of supplies a/l all to be administered by the Red Cross and uns throughout the region Meldon Hanson executive secartary of the main chaper of the Red Cross was being informed by his assistances who were on the spot in the devastated areas that more an and more assistance in the shape of men, women doctors, and supplies were needed as badly as before, that the nu mbers of the injured found were increasing by the whole sale and that there was not enough to handle the terrible situation. The fifteen thousand train nurses, registered at the Angelinia Agathia headquarters for emergency work many who were already read to leave were informed of this as soon as possible and they were entrailed immediately on a special train at once. The red cross themselves reported time and again that some of the largest contribution his organizations had recieved yet had come from the very vivian girl Princesses themselves. Just before leaving the region of vivian mickey to go elsewhere to follow general vivian tward Bahrains they went over toone of the Red Cross Offices near Allentown and left an endorsed check for threehundred thousand dollars out of their own re- sources.....

All the Health commissioners of every big city and town sent continually as quickly as possible to the stricken towns as many municipal tuberculoisis sanitarium nurses as the could gather, countlessx countless numbers of health department nurses and nearly thousand five hundred doctors and all the bacteriologists they could obtain. There was also sent many wagon or train loads of chloride of lime for the purpose of disinfecting, a large laborar laboratory unite for the analyzing water and examining cultures for all kinds of contegious diseases and large and quantities of vaccines, gauze, bandages, and other first aid supplies. The Mis-Hollester and Pandora Railroad at the request of emperor Vivian and under the supervision of general vivianana continually ran a number of specials from Angelinia Agathia, and from many other cities and points onthe same road in the region in need. All the medical regiments that could be spared under the command of too many officers to name here left for the four nights with full equipments of tents army beds and cots, all ambulances that could be conveyed from kitchens and medical supplies. Even a few hours earlier the very mobelization camps throughout the nation under the direction of the Count De riff at Angelinia Agathia had started down for the stricken regions with baggage cars and fright and other cars loaded with 10,000,000 tents, three hundred thousand stoves millions of joints of stove pipes, sixteen million to nearly fifty million army winter blankets, fourteen million bed sacks, fourteen million pillows, and fifteen million beds and cots. Sent with this big haul were two hundred and twenty five thousand fully armed soldiers and guards of the Abbiesmnia national guards.

All these supplies the many red cross officials learned later have been prorated among the varies various cities and towns and other places in need and had already been the means of saving many more lives it was estimated though more of these supplies were still needed. About the same time all the electric Unions of the nation sent down carloads of wire with which to rapid repair the lines and reestablish all communication in the widely devastated regions. And as all these supplies were being heaped up in any kind of and all officials and generals that could ge boarded trains in charge of more special cargoes. These officers and others were taking to southern Calverinia many thousands of caskets which had been brought up. nother big quota of coffins were on their way up from large casket manufacturing plants in all big cities. Throughout the four days high keyed but regulated plan of work these men plans for the living and tye dead marched side by side with equal haste and horror.

Countless numbersof women and children made homeless by the disasterous shocks of the explosions were now having temporary shelter in even many sleeping cars which the pullman companiescompanies of the railroads sent to the stricken cities especially where the greatest loss was reported to be.

Many other sleeping cars with long lines of kitchen cars went from Angelinia Agathia and porothy Gale city. the same number were sent from Evangeline St Clare near by.

A full estimate of one million five hundred thousand women, as many more on children and wounded werebeing taken care of in this manner.Many other officers were also on their way to the two regions to supervise the setting up of rurl relief stations in devastated farmi g farming di tdistricts too remote from t owns or villiages to be in the line of more immediate aid..

''It is utterly impossible to tell''said emperor vivian''Despite the eight hundred thousand already found to have died in this awful disaster, there may be many more under those heaps of stone and mortar and ashes than we ever can think or believe..our..or my own part I cannot see how in the worl how many of these surviving people could have ever escaped with their lives or got out of the wreckage.It w is one of the worse disasters of the world and none other like it in any war that I have ever heard of.''

However he was right.there were countless numbers of persons unaccounted for yet. Emperor vivians best guess was that at least two thousand two hundred more dead were foundcat Gertrude Angeline city but every one agreed that half of the whole city of people was homeless and that all of them were penniless as well having also lost all their belongings.the resident direc distri cts and factori factory districts of Gertrude Angeline city were not the only places hard hit.Hundreds of big hotels, wholesale grocery houses, Book plants, ernormous grain elevators,sky scrapers, flour and lumber mills, and other buildings along the railroad tracks of the Abbieannia, ondinia galveine acros from the districts were laid to level with the ground that they werenow nothing but smo smoking seas of brick and mortar.Among these buildings was seventeen big sixteen story hotels.the burned as of mortar and brick of all these structure had fallen down into the spaces that once were the cellars and basements.In many of these smoking ruins groups of rescuers were at work extracting out the cremated bodies of the slain.At many places could be seen hundreds may thousands of human bodies with wrigs covering the head or blackened skulls protruding as though t hese sufferers had tried in vain to fight their way through the avalanches of bricks to the surfaces.

In all parts of the ruined sections of Gertrude Angeline city all along the path of devastation, the tornado of air waves caused by the terrific explosions played all the usual freaks pranks seen by tornadoes.A large weather cock on the extrem top of an ernormous Catholic Church called St Marys was bent all akew, but the fragile roof just below it was all unharmed though wijdow windows were out and one wall and the alter and everything inside the structure totally razed.the thin steel flagging in the main courthouse at Gertrude Angeline city was also twisted and bent, while the heavy wooden one a few yards away with much resistance and a surface for the worse wind to attack remained standing upright.just by the concussion and air waves one i big house seemed to have been blasted in half as if cut in two by a sword, one half was gone, thrown down the other part intact without even the slightest disarrangement of the furniture.

Only one small row of wooden houses were left in a large block completely razed.these stood completely intact while staunch structures of brick and concrete and iron had tumbled like houses of cards about their owners ears or been crushed in by the concussion like eggshells.

The scenes in Certeude Angeline city the hardest hit city as one approaches the extreme northeast section becomes more and more desolate and horrible.At first one would see only shingles gone from houses and tons of bricks gone from chimneys but these houses still standing.Farther alone along one street is littered with tin and roofing and telegraph poles and a perfect network of wires and fallen trees.Then to make things more surprising thy cose upon houses of any size crazily crooked on their foundation as if a tornado had torn them into that position.All roofs are gone and half houses are leveled out of place and next the visitors looked on entire districts leveled flat and stretching away for hundreds may thousands of blocks.In the midst of this scene of devastatio still stands about one quarter of the St Peters Great irls and boys Cat Catholic School but nevertheless one will see that even his portion of the remaining section is only a mass of conglomerated debris.Bodies of nearly a thousand children have been taken from the ruins and the pric principal and all his teachers are among them.Away to the right is a half building of some kind on fire like a large torch the flames shooting a hundred feet into the air.there are no fire departments.they could not get through the wreckage strewn streets.The building was left to slowly burn up.

''That is one of the wic-Hollester and Pandora railroad shops.''explains one of the few surviving children of the school a boy of sixteen years of age.All ''ll of our fathers have been employed there.They are all gone.Only one man however was a survivor in this building.He had crawled several blocks through a hurricane of falling bricks, glass timbers and debris to his shattered home where no doubt she knew his aged wife was alone.He found his big house completely torn off its foundation and standing half way into the street the roof saved in but his wf wife safe where she had managed to hide herself in a large folding bed when she heard the first rumbling of the caving s of the building

They spoke of the fearful rumbling thunder of the distant explosions.the first explosions made low sounds they said like the noise of carts rushing over hilly ground but each succeeding explosion had a louder and louder thunder until finally the last ones burst out with the roaring of a million cannons A few feet down on Weldon street was the ruins of a general home.the general had been instantly killed as well as his wife and children.the red cross was also overwhere and more relief trains were coming and all the doctors and nurses in the districts and many from the outside had been pressed into service..the many hospitals in all the surrounding towns and cities not havocsed by the shocks were filled with the injured, and churches and all lodge rooms had been also thrown open for the countless injured.Emperor vivian had given orders for conscription of all men needed for rescue work and to cremate the number of dead and ordered arrest of any man or women even who refused to serve in some way or other.At many of these towns there was a start of looting of the dead and homes but many were shot by guards and soldiers and shot down like maddogs.

The local and main offices of all the telegraph co p com company throughout the nation was now approximately twenty million messages behind the influx of telegrams into the stricken regions of the shocks.

All the telegraph forces in the affected regions were completely unable to relieve the flood of queries from so many anxious friends, and relatives piling up from that location from all parts of the nation.It was therefore planned immediately to dispatch as many messengers as possible to all various cities in the regions as soon as commi communications could be established in an effort to deliver all the messages.

After the light of the 'i fifth day after the disaster had started to cast its searching rays into thewide sr spread debris left by the terrible devastating earthquakes, and full relief work had been completely organized to gather the still increasing number of dead heal the millions of hury hurt and aid the greater number of homeless the toll of destruction to life and property still included the greatest ever recorded in any kind of catastrophes, even in the storms, similar but natural earthquakes, and the like, with already nearly two hundred thousand reported killed outright, and eight hundred thousand reported dying, and twenty two million, nine hundred and ninty nine thousand injured in two big regions affected.

While the horrible casualty list had been continueing to rise so rapidly and did not seem to stop rising word even came from many hitherto unre- ported places to keep the total casulaties almost more higher than indicated in all the first hysterical messages from the devastated regionss.After already four full days and nights of stormy weather, cold and of terror and suffering and sorrow the dawn of the coming fifth day revealed that twenty of the devastated towns and big cities had been virtually obliterated by fire, whole all buildings of larger cities like Gertrude Angeline and Angeline junction for instance had been leveled completely and fire and stormy weather had added to the ruin brought by the devastating shocks.

Fortunately the big fires for the most part were kept from buildings in Gertrude Angeline city that escaped the fury of the explosions and concussions or flames but the rescuers and other workers were not yet able to dig out all the bodies of the dead from the wreckage to give r or give as much attention to the relief of homeless and maimed and insured as they might have otherwise devoted despite all the outside help that had arived from many places during those early days and even though all relief was well organized.In all these beautiful cities and towns and villiages and farms where there had been happiness, prosp erity and future, the shocks had blasted all.In others it showed the greatest whim sicentricity by leveling and blackening large portions, while sparing Elizabeth.Nearly half of beautiful Gertrude Angeline city, the extreme nort portio n portion was smitten beyond repair.A sister city Angeline junction was virtually leveled to the loss of three quarters of its best buildings. Junction with a population of five hundred thousand people completely lost its existance.A neighborhood town known as Angelinse proper a city of three million people was wiped out with the loss of one hundred thousand in dead or injured.Angeline r or Gertrude Angeline city lost nearly fourteen square miles of its buisness and residential sections.Other hamlets and towns and villages were yet out off from telling their story, annd a hundred thousand fires were raging.

Darkness and stormy nights hampered the scores of thousands of an agencies of mercy in all the towns and cities as no lighting systems could be repaired. More and more soldiers came and the increase of national guardmen drew secure cordons of protections about them.Still thousands upon thousands of gas lights, millions of candles and flashlights in countless numbers were substituting for power plants.Thousands of big pullman cars every hour arrived to house the refugees in one or two sections, and immense villiages of tents arose everywhere else.

These in charge spoke in accross, may hundreds of s millions when asked to estimate material losses.The brief dispatches read $100,000,000 in northeastern Angelinia state alone, but no loss of life, $200,000,000 at Gertrude Angeline city and other big cities,, $600,000,000 in southern Calverinia, and one hundred million in northern Angelinia alone.At the many other scenes no one yet dared to venture to estimate.

The shocks of the explosions affected the entire country of Angelinia and Abbieannia for the distance of four thousand miles, but took its terrible and total devastating toll of complete destruction and horrible loss of lives over a territory of nearly one thousand three hundred miles in fifteen to ten seconds and within five or six hours outside aid had been covering that distance or longer or in longer time to carry help and comfort to survivors. The Red Cross was still a rushing supplies from all big cities and also from Dorothy Gale city.Angelinia Agathia offered one million five hundred thousand dollars morsethe main national legislature offered nearly five hundred million dollars, and all other state legislature as far as twenty five million and the southern Calverinia Abbieannian legion six millions.Other great contributions collected up by schoolchildren inside the nation far out of reach of the devastating war are also expected rea to reach into the millions.

From all the associated Presses throughoutthenation the casualty list proved that it was grau gradually seen that nearly more than one hundred thousand little children and infants, either in homes, private schools or in their own dwellings were all victims.Every available dwelling was a morgue

In the very zone of visitation.Thousands upon thousands of serious and dangerous operationswere performed in stormy weather and virtually out of doors.Columns of persons thirty and fourty deep, and sometimes many blocks long, may miles, by darkness that night of the fourt day still waited to claim their kin and friends.

Ntill no plans for the funerals had been announced in any of the hundreds of stricken cities and towns that day, but arrangements had been made to either cremate the many bodies or bury them in long trenches.Many thousands of bodies remained unidentified and yet it could not be possible to hold them all for identification for fear of quick decomposition.Possibly thousands upon thousands of bodies were so badly mutilated or mangled as to prevent recognition and they were buried in long trenches hundreds of feet long and six to ten deep.Many thousands of more families were found to has have been wiped out, and the indications were that they had been also laid to rest in the same fashion, trench burial.

The scenes of these devastations was far worse than even the awful war scenes in France and other countries during the big world war worse indeed in comparison. One man who was on a train and who witnessed the explosions at a distance of about sixteen miles away des cribed the crashes as roaring thunder trying to split the earth with its din, and that the eruptions of smoke and debris put him in mind as if the world in t hat locationwas rising high into the air. Debris like a cloud blizzard fell about the railroad coach about half an hour later and the sky was darkened for an hours

The city of Angeline junction probably was said to have suffered next in the heaviest loss of property and lives for here also nearly one hundred thousand or more men women and children died,, many of them in big or small school houses, homes and orphan asylums that were razed in a seconds time at the third big shock of the explosions.In one small store in this city ninty small bodies partly cremated were found huddled on the floor.In the same city many fire engines of wrecked fire departments were burned or wrecked so bad that they were completely uselessGertrude Angeline city was now building as many pumping plants as possible on the ruins of its five big waterworks before the raging fires among its ruins could be extinguished.At the same city at near the ruined outskirts a quick thinking home owner used a line of buckets successfully to extinguish the fire among his own ruinsage tremendous was the shocks that even in the railroad yards of Gertrude Angeline city all the biggest locomotive engines were wrecked, and all of them of the heavier and most expensive type. Heavy objects of all kinds hurled far and wide by the force of the expls explosions were found in Gertrude Angeline city in all parts and papers and other materials that that thought that city is so far from the scene of the bl blasts.

preakish shocks of the explosions left the many customary safe spots spots in the path of wreckage and ruins.Many persons who had escaped with their lives had now been able to report their unusual escapes.One man saved himself by crawling into a large coal bin which protected him from fire and falling walls.One family also crept under a large wagon in their barn when the building crashed down before the shocks and spilled a avalanch of tu timbers over the wagon.

all but one of the one hundred and seventy five orphan girls of the Angel ardian Orphange escaped from beinb being killed or unhurt.Also the city thirty five million dollar Mid-hollester and Pandora railroad station and yards was completely completely wrecked with all the coaches and other trains in them.Other big rail road and many shops and factories were also a total loss at the city of Gertrude Angeline as well as a new twenty six million dollar railroad depot, and a eighty five milli... block of bulgoons and factori factory buildings.A valuable eighty five million dollar block of bulgoons and factori factory buildings.A valuable public school near the outerlimits of the city was leveled to the ground by the shocks just after all the little pupils had escaped from it just in the nick of time(get your dime)However fate was near so kind in the other places where thousands of schools had been demolinged demolished.There were many other customary freaks of the terrible concussions and air waves caused by the explosions.One of the interesting was reported from Gertrude Angeline city where a rescue worker noticed a small childs shoe or something like it protruding from a high sand pile and as he grasped it he found a dog under it with a small shoe peculiarly wedged so tight onto its small foot that even all his strength could not remove it.

And for two days emperor Ivian Himself had already completed a tour of the earthquake and explosion devastated districts of the nation accompanied by many of the lords and barons including Hanson Ivian his brothe.....

The emperors after reviewing the scene of wreckage wrought by the concussions promished to do all he could to I aid those rendered homeless and left in near destitution and did so.

The big city of Marcusian itself was left for the most part in a worse than a leveled ai ant hill that has been trodcupon by some careless traveler, and all its community all its finer emptions of neighborhoods and human service aroused is facing a problem of nearly three million homeless in the whole half of the city, west, southwest and north in total ruins and one hundred and fifty of its greatest industries demolished.The city of Marcusian still continued to find and count its terrible number of dead.There were already nearly two thousand more injured in hospitals and others scattered in near by towns for distant buildings and hospitals.Thetotal death list of the city was never yet estimated as the numbers continued to rise but t he known list so far was placed at near one hundred and ninty five thousand.Most parts of the wrecked city of Marcusian was said to have burned to nothing after the terrible shocks from the distant explosions leaving not one house standing in the path of flames.This was the work of one day after the three seconds shocks, and which seemed an eternity to millions of survivir si survivors.And t hey were still continuing to discover the odd cruel and most unreasonable things done or committed by the terrible concussions.Men and women who had seen the explosions and who had watched g the horrible disaster thought some big volcano had b blown itself up into the skies.Many of these hardly had time to get out of the houses before the devastating shocks came.And such an arrival.following the shocks came first a blinding bitter rain, and then a blinding snowstorm and heavy sleet,mingled with this no doubt t cused high and far and wide by the explosions came a rain of hail, and singles, tree tops, and parts of house walls clouds of human remains, pieces of machinery, sheet iron by the car load, torrents of big pieces of glass, bok books, toys, barrels and every material you can think of.
All fell from the sky too.Miracles also happened many in every family who survived to tell which survivors saw a different angle of the fearful terror.

Some declared thatthe city of Gertrude Angeline was pelted by clouds of red dirt after the explosi on so thick it fell that you could not see fifty feet away.Others saw a fiery light descend upon some pa parts of the city.
Some reported goods of a ary description falling from the sky as well as a shower of different materials.And there was one great blessing.The Mary Ickell Orphan Asylum on Gertrude Angeline Heights where two hundred and fifty orphans were confined had withstood the shocks to the last, not even a window br broken.The children however were nearly all panic stricken and it took two hours to quiet them after the shocks.

Another big building which was the orphan asylum schoolcaved in, roofs, bricks, steel girders falling in windrows across the little desks and crushing them.Thebuilding then caught fire and thebuins burned to the ground.What a fate the children would have faced had they been in this school at the time.Still another blessing the big railroad yards shops and freight depots were emptied of almost of the main number of workers before the explosions and shocks.Indeed this would have been another chari charnel hell, as a,l t he yard houses, freight and passenger depots and everything had been leveled flat.
Only one was killed here.The top of the main railroad building was caved in and the pieces of glass lay on the sidewalks on all sides of the building.In the railroad yards the shocks overturned a/lall the passenger cars, and freight cars as well as all the engines as though they were small toys.The chief grain dispatcher was buried under wreckage of the depot but escaped with serious injuries...ffs

Also a conductor of oneof the wrecked cars as well as a number of passengers had narrow escapes.Countless numbers of many different kinds of business records, family arrangements, unmade beds, secret cellars, and everything you could think of were laid open to the eyes of the world as the rescuers and thousands of home owners and renters prowled among the sea of ruins looking for the many injured that they never ceased to stop findinh, or for the many dead, or of the property value.Battery A of the one hundred and sixth Angelinian seige artillery also turned out soon after this great disaster and were still handling traffic aiding in rescue, blasting the burning rooms and homes for more dead and guarding property from looterm.The great Allenton plant pride of the whole southern part of the nation was now a gloomy mass of rubbish.Not one employee escaped death here.There were three hundred and eighty five persons in this factory all women, and fifteen hundred in the main branch.Not even the owner of the factory or the superintendent or the foremen escaped death.Not even one wall was standing,and the building had been a six story affair mostly brick and steel.

Damage here and in many other shops and mills and factories was extremely heavy.The owner had a pretty home in the outskirts of the city near the plant.His two sons one eight year old, and the other six, died from suffocation under the debris, his wife is insane over her loss and his little daughter has a fractured skull and ribs.Next door to his home was a large apartment home with all rooms left open to the winds.Nothing was left intact. Near by at the time of the explosions a large number of children, girls and boys had been playing in the yard when the wreckage came down.The concussions of the last explosions were so violent that they werechurled up twenty feet into the air, and in falling to the ground beams and avalanches of wreckage poured on top of them from one side of the apartment house and afterwards they were dug out of the rooms dead, having smothered under thedebris.

Countless thousa ds of homeless dogs, and other animals were to be seen wandering over the devastated regions.with the dawn of the fifth day scores of thousands of telephone repair men were at work lifting the trees, and fallen poles that blocked the roadways.Hundreds of thousands of shivering men, and many more women were still without shelter no place being found for them many crawling over the places where their homes had stood and surveyed the dismal pr prospects.

One big Cathlcic church was without a roof, windows were shattered out, the high alter was leveled, and all the beautiful decorations and furnishings ruined.

Another big Cathlcic church near by was leveled.

The priest in charge of the latter told a typical story.

''when I left the priest house at eight fourty five that morning I had shelter and a beautiful automobile.''he said .''ow they are all gone and of thirty seven priests I am the only one who escaped with my life.Only inches seperated me from death.There is my m beautiful church completely leveled.''

All the Cathlcic Unions throughout the nation and Cathlcs Catholic Clubs and Societies all joined desperately and generiously in the work of relief.

Indeed most parts of M r Mar Marc cian had been completely obliterated.All of the best and highest houses had been completely razed by the shocks.o many bodies during the four days had been taken from the ruins of the city so continually that the al military and civil murthorities in charge of the rescue and relief work predicted that they believed that the total of two hundred and thirty five thousand did died in the disaster, or will die from the injuries they sustained. Less than fifty thousand of all the inhabatants escaped injury they say..

One of the war correspondents had just completed a sorrowful yet inquiring trip over one of the districts laid low by the explosions and concussions.And this is what he may have seen as he cruised along on a automobile. Heavy storm clouds covered the sky as many could be seen burying or cremating the countless number of dead.Once in a while a fierce menancing wind shrieked a threate ning of sudden destruction through the windrowed streets.It probably was the outer edge of the big storm raging over the country further north, snowstorms blizzards, cold waves and thunderstorms and rail and hail in the south.He entered one section of Angeline junction which now lay flat.All of these scenes he had witnessed left the war correspondent numb to all emotions.The horrid panorama of the disaster of war had been unfolded before him in allits harrowling details.Indeed the awful wholesalescale on which death galloped across a beautiful Calverinian and Angelinian country, the sight of countless numbers ofhomes and buildings and stores shredded to use kindling, the piti- yet large clusters of grieving kinfolk in front of the many morgues in the ruined city all registered vividly at first, but as the main part was reached the sight became more bearable through its community of sorrow and suffering.

He could also see countless numbers of men women and children who lay dead in the horrid shambles stretching into the sickly rays of an eastern sun, probably countless thousands of relatives and friends sobbing their grief and the momentary loss as yet not considered is many hundreds of millions.

He had left one big street behind with its vast army of corpses, another street with its dead crowding the many morgues and other still remaining buildings, and he traveled high and rapidly over the rich farming land outside of the city of northern Angelinia State.All this was also devastated.Not one farm building was seen whole or entire.The war correspondent then came upon a solitary cellar. He could see the potatoes and other farm products and materials in their neat parveled rows but there was not the slightest sign of a house or house, not even a scrap of splintered timbering.Fire had done its work too well.And in front of this disappeared hearthstone this instant crushing of the toll of a probable lifetime. an old man and woman could could be seen standing and gazing vacantly into the pit.They stood so bent and gray so hopeless that neither could add a touch of tears bringing sorrow or sympathy.

He sped on again.far ahead the ray of the rising sun bravely piercing the towering clouds shone on a broad expanse of water.It was the big Aronburgs run river, the pride of Abbiannia, famed in song and story.This day it was sluggish and wider as if mourning the explosion and cart hshook dead in the many towns near its banks.

Five days ago Marcuc ian was the ti typical Angelinia crossroads city, with only big na banks, general stores, and garages, and nearly two million inhabatants who thought Marcui Marcuc ian a mighty nice Angelinian city in which to live.

All the houses were beautifully constructed, mostly all of brick, though many were of wood.On this fifth day as the shoadows recede, Marcu ian or the most part of it is level with the ground.Not merely are the houses and shops, and others wrecked, but they were completely razed, were the city.In every street the same mushed groups of p people stood on every street corner.The same silent sullen throngs were also seen in front of the crushed newspaper offices, reading what bullitins that can be issued, or standing in front of the morgues waiting for other bodies to be brought from the shattered ruins in the ravaged area.Soon the war corres pondent declared he had seen scenes enough. He changes his course and goes fully south and soon leave the mass of desolation fare behind, though yet big fires could be seen far and near. His journey was now nearly over and the windstorm shrieked its rage as it tried to overtu overturn his auto.Long since the futile sun had given up its foolish battle with the clouds that overspread the sky.Purple shadows came rushing from the west.Rain falls in tu torrents a mingled with hail and thunder and lightning add to the turmoil.A early spring thunderstorm rages.

During the last three to four days since the terrible disaster caused by the explosions millions upon millions of dollars in the Abbiannian money had been continually raised to aid the st stricken in t he regions so terribly devastated by the concussions, and to feed and clothe the homeless and hungry and to take care of the many wounded.Approximately three hundred million dollars of this had been subscribed in the city of Angelinia Agathia itself at and that city alone and the immense collection of funds was only half done.During the night following the fourt h day it was broadcasted that half of the members of the homeless people in the stricken districts of the two states, had been housed or sheltered in some manner, but that this was largely temporary, and that the relief work continues.

The immense and strong x city of Angelinia Agathia by those four days had raised almost three hundred million dollars for immediate relief work and other service in the explosion and earthshock scenes.And t he southern parts of devistated Calverinia where eve every single Abbiannian dollar meant one hundred pennies worth of immediate relief paused in t he burying of its many thousands of dead, inthe healing of the countless numbers of wounded, and in the feeding of the many homeless and shelterless children of the wrecked homes long enough to send back tothe city of Angelinia Agathia a series of mes ages of thanks, and a report of progress and the glad welcome news'' God is good to us after all.No enemy in sight for two hundred mile. miles.''.

Officially these messages and the reports also went to Emperor ivian who himself formed the Angelinia Agathia earthquake relief committees.
Actually it went to every one in the city and every local contributing group whose maoney made up a part of that three hundred millions.And the large group divisions of the immense funds thus far collected in the city alone were these;

''The Relief Committees of Emperor ivian of whidh Count De piff was the chair man, and general Meldonia president of the Angelinia Agathia branch of the Abbiannian Red R Cross was an executive member announced that one hundred and eighty five million of itd five hundred million goal had been reached already.All of these immense f n funds and the rest t hat was already in sight was destined to go immediately to the red cross for general administeration. Hundreds of the largest agencies however wee waiting untill their own quotas were reached to give the money in one lump sum to the branches of the Red Cross.On the night of the fourth day the Red Cross at Angelinia Agathia had recieved nearly one hundred million dollars from all over the city and from immense concerns the official bodies in charge of collecting the money in the nation wide camp camp i campaign for more than five hundred million dollars.''Give and give now or money will be drafted''was the slogan of the emperors committee expressing the whole sitia situations c according to all the reports from the stricken districts.

Emperor ivian just ariving from the survey of the devastated districts held a conference with his brother Emperor Hanson ivian, and all his high officers, and the president of the Red Cross.The emperor emphasized the distress down inthose sections of the country, praised the present function of the relief agencies under the general dictdirection of the Red Cross, and urged the necessity of more funds.
As the money was being raisesin the city of Angelinia Agathia medicial aid of various sorts was still being dispatched out of the same city to the stricken areas.The many antitoxin labor stories rushed down immense supplies of gas gangrene antitoxin.the immediate emergency work now was well organized and the observersce believed that everything for the time being was well planned.but yet many of the dressings of the wounded were only temporary, and there was yet not enough nurses or doctors in the districts.the districts still needed more volunteer help, relief squads, and the like for relief workers.and above all there was still a great need for clothing of any kind, for hundreds of thousands of the injured were still lying about on the cots wearing only top coats and suits, for lack of proper clothing.All of this work would take indeed an immense amount of money, lots of it and the whole nation was urging every body to contribute to the five hundred million dollar fund to be administered under the direction of the red Cross and those of well means who refused to give would be compelled to do so under case of necessity.Yet it looked as if prety nearly every one in the city of Angelinia Agathia was giving more than asked for.The surthorities in Angelinia Agathia only first asked for one hundred thousand dollars to start with for use of four days.In that time more than three hundresmillion had been raised and more and more was still coming in.
On account f the drw dread of the foe, and also not to satif satisfy the curious, the ordinary civilian or what we call''The disaster man, or even the most earnest lay worker was refused admittance in the explosion and earthshake scenes.The emperor of Abbiannia himself sent the following notice throughout the districts to all the officers in charge of the soldiers there;

''Make it known through your columns of men and guards that all visitors and spectators under any conditions whatever will not be permitted to visis visit stricken districts in any of the countries at any time.If any coming thrre have relatives or friends and so on there who have been injured or killed let them furnish proof.If they try to go in in spite shoot to kill.''
Similar demands more stristly ordered, came from amcore of other Abbiannian and Angolinian tribunals.and yet hour after hour news of the good work of the contributing work continued to come in.From the city of perothy Gale eighteen thousand auto truck loads of food, many more with blankets, trainloads of cots, and general supplies reached the Abbiannian relief depots at Angeline junction so o nof according to the words reiced from every source.ll children themselves throughout the nation did what they could.

Messages of sympathy for the regions so terribly devastated by the explosions continued to po r pour into the nation from the governments of many nations.As far as the communications had been recieved, the Secretary of Abbiannia had made them public.Among the messages recieved were communications from Protestentia, Normomia, Hicksncile and many other countries.

The message from the ing of Protestenti a was the one more well noted.He had the honor to request that the Abbiannian Government would be willi ng to A rel recieve aid from his nation and gave an expression of his sen sincere sympathy for all those who had suffered in the wars worse disaster so far, disaster that many the onnicent suffer and not the fighting armies.Normomia also also conveyed the following message;

''I am directed my the Normomia isinster of war to express to your Majestty Emperor vivian of Abbiannia, the sincere sympathy of the Normomian nation at the terrible destruction of so many innocent lives and of such an immense ammount of National Property.I beg to add my own no less sincere feeling of sorrow and symmathy, and if you wish I will at your request send or give you si all the aid that will be necessary to help you crush so fiend and wicked a country as Glen landelinia.''
All nations had read of the appalling calamity which had befann f befallen the states of Calverinia and Angelinia and declared their intentions to give aid if need be or at the mperors request.
The survivors of the awful catastrophe though saddened, and stu nned made plans however for the restablishment of the devastated areas.Only one half of the known eight hundred and eighty thousand dead had been consigned to the many hasty graves, and hundreds of thousands of the nearly four million injured were still in the care of doctors and nurses and some still without shelter.four days of the most horoic endeavor by countless numbers of workers moved to their awful taks tasks by thedesperate conditions brought about by the explosions and air waves had wrought great wonders when darkness settled over the scene after the past fifth day.Nearly every one of the homeless persons had been housed in some manner.food had been supplied for all the helpless and increasing amounts and medicines and other comforts had been made available for the huge army of wounded and solace had been afforded to the still vaser army of the bereaved.And probably all the slain had been now recovered from the vast sea of de r debris of the scores of millions of homes in the cities and towns destroyed, and the death otal reached alreadybits highest up to nearly nine hundred and eight thousand, with hardly any of them but fifty thousand identified.
The disaster was indeed one of the gratest and most shocking in any real history and it could have been true, and the quick relief work, and money raising set the biggest on the record owing to the use of hundreds of trains per day, and various other conveyances in darrying supplies and of wireless telegraphs and to the like sending out so many calls for help.Something like one bill thrillion dollars had been raised throughout the nation in the five days to aid the stricken and the subscriptions for the relief a were still pouring in every hour to increas e the ammount.
In the state of Northern Angelinia itself sixteen good size cities had been hard hit by the earthskoo ks and air waves of the explosions and really Marcuoian the hardest of the city hit giving finally a total loss of nearly three hundred and sixty four thousand in killed alone, while two million one hundred and ten thousand were rendered homeless and half of their number hurt many of them most severely.Marcuoian indeed proved to be the worse suffrer after all with all ofs its best houses completely devastated, and with seven hundred thousand to the million injured.A Gertrude Angeline city came next with two hundred and twenty three thousand killed and five hundred thousand maimed. Angeline junction with seventy one thousand dead, and the others with nearly a hundred thousand.Hicksen junction was the heaviest loser however of all the cities being bigger t han GertrudeAngeline city, and in fact in the whole explosion and air wave affects for only one building had been left standing and of its main population three hundred and fifty eightbthousand in total were doomed to death, many more were being found, and nearly one million eight hundred thousand were injured many of them fatally.Indeed most pitiful and harrowing were the stori stories of all burials throughout the stricken districts.Even women and children he helpled, turning from one rank of bodies to the other lending aid.There had been no time for funerals.Yet millions of bundles of flowers sent from Angelinia city and also Gertrude Angeline city to Hicksen junction were sprayed overoall the graves by women and children.
No one of these smitten districts wished to see the sight seer, the curious or romantic hunter which were expected to come and who w did come following disasters of any kind providing the enemy wasonot near.

All the military were under orders to keep them out by force.They would only hinder relief.And the aurthorities there added that they had recieved word from emperor ivian that should any dare to try to enter or succeed in entering would be committing a crime and would face the firing squad, or p be put to work whatever the case would be.As the complete list of the dead began to come in everywhere outside the stricken regions an increasing number of women and children and infants were shown among the dead.In Ricksen Junction nearly fourty per cent of its dead were chl children and babies.

There was also gonefa general st sat isfaction by this time with the progress of rehabilitation.Also the needs here and there as quickly as they were known were immediately filled and the debris was being removed as quickly as possible.Most of the h9 hitherto inaccessable districts were already open to necessary traffic, and the sudden and generous flow of money and provisions and supplies was apparently without apparellel in any calamity.Also many cemeteries overlooking Ricksen Junction were scenes of general gr v grave digging and burials continuing all day long n and an army of nearly five thousand diggers were continually breaking fresh ground for the burial of more victims of the explosions shocks. St Anns Cemetery and others had recieved more than fif ty thousand bodies within one day.Indeed big as she is Ricksen Junction was practically obliterated and had to bury or cremate her many dead as fast aw possible.Sixty five big trench grave had been made in all the graves ards, thesurviving women of that leveled city comforted bereaved n eighbors, and the surviving children placed sprays of chi flowers on the long mounds.Already upwards of fifty long graves representing one tenths of the entire population was l already bearing mute testimony in the cemeteries to the city's disaster.The interments indeed were the most pitiful and heartrending due to the fact that scarce a surviving family in the big city did not at least list a member or two among the hundreds of thousands of dead.Also the early notes ofoptimism and encouragement for rebuilding the future in spite of the enemy and the war was sounded by one of Ricksen Junctions heaviest losers.In a most stirring adress in which he fiercely and horribly denounced the rebellion he elicited tremendous cheers from thousands of listeners who were still in grief and misery.This vast city wanted all its ruined factories built in spite of the war and it proposed to put it through under any difficulties.Even therailroad shops and stations were to be rebuilded.

Colonel Anders of Ricksen Junction added a touch of the most trange mysterious power of the explosion as well as of its concussion or air waves to the after disaster stories of the disaster which so devastated the country. The officer saw the explosion clouds shooting high into the air like as n many volcanic eruptions and ran for his own headquarters to give the alarm.As he took hold of the door knob the building collasped so strangely from the shock that the colonel unhurt though so close was found by many standing still confon confounded by the occurance for he held the doorknob in his handse The concussion had just naturally hurled the building right out of the colonels hands without causing him any injury whatev whatever.

MANY TIMES the large gates of various cemeteries swung open and never again y days did they clang shut.Thousands upon thousands of survivors could not bear look atthe vast graves.Many went to the Gurbodina heights that commanded hill panorama of this horrible Gethsmane and viewed what was left of Ricksen action in the distance below..Many stood beside the trees in which now the many bain redbreasts gaily notified people it was the approach of spring and live, life and loove, and looked about them.Countless thousan ds of open graves in front and rear of them they viewed and also in front.There were still many thousands of more bodies of the slain to be buried.They vir viewed thesebig huddled groups of men women and children here and there and everywhere atthe funeral services or helping in the digging of the long trench like graves.Most of those who looked and vir viewed the scenes were quiet and did not move but if any one would have looked more closely at theseobservers they would have seen that either tears dimmed their sights or that there was a look of grim determination on their faces.They silently viewed the many fresh mounds of spaded eaty earthe they saw the many still open graves side by side.They were down below burying rows of dead children and some of their mothers and fathers also.They were the observing the many bowed figures watching the husky grave diggers at their work.They were soldiers and others.However their large hats either hide some of the lines of grief on their plain honest face or what fury they may have.

The main losers did not shovel the graves, and neither had they slept since the disaster when they left their shops to go th to their cottages and homes which they had been buying on the instalment plans.They found their wives and children in the ruins.These grop gruops of men had been standing here all day.The nightvbefore they had set sat before the gray caskets in the tents put up by the soldiers.These men did not take on much.They did not even show any signs of grief.They did not even cry but were silent and did not speak to any one.They only spent the time watching the many grave diggers or sit beside the caskets.

Many children were being buried here and mingling with the songs of the rites could be heard mingling the twenty third psalms.''The Lord is my Shepard. I shall not want.''The other sounds the watchers could here was the sobs of other men and children.''He maketh me lie down in green pastures.''Near by could be seen a child clinging to a womans skirt.''He leadeth me beside the still waters. Then a child who had been crying continually suddenly said;''What have they done to papa and my sisters.''He restored my soul, Yea though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I shall fear no evil.''And still the watchers mourned.Still another voice was borne to them on the s balmly spring breeze.It came from a man and something like a rusty black frock coat who stood at the head of a long grave a few paces to the east of the weeping mother and childe.

''Dear god sustain us, strengthen us.We ask these to bless and con comfort us in our hour of bereavement and sorrow.''

Throughout the whole day many men were seen standing with their hands resting on the handles of their shining spades or digging graves.some stood almost impatiently.And at the word Amen they would spring instantly into action.The shining blades were seen to flash in the eastern sun as the shovles of l clay and earth went into the grave.The clods would thump howw hollowing on the dead bodies or caskets..soldiers could be seen hurrying away to conduct the burial at other graves..One of the officers who was at the grave said to a war reporter;

''I just came over to do what I could.Mostly Inhave been officiating for those who had no one to do so.I thi Think this is the fourteen hundred person that has been buried in this long trench.''

The group of watchers finally went into one of thebig morgues near by.here in the morgue were the bodies of many persons unburied yet.Many lay on the floors or on slabs and boards.Others were in x caskets.One man saw a tiny form under a sheet in the corner, and observed the smudge on her right cheek like one a child would get while playing mud pies.It was a little unknown girl of six years of age and she had been there s nce the day of the dis disaster and nobody had yet come in to claime her.where were her parents.When they asked any one it seemd nobody knew.the child was still unaccounted for.One of the observers looked in the casket on his left.A mangled woman lay.she appeared to have been a hard working woman for she looked very tired.But what was that the man observed in he left and right arms.Her two little boys unnamed.when her husband found her and the children under the debris she was holding both of them in her hands.the mother instinct.Thinking first of her innocent children and guarding them at the risk of her life at the hour of greatest danger.And they were to be buried together as they would have wished.Another observer saw a large basket. and it held the remains of what they knew not.But it was a man mangled out of all proportions By the very concussion of the explosion his wife had been blown one thousand yards through a rear window of her home but escaped with only s, slight injuries.Her home caught fire after the disasterous shocks.nd the mans wife crawled back to it at any risk.For hours she duck in the hot bricks and charred embers.Finally her search was rewarded.she uncovered the charred and mangled body of her husband.ll night she had sat with him.It was almost necessary to use force to get her to a hospital.And now there she is laughing night and day for her mind was gone..

In a general way all the sufferers of the disaster in both countries had by this time as it was stated been supplied with food, shelter and medicines.ut still rehabilitation had become a most tremendous problem as the many injured were still being given hopit hospital care, the last of the dead were not yet buried, and shelter was being provided for the countless homeless. also full reconstruction of the devastated regions would be an immense task, notonly of those who may have a great interest in the stricken districts but of humanity everywhere. he main Red Cross headquarters at Angelinia Agathia finally issued an order designating every Red Cross chapter throughoutthe whole nation as a main depository for funds for the rebuilding work.An and meansto provide permanent relief for the scores of thousands of orphaned or crippled children by the disaster was also suggested by the Emperor of Abbisannia.Emperor Vivian in conference with all his highest lords and also with officials of the disaster relief committee and the chapter of the Red Cross referred feelingly to the innumerable instances of hurror and privations that had come to his full atrention in his three days inspection of the disaster zone.Present at the conference beside Emperor Vivian were Hanson Vivian his brother, his wife and the empress and the chairman of the disaster relief comittee and the presen president of the Red Cross and the two sons of the emperor .

"there must be at least nearly fifty million people needing relief in southern Calverinia alone" said Emperor Vivian "and it will be necessary for some agency to pass on every case. Scores of thousands of children have lost their parents and are now thrown open to the world and probable to the dangers of the rebels. It is these for whom permanent provision and protection must be made before any rebel armies shows themselves in any of the devasted regions. Never will the nation I belie e ever forget this disaster cmg caused by the enemy, and these orphans will need the most greatest care and intention. Because of this disaster this nat ion will fight all the harder, and only when we go down into annihilation will we give in to the insurrectionests."

In this horrible disaster of the war there was one case responsible to the wicked enemy---typical of millions,--the tragedies of the countless children in the desolation left bythe explosion concussions in southern Calverinia and Angelinia.xin the northe.the immense sum of great sadness scattered by the terrible horror perhaps may most accurately be measured bythe immense army of orphans it made. Angelinia Agathia poured out its sorrow and generiousty in the untold of sum of money, food medicine, and surgery, to bind up the wounds and also to help rebuild the ruined places and sent out vast armies from its mobolizat ion camps to prevent the engroachment of rebel armies upon the ruined distri tdistricts. But the question was asked about Angelinia Agathia;

"hat will the people of the city do--what will they do--to repair the ruin of the lives of so many orphaned children, thr little one so sadly and cruelly and unnecessarily bereft of fathers and mothers just to satisfy the wicked intentions of the Glandelinians?

From Angelinia Agathia therewas one substantial allevlatio.The people were sening out commissioners with the purpose to have them for adoption, give them their own homes, to be foster fathers or mothers. As soon as it wasxlearned how many children had been rendered orphans calls f came from all parts of the city to the surthorities asking for the little girl or boy who lost parents for adoption

It was even suggested to Emperor Vivian by many that many people in Angelinia Agathia wanted to adop a little girl or boy from down there in the ruined districts. the Emperor decided to take the names of those who desired to adopt the orphans of the disaster, and forward them to the proper surthoritles. There was no difficulty in finding theorphans either, because tyere were thousands all of whom did not as yet even know how completely the shocks and explosions had bereaved them. Indeed no arrearrange ent of any armount of words could ever give a full description of the wars probable worse tragedy and disaster that the big explosions caused by the enemy left behind. the agony of hundreds of thousands of badly broken bodies and of millions of broken hearts, wildly broken hearts could not be rendered accto be understood by a hundred b illion words. or in big phrases and sentences or in the saddest poems. Nutwcme of the clamnest and litt last glimpeses, and closeups caughtwhere and there within the area of the war explosions devastation were faintly suggestive of the most greatest anguish. At the edge of the sea of wreckage of windrowed debris at Nicksan Nunction city stood what remained of the home of a of the mayor of that city. vanished into a stretch of bricks timbers and mortar. No flat on the level of the grounds. And the veranda that so strangely remained had just been outside the boundary of the living rooms. Strangely the doorways and small windows of the wall section of the veranda still remained and the paper and moulding also all unscrat had and from the moulding still swung a beautiful and ornamental frame containing that which was the fondest possession of the Mayor and his family. .It was a painted picture of the Sacred Heart of Jesus. Amid the gilt scroll work and the ino illuminated lettering were thenames of the mayors wife and children. The picture hadcbeen consecrated.

The mayor stood that day before the inside veranda wall and stared dry eyed at the framed Picture of the Sacred Hearts.

"My wife and children would be gladdit was left without harm." He saids "And I guess maybe I'm glad too that the disaster did not ruin it. That picture is the only thing that is left to me now."

When the roaring explosions shook the nation with such devastating effects his wife and children were bi i busy in the main kitchen the children helping mother prepare breakfasts. An instant later they were dead their bodies crushed under the debris that fell with the shocks. As the Mayor turned he saw a man whom he recognized as a Tribunal officer leading through the debris cluttered streets a little girl. The child clutched in one hand what remained of her dolls whatever. They were just wandering and nothing else. And none of the strange fantastic freaks or momentoes of the disasterious shocks attracted the attention of either. They did not under any conditions find any occasion to wonder at the strange freaks which marked the violence of the concussions. They did not give even a single glance to the trees turned topsy turvy, the piled up wooden houses, the seas of billowed wreckage and broken bricks. sometime ago this same pair had entered a morgue. A white sheet there was lowered from the face of one of the dead women there.

"Its mama gone to heaven" the child said crying.

The man only stared dry eyed, and then seemingly unconcerned led the way i out into the streets. One little one was seen tramping with apparent tireless feet through the ruined portion of the town calling for his sister. All day he had oral crawled into the wrecked buildings and under masses of twisted timbers looking in vain for her. He had shouted continuously for her carrying the refrain with occasional whistling.

"My little sister I have not seen her since the earthquke" he paused along enough in his searching to explain "she disappeared along wih my father and mother and two brothers in the house where we used to live."

early that morninf rescue workers picking their way through the debris of the little boys home found some t oys but the boy refused to recieve them. "All is I want is my parents and brothers and sister." he mentioned .

At the same time but elsewhere an eighty year old woman was seen standing in one of the littered prairs of the city and she was weeping. And without being cautious of the fact she was holding in regid position a little child doll the only salvage from her leveled home. but the poor womans tears were not for the loss of material things.

"My little baby girl my baby girl--she is dead." she moan moaned. "I saw the falling wreckage kill her. My souldn't I be the on one to die instead of her. I'm old and little Jennie was only a little girl."

Another man who was a bridge engineer also had a harrowing experience. The day when the explosions leveled everything he was working under a bridge repairing some break. But even there and many of the workers felt the impact of the shocks though the bridge fortunately for them withstood the concussions. He and othe others reached the upper banks of the stream as best as they could and then dashed through the suddenly unfamiliar nightmare throughfares of the ruined city.The air was full of debris dust as thick as a blizzard. nd all he foundcat his own home was a site except that held a dozen books remained where he had placed them on the ground under theverands of the structure.Later he found his wife and children safe.They had been outside ot t of the building when the shocks occured and had not even been injured.but they lost everything as their home had been almost consumed by fire that followed.

Aft r after the light of a full day on the fifth after the disaster had passed, and after the sun had casts its last searching rays into the seas of debris left by the dreadful concussions of the explosions, and the relief work had een fully organized to gather the remainder of the still great number of dead, heal the injured, and aid the homeless, the toll of life and the destruction of property still remained the greatest ever recorded in any history greater than any kind of disaster probably ever known of any real istory.here were more than nine hundred reported killed, and nearly four million Nine hundred thousand injured in the two states of southern Abbis annis that had been affected...affected.Affected.

where had been time and again hope, the most ardet hopes that the awful casualty list had been an exaggerated, and that with g the passing of the days that it would have been considerably reduced even beyond the first estimates, but as the days had went on and the reports even came from hitherto unreported places that kept thr the total casul alties up to the former list and then even made it rise instead of fall and when far higher even than first indicated in the first hysterical messages from the devastated regions the whole world soon learning of it was shocked and horrified.

he full greatest loss of life after the passing of the fifty da day after the disaster was really found to be in the city of Anna Aronburg fourty miles away from the scene of the explosions.e where the reports gave proof that nearly four hundred a and sixty nine thousand had been killed out of a population of nine hundred thousand.T a That city had ben almost annihilated and no means could be brought to to send relief there as fires hindered the a pr approach to that town by rescuers.In that place alone the property loss was high into the score of millions, pe property loss at Anna Aronburg alone being thirty three million dollars, with fo five thousand blocks leveled and all swept away by fire.After one night after another of terror and worry, dawn soon relea revealed as soon as communinations could be established that some portions of this vast city had been obliterated, while whole blocks of larger as sections of the city had been leveled, and even outside the city forest fires had added to the horror brought by the explosions and the concussions.

The forest fires were for the most part kept from the towns and d i cities that escaped the main fury of the explosions concussions, but in Anna Aronburg the rescuers were not able to reach there untu t untill five days after the disaster and even when they got there they were not able to dig out the dead from the wreckage, or give as much attention to the homeless and maimed as they might have devoted otherwise, as the heat from the smouldering fires kept them at a distance.As soon as possible outside help arived to this city also coming from many places, and by noon of the sixth day relief there also was being well organised.

At Anna Aronburg city, where there had been happiness prosperty and hope, the concussions of the explosions blasted all in a few seconds.To all parts of this city the concussions showed also the most fiendish eccentricity by leveling and blackening portions, while sparing all theres.te.Nearly t hree quarters of this big city was smitten, and most of that part com pletely lost its existance as big fires wiped it out.Baume town near by was also wiped out by the concussion with its entire population being slain.Many other places were even now yet out off from telling their stories.Darkness, and dense smoke overspreading the regions from the big forest fires still hampered all the agents of mercy in all the towns nearest the big conflargrations, for it would be months before any amount of lighting systems couldbe repo reparedNational troops also arived in these dis tricts throwing huge and i mmsense cordons of protection about them and keeping watch for signs of approaching landelinian armies.Hundreds of thousands of auto lights, countless candles n and flash lights were still being used to substitute for lights of power plants.More and more pullman cars from different lines were ariving to house the refugees found in these new districts, and soon here also cities of huge tents were arising like gl grass.Those in charge spoke anew in millions when asked to estimate anew the material losses.The brief dispatchs from these districts read $36,000,000 loss at Anna Aronburg,, six million dollar loss at Baume and one hundred million elsewhere.Still at other regions no one estimated yet.

In the region of Anna Aronburg city where the explosions were nearest the concussion took its toll over a territory of two hundred miles with the most devastating effects of all in five seconds, and so complete, and caused such raging fires everywhere that it took five days before a d could reach the stricken regions In this city just like at the other places children were the usual victims for at this city it was seen that scores of thousands of children had been killed but only in the many schools, as this city had no pr orphan asylums.Every avail able dwelling in this city was used as a morgue and as elsewhere serious operations by the thousand had to be performed out of doors.

In the location of this city there was also said to he great danger from a vast rebel army that was advancing tward that city with the purpose to capt capture it to be nearer vivian wickey.The whole landelinian column as it was reported was so strong in number that its path of advance was said to be more than a mile wide in some localities in others the column of troops when nat narrowing into wide roadways and the like could be measured by feet or by ten and twenty per man.This landelinian army left in the wake of its advance a disaster so great that the people in the regions not as yet affetd by in its character for the advancing landelinian army left in the wake of its thewar could scar cely and would not believe the reports.The vast landelinian army said to be under general Raymond ichardson federal was.at that time crossing the Mic-Hollester run giver two miles west of the Cedernine junction about fourty miles west of Carbondaler and if the reports came true that the enemy had ravished this litt locity and struck with disaster t he other town then no one could be sure what would happen next.The landelinian army was moving nr northeastward moving tward the town of Denne six miles from Carbondaler but leaving that city unscathed as a christian army of vaster size was there to pop one them s. to oppose this landelinian army should it come.The Glandelinian columns in going through the countryside showed that their presence had been there for every thing beaut iful of nature had been destroyed part of the Glandelinian army having burned two little towns to the ground six miles northeast of Carbondaler then moved on tward West Carbondaler where the landelinian army loosed themselves in all their vengeance and fury ruining all the buildings and setting fire to vast am amounts of propert y.Other sections of the landelinian army finding no towns in their path moved across the Calverinia Angeline wine stateline to form insense encampments and to await t he approach of general Manleys armies which were moving forward tward the strongly fortified villiage of Weakingburg near the stream of Cedernine.

A special relief train from Angelinia Agathia traveling over this section of the Mic-Hollester and Pandora Railroad arived near this town at seven oclock in the morning with more than a three hundred doctors, and nearly a thousand nurses, and narrowling escapedbeing wrecked and captured by the landelinian forces con sen tered concintrted concentrated there.All of the nurses and doctors had been boarding this train with the purpose to administer to the many injured at Anna Aronburg, and now flying squads of other doctors and nurses who were rushed to tward the stricken districts and especially to the more stricken areas werewarned of thelandelinian army laying in t he way.This caused matters to become very great. and hearing of this strange and unusual disturbance of the war g emperor vivian ins issued orders.t o general vivian and others to withdraw part of their armies from near vivian wickey and meet this new landelinian army at Cedernine.

No matter how harrowing was the sorrow at any of these pla ces the enemy of course had to willfully make matters much worse.The little ruined hamlet of Princess Jennie town which of all smaller towns suffered the worse of the catastrp catastrophe inflicted by the concussions of the explosions and where nearly eighteen h hundred were made homeless was also now in danger from a part of this advancing glandelinian army and what horrors would innude if the foe approached for the glandelinians were all of the dreaded Zimmermanians and Scool Scoodlers.so tremendous was the wise of this vast landelinian army that it was spreading over a wide territory and the most important places were being captured and burned.This threatening danger was not due to lack of christian forces but to the fact that the approach of the foe most of the time had been unknown and that also the needs of the cocountless numbers of injured and dying of the ruins engaged the immediate attention of the millions of bereaved survivors.On this day the preparations on the parts of many of the standing armies near this locat ion was being made to move to the endangered spots while still in many of the towns despite the danger of the approaching foe rescue workers still toiled desperately even still in utter darkness, searching for still other victims while strong forces of doctors and nurses with unun unusual amount of supplies ministered to the countless numbers of injured by either improvised lights or none at all.Yet further relief on a wholesale scale was in immediate prospect not because of the need of the injured now but because of the approach of the foe.

most of the troops which had been recently sent to the ruined districts from Angelinia Agathia were sent now tward the direction of the army, one of the biggest armies moving tward Grahams Lanes and the other tward the big city of Phelanton burg which n did not suffer much damage.In addition to all these now moving forward rapidly a army of troops from Gertrude Angelina city and Angelinia „urner and one from Ricksen „unction and of others respectively were ordered to Cedrnine and Melkingburg, and general VivianAnnas and other detatchments were sent to Phelan tonburg also.Also from Angelinia Agathia, „orothy Gale and Ozma town big forces thousands of carloads of ammunition, supplies, and long lines of carloads of army rations and everything you could think of were dispatched to the stricken districts now in danger, while general ivians big armies accompanied also by general Hansons, and two others started their advance for Phelantonburg while those of general „icknells started for Calmanrinia.This sudden disaster which had fallen most heavily upon the nearest towns was complicated by the approach of the glandelinian army and therefore everything was being done to st op the foes advance.And in every city and town f totally wrecked by the concussions the big lists of others in dead were children and even the youngest babies.every wrecked school building had given up its many dead and also homes and orphan asylums and in the Carbondaler morgues the dead were or had been almost piled up like sardines before they were buried in long trenches or even cremated.Among the most prominent dead in these cities and towns were large numbers of important men of the Angelinia Agathia nobility.your of these towns, Ricksen junction, Princess Jennis town, Madge Evans ville and Rosey ville were in danger from the approaching Glandelinian forces.„Nd these towns also had bore the worse of the disaster.

One of the crack war correspondents and also crack photographers for the Angelinia Agathia International News real was the first one in returning from the devastated areas shaken by the shocks to tell of his narrow escape on his homeward return from the stricken districts.

''I've surely covered in my whole life, scores of tornadoes, have seen that big devastating one at Abbieannia in Easter, have seen throughout the world many great and devastating earthquakes and volcanic eruptions, and though I had seen all these destructuo destructions there is nothing to equal the black ruin that was caused by the explosions set off by the enemy and also by the vibrations.

Yet to complicate that for me I narrowly escaped da death.I was on a returning special relief train from the town of Angeline junction and nearing the vinicity of Carbondaler we could see fires of burning towns, many lines of automobiles overturned wagons wrecked, trains wrecked, trees in out of the way places literally cut down or split into kindling, grass ruined and blossems destroyed and a million other evidences of destruction from what we could not tell.It looked mighty suspicious.

Near the vinicity of Carbondaler the train was suddenly stopped by several strange officers on horseback wearing gray uniforms which we thought at first were officials of the Calverinian Health department as they wear a sort of gray clothing.There was however on the station platform in a moment a crowd of gray clad soldiers and I realized at once''landelinians.''The unites of these Glandelinians had at once formed on every coach of the train.Most of the doctors and nurses taken prisoners were hustled away into waiting trucks and army wagons and dispatched to the district near Phelantonburg Within ten minutes I had cleared myself of the whole train unseen and securing a horse where no one saw me I went off like the wind and reaching Carbondaler gave the alarm.So smoothly were the things timed thatthe army at Carbondaler were formed in half an hour and part moved forward with the purpose to rescue the relief train if possible.Carbondaler as I saw also suffered a little from the shocks.In this town more than seven hundred big residences were a total wreck.Houses looked as if they had been ripped off from their foundations, or piled on top of one another, but no one were killed or injured here.''''''';;;;;

''Like a gigantic volcanic eruption which shot black and white clou ds and volumes of wreckage high into the air hurling wreckage all around and making shocks that crushed probably the whole country''was the graphic way this correspondent described the explosion and the devastation it caused.He had also seen the ex plosions on ahigh hill though he was nearly fourty miles away from the scene Before there had been any news of the enemy's approach the war correspondent had hurried into one of the stricken cities to give aid in all the rescue work he could possibly perform.He had seen everything strewn around in conglomeration of confusion, countless numbers of bodies, trees, and all houses wrecked.In many places he had heard screams and of cries of por Gods sake take us out'' but though the rescuers tried to reach them they could not for the ruins were on fire and the flames drove back all their attempts, and they had to let the poor victims burn up.

One of the main mysterious of the concussion was that many women and their children were found dead in fields and in woods.It was believed that many of these women and children had been out there when they aquaw the explosion clouds shooting high up into the air.some of the women fearing it was an approaching typhoonic storm ran to gather their children when following a concussion that shook the trees so violently as to denude them of their branches the children who were on almost within their graps were hurled from them and far into a field as if a fierce wind had done it though no wind was felt.

Some of the sono women who were not hysterical or scared out of motion persued but picked up their children lifeless.At other preceeding concussions the women and children were killed by fallen trees of or by some strange mysterious force, maybe by the air waves produced by the explosions.

Another big tragedy was of a atendant in charge of a small childrens home where all of the children under his charge were killed, while those of other attendants who were outside in the yards escaped without even the slightest injur injuries.Those of the other attendant girls and boys weresuffocated under the rubbish of the destroyed building.One of the children of another however who was also a girl was also buried in the debris but she escaped without injur ies.

''I was in the lower floor when the shock came''the little girl said''and when the building fell down I was buried under a pile of bricks wood and mortar but managed to of crawl out.''

The strange freak of theconcussion wqw was also manefested by the news that three girls and four boys playing in the yard of the same building were hurled upwards and then forwards for the distance of two hundred yards by the viberations, and later their mangled bodies were picked up by rescue parties.

One of the railway workers when he heard the explosions and felt the first severe shocks took re fuge under a big locomotive engine and that move saved his life.At the first booms of the distant explosions he had looked and saw the immense clouds rising high into the air making all the appearance of a volcano in violent eruption.He heard the tremendous roar of the preceding blasts and as the shocks grew so violentl that the round house began to collaspe he quickly threw himself under the engine.Everything collasped, and bricks were hurled every which way, but when things calmed down he crawled out unhurt and also commenced aid in the rescue work.He claimed that the debris dust that followed the collaspe of the buildings in the town remained in the air like a thick wi white blizzard for three hours, making it very difficult to breathe.

A sort of strange pink haze also followed the concussions.

In another fact ory of the city of Ricksen junction piles of tin cans and other materials saved the lives of many girls workers and the like.The girls were actuely thrown un and hurled through open doors and windows by the violence of the viberations, and against stacks of tin cans and boxes which kept the roof from collasping though all the walls went down i with a great noise.

Another man also gave an eyewitness to the explosions.His description was thus;

''where was immense rolling clouds shooting probably thousands of feet into the skiew, followed by white masses, terrific deto nations like the worse of thunder in rapid succession of crashes that stunned you, and masses of wreckage spread over the whole sky like a cloud.My wagon held the road though it was almost overturned by the worse concussion.Then followed a perfect cloud burst of all tinis of wreckage.„he tread of the immense army of mourners echoed every one of these sad days through the hushed streets of the devastated cities as the corteges still continued tward the graveyards.„countless numbers of the victims of the dis aster had already been laid to rest.„nd in accordance with an agreement of the surviving residents of the bereaved cities and towns in which everybody had some one to mourn there could be no funeral displays, no to lling of church bbells no services but just burying in deep trenches and then the strewing of flowers sent from everywhere to the stricken districts.Not a hearse could be seene

Death and destruction unparelled in the war had benumbed the bereaved in southern Calverinia and northern Angelinia, their days of crying not yet have shown any signs of coming.Even in the countless morgues throughout the whole region, where the ceaseless tap, tap, tap, tap of countless footsteps fearful and sad sounded without intermission there were no hysterical cries to break the strange still mess.gasps were heard now and then, and chocked sobs, and clearing of a mans throat--but that was all...

It was only when a pason would walk down the silent aisle of many of the morgues and see the many dead children from three to ten yeqrs of age, that one could feel like weeping out loud, or clench his fist with the grim determination of having revenge on the enemy.Even the countless tales of horror left the survivors without power of grief.

One soldier who was a guard was one of the first at Ricksen junction who reported without betraying the slightest emotion of finding a tiny b aby trying to nurse at its mothers breast or recall also of extracting a four fou foot splinter that had completely nailed a six year old child a little boy to its mothers bosom.

Des pite the terrible and unaccountable number of injured persons to be found throughout the regions the doctors and nurses from Angelinia Agathia and other towns had done a most noble piece of work.The local doctors & doctors and nurses were just about out of existance from need of aid when the volunteer doctors and nurses arived from those places.No words not of even the nation itself could ever be too high in praise of them, nor could& could any of the victims be able to express their appreciation for the comfort that the knowledge that so many relief trains were on the way to re to aid them.The many that reached the ruined cities to care for the countless wounded had found conditions critical beyond comprehension.All local hospitals had housed over the regular number and only less than ten per cent had been attended before the main relief arived.countless fe fractures, abrasions, and broken bones and other injuries comprised the majority of the ailments of the more than four million wounded.

On the corner of one of the streets of the ruined city of icksen unction a tall old lady leaned from the stained g s glass window of a litt le red brick Cath-olic Church now converted into a headquarters for the Abbisannian Red Cross.He sullenly gazed down upon a sea of upturned faces, gaunt hagg haggared faces, studies in sorrow and desires also for vengeance.Faces of thousands of men, faces of many more of women, faces of little boys and girls, but few of them.They were seeking their loved ones.They clung to the forlorn hope that they may still be among the living.

''Who's next?'' this suma man asked, and his voice seemed indeed very far away as if he cared not to talk at all.

''Jennie Alle; llenson.Have you any word of Jennie Allenson''sobbed a mite of a woman what a very small babe at her breast.She was wearing a shawl of all colors cotton stockings, and a faded dress.she gazed hungrily--oh so hun rily at the old woman in the stat stained glass window.The old lady herself scanned a sheif of papers hurriedly.It seemed an i enternity before she lifted her hr head and looked at the small woman.She started to speak, slowly but something in the eyes of the other made her stop.Again she looked through the papers more slowly and then shook her head more sadly.

''No report on the appearance of your litt le girl Mrs''gut''ns the woman's shoulders started to sag and as she clasped the baby tighter;''There may be word of your baby at Carbondaler.They have taken many ofvthem there.''

The poor little woman half staggers away.Her little girl was missing.The sullen man in the window turned to the Red Cross woman and said with a grin;

''That was a great scene was it not of that poor woman losing her baby girl.''Then with a sneer''And our armies give quarter to such brute as those landelinians.To Hell with them.''

The woman said nothing but looked more sadder.Next came a old man in overalls.His wife and two children were missing.When he asked word of whore they were he only recieved the same answer as the litle old woman did.The man in the window looked more morose but said nothing more.A fierce fire of hatred for glandelinia was burning in his viens.He was-a Abyssinkilian.Those kind of Abbisannians would not think of giving quarter to glandelinian soldiers.And so it went on throughout the day.veryone were trying to claim their dead from the toll of the disaster in as many little villiages or big cities.Wty with rough boards and boxes as their countless biers and sheets and blankets as their shrouds the immensely long heaped up rows of still forms lay in countless mortuaries, churches, clubs, and private homes.And between the aisles of bld bodies many of them school children and orphans and babies in arms walkeendless streams of men and women and children looking in vain for lost ones.It was a task of which there had been no time before because of the osturgent needs of the vast army of survivors who were seriously injured and was being inacted amid scenes of heartrending sorrow everwhere unparalleled in any nation before and in communities to which st orm and shock disasters with heavy losses of life and proerty damage was not one big strangers. he scenes everywhere throughout the sirkcne districts were made the more h rrowing and heartrending because of the horrible vengeance which the concussions of the horrible dear destructive explosions had wrecked on thr hthe millions of victims. ll of all the dead bodies viewed by s all spectators and by representives of all high personages not a singlone even of the little childrem but was horribly mangled, scarred or burned, all of them bryo nd recognit ion.One gray haired old lady in the clothing that betoken she belonged to the well to do class passed a row of bodies of many children of a wrecked orphan asylum victims of the disaster at the same city, and she seemed to apress the sentiments of all when with big tears streaming down her f wrinkled cheeks she turned to a companion or friend and sobbed loudly;

''This was no disaster caused by nature.It was a terrible crucifixion caused by the wicked enemy of our Blessed Lord.'' hile con countless numbers of heartrending scenes were at ill being enacted over the bodies in all t he wrecked towns and others to where they had been brought scarcely less full of pathose were the incidents in the countless thousands of makeshift hospitals.That was especially true at Rickson Junction where countless numbers of doctors and nurses who had worked steadily since the day of the disaster labored far into the night of the fifth day after only by candle light doing what they could to alleviate the pain of the many more desperately or seriously injured.Scoren of thousands of the broken and life long cripplies left now by the disaster were wheeled or carried in rapid succession before groups of doctors and surgeons who sadly pronu pronounces the f fate of t he poor sufferers after hasty glances and turned to the next trying their best to hide their tears.More often than not hope at all was held out but the most atraordinary number of amputations were found to be absolutely necessary.Even in the big town of Carbondaler on the approach of the sixth morning before the arival of another relief train that escaped the enemy filled with doctors and nurses from Angelinia Agathia the desperateness of the horrible situation with all the real or makeshift hospitals clogged like sardines in a can, churches and thousands upon thousands of private homes and other buildings filled with the victims from Rickson Junction caused the surgeons and doctors t o operate without even any anesthetics, while the victims to the new comers appeared to be overwhelming in number, con countless tales of harrowing and narrow escapes, the wild pranks of the awful concussions and of heroism seldom equaled in the war or in any war u following any disaster were heard on every side.

In many parts of the wrecked cities there were thousands of instances where dogs exhibited true canine affection for their masters or mistresses the men women or children penned in death under the debris of burning or Kveled buildings when they braved streams of water, clouds of steam and explosions and even resisted the efforts of firemen to tug at their lifeless forms refusing under any conditions to be driven away untill the firemen or other rescuers and even soldiers and war engineers chopped away the rubbish and recovered the bodies from the wreckage.

One child a little boy was held tig tight in the arms of his elder sister a girl of nine years of age and saved from possible death while three high walls of their home were leveled and burned down away from them.Despite the terrific concussions the fourth wall though it shimmed and also an almost tangoed in its trasors remained intact and the girl clung to it and she and her little brother escaped unhurt.Ten brand new twenty thousand dollar fire trucks and engines of the Carbondaler department which with companies of the Anna Aronburg junction and other departments from near by towns were burned up on their first run when they became mired in mud sniush snow and debris and the sea of flames swept over them.

A large committee from the Angelinia Agathia National Legislature visited the erlosion shaken area of the two states of Calverinia and Angelinia with the purpose to check up the loss of life, the number of injured ja and the extent of the awful property damage.Te Their investigation resulted in estimates of a total of more than nine hundred thousand dead, four million five hy hundred and eighty seven ds thousand injured, eighty five thousand missing, and fully a score of million made homeless and many of these having slight or minor injuris, and in these tro states only.The whole country had beenshaken but not with any disasterous effects like this.Only Big girl Knool, Angelinia Agathia, and Dorothy Gale and Gris Crowley and ivian wickey, and Calverine, and some other towns reported some damage and small loss of life but it was nothing compared to these two sections of southern Calverinia and northern Angelinia.

In every city that was crowded with the injured brought there the countless numbers of doctors and the armies of nurses and red cross workers and soldiers and others continually worked day and night caring for the injured and disposing of the vast ses of deades he suffering and acute misery in the devastated regions was intensified beyond comprehension because so many hundreds of thousands of the dead and injured were out of employment on account of the savage nature of the bloody world shakening and desperate war, and due to the devastating effects of the battles, according to a statement signed by o Count De Biff and his assistances at Angelinia Agathia.....

Not far away but standing beside a high grain elevator that parodially escaped damage was a two hundred and fifty foot signal station, stark and gray as a dead mans finger.In that awful scene of utter desolation and devastation it stood alone.It was the only thing that the shocks spared in t a large strip of territory a quarter of a thousand miles wide and two thousand miles longe

Not even the nidetwisting, rip-roaring tornado could have accomplished such destruction in so short a time.Near where stood this high signal station used by army signal corps many years before were fifty thousand homes mostly one to two story frame cottages.They were now kindling wood, splinters, debris and lovold wreckage.And what were they like those long distant explosions to have affected the whole nation from coast to coast with the concussion and visit the nearer sections with such overwhelming disaster was not...?

"It was like the eruptions of flame and smoke and debris from out the mouths of Hells"said colonel Brooks one of the officers in charge of the stricken districts who had seen many in th e path of ruin at the time of the explosive e u eruptions."The concussion blew some of my soldiers clar out the windows of one of the army barracks.It hurled me onto thefloor as if I was trying to make myself out of a baseball.Luckily the building was more strongly made and did not completely cave in as other have done."

The same colonel saw a t five year old baby girl a very pretty child hurled by the very viberations two hundred yards through the air as if she had been a baloon

He dug her out of a pile of bricks and mortar and timbers.He found her seriously but not mortally injured.Her mother, father, and brother and sister were killed.Many soldders who were compelled to tour this awful no-mans-land that was the city of Jackson Junction witnessed heartrending sights, sights that will haunt them untill t hey die.These sights however did not make them weep or cry.They showed no emotion whatever.They knew what cau caused it and who was responsible.They only sneered.Dangerous soldiers these Abyssinkilinians.They hate the glandelinians worse than a child hates castor oil or sulphur and Molassess.One soldier as he passed his beat was suddenly attracted by seeing a graceful pretty pretty little girl of seven years of age huddled beside a white and black dog near a hole of her home that was once a basement.He knew she was orphaned for he had himself helped some soldiers dig her mother and father out of the ruins only that morni ng.He did not weep at this pitiful sight either.But if any o je had passed him-he would have ran for his life.His face was as ugly as a demons.If he had seen a glandelinianssoldier or a prisoner, even unarmed or wounded he would have tortured him to death on the spot.Another guard saw a very old gentleman painfully digging away in the ruins next to where the litt is girl was.He was a man who did not have the chance to place his small savings in any bank.He had hidden his money in a small niche beside the fire-place.He had saved more than one thousand dollars out of hard earned savings. The shock made the fire place most mysteriously disappear.This guard only saw a grim ss expression on his face.His fist was clenched up and as he passed up and down and he muttered something under his clinched teeth.He too was an Abyssinkilinian

The first guard as he continued his beat saw a lamb leisurely sauntering the length and breath of the same no mans land of Galverinigpis onwes are dead. By the concussion two cows and three pigs belonging to the same ones had been hurled a half mile and landed saftly feet first in the river.

In the ruins of oneof the buildings half standing the guard could see a canary and heard itvsiging in a cange standing on an upright table, and this poor little bird was also without a mistress or master.The very roof was sheared off the house by the sudden strength of the air waves, while the walls crushed in the man and woman killing them both undertons of wreckage but the table and the canary were untouched.Near by was also observed by the guards a frail sad faced woman frantically at work removing the timbers of bricks of her own home.She was out shopping when the concussions occured.At that time her husband was at home sick of a fevor and also her children.When she returned they had not been found.Since the day no word has been recieved of either of them.She had frantically toured the many hospitals and morgues but in vain.It was just another one of the countless tragedies.The guards continued on their beats as if they were not observing anything at all as if they did not care .A person who did not know them would have believed they had hearts of chilled steel.But before being on guard duty they had visited the brick heaps and wreckage of timbers and the like that had formely been the schoo school buildings inthe city.At either of these places these guards had encountered immense groups of grief strisken women and men or children, some praying, some wailing, some shouting hysterically.

They were thw moths, mothers fathers, and sisters or brothers of the unestimated little ones w o who did not escape--if only to a slab in an improvised morgue-when the shocks of the explosions occured, and the tremendous t remendous air waves occured.They were waiting for the recovery of the countless bodies from the ruins.They had not eaten since nor did they sleep.The guards did not seem to pity them.After that while wandering about the ruined city or rather picking their way over many of the fallen trees, tepegraph e poi poles, telephone and elstris llight wires and every kind of house hold utensilsthe guards came across a tall whiskered man his head bowed in his hands sitting with a little girl and boy on what looked to have been a piece of a house roof of a wooden cott age.

ith that that is left to your home sir''One of the guards had asked him. ith the man answered, and then he looked up.The soldiersnoticed his eyes were dull and almost vacant.Then the little girl who looked as if she had been dying of mer dying of misery and sorrow sadly pointed to a corner across the street free where they were sitting.

A small wooden box that may have been a trunk some time ago but now much battered stood under an old oak tree the that had been denuded of all its brances by the air waves, and that was all the soldiers saw.

"Why"said one of them"There never was any house there.You must be fooling us little girl."

"There was ''said the sad eyed man.The concussion blew it all to nothing.And r had been thirty five years buying that little home.It cost me fifty thousand dollars.I worked hard for that money."

"And where is your wife?Is she injured?"

"She is in an ar y army hospitalshe took refuge in my shed and it collasped - and crushed in on to top of hershe will die as there is no hope for her"the doctors said.

The soldiers went on and th u though they looked at each other they said nothing. Abyssinkilians though of the same nationality are different soldiers than the Angelinians and Abbissanians.They do not believe in giving quarter to such enemies as the wicked glandelinians who are responsible for all this.

There were hundr hundreds of thousands in the hops hospitals. gent ly and tenderly the doctors and nurses ministered to them.Even all the red dress n nurses and others sent down by the Angelinis Agathin committee on special trains had been rendering yeoman service since they arrived.

On the morning of the next day about one hundred and twenty five thousand bodies more had ben recovered from the concussions wreckage and the these caused the estimates of the number of dead to reach the fian final marks In the city of Anna Arenburgs which was the heaviest suffer of all t he force of the concussions and air w v waves wrecked the citys biggest power plant: cutting off water and light for the whole city itself and also the surrounding country. In this city alone the concussions, air waves, and falling tons of debris hurld upon it by the far distant explosions as well as great fires had rendered about two million homeless the entire population.All of the buildings of the city not burned by fire were totally demolished and the rest including even the best and richest residental sections swept out of existance by big fires.

Five hundred students were k illed and fifteen hundred injured when the Anna Arenburg high school was razed by the very air waves itself.And about twelve hundred other high school students were also killed when four other big universities were wrecked.Some of these fortunately were children.At one big picture hospital which mysteriously withstood the shocks and the effects of the air sions took care of many of the injured pupils of the wrecked universities and many sions were being handled by surgeons in other places.Even now scores of fires were still burning in the wreckage of t he city.The city of Anna Arenburg covered probably nearly thirty miles in width and fourty in length and had a population of over five million one hundred thousand people.Now after the concussions and explosions the whole city was leveled and the grounds outside the city even for miles was littered with charred drbri debris.Many fires broke out following the destruction done by the viberations and air waves, and for days the fire depart ments had no water whatever and had to let the big fires burn.In many instances we dynimite used to check these conflargrations, even though whab when the whole city seemed doomed.At many o points of this burning city many improvised pumping plants was rigged up to replace the structures which the furious concussions had razed to the ground and countless streams of water was sent flowing down the many mains down the streets.Yet with that meager results the fire departments hardly could save the remaining buildings, a and the fire were even now still burning just as fiercely as ever.In this city all the eletric light and gas and other plants, including all the big mi mills and fasteries were destroyed. The most heart breaking scenes still continued throughout the districts of ruin and death asothe countless dead were taken to the many morgues, and the vast trains of injured to the relief stations.Virtually all of the deadbodies found in the wreckage was cruelly torn mangled, and battered.Thousands upon thousands of these bodies had huge splinters, huge pieces of glass, piece of iron and other metal and pieces of planks and dishes and the like drives through them.Nearly five hundred thousand of the dead were found with all of their bones broken indicating the concussions of the w explosions had hurled tons of debris upon them in a moments time.Half the number of dead bodies were charred by fires which spread in the wake of the explosions devastating shocks.

score of schools at north Avenue in Anna Arenburg city was highly blown to pieces by the strange air waves caused by the tremendous explosions, and also all school buildings in the entire city.No pupils in t hese schools had been killed in any of these places because for them their time for school was not yet come but countless thousands of children had been killed or injured in their own homes, and thousands more in the destruction of orphan asylums and home for other children especially crippled and thelike.

The destructive effects of the concussions came withoutthe s lightest warning.
On account of the need being extremely pressing call upon call for volunteer gravediggers went forth from every wrecked city and town day after day.the volunteer leaders were also asked to meet in the lodge halls as soon as possible.Depite the danger of t he near approach of the enemy the devastated regions were now comparatively quiet.Relief now was well organized indeed, and many thousands of those whose hurts were less serious had left the hospitals and other places relieving the doct ors and nurses of overwork.Many committeeswere maki ng special provisions for the many children rendered opr orphans by the tragic disaster and the surviving people whose homes had not been badly damaged opened them to those whose homes were totally shattered.Still added relief equipment was still enroute and more armiesof troops were going to the devastated areas to hold off any wicked attempts of the foe.
At a late hour of the night following tn t.he fifth day large gru groups of persons were still waiting for permission to be admitted o the morgues and other places and all hospitals.Many silent lines could be seen standing before the hospitals day and night and also before the morgues.These anxious friends and relatives had gat gathered despite the continued warning of attendants that they could not be admitted to the crowded wards in the hopes that a chance might be permitted them to learn the condition of their loved ones.One man walked into a morgue on that evening seeking for some trace of his wife and four childfe children.He soon found his babies stretched side side by side all dead.Not finding his fwife he inquired for her but was told she was mysteriously missing

Even up to the fifth night there were no lights in any of the ruined districts save the candles, flashlights and the lamps and lantrens and the like which glowed here and there there.Also the wreck of many big coal companies yards was still burning and threw a bright red ole glow upontne skyMany bodies were even recovered from the river itself and one was that of a old woman.A woman and her three children all boys was rescued that afternoon of the fift day from beneath the debris of her shattered home.She herself had apparently been struck on the head by falling lumber.Her screams and those of her children when they recovered attracted rescue workers who succeeded in extracting them.
Probably one of t he most miraculous escapes of the disaster and escape from death was that of a man and his ten year old child.The man with his young daughter in his arms was blown or hurled to the top of a tree by the air waves, but managed to stay there untill the shocks of the explosions ceased when both climbed down. Neither of the two wereinjured though they had been badly scared thinking the world had suddenly come to an end.His four other children at however, three boys and one girl h had been killed.
When seconds was all the time, necessary for the concussions and air waves caused by the explosion s which wrecked over a score of southern Calverinian towns and cities to hearld its approaching horror and leave death and destruction and then a smiling spring day in t the horrible wake.Five minutes before the shocks occured the sky had been darkened by clouds of strange smoke rising in the distance and the air had been suddenly and most strangely warmed up.Gasing with incredible suddeness but a few brief moments were permitt ed by the devastating shocks and air waves for the escape of those in the houses to rush into the open.Ten seconds later after the dark clouds broke and cleared away the southern Calver nian sun which had has caused all kinds of spring flowers to bloom as early as March again was spreading its glow over the destruction wrought by one of the worst explosions that any one could ever conceive.

One witness declared that he was able to hear the crashing roar of these awful explosions at a distance of one hundred and eighty miles and see the series ofimmense clouds rise and shoot high into the air mingled with bright red flashes as if from the crater of a volcanic eruption.

And still out from the wide spread devastated area of both countries in and especially in southern Calverinin came urgent appeals for the antitetanic serum to prevent the death from the awful dease called lockjaw to thousands of the injured.And at the reciept of the first new messages relayed by the chief surgeons of the region the other t owns and cities throughout the country that could purchased and shipped as much of theinitial sul supplies of the needed serum they had, enough only to inoculate one hundred persons.
The calls for the serum came in from all big doctors and surgeons who were stationed in the devastated regions with other physcians and nurses.and the pruchase of the serum was badly needed out of the funds collected by all news paper concerns throughout the nation.The serum would indeed be helpful in a way that immediate relief was most needed and that delay in admins administering the serum would be extremely dangerous and probably fatal to many thousands of the injured.

In order that all the serum that could be had could be pla ced aboard trains for the stricken districts an many of the i highest officials awakened at midnight speeded from their homes to the buildings supplying the serum to pack the shipments.And reports of all news paper concerns throughout every city of the nation not in t he possession of the foe boarded trains with the same serum in their own possession and went with the p r purpose to turn it over to the physicians in the dist-icts ruined by the war shocks.All the available supply that could be found in the whole nation was to be sent to the stricken nations by way of Carbondale.The supply was also obtained by the Angolinia Main Branch of the Red Cross.

Another surprising event to this chapter was the colorful history of the Abbisannian t steam and eletric transportation.Behind a locomotive riding the rails at the highest speed of sixty five to seventy miles an hour for nearly one thousand six hundred and eight miles from Angolinia Agathia and elsewhere, an army of doctors and red cross nurses who answered the call of the nation to aid the stricken were rushed into the earthshock regions in southern Calverinia and to northern and northwestern Angolinia.This speedy relief for the millions of injured men women and children was made possibleby the president of every railroad of the nation.they gave only curt orders, and these orders were immediately obeyed.Yet the work necessary to carry out these orders showed what progress and mens igenuity had done throughout the nation to the rail transportation system of the nation despite the efforts of the rebells to stop them.All the officials of every operating railroad, veterans b veterans of the railroad and war game took upon their most experienced shoulders the task of guiding the speding trains safily even through the very zones and territories occupied by the Landelinian trwies, and fortified camps, a task of great peril and proportions because of the fierceness of the enemy, and of crippled virus, and many derailes.

At the Arenburgs gun station soldiers and officers of the army engineers of elebtricity grouped themselves around telephones and telegraph instruments and built up communication lines that would clear the tracks for the specials and guard against wrecks, and other train disaster that may be caused by the rebel raiders and other enemy forces.with line upon line of communications fina ly in repair stretching along the line of.way on the Mid-Hollester And Pandora railroad into the ruined city of Dickson Junction and to Gertrude Angeline City, the veteran engineer of the Special Arenburg Limited, carrying an immense train of doctor, doctors supplies and a force of well armed Abyssinkilian troops and a m c machine gun corps opened the trottle of engine II,009 and this relief full guarded was well on its wat way at a rate of sixty nine miles an hour and increasing the speed.

With his fingers at a telegraph key at Maldon Dicknell town the general superintendant ch checked off the miles as the speeding train flew southwestward. He had made the journey to Maldon Dicknell city by motor car but found the train had bat him by ten miles.Att Atched to this special train was a long armoured car, two big other cars armed with batteries that had arived in Angolinia Agathia from the south only two hours before the special departed at nine pe p st NineP.M.
Even while this train was rocking along those many miles officials were then preparing for the transportation of additional city doctors And nurses, and also more troops to be sent to the stricken districts.Nearly fourty million troops already were protecting these districts.However throughout the wholenation there had been complete demorilisation of all Communications which had been the chief cause and effects of the earth shocks caused by the explosions that shook the whole nation early that strange morning.Throughout the nations countless millions of telephone poles were down even along many rail road right of ways, and wire communications had been completely paralysed in all parts of the whole nation even way up in northern Abbisannia, and down to the lower border of southern Angolinia and throughout Calverinia.All of the telephone poles and others had been put out of comission in Angolinia Agathia.Otherwise in Abbisannia itself no train service had been affected but in many cities for a day street car services had been handicapped.One strange freak of the concussions of the explod explosions occured at Delights Junction near Vivian Dicksy.Great damage was done in the besieging christian camps what the writers of the Norma and Sun Beam rivers was swayed so violantly by the concussions that the water flooded the main company streets to a depth of ten feet and then swirled back again as if a tidal wave had struck.
Logs and timbers and other wreckage tossed about by the strangely rating waters of the two rivers broke millions of window windows in the many barracks.Many soldiers were swept down the river on ice cakes and for a time their rescue seemed impossible.

The main officer in charge of the medical unites organised after the disaster had been known and rushed to the devastated areas on the first relief trains had surprised the nation by this message to the Emperor of Abbiannia, Robert Angelis Vivian at Angelinia Agathia;

"The whole situation is now completely under control.But many have already returned from the stricken areas and the scenes and horrors cannot be exaggerated.But now there are pne platy of doctors and Red Cross nurses on hand and only few more are needed.Thousands upon thousands of em emergency hospitals have been quickly established throughout the districts and all the doctors and nurses are doing great work.The relief work that started a short time after the disaster was known has been continued throughout the week with a zeal born of generosity and sympathy.All the men, soldiers, medicine, supplies, food, shelter, clothing and others which had been hurried to the stricken regions on all the special trains have been recieved.We now have immense stores of chlod chlorids of lime, laboratry of units for testing weer water taking cultures and so forth and much surgical equipment here.Everything is gone going swell and if the foe do not annoy us all will co tcontinue to be well.We have all we want now but if possible we need more soldiers."

The first long fi distant shipment of the countless numbers of the maimed c victims from the explosion shocked regions of southern Calverinia itself was reported that it would reach the city of Angelinia Agathia at three colock in the morning six days after the disaster, and that they would be removed from the trains and carried in the many ambulances to all hospitals nearest where they would recieve the special and quick treatment needed to save their life, treatmentthat could not as yet be given at the large emergency hospitals and stations in the ravaged districts.And immediately after these injured had arived fresh troops of nurses and doctors were to board another special train to be carried swiftly bto the cities, towns and villiages where the suffering was si stillacute.

However the need was much less urgent than it was on t he first day when the awful horror be g began.For now the countless numbers of injured suffering from wounds and disease have all been brought in to shelter from the wrecks of their homes and their lives depend fully upon careful nursing and proper medications.The doctors and nurses and others of the relief parties that went by the first special trains, were already exh u exhau ted by their ceaseless labor and incessant exposure t o all k kinds of weather.Yet fresh ones had been craving continually to take their places.The arival of the first trainloads of the injured into the main railroad station at Angelinia Agathia was a most pathetic scene. Some were coming on the Tremburg United.Others came on the Evangeline St Clare, and the Dorothy Gale, and Wis-Hollester Pan Pandora limitedlimited.At the Wis-Hollester and Pandora Railroad station they were met by ambulances donated by the citizens of the city itself, and they were to be recieved at the hospitals by those who had made all preparations.Guilen crowds were at the stations to see the arival of the wounded, not out of co curiousity but for fear relatives friends and others were among them.

Through the railroad journeys these wounded had been even then attended by many of the returning doctors and nurses.The survivors of the awful catastrohpe had been saddened by the scenes ad of their losses but were not daunted and with the help of relief the whole number of them were preparing to emulatethe awful phoe phoenix and rise regenerated from their wreckage and ashes.

Wih with only half of the near million of the dead consigned to hasty graves or cremated and hundreds of thousands of the four million injured still in the care of scores of thousands of doctors, and many more nurses plans were announced for rebuilding the devastated regions as soon as possible it is learned the enemy is cut of the territory.six days almost of the most heroic endeavor in the world by countless scores of thousands of willing workers spurred to their tasks by the awful desperateness of the situation brought about by tnetothe concussions of the explosions had wrought the most strange wonders when morning approached. Nearly every one of the homeless persons had now been housed in some manner by this time.All the food needed had been supplied for the helpless, medicines and all the other comforts had been already made available for the countless wounded and solace had been afforded to those who had lost their relatives and friends. The greatest fear of all the surgeons in the zone visited by the shocks of the explod explosions now was the spread of lockjaw which was breaking out and also the dread Gas gangrene.It was said that this malady was spreading rapidly and an appeal for fullsupplies of anti-toxin was sent in.This affection was the most comsion cause of death even in the early part of the horrible war itself among the many wounded soldiers who fell on both sides during the severe battles alrea y past.

Probably all the slain in t he ruined cities had now been recovered from the wide se of debris of the scores of millions of homes destroyed throughout the whole southern districts of Calverinia, and the total death list remained now the same with almost as many of the dead identified.

while there was danger of expectation of more bodies of dead to be found among the ruins it was feared that a largenumber of the injured may die of the wounds. ts go back again to the city which was the main center of the devastation of the devastation.Here also began the center of the rehabilitation work.Men o who could almost any moment raise their tear stained eyes and behold a passing hearse also had started the task of clearing away the ruins of many of the bigger buildings eeing ready for repairs and sites for new ones.Indeed in what had been--and what will be the resident sections, women and even children were seen aiding the men tugging at the se of wreckage, improvising cooking and all kinds of housing accomodations, and encouraging and also counseling.Despite the nearness of the known Landslinian armies and of their means menace immediate reconstruction was led by many officers and soldiers and headed by officers.

Throughout the whole regions since the disaster occured tents had spun ayring up throughout the ruined area like grass on a lawn, providing shelter for the countless numbers of the homeless, who since the disaster, had not hardly been housed in any place except in some ruined shelter that had not been totally thrown down or among the ruins and in many instances in long lines of auto automobiles and railway cars.No mann matter how many had died in the disaster it was seen to it that every grave or trench grave had identified crosses careful records of the dead o nes being kpt.Carloads of big caskets and flowers had been recieved.The Red Cross also had been defrayed all the funeral expesnses for those whose relatives were not able to repay.Hundreds of thousands of funerals had been conducted during the first five days, and priests by the thousand worked almost constantly saying masses for the dead out in thevopen as all the churches had been also prostrated.All traffic throughout the ruined area was dotted for miles and miles with the gray and black hearses...!!ss

The big army of the rescue workers still still continued to search the wreckage ere now vainly trying to locate the bodies of more dead if there were to be any found, nd all the workers also redoubled efforts to prevent the development of a dreaded epidemic resulting from the drinking of impure water.

Here is the fashion of which another eye witness t old of the awful and heart rending tragedies of the disaster.He wa s one of the many volunteer workers who had boarded the first relief train sent into the devastated regions from the city of Angelinia Agathia.This man r returned to.Angelinia Agathia early the morning of the six day after returning from Angeline Junction itself.

"I have observed things indeed in the last five days and nights which surely have made my blood run cold, and wh which would horrify the whole world to hear of. I have seen scores of thousands of the countless dead, the toll of the explosions, and their e earth shakes and air waves,, and worse of all I have absolutely seen dead armies of victims pitifully mangled nd crushed and shattered, and hur t and still countless numbers of them were little children.I have been compelled to constantly listen day and night without an hours relief to the awful screams of the many wounded inprisoned in burning buildings and re wreckage and wo who could not under any conditions could not be rescued.I have helped rescue a small three year old boy who had been imprisoned for an hour beneath a live stove , and whose face and body if he lives will for all his life bear the t rade mark of the maker of that stove itself.

I had helped carry out the many dead bodies untill I became too exhausted to carry many more, and that was all.The rescuers had no time anyhow for the dead. Their work was to succor the living.I stood by by physcians and surgeons, strangely pale but grim faced in the face of such an overwhelming disaster amputated arms and legs, and performed serious operations at mostly any point of the body without ether anesthetic.I was compelled to help hold some of those up upon whom such operations were performed.Their screams still ring in my e ears.Also their cries of pain and fear.Many were little children, boys and girls.All these horrible things I have been compelled to witness within the last five days and harrowing nights, and I shall never forget them, or the rascals responsible for the awful catastrohphe.

Let me tell my story from the start.Early that morning when the shocks fo first wasswithe whole nation, we did not know where the main effects were from or what damage may have occured.The first call came over the telg telegraphs.I was only one of the many who heard it.Although when I reached the Wis-Hollester and Pandora railroad depot only a few were there before me.We boarded a train which was special for that purpose.We started.And that train had not progressed fifty eight miles bf before we were soon fully organised.Each car had a leader, and in each car crews were formed immediately.Each crew was made up of eighty five surgeons and many orderlies, and hundreds of Red Cross Nurses.All through the long hours of night riding we discussed plans and methods of operations.We all needed sleep badly but who could sleep at such a time.Thefirst crew was dropped near Phelantonburg to rest went on to Carbondaler.The crew in which I belonged went from there to Virvale Angeline city itself.

Army and town and othervofficials met us at the depot of that city, and we were told that a Convention Hall had been assigned to us all as a temporary hospital.In our crew were sixteen surgeons, and a large number of nurses.Our first problem was to get cots--blankets anything that we could get-- and so we commandeered six hundred big automobiles, standing in front of the place.And I ventured to say that within twenty minutes out hospital was ready to function.It was ten eight thirty in the morning of the day after the shocks.We saw the ruins as if the worse storm in history had swept the distri cts.Our first free patient was an old woman probably eighty years olde who had been cruelly injured being struck in the face by an iron beam, and having a , leg and arm broken.She also may lose her eye sight, and probaly may not live through the ordeale.And as a matter of fact the surviving people seemed benumbed by the awful magnitude of the disaster unable to even believe that help had come so quickly.We actually had to drum all up all the trade.But only for a little while.After th at we were literally besieged o besieged.The first incident after the old lady was the coming of a small six year old Abbissannian girl accompanied by her injured brother not over eight, who came immediatdly to us, wanting a doctor quickly--but not for themselves, but for the wounded people in the next house.However these people did not need any doctor, they were all beyond a doctors care, all five of them, a mother, three girl children and the father.The uncle might have been there too, only he had joined the army that was besieging vivian Dickey and had not been home at the time of the disaster.

I am sorry that I had no time to write down the names of all the wounded we cared for.But we had no time for names.At any rate they soon came to us there at our make shift hospital from all parts of the stricken city.Oh how pitifully they came.Hundreds, dragged themselves, unable to walk.Many others were brought to us, and others we brought ourselves in two big trucks.We even went out to he help where we could.Once in a while we came upon a foot or arm protruding from tangled broken beams and wreckage.Sometimes these meant to us a potentil potential patient but more often it ment to us a silent sheeted figure for the morgue.I can never forget the St Mary's School at Gertrude's Avenue.There were fifteen hundred childfen in this school.The teachers every one of them who were not killed, now in the hospitals saw the approaching dinaster from the swaying swaying of the building from side to side, and ordered the children out of their class rooms, and out they went--as they had been taught to go— two by two, disciplined, a column of tots.The shocks came with all their force before they had all clearedvthe rooms even and the roof and walls crashed down on their tiny heads.Brick bats and timbers and other wreckage were hurled about them with the force of cannon balls and some were imbedded in the remaining walls.None escaped. Those not killed outright by the wreckage had smothered to death under the debris.

We found onehundred litt le bodies of chiodren stacked one on top of the other, two by two crushed mangled, or suffocated, but in order just as they had been taught to leave in time of peril.Two by two stacked one on top of the other.

We tooked them out laid them at the road side or on the sidewalks, then— we went on.We had no time for so many dead.The fire was still raging in many of the ruined buildings so we went to one of the burning piles of wreckage where the tentants had been injured.At many points we could hear people screaming.Untill my dying day their screamsxwillechoe in my ears.No one knew just where they were except that they were somewhere in the burning mass of wreckage.Some of them by the sound of their voices were children.Then at last we finally succeeded in isolating the screams locating the spots of the wreckage and from whence the screams came, a spot under tangled masses of smoulderi g wreckage.We finally directed the pitifully in inadequate hose streams immediately on that spot of fire but presently when the screams ceased we found the bodies all charred. got them out too late.

A new horror also was threatening the ruined districts of the Gertrude Angeline City.A new horro indeed--food threatened to day to take its place along side deat h famine and pestilence in the nort hwest section of Northern Angelinia devastated by the earthshocks from the explosions.The swirling waters of the might y Aronburgs gun still litt ered with the debris hurled upon the river by the explosions itself were arising alarmingly from the melting snows and it was feared if this continued of i or if the enemy would take it in his mind to burst a river levee the stricken areas would be flooded at any moment.The flood danger was especially most dangerous and serious near Angeline junctions

CHAPTER SEVENTY NINE.

ALL OF THE SOUTHERN CALVERINIAN CITIES AND TOWNS, STUNNED BY THE DISASTER, TURN NOW TO CHECK UP THEIR DEAD.....
EXPLOSION DISASTERS LEFT HORRIBLE TRAIL OF RUIN AND DEA TH.

THOUGH THE SIXTH DAY HADpassed since the explosions, and their concussions the Calverinian districts in the south were still stunned and bewildered but neverthe less despite the news of the r near approach of the enmy were trying desperately to pull themselves toget her to continue in the work to relieve the scores of thousands of fresh injured found, and to check up in the names of all the dead.The number of dead was fully estimated by this time.At thebeginning of the disaster the estimates had varied widely, but now a full survey of the stricken districts of northern Angelinia and southern Calverinia, extending from the Aronburgs gun to the Erminie gave thousans high count as before according to the most available reports, and that as yet their numbers did not mount at all. At first many dead had been believed to be still buried in the wreckage of thousands of wrecked home in the cities of Dickson Junction, Anna Aronburg, and Gertrude Angeline, but none could yet be found though the wreckage had been searched throughoutly.

Up to this time however it was not possible to estimate the full number of all the injured.The survey had at first been made by the Emperor and his officials and generals also in a twenty four hour tour or more of one city alone.The Emperor himself had asked continually for the more accurate estimate of the innured that could be made speedily for the relief requirments.Angelinia Agathia and the whole other loyal parts of the nation had still continued to rally to the aid of all the stricken towns and cities of the two countries.The Red Cross, and all the nurses and priests that could be spared from places of Religion together with more and more volunteer doctors and nurses from all parts of the country nearest the region still were coming in from all directions on this day also to reinforce the aid to the hastily formed local relief committees that were said to be still grappling most desperately on plans and works to care for the many injured as best as they could.

As best as it could be reported the explosions themselves caused havoc of their own from the force of the blasts to a distance of nearly one hundred mile.

In this location countless thousands of huge trees, and all small scrub growing in the region had been torn up by the roots by the force of the air waves as if it was the blast of a tornado.The wiring was stripped from millions of wire fences in all f farms and country property, while steel posts were beat into the ground, and the tipple and top workings of one hundred and fifty big mines were destroyed.All the wiring of telephone and telegraph wires were down.

In one station a telegrapher was at work when the force of the blast ripped the station to splinters and slaughtered all his friends in another building close by.

Countless numbers of automobiles and other machines which carried men to work were twisted wreckage from the force of the air waves, and were also found scattered over fields with the debris from distant farm houses.

In a mine known as NO/ fourteen two hundred men went to their deaths when the shaft above the ground was demolished by the air waves, and the opening of the mine tunnels caved in on them from the concussion burying them under ground forever.Terrible was the destruction on Anna Aronburg which was closest to the scene of the explosion which untill before then was one of southern Calverinias proud and leading cities.She did not fall from the concussions but from the force of the blast itself though fourty miles from the explosions.Now more than three quarters of this big city was more than kindling wood and seas of debris and shattering ruins of countless hi homes.Four hundred years of battering by field artillary and high explosives could do no more to a big city than the tornado of winds did to the stricken city of Anna Aronburg.Brick buildings went down faster than the wooden ones.Also here many thousands of children had gone to their deaths in the collaspe of all school buildings.One of the biggest buildings was blown open by the air shocks was a new twenty five million dollar Cathlolic church where a funeral had been b held when the air waves struck, nother was torn apart like if struck by a tornado was a new one million dollar high school for Cathlolic Students belonging to the same church.The city's mayor found the bodies of him two daughters, one son and his wife and fa father uncle and sister in these ruins.The dry grass, dry corn stalks, and other farm crops were literally uprooted by the sudden air waves.

As no Calandelinians had been near this region this city or its ruins fort unately did not sh suffer from any lotting but it was reported that guards did shoot at fear crazed dogs running about the wreckage littered streets but none were wounded and escaped and were still prowling at large foaming at the mouthAnna Aronburg was totally without water, and Gertrude Angoline city which got most ots its gas, elotric lighting and so on from that city i was now without that su service.

Even all towns and cities nearest the regions of devastation but which had not been injured by the concussions were practically cut off from all communication without twitty t with the outside world due to hundreds upon hundreds of miles of damaged telephone and telegraph lines throughout the country.Thirteen hundred persons were said to have been burned to death when they fled to the basement of a Anna Aronburg big show house. men and children dead were found side by side in the fields near Anna Aronburg city.

Fire companies, from Angoline Michac, Jennie Turner, Gentonia, Lebanon, and other southern Calverinian towns not affected had made the fastest runs in their record in a desperate effort to stop the flames in the seas of burning ruins at Ricksen junction and Anna Aronburg.All the biggest hospitals in this city also was razed by the shock of the air and thus no room could be had there for extra patients.

Ever since the terrible morning of the terrible catastrohpe rescue workers had toiled incessantly in both zones, and they had even said that they were still very far from being able to confo confirm perfect informal estimates here which placed the total dead of the catastrohpe at about nine hundred and ninty eight thousand.Ponds, lakes, brooks, and small streams smashed in wreckage and earth thrown far and wide by the explosions after being blasted were found to contain thousands of mangled bodies which have been blown there in some instances from more than ten to twenty miles away.The discovery had led to the belief that the many thosands who were missing may have met with similar fates.This belief was also increased when far distant hill sides and glens were found to expose dead bodies especially of workers.The first array of bodies found through this dynamiting r process was that of many workers, intermingled with small children girls and boys and women who had been blowne blown into a wide water filled pond more than fourty miles from the spot where the explosions had occured.The relatives of these children were still missing and many thousands of persons have been gathered about the region of the pond to assist in the ro removal of a big dam which was expected to result in the finding of their bodies and possibly many more.

In Anna Aronburg the air waves or shocks were particularly cruel in their violent pranks.Children werefound with feet, hands or hair, or necks and arms or bodies entirely wedged in the forks of trees some thirty feet from the ground. All were dead having been killed by the very shocks.

Even now though six days have passed the countless numbers of rescue workers were still toili g toiling under the glare of bon fires and torches at the following night digging still further in the ruins of school buildings and other homes where already the bodies of scores of hundreds of children had been removed up till n late the morning before, expecting to find at least ten thousand more before the search was over.

Everywhere the rescue drive had been hampered by the thousands of fires, and the ernormous army of sightse sightseers who had flocked into the city also gave a willing hand.Lines of autos and wagons and carts, closely j mmed and extending for more than eighteen miles in every direction from the devastated areas had again and again been loaded with dead bodies.One hundred thousand more troops were already enroute to form squads to police all high ways to warn or resist the approach of any enemies.

Thousands of priests in all of the ruined Anna Aronburg churches remained constantly on duty to say brief prayers of over the many persons who had died in the disaster before sending them to their last resting places.Ob over every body, rich or poor, services had been said, though they were necessarily brief.

.There had not been any necessities for group interments in some places no resort to make shift coffins and shrouds takes to the generous supplies sent bh h by many other cities.In such instances as the wiping out of thousands of entire families or the remaining relatives being also unable to pay for burials the Red Cross supplied the needed caskets and shrouds.Armies of men were still still digging and sixty thousand more were en route from Carbondaler to dig more graves..While the rites were still being held over the countless air shock torn victims or dead bodies dragged out of the wreckage rehabilitation was planned to be gotten on the way.Thour throughout the city the rattle of millions of hammers of as many carpenters and other workmen repairing buildings not entirely ruined merged with the tumult of shouts from the line men and other public utilities employees working as fast as possible to restore service.Yet no far ext entive extensive plans for restoration of the fu full city had been undertaken however as most of it had been reduced to a wilderness of debris by the air waves.

And the most heartrending sadness of all that brought heart breaking scenes everywhere still attended the burial of the many dad of the terrible air concussion which su snuffed out the lives of so many hundreds of thousands within afew seconds in the countries.Burial of the victims actually began the day after the disaster when seventy six thousand bodies were placed in the trench graves at Anna Aronburg, and fourty thousand at the west limits.At the city also many children boys and girls of small age had been found alive beneath the wreckage not touched by fire and turned over to the Red Cross and other committeees at Carss Carbondale.The children were said to have suffered severely from hunger and cold and apparently had not co recovered from their fright, for they were unable to tell their names or whom their parents were when rescued.

Strange freaks of the air concussions were beginning to be old of at every point.One was related by a woman to the effect that a little girl and boy whom she waw was talking to at the city on Meldon street were killed by her side, while she he herself escaped even the slightest injury.And yet she felt nothing.Another was to the affects that two men and six children were blown through a big stationary store window and that each of their feet werenailed to the floor by pieces of timber.At the outskirts of the ruined city a farmer hauling a load of hay was blown from the sea of the wagon but succeeded in saving his life by wrapping himself about the base of a telephone pole only to be killed a few seconds later by a big heavy stone that literallycame down on top of his from the very sky.

All those now in charge of the relief corps at Anna Aronburg who had completed the survey of the ruined country districts and getting the relief work into perfect shape expressed amazement at the order which had been worked out of the chaoses of the awful catastrophe.Theyreported that everything was functioning nearly one hundred per cent and that the many responses from the call for aid from a stand point of money, clothing, food, and provisions had been wonderful, overwhelming.

Emperor Vivian expressed great approval of the strange manner in which the total relief work was going on at all the ruined places and the cities which recieved all the injured. Still more trainloads of doctors and nurses from all other towns and cities were supplementing the relief work with the result that many thousnds of the injured whose lives were despaired of were now saved.

Probably one of the worse handicaps to the relief work in the various other ruined towns had been of the clogging of all hard roads by machines and wagons filled with the curious who came not only to see from all directions but to also lend help.Many of the soldiers were on hand regulating the traffic of these sight seers.Millions of tents,, and as many cots, and large qna quantities of antitetanus serum were still being given out to the various towns and cities which were struck with the greatest difficulty because of the numerous fires in the vinicity, but the situation was finally being taken care of.All of the dead by this timehad been identified among themseveral thousand babies who had even burned in the ruins, the parents of whom have also perished in the disaster.The railroad shops of this city and many big factories where many men were working were also destroyed with great loss of life.Search was still being made in these ruins.

General Vivianna was ta ing care of the financial end of affairs and was sending all the big grops groups of the homeless that he could persuade to go to other big cities where arr arrangements have been made to take care of them until t hey ge got substantial help from the state and charities which were responding to the calls.

Already by this time an immense supply of antitoxin to fight the threatened gas gangrene was already shipped into the shock areas.Army officials also turned over the requests sent to them for more antitoxin to the public health services it being the rule in all such cases that the war and even the navy department furnish supplies only when the health departments cannot obtain them.

Many formal expresses of deep sympathy from foriegn governments and peoples for the war sufferers in the middle section of Abbiaannia continued to reach Emperor Vivian in the most increasing numbers.A message delivered by the Ambassador of Blomlinia nation said to Emperor Vivian;

"The government of Blomlinia having recieved with profound regret the news of a great disasterous explosion which had wrought a most tremendous knee the world ever saw in any disaser in the central part of your country instructs me to call upon you and convey you the expression of their deep sympathy and sincere condolence on this great disaster.All aid you need she will give you."

Emperor Vivian acknowledged this expression of sympathy in the quick following reply;

"The Empire of Abbiaannia ack acknowledges with warm apprecha appreciation the message of sympathy and condolence conveyed by the Blomlinian Ambassador on behalf of his national government upon the serious consequences of the devastating explosion which recently visited the central section of my nation."

TERRIBLE consequ ces were going on account of the dreadful war. While the great forest fires was raging from Cedernine dal through northern Angelinia and sped northward and westward through the country of Angeline ine and while it had and was burning three hundred and fifty miles of valuable timber and wrecking havoc wherever it went burning scores of towns and rendering countless peopl mothers of people homels homeless and causing great loss of life and property and destroying many bridges over the rivers and trapping many forest fire fighters great floods anew caus caused by the enemy blowing asunder the dikes of the great Aronburgs gun was raging in extreme southern Calverinia.The following dispatches shows how great and wide spread was the fury of the floods. This occured near the end of the month of June between the times when the battles of Phelantonburg and Cedernine may have raged . The flood was the greatest one on record in the war so far, and covered nearly six hundred miles of land, thirty towns were completely covered by one hundred feet of water at the dee est, sixty were either swept away or ruined and the biggest cities scores and scores of them including Angelinia Arathia, norothe Gale, Big Girl Knool and others to be mentioned here suf suffered enormously from the effects of the floods.
BETSY ROBBIN CITY. JUNE THE " 24th.1913. Dreuse and incapable dmsage was done here and at ten other coun r country towns by the great flood which rushed with great violence ver the territories bo ndary of the city and which lasted three weeks.Reports from Albertown says that every small house wooden or brick has been destroyed, and all the boats and ships of the docks of river Angeline together with large sea going and river going yachts and steamers and frieghtersx anchored there were completly wrecked or carried far out of their course.In this city the force of the a waters attained a speed or velocity of ten to twenty miles an hour and seemed to remain some of thepower which it exhibited in wrecking so many other towns and villages.Reports of great property loss and fatalities have come in.."

Trot City.
TROT CITY. JUNE THE 234th.1913.
The first train from the south arrived here at three A.M. this morning from Pandora.The train left that place two days ago and the crew and passengers reports a fearful run through the flood waters.The engineers wife was here from Angelinia Arathia and was at the station waiting to meet her husband when the Aronburgs United pulled into the depot.Indeed the re meeting between the two was affecting and sad.All this morning thousands of anxious watchers waited at the r i railroad depot for a glimpse of the train which was so many hours late. nd this train never before missed her time always arriving usually a little earlier than her time due. many people had friends and relatives among the passengers due on this train and as the morning hours were on their anxiet ty and disturbance became intense.
As a res lt of the furious pressure of the flood waters which swept over the regions near Trot City telephone and telegraph lines and poles are reported prostrated in all directions and though this city is only touched by the flood as to fill her streets to a depth of only one foot she is completely isolated from the outside world.To day it is hoped the great flood will be subsiding as now the waters have dropped till many of the higher streets are clear of water.No damage to this city is reported except to property of basements to noon to day the big passenger trains of the Mic-Hollester and Pandora Railroad which left Angelinin Aranthia yesterday evening have as at not been heard from. They were due here two hours after leaving Angelinin Aranthia.And the Passenger train known as the Aronburg flyer special due here at about the same hour from Angelinin Aranthia had not even yet arived.Great anxiety is feared for the passengers as it is believed the trains are either caught in the flood or are stalled because of tracks being washed away. One train that came through t the flood had gone through water reaching nearly up to the windows.The Angelinin Aranthia local has not yet arived having been to leave Angelinin Aranthia at 10.P.M. yesterday evening. This is said to be the worst of all floods on record.The enemy find they can't win battles by fighting, they must try to conquer us with floods and fire. regardless to the great loss of lives among the helpless non combatants..."""" HEIDI. JUNE I 24th/ I9I3.

IN the devastating floods which reached its height yesterday the railroad passenger train known as the Veldon flyer is said to not be due to night because of the tracks being washed off by water.All property is sufferin greatly, and thirty six towns are said to be completely covered by water and fourty eight swept away, and thirty nine totally wrecked and many cities injured. The current reached a velocity or speed of thirty five miles and hour, the flood to make matters worst being accompanied by many severe fires in the city.Many houses are said to be lost but no lives are lost as reported here."

HEIDI JUNCTION. JUNE 24 TH. I9I3.
THE tail end of the de vastating flood struck this town with great force at about twelve o clock this morninger last night rather and is still continueing with great fury. The loss of property is being heavy all the people being forces to the uppoer stories of their homes.No loss of lives are reported here, but strange to say the streets are swashed with corpses floating in the raging torrents.They may have come down from towns swept away.The losse to the railroad are heavy..

CALDWELL TOWN. JUNE 24TH. I9I3.

THE Algone special train arived at seven oclock this morning and the passengers report a fearful time.The crew pulled the train through however and say the flood is a regular sea.The wind however is blowing a gale from the east and therefore we do not believe full force of flood will be added by any rainstorms.Railroads thro hout the whole country is suffering heavy many train crews being drowned and many trains not being heard from.Great loss of life is reported in main path of flood where many towns are drestroyed.many towns reported inundated untill house tops of tallest buildings barely shown itself above the water.

SOUTH [illegible]WELL. JUNE 24th.I9I3.
The flood did exceedingly great damage to all property here last night but no loss of life was reported though all the people had to take shelter in the upper stories.All trains due for town have not been heard from.

[illegible]BI. 24TH OF JUNE. I I9I3.
THE current of the flood traveled at a terrific rate through our streets for three days and nights and committed inconceivable havoc.Ten large out going trains the first day of flood were caught in the torrent and wrecked .

POLYCHROME CITY ...JUNE 24th.I9I3.

The flood rushed through streets in fearful torrents since The date of June 24th and attat attained a speed of twenty three miles an hour early in the afternoon of the third day destroyed many lives in the city and neighborhood, did incapable damage to the buildings of the city and basemts basements and wrecked many business houses and the like and the increased violence of the flood carried everything before it.

It destroyed wooden buildin s by the score pulled down telegraph and telephone clas innumerable badly crippling the telegraph and telephone and other services. From Poly Chrome the flood continued to progress and to spread and increased with wonderful rapidity after doing so much havoc. The flood reached the greatest depth of inundations that ever was known at Poly Chrome since the city had existed.What caused the flood is unknown but it is said that the enemy had destroyedthe levees and dikes along the banks of the Aronburg gun river where its overflows were said to be most dangerous at rainy seasons.If this is so we hope the rebellion armies will receive no quarter.

We have seen in our own country and in other countries when floods and other calamities occur such as earthquakes, great fires and dimense devastating storms that the world is never so heartless as is generally made believe to be, or even not so heartless and indifferent as many of the pessimen pessimests would have us believe.Ordinarily all men women and even children have enough to do in attending to their own affairs, expect ing others of course to do the same and, consequently as we have all ex erienced they pay very small attention to what is going on around them, but when their hearts are really touched by some immense disaster they drop everything and rush to the rescue of the afflicted.
So it was in the case of this great flood, which took a heavy toll of property at Angelinin Aranthia city which was hard hit.The other big flood in I9I2 did only a little da age but this one committed such a dreadful havoc and destruction that it is unaccountable.
This catastrophe at Angelinin Aranthia served also to bring most conspicious ly into notice the best and also the worst sides of human nature which is always the coc common results of such appalling disasters.
The three mil i millions of afflicted people of that big city were suddenly suddenly overwhelmed by the almost unprecedented fury of this great flood.Despite the size of the city hundreds of thousands were rendered homeless, thousands were killed by wreckage or drowned in the water, and as many were injured and scores of thousands suffered total loss in all their belongings.everyone lost their homes and places of business. The Emperors pl palace suffered severely from the flood and the royal families and other high persons of great rank and filechad to seek refuge on the third floor of their handsomestructure.Emperor vivian declared that the flood committed three millions of damage to the building of his alone.Hundreds of thousands of real people suffered with hunger and were menaced with pestilence.All were also brought to a commonlevel by all the dangers which faced them, dangers of every des cription death in its most awful forms and an outlook of terrible un-certainity.
A n Many wfires brokeout in the city during and after the flood and the fire departments which had suffered disasteriously by the inundation were handicapped bythe effects and only a miracle saved the city from facing the dangers of an invense con fla ration.
And yet in the midst of all this ruin and suffering they were harassed by what appeared to be Glandelinian thugs and thieves and ghouls of human shape who looted mostly military property assaulted citizens and even women and children who resisted them and dispoiled and disfigured the dead bodies in a shockingly savage manner to secure many things either of private property or military pr and other things.
Devoid of any feeling of sympathy or pity they seized upon this awful disaster for as they said "The good of their Holy Cause" as an opportunity to enrich themselves.As soon however as the Abbiennian authorities could recover from the shock of the awful disaster the city was as quickly as possible laced under military and martial law and the troops patrol ing the city hundreds of thousands strong did not at all hesitate to kill every one of the Glandelinian vandals caught in the awful comission of his infamous infamous work .Public opinion sustained this prompt style of punishment on the foundation that it is just as justified to shoot glandelinian valdans for the good of the christian cause as it is good for the rebel to raid helpless people when place destitude on account of disaster for the good of the Glandelinian cause.It was a species of olf fashioned English and French punishments of torture and thelike alsothat was metho given out to vandals when captured alive to which no objection was raised not even by the righteous vivian girl Princesses that is Deann Violet and her sistors.....The disasterous flood also brought into quick pro inence the greed and mercenary passion of human nature even among Abbiennians and Angelinians.A Clique of many ravenous wretches taking advantage of the fact that the city of Angelinin Agathia, was cut off from all communication from the nation for the time being conspired to secure full control of all the transportation facilities by water and rail, and also by wagon and other passages and charged very high and most extortionate prices even to those who were seeking to carry relief to the suffering people, claiming that it was because of the war and that the money could be used for the god of the cause. Never indeed not even in such a good country as Angelinia before was a more inhuman trust organized. Again and again all the fresh provisions in the city itself was becoming hardly ruined leaving only a few canned and dried articles which could be alone available for food. The foolish cheating owners of these hunt upon making personal profit out of the necessities of their fellow citizens pushed up the prices as far and as high as it was possible for them to do so, raising bread to $1,_ 50 cents a loaf, and Bacon to twenty dollars a pound saying it was for the benefit of the cause. The Mayor of Angelinia Agathia at the request of Violet and her sisters who were then at Phelantonburg sent a notice to prevent all this and therefore he proved himself equal to all the emergency, and confiscated all the remaining flood supply, reduced the prices to below the reasonable rate, arrested all who resisted the order, and compelled the owners of all river schooners and other craft to put down their prices also or be treated as felons. Most of all these persons it was found out had slight sympathies for Glandelinia's cause. Of course this as we can see was no doubt the very dark side of human nature but we can always remember that the picture could have its most bright side also. The news of the awful and unusual flood disaster had hardly appeared in public print before nearly all the help helping hand of the nation were busy collecting and sending relief. The Chief Executives of the Nation, the Emperor and other rulers, the Governors of every state and Province, the Mayors of every city not touched by the inundation issued their appeals to all the people whose sympathies were already aroused and whose hearts and hands were were enlisted most generous generously in the work of relief.

Many of the far off countries as soon as they heard of the two great disasters, the three hundreds of miles of forest fires, the enormous floods, and great destruction sent in their own offerings, every city and town in the world contributed and all crowned heads hastened to enable money and sympathy. Day by day trains which could reach her sped to Angelinia Agathia from every part of the country loaded with supplies and the ten telegraph wires carried orders for money testifying to the unanimity of the great work of relief, and all the little children did their own share. The ghouls of Angelinia Agathia were now becoming very few in numbers and its generious as sympathizers were to be counted by the hundreds of millions.

Fully 7,500 bodies of the drowned and killed were buried or cremated at Angelinia Agathia after it quickly became apparent that the full time necessary to bury them or cast them into the rivers or lakes could not finally be taken because of decomposition.

Thousands of the glandelinian prisoners and other workers while handling the bodies fell from nausea and fright. Other volunteers took their places steadily and therefore the awful work went on. The volunteers were forced to bandage their mouths and noses with cotton and other cloths saturated with disinfectants and were always relieved by volunteers or glandelinian prisoners every hour.

Fires for the cremating of the bodies could not be started every place where the bodies were found for the fear of starting a conflagration in the city itself. Therefore the plan was to collect all the bodies possible within four block or less and then build one vast funeral pyre. On the remains of hundreds of the drowned women were valuable rings and other jewelry but for many reasons the men did not make any attempts to remove the jewelry but burned or melted them with the owners.

The foreman of two large gangs of prisoners declared that their men burned more than one thousand bodies the majority of them women and children the percentage of deaths among the little children being most frightful. One of the foremen and his glande glandelinian prisoners burned two hundred and fourty five bodies near grovestreet.

Hundreds of Catholic Priests and even Cardenals and bishops were forced to be in charge of gangs and these reported more than one thousand three hundred and twenty burned. Even all the sanitary experts pushed the work ofburning the dead most vigoriously and no otherdisposition was considered or allowed to be disputed. People who had lost relatives and friends made no objections and also looked on the plan with great favor.

Throughout the city disinfectants were used as never before used any where in the whole world. The smell of the charnel city was soon driven away and soon the whole city was filled with the fumes of carbolic acid and other disinfectants. This also was the general order given out by the Mayor of Angelinia Agathia to those commanding the city forces:

"All the guards, formal formen of gangs, and working parties and prisoners or others acting under the authorities of this department of Angelinia Agathia will do all possible to use the greatest intelligence toward prevent ing hany hardships on all the private persons or impressing the citizens of Angelinia Agathia and her surburbs into the service of burying and burn ing the dead. The critical conditions however a are so awfully great and as it is so necessary that sanitary conditions andprecautions be taken to preserve the very lives and health not only of this sti stri stricken city and other places of the flood but the whole nation as well that all the interests of the people must give way to the general good of all.

If it is found absolutely necessary to secure volune volunteers general necessary impressment will be avoided but the Authorities of Abbiennia being a unit in the opinion that further delay or procrastination will bring an awful pestilence to finish the dire work of this most disasterous flood of all times the interests of no man or women whatsoever whether he be a glandelinian prisoner, a christian soldier or the very citizens of the city itself, firm or coperation of Religious Institutio instut institution will for one instant be spared to secure volunteers for the work butfailing in this every able bodied man or womanis to be put to work to clearthe wreckage burn the many bodies under it and save if possible the surviving men women and children of the nation. I trust this position may be throughoutly appreciated and understood by all e means so that all the people of Angelinia Agathia and of the whole section of the flooded country of Angelinia and Galverinia willgovern themselves accordingly."

The miracles of Angelinia Agathia were too many to be related here and many of them would never be recieved with full credict by the readers and therefore will be omited. In the big Hospital at Angelinia Agathia was an old aged man whose name was Hendro Angelinedo. He was found a day later after the flood lying behind a long and wide log on the outskirts of the city of Angelinia Agathia. The man was about sixty five years old. His story was that his wife, and children, and two brothers, and his sister remained in the house at the outer limits of Dorothy Gale. There was a resounding crash when the full forme of the flood struck and the house immediately went to pieces. The man said he was engulfed in the water at once but a log floated past or near him and this he quickly secured and floated of with it. He was sure his relatives were all drowned and that he was the only survivor. He had no idea where he floated with the log but when daylight came he was far from Dorothy Gale and out upon the still partially submerged country side.

Ten children three boys, and seven girls girls saw and went through more of this devastating flood than fell to the lot of most children or any other persons who lived to tell of it. They had been in an orphan asylum at the outskirts of Angelinia Agathia which was leveled. On the second morning after the flood first began the roaring www waters had risen three feet and a half. At first thinking the flood was not serious and that it would be fun, and because many people went boating in the street streets during the early day the children put on their small bathing suits and went out to go swimming. This was about 11 A.M.....At this time the waters were then getting so deep that even a man would have to wade waist deep. At a little later hour the children began to get alarmed as they could not swim against the torrent and with the rest left one of the flooded streets and started toward the alley with the purpose to reach windows to crawl or get in some how. Out of all the children in the orphan asylum only fifteen escaped alive. These ten children waded and swam alternately twenty seven blocks untill finally they luckly reached the higher streets. Then they met a man with a large wagon and begged him to take them to the orphan asylum within the three blocks from where they first started or where the start was made in this way the horses suddenly got into deeper water and was drowned.

The children reached the locality of the prohan asylum but there was nothing there but water and floating jams of wreckage and on this the children crept and floated down with it. They soon reached the extreme highest portion of the city but one of the eldest of these ten children say said it wasthe hardest part of the trip with the water full of rushing swirling wreckage which threatened to demolish their raft every moment. They were finally rescued the force of the water while swimming having torn their very clothing suits off their bodies. when they were brought to the fourth floor of a tall building clothing of somekind was given out to them. During all their awful yet thrilling experience these children had not been the least big scared, and as the streets were fullof people rowing boats back and forth from one house to another the children did not then realizedthe danger was so great.Thousands of instances of great devotion to wife, of wife to husband,, of child to parent, and parent to child,, could be mentioned but it would take too many volumes...One poor old woman with her three children and her father, mother, and husband was cast out into the raging flood waters and were finally seperated by the fury ofthe torrent. ll were in drift and all believed they were seperated and went through different portions of the flooded streets and would soon return..he mother was finally cast upon a large floating drift and there she and her children were pounded by the fierce waves and debris untill they were finally pulled into a house against which the drift of wreckage had lodged/ and during all that fri frightful ride she held to her children and when she was on the drift pile she covered the children with other wreckage she managed to secure from the rushing flood so that they might escape from the blows of the swirling and tossing planks hurled up and in every direction by the force of the torrent.she came out of the ordeal cut maimed and badly injured but the children had not recieved the sligh t sligh test cut..he never saw her husband or other relatives any more.

In Angelinia Agathia and many other places that were even totally ruined by the flood it could be seen in every instance of great and small Cathl Catholic Churches and institutions and homes where a strange and unusual contrast were seen at the very portions where the rear walls and roofs had collasped. he wa walls had also in those buildings been razed by the force of the waters current during the height of the dreadful flood but the alters and other pedestials on which stood all kinds of Religious life size statues such as the images of the Sacred Heart of Jesus, the Blessed Mother, and St joseph and every thing else were not in the le least harmed or moved.

When their w very home whose went to places the mb members of the Turner family, husband, wife and six children clushed upon the roof of a big wooden house floating like a big boat near by. After they were on for a day or so they felt tolerably secure and only hunger faced them. put after being on about thirty six hours and as the current of the flood grew stronger the roof without the slightest warning sudde l suddenly gave way in the middle and parted into t w two pieces. Mr and Mrs Turner were seperated. each had a each had some of the children. he two parts of the house swiftly went two different ways in the darkness.Two of the children fell off and disappeared.Not untill some time after the flood had receded were the family fully united or reunited.even the two children were saved, being two girls the children having caught a big floating raft and clung to it untill they reached a place of safty where they were rescued...Another brave man took his wife and three children from one house toanother by swimming untill he had occupied ten.Each house fell before the force of the flood in its turn and he was forces to take to the waters and time and again they were seperated and each believed they perished in the flood.After some hours they were rescued.

Sixteen prominent men whose names are not to mentioned here arived at Pandorn (Calverinia) the third day after the flood.They left Angelinia Agathia that morning on the Aronburg Limited special with three hundred and sixty other refugees and were taken to Dorothy Gale.Untill they arived at Dorothy Gale they were clad only in under garments and were coat less.They escaped during the flood from a house on the exposed portion of the city's outskirts by clinging to a log and floating to a high foothill.One of the men was injured and struck repeatedly by floating wreckage but was assisted by some of his companions to safty.An old woman and her two children who gave the sleeping men warning of the sudden rise of the flood were drowned.

Several of the men were totally naked, and the others were in their night garments when they reached the immense crowds near Grove Street Angelinia Agathia but their appearance was similar to that of the thousands upon thousands, many women and children being rescued for whom all kinds of clothing had to be at once obtained.At noon that day they did not have sufficient space to move around with comfort although filled with the greatest anxiety and penned in on all sides by the rushing rapidly rising waters of the sudden inundation...For days and days, running into weeks, they had been tempped with hardly any good amount of food to sustain their hunger, and all the streets and thoroughfares still then above water were congested with immense crowds of hysterical women, crying screaming children and frantic men.

The awful seperation of thousands of families produced too much sad and pathetic scenes to be described, when mothers mourned their offspring and men lamented the loss of all dear to them and children cried for their parents and friends.There was no confusion only a clinging close closer together without discrimination of class or sex, as the waters advanced at the rate of a foot and a half per hour.

Every night the horrors of the situation and the misery deepened, and the women occupied the highest buildingsand hotels and approaches and houses at all the highest points of the flooded city, andthe waters continueing to advance and to advance and advance, buildings and stores were thrown open to provide refuge in the upper stories, and soon the streets also teeming with boats looked like Venice on a very busy day.All the men graciously gavethe better positions to the women and the children.As the two weeks passed conditions became worse and worse,, hundreds of women became demented and the men more frantic and the majority of them were facing hunger and starvation and what food could be brought to them was from places where the waters had not reached the goods, because they had been hastily transported to the upper stories.The food was brought by the street boats..Every where in the houses the women would be seen to kiss each other and say good bye. The even prayed and sang hymns in turn.And with each announcementthat the waters were still rising many men and women gave up to the terrible mental strain and fainted.The children were terrified and screamed and screeched and cried untill it sounded like the uproar of a terrific cyclone sweeping through the city..Indeed it can be said that the survivors paid a tribute to the bravery in the face of the slowly approaching death of the women and some children of Angelinia Agathia and stated that although adject melancholy had fallen over all that the spirit of great fortitude displayed by the thousands of bravest women, nerved the men to greater efforts.The horrors of those three weeks of the flood were equaled on the succeeding days as the un inundation receded.....

Of all the most greatest of heroizheroism and dogged tenacity of purpose noted in connection with the dreadful A Angelinia Agathia flood,, none was greater than that of a priest, whose mother, uncle and father were living in a house not from fro the Church in which which he presided when the dreadfo dreadful inundation struck the city. Early that morning when the flood had struck he had been far away in the villiage of Groveton when the first news of the disaster at beautiful Angelinia Agathia began to drift in, and therefore this priest who had been conducting the rescueing work at the little villiage announced to the foreman under who m he had been working that he intended to start immediately for Angelinia Agathia.

He had been told that the flood made the city unapproachable but this hardy priest went to one of the nearest railroad depots, and fortunately found a relief train leaving at least to go as far and as near to Angelinia Agathia as it was possible to did.He boarded it, but the train was forced to stop eighteen miles before it reached the point desired. He then walked twenty eight miles arriving at the desired point in about two days after wading water, and swimming and rowing over on man mad rafts and so on.there was no ordinary boat insight not even a skiff or a canoe and the other rafts were not reliable enough to take the chances of making a trip across the roaring main swept of the floods.

However he found a large number of railroad ties near the waters edge and procuring ropes he made a raft of it and then procuring a large branch of a tree he got astride the small raft after having placed it in the flood waters and set out on a most difficult and extremely dangerous journey acrossfourteen miles and one half of roaring wastes of flood waters.Thus he labored for sixteen trying hours, the sun beating down on him during daylight and the moon and stars shining on him at night and with his body half submerged in the waters.At last the goal was reached and he finally pulled himself out of the water and stepped on the dry higher risi rise of ground.After having passed on his way more than a thousand decaying bodies of the flood victims and even animals the heroic young priest set about finding his father, uncle and mother. This he did after a most length lengthy search.His mother had lost her other three children, brothers and sisters and the surviving child a six year old girl had been stripped utterly of her clothing by the pressure of the waters and bo this child and the father and the mother, had a an experience that rarely ca e to any of the survivors of the big flood.

The story of another man and some other survivors was most sad and pitiful.This man lived near Aberdeen and Twenty Fourth Streets.....when the main force of the great flood burst he was alone in his own home with his only children each about seven years of age.The little house was his own which he had made out of the hard earned savings.As the house was about to float off before the pressure of the water he seizee the boy and girl under each arm and rushed from the frail structure just in time to cheat death among the suddenly falling timbers..... of his home.

Once in the open with his babies under each arm he was swept into the roaring flood among thousands of others.He however held to his precious burden and by the most skilful maneuvering managed to get close to a big tree which was sweeping along with the current of the flood.He saw what he hoped to be a haven among the branches of the tree and raised his little daughter to place her in the branches.As he did so the tree was swept out of his reach and a branch striking the child she was torn from his arm hurled into the torrent and swept away to her death.
The awful blow stunned but did not render the poor man senseless.He retained his hold on the other child and was whirled among the many other dying and dead victims of the fury of the flood hoping to effect some kind of a safe landing somewhere.Three hours and a half in the water soon brought the desired end.He was thrown against a tall building and he and the child were immediately hauled into the window by rescuers but the boy was found dead.
The unfortunate man did not remember nothing untill two weeks after the flood when after he was put in a hospital in Manila city.,however he had a slight recollection of helping to bury and cremate the dead, clear away the debris, preventing the outbreak of fires and obeying the command of soldiers.,is brain however did not execute its functions ntill two weeks after.
Another person who was a woman had a very sad experience. She was thrown headlong into the rushing waters and while being carried with the most frightful velocity down with the torrent saw the dead face of her husband i on top of a small floating raft.The husband had been wedged fie firmly between the wreckage head downward.
And her own life n had been saved also at the expense of her brothers. Her brother discovering her stood at the edge of his own refuge and seized her and guided her to a bigger raft which he managed to reach, and had succeeded in doing so he was killed by an avalanch of wreckage from the collaspe of axwooden house near by.

One of the daring war correspondents sent to Jessicia City by the Governer of Angelina viner State the day after the flood had receded completely to investigate the conditions of the Angelinia ,State quarantine there reported to the same governer on the day after he arived there and said among other things of his long report;
"The sanitary and other conditions of this once beautiful little city is very bad.Immense quantities of lime and disenfectants have been ordered immediately to the place but I doubt if any one will be found to unload it from the small vessels and attend its statematic distributions when it does arrive..the stench from so many dead decaying bodies of persons and animals and vegetable matter is almost unbearable.It also arised continually from from the immense piles of debris containing the countless numbers of carcasses of human beings and animals.These carcasses are being buried, sunk into the rivers and burned whenever it can be done with safty but little of the real wreckage can be destroyrd as there is great danger of starting a great fire that nothing could stop under any effort..here is no wha water protection and therefore sho i should even the smallest fire break out the destruction of the whole city of Jessi Jessicia would soon be complete..when the many searching parties and rescuers would come across the human bodies, they would be immediately taken to an empty space and wreckage piled over it.This is then set on fire and the bodies are then slowly consumed....To make matters worse however the oder of so many burning bodies, are horrible.
The chairman of the finance relief committees at Jessicia wanted us the worst of all ways to make the announcement that the city now wants all the skilled mechanics and contractors with their tools that can be brought to Jessicia city.there is some slight repair work going on now but just now it is impossible whatever to findthe sufficient number of men who will work at that kind of business.Those now in Jessicia city not engaged in the relief and other kind of work have their own private business to look after and mechanics are just now not to be had,and all the workers and mechanics will be paid the necessary wages and will be given employment by private parties who desire to get their wrecked homes repaired as rapidly as possible possible.however there are many houses with only the lower windows and lower floors wrecked by the flood waters.These residences are finaly furnished and it is desired that the necessary repairs be made as quickly as possible.
The relief work is a fairly well organized but nothing as yet has been accomplishe accomplished except the distribution of food and provisions and clothing among the thousands of the needy.About two qyarters and a half of the city was totally wrecked and nearly a hundred thousand are still living in houses that are badly wrecked and the destitute are being removed from the city as quickly as possible and are being sent to the nearest places of refuge.But it will take more than a week or so before all who want to go or have to go have been removed from the sadly devastated city.Outside the city limit not one single hou horse or cow survived the flood and for the horses and cattle that did survivie there is no food for them and many of them will soon die of starvation. I am completely satisfied after spending a week in Jessicia city that the the estimate of 45,000dead is to conservative a number .No one in the world can ever estimate, willever estimate or willever know how many lives were lost, but I believe it will exceed that number double.In the city the searchers and relief parties are getting rid of all the dad bodies as rapidly as possible and in whatever manner possible.they are even burying the sens of dead bodies found on the land and country side far out side the city.At one place over a s a space of two miles and a half 222, 456 were found and buried and cre cremated within six days.There must be hundreds of thousands of dead bodies back within the whole stretch of the flood and far beyond even on the far distant fields, and prairies that have not been found.It is almost impossible to make a search of any kind as the country side is laid in waist and strewn with so much conglomeration of wreckage.Bodies lying as thick as soldiers on a hun hundred thousand battlefields have been found as far back as seventeen miles from the city limits.It would take the largest National army a month to search that territory on the full path of the flood with so much wreckage stretched over the whole country side..the best thing is to wait untill everything gets dry and set the iles upon miles of wreckage all afire and get rid of the bodies in that fashion.

The waters of the big rivers are still full of dead bodies of men women and children and they are constantly being swept down with the current. On my trip to boac I passed a long procession of bodies going seaward down the river current .I believe I could have counted fourteen thousand of them on my trip down the river and this procession it is said was kept up day and night.One of the captians of a river barge informed me that he began to meet floating bodies when he was in the sea port near Angelina ,i city and he had wondered where they all came from.As a full illuntration of high high the flood waters got a river vessel which was in the river port of Jessica city tried to get into the open river when the flood came on su so suddenly.It got out some good distance toard the middle of the river but the force of the flood forced it back. It was perfectly dark and all the land marks and other points had been completely blotted out by the roaring foaming waters.Therefore the course of the barge could not be determined and she was being furiously driven or carried rather in toard the main land the water of the river here flowing out over the land just where one of the levees had been bursted. Before the course of the vessel could be reas reestablished she had actually ran over the land for fourty miles from the river and can now be seen as far at to the North limits of Angelinia Asathin.And as the water and asthe ship draws thirty five feet of water some idea therefore can easily be obtained as to the height of the flood when at its worst."

One of the most sadas well as probably one of themost thrilling and dangerous and almost fatal experiences of any persons with this fearful flood th that could ever have been written or ever may have been written was that of Jennie Francis summer one of the heroines of the story and a dear friend of violet and her sisters the vivian Girl Princesses. At the time the flood occured she had been spending her time in the city of Doctor Dorothy Gale having visited some friends in that city which had been probably the hardest hit by the flood.This is an account of her exieri experience;

For any girl or man or woman it wouldcertainly have been a most terrible experience indeed.,and I hope the reader or any one else willalways be spared such.And yet from the effects of her experience she is a nervious wreck and though severely injured is still said to be shaking and trembling all over.when she closed her eyes she could not see anything else but piles and windrows and seas of a half naked dead outside in the country and teeming the streets of the city of Dorothy Gale and the places thronged with wild eyed men and women and weeping and shrieking children.At the time when she had spent her first day in this city she had been sur rised by the news that the flood which had been raging was reaching the city and stillrising.Some of the best friends of hers

a whose she had been expecting way before ten oclock did not yet arive as they could not get home because of the rising of the flood. As the flood continued to rise Jennie turner sat by one of the windows and putting on a dressing sack sack watched the flood.All at once one of the roomers of the huse came in and said in an exanxious voice; "look at the water rushing into a torrent into the street.It must be that the flood is rushing here too.the city must be surrounded." Jennie turner arose and looked out of the window and observed that ther there was water in the streets and rushing from curb and cu crub and moving down the streets like swiftly moving rivers.It rose rapidly and swiftly as Jennie watched it and her guardian sent her to get dressed, to put on swimmin swimming clothes so in case the flood would rise too heavily she would be able to swim to higher lodgings.The flood had by by now rose to the highest portions of the sidewalks and all men began to try to save th goods of the lower basements and stores by hurriedly bringing them t up to the higher floors.the flo floodsoon rose to a most furious torrent all the time the water creeping higher and higher.Jennie turner and all those in the same house with her soon were compelled to crowd into the higher halls of the huse a big five story one, and from the force of the current of the flood the building rocked and swayed like a cradle.About six oclock in the evening a part of the roof crashed from from the vi vibrations, all the windows on the lober floors were already letting in torrents of water and now the water had risen with a level of the seconddstory.

Then the men in the building told Jennie turner and the others that it would be possible that they must leave and go to a higher house a block or so across the street, the house being somewhat stronger than this five story wooden str cture.One of Jennie's turners men friends was terribly wild and axi anxious about his wife and children who had not returned home and all the telephone and other wires being done he could not learn any news about them whatever.the men told the girls and others that they must not wear anything but their bathi bathing suits or underwea underwear and take only a few things in a little bundle.Jennie turner took her little watch, her railroad ticket and what little money she had and pinned them in a little bag and placed the bo bag in a black iron box o of small size, took off over everything from her waist down li leaving nothing on but her underwear and skirt, no shoes and stockings. She swam across easily to the otherhouse but watched two men carry one woman across the street and down to the end of the block.Trees thicker than these in a large park were whirling down the streets wooden houses by the hundred some had given way into wreckage before the force of the flood or were floating off like so many boats, pine logs boxes and drift wood of allsorts were sweeping past and the water looked like whirlpools and irrestible rapids.Two wom and a number of children went across on the next trip and found the water a almost icy cold. Indeed for them it was like going down into the grave.It was terribly dark by this time and the men put their arms around two heavy women and down into the water they went.One of these women was crying bitterly about her three children that she was forced to leave behind untill the next trip for fear they would be drowned; and another of the women was begging one of the men not to turn her loose.

Three men came at lastout of the building.The water was deep enough to hold a good sized schooner by this time.It was only thirteen feet deep when Jennie turner swam a over.One of the men brought over some bundles of clothing such as he could find for the rescued to put on wrapped up in his own coat.He had to swim overlike a fish.Jennie Turner spent the night indeed such a horribleone wet from the shoulder to her waist and from her knees down and half naked and barefooted.No body of those rescued had any shoes or stockings.All of the rescued women did not have anything but a thin lawn dress and blac blanked wrapped around them r from their knee down.The men who did the rescue work had only their trousers, their undershirt and were all barefooted.The big brick house was packed with terrified people.the house had a deep bascment and all the lower windows werecut and before the force of the waters current it rocked from top to bottom and the water came through all the windows on the second floor.Ofcourse no one dared to take a chance of sleeping.

About three oclock in the morning the flood had changed to a torrent that was something terrible houses were wrecked by the thousands Jennie was horrified to see immense processions of dead bodies pass by every hour and as the horrified people stood by the fourth floor windows and watched these awful scenes they saw two men and a lot of women and children come by on an immense raft of wreckage and drift drift wood and heard many of the children calling frantically and crying for their mother or father and the men and women praying and calling for help.For nearly two e weeks the per peo le were surrounded in that building and many of them were so faint with hunger that they could not hardly move. Finally the flood began to fall and the people began to hope for r lief. Jennie Turner and the fr few friends with her spent thelast night crowded into a small office on the fourth floor with with nine m en and ten women in total darkness sitting on large boxes with their feet off up the floor. It was indeed an immense brick building six stories high and fortunately strong enough to withstand theflood.the roof and one side story had collapse collasped however and the water at the height of the flood had come up to about half way beyondthe third floor or at least was three stories and a half deep.As soon as the flood had abated enough to be safer Jennie Turner and some he of her friends took the chances and waded home.But such a hom.The water had risen three feet in the third story of the house and thewho whole roof, and front fa wall being gone the rain of a stormy day could have easily po ured in and made matterworse.Jennie turner had not a single dry drag but a ve very dirty skirt which was hang ing in a small wardrobe and no underskirt with it.Herlittle trunks had floated and everything was stained in them.and she and her friends had had hardly nothing to eat for nearly nearly two weeks and were forced to almost live on whiskey and any almost useless food they could secure.

And every time the rescuers and other men would see them and Jennie turner they would poke a bottle of whiskey at them and make them drink some.All they had the first day after the flood passed was crackers and cheese at fifty cents a small box, and whiskey.

Jennie turner and her friends were so weak that they felt like they could not get any more so one of the boys and Jennie herself took the risks and went down at about eleven oclock to try and raid some store for food.The scenes in the streets which they witnessed was indeed awful.Countless numbers of dead animals lay everywhere and the streets were filled with fallen telegraph wires andpoles, and wrecks and windrows of timbers and other wreckage.Thousands of women and children and men were sitting on the steps of half ruined houses crying for lost ones or bemoaning theloss of their property and half of them were all injured.

Thousands of wild eyed ghastly looking ke men within that day had married by and some told of whole families being killed by the hundred.

Jennie turner could not as yet stand any more and begged her companions to bring her some and when she returned she fell on the bed with wild hystr hysterics.A man came in and forcee her to drink some more whiskey saying it was good for her but though she obeyedthe only effect it had was to make her head ache worse and also to make her vomit later on. She had about got straightenedout when a number of women and children and some men came into the house all who hadlost some one; how home persons and relatives and all property, indeed all they had.They all had hysterics, and every one cried wil l wildly, and poor Jennie turner then had another spell.All day for two days and nights one wagon train after another continually passed hour by hour filled with dead bodies; most of them children and without a thi thing on them--and a d also men with stretchers with bodies of men men and children with just a sheet thrown over them; many of these being little children..

Jennie turner feared every minute that some of the men would bring the bodies into their own shelter but they had not done so up to now and all hope for others was entirely lost.there was a little boy in the house who had been attatched a good deal to Jennie turner and who had spent two nights andone day in the water clinging to only a fe a small table and his father, mother and all his brothers and sisters and other relai relatives and friends had all been drowned right before his very eyes.He was now all alone and spoke no words to no one not even her. Jennie turner slept that following night on a small coun couch with nothing under her but a rug and a sheet and she had to borrow something dry to even sleep in.The husband of a family who lost all had just come from Angelina Agathis to Dorothy Gale.He had walked and swam and rode on a raft all the way.He was now or is nearly wild and isjust screaming and blaspheming something awful.Jennie turner could not stand any more and prepared to go to some safer spot as soon as possible.

One big family in the same house consisting of father mother, and six children was in its own home near Jennie Turners shelter when the house a small wooden one collasped.they found refuge on a floating roof which however soon parted and father and some of the childrenwere swept in one direction while the mother and the other children drifted in another. Two of the children were washed off but later all were united and rescued by those in Jennie's shelter. A wom woman in the same building became a raving maniac as the result of her own awful experiencesWith her two children and her mother; husband and wa father she was drifting on a big drift wood when her whole force of friends and relatives were swept away.This unfortunate woman who had been rescued by Jennie Turner and two women mistakes every one she sees for her lost relatives and is said to clutch wildly for them.

Another woman and her husband sought safty in five successive houses which were demolished by the force of the flood.Then they eventually were forced to climb on to a floating floor and were saved by some in Jennie Turners house. Sixteen men finding the s allbuilding they were in about to fall before the strength of the torrent made their way to the large city signal station and clasping hands encircled the framework to keep from being washed away. many persons floated in the waters ten to fifty feet deep for days and nights by catching all sorts of wreckage; finally they got into a big row boat that pas s ed to some along along and were literally driven by the flood into the big Aransas Riverin the force of the river current almost destroyed their craft but they were rescued as they passed under a bridge thronged with people.All of them were fearfully bruised.A sad incident in the search for the dead occured three days or more after the floodsOne of the squads of searchers of the navy relief parties discovered in a still waterlogged building which was totally wrecked fifteen bodies.Among these bodies was several which a member of the relief party recognized as his own father and mother.

The bodies were all in a well advanced state of decomposition and were therefore removed to the big funeral fire which was built and which the son assisted and with spartian like firmness stood by and saw the bodies of his own beloved dead reduced to ashes.To one of his helpers he said as he smiled almost grimly:

"I'll going into the army soon and I'm not going to give to any Glandelinian soldier I take prisoner any mercy whatever."

On the same day a brakman of the Rio-Hollester and Paddora railroad left Jessicia City and started to walk toard Dorothy Gale city.He found nov found seventeen hundred little children stretched in the flooded districts for miles.From their dread he knew they had been washed from some Orphan Asylum.On his way further he discovered the bodies of seven women and seven children of all sizes as thick as straw berries in a big field.He claimed it was the greatest slaughter ever committed by a flood he had ever seen; and he had seen the effects of sixteen big f oods as long as he had lived.

Of Angelinia As sthin her own property loss by the flood and some big fires following it was hardly less than $55,000,000 outside of that city in Dorothy Gale; and all other points in Central and southern Calverinia and Northern Angelinia together with the wide stretches of antiquity agricultural and stock raising districts the property damage was nearly three times that amount or into in the neighborhood of one hundred and sixty billions of dollars.Probably besides eighteen big cities almost complete y inundated by the flood with devastating effects; probably seventy seven villages and towns were completely washed away; and in these places there was an almost total loss of life.Many towns and cities were also flooded and the inundation even reached as far as Angeline Junction; and a part touched Calverina.It was reliably estimated from reports received at Paddor a and Angelinia Arathia that the loss of life exclusive of the death list of Dorothy Gale and Angelinia Arathia would go over nine hundred and fifty five thousand people.Angelinia Arathia reported Twenty thousand dead; and Dorothy Galeone hundred thousand; Jessicia reported three hundred thousand dead; and Abi nearly five hundred thousand. In many towns not swept away by the flood, hundreds of them the percentage of killed or drowned exceeded that of the city of Dorothy G l Gale alone. Three quarters of the southern portion of the city of Dorothy Gale andone portion of the big mobolization camps there were totally swept out of existance.

The scenes of desolation in the devastated country for hundreds of miles we e too terrible for the hardest hearted person to witness.The flood covered over five hundred miles of country completely covered under water thirty five cities each with a population of more than a hundred the sand people, and portions of the flood extended as far over the northern a part of Angelinia as far as Angeline junction a distance of over two hundred miles south from the Cal e Calverinian boundary line. The crops throughout the flooded districts were completely ruined.The same was true of all crops in southern Calverinia.The distress was keenly felt by all the planters and farmers throughout the flooded regions.But in the open country the flood did not disappear untill nearly three months and ten days.In Jessicia the damage was figured at nearly fourteen billion dollars, at Dorothy Gale 000 this town alone half destroyed; and sixty thousand people destroyed; and six hundred thousand survivors deprived not only of shelter and provisions and food for the time being but all prospects of crops and recovery for years and years to come.The enemy certainly knew how to devastate a country.

One of the war correspondents sched t to Dorothy Gale fr from Jessicia super City and was astonished, saddened, and bewildered at the sights he witnessed of all the devastation on every side.Nearly every one of the houses were in total ruins leaving all the whole population entire without proper shelter and destitute of the necessary things of life and with no means whatever to procure them.Everything in the way of all kinds of crops in the country were destroyed and he had written to the government that unless speedy relief would come there would come exceed lorly great suffering.All the people of both Dorothy Gale and Angelinia Arathia cities needed assistance beyond measure.All needed money to rebuild their homes and to buy stocks and implements.They needed food, flour, bacon and other provisions.Clothing also was very badly needed.Hundreds of thousands of women and children were without hardly any clothing whatever and were suffering keenly.and a good idea could be gained of the awful distress when it was known that many box cars and small tents and even the stronger standing ruins were being improvised as shelter and hay and straw and even e earth and stone as bedding; only fourteen hundred houses in Dorothy Gale city were standing wholly intact and the rest are badly damaged.

The damage at Lynchburg was not less than $10,000,000 and the news from there was disheartening;the country districts for all the distance of the floods recession were still strewn thickly with corpse corpses. The roads side around Dorothy Gale were dotted with the bodies of the dead for fifty miles.All of them were still unburied as the bodies were already too badly decomposed to be handled and the e ree living water or the ground t o soft to allow of burial.

A great pestilence was also feared day by day from the decomposing animal matter which was lying everywhere and the st stench was sickening awful. Disinfecting materials were daily needed and the damage to g l farming stocks, and even big cowboy rich stocks and cattle was terrible hundreds of thousands of horses and cattle having perished during the flood; In Baldwin and other counties of that sect section hardly any kind of a plantation building could be seen and all was still nothing but water; water;All the strongest houses were gone; and the devastation was terribly complete.In the big cities all the large and finest sugar and other refineries were tote ly totally wrecked or swept away.All the glandelinian internment camps at Dorothy Gale were swept away and thousands of prisoners drowned or without shelterthe main mobollization camps were completely destroyed on the south and north end and over twenty five thousand soldiers drowned out of the bodies never having been recovered.

Three hundred thousand barracks in that camp has been totally destroyed or swept away; the trenches were leveled; guns swept for miles and there is great sufferi g n ong the millions of surviving soldiers who have lost almost everything.There was also much destition among the Glandelinian soldiers of the camps of Angelinia Arathia and Jessicia one of the largest of the mobollization camps in the country; the one at Jessicia city consisting of ten million soldiers and officers; was wholly destroyed and the millions of soldiers were without shelter; food, e ve provis provisions clothing and not even having their own clothes on them.Thousands have been drowned.Their food supplies were provided by their more fortunate neighbors of the camps at Angelinia Arathia which only had the camps, streets and the lower quarters of their wooden barracks flooded.The Angelinia Arathia authorities heard however from the Rabbi Cantonments where several million other soldiers had been mobolized. Every barracks building was swept to pieces by the inundation the property loss unestimated and all the entire number of soldiers drowned or killed, not a single one surviving.Of them generals The belves were caught under the falling timbers of their headquarters and every one of the killed or buried under the wreckage to die slower by drowning.Over a score of thousand people of that city were injured and many drowned.In addition to the loss of soldiers barracks in the flooded mobolization camps the entire field and other crops belonging to the camps all camp provisions, all artillery, weapons artillery ammunition and everything of military value including rail clude artilery of every kind such as bleeding e gatlin guns.Crucifixes were some and destroyed or swept away and even big statues in the big Army church houses were ruined by the flood nothing of any sacred material having escaped here on these as well as record of other mobolization camps that had been completed to plete obliterated or blotted out.Seven thousand people were killed at Je in ...mer city:which had its waterlrin completely destroyd and its streets floodedto the depth of seven feet an oto twenty feet for three moth months and a half and the people there faced utter star v vation until the flood receded and had to live on what was brought b the upper floors during the start of the floods.In the neighborhood of Jennie ...r ar City more persons were killed or drowned than I would even dare to mention for fear the reader would think I trying to annihilate the whole world, and none of their bodies had been as yet recovered as the flood was still devastating in its ruin and turmoil.Ample loss of life in that locality in its rush and turmoil.Ample loss of Dorothy Gale, Jessicia and other places outlined.The search for the Victims of the flood at Glendale and also at Avondale,City which was also badly damaged resulted in five thousand bodies being recovered.Ladders and also Avondale,City were favorite country resorts with rich Allen man people of the highest class and the hotels of these towns were always filled with guests war time or not.Many of these were out on pleasure b jaunts when the dreadful flood came on them without the slightest warning there were many guests including women and children, great Cardenals and Bishops and priests and people of the richest kind in the hotels and private houses which were all swept away.The casualties at these two places were never estimated but indeed were terribly severe.

Madge Evans city situated near the south of the Evangeline St Claire river asked for help to all as many of the refugees that were cooped in there from the flooded districts.Over o e one half this city was fairly crowded with refugees and they reported that one half of the town the/ch e e e from was entirely destroyed and eleven thousand peopleleat their their lives.Reports also from all the adjoining country showed that even incantonments the ty Glendalelian prisoners were drowned.
Five hundred prisoners at Evangeline St Claire city employed on two big Plantations near their internment camp were drowned by the sudden rush of the flood waters And many others were killed in the collapse of their barracks in which they had sought refuge from the wild fury of the awful flood.The city of Evangeline St Claire was in the brunt of the flood but only its streets were flooded and basement and lower property floor property was destroyed.There was no loss of life in the city but many of the smaller houses were rendered h m homeless.
Several hundred several hundred people were drowned or killed
Several hundred people were killed or drowned in the towns of Miny Darnis and Jennie Ander in the Honeydale Country.The new barracks buildings of the encampments of Trot and Betsy Dublin City owned and operated by the government were destroyed by the flood and hundreds of soldiers and visitors injured and the entire army without shel e shelter or anything for their sustenance.The drops all around were slaughtered.Over fifty - hundred landGlendalelian prisoners killedtheir captors when the flood were finished with their massacre.The city of Trot suffered a ll loss of nearly all its buildings and thirty hundred people were said to have been killed there.There were many homeless people here and the destitute people were being forced to livesout of doors and were camping on the wet ground.Outside of the cities of Dorothy Gale and Angelinln Agathia Jack Jessi i Jessica and others the greatest sufferes or suffering was out in the country site where smaller towns had beenswept entirely away.
There was no damage at Bahaia town though it was touched by the inundat ion.People in the t edicte Relief were those who were deprived of home and property altogether.The planters in all the flooded country side had everything swept away by the flood leaving all the tenants bordering on the very verge of starvation.An enormous amount of farms was planted in all kinds of crops and everything was about started in full rowth when the furious floods laid everything bare.At any other towns hardly a single house was left standing.Countless numbers of the farm hands had been from at into that section to assist in work on the planting of crops and other plants on the farms and every one of these were drowned in the floods
All the survivors of the towns entirely swept away were huddled in whatever little shelter they could find their clothing and everything being gone.There were absolutely devoid of even the ...ry necessities with which to sustain li life.Even to begin all over again in the owners of plantations, cattle ranches, and ranches had to rebuild houses, pro...ns and ...chinery and new draft animals n and the like.The terrible unaccountable loss of horses, mules, cows and the like in the stricken blow districts was a severe blow llow too heavy almost to even recover from.All like stock interests were totally burned.Even in the opinion of the many great fall ways any years after the war uet elapse before the farming districts and other pla es places could be restored to their former conditions to make matters worse on account of the war and its consequences the advanced prices f all kinds of building materials was also onhand very hard and shocking blow to all the farmers especially the s aller farmers who in most instances were owners f farms.Appendix for Brandigate rail road relief was received most where in the reptons of the dreadful floods.The reason being a fine ...re and rainy one had given promish of producing the best harvest for the previous fourty years, and ll this devastation had to com e on account of the war ...ter cruelty of the enemy.Five thousand People belonging or who had residences and homes in Evangeline St Glaire city were drowned at Ave St Glaires point most of them women and children.One of the survivors whose na e was Master Heidi was rescued alive, exhau ted injured and in a state of terrible nervousness.

Heidi said the waters came up so suddenly and without any warning warning that he and his family had barely time enough to even escape to the roof of their house.He had his little boy in his arms and his five other children were tied together.A heavy timber struck His little boy killing him and injuring the father.He then took up hisalittle daughter and while he had her in his arms he was twice washed off the roof and in this way hisalittle girl was drowned.When his other children and his wife perished and he is now alone in the world, all this horror and sorrow on account of the enemy.
The children of the St Lucy's Orphan Asylum were kil illed by the wreckage of the falling ...ne and others were drowned, and the ...n matron and the attendants and others were washed off into the flood and drowned thus leaving none alive to te the awful tale.One of the witnesses of this awful tragedy was on a floating house top and finally while he was watching this awful scene too fascinated to observe his own peril
the roof parted in the middle and as i the pieces fell into the water they were rawn in twain by the force of the current, the main remain ing on one half.Then the portion of the roof he was clinging to suddenly turned over and this was the last seen of him too.Another man and also a woman held to their own side of another floating roof and were so distr ted in mind as to care little where or how it drifted or what happened to them.They finally were rescued under one of the big river bridges late in the afternoon of the same day.
At Delmonte another big country resort town there were three thousand and seventy five refugees women and children in the one big hotel.The water was roaring about it like a thundering whirlpool but the main danger was from the heavy jams of logs and drift wood and others w other wreckage being hurled against it.Yet the hotel withstood the torrent and the law and no one was lost though they had a most terrifying time and expected every moment to be their last.At Glendale down every house in the place though not swept away by the flood was seriously damaged, including sixteen magnificent churches.Three hundred people were killed there and ut a single house was left in any condition to be habitable.
Two long lines of freight cars of all kinds were hurled from the sidings by the force of the waters across the main line and whirled along by the swift current eighteen miles to Seldon Point where they crashed with a number of other trains of cars killing twenty six and injuring an others of the trainworkmen workmen.
More dead children from a demolished House the destruction of all the one hundred thousand houses except three, and the destitution of many hundreds of families, and a great loss of life was the red record of the work of the flood at Arcadia Junction.From fifty other towns not totally demolished by the inundation were reports that buildings had been ruined especially in basement and lower floors and the weaker structures wrecked r demolished.Most of these towns reported scores of dead, and hundreds of injured and sicks.
James Anderson one of the distant agents for the Fantom Abbiesmilan Railway made a trip over the Rio-Hollester and Pandora Railroad from Angelinln Agathia, to Dorothy Gale city, and thence from Dorothy Gale city to Oz by on foot and part of the time by raft and swift boat and then on returning gave a graphic account of his journey which had been made under the greatest of difficulties.
Hundreds of miles o
Hundreds of miles of railroad tracks and all railroad and other bridges hundreds of these are some south of Grand Mumbi'land he. ll washed, away took boats when the opportunity presented itself and also went on the way on rafts and nothing could be seen in all the country even after the flood had left the cities, but death and desolation and some of bodies of the human beings floating in the floods.All the country land is still covered deep with water some places even to the depth of ten feet and I do not think I even can exaggerate when I say that countless numbers of horses and cattle are to be seen along the line of railroad tracks still remaining south of Wimbi town which is also devastated by the great inundation...

All the little towns which had been situated all along the right of way of the railroad are completely swept away and indeed for me the sight is the most terrible that I have ever witnessed.when I reached a point about three miles and a half north of Eva St claire Point I saw a floating sea of bodies and from that point untill Elden Junction was reached dead bodies by the hundreds, and thousands could be seen a l along from the railroad tracks, floating about in the sea of waters.
At Elden Junction nothingwhatever is left.About in one thousand five hundred great cars of merchandize that reached Elden Junction on the Mic-pollester and P n Pandora Ra Railroad on the first night before the flood are seen scattered over the whole country and their contents will no doubt prove a total loss to the on owner.
Three days after the flood had started its recession, from early morning untill far into the afternoon the Emperor of Albieannia, was in conference with many of the relief committees from various points in the flood swept country side. Among the first of the committees to arive were those from Dorothy Gale and Besty Bobbin.These men consulted at full length with the Emperor and as a result of this conference it was decided that the home guards and the militia not needed just now in battlefields should be left to patrol the flooded districts, and the streets of the ruined cities a l these places to be consu considered under military rule and that the soldiers were to have the exclusive control not only of the patrolling of the cities and flooded country side, but of the sanitary forces and Glandelinian prisoners engaged in cleaning the cities.It was decided that instead of looking to the surviving laboring people of the surviving cities for work in the emergency and an importation ofall Glandelinian prisoners obtainable should be made to conduct the sanitary workunder strong guard, while the surviving people ofthe cities were to be given an opportunity to be loking after their own great losses and to rebuilding and repairing their own property without giving time to the cities at large.
It was also beel ieved that with the work of all these available Glandelinian prisoners it would require about two months or more toclean both the cities of Angelinia Agathia and Dorothy Gale of debris alone and in the meantime the surviving citizens could be working on their own property and repairing damage there.
Another relief committee from Jennie Turner City reported that two hundred and fifty five thousand six hundred and sixty six persons were in sad destitute ou circumstances, without food, clothing or homes.Crops of all kinds in its vinicity had been totally destroyed, all farming implements had been washed away and the people had nothing at hand whatever with which to work the fields.
A relief committee from Chamberlane City, and also one from Rose and Topsy Towns reported many thousands destitute and homeless.Other sections all around Big Girl Knocl which was also flooded sent in committees during the day and the next day also, and as a result of all Emperor vivian ordered post haste shipments of su plies and other provisions.
The text of message of sympathy recieved by Emperor Vivian from the Emperor of Protestentia Nation was as follows;;;;;;;;;;;;;

JUNE THE TWENTY FIFTH.
1913.
Emperor of Albieannia, Angelinia Agathia.....((
I wish to convey by telegraph to your Majesty the expression of the deep felt sympathy and horror of our nation as well as the Nations Court and Ruler with the unusual misfortune that has befallen a second time the Rene Helendale Country and other provinces of Galverinia including the northern provinces of Angelinia State, and I mourn with you and all the people of Albieannia over the terrible loss of life and property caused by the record breaking flood of the world, but the awful magnitude of the disaster If more than doubled by the indomitable spirit of the people of the Albieanaian nation who in their long and continued struggle with the rebellious Glandelinian states should I hope prove victorious before long and make the Glandelinian rebels pay for causing such a horrible misfortune which was not necessary at all.I sincercely hope that Galverinia will rise again to new efforts and the surthorities and engineers in the future revent the enemy from making future floods and forest fires.
Emperor of Protestentia.''''''''''

Emperor Vivian then gave this reply;;

Imperial Palace.Angelinia Agathia;
His Imperial and Royal Majesty of Protestentia, Whilliam the Third.
Your Majestys message and condolence is very grateful to the people of Albieannia and therefore in their name as well as behalf of the millions who have suffered the loss of homes and bereavement in the Helendale disaster I thank you most graciously;
EMPEROR OF ABBIEANNIA.''

By the time or the wixth day after the flood although the waters as yet did not subside in the country had arived, many of the business men of the stricken and surviving cities and towns had recovered their c urave courage, andtherefore several banks, and a few business houses that were available were reopened, although most of the streets of the big cities were still chocked with debris and practically impassable.
Not any of the surviving women even venture out shopping as an asct of defiance t the foe picking their way over great windrows of wreckage. St Peters Street Angelinia Agathia was by this time already opened and others were being rapidly cleared.however the stench from the still decomposing bodies of thr victims of the calmaitystill in the ruins of thousands of buildings and the windrows of wreckage was all but unbearable.

''Angelinia Agathia must and we shall recover from the disaster''said Emperor Vivian to His wife some time later.
At an ther meeting of the Emperor and of his Loyal Counts and Barons and other royalty after the flood for the purpose of bring order out of all the chaoes the only sentiments that were ex ressed expressed wasthat the whole rec region had been wiped out and that on account of the flood caused by the enemy Abbieannia had recieved an awful blow.The loss of life and property was more appalling than the first flood so great t that two weeks had passed since and yet it had not been po possible to make any reliable estimate.With sad and aching hearts but with the most resolute faces the sentiment of the meeting was that out of the awful chaoes of the flood and of wrecked homes, and wrecked business the ruined cities must must rise again.
Indeed the sentiment was not of the ides alone of burying and burning the dead, and to give up the cities to the mercy of the devastation, but rather dispose of all the dead as quickly as possible, succor all the needy, appeal for aid from the nation and from a holy world and then to start resolutely to mend all the broken houses.In many cases for Angelinia Agathia and Dodorthy Gale Cities the work of rebuilding and upbuilding was to be begun over again for in many cases for these big cities the total destruction was only only partial and the majority of the damage was only to lower floors of houses that were only los were only suffering basement and lower floor damages.The sentment was that the cities must rebuild, and fulfill their glorious destiny and rebuild the devastated mobolization camps.If the population had lost all else the survivors still hadlive life and the future, and that the war was young and the christian armies growing higger every day.The survivors of the cities could never forget what they had been forced to undergo what they had suffered, the country side cannot forget the hundreds upon hundreds of thousands of their friends and relatives and loved oneswho found in the fierce angry currents and billows of the flood that destroyed them a final resting place.But tears and grief and desires to punish the enemy would not and did not make the survivors forbe forget their present duties.The blight and ruinwhich had destroyed the whole country side were not beyond repair, and it was not said that the devastated cities and towns and villiages would be abandoned because of the disaster however horrible the flood disaster had been.It was also time for courage of the highest order and also it was now a time when men and women and even children should show the reall real stuff t that is in them and they could then make no loftier acknowledgement of the material sympathy of the outside world that is being extended to the stricken nation than to answer back that the nation has buried all the flood dead, relieved the sufferin suffering of the sick and destitute and bravely undertake the vast task of restor ation and recuperation which lay before the whole nation in a manner which was to convince the whole world that the nation has the spirit to overcome misfortune of any kind during any serious sections of the dreadful war and to rebuild the ruined cities and towns. In this way the state of Calverinia will be able to prove itself worthy of the boundless tenderness which is being showered upon it in its hour of desolation and sorrow.... The sentiment voiced the feeling feeling of the people of the stricken cities pretty accurately for all of the people who had survivied the dreadful flood had begun to look around them and make plans for rebuilding and clearing the wreckage from the streets although it was many and many days after that before the strr streets were cleaned and the very ground was dry enough to work on again. One of the daring war and news paper correspondents who had risked his life many times and who had unusual facilities for getting at the true state of affairs summed up the awful situation on about a week or two after the flood as follows

The first week or so of the suffering of the people of the flooded districts of the country has now many hope passed away and the awful extent of the di disaster which flood and fire brought to so many miles of the country seems now much greater and more awful than it did even when the disaster has first been manefested.
That more than one million people out of fourty million women and children who make up the population of that flooded district of the country are all dead is certain. And the money value of the damage to the property of the surviving citizens is so great that no one could ever attempt to try to estimate it and all the effects of the flood is complet ly comple tely irreparable. That stillcovers morethan two hundred miles of ground, which was formely covered with beatufi beautiful little towns and villiaves andmaginficent farms and country sites but which now it seems is not going to be re l reclaimed from the flood.
large and beufit beautiful landscapes three hundred miles long and from three hundred to four hundred miles in greather e length where the finest towns and villiages and beautiful magnificent forests and farms existed is now covered by the flood waters even though it is so long after the flood started. Elsewhere the great fors forest fires are raging and burning on with redouble fury, and news is giving out reports that at differnet portions of the country scores of fierce and horrubl/ bloudy battles are raging some of them great foe successes.....The town of Heidi Grossroads has i ts biggest houses still under water although before the flood it had had been on a slight elev tion elevation fourty feet above the level of the river....
Many fear this town is gone forever and all its population had been drowned. Indeed like men women and children stunned, dazed and confused and frightened the survivors of the flood have worked day and night without ceasing and struggled desperatrly in their efforts to help the soldiers bury the dead and to make surviving cities and towns habitable for the living but it may be completely doubted whether they even yet realize to the full extent what they all have really lost or guess the suffering that is in store for them when their moments of liesure come and they begin to miss their friends and so lo many loved ones who are all dead.
It is mostly certain now that how much the whole country side has suffered that the ruined towns and villiages which have not been wiped out altogether will be rebuilded and will be as good as before. Those who had caused the flood it is said, have been capt red by the Genini and are being brought to the city of Angelinia Agathia to be tried not as rebel enginner engineers and spies or the like but as the worst criminals and will be shot or hanged as first degree murderers.
Yet few of the men survivors of the scores of towns and cities can be able to pay even the slightest attention yet to the work that is necessary for this necessary restoration. Yet even to day they are still busy with the roughest work of cleaning the streets of the cities and towns, of clearing away and burning all the debris that is not to be used of burying and burning the bodies, wil which are still being discovered under the ruins each day and of providing for their necessities of life.
The men many women who a few days before this most greatest of war disaster as yet were the mistresses of mansions with every want provided for may now often be seen clad cither like ragged beggars or half naked making their way through the streets of the ruins in search of more clothing or a little food and other provisions to and who esteemed themselves a fortunate if their families were still intact to gather in the wreckage of their former homes. The men who a few days also before the flood were the owners of great businesses and the masters of many servants may be seen these sad and awful days working in the trying tasks of removing the debris and hauling away to burial the decayed and unrecognizable bodies of the scas of drowned and other dead under the direction of soldiers and deputy sheriff sheriffs and also to see rebel prisoners at work eve /where who are guarded by soldiers who are there to see that the work is not slighted..

All around the armies of sad workers is dreadful ruin. The broken and shattered houses, the windrows and seas of wreckage, the scattered articles of various v furniture abo e all the many funeral pyres on which the bodies of thousands are being consumed every hour make the whole Henendale County and other provinces a region of unspeakable horror even those all those whose personal wants are yet provided for. The peril from the forest fires and flood waters was also and is still threatening to follow for those who survivied by a peril of famine hunger and disease. There is also a great peri peril to life and property from the great horde of unusually wicked Glandelinian vandals robbers and inhuman rebel outlaws who were attracted by theshelpless condition of that section of the country to seek their r pret prey.
Yet the unusual and most splendid response of the whole country to the appeal for help from the devastated districts for help h has and is now removing all danger of further suffering and privation and the prompt aft action of the Home guards and other soldiers sent from Dodorthy Gale and other places have reestablished order and made the horrible scenes of stripping t othe corpses and the assaults on living persons no longer possible.
All the districts ruined by the flood, but which has been recovered is still under martial law and it willremain so untill the end of the war or longer nominically at least untill all normal conditions otherwise can or are restored.
The danger of a great pestilence is so terribly great however according to reports and indeed the fear that many millions may fall victims to a scourge of disease that willeven sweep the whole world is mainly great gaining gre great strength and leading to a flight of a ll the women and children of the cities and towns not even t touched by the flood and a ll these are crowding the boats, trains and other conveyances to get away to the older north.
Indeed added much to the awful danger from the countless thousands of decomposing bodies of men and beasts which still lie under ruined houses, wreckage and on the ground throughout the country side is the danger from so many unflushed sewers and close ts in the cities and towns. Untill yesterday iw it was impossible to flush all sewers in the cities and towns on account of the lack of proper water and although the con dition is now much better through the helping hand of the nation there is very much of the awful evil still.
If there are any such dangers as fevers and pestilence which may be bred under these conditions they willnot show themselves f r twelve days or longer at the earliest. Manyof the physcians who have come to the stricken districts have issued statements that would probablycalm the weakest hearted ser person. They say as long as every thing possible is done there will be no danger. The desperate work of clearning all the debris away from the whole country side has been carried on with the greatest vigor o more glandelinian prisoners being put to work a every day and it is expected that it will be pushed faster and faster from now on. The two million glandelinian prisoners whom it has been decided to send to the ruined districts for the work willsoon be able to take up all task without having to worry about the safty of their own comrades which they fear they may h e may ha e been compelled to leave behind in the internment camps. We must have this region of desolation cleaned up at all costs and also with the greatest speed that ever can be possible. And if it is not done with all haste and at the same time done well there may be the worlds worst pestilence ever known and if it once breaks out here it will not be the war s ricken nation alone that willsuffer. Such things always spread and it is not only for the sake of the nation but for others outside of the country that I urge above all things we want to have th this war against the rebel states of Glandelinia won at all costs and under any conditions.
The whole nat tion has been most kind in its response to the appeal of the flooded districts and from what I hear all kinds of food and disinf ectants for temporary purposes at least have been already sent on the way. The whole nation does not comprehend the awful destitution prevailing throughout the flooded districts. Of all pr people poor or rich here not one has anything. Even the greatest number of them cannot even furnish a single room for any kind of shelter even though they would have had the money to rebuild the house or the rooms.The millions of survivors have absolutely nothing except what is given them by the relief committees and others. All are in a condition of absolute want indeed, they lack everything and save for the splendid generosity of the nation they would be utterly without hope indeed. With the large gangs of Galandelinian prisoners in the streets of every one of the towns and cities are still finding every now and then bodely decomposed bodies.None of these selected of human beings men women or children can be recognized and many of them are completely naked and even without anything about them for any mark of identification and these are being disposed of as rapidly as possible but nevertheless the work is very offensive and the rebel prisoners who are engaged in it cannot endure it steadily for even a short time.

Pull them out of the water as soon as seen and thrown them in the flames. As soon as taken from the wreckage and the water" is the order and it is immediately carriedout. The best of all the work in this direction was and is still being down in the country and other districts outside the cities and many bodies are found at frequent intervals for many miles and none of these however were found found in ruins but floating in the water. It is expected that many more will be found for weeks to come as the gangs of Galandelinian prisoners who found so many bodies will clear up all the debris in the country where it is known that bodies lie.The unusual exodus to places of better shelter is still going on.The boats now operating up and down the rivers are crowded to their fullest capacity and they are making as many round trips a day as they can."

"No flood calamity in the world or any real one in the world approaches this second horror of the Helendale County.The whole region needed more physicians and nurses and those who were rushing as quickly to the stricken regions were sending carloads of quick lime and all other kinds of disenfectants.

Even now when two weeks after the disaster had passed the whole County was still a vast funeral pry pyre.From the wreckage all over that section of the country ascended numerous pillars of smoke and the air for un hundreds of miles was filled with the sickening oder of burning human and animal flesh.But above all something that would probable make a person forget even the presence of so many decomposed dead was the stench of decaying coffee and all other vegetable products that lie swelling with the heat and putrefying.Powerful chemicals and disefecentents were still required to prevent what this was sure to produce---a horrible world sweeping plague.

In the face of all these conditions all the survivors were stillburying whole armies of dead, burning most of the wreckage to destroy other dead, and attempting to restore what order possible and yet despite the fact that all this was caused by the enemy no word or complaint or desires of revenge can be heard anywhere.The woe which has come upon the southern portion of Calverinia was too far too great for any amount of tears and the afflictions of so many victims in the loss of dear ones was for the time entirely forgotten in the heroic and desperate fight and work that was being made for self preservation.Women of wealth were to be seen stealing through the streetsof the ruined cities without clothing save for a bit of torn torn and grimy cloth wrapped about them.Even all men of means and wealth were and stillwere in the same sorry plight and were seen to be going about their grewsome task of cleaningup in a most stolid manner and it seemed that it would be obvious that the districts had not awakened to the fullhorrors of the awful situation.Yet there has not been time for them to even think .It was not at all uncommon uncommen to hear worn and sad faced men speak without any feeling about the loss of their families or property and also about all they lost without so little evidence of concern that it would attract great wonder were not the senses of the visitor numbed by the terror of the awful situation.It was the awful reaction that was and was stillfeared by most of those who were leading in the effort to make a recovery of the flood devastated country and other districts.Yet it is possible when this work will be fully completed and there willbe coming a time to think a heart rending wail of woe and horror willgo up from the many millions of survivors and the most gloomy desperation and great desires of revenge on the enemy will be expected to succeed the energy that was now manifested. The spirit of so many of the surviving people can be fully illustrated by one of the Mayors of a town which had been fully swept away by the great flood.The Mayor was about thirty five years old and he had lost his entire family wife three sons and five daughters and all his property.The bodies of his sons were recovered but no trace of his wife and daughters had ever been found.Whether their bodies had been swept to the main river by the flood flood and thence to the sea, or burned on one of the funeral fire barges or buried may never never be known.

Terrible as was the blow the poor Mayor awas at hispost the days following the recession of the flood attiredc in a pair of ragged trousers, and his undershit, and a hat d that did not l h long to him.Glad in these no accc nt clothes the Mayor supretended the relief and other work.

In his own report to the Government at Angelinia Agathia General Hendro Berger the great Gemini Leader, placed the loss of life at from 1,600,000 to 2, 345,000 and firmly and sarcastically ridiculed the idea that any person could estimate the awful property loss at that time.He however predicted that it would be impossible to estimate within $100,000,000 of the correct figures.His great estimate was basedupon what was said to be better infomation than that of any other visitor of war corresp correspondent in the region of desolation as he and his followers had made a complete and throughout canvas of the Helendale County visiting every one of the localities where ever it was possible to travel on horseback and the like instruction from the emperor being to thoroughly investigate in every detail.No one else hadever made such a canvas.General Berger after looking over the situation in Helendale Country and Northern Angelinia said the railroad losses would be immense and would reach the total of $55,000,000 or 66,000,000 million dollars in that region alone. At the Riverport cities such as Dorothy Gale and Angelinia Agathia and also Big Girl Knool all the railroad property, such as wharves, warehouses, grain elevators, de depots and tracks and all the other property were totally ruined.The costly bridges, scores of them over rivers or creeks and brooks and other streams were in total ruins and would have to be rebuilt.The Great North Western known as the Mic-Hollester and Pandora had considerable track washedout, while many other railroad lines also suffered very severely.All tracks between Angelinia Agathia and Big Girl Knool with all of the bridges was also wash washed away and many railroad workmen workmen were lost.

At Little Girl Knool City also hard hit by the flood more than fourty thousand houses were destroyed, millions upon millions ofdollars worth of dry goods grocery and other business houses, whi wholesale and other retail were ruined there was hardly any house in this city which did not suffer dam damage the total property losses being about twice or three times twenty twenty millions and yet living in regions where any kind of floods were liable to occur even by accident or overflow of rivers not any time people of this city carried larhe insurance. No loss of life occured here however.

The immense and steady stream of hundreds of thousands of weeping refugees from the ruined cities and towns was kept up for fear of the flood resuming its horrible devastation.There was not a departing train that was able to run or any boats and river craft which was not packed to its very platforms.Refugees mostly women and little children continued to leave for many days after.

Indeed in the whole world so far probably there was no more sorrowful a sight that any one could ever imagine or even picture than any presented by these boat loads of ragu refugees when the ropes were suddenly cast off and the crafts swung out into the rivers and away from the desolate cities.There was not a single face that you could see turned away from the ruin and who could find a single eye which was not motioned with tears or observe a face without tears running down the cheeks.Yet so great had been the rush to leave behind the scene of the awful flood that every means was taken to aid the through the devastated regions.

The parting at the trains and watersides and elsewhere were to too pitiful to be witnessed..Husbands came to the railroad tracks of the roads or to the rough planks of ships and kissed their weeping wives good bye and then turning back to the hard work of reconstruction which confronted them with breaking hearts.Thousands of women overcome with grief at the last no ent were cared for by strange hands, while those who loved them bound to their home and city by urgent necessity could do no more than watch from so afar and pray.

Despite their own losses from the effects of the flood both Angelinia Agathia and Dorothy Gale cities were the centers of the great relief and other distributions and also the key to the more devastated districts. These two places were practically the only way in and out for weeks and weeks..Hundreds of thousands of refugees arrived in the cities and thousands passed out every day.Angelinia Aranthia was filled with them to more than could be taken care of at once but fortunately a large number went through to points further north.Free transportation was furnished to any one to any point further than any southern Abyssinville and Alabamnia states provided they had relatives and friends who would take care of them. All the of the refugees arrived at Dorothy Gale and Angelinia Aranthia clothed like beggars or half naked, and in a pitiful condition.The conditi n of the unfortunate children excited great pity there and such sights caused many more men who were able to enlist in the army to get at the enemy and pay back for all that was done. Anything on the line of mere curiousity was absolutely barred at every place that survived the flood and people who had the most urgent business in the ruined country districtsfound it absolutely hard to get any permit s to go there and those who were simply curious could not get there at all and were simply arrested for attempting to do so.All kinds of camera fiends were absolutely barred. One men were shot to death for taking pictures of nude women on the street and three newspaper men working without any authority from the Abbiannian government who were taking views of the flood, and the ruins of the city were rounded up by the irate citizens their cameras smashed and themselves forced to go to work gathering up decomposed corpses and clear the streets of the debris and water still left.Even Angelinia Aranthia and Dorothy Gale and all towns and cities recieving refugees were under the same martial law.Guards and hundreds of citizens mostly men and women surrounded every railroad depot and would not even allow curious crowds of people of their own Nationality to gather to see the refugees come in.The catastrophe all but paralyzed all shipping river shining business in the flood visited sections of the country. Nothing was in operation and southern Calverinia and northern An galinia seemed paralyzed.

MAGNITUDE OF THE GREAT RELIEF THAT IS A SOLEMN NECESSARY. THE TERRIBLE CROWDS OF REFUGEES THAT HAVE TO BE FED AND CARED FOR. SCENES AT THE DOOR OF THE RUSSELL SAGE LIBRARY. THOUSANDS OF DESERTED ONES. APPARENT INDIFFERENCE TO THE LOSS OF RELATIVES. 50,000 REFUGEES PRECIPITATE A TERRIBLE PANIC IN A SMALL CAMP. WASHED WASHAMP OF A DOG. A MIRACULOUS SAVING OF A LIFE

THE situation throughout the flooded districts just a week and three days after the flood disaster was thus described by a war correspondent who arrived in the city of Angelinia Aranthia after he had seen what he cared to witness concerning the revolting ravages of the flood.

"It is impossible even now to give any idea of the awful magnitude which relief must assume. Throughout the whole devastated country before the outbreak of the floodthere were over fourty million people in the cities and towns and even the farms and villiages and hamlets when the census was taken a few weeks ago.After the flood it is estimated that only Thirty Three million remained.And we can say that this latter statement is made after careful inquiry from the best sources of information and from the information recieved from the National directory.About twenty three million of the refugees have left the region and all are going to points of safty further north most of them being women and children and also old men all going to friends temporiarly.Of those who are taking the chances of remaining behind how many can be heled and how long will it be before the enemy will come and do all that is possible to prevent aid from reaching the devastated towns and cities?.This question is one of the hardest one of all.All the men, soldiers and even National authorities who knew most of the situation hesitated to answer.

And one of the executive heads of the relief workers said it waspossible that those of the city of Angelinia Aranthia and Dorothy Gale did not need any assistance whatever.Another said he believed that on side of these two cities all the people surviving the flood were still without shelter to day.Others who were also familiar with the awful situation were asked for their opinion and they estimated variously and almost disgraciously the number that must and should be helped for a long time. There was one man who left Henriettin city and arrived to Angelinia Aranthia taking only one child with him.A week before the flood he had a good home and a business which had proved to make him a rich man.To day on account of the flood he has nothing left himwhatever.His home wife and children except one and his business was swept entirely away.He did not see anything good for him in the futire futi f future..Every man who worked hard for salaries who rented or owned good homes and considered themselves fairly well provided for were to day hundreds of thousands without a penny, without their own clothing almost without food, and without employment.One said to the war correspondent;;"Before the flood I had a good home, a good income and a fine family.I felt rich and happy.Now my home is gone, my business is a total loss and I' I'm all alone in the world.The real fact is that I don't even own the very clothes you see me wearing.I was forced to borrow them or go about the streets totally naked..

There were needed to be fed millionsof these people and something was needed to be done to help the worthy get on their feet and make a fresh start. Even now since the flood all was complete paralysis and was still the crisis period and just now the crisis was not passing safely.The people who came to the other cities and towns all refugees did little but go about dazed, broken hearted and bewildered and they came from all classes.Even the bodies which still lay exposed in the country and in the cities and towns and which were necessary to be immediately removed lest they were stepped on or cause pestilence were still being buried or burned.Immediate disposal of these bodies were necessary to prevent a world wide pestilence.The prisoners who were brought to the regions were forced to take up the tasks but they had helpers from Angelinian citizens and soldiers but the Glandelinians who had been very unwilling were impressed with with the bayonet.Yet whiskey by the whole bucketful were carried to all these men and workers and they were drenched with it.The stimulant was continually kept at hand and applied when ever necessary.Only in this way was it possible for even the men of the stoutest heart to work in this fashion.Under the direction of officers and soldiers these countless numbers of bodies were being collected every day those however which were the quikest found and these were either loaded on as many river barges as possible and dumped into the water or burned on immense piles of wreckage.Anything was done to dispose these corpses. Indeed this immense flood that devastated so much of the southern Calverinian country and doing damage of exceedingly great amount in the northern part of Angelinia caused reduction on all kinds of necessary trades and all railronds going in that direction had suffered such losses that they were not al able to show them.The distriv distributing of all kinds of goods had to be stopped and nothing could be got through.Damage to all kinds of goods was still unknown and those which could be obtained jumped high in price.

To make matters still worse hundreds of thousands of people even children became totally insane during the week that had succeeded the awful flood. They all had bravely borne the lossof property, their privations, the loss of relatives and friends, the hunger and fatigue had app apparently been totally unmindful of the dreadful horrors of the greatest catastrophe ever know of known of or written about and had as a perfect rule given no mental activities of suspicious character while the disaster and its results was on, but when the danger was totally passed, and relief from the awful strain had suddenly come the overburned overburdened mind gave way and thou thousands were so raving that they became like demented devils.Insane children werelike tigresses and men and women were worse.

Many of the Gemini who investigated the scenes of the dreadful flood told of hundreds of strange cases which which come under their very observa observation.He claimed that there were at least five to six hundr thousand cases which came under the observation of many of the doctors whose minds had become unbalanced most of them having lost every vestige of their reason there being many raving maniacs among them and one who was under a certain mans observatioj observation.His name was Jack Turner Angelio and he had been a hotel Clerc Clerk clr clerk.He occupied a room on the upper floor of the hotel and during the night he kept raving and pacing the floor and demanding of God to quickly return the big airship that he had He had taken away from H him and then trying to calluponmany others to witness the appearance of the air ship and continually blasphem ing the Good Lord when the airship did not appear.He had lost his family and his i little home which he had worked so hard to obtain and by a miracle saved himself from being drowned.This was in Henrietta City also again struck by this flood with a worst result than the first one.

And as soon as he had been out of personal dangery these awful days and nights he had commenced rescueing many women and children and savedhundreds of people accordin to some man who knew the full di circumstances.When he learned of his own loss he then lost his mind. Two days l later because his "Airship" would not return to him he created so much excitement at the hotel and blasphemed God so fearfully that the hotel men detailed a squad of policemen and detectives to come and capture him.He heard them approaching, shut it out with them for three hours, killed three policemen and wounded six and then when hard pressed leapedout of the window to an adjoining roof and then fell to the street below and was killed.and this was only one illustration of the awful conditions that prevailed throughout thecountry.Thousands of man people were in Henrietta.One man was seen running throughthe streets and was captured.He explained that he was a "Choo-c hoo Train" and that they had noright to obstrict his right of way.Another man cornered in a house thought he was a cat, and another man captured thought he was a snow torm.

There were others who thought they were fishing , and were fishes, horses, wagons, millionares, and others thought they were "christian dogs"Dancing the enemy pussy cats cats.One man thought he was Emperor vivian and was trying to tell every one he saw that he had the vivian Girls and that they were coming to see every body.There were so many cases so peculiar and funny that probably many would have laughed but no one laughed here. A man whose wife and children were drowned in the flood had been searching in vain for their bodies for a week and two days and then located the body near Thirty Third Street in Angelinia Agathin near St Peters Street. Abbisannian soldiers also had seen the body and they took it in charge. The sight of his children lying dead had overturned the mans reason and he mistook the soldiers for mad dogs coming to destroy his children and he drew a gun and shot the soldiers to death before they could even draw their own weapons.He was however overpowered by others and though the man raved and foamed and tried desperqtely to get away it was of no avail. He became so terrible while being escorted to a place of refuge that he died while still in possession of the soldiers.One of the soldiers gave a nasty grin when they returned to the spot where the bodies lay and said to his comrade;

"I'd give my very heart, my very life to have one of those Glandelinians who caused this flood in my clutches right now.I'd cut his very insides out for him while alive."

"Same here"the others re torted with frightful scowls."No quarter for the Glandelinians with uswe say."

One of the Gemini in the course of his rounds in Jessica town saw many families of people men women and childre children half naked, starved and appeared stark craty and who looked into the face of every stranger with a vacant stare that was most pitiful in the extreme.They hadbost their homes and the clothing they had on their backs was not their own property.There were armies of people in a similar condition.

A man well known in the earlier days by Emperor vivian himself and who had been very active in saving lives during the flood became insane because he had failed to save alittle girl whom he loved dearly.This war correspondent first noticed the manns condition when he told him that emperor vivian was going to make him the King of the world and of all Heaven and that all the baks in the Nation were going to be his and that Emperor vivian had told him he could have his beautiful daughters for the rest of his life as the latter tiring of the war and knowing he was going to lose it had committed sucide.Then this man retired to his room on the first floor of the house seemingly sane.Soon afterwards he became violent and so fierce was he that every one who were in the structure hundreds of them fled as if the place was infested by a thousand roaring tigers.The persons engaged to watch him found the insane man armed with two pistols and a large re repeating rifle and he was shooting at every thing in his way and looked wild in the eyes and a appeared like a man with hydrophobia.He was soon overpowered by a score of strong men but as soon as he had him subdued he dropped dead.

Another sad case was that of a young thirteen old gilr who was also caught in the flood at Jessicia and with many othe r people found refuge in a stone building five stories high.As the flood gradually subsided after a month the young girl started for her home quire reassured that the place had withstood the flood as it was a strong building.But she found a wild waste of waters and floating wreckage sweeping over the site of her home.Then among the first victims carried into the temporary morgue were the young childs mother, father, and grandmother and two little sisters and one brother.These were quickly followed by by her very old grandfather and two other relatives.

She went away as if she did not care a rap whether they were dead and told people about her loss and yet always finished the sentence that she did not care if their very souls were lost.The even cursed at all the friends who had been dearest to her and hated all children and even God.

But it was not from her own right mind.The shock of the poor girls loss had at that very instant overthrew the girls reason, and within another week she became a nervious wreck wreck and a fierce maniac without a relative in the world.

A most thrilling and unusual thing happed at the smalle camp of St Heidi.This camp was an internment camp mostly used for wounded soldiers t and though of course we may call it small it was large enough however to contain over one hundredthousand solciers.Yet this camp at thetime the awful flood took place was free of wounded soldiers and here many of te the fleeing refugees of the flood had taken refuge.About nearly one million of the refugees took their place here as the camp was on a considerable slope of ground and no oneno matter what sect they were were refused admit tance into this camp.women children, fleeing Glandelinian fugitives and every one even animals were to e taken in without question and the camp was thrown open to all who sought its protecting tents and barracks. In the midst of the roaring of theflood and while it was rising so rapidly and increasing so furiously as to threaten to engulf even this high rise of ground the hundreds of thousands or more Glandelinian refugees and others grew wild with fear and horr horror and started to shout sing and blaspheme as loudly as they could untill the nerves of the other refugees were shattered and a panic be gan which was most difficult to overcome.It was then th that the christianofficers in charge of the camp started the firingbof sign l signal cannons and ther y thr there by cau caused a hush in the wild uproar.When the quiet desired had been gradually restored the officers in charge addressed the Glandelinian refugees and others and told them that the re was no time in this camp for such scenes, and that if they could not do anything else they would have to seek shelter elsewhere and those that wanted to pray should do so from their hearts and God The Greater of all things would hear their pleading and petitions above the roar of the flood which was increasing with redoubled speed as t they spoke to the awe stricken refugees. Most of the Glandelinian refugees listened quite attentively and when the officers told them the flood would not reach the camp order was gradually restored especially by the presence of mind and determination of these christian officers.

Many of the families which had been seperated by the dreadful flood were united by the waters of the flood tossing them tward and into this haven of refuge. The most heart moving scenes were presented by the many reunions as the half dead mangled and bruised unfortunates were rescued and dragged from the waters by the more fortunate members of the refugees. The community of officers comprised fourty generals and they too admin istered cheer to the sufferers many of whom were more dead than alive when brought into the shelter. when this immense encampments came so many refugees that it seemed no room could be made for them. Before the flood occured the camp was to have recieved all wounded soldiers that were to be sent from a battle field that had just been torn up by a conflict not so far away and the chief officer in charge in speaking of the incident said that he believed it was thr the first time in the history of the world that a camp that was made to house only a h hundred thousand soldiers was able in this emergency to house more than two million of the refugees. It was indeed most extraordinary and probable one of the miracles of the flood.

One of the refugees who was brought to this camp during the height of the flood had a most horrible experience. Only one chaper chapter or less could be learned from a war correspondent as told by one of the general officers themselves. The refugee was thrown to the mercies of the flood when her little house went down before the force of the rushing waters, and was completely swept away as if it was a reed. The family a small one had seperated when they were forced to abandon abandun their home to the greed of the wars worst flood. when this unfortunate woman was carried away on the roof of the wrecked cottage she lost all traces of the other members of the family but never lost faith and courage. during the swift progress of the roof borne down about thirty miles an hour by the irresistible force of the current ther e roof struck some obstruct ion obstruction and the nextmoment the woman was hurled from the improvised raft and after trying to swim against the current caught a large log that was w floating down tward her and this she managed to get astride of and go down with the dreadful flood. The poor woman suffering agoie agonies managed to hold to her queer craft and was protected this way to a limited extent from other wreckage that time and again floatrd up against the log. On, and on went the log tossed high on the sea of waters bumping and crashing against swirling and floating driftwud and mountians of wreckage untill the crude ship was hurled through the lower streets of the camp and was rpulled into one of the barracks buildings. Her little children were rescued a f w few minutes later and while the good women of the other refugees were attending to the mother another chapter of this d same family was enacted just outside thecamp. In a tall tree in the midst of the camp which failed to give way before the force of the current a young man the husband of the woman battled with the tossing waves of the flood while clinging fast to the lower limbs of the tree which was bend low by the force of the torrent.

However so wild was the waste of waters that he did not at all know where he was. He could however see some distant away the barracks of the highest portions of the camp and yet while not knowing his chances of life and death he heard the plaintive cry of a child not far off. Reaching outwwithone hand he managed to catch the dress of a six year old girl who child likecried out;

"Please don't let me drown."

The child had run this tremendous mil race buoyed by the force of the the torrent and yet had much time to realize her peril. This child who had come to him was the other of his family. A few minutes afterwards a rescueing party wasxsentout from the camp in response to the loud cries for help and found the man and his little daughter and brought them to the sheltering camp. The reunion of this whole family fortunately however followed a few minutes later.

Destitute save for only a small effects carried in a small os like and with nerves shattered with t the two weeks and three days of horror another familiy, two a man and woman and their son and daughter reached the city of Angelinia Agathia on a sunday morning from the flood torn districts of Heneldale country.

"Yes indeed we were fortunate" said the mother as she leaned wearily back in a large rocking chair and tenderly contemplated her two children at her side. "It seems to me worst thanan awful night mare and when I think of the thousands of thousands of children alone who were killed right before our very eyes I feel as though I ought to be satisfied with everything else no matter whatever happen." "

Her husband then said.

"Henrietta like before was also stricken by this f lo f flood and so sufferedsfar worst this time. The reports from Henrietta City are not one third as a p appalling as the situation really is. Last time the houses of the weakest and were wrecked and the wreckage of many houses from other towns were brought down to Henrietta. But now at this flood the situation is altogether different. Onehundred thousand lost their lives there and two quarters of the city had been entirely washed away. We left that ill fated city onThursday afternoon going by boat to Angelinia Agathia and the condition of Henrietta by this time while now beginning to show an improvement since the flood abated was awful beyond description and never shall I forget the terrible scenes that met our eyes a s the ship on which we left steamed from the wreck strewn harbor.

There were bi bodies on all sides of us as thick as fishes in the ocean. In some laces they were piled up like in the battle of Pholantonburg and the stench was most h rr horrible unberable.

I lived in that city and resided with my family at Eldon street. This was fourteen blocks away from the lower quarters ofvthe city and yet my house was swept away like a sailboat at the time the flood reached its worst and with it went every thing we cherished in the world. Five minutes before I took my wife and children to the Catholic Church and we were saved along with thousands of other refugees who sought aid there. When we wn went through the streets on our way to the church the water was up to our shoulders and we were forced to carry the child ren on our heads.

I assisted several days in the work of rescue. In one pile of debris we found many women and children who seemed to have escaped the effects of the flood waters but were injured and pi ned down so they could not escape. Guards with soldiers and rebel prisoners and other workers came along and after failing to rescue her and the others deliberately shot them all to end their misery for they were all mortally injured anyhow.

The streets of Henrietta present one of the most grewsu e appearance f and for all the largest cities hit by the flood must have suffered the worst of all. Every available wagon andvehicle and dray in the city is still being u used to transport the thousands of dead and it is not uncommon to see so many loads of bodies thirty deep or more. so dreadful and nauseating is the stench in the streets that the workers have to cover their noses and mouths with cloths and since the u inundation the only water that could be used for drinking purposes waxin pipes and all the rivers which supplied drinking water has become tainted with the slime and the dreadful filth that covers the city and country side untill the rivers are no better than no water at all.

The city also has been placed under martial law and fortunately for that place no ghouls have been seen. If any are found the soldiers and citizens show no quarter and show the vandals and robbers on sight. This had a most wonderful effect on such dirty Glandelinian spies who would a who would have dared to flock to this s stricken city.

Everybody who is remaining in Henrietta have gone to wor work and for the Glandelinian prisoners the punishment fora refusal to bury and burn the dead and clear the streets of wreckage a is the same as that given out to the Glandelinian ghouls. In the work of rescue thousands of unfortunates were found drowned in the very streets whole families were found tied together with ropes and several instances mothers had their babies and older children clasped in their arms.

Whole armies of unfortunates struggle into our big city of Angelinia Agathia and many other places of refuge every day and their condition is more pitiful than any would can ever say. Many of the refugees being brought in have lost their reason. The citizens of these places are doing all theycan to meet the demand of so many of these sufferers and every available building in these cities and towns have als been converted into a hospital and a place of shelter. When we ourselves arived here we had some one elses clothes on as some citizens fitted us out before we returned home. the dreadful fear or some awful plague drove us from Henrietta. I've heard news alread also that forest fires are raging over a hundred miles of ground per week and it seemsour nation is being covered with disasterious battles. Already many war correspondents are flocking to the cityand they are trying to learn details but are refused admittance. In thousands of instances whole families were wipedout of existance and the situation in this line seem to be great.

CHAPTER EIGHTY TWO.

HENRIETTA CITY FACES SERIOUS DANGER FROM FIRE. SCARCITY OF BOATS AND WAGONS AND TRAINS TO CARRY PEOPLETTO MORE FORTUNATE CITIES AND TOWNS. ARMIES OF GLANDELINIAN PRISONERS DIPORTED INTO HENRIETTA. UNTOLD SUFFERING AT LITTLE GIRL KNOOL CITY.
EX EXPERIENCE OF A FOREIGNER. MOST TERRIBLE EXPERIENCE EVER IN HIS LIFE.
THE FLOOD HORRORS DROVE THE THEM ALL CRA ZY.. TWO OF THE GIRL HEROINES TELL HOW THEY WERE AFFECTED AT HEIDI JUNCTION. ONE ARIVED AFTER THE CATASTROPHE, WHILE THE OTHER WAS IN THE DREADFUL FLOOD FROM THE ST START TO END. PENROD HAS A TRYING TIME IN THE FLOODED CITY OF MELDON BICKNELL.. MOUNTIANS OF DEAD HUMAN BODIES IN FIRE HEAPS.
FULLY TWO MILLION ARE DEAD.

ONE of the most serious dangers which the city of Henrietta and many other places which had suffered seriously from the flood was from fire.Note drop of rain had fallen during the two months before the flod, and not even after the flood had subsided, and the hot winds and blister ing sunny weather of the Calverinian summer w made the wrecked homes and buildings and the windrows of drying wreckage and debris like so much tinder piled mountian high in every direction or strewn like a typhoon tossed forest all over the country.Should all this get afire it would make a fiercer scene than even the dreadful forest fires that were raging ra raging elsewhere.

The fire departm nt of all the big cities wrecked or harmed by the inundat ion was badly crippled on account of the inundation and therefore though many would be utterly powerless to stay the flames should they once start.There was no relief nearer than Angelinia Agathia and that was hours away for the nearest devastated city orvtown.

In view of all the then existing conditions it was no wonder that the lud cry was;

"Get the women and children to the cities and t towns not touched by the flood; anywhere off the flooded regions" nor was it any great wonder that one small boat carrying only three hundred or more passengers and making only one trip a day people fairly fought to be taken aboard.

All the time since the recession of the flood fears were cont continually entertained by the government and other authorities that with the flood sti llcontinuing elsewhere and the forest fires spreading over large sections of c untry this transportation would also be cut off and the f looded provinces left without any means of sending the women and children to safer spots.The sanitary conditions did not i improve to any great extent whatever.The highest surgeons incharge of the committees who were in charge for caring for refugees and for the sick and wounded were continually proceeding with dispatch.Thousands of doctors and as many red cross nurses as could be obtainable were irmediately needed and the request continually kept coming in but as many of the doctors and red cross nurses were in the armies it seemed impossible to find any for the stricken regions.Allthe eletric light service of the city of Henrietta was completely wiped out and the city eletrician said it would be months before any portion of the city could again be lighted.

And it seemed an inusnse task far beyond human and spiritul power to even remove the wreckage of Henrietta.The total number of refugees throughout the countr that were being fed since the recession of the flood was said to be about 16,000,000 and later the numbers was increasing more.And no very accurate statement of the amount of supplies could be obtained as the flood still hindered relief trains at many spots.

It was unusual and insanely wicked indeed that the enemy just to win a battle or some advantage in the war would caused such an unaccountable and incapapable disaster as this.Terrible storms have raged in Abbienania, and Calverinia throughout the time of its existance but non not one of the worst of all the storms ever caused one third so much devastation or such loss of life as the recent two floods caused by the enemy and the forest fires combinef.combined.

Henriett City recieved a most tremendous scare the first week after the flood disaster when it became rumored that the forest fires had st Angelinia Agathia afire where all the supplie and relief trains had been side tracked and that the immense city was burning entirely away with all its precious supplies of food and clothing.The great scare grew out of the fact that a great forest fire was reaching the city of Angelinia Agathias not Agathia and the blaze had not been observed until night fallwhen the glow in the sky could be seen in

Henrietta itself.However the people of the cities and towns which were alarmed were reassured by wireless and other telegraph that such a dreadful calamity was out of the question and that no cities were burning as yet and that only Agathia and Angelinia Agathias was threatened but it is not afire as yet.One great feature of the tremendous efforts to relieve the armies of people of the stricken regions was the awful delay in getting the ned necessary supplies to the places most deranged by the inundation.

Individual after train load was in Big Girl Knool the least harmed by the inundation which would have consisted entirely in the tremendous work of relief but account of every kind of transportation being cut off from the stricken Proni Provinces to Big girl Knool and Angelinia Agathia they could not be hurried there.There was not one track running as near as the flood, and in th e the country side a e alone though it had receded from the bigger cities and towns it was just as fierce as ever and nothing could be done save that the people go to better places to save themselves should the flood again increase to its fullest fury which was really greatly feared.....

Even the nearest supplies that had been sent and which had arrived there at Polychrome City but they also could not be moved fast, as no draft and other cants as yet could be obtained.Heidi's Bayou could be used from Angelinia Agathia but just now it was impossible to get the boats desired for the purpose...

The general Committees at Angelinia Agathia at the public houses decided to import more and more prisoners.This action was taken with the consent of the local christian generals whose armies had taken prisoners during battle battles and other distrutances of the war.Even in the city people of every kind of employment had first been busy in the work of burying and burning all the dead,, even without pay but were now to be relieved of this work and replaced by all the Glandelinian prisoners which would soon arive under strong guards.

According to Count De niff now in Angelinia Agathia and who had investigated the health situation there was no signs of pestilences breaking out among any of the refugees. He declared the water supply was all out of the question as all the rivers were said to be contam - contaminated by the inundation.Service prostrations by the score of thousands, hysteria by greater numbers, and mild dementia and terrible insanity occured among crowds of people due to shock, exhaustion and wild grief and other sorrows and also from privations and exposures.Among the poorer classes the uses of spoiled food and other eatables and also the drinking of impure water has led to all kinds of intestinal troubles and there are many typoi typhoid fevers breaking out among hundreds.Many cases of violent and mild heat prostrations have occured among the workmen and rebel risoners.Yet all the men were laboring to the limit of their strength and therefore Henrietta was passing the first week following the flood disaster in burning burying and other wise otherwise disposing of the dead and clearing away so much of the wreckage.

To try to get some kind of relief to the stricken places all arrangements were started by the Pic-Hollister and Pandora Railroad to establish a free barge and other boat lines to the stricken regions from H From Heidi's Bayou.This it was hoped would help a great deal in getting re relief supplies to the stricken towns and villages.One of the women who was the head of the Abbienania Red Cross arived at Henrietta that day and stated that the flood was so fierce yet even near Hiedi's Bayou that no relief could come from that location.

Many hero persons who returned from trips along the flood regions reported that they saw so many bodies of the drowned and so much wreckage that it would take a year to clear it all away and that if the flood does continue as it is raging still it'll take all the wreckage and bodies out to sea down the rivers.One of the men said that rescuing parties had taken from the edge of of the flood one hundred and eighty five bodies in two days and buried and burned them at different points. After suffering the utmost untold sufferings and privations forever three weeks of the ruined city of Little Girl Knool which despite its name was a very large city and about fifteen miles from Big girl Knool hundreds of thousands of people famished nameless and nearly two totally naked but overcome with amazement and joy at their strange delivery from what seemed to be certain death fled from the region when the flood began to again rave some of its proportions a few days and a dense trooping into Big girl Knool city for succor.Water torrents too ir irresistible for even a second house to withstand its pressure pressure drove their little homes before it like leaves in a river de deu and as every hour went before it destroying every article of house and wiping it every particle of food and provisions for miles around and threatened to wipe out the city all weather thousands through the terrible days and nights raining their lives above the roar of the water in circles howls and in prevented through it all not one member of these hundreds of families were injured not even to the extent of a scratch while elsewhere throughout the city the loss in life amounted up to three hundred and sixty five thousand drowned, and one hundred thousand families under the wreckage of their homes. Of all the towns and cities wrecked and devastated by the flood Little girl Knool took the lead. Three quarters of the city was totally swept away until there remained out of two hundred million, only five thousand houses.

When the flood struck Little girl Knool it did not come gradually but all at once in its force and when it did struck the house and little houses as well as the big ones the water rose and rose so fast and so quickly and without the slightest warning that it was pouring through all the lower windows before the people realized their danger and half of them were caught and drowned like rats in their own traps before they could even utter one single prayer. At points where the water did not come so suddenly and gave people a little time it also rose so fast however that it was pour up into the first floor windows before the many people who did afterwards above the water level realized their danger until it was almost too late. Pushing out the crowds of people gathered to swim and struggle to higher houses and one man who happened to be the mayor of the city hitched his own team and placing his own wife and children in a into a wagon started for a place of safety. Before they had left his yard many other families of refugees hundreds of them drove up in wagons to ask for assistance only to be upset upset by the roaring torrent and all of them drowned before his very eyes. Two thousand drowned before his very eyes. With the greatest difficulty the party was saved from being drowned and when safe in the wagons were half floated half drawn by the team to a high foot hill outside the city with clothes lines which he had managed to bring with him the Mayor lashed his three girls and one boy to a high tree. The younger child he secured with the chain of his wagon and lifting him our wife into another tree he climbed up beside her.

When the flood increased with astonishing rapidity and hurled a hurricane of drift upon and all about the tree and the sea of water dashed more and more wilds wildly below every minute and kept rising and rising until it even threatened to enculf the very tree his wife clung to her sixteen months old babe with one arm while with the other she held fast to her precarious heaven of refuge. The mayor held his youngest child in the same manner and while the littlegone cried piteously for food he prayed and as the water stillrose cried and wailed for help. In other trees some other families he had rescued from drowning found a more precarious footing. He saw rows of houses become torn loose from the raging torrent and float off with screaming occupants within, then the next moment the houses fell to pieces and every one were plunged into the awful torrent.

When the night had passed and the water had really reached to within six feet of the top of the tree it was borne down by the pressure of the current and all these too perished. No one who had been surprised too suddenly by the flood were saved.

Slowly when the flood had began to recede wreckage for miles and thousands upon thousands of dead and animals and the corpses of people men women and children surrounded one devoted party who had also been traed but who had not been touched by the flood. However for them there was nothing to eat and nearly dead with exhaustion and hunger for they had been treed by the flood for six days this little party of men set out on foot to seek for assistance. However they were too weak to continue far and sank down on the plain while the stronger of the men decided to go on alone.

Five or more miles away a large but ruined farm house was found on some high hill this however being partially intact and securing a team this man returned for his half dead party of friends.

For three days they remained at the home of the kindly farmer while the flood raged anew, and then when it finally receded altogether they set out afoot to find some boulet to make their way over the higher ground to Heidi Point. In the heat of the burning sun they plodded on through water knee deep subsisting upon dead chickens they found in the water which they devoured raw untilfinally they came upon an abandoned and overturned mail river boat high up on dryland.

With a united effort they succeeded in launching the boat into deeper flood water and with a improvished distress signals displayed managed to sail to Henriette City. There because of red tape they were unable to secure any clothing or food although a little later they were given a little food somewhere else and transported free of charge toward Angelinia Acathia. Therefore clad in an old pair of trousers that was in rags a tattered shirt with one sleeve, and torn shoes with the toes peeking out in front with his friends even in a worst plight finally came into Angelinia Acathia dirty weak and half starved. Here the seven men were sent to a hospital and cared for. Then they were sent to Pandora a Pandora (Calvarinia North) where they had relatives who aided them until the Catholic Church came to their relief.

Relief parties working amidst the sea of wreckage near Little girl Knool reported that up to fully first two hundred and twenty thousand five hundred bodies of men women and children, including many thousands of different kinds of animals were found and had been buried or cremated and that many were still seen floating in the waters. Immediate assistance was needed sick and badly too. And it was a fact generally commented upon and merely made emphasized by the mans experience that while succor was being rushed to the stricken regions all other sufferers were forcibly being neglected because other devastated points were unapproachable on account of the flood still raging with great fury in that location. The flood it was said would not abate up or diminish entirely untill the broken levees were mended and that too was a most dangerous job to accomplish. The relief trains en route from Angelinia Acathia to any points traversed a flood swept section far out of the main path of devastation where famishing and nearly naked survivors sat on the very wrecks of their homes and hungrily watched tons of provisions whirling past them while there was little prospects of aid reaching them because the debris the flood outside kept trains from coming their way.

One man who was a foriegner who returned to Dorothy Gale city from Little girl Knool City the two nights after the subsiding of the disastrous flood then reached Angelinia Acathia and he stated that he had come to visit some friends at Little girl Knool and resided in one of the hotels there just before the flood began.

He said it was the most terrible week or two of existences of his whole life, the most awful whole month of being marooned by a flood that any man could imagine and that he did not wish to experience even again that he did during the few days succeeding the inundations.

"How many would any his friend how his family had come out of the devastating flood" said the foriegner "and the answer was different and hard, to get off sh "oh all gone." All gone was the phrase on all sides.

The first day before the disaster when I reached the hotel the flood was rising rapidly a foot per minute it seemed and the hotel clerk said we were in for a big flood and I asked him if the foundation of the hotel was firmly fixed and he said "well the flood I don't think will be quite as bad as allthat what you fear but by noon there was thirteen feet of water outside and the lower floor of the hotel was flooded the occupants having gone up to the upper floors for safty and the force of the torrent vibrated the building so violently that the energy light had fallen in and the servants annex was destroyed and the place was also crowded with thousands of refugees who arrived from all points of the city in boats. During those dreadful nights there was very little sleep for any one yet no one even then could realized the full extent of the disaster even when houses were crushed before the flood by the hundreds per hour.

Two weeks after one could walk on the higher streets so quickly had the water torrent subsided. I took a walk along the citys outskirts and the country side was one in mass litter of overturned houses debris of all kinds and a sea of corpses. I met one poor old lady who burst into tears at the sight of a small childs shoe mixed in among the wreckage. She had lost all her family in the awful flood.

I saw thousands of people who were for the most part half insane or were benefit of all their senses from the horror and from their loss and indeed a single funeral would have seemed more terrible more solume than a mile of cremated bodies.

The tales of so much looting by rebel vandals are only too true and as I passed overthwart on a fair rowboat I heard rumors heard continually the shots which told that some ghoul was paying the penalty. However I believe the city of little girl Knool will rise again on her old site and without any unusual difficulty as is at present believed to be. Most of the people who survived however will flee to better shelter for years to come. At least nearly four hundred thousand were persons perished in this city alone. Three fourths of the surviving people of Little girl Knool who applied for relief at places of refuges were found to be mentally dull but the physician doc need that with proper care most of them might be cured. A young seven little old girl was quickly brought into the general relief supply station two nights after the flood. The relief corps had found her huddled up in a floating box car incessantly yelling and singing to amuse herself. The doctors however said only food and care were all she needed to restore restore this child to reason.

It was now over a week after the flood before the people from the outside began to find out what the awful calamity was to the people in the devastated and flooded regions.

The first shock of the horror was wearing off the long lists of dead was increasing for every body found and the sick and suffering and the destitute were still crawling into places of refuge. Many of them had been sleeping on the open ground near the edge of the flood ever since it began to recede most of them in fact, men with broken arms and legs, sick women and ailing children. They had crawled out of their wrecks of their homes and lied down on the bare wet ground to die. Relief parties found such as these every day and night, and brought them into hospitals and places of refuge as fast as possible. One relief party found 10,000 people in the vinicity of chalerlane he alone, hel pless and tearless.

It was a sight to cause a stone statue to weep.

Gertrude Ameline who was one of those of the army persons who was able to reach at tance to what remained of the sealed city of Heidi Junction wrote a short description of what she had witnessed there. She arrived in Heidi Junction on a supply and although she was one relief train carrying doctors, Red Cross Nurses and a few soldiers and medical supplies she had a hard time to get past the soldiers who were on guard near the one entrance of the city but she at last succeeded.

The unfortunate boat man who brought us down from Cadernine spent the day before grouping around in the wrecks of houses outside looking for his wife and seven children. He soon found them in a rude grave in the ground now free from water and set up a little board marked with his name and the names of those he loved.

The man in front of me on the same bench had floated all one day and night on a part of the roof of what had been his little house. He told me that he had kissed his wife good bye and told her that he would not be able to hold on any longer but he finally did manage to hold on dazed and half conscious until day broke and showed him that he was all alone on his piece of driftwood. He did not even know when his family had perished or how much longer he floated on the roof before he was rescued.

Every man in the boat there were no women and children there had lost all their loved ones in the terrible disaster and were going to Heidi Junction to try and find some trace of their bodies if possible.

As the boat neared Henriette junction near Heidi Junction, the latter being a taller great clouds of smoke was seen rolling skyward and I said to one of the four men near me;

"What terrible big fires. Some of the largest mounds of wreckage must be burning with thousands of bodies. It's awful, dreadful. I'll never forgive the Cadernine for this horrible disaster they caused."

A man who was standing in the boat behind my back heard me. He stepped put his hand on the bulwark sat down and looked me right in the face his face being like the face of a dead man, but he laughed almost like a man who had gone crazy.

"I'll say they are burning lots of bodies." He said. "Do you also know what is burning over there. It is my own wife and children much poor unfortunate little children. Why the smallest was only three years old and the little one was just learning to talk. She called my name just the day before the worst of the flood and now they are all also burning over there they and the poor mother who bore them."

The man in the main sat arose once more to his feet.

"That is surely the truth." Said one of the soldiers who was in the boat as he took off his hat and bared his head and letting the sunlight shine on his face. "That's the truth. But we have to do it to prevent a pestilence or plagues. We have already burned over two hundred thousand people since the flood receded and I guess we will burn as many more. Yesterday we were forced to stop burning the bodies as the rivers and we had to give the men and prisoners who were helping the ourners time to the awful work. They carried out hundreds of the dead at a time from one little to block men and women and children and I tell you it was as high as the horses could stand it and yet the men did not put enough wagon loads on the bodies and they have been drifting down the river."

"Look" said the man who had been in house touching me on the shoulder with his shaking hand; "look there, there."

Before I even had time to think I surely had to look and saw floating in the water bodies of many women old men and even little children whose hair were even shining in the strong sun light. A little further on we also saw a large group of strange group wood drift wood. We in our horror could not help but look closer and soon found them to be masses of wooden slabs with names and dates cut on them and floating on top of them were marble and on other slabs two of them on each wooden slab. The grave yards of the towns and villages so wiped out by the flood which had held the dead inhabitants of the towns for so many years were now giving up their dead. Finally we pulled up at a little wharf in the hush of the afternoon day and after entering the city of Heidi Junction we slowly picked our way through the wreckage laden street. The ground was slimy with the awful debris left by the dreadful flood. We climbed and climbed over mountains of wreckage and picked our way through heaps and heaps of rubbish. The sickening odor of so many dead bodies almost overcame us and it was all I could do to shut my teeth to keep from vomiting and get through the streets somehow. Hundreds, no thousands of soldiers were even camping in the open squares of the larger streets some lying stretched on the wet ground or standing on top of the wreckage piles. Some of the soldiers challenged us but knowing he we were allowed to pass pass on. At every one of the street corners and in the streets themselves there were guards and every one of the guards had a long musket with a bayonet attached attached and wore fourty fives strapped around the waist.

I went slowly toward the very heart of the city. I do not know what the names of the streets were or where I was going as there was nothing but windrows of wreckage no matter where I went, yet I simply picked my way through the masses of slime and over the piles of wreckage and rubbish which scar the the once beautiful wide streets of the once beautiful little city.

I cannot hardly bear looking at those awful piles of rubbish and those terrible decomposed bodies of the slain. There are hundreds of different things there that would grip the hardest heart to see. I saw a babys shoe for instance a little blue one with a jaunty tasseled lace, and a bit of some womans dress and then the two legs of some little child. The stench from these piles of rubbish and seas of wreckage is almost overpowering.

Down in the heart of the little city I must I told most of the dead bodies had been removed but I was told by the soldiers that it would not do for me to walk too far out. Once I came upon a strange group of persons in a small by street two men among who appeared to be an old woman. The men were big men and strong the other man was young but also big and muscular.

As I observed they were digging or fishing in a heap of rubbish and when the man heard my footsteps he turned an evil glowering face upon me and the others quickly hid something in their pockets. I realized at once that these were glandelinian ghoule or some kind of vandals and that they were prowling in the search for prey. A moment or two later there was tremendous noise and excitement in the little street and as I looked back I saw the men and the woman running swiftly with a large crowd of citizens at their very heels. The crowd caught hi them and would surely have have lynched them but some of the soldiers came up. The tied the hands of these human ghouls and took them through the streets with an immense whooping rabble at their very heels. It goes hard indeed with any one these days caurh robbing the dead.

The awful abond abomination of desolation of sadness reigns on every side. The biggest houses which were not totally devastated are perfectly dismantled, windows broken roofs caved in windows broken and the high water mark shows incony inconceivably high on the paint which proved the water was thirty eight feet when the flood swept upon this little city. Not all the little houses and the weaker ones are all gone entirely as if they had been made of cards and some giant avalanch had swept them clean clown away, or others were or are lying in immense heaps of debris n and kindling wood covering no what one n knows what horror beneath. The main streets of this little city are pitiful in si h sight.

However I could see here and there some sort of a little shop or other store building left half standing. Many of the streets look very much to me like an old mans jaw with one or two of his teeth prut ruding. The small number of merchants as I observed were taking their little stores of goods that had been left them by the flood and were spreading them out in the bright sunshine trying to do what they can to seel what they had left of their little capitols.

The way things looked here it is probable the water torrents rushed through these stores in the same way as it had done through the houses, in an irrestible avalanch that carried everything before it.

"any people are wondering that so little of the city of Holdid Junction is left standing, but I'm really wondering and am greatly surprised that there was any of it left at all. Every one of the street corners has its own sad story is its history of misfortunes, misery and agony bravely endured. The only witnesses of a thousand deaths and other horrors g have tried to talk to me and tell me their heart rending stories and yet not one of them has told me anything as of a cowardly death. The great loss of life was from the fact that those who tried to rescue their friends and relatives and finding themselves unsuccessful died with them. The women and even little children met their fate as did all the men bravely and for the most part with the most astonishing calmness. One woman who had one little boy surviving her told me that she and her husband and her other children went into the attic when the water arose with the purpose to get away from the torrent and that they knelt there and prayed.
As they prayed the waters came roaring in and carried the whole house away and her husband and other children with it and the day after the flood she went out to the place where her husband and other children had been and there was nothing there but a little hole in the ground.
Later her husband was found twisted in the branches of a fallen tree two miles and three quarters from the place of where she had last saw him. But no trace of her other children could be found. She recognised her husband by means of a small watch the watch she gave him before they were married. It had her picute and a look of a babys hair in it the curly hair of a four year old child. The poor woman told me all this without the trace of a single tear. No one cries here. I did not either. I couldn't. My heart is too heavy. The tears won't come. The survivors will stand for hours and tell the most hedious stories, stories that will instantly turn the blood in the veins of any persons cold with horror without the quiver of an eye lid. A man sat in a small building and when I went in to interview him he slowly told me how he had lost all he possessed going into minute particular telling what his little home had cost and how it was strengthened and made firm against the seasons of Calverinia and the winter and summer weather and against all storms. He told me how the dreadful flood had come suddenly and swept it all away and how he had climbed climbed over masses of roofs and floating wreckage and found one of his relatives lying on the top of a large roof in the stoutest part of the awful flood,, and how they had grasped each other, and what they had said about the awfulness of the inund inundation...
He told me how his little home was made, how much it had cost, how long it tookhim to save his hardearnings to build the little home and other things but then thinking that was his only loss I said!
"But you have saved yourself and your family so why should you complain."
The man stared at me with such unseeing blank eyes that for a moment I was alarmed thinking he had gone crazy.
"Why no indeed I did not save my family." he said slowly. "They were all drowned. Not one of my relatives even survived. I thought you knew that little girl friend, I don't talk very much over it."
The hedious horror of the disaster had benumbed every one who saw and went through it."

One of the girl heroines of this story whose name we remember is Angeline Richese arived at general vivians camps not far from Evange line St Clare Creek all the way from Henrietta City where she had a most trying time during the whole duration of the flood. She told her story to general vivian in a wonderfully graphic way.....
"I had been in Henrietta for about three days visiting my relatives who lives on fourteenth street. We had heard of the approach of the flood, water had been in the streets for nearly a week without doing much damage but about eight days later it grew to such proportions that toward afternoon we began to becfrightened.
The smaller and weaker buildings had already gone down as mere egg shells before that death dealing flood. About five Thirty my Aunt told me that we must make our way as quickly as possible to a taller and strongerbuilding about more than a block away. The water had now risen to ten feet in two hours and as I hurried to the front door I saw the water tearing down the street like a swift river current. I then turned my eyes to the east and then in other directions and as far as I could see there was not a single building standing everything being swept away. How we ever reached that five story building I do not know. We swam through the dreadful wreckage logged water and every few minutes were we were carried out off our course and dashed against the floating swirling debris. The building we were trying to reach had a store on the lowerfloor and the foundation was so high that just then it kept out of water. We thinking it more safe safer hurried to the basement and stayed there for over four hours while Aunty brought up supplies to the upper floors for the refugees there. At last the roaring flood found an opening and broke through the foundation like a big jet and we had to run madly up the stairs to the other floor to escape the rushing swirling waters. First we reached the first floor and terrified I shrank into a corner expecting every second to be carried off to my death. The water finally drove us to the fourth story but how it ever happened I can never tell but this one and one or two other buildings were the only ones left for many miles all around. The rest of the point was a raging sea of water and swirling wreckage and human bodies.

As it was many people however were killed or caught in the torrents in the lower floor of the building I was in and drowned or killed and a great death list also occured in the other house that was left standing. After a time being hemmed in by such a torrent for four days I felt very faint from hunger and while too weak from fright and horror to even think of seeking for food I told my Aunt I would go into another room. I staggered along the floor until I reached a window and fell half fainting through it. In dead general as I leaned there too helpless to move I witnessed sights that I pray God will never allow me or any one else to ever see again as long as they live.
Whirling and tossing and dashing past me in the swift torrent bodies more than I could count in a year were crhsed and mangled between jumbles of timbers and debris. Men women and children went by as thick as soldiers marching past in an immense army many sinking only to rise again, other floats floating in all positions dashing on I knew not where and mingled with these were all kinds of animals and even hundreds of chickens per minute. I grew desperate and horrified and wished most hardly to close my eyes but no matter how hard I tried it seemed impossible. I xr cried and screamed aloud and made an attempt to go to b my friends and relatives but I was exhausted, faint from hunger and too fascinated and terrified to move an inch from that window sill and all I could do was to remain there much against my will and watch the horrible scenes.
Houses floated by like big boats. Hundreds and thousands of children and babies, oh such pretty littlesones too were also carried and swirled on and on many of them gorgeous in dainty beautiful clothing their eyes open staring in mute terror above. Thank God they were dead! I was partly blinded by tears half of sorrow horror and of rage and fear together, but I still could see through them. Hundreds of little arms every minute seemed to stretch toward me asking assistance and there I lay half prostrated almost paralyzed paralyzed too more move too weak to lend assistance even if some of them were alive. But none of them were.
How it all ended I knew not but I either must have fainted or was was unconscious for I was aroused with the cry of our Aunt come "Come here dearier. We are saved Angeline, the flood is going down" ringing in my ears.
Later when I found we could getout of the city I declared I would go at all costs. I thought of my own home and of my parents far away and I wanted to reachthe christian armies and telegraph to you general just like hundreds of thousands of others who were safe. It was days before the flood went down enough to allow us to get get away and then it was in the most horrible and terrifying confusion and panic. Eighty eight eight hundred persons crowded on one big boat and started down the river for Chamberlane. The day we left the soldiery were out in full force and I heard of the many ghouls being killed every once in a while I hrar heard the sharp report of a rifle and the wail of some man as he paid the penalty for his cruel thieving operations. Even often I saw soldiers with their glistening rifles leveled at hundreds of men and saw them topple frward dead. Oh My God they surely had to shoot those terrible beast for they were wicked enough to take advantage of the terrible calamity to go out when towns and cities were helpless and rob the dead and ruined homes. These Glandelinian ghouls groveled in blood it seemed. I even saw with my own eyes the fingers of women and even h children cut off by regular glandelinianxdemons in the search for jewelry. The soldiers caught and killed them and it seemed served them right. Our soldiers give no quarter for Vandals.
As we madeour way toward the very boat that was to quickly take us away from this awful city of death and destruction I saw many great clouds of smoke rising in the air at different points at once. I knew that thousands of bodies per day or hour were being reduced to ashes. It was horrible to do but it was best for the oder that arose from so many of these dead bodies was simply unbearable. Still it makes a persons heart ache with a sorrow never to be equaled as on one had to witness so many little children tossed into the midst of the hissing flames.do you wonder general that I cry.You may cry too.And before me no matter what way I turned I could see fields of dead bodies their cold eyes staring and gaping at me with staring intentness.I was forced to close my eyes and stumble forward hoping I might escape for a single moment the sight of so many dead bodies ut no the moment I would open my eyes again right at my feet would be the form of some unfortunate creature.

Coming to your army on the military train which I took at Angelinia Agathia I read the news papers.They say five million are homeless and two to three million are dead.I believe they are mistaken away wrong. I am afraid when the total list is made out the death numbers will be atleast ten million.I know general I am more than right every one of the survivors, even those of Angelinia Agathia, and also the Aurthorities and emperor ,vian talks of twelve to fifteen and eighteen million dead but to my view it will be ten million at the very least.

I believe the worst sir sight I and my aunt witnessed wasthe many thousands of bodies being carried out to the big Mac-allister pon river near Heidi junction and buried in the water.Huge river barges barges were tied at the shore line and loaded thick with the unknown dead.and as fast as the barges were fulled they made their wyway from the shore and the men then weighing the bodies castthem into the deep waters.

''Oh my god these eyes'' she cried to the general ''that I might put them from my mind.I still can see those little children mere babies and older ones.little girls and boys go floating and swirling by my place of refuge dead, dead, dead.God alone knows the awful suffering I was forced to go through.Millions yes millions of poor souls on account of the Glandelinians bursting the dams of the rivers were carried over the brink of death in the twinking twinkling of an eye and I saw it all, where ever your friends the ,vivian girls have been taken to when stolen no one knows but I g hope by God's help they do not witness these scenes o th of this dr eadful floods.''

Twenty mili n million people were fed and cared for in Angelinia Agathia Dorothy Gale and many other cities and towns for many days with all the supplies whichwerepouring in from all portions of the country.For about twentythusand of these people alone the estimated cost of the aid extended after the first week of suffering was about sixty five thousand dollars and more.Yet the great bulk of all this aid when to th the many prisoners and others who were at work cleaning up the wreckage digging for the bodies burning and burying and sinking them in the waters and cleaning the streets.Through them it also went to the families who had survived.no ablied bodies man was allowed to escape work whether he or theyneeded the aid or not though mostly all of them exc except the Glandelinian prisoners did.,ll the business men in all proportion to resume were allowed to attend to their stores andeven all their forms of work me and clerks werenot interfered with.

On theeighth daythe debris hunting and street clearing work was put upon a cash basis the wages being one dollar and fifty cents t an hour to the needy but the glandelinianprisoners did not rei recieved anything not even any sufficient clothing.The aid also was given in the form of tools for mechanics lumbers for allthose who had surviving in the they wished to repair and so on.Heretofore practically every ablied bodied man had been m ade towork whether he liked to do so or not and unless he workedhe did not recieve no supplies no matter how badly he needed them. The first few days wages for the workmen not including the prisoners first consisted entirely of rations only which were given according to the n number and needs of the laborers family reg rdless of any amount of work he may or not have accomplished.Th n Thensince other supplies began coming in they also had been added.

The work of dist ribution was also conducted systemically and with an apparent minimaof imposition and some fraud also.but the seen like this was soon stopped by the aurthorities.Even womenhad been women had been required to work and also a strong feeling was coming on to even compell the Glandelinian prisoners to work on the devastated farms and also to help repair the wreckage of towns and v illages that had not been entirely swept away by the flood.there were plenty of soldiers who were willing more than wil ing to impress them but as long as free clothing and food seemed also to be secured for some of the glandelinian prisoners it was almost hard to get Glandelinians to go in and clean up the wreckage and repair homes even under the bayonet as The glandelinians were too stubborn to do more than usual thing even at the risk of death for refus f refusal. And one of the most remarkable things attending the terrible flood disaster was the fortitude of so many of the surviving people.Their dreadful loss in relatives friends and all their property had been so terribly and dreadfully overwhelmingthat it seemed too much to be expressed with any amount of ou outward grief.The surviving people of the flood als had seen so much death and destruction and heard so much about the frightful battles and other disasters of the war that it seemed they were hardened to it for good and all.The announcement of the loss of another friend meanlittle to a man who had seen so many dead bodies of his nearest neighbors and townspeople hauled to the river by the dray q and wagon load or burned on the big fires.No services were attemp attempted for the dead until nearly the battle of Evangeline St Claire had passed.Neight was there n any memorial services.Even priests and lay men of the cities of

and towns were forced by the soldiers to join in the work of clean ing the city of dead bodies, no one either bishops or cardinals and the like being expented.The city of Angelinia Agathia was improving in its own sanitary conditions.The smell from the ooze and mud with which most of her own streets were filled was stronger ton or more days after the tragedy than that which had come from the debris heaps and the like containing undiscovered bodies.when these many heaps were being burned buried and thrown into the rivers and the wind and mist carried the smoke over the city the oder was very similar to that which affliets gillplaces that have big stock yards and no worse.Soon even the oder of slime and other horrors was gone and every dump cart and the like in the city was at work.Every one of the surviving business men talked con fidently of the future of the country though many of the very clerks were discouraged and even made the mention that they could prove it that the christian cause is not winning and never will.

''I'm afraid of another big floods'' said one of the more braver clerks in one of the principal stores of Angelinia Agathia which had suffered the heaviest.''But I'musick and tired of the whole mess and believe the enemy will win the war in the long run.You'll see if I'm not right.''

All the telephone and telegraph companies early began to rebuild their systems there.So immense was the damage to this however that it was believed it would take about six months and would take fifty thousand men to do the work properly and none could be had as so many of the best had gone into the army.

The boy hero of the story Marco Schofield Penrod returned to general Vivianalines from the flood stricken districts about a week after it had subsided.He said when he interviewed the general:

''I left the small city of Maldon picknell before last night and things then in that city and all ground it were in a most dreadful state.Angelinia Agathia is about thirty miles distant south and yet the refugees from the town of Maldon picknell overpouring in the direction of Angelinia Agathia and other cities in the greatest numbers so you would have thought it the advance of or the retreat of some big army of men disguised as men women and children.many or nearly all the people of that little city ha have lost all they hadA priest whom I knew and his entire family were drowned and one of my friendsreported to me that two orphan asylums with every child in it were swept away to no one knows where and all are lost. Out of twenty five hundred thousand houses of Maldon picknellonly ten thousand are left. At Angelinia Agathia many relief committes are being organized.I would say Maldon picknell is wiped out entirely.

Inheard the priest whom I knew and respected was well known in Angelinia Agathia having preached many times from the pup pulpit of St Thomas Catholic chir Church on St Peters and Santa Anna Streets.

Penrod had been c ooped up in a smallhouse that had collapsed after being carried along by the deluge of water and in the same house three families met death in the flood and of the bu ld building Penrod was the only survivor.Penrod had been in the building all the time since the duration of the flood and was the only occupant alone in the building who had escaped. General ,ivian and all his generals and even the Vivian Girls themselves and many others including the army itself now concentrating near Cedernine Creek were completely dumbfounded and flabbergasted when they recieved this first information information of the great disaster for they had not recieved and any wor word before and had not known any flood raged.however the flood had cut the army off from all wire communication however even leaving it without information as to the movements of Mahleys armies.

Of his own experience Penrod told it to violet and her sisters in this fashion:

''I went to Maldon picknell city and was so delighted with the beauty of that littleplace that I sold my return tickets to a man going to Angelinin Agathia and decided to remain for about two months. Then the flood came and almost without warning. All at once torrents of water came roaring down the streets bringing houses and all kinds of debris when the house I was in was torn asunder from the force of the current and I was in the water I managed to seize a raft of debris but it too went to pieces. I again came up caught a large piece of timber and then seeing a roof coming I made for it and climed to its top and thus managed to make my escape. We do not believe all the bodies of the little town of Mil Meldon nicknell have been discovered. The sight is dreadful Violet and your sisters. For scores of miles, il allover the country the ground is de debris strewn and the rivers is chocked with it. I have wired for more dillon definite news regarding the extent of the flood but have heard nothing more. The enemy certainly can make disasters Violet. Do you believe me I even do that we'll never win."

"Yes" said Violet. And so echoed her sisters.

"Then said Violet

"Yes I believe the war will never be won by our side. Everything is against us. We are getting discouraged and have written to our father that we do not see any necessary reasons for carrying on the resistance to the war any longer. I stated in my lstvletter the war and its cause as Holy as it is is lost already. He might as well give up and we'll flee to any foreign country. It's the only thing to do. General ,rrianchaever is not going to give up yet and says a goof good victory somewhere will make us recover our courage. But I don't believe he will ever win. Manly is too strong. Penrod my boy you better go back to Abbieannia and try to find ticket for a foriegn coujtry, too."

Violet and her sisters were indeed discouraged. But they went of thier own accord to learn if possible the true accounts of the dreadful flood. What they learned the flood set in on a sunday morning on the very same day that the battle of pholantonburg began June the first and continued to rage for nearly a month in al its fury. They even learned that the places hardest hit were these cities, Angelinia Agathia, Dorothy Gale, Big Girl Knool, Little girl Knool, Heidi junction city (wiped out) Poly Chrome, Jessicia, Chamberlane, Henrietta, Collyer and Stanck, Nelkingburg, Phelantonburg, Calmarinia, Angeline junction, Angeline City, and other cities already mentioned in the chapter. The heaviest part of the flood swept upon Meldon nicknell and Heidi junction and also Dorothy Gale and the greats greatest loss of all was reported from Big girl Knool especially in property.

All over the country for five hundred and sixty miles or, more on account of the flood all the telegraphs telegraph and other wires were down and the whole country was covered with raging waters and seas of shattered wreckage.

As they learned the flood began at Seven A.M. Monday morning and where it first started it was more aful awful than the worst inundation of Holland and swept a adore of cities and towns away as swiftly asthe total destruction of Johnstown. A hundred horrors like that of Galveston raged for a month with people all over the flood districts in a hundred times worst peril and fassing as to say a hundred million horrors. After raging in all its fury for three weeks and two days the flood rose to its highest water mark and Meldon nicknell was obliterated for a day and Heidi junction swept entirely away, save for a few little houses. By the next day the flood had reached horrible proportions and yet the flood continued to increase carrying all before it and scores of towns were completely under water. The flood was rushing with the speed and force of a heavy sea driven by a tempest. From all quarters of the southern portion of Chverinia the vivian Girls learned of the awful de a devastation wrought by the flood the cut some of the enemy bursting the pan and levees of the Aronburgs gun and other rivers. The los loss of lifes were not account for, now many perished no one could estimated because most of all the bodies were still missing even ten days after the flood and it was feared the death list would be more larger than that caused by ten of the worst cyclone storms put to gether. Labrador town also se suffered severely all river fishing craft were found on the country farms far from the rivers and this makes the conditions of the fishing folks extremely pitiable.

In Sallis Iles wown the whole of the fishing and other property was destroyed. On the other shore over fifty big fishing ships had been swept clear up to Henrietta frum the river all being a total loss. The whole country far from rivers have been found strewn with boats of all kinds. The big river steamer Stanck was wrecked. On the scene of the first frecent inundation over Helendale countty this new flood raged with the greatest fury and carried every town and small city away with in

it. One of the ships belonging to the glendale Heidi wishing company after the flood was found in the outer streets of porothy Gale City and the men or crew were in the ship when it was carried all that distance from the Mis Mic-Hollester Run river by the force of the flood torrent. At the worst of the flood the unfortunate men had drifted about on the half sinking hulk without food water or shelter for ten days and only by incessant pumping managed to keep her afloat. The rush of water torrents were cont a constantly expinningthe ship around like a top. One or two men perished from exposure. The crew says they did not know whether the flood was an accident or whether the sea itself had suddenly swamped over so much of the lands. It saw s certainly sure all river vessels could not and did not escape the disaster when theirs the finest of all fishing ships of thefinest fishing company in the world succumbed. The Heidi Company of fisheries with all the fishing ships and men were completely wiped out and all the big fishing buildings were no longer seen.

One of the vivian girls went for herself to see the flood and when she returned she was horrified.

She declared that bodies of dead were piled up like as if they were mountains and allwere perfect fire heaps. She wrote to her Father the Emperor thus:

" JULY FIRST!

WHAT CHEARNING CREEK!

I have seen all the horrors of the flood and it will be almost impossible to exaggerate the awful scenes that greets the visitor there. The situation could never be exaggerated. Probably if the loss of life can be estimated after two months or so it may be greater than any estimate that can be made as it is said all the bodies have been either swept into the rivers and are gone no one knows where. I visited the little city of Heidi junction itself. It's a shame too such a once pretty little place, an almost heaven on earth. In the parts of the city where the destruct ionof the city was the greatest and where all the buildings no matter what size has been swept entirely away ther is nothing left. In points where the wreckage lies fa flattened out or in windrows there must stil be thousand bodies or thousands of bodies under the debris. At the north end of the city first struck by the floods greatest in force and which was swept clean of every vistage of the splendid residences and other houses that covered it the ruin for miles is enclosed by towering walls and ml Mountians of dev debris under which many thousands of bodies are buried. The removal of this has scarcely begun. As usual in such great calamities the people of the town whosurvived, as half of them no three quarters were drowned a re all dazed, and speak of their awful losses with a strange unatural calmness that would astonish one who did not understand it, they speaking as if they did not care a rapt for their loss loss. Not one surviving man woma , or not one surviving man and woman and child has anything left no property and article which they could call property. I believe there is a most serious danger of a great plague as one is breal r breakingout here and 10,000 people are suffering from Typhoid Fever and also from the dreaded Cholera.

The nervious strain will come soon upon the people and when they come to realize the situation I believe there will be a million crazy people. All talk of friends relatives and loved ones and als also property that are all gone with tearless eyes many not even mentioning the loss of their property.

A professional gentleman who called upon me this afternoon or the afternoon I was there a gentleman of the most splendid swiap sympathies and refinement wore a soiled black flannel shirt, without a cot coat and in apologizing for his appearance in his usual light hearted way said;

"Excuse my appearance violet I have just come from burying the dead ones of my family."

But all these people whosurvive will soon break down under the strain, and I fear a greater horror then ever coming. I have read in books and papers of the great horror that occured in the city of Galveston in America by a storm but that is only a little water of no ammount of any kind com pared to the results of Meldon nicknell and Heidi junction.

Portions of the city that did succeed in escaping the greatest severity of this inundation and left partially intact.And it is impossible to purchase any supplies that may be w n wanted.All relief is coming as rapidly as the crippled transportations will admit but then as the flood is still raging elsewhere still without abatement nothing can be done to reach other places. And in reply to the question what is most needed I would say "The most immediate needs a re armies of soldiers to patrol the districts left by the flood, s surgical dressings the ordinary medicinal supplies and everything that is necessary for the sick and injured and means for stopping the spread of the pestilence before it gets under headways."

Your Loving Daughters

Violet Vivian"

Many pere persons were reported dead and their obituaries printed in all new newspapers but these persons were later found welll and not in the flood at all.

Gertrude Angeline Hierself had passed a most thrilling time during the flood and probably passed through one of the most thrilling experiences of her life.The girls story of her experience inthis worst of all disaster in the war was a interesting and most thrilling one.

She had gone out scouting with a party of boy and girl scouts about a hundred in number and had been spying on a small child slave plantation when the flood advanced like a roaring thundering tidal wave.She tried to drive the child slaves and her followers to the higher grounds but was unsuccessful and only reaches it herself with a small black child slave whom she seized by the arm and pulled her almost roughly after her. There they remained up on that high rise of ground thinking the water could come no further but it rose and rose and when it finally began to reach them Gertrude made a heavy heavy raft from boards and timbers she secured and then putting the c hild on leaped onto t it and rowed it or paddled it off with a longpole.On this they rode for three days and nights and several times a rush of water overlapping the raft washed the slave off and she clung to the top of the raft with one a hand until Gertrude pulled her on. Again and again the child was washed off only to be drawn up by the girl heroine.Timbers and wreckage of all kinds crashed against their queer raft people on allsides of them were crushed to death or drawn into the swirling waters houses were swept away by the hundreds but with grim perseverance Gertrude and the brave little child slave held on and fairly rode the flood out.Gertrude however was injured her feet being lacerated and bleeding her clothes torn almost entirely from her body and she was nearly exhausted when she and the slave was finally taken from the their perilous positions several Hours after the flood began to show signs of abatement.Her companion was without a singlepiece of c l clothing.Of all the people allaround they were the only two persons saved.Gertrude had lost all her followers and she had to sent an appeal to Violet and her sisters for aid but got but little as Violet and her sisters were unable to sent relief to her and the child slave.

Violet and her sisters were raving mad.They themselves had the general order every persons of high rank throughout the country to have the scoundrels who made the flood run down and captured and this was being effectually carried out.

It was said nearly two million were dead, and more bodies were being founds.

The terrible scenes and happenings in Dorinda City the great amount of damage done by the flood and the intense suffering of the people there as a result of the recent flood were vividly portrayed by the letters of many.much could be written about the damage done to Dorinda and there were things so terrible that little thought would hardly have been given to otherplaces.Bu but right here in porinda the damage was so great that one would not even believe that a years worl would repair one t i third of it.Furthermore the suffering in this city and all around it was indeed the greatest ever heard of aof any disaster .Even the city despite trying to do what it could for its own afflicted was taking care of hundreds of thousands of refugees who came from other devastated places and therefore the city was being taked taxed to the utmost limit to find places and shelter for all of them.Even the day after the flood receded the first army of refugees arived.There were about eighteen thousand and indeed a more forlorn dejected and suffering lot of people never were known to be br u brought together.The sick and ailing were cared for in all hospitals and private homes and the greater number were sent to other places.Most of them roamed the streets with scarcely any clothes on them, men women and children, all were hollows eyed and sunke sunken cheeked and on the very verge of despair.It was terrible to even think howmany thousands of families had been broken up.All men who had lost their all were for revenge and enlisting in the army..The rescuers and many other people have listened to many thousands of harrowing heart breaking tales untill they are actually sick.The newspaper reports were not even ab e to exaggerate the worst quota a single bit.There was no one who could really express the terrible situation.At night time in the city of porinda there was not a sinbl singlelight.It was reported that 17,000 had lost their lives here but this was believed to be a gross false report that the death list was much higher a most conservative o figu e figure.There was scarcely a structure in porinda which escaped the fury of the Pooo Flod.All houses at the lower portions were totally damaged and the biggest damaged to some extent.The streets for weeks were filled with debris telephone and other poles and wires huge piles of bricks and timbers, and all kinds of wreckage.Therefore any one who can dare to saythe accounts of the disaster at every point is exaggerated is greatly in favor of the enmy.The debris in some streets of porinda was thirty feet high.Many of the inhabetants marooned for two weeks by the flood and cut off from all food supplies and the like faced complete starvation and thousands fainted from lack of food.It is probably the worst disaster of the war.

About two weeks after the dimsterous flood, it was given out from all points devasted as far as possible that so far as it could ever be ascertained on that date June the Fourteenth the loss of life in the great flood catastrophe was about 2,661,876.

The horrifying news also reached Angelinia Agathia late on the afternoon of June the 12th that a River resort known as Costellio Heights thirty or miles more northeast of Angelinia Agathia near the main branch of the Arenburge Run River and in the northwestern corner of the Helendale County was entirely destroyed by the flood in june the F r First.

The place had about thirteenthousands houses and not one of them was left standing, and more than four thousand dead bodies were found by the many relief and exploring parties.The general Manager of the Wic-Hollester and Pandor a Railway also recieved full information on that same date that more than a hundred or more m les of that road and nearly one third of its local and main line branches had been entirely destroyed between Angelinia Agathia Point and Heidi city.And after looking over the situation most carefully the decision was arives at fu lly ten days after the flood that two hundred and fifty railroadlines had their tracks washed out and everything was tied up putting the whole country or nation in general in a general tie up in all conditions.To put the Calverini n country back on her feet after the disaster would require nearly five hundred million or more dollars in Abbiennian money.At least this did not at all seem at first rate that this huge sum would come any where near restoring the cities and towns to the conditions they had been in before the inundation.And what measure of relief that would bury all the dead still remaining, clear and purify the streets of cities and towns remaining, feed and clothe the vast army of refugees and place the surviving people who re theycan ne be self sustaining and on the way to regain what had been lost would cost a sum that even I don't dare write down here.Let the reader try to fingure that out themselves.To relieve the city of Angelinia alone from the effects of the flood there alone it would take at least nearly $15,000,000 and to only relieve that city from the after affects of the distress resulting from the flood.And that sum would only be needed to dispose of the many dead come into that city from the other wrecked wrecked towns, to remove the ruins and to do what is right for the survivin people and all those who had lost property or had their homes damaged. To feed and clothe the survivors and other means to help the people who had lost everything and to give them a start to rebuilding their homes would require every dollar of twenty million more.

In Angelinia Agathia city itself as well as in porothy Gale there were more red Cross nurses and doctors than was required and these were sent to places where they were more needed.The injured survivors of Angelinia Agathia alone werescovering from their hurts which were largely superficial.Thousands of men an m and woman women were still suffering from the effects of severe nervious shocks and found it impossible to get any sleep at nights.Food and provisions was coming into Angelinia Agathia and Dorothy Gale city by the boatload and car load faster than it could be handled but on account of thewgshout of so many tracks further south these provisions could go no further even though they were sent in such generous quantities that no further doubts could be intertained about the supplies. Estimates also of the numbers of people from the entire flooded districts who were fully dependent upon the many relief committees varied. The Mayor of Angelinia Agathia made it about 18,000,000 while many other aurthorities put the number as high as twenty seven million and more. Angelinia Agathia city was rapidly recovering from the effects of the inundation for in the business center and other points the streets had been cleaned and opened. All the buildings that survived the flood however still showed the marks of water but in many streets and elsewhere all kinds of goods were being displayed and business seemed to be transacted as best as possible. Even the city was gradually assuming the bustling unteflood appearance. Even all the best of the streets were again eletrically lighted, setenches from dead bodies and the like no longer assailted the nostrils except in the outside circuls of the destruction where as much debris from other points still remained untouched. Even bow cremation of all dead bodies still being found was being pushed as rapidly as possible but it was said it would be still many days before the hundreds and even thousands of working parties got out the remaining bodies.

Far outside of the city the ground for a hundred miles or more was still entirely submerged. The horrors of the western portions of this beautiful city which suffered the most, the point beyond the city limits were just being fully learned by the royalities and other members of the National kingly cover. Governments and and other aurthotirise. From there fifty thousand bodies had been buried within two days. Between twenty and thirty thousand were also counted among the piles of the wrecked railroad bridges between Angelinia Agathia and Heidi junction. A little beyond there about 10,000 were lost, eighteen hundred persons in one house. The far ther the men and prisoners continued to work in the Heidi junction region the more numerious were the dead. Fires were burning like conflargrations every three hundred feet even out in the country as well as the streets and towns of cities. And it was impossible for any person to speak at all definitely as yet of the needs of the surviving people of so ernormous a flood. The whole Calverinian country was said to be broke on account of it or at least a majority of the country was. Angelinia Agathia itself may have suffered according to the estimation of emperor vivian based upon all reports as he recieved as far as thirty million or more dollars. The country needed money more than anything. The aurthorities in Angelinia Agathia had between one hundred and five thousand men and two hundred thousand at work searching for the bodies, clearing the streets and burning debris. Of this which work which was being done and pushed as rapidly as possible in the interests of the survivors there was enough to keep the men busy without an hours stop. How much it would really put the city of Angelinia Agathia where her people can take care of her self could not be estimated. There was not a building in the city as big as she is that was not severely damaged not a single house of those that were le t left standing which will not have to be reroofed and few that will not need to be straightened out on their foundations and basements pumped out. Before this disaster Angelinia Agathia was considered as one of the most beautiful and wealthiest cities of all Abbiennia. But all the rich people there who had survived had all their most costly things there and now they are crippled with total losses. They are worse off than even the poorer classes. The hundreds of thousands of people of moderate means who had homes made up from hard earned wages and worked on salaries were all without a single exception completely ruined. Even emperor Vivians Palace though it is on high ground did not alone escape a Ten million dollar damage in basement property only. Any who interviewed the emperor declared that there are more than fourty eight tho million people from the whole flood district who will have to be fedand clothed and carried alonr for some time to come even after what any one may call immediate d needs have been made. It was anticipated from wh way things looked that a dangerous plague was threatening to break out. All people were suffering from shock of all kinds and also from exposure, and from serious and slight injuries that were recieved from among the ruins or by swinging and swirling wreckage while trying to xxs swim the flood. The city of Angelinia Agathia it was finally confirmed from taking of the ce nsus that it lost fully three hundred and sixty five thousand persons. Outside of the city limits were scattered between one million and two million dead bodies of people animals and chickens and every living thing a person knows of. And from all the reports slowly coming in but incessantly it appear appeared that all of these lost their lives from the other towns and cities. All the country region around and far outside of HeidiJunction and Little Girl Knool had been swept utterly clean of farms and habitations..

The big mobolization camps at Dorothy Gale and Angelinia Agathia came out of the flood like ships do after being battered beyond repair by storm waves of the sea. If one would have went there a week after the flood receded they would have seen the most motley crowds or armies of soldiers drawn up at attention that would have made them star with surprise and amusement. None of the soldiers were in a uniform and no tow of them were dressed alike many even wearing clothes that should have been on a woman. And all the clothes did not even bear the resemblance of clothing and were barely sufficient to cover nakedness and in all cases there were bad rents which showed the bare anatomy on dress parade. All the batteries suffered and not a cannon or a weapon of any kind was left. The whole army at the Dorothy Gale Camps came out of the flood with a loss of two hundred and eighty five thousand men out of two million, a death list seldom sustained in battle for an army of this size. One of the generals who was in chief charge of the camps floated three days and six hours on a large door, allthe way from porothy Gale to Henrietta city and thence back again to Dorothy Gale, and then again southward untill he was rescued by the few survivors of Heidi junction. Another general was carried onward by the flood on an outhouse and he floated for two weeks and nearly starved was rescued just as the flood began to abate. The survivors were barracked in what remained of their camps since the day after the disaster. The officers and men had lost everything, even arms, private and military property and had to get any kind of clothes they could use to cover them. Many of the officers and generals had their families at the camp as well as the privates and out of them a l only two children survived. General james ge Stew Stewart had undertaken to see that his two little girls did not suffer, and it was believed that the aurthorities of Angelinia Agathia would take a personal interest in this case. The general who lost his life and left these children entire orphans came to the camp from Heidi junction where he was well known for his bravery during many battles recently in the war. This was general Aberdeen Shorderine. His family consisted of his wife, father mother, Uncle, other relatives as well as six boys and four girls. In May he managed to have a fine headquarters building erected in the mobolisation camps and therefore took possession. When the dreadful flood was fairly covering the highest barracks completely under wayer water and made his house no longer safe he placed his boys on a big raft at the upper attic and went back for the others. The raft was carried half a mile and demolished by driftwood and the children were fairly ground to death by the wreckage swirled and tossed by the current of the flood. The general and all the rest of his family and relatives escept the two little girls were lost in the house it self which collapsed. Countless numbers of persons of Angelinia agathia city itself who owned their little homes had had them totally destroyed. They were now full fully dependent upon the full generiousity of the very outside world and upon all the relief committees to prepare for the rige rigors of the hot summer and to refurnish their surviving homes with all the necessary things needed. And no one who had not been an eye witness to the desolation which had swept over this city and its outside mobiliz ationcamps could have the faintest conception of what it all means. All along the southwestern and western section of Angelinia gathia for a distance of thirteen miles long and half a mile in width every house had been absolutely demolished and cleared away by the force of the rushing waters. guch of these unfortunates who were not drowned were now without a cent and many were even without relatives or families of any kind. It was literally a nation of sorrow and wild grief.

A small graphic description of the flood that devastated the camps of Dorothy Gale was given by general Paul Marcus who was there at the time and who fortunately survived. He said as he interviewed general Vvian vivian,

"The flood there lasted fully a month and ten days. At first it was not bad but it continued to increase foot by foot every hour. I reached my big headquarters building after wading and swimming in water up to my very neck and made immediate preparations to take my wife and three little daughters to where I felt their safty would be assured. The water then began to rise so rapidly that in fifteen minutes we were driven fairly to the third floor and it was then impossible to leave the house and in the lower sectio of the ground I saw many of the barracks being either washed away or completely inundated by the water. At this time one of the big barracks adjoining mine went to pieces with hundreds of soldiers in them and all weredrowned before our eyes. Then down what must have been Company street No. I came a line of wrecked shattered barracks one of which struck a big tree which withstood the flood and it stopped directly in front of my headquarters. I heard children d crying in there, the yells and noise of confusion from soldiers from within and also women and so screaming. The words "Oh God save us" I can always hear ringing in my hears as long as I live. Another long barracks came sweeping by like an immense boat and crashing against my house carried away the upper section and the front gallery and stove in one portion of the wall. When three other barracks crammed with horrified soldiers floated by at times colloding with thundering crashes and I could see hundreds of struggling forms in the water that filled the second floor of the structures. I was expecting it would soon be our own turn as the force of the flood was increasing and it was still rising higher and higher. I therefore with tears in my eyes kissed my wife and children good bye and as I did so my eldest child a girl of ten said "Father you were a great hero in this war. Do not give up hope. It is not our tow. time to die. God will save us yet."

Then came the piercing scream of soldiers and women and children followed by a terrible crash and a great big wooden barracks completely turned over on its side like a foundering ship and was driven past in that position by the speed of the flood. The current was running probably at a rate of thirty miles an hour. The water was already up on our third floor and still coming up and the waves kept knocking us about untill we were completely exhausted. Then after being in this position for nearly ten days, with little to eat but what we had saved from the lower floors the water quickly but gradually begnn to fall. I then looked about but could not see a single barracks for many blocks, not even batteries of cannon or fortifications there was nothing but a flood of water in every direction. In three more days the flood was entirely receding and looking out from the upper windows we found my headquarters had been moved ab ut thirty feet and disposited near the outskirts of the camps."

The number of persons that left the flood devastated districts up to june the 9th it was stated at the Angelinia Agathia relief head quarters was over eight million five hunfred thousand of whom about five million were then in porothy Gele, Angelinia Agathia and other places and the immense numbers coming up on the north bound trains showed no falling off whatever. New arrangements made in the districts enabled the survivors to get out without so much red tape and therefore they took good advantage of the opportunity to do so. There were so many pitiful cases of destitution that they could not be counted. A mass of half demented persons even children positively refused to leave their wrecked homes in the towns and cities and as persistently refused to accept offers of relief that was being extended to them. In thou sands of thousan thousands of instances parents who had lost all their children still occupied ruins of their former home and the surroundings had brought them to a state of mental and physicial collapse. The immense numbers who had gone totally insane as a result of their experiences sorrows and losses would probably never be known. In every lot of refugees sent out of the stricken towns and cities there were thousands of insane men and women. Many of the victims first m made light of their worse losses and laughed immoderately when telling of the death of relatives in the flood. Indeed it was a very short step from all this to uncontrollable madness.

One woman told a policeman of Angelinia Agathia that he was the woman himself and he had to arrest her as an insane person. The fears of an epidemic was growing steadily despite the distribution of medicines and disenfectants and therefore this was causing the majority of the people to seek better succor elsewhere.

Grewsome scenes beyond description and soul harrowing incidents of the time immediately following the great inundation in Heidi junction were graphically protrayed in a letter from our old hero Jack Dane who had been with some soldiers in the city in the awful flood. The officer who had been in Concentinian Aronburgs army for a year and left the army for Heidi Junction the very day before the outbreak of the flood reached the doomed city just in time to participate in the terrible experience. His letter follows:

"HEIDI JUNCTION.
JUNE THE 12TH.
TO GENERAL ROBERT VIVIAN:
Dearest friend. I had not had a single moment to write to you untill now and still am not hardly able to collect my thoughts to tell you by letter of the horrible disaster down-here. I and those with me never expected to get out alive but thank God and His blessed mother not one of us was even injured. We were driven back up to the second floor and up floor by floor by the water. It seemed to me the water was rushing about thirty five miles an hour nd everything was being swept away. Never shall I forget the awful sights as darkness settled upon us. I thought of you general and the brave vivian Girls and prayed that if you heard of the flood you and they might be comforted. Our roof is gone the wall had fallen all around but we still have a floor and --I can't hardly tell you as it is so horrible. Only thirteen hundred houses are left. The dead lay in the wreckage as thick as an annihilated army, and the countryside is strewn with dead bodies. The whole city is demolished three quarters of it wiped out entirely. There is not a drop of clean water, food is very scarce and a pestilence is breaking out. If help does not reach us soon there will come a great famine a famine of such terrible magnitude of which was never heard of. The dead are not being identified at all as there are too many decomposing bodies, they throw them on drays and wagons and take them to barges and all ships that can be secured where they are loaded like so much cord wood and lumber and then taken out to the deep waters of the rivers and cast into the waves now peaceful which were so hungry for them in their anger.

'I was at one of the river shores wharfs this evening for a short time and saw a long line of barges loaded with their grewsom freight. The bodies are frightful and nearly all of them are nude. God alone can tell who they are. The flood that still remains is still chocked with debris and is full of dead cattle horses and other animals together with a sea of human corpses blistering in the hot sun. It will be I believe utterly impossible to remove all these dead from the debris for a moth month the whole country side for all that distance is most frightful. The condition of the surviving portions of the city itself is most frightful. I saw one hundred and sixty eight bodies taken from one large house and every one is striving to get the bodies buried buried or burned for fear of the rapid spread of the plague. I was nearly drowned in getting home from my place of observation at five colock the afternoon of the first day of the flood. Many of the women are crazy and are in a dangerous condition. I have lost everything, and am waring wearing clothes that some one else loaned me. The stench from the dead bodies is most terrible. I wonder give that everyone who survived are not mad at the horrors. No accounts can ever exaggerate it. Nearly all of the inhabatants of the city except one third are drowned. What remained of the town is under martial law to protect it from plandelinian ghouls but none have arived here thank God. We were on the highest point of this city and probably that is all that may have really saved us. For blocks and blocks reacing in into sobrexnof miles not a single house of any size remains, and not a building that is completely swept away and just torn up board by board. Outside the city I had climbed over mountians of wreckage fifty feet high to get to places. I think we were more fortunate than others in the little city. Of my followers not one was killed though our escape was extremely narrow. with the exception of one man all were calm though I reckon every one quaked inside, surely I know I did.

Since the recession of the flood I am growing better. Had something to eat and a little rainwater. Coffee is still plenty in some of the houses that survived but pure water is scarce. To day the flesh slips off the many dead bodies of humans and animals as they take hold to drag them from the ruins and the debris. They are piling them in the greatest heaps possible on wreckage and setting fire to all. The horrors are growing worse and worse. The stench is dreadful untold. For three nights the awful smells kept us allaway awake although we are utterly exhausted. It fills your mouth and throat and also makes your very head ache. The horrible experiences it will take many years to tell and more than a whole lifetime to forget. If you and your assistants could only be here you would realize what it is. It is so pitiful to see husbands with looks of despair in their eyes, searching in vain for their wives and children, wives for their loved ones and most saddest of all the extremely few children, although they are enough, god knows to be left orphans and homeless looking into every ones eyes with frightened appealing looks on their little innocent faces. It is heart rending. And he fills me with a bitter hate of the foe when I learned the enemy engineers had done this thing at the or ders of the generals of the rebellion. No don't worroy. I am well off. I am still safe so don't worry. I hope to hear from you as soon as possible. Best love and kisses from your loving friend.

Jack Francis Dane."

CHAPTER EIGHTY THREE..

THE INHAB ATANTS OF THE STRICKEN TOWNS AND VI LLIAGES BEING OVER) OVER-CONFIDENT THAT THE ENEMY WAS NOT WICKED ENOUGH TO CAUSE FLOODS REFUSED TO HEED WARNINGS GIVEN TO THEM BY MANY SCOUTING PARTIES AND THE GEMINI BEFORE THE DISASTER OCCURED/ CARELESSNESS OF SOME SIGNAL ST ATIONS IN FAILING TO WARN CHRISTIAN TROOPERS OF THE ENEMY ATTEMPTING TO BURST RIVER DIKES AND DAMS. SOME MORE SAD SIGHTS AT HEIDI JUNCTION. GREAT VALUE OF THE ABBINA'NIAN GEMINI AND GENERA DARGARS PROWESS. HEIDI JUNCTION DIRECTLY IN THE PATH OF THE FLOOD WITH NO WAY OF ESCAPE. WHAT IS THE LITTLE CITY'S FUTURE. ALL OTHER TOWNS THAT WERE IN DANGER. GLORINIA FLOODED. FLOOD S COMING FORTOLD. FLOOD WILL RETURN.

TERRIBLE WORK OF THE FLOOD.

ALTHOUGH this time the Hensellendale County had been struck twice by such disasterous floods as even this experience was not even enough to convince the many survivors of the many towns and cities that had been wipedout orplaced u nder water that the enmy was really responsible and that in other occasions it might surely happen again. Many of the more cautious had any idea after the great disaster of even taking the slightest steps to have the government prevent its repetition. Asked if anything would really d Be done to make future floods of this ch racter impossible the aurthorities had declared that the best thing to be done is to have all dikes and levees and jetties of every one of the eighty rivers heavily guarded by all christian forces h that are not needed in any battle, and hoped that such a plan would settle the question. In the next sentence they would compare the damage done in the first big flood with this latest disaster and declare that it ought to n be madeout in figures how many children out of the total death lists perished in the flood, and therefore to put to death without mercy just as many glandelinian soldiers taken A prisoners.

B t But just now fearing it would make the enemy far worse than now Emperor Vivian would not hear of it and therefore said;

"No, no .The glandelinians will only take swift and terrible revenge and things may happen that willappall the world beyond measure. The plan to do is to take the ones who are responsible for the flood disaster bring them before a court marshallgive them a few minutes minutes trial and face them before a firrifiring squad. the best plan to prevent these floods is to put stronger dikes and levees or kettles at the dangerous spots of the big rivers and arm these series of j ettles with artillery and have large christian forces stationed there to frustrate any of the attempts of the enemy to cause future floods. I think the good old Holland plan is the best. T e two people do not need to return to such locations just now."

When such floods occur it is the faulty positions of the landscapes that caused such a dreadful disaster. But the people also are overconfident and do not and did not believe the enemy would be wic ed enough to dare cause ju such disasters as the recent one. In this last great flood the peculiar landscapes all around for the hundreds of miles fairly pocketed the water and allowed it to overrun the whole country like a big inland sea. The effect of the flood bursted other levees of the same river and of other rivers also especially of the big Mary Mis- Allister Run near Heidid Heidi junction, and the flood therefore was worse in this location than anywhere else. This was the point where the four smaller towns were placed completely under water, and where the force of the flood washed whole parks of buildings away from Heidi Junction city not even leaving the foundations of the buildings to indicate that on any stood there. In all portions of the highest point of the city the water rose to a depth of twenty six feet to thirty in the streets, and had not the houses of other towns brought down by the flood not formed immense jams similar to a great log jam and extending along the souther southern portion of the city for miles and miles this enormous body of water would have swept away the entire city of Heidi without leaving a single building there and the number of dead would have been total.

The miles upon miles of wreckage andhuman bodies brought down from the other towns formed an immense dike or jam "the mperor Viv went on in again calling attention to this strange feature of the immense inundation and had it not been for that dike protecting a portion of Heidi junction that citi city, and all the rest including Angelinia Agathia and Dorothy Gale would not even be in existence now.

The jam stopped the full force it of it from hitting in this direction.' Any how Heidi not prepared for such floods had the wrong satiys of houses for a country city. It nw newest buildings were all of wood and poorly adapted to stand the force of so much water. This flood was one of the worse on record, probably the most disasterous of all floods ever known and as the reports ca e it it i in it is verified that fifty eight towns are even now still under water. Will we never know when the flood will assume all its dreadful proportions again and we should therefore shelter the armies of refugees accordingly."

The work of extracting so many dead bodies from all wreckage still continued even though it was nearly two weeks after the flood had subsided. The work was mostly being down over the whole country where the wreckage was strewn into an immense sea of debris. On June the thirteenth four hundred thousand bodies had been taken out of this great sea of debris or fished out of the water still remaining like an immense lake with all that had been done to recover bodies buried beneath or pinned beneath the sea of floating wreckage and dirty water the work it appeared had scarcely started. Never in the worlds existence had such a dreadful disaster occured. There was no time whatever to dig any grave and the decomposing bodies beaten and bruised beyond identification was consigned to the flames.

Despite the horrors of all the disaster volunteers came in as fas t as the advance of armies and from every christian army far or near prisoners were sent first to Dorothy Gale and Angelinia Agathia, and then transported to the ruined districts and forced to help at the point of the bayonet. Near the u9e allister gun river two miles south of Heidi Junction and Heidi City thousands of bodies were taken from windrows of wreck go and cremated. The strangest scene of all of the flood in this location was the immense forest of battered and torn trees. In this location before there had only been farms and therefore the trees whole forests of them had been torn away by the flood and swept all the way down and past Heidi junction. There were trees of every description, may millions of them extending for miles and miles all swimming or floating or half stirking out of the water.

Tt Trees of the strongest kind did not withstand the flood. The immense oaks, populars, the big firs and evergreen and pines, and the powerful Hemlocks and others were torn by the roots and forced all the way down with bark entirely stripped off their wide trunks. Near the wrecked portion of Stanck Street Heidi junction were found amidst the wreckage twenty immense locomotives and even lines of great passenger coaches but damaged beyond repair. A House belonging to the town of Allendale fifty six miles away was was found in Heidi junction. The furniture of this house was found in Angelinia Agathia fourty five miles further. In this ruined house one of the rescuers pulled out the remains of men women and children so horribly mangled they could not be recognized. From the soaked addresses found on some of their identification cards they were persons swept from the same town where the housecame from. One of the rescuers recognises one family to be of his own flesh and blood. As they slowly burned he watched them untill they were utterly consumed and then resumed his work in assisting others remove the remaining dead from the same structure as if he did not care whether he lost his relatives or not. He had several times a desire to also throw the glandelinian prisoners in the flames but some soldiers of the National guard feared he would do so and watched this maniac with great care.

A l arfe force of christian soldiers and Glandelinian prisoners were still engaged in removing the dead from Gelndale located about two miles west of Heidi junction and where the maze of trees was the thickest. At this point the w ter may have ran to a height of fourty eet feet and hung in up u in all the trees were the bodies of men women and children almost as thick as leaves which were being colle t collected go about in boats untill it looked as if the flood was blackened with the craft. At every point outside the cities and in the country for the extent of the flood the searching for and the cremating of so many bodies thateither perished or found lodgings there was being prosecuted most vigoriously. The situation throughout the country ex i extending from Angelinia Agathia to Heidi junction was possibly worse than any other point of the awful flood.The flood had bursted other dams and dikes of the Aronburgs gun as well as the Maria MicAllister stream and also the Mic-whirther and Mic-Wallaster and therefore had intensified the flood at this section.It was said that the greatest surviving sufferers of the flood were the hundreds of thousands of people of the most limited means who own wooned homes where the flood swept scores of whole towns away or completely bur bi buried them under a sea of water.There were said to be about five hundred thousand of these people who owned mortgaged lots, homes, farms and the like all constructed by the loan companies, and though their property was swept away the loan companies also suffered total losses even though protected by liens.Great funds were being raised for the people who had suffered in this way that they might be able to restore what took them so many long years of hard labor and saving of hard earned wages to accumulate and which was swept away from them in a single moment.

At what remained of poor little Heidi a force of deputy Abbiennian Chief Marshalls under Marshall Fredrick Nance was guarding all passable roads into Heidi and keeping back all people and persons who could show no good reason whatever for desiring to go there.The survivors were dailing leaving the city the majority of them being the women and children.The city was under martial law and all idlers and sight seers who managed to elude the guards were pressed into the street services or face the firing squads.

As nearly two hundred and fifty railroad lines throughout the nation had all tracks washed away in the region of the flood it could not be assured how long it would be before trains would be again running into the wrecked cities and towns that did survive the flood and when the region would ever assume the normal conditions.

When the relief forces reached Heidi city which is situated on the big Maria Mic-Allister Run River, opposite porothy Gale city but thirty miles east it was found that of those who did survive the flood all of them were more or less severely injured and all had lost their total property.All of them even the children were buriaed and mashed presenting a most pitiful sight, their limbs lacerated and bleeding.All were beman ing the fate of those dear to them.Many of the dead still remaining and the remaining streets of the city was still strewn with them had their faces, hands and feet and also head mutilated so that it was impossible to learn their names or identificate them in any way and so many were they it was found to dispose of them in the quickest way possible.The few who survive the wreck were utterly homeless, and had nothing to eat since the flood subsided from the city he and had to secure what they could seize.Even of the horses that withstood the flood not one was fit for habitation they were so badly wrecked.As all of the survivors of this little city were injured it was impossible for them ot orgin organize a movement of any kind on their part.Life sustenance was furnished these unfortunates in order that they might not swell the list of dead which was big enough already.All of the bodies that were even swept from the other towns and cities as well as the wreckage was found in and around the vinicity of Heidi City and Heidi junction and all these were also believed to have been washed from the demolished portions of Henrietta and Jessica and porothy Gale city.

Scouting pari parties had warned the inhabatants that at any time the enemy would be liable to cause floods of disasterous character but the inhabatants of these stricken towns had refused to believe it.They had thought the enemy had not such cruelty in their hearts.Now they knew different.The disaster was in one way also fully blamed on the careless ness of gignal stations which did not warn the big forces of christian troopers than the enmey engineers were about to burst the leves of the mighty Aronburgs gun n ver.If they had these troopers could easily have taken steps to prevent its occurances.So in some way or other others were responsible for the disaster beside the enemy and some of those who had been operating signal stations at the day of the floods outbreak were arrested and held for investigation.In fact the arrests becaued of the flood was by the wholesale.

The people of the afflicted city of Heidi junction had been suddenly overwhelmed by the unprecedented fury of the flood elements.The city had had about 100,000 or more of its population besides many visitors. Out of this huge number only 10,000 survived and thousands of these were injured.Those who survived totally lost all their homes and houses of buisness and property and relatives of all kinds.They were suffering with hunger and concerned with pestilence.Indeed al lwere brought to a comme common level by dangers of every kind of description, death in its most awful forms, and an outlook of the most terrible uncertainity.

And yet in the midst of all this ruin and suffering throughout the whole flood district where places and devastated towns and villiages could be reached they were harassed by Glandelinian thugs and thives and spie vandals and ghouls of the most brutal character who disgre disregarding the situation looted surviving property, assaulting citizens and killed soldiers who resisted them and despoiled and disfigured the dead in a most shockingly shave mannger to secure whatever they could and nothing could be done to stop them.They were devoid of any feeling of sorrow or pity and therefore these dirty glandelinian beasts seized upon this awful daus disaster as an opportunity to enrich themselves saying all is fair in war.Of all places Heidi junction was the only place spared from these Vandals.For as soon as the Aurthorities of Angelinia Agathia could recover from the first shock of the disaster this little city or what remained of it was immediately placed under strong martial law and the troops patrolling its reagins of the city did not hesitate to kill every one of the infamious persons who dared enter the city or slip pass the guards.The dimd disaster also brought into prom inence the angry passion of human nature.The country wh while sending all aid possible in provisions, medicine and the like, raved over the disaster.It caused immense numbers of men to inlist into the army.The disaster terrible as it was had its good effects. Since the news of the flood caused by the enemy came in at all points north never was a more stronger organisation of inlisted men w.ever formed.The cantonments of mobolisation camps at many different points could not hold all the men that came, new cantonments had to be erected as quickly as possible and those not sheltered sent where they could be recieved.The nation was wild.A Clique of fierce Aurtheritive men knowing of the disaster orated about it to men in public places in churches in shows and other bui buildings telling in heated words the sorrowful results of the disaster and therefore for the Abbiennian nation there was no need whatever to draft soldiers.They came into service by the million. The news of the awful disaster had hardly appeared in public print even before all people of the nation were busy collecting relief.Children gave their pennies and wept about the results of the flood and all mayors of cities issued their appeals to the people whose sympathies and angers were already aroused.Far off nations sent their own offerings.Day by day trains that could run as far as the edge of the raging flood sped to Angelinia Agathia and points where tracks had been replaced from every point of the country loaded with with supplies and materials to rebuild and repair ruined homes, telegraph carried orders for money. The armies increased in size and in the presence of such a dreadfu visit ation of nature caused by the enemy involving such untold suffering and death the brotherhoof bruther hood of man asserted itself and all thing else was forgotten.Heidi junction city was worse off than any place in the flood.The city in most ways was completely cut off from com commu l communication with other big places as flood still raged all around her, all transportation facilities was cut off even by water, and even if you was to pay the most extortions te prices even to the boldest they did not dare risk their craft in the awful torrent to even try to carry the necessary relief to the suffering people.All provisions in the city were ruined not even canned and dried articles were available.The owners of what had littleprovisions had not enough to even feed themselves and the survivors who did not get away by boat or other dangerous transportation faced death from disease and starvation.Never had a more cruel disaster more successfully planned by the generals who ordered the glandelinian military Engineer corps to blow up the leves and jetties of the dangerous treacherous Aronburgs Run River.There were no ghouls at Heidi, and if any wished to go there they had to risk their own lives in the flood stillraging around the city.

Indeed the great value of the members of the Abbiennian Gemini and the remarkable correctiveness of their own observations and spying and scout ing work all things considered was demonstrated by the events r preced ing and succeeding the great war flood disaster.....

They saw what was going to happen and gave warning of the outbreak of the flood days before it manifested itself.They anticipated the course of the flood from the vinicity of Jessicia city where it astarted untill it reached Glorianna and Lucillie Nickson City where its water seas. watched.The members of the Geminiwas not caught n mapping however.They sent out all their signals and other warnings for all points of the land in danger from the great inundation and when the flood spread toward Angelinia Agathia and a l points west, east and south and partway north the Gemini bureay turned iyts attention to that section and nearly fourty eight hours before the disaster wan warned the people of those two great cities of its dreadful spread and rise, the intensity of the flood, the immense destruction it was causing, andoduring those days extending extended its many signal columns of troopers all along the s stretch of the flood but on high high gills thus preventing a greater loss of life.Of course all these obse observers could not and did not know what a terrible energy the flood would have or what great magnitude it would gain approaching the Hene Helendale county.Perhaps still greater accuracy in forecasting was displayed by the Gemini Bureau ion camps at Heidi junction which were entirely swept away but the soldiers managed to save themselves before the flood struck though they had to abandon all their belongings. Though all lines of communications in southern Calverinia were cut off from Abbiennia entirely the Gemini bureau kept track of the immense flood as it swept through the State of Angeline pine, and extending into the country of Angelipia and gave timely warning that it would reach as far as Angeline junction city and other places.It further predicted the furious destruction which prevailed during the full force of the flood, the maximum velocity of the flood torrent, the bursting of levees of other rivers by the flood thus intensifying it, the cause caused by the flood in spreading over the Parobeck and Trecia plains, the devastation over the region of the Big 4 Girl Knool road and the distance the flood would reach when it touched its greatest height. every bigger city which had been in danger of the flood but fortunately had not been touched except to have only water to a depth of a foot in the streets had ample warning given them.

When this bureau had been first formed it had been always a habit to jeer at the members and their leaders and when ever once or twice they failed in some certain mission to condem the Gemini bureau as perfectly unreliable and not worth worth the slightest expense of its maintenance. During the last few years however its members have gained tremendously in skill and their records now are of a character of which its officials have every reason to be proud and which amply justified whatever high expense it may entail by its usla usual great saving of life and property and of its great value to the christian army and its generals. If it had not been for the work of its members the death list would have ranged in the tens of millions instead of just over two millions.

The appalling nature of the wreck to which even the surviving cities and towns was reduced was leading to all talk of ab ndoning the region of the flood altogether untill the war should be entirely over. Army officials and even the Gemini members sent frequent reports to Emperor vivian that all towns and villiages most hard hit by the flood were destroyed beyond the ability to recover, that what remained of the flood would stay for more than five or six months and that as so many railroad lines including the A.B.C. the Evangeline St plaire, the Hollester and Pandora and others had all their tracks washed out it would be in favor of leaving the two hundred mile stretch of country to the mercy and sport of the f o flood untill the waters subsided and the wrecked levees and river dams and jetties were rebuilt and heading a movement to prevent further disasters of this kind.It was though more than natural that all survivors should consider the good advisibalitie advisability of abansoning such perilous positions of land especially as long as the war rages there can never be any complete security against a disaster like just past when the enemy is likely to be mean enough to even destroy heaven if he could.

Yet though stunned and prostrated under the most fatal disaster that had ever overtaken an Abbiennian country the country people only took a few days or so to regain their breath.The nation itself has simply reassseted the same strange tenacious indomitable coulrage and willpower by which even Americans in times past, built up a great nation where there was a wilderness a century ago.Carpenters, masons and artisans were being called for by the hundreds of thousands and with the most generous aid contru contributed by the people all over the country there was expected as soon as the flood would subside to be a rapid reformation.since the dangers of great floods of this kind cannot be removed as long as the enemy will p to bursting river dikes and levees it is to be hoped there will be thousands of men guarding each leves and jettie or dam which will begin a new era of safty as far as possible, and also for all people in the future as long as the war rages to build their homes and towns on mountian tops and s'o slopes.Repreat representives of the many railroad systems which suffered the washout of all tracks declarad also that the damage was very heavy to railroad property such as grain elevators, co coaches trains of freights and locomotives which ranged to scores of millions of dollars.

It was a disaster that had placed Calverinia state on a paralyzes crisis.The country was totally injured financially by the flood, all river shipping was ruined, and many sh ships were carried off by the flood all over to different portions of the country as if they were on the high seas in a storm and then beached.There were from two hundred to three hundred river ships of every kind found near Heidi City and Heidi junction all under sailing contracts.some of these ships had been loaded with grain and wheat and everything was ruined.Indeed all of Calver inia by the flood was utterly paralysis having as to say been like a man suffering from a paralitic stroke to which it was doubtful for him to recover.All shipping concerns and fisheries and the like suffered a severe paralysis, total loss and tremendous derangement of all contracts. every kind of buisness that one could think of suffered ruin.All various commerce suffered from the shock.The extent of the calamity was beyond measure no adjustment of any contracts could be made and it seemed impossibl impossible that southern Calverinia should be able to regain its footing.

Yet the report that Calverinia was ruined beyond recovery, and the suggestion by other persons and by aurthorities that the devastated towns should be built on high hill tops found no sympathies among the surviving inhabetants.Many of the plaves places b abandoned by the flood would be repaired at their former site.Yet it is said that what the government has planned will decrease the danger from such designed floods as this one.But yet it would be also wise during the war to construct future towns on high hills oto a high ablve the level of the deepest flood.In resolving to defy such other floods this should be done.

Heidi city with a stretch of buildings full thirty five miles in length was situatedoon the banks of the big Wic-Allister River.No to the south and north is an unbroken sea of water and wreckage for nearly two to three hundred miles.The same disastance away was the nesting place of the flood which swpswept the land with such fury that nothingcould withstand it.He d Heidi was in the path of the main force of the flood as well as was Jessicia city Henrietta and pig and Little Girl Knool. Near Lucillia Hickson which suffered only in basement property the flood described almost a Parabola wity with the westward arch of the torrent touching and pouring through the streets of Glorianna and Hollester city after which the track was northeastward spreading over the country for miles in the vinicity of the great yellow Brick Big Girl Knool roads Angelinia Agathia and Heidi junction suffered the worst from this flood.

With such floods as these two conditions favor their formation.If the summer season is rainy and the waters have been unusually heavy with snows before the rivers can be holding enough water that su should even one leves burst the frightful consequences would follow.The second is where the flood raged the lands is low and flat with very few points of rising ground and therefo re the waters when pouring from the openings where the jetties had been spread over these flat lands.Therefore it was this condition exactly which favored the enemy into creating one of the worst of all disasters on record.The origin of the flood however was not fully settled.The levees of the Aronburgs un already holding more water than it could hardly stand had been blown in en by the enemy but even this did not in general cause the flood to be of such awful magnitude.Either enemy engineers bursted levees of other rivers or the rise of the flood make may have affected the dams of other rivers and thus caused the flood to spread.The rivers literally emptied themselves over nearly four hundred and fifty miles of low country lands.so here were all the terrible results of the inundation, the tremendous rush of waters, the wild thrashing seas of wreckage, the terrible death list, the destruction of cities and towns, the inundation of towns by the s ore score and thne drowning waters that seemed to be an ocean pouring over the nation ..No disaster in all the world pre sents the terri terrors that accomp n accompany the floods.The big fires especially of forests are dreadful enough but it consumes more property than lives and those forwarned in time of the approach of a fire storm can easily escape.Storms of any kind have no such long d drawn out horrors as this flood did even though the floods climax was reached in ten days.The flood had grown and grown and when it reached its worse nothing could with stand it.It was this terrible emptying of the rivers that so nearly had taken Dorothy Gale, Angelinia Agathia and scores of other places out of the story.The great flood in the Helendale Country In 1912 frightened the city.The fate of Henrietta and scores of towns then and the great loss of lives then and unaccountable amount of damage had kept Dorothy Gale city and Angelinia Agathia uneasy ever since.It was just as if the great

Mic-Whirthian sea had come in over the country causeing this great death and destruction drama.Even now at many points the flood though it left the cities was no lower, the raging fury of the flood all over the country for three hundred miles was as boundless as before, smoke of great forest fires still raging elsewhere over scores of miles of forests still hung in the skies and over the landscapes.What was this war coming to.Utter ruin of Nat ional property.What good it would do for Glandelinia!'

Heidi junction was a great city for its size.It was one of the greatest River ports in the world.It could send its trade down other rivers.It had in its possession many river and railroad bridges great wharfs and river steamers.It had great market houses of all kinds was a bigger city than Henrietta double size, had great big grain elevators by the score.
It was also a cotton commerce city and for mero an merchandise.It had IO,000 great mills, one thousand immense works and other fr factories, it had its powerful eletric and water works and swe sewers and artesian waters in big mains.For southern Calverini a it was a great bui business center.The Calverinian government had spent I6,200,000 dollars dor for the deepening harbors of the river and when the great export trade from Heidi Junction city approached the mark of $300,000,000 annually.and to think of it this was now the city of Heidi junction almost w iped off the map with all its commerce ruined.
The flo d came upon Heidi junction without app rent warning as it was closest to its first sudden outbreak.The survivors of the flood who had witnessed it approached said it seemed as if the very sea had rose up with the sky and approached a monsterous tidal wave an immeasureable fold of green water moving swifter than a cloud shadow persuadeby sun light.As it approached it roared and bellowed like thun e thunder.It even looked more formidable because of the terrible wreckage it was hurling along before it trees and everything tons of gravel.houses and timbers. It came foaming down upon the city like the tidal wave at Lisbon.The strongest houses rocked and windows went out.Thousands of the weaker ones with their screaming occupants within floated away.Trees were borne down by the flood in perfect parks.And still the force of the flood grew stronger and its roar louder and more horrible with every passing hour.so the flood Passed tearing away thousands of houses per hour, hurling wreckage about and a hundredfeet in air from the force of ite eddies and whirlpools, heaping the water like a storm tossed oceanagainst the land, upturning miles upon miles of woods.Vast plains and meadows above river level become seas, all rivers become oceans, and the wooded country changed to roaring wastes of water.Every city not too much injured by the flood tremen trembled at the pressure.All small lakes strove to burst their very boundaries.Everythi ng went before it.
Yet now what will be the citys future and the future of others.In rebuilding the city of Heidi it was suggested it would take years.However the city may decide it will have to make up its own future.To rebuild it willcost millions.The city it is feared will never grow as it had grown it could never again be the home of people whose fortunres were tired up in the places.Hundreds who could were leaving the city as a place of residence for good, thousandupon thousands had been drownedand kille s there and cremated in the sands and ground and in the streets or buried in the river' Therefore such a death rate of a big town had almost drove the city of Heidi Junction off the map.Ten thousand surviving out of more than a hundred thousand must surely have its influence upon the living.
Heidi's destruction and the destruction of so many towns had been predicted with a tartling accuracy.Other towns had been in danger about nearly a hundred too many to name here.The first shock of the flood was most terrible with the greatest loss of life of any disaster.Even glorianna a city suffered severely from the effect of the flood.All the streets suffered in various degrees in proportions of their formation and heights.The eresult however was disasterous and was a grand horror.The lowest part of the city suffered very severely by the engroaching waves and building property was damaged.however glorianna had only the floods rebound. .vhamberlane was half submerged, and other places u incli including Topsy and rosa suffered severely, two towns near it were wiped out, Lucillis Ricksen. city suffered as severely as Glorianna but not disasteriously, Mic-Hollester city suffered in its lowe r sections, its larger buildings were injured in the lower sections and its grand city hall was.demo lished. At Ophelia city the damah damage was great.Aldon town and Mayenfield was totally destroyed and the rising waters affected Evangaline St Claire, Madge Evans city, Jennie gunner especially the latter its lower sections being entirely submerged.It big postoffic was flooded and all its water margins suffered..The outskirts of rna Francis Atlanta was in a dangerous condition and the lower parts was fac facing partial or total destruction. San Pedro city was entirely submerged and lost, Algronon city was severely inju red, Mombi was half submerged and Betsy bobbin suffered still more severely while trot town was devastated.It ma may have seemed pretty rash for any oneto have predicted the coming of the flood but it was.

It was predicted by one of the Gemini.It ran as follows;
''The enemy wil blow up river dikes and great flood will ensue at some time between june the first and the fifteenth. It will be one of the worst disasters of the war and extend over one quarter of the country i of Calverinia.Starting from the vinicity of Aronburgs run it will extend over hundreds of miles of country and will have worst effects than the mightiest of all tidal waves.It will strike Angelinia Agathia and severely injure Dorothy Gale.All cities in that region will be flooded.''
The prediction came true.
It was also said by many that the floodwould resume again because the levees were bursted, and not repaired and the rivers were still recieving more water than usual.
Through the fearful and extensive flood wrecked its vengeance upon x so many of the fair cities and towns of Calverinia and vented its awful wrath upon the unoffending population of the regions affected by it, probable of the whole flood the awful disaster at Heidi junct Junction and Jessica was the most frightful calamity probably of the whole war.
Jessica city itself was almost wiped out, all portions of the regions around Heidi Junction was literally wiped from the face of the world as well as over three quarters of.Heidi junction city the suddeness of the flood here beinglike that of Johnstown and precluded the escape of any one unfortunate enough to be in its awful path.
Unlike the catastrpoh catastrophe at other points of the flood the floodpoured upon Heidi junction and Jessica cities without the slightest warning and the slaughterwas over within the space of ten orvfiteen minutes.The majority of the victims were drowned or dashed topieces before they had even the slightestthe to realise the horror of it all.At other sections of the city the people knew for hours before the angry waters submerged the city and tore the business and other buildings topieces what their awful fate was to be.Hour after hour day after day they had looked death and all other horrors in t the face suffering all the unx unspeakable horrors dire uncertainity could not infliot their knowledge that they were absolutely power less and far eyonf beyond the reach of aid adding fearfully to their agonies. Death was however more mercilful to the people of Jessica, but he was cruel to his pret prey at Heidi Junction and other pla es and indeed seemed to deligh in the tortures he was so sure enabled to impose before he then placed his icyhand upon them and bade them come.
Perhaps the only parapparallel in the history of this most awful flood ever dew r described was the rise of the flood in the vinicity of Henrie tta n and other places..The frightened people of these a cities could see the flood waters bearing down upon their devoted pla es but even then many of them were mercifully stifled bythe sudden rise of the flood.They did not like at other points of the disaster stand for hours and days with the blackness of each suddeeding night around them listening to the awful roar ofthe flood waters and hear their death knell sounded before they were compelled to undergo the actual pain and horror of an awful death, they were caught as they sought safty in flight and sti stricken down while endeavoring to get beyond the reach of the awful sickle of the grim reaper they could move and act in accordiance with their sudden impulses which prom pted those who were outside to make a quick flight for life and they succumbed only after a most desperate struggle.
It was different at Heidi junction and many other cities and towns that were so horribly demolished.The men women and children who were not instantly swept to their deaths were not permitted even the small but precious boon of falling while battling with the horrible flood, they were caught and imprisoned even as those who were done to death in the frightful Inquisition and on the way to execution were it might be said compelled to bear the very crosses upon which they were to be impaled.There is no record not even that like Galveston ov of such a long drawn out agony as that which the devoted people of Heidi jun otion and other places enduring during the long period of three weeks or more and the final imposition of the death penalty.The Ten disasters equally to that of the Johnstown flood raged at once, n and a hundred with even a more horrible scene as Galveston raged at some points of the flood for nearly a month.Thousands may hundreds of thousands of fathers saw thwir wives and babes and little children drushed by the windrows of wreckage flung aloft and around by the fury of the speeding torrent or drowned in the swiftly running current, just as many unfortunate wives saw their husbands and children torn quickly from them or drowned like rats in traps in the flooded houses or swept from their sight forewever children even saw their parents disappear in the murkey turbid waters of the most awful flood of all desxription.Hundreds of thousands of men a day saw the dead faces of their many loved ones they would have denied it a full joy to save as they were swiftly borne along upon the bosom of the rushing waters or jammed among the floating debris.Scores of thousands may hundreds of thousands of meninvited t otal destruction in their dest desperate tenacious efforts of rsecue only to realize how weak and utterly futile was their strength in compurison to the most irrestible power of the enraged flood elements.

Men died in numbers seemingly as thick as stars because they could nd save those they had so cherished and heretofor protected, and went down in despair despair and gloom.At the lowest sections of the city of Heidi junction the re e released waters tore their way through the whole region beyond the valley of the Mary Mic-Allister Run with the irrestible rush and speed a of a giant avalanch of water from the ocean and e f enfolded the victims in waves of roaring waters, the inh h inhabt the peo l people of the city who did not escape were in the twinkling of an eye borne from the sunshine of life to the glom of the valley of the shadow of death, they surely may have felt a momentary terror before they succumbed but it was all over in a single instent.But at the higher streets of the desolished city the condi condemned for days and black nights si simply waited in dreadful horror the inevitable they clung desperately to the brief remaining supports and died as it seemed a hundred thousand deaths before death generally claimed them, they stood for weeks upon the very brink of eternity and cried in vain for the succor they well knew knew would not come, they prayed to god for mercy, but it apparently was sure without the slightest doubt there was none whatever. When the waters of the flood roared upon Heidi jun ction the people who had the slightest chance fled to the highest places of the beautiful little city and saw the rushing flood creeping higher and higher every half hour untill it over came them.Although it was not untill the darkness of many succeeding nights had long since settled upon them they had known in the start that the city of Heidi junction was totally doomed.The dreadful vflood would not permit them to escape wh ever but even sundered all kinds of communication with other poertions portions of the land and then laughed at their puny efforts at preser vation.

.The death roster in and around Heidi junction was said to be nearly three hundred thousand, at Jessicia City the known number of victims was far less than four hundred thousand.Many died however at Heidi Junction of whom nothing was ever heard and there were possibly many thousan thousands engulfed in the onrushing flood which all but des troyed the city but in all probabilities are that four hundred thousand died at Jessicia City and in the immediate vinicity.Bodies were found and washed up by the flood at many strange and startling places by the thousands for days and days after the frightful disaster and how many were burned and buried hastily or sunk into the rivers no accurate esti mate wasever made.Heidi junction was a city of over I,000,000 teeming with the great industry of manufacturing and fishing town.With not even a warning shout to even apprise the inhabatants the flood broke and sweeping over the Mic-Allister Run irver itself filled it instantly to a raging sea bursted all its levees and dikes and engulfed the city and the make majority of its inhabatants before they even knew of the danger. What was left of the big city of Heidi Junction was a sea of debris shattered buildings and parks of dead when the dreadful deluge deluge subsided.

Jessicia city had nearly seven hundred thousand people and had within its gate thousands of strangers and forien gers and the fa ct that scores of thousands of telegrams of inquiry day after day from all parts of Abbieannia poured into the offices of the royal Buildings at Angelinia Agathia indicated that myriads were killed of whom the best of the searchers knew nothing.Heidi junction gave a total death list of six hundred and fifty thousand and the destruction of eighty millions of dollars worth of railroad propert y and three hundred million dollars in building property.Therefore the flood which had been so immeasureable in its force and fury blotted out over three quarters of the city of Heidi junction.Even the force of the tornado of flood waters destroyed all of the finest buildings in the city that had been given the grand prize as the finest and most beautiful of all in the world.It fairly leveled the city to the ground.It toos tossed thousands of the biggest railroad locomotives and the vea heaviest pullman steel cars about as if they were chaff and drushed the greatest bridge in the world crossing the Aronburgs run at the point beyond Hedi Heidi junction.Of all cities of its size Heidi Junction surpassed all in the nature of its frightful calamity.Scores of hundreds of insane people still there are being cared for their reason having been overthrown by their gra gre t suffering.This was one of the sad saddest features of the shocking visitation that was so qi qi wickedly and ruthlessly caused by the Glandelinians.These poor creatures first deprived of home property, family and friends were now living lrg legacies of the most stu e stupendous disaster that any one could have ever thought of writing in any volume of historical books. The sights of the weeping children, brought into cities and towns far north for refuge, the condition of older men, and all the sad scenes caused by the flood caused such a sensation among men and young lads who witnessed it all that they forwith rushed to all army houses and immediately inlisted for the army.The whole country was enraged over the whole thing.Emperor ivian recieved thousands of letters demanding the ones responsible be put to death without trial

PART TWO OF CHAPTER EIGHTY THREE.

A FAIR DESCRIPTION OF HOW HEIDI JUNCTION WAS OVERWHELMED BY THE DREADFUL FLOOD. ONE OF THE MOST TERRIBLE HAPPENINGS IN THE WAR. HOW MANY BODIES WERE FOUND. EVERYTHING OVER IN FIFTEEN MINUTES. HOW MANY OF THE SURVIVORS OF THE BEA T BEAUTIFUL BEAUTIFUL CITY WERE CRAZED BY THEIR AWFUL SUFFERINGS. HEIDI JUNCTION THE CENTER OF THE AWFUL DISASTER. THE SEA OF WRECKAGE WHERE HUNDREDS OF THOUSANDS LOST THEIR LIVES. THE DREADFUL RUSH OF THE WAVE OF DESTRUCTION.
SOME OF THE WORST AND SADDEST HORRORS OF THE DISASTER.
THE SITUATION TWO WEEKS AFTER.

ON that fatal June the first the big dikes and walls of the great Aronburgs Run river which were made to confine the waters of the Aronburgs run in flood time were blown asunder by the enemy and therefore the greatest force of all the flood with a roar heard for twentymiles rushed fiercely at a sixty mile an hour velocity down and through the beautiful MicAllister Run River valley tward Headwic k Cllan Street and straight for Heidi Junction and the Mic-Allister Run River though large and deep was unable to hold its greatly increased se d sea of waters and therfore became a dreadful raging sea.The resistless flood first stricking the city of Jessicia tore away thousands of buildings away swept everything before it and this ernor s ernormous avalanch of wreckage was hurled tward the doomed city of Heidi Junction.The lines of the other water courses known as the Callilies run and the Mic-Allister r iver were completely obliteratedby tyi this roaring ocean of foam and wreckage and im e immediately the whole country all around and befr before Heidi junction became like a sea tossed by a terrible cyclone.The great force of the torrent roaring like canno h leveled everything before it crushing all from frame Houses like mere eggshellsand destroying the most massivo of all the structures and within fifteen or twent minutes two hundred and thirty five thousand persons perished in the lower portions of the city a hundred million dollars worth of property was totally wiped out and tens of thousands of survivors rendered homeless all because the wicked Glandelinian engineers at the orders of general Manley and other Glandelinian generals bursted the dikes of the dreaded Aronburgs Run river and when it was already too full of water to even prevent itself from slightly overflowing at many other points.Hundreds of thousands of the most beautiful and strungest business houses, and twice as many great rs residences and manisons were destroyed, and less than nine or ten thousand of the structure composing a city nearly as big as Chicago Ill. were left standing but wrecked, completely paralysis followed throughout thisxsection because aid could not reach the survivors scores of thousands of the survivors were totally crazed by their fright losses and suffering and would never regain their reason, many of the crazed in their maddened minds acted like vandals and looted the bodies of their own dearest friends untill other citizens took them in hand and placed them under charge the impoverished sufferers were cared for by other survivors and all relief that should have been pouring in from everywhere in the shape of money and carloads of supplies of all sorts could not reach the place because the flood made everything impassable even when it h had subsided from the city itself and horror upon horror was adding to the whole calmity.

The Aronburge Run River at its widest widest is about two and one half miles wide, three hundred and twenty miles in length and in some places two hundred feet deep and is located at the southern portion of Calverinia and runs through the States of Angeline vine, Helendale and Carbondaler. At flood time its waters were always held successfully within its bounds by hude river dams and dikes, or levees and jetties some being thirty to sixty feet high and as long as a top of ten thousand yards to several hundred miles. At the point where the outburst of the flood occured, the river is its widest. without these dikes and levees it would have been a most terrible menance to all towns and villiages in its valley but all engineers of the Abbieannian governments had stated after inspecting the levees and dikes twice every months that nothing short ofa terrible earthquake or destruction by explosions could cause any disasterous floods. And this waw true. But Heidi junctions and Jessicias geographical situation was always one that would have rendered them peculiarly liable to the most terrible loss of life in the event of such calamities as already occured. Heidi junction is however a large and most magnificent city bu build on the high flats of the great Marie Mic-Allister Run river which finally finds its way into the great Mic-Hollester Run. On one side of the Heidi city flows also the great Evangeline St Claire. And therefore the awful results of the fierce flood caused by the sudden outpor u cup outpourings of the reservioirs of the Aronburge run, together wit its s e speed and of the way of swelling the Evangeline St Claire and the Mic-Allister Rivers to a raging ocean was supposed to be the cause of such a sudden submersion of the city of Heidi and the drowning of nearly over three quarters of its great number of citizens and of the devastation of twenty eight miles or more of the big Mic-Hollester woods. The water swept over these two streams like an advancing tidal wave from the ocean carrying before it even the most formidable material that obstructed its onward rush upon the city. Heidi Junction was the full center of the awful disaster and was situated on the main line of the A bbieannia Bondinia and Calverina Railroad. It was the main headquarters of the great Mic-Hollester and Pandora Railroad properties and of twenty immense ten million dollar iron works buildings, and tens of thousands of other im ense factories and mills. Each mill was said to employ nearly ten thousand to six thousand Union and other workers. M n Many of the Gemini seeing the floods approach had tried to signal warning to the city as early as four oclock in the morning lut the flood was too swift and no one knew of the terrible torrent untill the flood swept the houses off in thousands from their foundations and went through the streets in torrents nearly fourty feet in dep h depth. Escape from the torrent in the lower sections of the city was utterly i possible. The Famious Aronburge Limited lost two great trains at this place.

Four miles belowne of the Mic-Allister Run Levees lay the north section of Heidi junction and this part contained about one hundred and twenty two thousand inn inhabatants. This section even up to now has not been heard from and it was is belie ed that all of it has been swept away. Another mile further down on the same river which as I said before runs parallel with the main line of the Abbieannia, Bondinia, and Calverine Railroad was the part of the city where stood the richest and most magnificent buildings any person could have ever lookedupon. It h h had eighty thousand millionares all of these buildings bing being on a flat and very close to the river and in direct path of the flood. Only two of these fine and man magnificent structures escaped...

Six miles and three quarters further north was the main downtown section of the great city and here alonr alone there was a possibility of the widly spreading of the fierce flood and the breaking of its force enough to make a grander and greater horror, and that was to drown and kill the inhabatants at thispoint more slowly. Here the strongest and biggest building; buildings of the city stood and everything was wholly devastate. In this point were the many immense factories, the ten great iron works and the Mic-Hollester Steel and Coke company which had twenty five million dollars invested in the plant. These were completely demolished and swept away. The great and unaccounable da dama ge to so fair a city as Jeldi Heidi Junctipn as those who witnessed it declared was more due to the fierce back and forward movements and xswift rebounds of the flood after it swept upon the city and through it. The immense sixty foot wave of water advancing sixty miles an hour spread against the stream of Marie Mic-Allister run and paz passed clear over it to a depth of thirty and fourty feet and even more in some places. An immense lumber boom containing ten miles of lum ber and logs was swept and torne loose by the force of the flood and the rush of the flood further on and down stream coming in contact with the other spreading wave increased the extent of the disaster here than in any other section of the flood. Yet it was constantly expressed after the flood was over that so many lives probably would never have been lost had the people of Heidi run ction not believed from their awful experiences with former floods of natural circumnce curcumstances that if the enemy did make one of their own accord there would be no further danger beyond the fil ing of basements andcellars or the over flow of rivers as they recieved the flood tide. After rushing from the bursted Dams of the Aronburge Run Riverthe pressure of the great f od flood was so great and irrestible that it forced the big river to rush its waters in an another direction and thus redoubled the disaster here. By the terrible results of the flood allaround Heidi Junction as far as Jessicia and Henrietta all communication by rail and even wire was cut off, and the places could not as yet even be reached by strong boats? Of the loss of lives at Heidi Junction the a exact number of victims can and never will be known. Bodies and wreckage from that i ll fated city were found as far as Pandora and Angelinia Agathia which is in all probabilities were carried to that thoseplaces from Heidi Junction and its subburbs. The terrible holocaat outside the city among the mass of floating and water jammed trees and wreckage below Heidi junction where scores upon scores of thousands of men women and children were crushed to death or drowned, and even those who were saved from buring to death caused the most terribleloss of life.

At the worse force of the flood all was over in about fifteen minutes. The flood swept earth, whole forests of immense trees, and cities and towns and humane bei gs before it and so great was the flood that it desposited the vast debris flows even into the streets of bigger cities not totally damaged b by the flood and at the outskirts of these cities the very force of the wreckage leveled all before it but it however finally formed impassable barriers to the Passage of everything except the vast agent of total destruction the dreadful spreading flood which overflowed it and passed o on to spread further and further over hundreds of miles of countryside.

One of the most terrible sights of this gigantic flood was the results of the flood when it swept through a large portion of the famious Mic-Hollester woods. Thus as it roared on the flood became wedged with trees and debris of all kinds and this is one of the incidents of the flood disaster that brought the nations entire attention. The story of the horrors of that sea of broken and shattered trees and floating debris cannot be fully told. None of the rescuers and relief parties could even look at the scene without a shock to his sensibilities. Even so tanglod and unyeilding was the mass even as it floated on the rushing waters that not even high explosives and T.N.T. had little effect upon it. The most deplorable effect however at this point was the fact that many of the workers and rescuers had to dismember many of the bodieswedged in the masses of wreckage in the ruthless flood.

Even now when most of the flood had receded and the rescuers were working in their efforts to drag the dead from the wreckage of the city the flood was still sweeping through the lower section of the city. The main force of the flood was due also it was said by the terrible torrents of the wreckage borne along by the waters. The advancing seas and windrows of wreckage leveled w everythingbeofebefore it and going on unchecked. Had the advancing tide of wreckage stayed near Heidi junction in bigger windrows than it did the unfortunate city might have been spared much of its horror. At the beginning of the flood there had been hundreds of dead and dying, and hundreds nay thousands of homes had already been swept away but the dead could only be counted by donses per day and not yet by the hundreds of thousands that was yet to come. Only at the south western direction of the city the wreckage hemmed in big trees and forests stayed without moving any further and the trees failing to give way formed an impenetrable barrier. Had this happened also at other sections of the ci country around the southern portion of the city as well asthe east the flood would have done no more damage than when it had first started. In the lower section of the city the frightened people had already moved to the second and third floors of their homes and hoped that the awful flood might subside. However the flood even then was so a ugly and so fierce that there was not even the slightest chance whateves of getting away and indeed had they all known what was in store for them the contemplation of their dreadful fate would have been enough to make them raving maniacs.Only a few hours had elapsed from the time of the formation of this section of the wreckage wall when the fullforce of the dreadful flood rushed down upon them like as if the ocean had suddenly claimed its own.Part of the wall of wreckage also gave way and the immense body of water loaded with swirling wreckage and immense trees as battering rams was let loose in all its fury to beging the total work of destruction.Indeed this towering lake of rushing water so heavily loaded with floating wreckage rushed upon the city of Heidi junction with an irresistible force that simply carried all before it.Had the wall of debris even chicked partially this great sea of water a portion of Heidi junxtion might have been saved.The rampart of debris however though three miles long and thirty feet wide could not check the torrent, it also fell and swirled away before it gradually like a big melting snowdrift and at once nearly all of the houses of the lower section of the city were lifted and tow torn swiftly from their foundationsxand hurled against the other wreckage coming from another direction.One portion of the flood struck the levee of the Mic Allister run near Heidi's Point and as this levee was nevet seventy feet in height it however temporarily checked the torrent in this location and this therefore backed a greater wall of water with redoubled force into the town and indeed as there had to be an outlet somewhere else the waters poured u over the river itself and finally increasing in might evenodemolished this immense wall ofearth and stones and overflowed the river at once.Again and again the waves of the flood loaded with wreckage hurled itself through the city and each wave carried with it as many houses as were torn away, also furniture and all the human beings.Other dikes of the river still stood firm before the other portion of the torrent but the big railroad bridge of the Mic-Hollester and Pandora Railroad valued at three million dolars gave way and this also tore ap art one section of a big jettie.Through this new outlet the water torrent was diverted in the direction of the main portion of the city and the best of buildings were then engulfed and immediately laid low.All the people in that portions also were swept away into the seething torrents.

Then came night and darkness added with redoubled tenseness to the awful terror of the situation.Some of the highest wreckage floating down on the immense current, and even buildings with their tops and roofs above thewater were seen afire to make the awful flood calamity all the more appalling.Hundreds of floating buildings were aflame. The inmates had but few chances of any escape.And just how many of the people were imprisoned in the seas of floating wreckage could never be estimated because two quarters of the bodies were never recovered, but the number found half cut to pieces and badly mangled was estimated at between one million and two million.Some wreckage even while though floating on the hide tide of the flood was at some points piled to a height of thirty and fifty feet and some of these windrows of wreckage was afire on the top.Shrieks and prayers and awful sounds from the unhappy being imprisoned in these seas of wreckage pierced the air and even came crise terrible to hear from floating houses but little could be done. Men women and children by thousands were seen ev either held amidst the wreckage or were wedged down by timers, some were even caught in the windrows of floating burning wreckage and were compelled to watch with the most indescribable and shocking agony and terror the fames creep slowly toward them untill the very heat scorched their faces, and then were slowly roasted to death.There were many seen in the flood said the floating wreckage who were held fast in the swimming wreck by an arm or a leg or by their head.Those who could have worked like demons to save the unfortunates from the flood but nothing could be done.

Meanwhile Hi Heidi Junction had been almost wiped from the map, three quarters or over of the city having been swept completely away, and its best buildings were things of the a past.Countless numbers of people had been drowned or killed in their homes, scores of thousands were swept away in their dwellings and met death in the seas of debris that was swirled and dashed madly about on the surface of the rushing flood countless numbers o were burned on the floating fire rafts and the many thousands who sought safty on the dift wood were also overwhelmed by the flood or washed to death against the obstructions.The countless instandes of great heroism and self sacrifice as was seen here were never in the world excelled, perhaps not equalled on battle fields or other calamities.Men rather than save themselves alone died nobly with their families and even mothers willingly gave up their very lives rather than abandon their children.

Some rescue work near Heidi junction was attened on the outer edge of the flood where the flood waters was not so swift.Soldiers did the rescue work.One of the soldiers a captian saw an old man and a little black haired girl floating down the torrent on a big tree trunk with agonized frightened faces and streaming hair.The officer plunged into the torrent and brought the old man and the little girl saftly to the shore.Scarcely had he did this when what appeared to be the upper story of a big wooden house swiftly floated by on which was an old woman and her three children and her husband were seen.The officer and some of his men plunged in this time and succeeded in saving the woman and hu bud husband and children.Two hundred lives were saved by others further down.

At the worst flooded part of Heidi junction a man woman and two children were seen floating swiftly like a steam ship in a lot of drift.Soon the mass of debris began to part and by desperate efforts the poor husband and father succeeded in getting his wife and children on a big floating fir tree.Just then the tree rushed under a portion of the wrecked Aronburgs Railroad bridge and some ropes were thrown out by people on it.One of the ropes fell on the mans shoulder.However he saw at a glance from the swift ness of the current that he alone would only be saved that he could not save his dead ones and therefore he quickly threw the means of safty to one side and gripped in his arms those who were dear to him.A moment later the tree struck a floating house on whose roof top and in the attac were many screaming terrified people.From the shock of the collosion the house turned q completely over and in a second not only those in the house but the four persons on the tree were in the seething roaring wave waters all being carried to their death.

The well known boy scout hero in this story Walter Heidi Starring also distinguished himself by his own bravery.He was a passenger on the Aronburgs Limited Train No. Ten which on account of the flood had to turn back at Pandora Hollow near Heidi junction but close to Aberdeene Heights.As the train slowly passed a point where the roaring tossing seas of water and wreckage were full of struggling persons a young woman and a little child floated in near the shore of the flood.The train was stopped as all the men passengers wished to do what they could at rescue work and Starring was the first to undress jump into the water and in two trips save both mother and the little boy.The special train had pulled in as far as this hollow and thetrainmen were notified that further progress in any direction southward was utterly impossible.The great st greatest excitement pre prevailed at this place for the flood was so extensive that you could not see the other side, water and rushing wreckage just seemed to meet the horizon like the sea, and immense parties of citizens and citizens and soldiers and women and children from many places not touched by the flood were all the time endeavoring to save as many of the poor unfortunates as it was possible that were being hurled to eternity on the rushing torrent.Many houses were floating down and clinging to the procession of houses and debris were men women and children shrieking horridly for aid.A large number of the passengers at once gathered on the edge of the flood and they were reinforced by large numbers from other places.As many as could brought numbers of very long ropes as and these were thrown as far as they would reach into the boiling rushing waters as persons drifted by in the effort to save some of the poor beings.For an hour and a half further efforts was futile the flood rose higher and drove the rescuers further back and at last when the rescuers were about giving up all hope whatever a little ten year old girl astride a si g single door managed to catch hold of one of the long ropes.He g b he Shhe caught it under her ar ms and fasted it around her wasit and as she was pulled from the raft she was plunged into the water and while being drawn in tward shore was struck violently time and again by the passing wreckage but managed to keep her hold and was successfully pulled on to the shore amid the cheers of the rest.It was Starring again who saved her.The little girls name was Jennie Jennie Garney.The little girl was taken to the town of Hedda and cared for in a hospital as she had been badly bruised while in the water by the wreckage.As far as can be written here her story of her experience in the frg frightful calamity is as follows:

"I really live in Angelinia Agathia city but at the time the flood broke out I was with my father mother and sisters at my grandfaters house at Heidi junction city.In the house at the time were also grandmother her four children and others including my father, mother and myself.Shortly after three oclock in the afternoon we were startled the by the roar of rushing waters and screams of people in the streets.Wondering what had happened we looked out the very door and saw thousands of persons running and in the distance approachi ng us was a high green wall of water.Thinking that the wou waters would not rise any higher thanvtwenty feet father told us not to mind but soon we saw whole regiments of houses being swe t away at once and then we immediately ran to the third floor above.The house was four stories a big four story wooden structure and at last we were forced to the top story.In my fright I jumped on a big trunk in the attic.I screamed and prayed .I had ardent hopes the waters would not reach the top of the building but the waters kept rising every second and the big tr unk was soo soon afloat.Gradually the water poured in the attic window and the trunk was gradually lifted up.I felt stifled also for the air in the attic grew very close and I could feel a sensation as if being on the deck or in the hold of a moving ship and believed the very house was moving.Still the trunk kept rising and threatened to press the ceili ng while I felt a motion that told the house was moving swiftly now and outside there was a terrible confusion of sounds.At last I managed to break a hole in the ceiling and then suddenly I found myself onthe roof and was being carried down with the swift current of the flood.Other houses would at times swing upon mine and crash against it with a terrific jolt and after a little while fon one of these collisions the house began to a part and at first I was afraid I was going to be drowned but then another house came with a single roof and I managed to crawl on it and floated down untill I was nearly dead with cold and fatigue.Then the house turned over and how I managed to save myself I do not know but I secured a big floating door and got i on this and from which i I was finally rescued.After I was freed from my Grandfathers house I did not see my parents of brothers and sisters.My poor grandfather and grand mother were found dead on a floating tree.The others were also found drowned.The scenes of the flood I witnessed before being rescued was terrible beyond describing.Brigades of live bodies and corpses were floating down amid the swirling r wreckage and with me and away from me.I was horrified every time I would hear the drowning victims shriek and yell or pray and blaspheme and thenI would see them disappear.The current of the flood pulled my door in tward the shore side of the flood wwhere all along the line were thousands of the rescuers who were trying most desperately to sa e us but they could do nothing whatever and only a few of us were caught."""""

This little girls story was but only one incident and therefore showed what happened to one of many families in the destroyed city.No one could have known what happened to the many scores of thousands who were in the main path of the rushing sea of waters.....It was impossible on account of the extent of the flood and its devast ating fury even many days after it subsided from the bigger cities to get anything in the way of news save the slightest meagre details.

One of many of the horrified eye witnesses at Heidi junction told stories of the most unparalled horror in the world which occured at the lower Doneyard bridge that still stood across Mayenfield street in the centre of the city itself.Persons of every kind were frequently seen coming down the torrent of water some on parts of floors others on smallhouse tops, droos, furniture, and everything that they could drift on.At one of the upper bridges which still as yet survived the flood a long d rope was thrown down to one of them.This the man on a raft failed to catch.Between the two remaining bridges this man was seen by others to point tward another raft coming down the current in on which were a woman and three little girls.At the upper bridge a rope had also been thrown them but they had not succeeded in grasping it.Down came the raft on which were the woman and children with a headlong rush.The brave woman was standing with her arms around her threee children.As they swept under the second bridge she reache u y up and seized the rope.Ina few moments she was jerked most violently away from her three little girls who had failed to secure a hold on the life line themselves.Seeing that they could not be rescued the woman rather than abandon her children to their fate quickly dropped the rope and therefore let herself down upon the raft which had floated on down.Finally the current washed the frail craft out of the city and tward the maze of floating trees near the flooded Mic-Allister dam.The young woman was able therefore to seize the branch of one of the trees. After a moment she managed to aidthe three ch ldren children to get upon up into the tree while she herself held on with her hands and rested her feet on a good pile of driftwood which was rapidly collecting near her. Large piebes of floating debris struck the drift and swept it away.The poor woma n then hung with her body in the rushing water which almost swept her from the tree but another pile of drift soon collected and before the torrent pulled her from the tree she was enabled to secure another footing.Then up near the outskirts of the city there was a sudden crash as a section of houses were swept away at once and fofloated down with the flood and one of this swdtly moving houses came right up at the trees and all four by superhuman efforts managed to secure footing on its roof and therefore later all were saved just opposite the half submerged town of Mic-Allister.

Again a woman and her children were seen to pass under the bridge in the centre of Heidi junction clinging to the long roof of a floating wood house.Ropes were lowered to her and her children and all three were saved and brought into the top fluor of the highest building that seemed to with stand the flood with evident success.The surviving residents thronging on these firm bridges succeeded in rescueing rescueing many people from the water most of these being women and children and a number of old men.One man who always professed to be an excellent swim ming managed to get out of the torrent unaided.A beautiful little girl passed under the first bridge just before dark when the flood wseat its worse.She was lying on the part ofa floor of some house but she had her hands clasped as if in prayer.Every effort for a while to save her proved futile and the sad ap earance of the little waif brought tears to many eyes.The craft was taken down tward the second bridge where somehow it grounded against a big drift which for half an hour failed to move and finally she was rescued.

All night long the crowds stood on these two bridges and on the house tops of the bigger structures.The water rushed pat past with a deafening roar carrying with it in perfect processions whole houses, parts of houses, furniture, wreckage of a l description dead bodies and many trees.The flood was then started to slowly recede and after it had lasted three more days no more living persons were being carried past. When the great rushing sea of death swept so suddenly through Heidi Junction all the people in the lower portions as well as in the highest or portions of the city who had even the slightest chance to escape ran in confusion hither and thiter.No doubt they did not and could not have any idea whatever where they were really going for a crest of waters as high as a four story building was roaring down upon them through the Mic-Allis Mic Allester Run Valley and that they must get out of its way. Many in their terror and wildest confusion as well as panic even dived into the basements and cellars of their houses.though this was of course certain death.Others who had the chance to do so managed to get up on the roofs of their houses and clambered over adjoining roofs of bigger and higher structures and therefore did reach places of safty.But the ma jority did make for the low foot hills and of the people who rushed for these hills the waters caught all of them in its mad rush as it even inundated these low foot hills.There had been no escape this way.Thousands of others clung to trees and roots a d andpieces of debris which had lodged near the banks for the time being and either managed to save themselves or were rescued by others.

The fatal wreckage floe as it was called which lodged near the city but north of it and which wrecked such awful destruction to forests was described by a correspondent in this way:

The Dike of the Mic-Allister gun whose strange and successful resistance of the mighty torrent was the matter of so much talk throughout the nation was a noble levee or jettee just completed the year before, it being over sixty five feet wide on top, seventy two feet high above the water line and consisting of all kinds of gravel earth, stone and sand bags and every thing that is to make a dike so strong as to even resist a tidal wave from the oceans.

Despite the insane force of the flood it still remains wholly uninjured but it is nevertheless badly smalled on all sides byblows from the torrent of wreckages but it is said that the reason it remained i uninjured was not to its strength but probably to the sole accident of its sut situation and position.Had the torrent struck it properly it would also have swept this dike away as if it had been a snow bank leaving even not a single makr of it being there but it was paralled with the floods current which hence enabled to resist it.This dike alone was responsible for the terrible destructi on of Heidi junction which allowed or caused the flood after roaring raginst the dike to rebound upon the city like an immense tidal wave breaking from a rocky shoreline and the waters at the time had gathered inextricable masses of wreckage of every description with the force of probably of scores of thousands of tons moving at nearly sixty five miles an hour.

The spoils of the flood consisted of every tree of the gigantic Mic-Hollester woods the flood had torn away in its mad course including whole parks of the largest trees ever known, all of which were stripped of their very bark and leaves and small as well as many large limbs all at once, all the houses of every one of the cities and towns wholly carried away or devastatd devastated including the houses of Delight's junction, all the human beings and all the different kinds of animals that were in barns stables and houses and on the many farms including thousands of cows, scores of thousands of goats, sheep hogs, steers, wild bulls, reindeers, myriads of wolves and deer from the forests, cats dogs and rats that were in the devastated towns, nearly ten thousand miles of telegraph wire that was on many strong poles in use along the right of way of the many railroad lines, and many times more than this elsewhere, perhaps just as many miles of railroad track, and track material rails and all, II,000 big locomotives, five hundred switch engines, thousands upo nthousan thousands upon thousands of fright cars, thousands of passengers all on sidings in the various towns and cities ,pig iron, brick stone, more boilers than you can count in a year, nearly fifty thousand steam and donkey engines heavy machinery, nearly three million wagons, and every spoil of every one of the big towns that were devas ted.All this at many portions of the wide flood was accumulated into enormous inextricable float ing mas s amasses some of these or all of these being full of floating human beings either dead or alive. Hundreds of thousands were caught in these dreadful floating wreckage james dead and alive all or many by the lower parts of thebody only.It would be strab strange to say everything floated no matter what the weight but that was because of the terrible power of the current.Se eyewitnesses stated they saw big locomotives, pullman coaches of steel make, large steam factory engines, donkey engines and even other heavy objects fairly gl float half way out of the water.And who could describe the dreadful groans and cries which came from those vast floating holocaste when some of the floating seas and mounds of wreckage jams even whol while floatingd caught afire on top especially the parts of the wreckage the waters had not wetted.

Who could have stood it to witness whole divisions may scores of thousands suffer a slow death by fire without the means of rescueing them but many men women and children were caught in those fearful floating jams, one of which while rushing down with t e the flood covered fully sixtyacres of the sea and perhaps m r more.

One of these burning jams grounded on the edge of the shore near the Mic-allester woods alone and here a scene as of the infernal regions ensued as one part of this wreckage jam being afire ignited the unflooded portion of the forst forest and stat started a new forest fire.

One big offshoot of the main torrent of the flood was deflected north eastward by the great dike that resisted it, and therefore went roaring through the heart of the city.About half the loss of life was in the lower districts of Heidi junction for all of even the highest point of the city speedily became a lake fourty or more feet deep, and stayed so for four days and it was here and not probably in the direct path of the flood torrent that all the rescueing of as many people as poff possible from roofs and floating timbers occured.Nothing of the kind could ever have been possible in the main pary path of the giant flood itself. Likewise as three quarters of the city was entirely swept away it was from these districts chiefly that so many thousands of people were carried off down stream on floating wreckage.All that came within the direct paths of the flood were fast within the floating jams.The existance and resistance of this immense river dike at Mic-allister run naturally broke the continuty of the floods full force discharge as well as big wreckage windrows elsewhere which formed at resisting points and transfor med some portions of the flood into something not greatlydifferent than an ordinary water sea that moved with no greater speed than a very heavy freshet.Little girl Knool city, Henrietta Chamberlane rose, Topsy, Ophrlia and Evangeline St Claire just some distance north of Heidi junction were bad y devastated and wrecked with terrible loss of lives but in the mai n main from Evangeline St claire city down the flood ceased to be so dreadfu lly destructive.It took out every river bridge it came to for three hundred and fifty miles, cleaned away big forests of trees, and washed away railway tracks and did no ther kinds of minor damage but the dikes of the Mic-allister run and the gradual resistance of the ''standing of ground of the log jams further up north'' saved hundreds of thousands of lives beyond Evangeline St Claire by quickly and surely equalizing the flow.

Francis ohn gparrington the big burly conductor in charge of the handsome Pullman Pair Par, parlor car on the first section of the Evangeline St Claire Limited running on the Abbieannia, Bondinia and Calverine which was caught in the flood at Heidi junction told a thrilling storey of his experience.His train with three others had just stopped at the big railway station opposite a big round house where stood inside two hunfred and fifty big locomotives.He saw the flood coming n and described it as having the appearance of a big green mountain moving swiftly tward him.He however immediately ran to his own car and shouted to all his passengers to quickly run for theli their lives.

.The Conductor was only able to grab up one s child u under each arm and started for thenearest of the highest foot hills with the torrent of water and wreckage right at his very heels.He had ran a distance of less than one hundred yards and barely managed to deposit his precious burden on saft safer ground before the ocean of water and wreckage swept past him with the roar of battle.As the whole train of eleven coaches was swept away the conductor could never be able to tell how many of the passengers lost their lives.The twelvth passenger coach which alone was not carried away had many people on it but the conch was badly flooded and it was believed that all were drowned.All the big engines in that large round house was swept past him standing nearly three quarters of the way out of the water all their heavy weight not being able to take them beneath the surface of the water so terrible was the force of the flood.One aged woman was rescued alive from the attic of her floating house.The house had floated from Heidi junction all the way up to Angelinia Agathia's suburbs.The poor woman said her experience was more terrible than any she ever wants again.She saw every hour thousands of men women and children floating down the torrents to meet certain death some praying while others had become actual raving madmen.

It would be impossible for any one to know or even imagine the real o horrors of the terrible disaster unless they saw the burning people and debris on top of one of the big floating wreckage jams.The horrible nature of this affair could never be realized by any person who never witnessed the cit e scene without being able to rescue them. Many persons along the edge of the flood who were endeavoring to do the rescue work saw an immense float of this kind come down the flood at ex r express train speed and thousands upon thousands of people were struggling in the floating smoking and blazing ruins and imploring to those on shore for God's sake to release them.Frantic soldiers and men and women stood at the edge of the flood and watched without being able to rescue a single soul the furnace on the floating jam that was slowly scorching so many unfortunates to death.Every one was more anxious to save some one and when it could not be done, men tore their hair, women on shore screamed, children shrieked and cried and many others raved and cursed the Glandelinians untill the air was shaken by the din.

The agony of the xrowds on the shore was simply thrilling and heart rending.Many men raised their very hands toard ha heaven and screamed and cursed in their mental anguish.Every effort was made if possible to save every one accessible and many of the bolder rescuers r s risked all in their desperate attempts to save some one from the burning wreckage jam.They even swam the torrent to the jam and at one jam foeturnately which slowly down fully two hun red persons were saved from cremation.One young woman and her children were found under the dead bodies of others.A force of men were on another floe of wreckage which was a perfect inferno at one portion and these men desperately attemed to extricate the persons imprisoned but the flames crept nearer and nearer.Some were rescued from this floe but the others perished even some of the rescuers.It indeed was one of the most horrif horrible disasters on record.

One of the most queerest of all sights ever seen in any wrecked city or town co ld have been observed in the center of the city of Heidi junction and this was in a three or four story brick story residence standing with only one wallthe others having disappearared entirely before the force of the flood leaving only the upper floors supported by pillars and par titions.In one of the upper rooms of the latter building could be seen a huge mantle withall kinds of weak statury on it and in front of all this crockery was a ladys fan through from the marks on the wall paper the water had been surely v over allthese things.Also in the upper parts of the town where the fierce back water from the flood had gone on ahead with more diminished force there were thousands upon thousands of strange freakish things the strangest scenes on record for any ever left by a flood.Houses that never belonged to the city itself were found in long lines far outside the city all toppled overone another in the longest rows or in perfect rank formation and left in th that position where they lay.One of them which was entirely isolated from the rest was turned completely over and stood with its roof in the branches of a huge fallen tree and its base up into the air.The owner who survived the floodcame back one time later when all danger was gone and getting into his house from the windows by means of a long ladder walked about on the ceiling.Out of this house several women and many ch l children escaped saftly though several of them were severely hurt all of them having brenoated on their heads in the confusion and whirl.

Every one of these long rows of houses had their own strange story. Fr a from ten houses some women and children and even men escaped by either chopping holes in the roof or in the side. From one of the houses several men leaped to the shore porti n of the flod when the house grounded and escaped without any injuries whatever. Many others were said to have done all the way from very near the start of the flood and to have circled around with the b back water and finally landed on the shore portion of the flood where so e of the p observers pointed it out to the war corresp correspondents and news paper men. One of the war correspondents described the situation at Heidi Junction twenty days after the awful disaster; and this this is what he said;

"So vast is the field of destruction and so extensive the flood still raging all around that to get even the slightest idea from any point level with the towns and v lli villiages and also the sea of flowing waters is simply impossible.

It took the chances one day l of crossing the dangerous flood on a raft and viewed the immense imundation from a great height. I climbed a mountian near Heidi junction called Ap Alps Heights and here the whole strange panorama of the desolation can be seen for hundreds of miles. This hill was i or is about nearly a thousand feet above sea level and from its summit I could see a long way off.

Looking down from such a great height all the things about the great flood that appeared so completely inplexicable from below were perefcelt perfectly plain to me. ow so many houses from the other towns wrought down by the current of the flood hap e happened to be so queerly twisted and placed in such peculiarpositions for instance as if the flood had many currents of a twirling motion inwtead of a straight course could not be understood. First I viewed the city of Heidi junction which was built in oblong fashion or almost a queer triangle with one angle pointed squarely up the Mic-Allister Run Valley from which it is apparent the main force of the flood came. At the northerly angle was the junc i junction of the Mic-Hollester and Pandora and the Abbiannia, Bondinia and Calverine railroads. The southern angle of the city pointed up the Mic-Allister Run Valley also. No about three quarters of this triangle formely densely covered with buildings for nearly fourty miles is swept as clear as a platter except for the centre which still consisted of the strongrst of the buildings which though not swept away were nevertheless totally wrecked so that they would have to be torn down. The main course of this dreadful flood from the exactpoint from which it issued from the Aronburge Run river to where it disappeared far beyond Pandora r Pandora city by spread ing itself over the flat districts for a hundred miles is clerly defined so that any one could make it out without the slightest mistake.

The whole body of the water sea issued straight from the Aronburge Run flat and level valley in a solid rushing sea at the rate of sixty five miles an hour and before striking Heidi Junction tore through and almost over Jessicia city which was first hit and then so on with in creasing force to the city of Heidi jun t Heidi Junction striking with terrifiyng force the business portion at the lower part of the n southern triangle. Here a long wall of great windrows of debris, floating trees and even the great Dikes of the Mic-Allister Run aided by the strange formation of the land evidently divided the flood sea in this location and hurled it northward like a tidal wave upon Hei Henrietta city. The great part of the flood turned northwestward and simultaneously northward and northw northeastward swept up the entire portion of the city of Heidi and then mixed with the ruins of bridges railroad trains and trees and other debris hurled with greater force anew upon the city and demolished every building it came to in the lower sections. The great dike of the Mic-Allistr in the meantime acted as a sort of dam and turned part of the current back to the southeast where it finished the work of destruction with redoubled violence turning again northward and sweeping tward Angelinia Agathia and Dorothy Gale. The frequent turning of the flood in the vinicity of Heidi junction forced against the buildings and then against the dikes of the river gave it something like a regular whirlpool motion a regular whirling motion from right to left and made a most tremendous eddy whose awful centrifuugal force twisted everything it touched. The force of the flood diminsi diminished gradually as the flood moved further north for at the places where the flood widened out more and more over the landscape every building ofmany towns were either i mundated entirely or ground to piecesand carried away, and at portions where the flood still lost more of its strength the houses were only turned a little on thwir foundations or suffered the loss of flooded basements. many others could be seen turned overon their sides or upside down and other various positions. Further down still near Pandora and other points they were not at all single but great stretches or fields upon fields of ground and shattered lumber and other wreckage. In the main force of the flood the work of the torrents is of a different andmore horrible effect. It picked up everything even the biggest buildings and lied or carried with irrestible spped the speed the fragments down tward other cities and disposted the wreckage in streets of i cities that were not injured by the flood or swept them over and through and down the country for scores and scores of miles. From such a hiheight can be seen the little fragments of the town surrounded as it seems yet by a moving sea of water and floating dashing wreckage. I could see a little beyond the centre of one plain a little more free from the flood waters a portion of the tracks of the Abbiannia-Bondinia-And Calverine railroad but all out of place and not far away was a tall brick schoolHouse but demolished and standing half inclinded as if it were a drunking man trying to support himself against a lamppost, and also near by a was an adjoining warehouse six stories high leaning like the tower of pi Pisa and one brick residence also standing like a dr hat on a drunken man was badly shattered.

These strangely looking ruined structures do not relieve the shocking picture of ruin and sea of water logged wreckage spread out below these distant heights but by dontrast makes it more sader and striking. That part of the city which survived the force of the flood has the quedrest kind of wreck a person ever saw though few persons have taken the chances to go and see them because of the flood all around the city. and many of the houses that are left there scattered helter skelter thrown on their sides or standing on their rods were never in Heidi junction nor any where near it before. even on the roof of one big house in Heidi junction I could see with my glasses two locomotive locomotives standing having been put there by the f l flood and this gives me the idea how deep the waters may have been when the imundation was at its height. where ever these strange houses came fr from I do not know nor does any one else but nevertheless they came down on the breast of the flood wave from as far up as Jessidia and Ib- Mombi city, were carried safily past and by the factories and the Stanoks Bridge which held, by the big buildings in the city at the dividing line up and down on the flood and finally with the abatement of the flood settled in their new resting places. Not at all injured save being water soaked inside. There was one long row of them stretching for two miles that were packed closely together and every one of these were completely tipped over at about the same position and indeed this was only one of the many queer pran s the force of the water played. I got into one of these houses later when I walked through the town a t after again crossing the flood on my strong raft. The lower story was still covered with dirty water and everything in this little h use House had been torn out. The magnificent carpents on the floors had been torn into small strips on the floor by the sheer force of the rushing to rrent. High heaps of sand and debris and mud stood in the corners and the floors were strewn with all sizes of dead fishes. On one floor lay a dead cat. There was no sign of firnutre but on a shelf in a cupboard was a dirty water soaked doll. The doll had once been a magnificent material and beautiful as well as very expensive but now the flood had ruined it beyond recognition. The walls were still dripping with moisture. The ceiling plaster was gone, the windos and ddors were out and indeed the only thing that I observed that had been left intact even by the force of the flood was one of those strange worked worsted mottos mottoes that every one usually has in their homes especially wh at we can expect to find in the homes of working and other perople. It still hung a to the wall and though it was sprung much awry the glass and frame were unbroken. The motto looked to me very grim and sadly sartastic as I read;

"Home sweet Home' There is no place like home."

I said to myself;

"This is surely a melancholo Melancholy wreck of a hom that this motto is looking down upon."

I saw many different kinds of wagons and even other craft in the flood and I saw several ships river craft and others standing exactly in the middle of Stanok Street their sides stove in by the crashing against of some houses. Books of all kinds from some immense city Library had been strewn a over all the surviving streets during the last stange of the flood for there were perfect fields of good expensive books sticking in the mud for miles. and down at the lower end of the xu surviving part of the city where the force of the flood had been greater there was a big three story house lying on one corner in a peculiar position and held there by being fastened in the deep mud. Another house lifted in some mysterious way had settled down on top of the big structure, and through the side of the lower huse the tru trunk of a huge fir tree had been driven like a lance and there it stayed sticking through both the houses completely upright as if h it had grown there.At one time during the flood hundreds of floating houses had been wedged in together near the edge of the flooded M ollester oo Woods and brave men from the shore went out by scores and stepping from house top to house to p brought in hundreds of men women and children.In their desperate struggles with the great flood most of their clothes had been torn from them.At this stage of the great flood near Heidi Junction more people were lost or killed by being crushed to death than by dying for as they floated by on roofs, driftwood and doors and other wreckage the toppling houses fell over upon them and killed them.In many instances people who were killed were wedged in among cri crevices of the floating wreckage.Houses in the city which are still standing as I observed were bankedup high with driftwood and wreckage of all des descri tion and it will be like mining and blasting for weeks to make any kind of clear space.

A million strange stories could have been told about people floating on the flood and facing all horrors after seeing the evidence of the strange course the flood took in the city of Heidi Junction.People who stood on the big bridge in the city which withstood the flood saw many persons thousands upon thousands of them float up on the rushing torrent under the bridge, turn a long distance beyondand come back and go swiftly past again and then reverse the whole thing over and over again.Then they would be seen to go far down on the current to the more devastated pae t of the city and many were rescued as they passed near the fourth story of the higher and stronger buildings.At Angelinia Agathis there was le ft the remains of a big wooden house which came all the way down from Heidi Junction.On it was a whole family who lived at Jessica and when I interviewed him later he told me the house had been taken from Jessicia, passed on the flood on down and through ui wombi city and then through the torrent at Heidi Junction.The house then for a whole grounded in Heidi Junction but the force of the torrent indressing it soon rushed on again and went through the city a t after colliding with other floating house w filled with people and turning them completely over. H he house was then without once being injured carried down on the flood for over a hundred miles and then into one of the worse flooded sections of Dorothy Gale. People who stood on house tops tops on who were in the upper floors saw this immense house float up on the flood turn a short distance down the street, collide with a smaller house crushing it to atoms, and then come back and go swiftly past again demolishing wreckage on its way and once more return spinning around in the water like a ferris wheel.

Then the house with the people on top was seen to go far down out of the city al altogether and disappear. man and woman with his child was imprisned in the attic of this house and fearing it would be destroyed put his wife and three children on a roof that was eddying past and stayed bey behind to die alone.However the other roof noted or followed like a trailer sticking close to the floating house and the children and the mother got back upon the roof of the very house they had left. inally at night the house arived in the deeply flooded section of Angelinia Ag athia and was carried right past Emperor vivians plse palace. he house passed this immense building fifteen times, even circled all around it the man carrying on a conversation with the people on the raft or roof telling them what to do in case the house should dip.The seventeenth time the house passed entirely around Emperor vivians palace it grounded in shallower water a little beyond and in an hour or two all those on the roof, and the men were saved .

INCLUDING THE COMING OF THE FLOOD UPON THE CITY, ITS FORCE AND HAVOC, THE NUMBER OF PEOPLE KILLED, AND PROPERTY DESTROYED, HEROISM OF THE RESCUERS, THE AWFUL FATE OF GHOULS..

DURING the time that the floodwas approaching tward the city of Big Girl Knool one of the witnesses also saw at a far distance far out of reach of the flood an immense forest fire.The di tant distant sky seemed to blackene morecand ore ever hour and to change its ordinary hues for a covering of flame while every moment far along the horizon but along the ground the fire darted upward in long angry tongues of flame and great eruptions of smoke rolled upward. or hours I was so fascinated that I could not help but gaze on this most fascinated scene, I could not makeup my mind to go elsewhere, though even where I was I could hear what I believed was the approach of a great wall of water.No one who has not witnessed flood and forest fires at the same time spreading over the country can form any idea of the mingled beauty horror and terror of the effect.For all the world as dangerous as it would have been for me to remain in my position I would not miss the sight terrifying and most awe s inspiring as it was.

Tward night the floods was spreading ll aro nd my shelter and the sound of the rushing waters, the roar of banging wreckage and all other sounds despite the shrieks of the drowning victims deadened the voice of man suddenly far in the distance a noise more stunning than any other reached my ears.It sounded to me like a army of men clapping their hands together but five hundred times as loud per man alone.Our own habetation was only saved from destruction and with it doubtless our very lives by the circumstance of the fact that our dwel ling was on a rise of ground about two hundred feet above the level of the flood and thus as the flood did not rise any higher we did not meet with a an meet with much trouble save that we were surrounded by the water for nearly a month.One of the most remarkable occurances during ourbeing marooned by the flood was one that was affected by my own person. At the same time that I had heard the loud and most queer sound I felt a strange and warm or hot and most peculiar sensation down my arm and hand and mentioned the circumstances to my wife. or manyhours afterwards a long deep red mark about thirteen inches in length and nearly two in breadth was plainly to be seen in theplace where I had felt the h at and what I should describe as almost great pain.The escape we all had from this worst of all dangers''flood'' was great and by the power of God Himself.During the whole two weeks and three days the awful fury of the flood increased and continued to increase and the noise of the waters and rushing wreckage was indescribable.To sleep though sheltered as we was impossible on account of the noise and as I lay on my cot listening to the awful sound of the flod I was surprised to hear a most strange noise a mo t unaccustomed sound outside my little cottage door.On going out a little wat wa y to see ascertain what it wasand from whence it proceeded I found some little children soaked through to the si skin who had managed to escape out of the water and had come up a ll the way up the slope and indeed it was a strange situation for me to find children in. I gave them shelter and clean dry clothes and took care of them for my own as I heard their mothers and fathers and all their lel relatives had perished in the flood.

The approach of the flood appeared at first like a long dark bank along the horizon and gradually overspreading the ground far off. The flood burst forth with wonderful and terrible suddenness.And such was the force of the waters when they struck a little town within my very eyes so far down below that all of the biggest houses not carried away were turned topsy turvy and the rest were floated off with the flood.The greater part of the country is still under water and I d fear will be so for many days and those who survived are going boating in the flood.

Such a flood as this has never occured before in the memory of the oldest inhabatant of our country, and some people who had been resi dents of the very city of Heidi Junction which had been wholly devast ated asserted their previous experience presented not even the slightest parallel for such a destructive inundation as this later one caused by the enemy.On one of the days when the flood had receded I passed near the shore of the inland sea and I observed more and sights indeed.I should not have been aware of the horrors of the flood had I not perceived so many bodies floating in the water.On looking everywhere across the waters and following the flowing driftwood and wreckage I saw more bodies by than I could have counted in a lifetime and hurried from the spot with such a feeling of dismay and ohorror that I could never be able to describe it."

The f ll flood all around Big Girl Knool City killed more than one hundred people out in the country, making thousands of farmers who survived homeless and destroying more than 14,000,000 acres of forest timber .As the flood approached near Big Girl Knool City the noise was not heard so continuously, the sound of the approaching waters came in gusty roars like heavy irregular breathing or like trains rerossing bridges.The sound would be like a roar and thundering howl which would last a minute then with a sudden cessation it would be perfectly still as if gathering breath with greater effort and in another instant could be heard coming again like the rush and rumble of a thousand railroad trains.

Before it struck Big Girl Knool City the flood was moving westward at this section then instead of forcing a passage all the way through the dense Mic-Hollester Woods the flood went tward the stream of Callilies gun cutting loose with terrible violence.A section of the flood did swan the Mic-Hollester Woods and went howling up the Callilies gun.
The progre ss of the flood was slow or fast according to the nature of the gou ground it rushed over making the worst of its effects long or short in duration without in any way affecting its violence.The worst force of the flood covered two hundred miles of ground; was five hundred miles in full widty an or length and was hours in rising at given points and sudden at others as the progressive movements was slow or fast.At the point where it came fast and furious there was rushing of waters and a terrible roar and poured over cities and villiages like theocean claiming the land near the shore.

The flood reached Big Girl Knool three days after it began.But it did not begin here so suddenly but gradually and quickly.The first notice of the unusual flood was in the afternoon of June the Third when the skyseemed more bluer than usual, then far in the distance over the landscape of the immense plains a sudden change appeared the swaying shadow of a vast motion over the land.F rst First something strange and blue seemed to rise bodily twrd the horizon the long line darkened swiftly and approached; a monsterous wrinkle an immeasureable fold of dark green water moving swift as a race horse.But it had no force then to carry n carry anything away with it.All day and night the flood continued in this style streets were flooded and at each pause of other sounds could be obser observed the answering moan of the rising flood;
as if the very rhythem of the sea moulded itself after the rhythem of the air as if the rush and waving of the waters responded precisly to the waving of other sounds.The flood grew; and faster and faster it began its horrid rise driving people to confusion.The gray rainy moring of the next day lighted a flood that would have appalled the best swimmers in the world, the flood was one wild agony of foam chocked at times with processions of bodies wreckage and the like;;;.
The day dawned shadowless and gray and gray the re day remained however without further rain; but at evening there were mad bursts of rain and severe thunderstorms .Even Evening brought with the concluding of the thunderstorm and the increase of the flood a most sins sinester apparition looming through the cloud rents in the ws western skies;
a s a scarlet sun in a greenish black sky.His sanguine disk a falling and strangely magnified seemed barred like the belted body of a planet.
An hour or more and the crimson spectre vanished, and the moonless and starless night came with glows of firss far in the distance piercing the horizon and making the flood look all the more weird.Then the roar of the flood waters grew very weird.Its sound ceased being a breath it became like a thundering voice yelling across theworld, the shrieks of victims n made night more sounds the mooing of the rushing waters seemed to deepen, more and more abysmally through all the hours of the darkness.
Through the streets of the city the waters became like rushing foaming breakers and the outskirts of the city broadened to a roaring hallowing flood.So the tumult swelled and the turmoil heightened until morning of gray gloom and hot stifling weather.The local office of the Abbieannian Gemini spy and other War Bureaus recieved the first message in regard to this flood 5.P.M. June the Third as it was reaching Big Girl Knool City.After striking through Big Girl Knool city the flood, was then moving over the country and across the Big Girl Knoo l ound and through the streets of Yorlinda and El Vonso Citins.Each hour thereafter bul entins were postrd up everywhere by the Geminian officials giving the progressive movements of the inundation.On the Sixth of June the flood had moved up as far as Pandor City and Francis Atlanta then it spread westward and northward and was central off the regions near Heidi Junction on the morning of the 8th when warnings of flood dangers were ordered up for other places.On the morning of the 8th the flood had increasnd in energy and extent and was still rising and spreading and at 11.A.M. the local warnings were changed to general.Then was when the entire city of Big Girl Knool and her little sister s City were in great danger.The telephones at the various buse bureau bureaus were incessantly busy untill the f wires and poles went down; many could not get the use of the telephone because either the lines were busy or the poles had fallen before the torrent and people waded and swam to the offices in droves inquiring about the flood; and asking whether it will grow worse or recede.But the following information was given to all alike;

"the flood is now over all the land south and southeast of us in great depth and is increasing in height and energy.All of you who live in the lowest parts of the city must move to higher grounds.Prepare for the worst which is yet to come." these werethe only consoling words from morning untill night when no other information could be given out.
The local Abbieannian engineer officials and observers went out in long boats taking the tide observations of the flood n on the day of the sixth.One observer stayed at his post throughout all the most devast ating fury of the flood.Another left after he had sent the last telegram which could then be sent off it being filed over at Pandora City over the telegraph wires about P 5.P.M.

At this time over half of the city was covered with water.
Another of the observers was forced to leave for home after he had done all he possibly could as telephone poles were then going down and the flood was bring processions of bodies and wreckage with it upon the city.The entire city later was then covered with water from one to five deep.On his way home he saw thousands of fearsome people men women and even children and therefore he informed all he could that the worst of the flood was yet to come and all the people who cou'd not hear his voice on account of being quite a distance off at a block away he motioned to them to go to the upper floors of the higher buildings.
The rise of the flood at about eightoclock stood from six to eight feet deep throughout the lowerportions of the city with the current running over thirty miles an hour that carried off many of the weaker houses which had stood the flood up to that time.

Indeed the first heard of the dreadful flood that overwhelmed so many towns and ruined the property of so many big cities was in the central part of the Helendale County south of Jessica City and north of Heidi Junction and Henrietta said it was in about three days in reaching up as far as Big Girl Knool city two hundred miles away.The Gemini bureau says accompanying the official land maps of the nation that if it had not been for the big resiting dike of the Mary Mic-Allister Run the flood would have passed as eastward beyond the course it took and which would have curved backwards missing Heidi Junction altogether.

If it had not been for this deviation from its normal course by that dike Mi H Heidi Junction Angelinia Agathia, Henrietta and a score of other cities in that region would have entirely escaped.If it hadthe chance to spread over the country south of the Mic-Allister Run the flood would have gradually emptied itself in that river and Big Girl Knool would have had only its rebound.The inundation first starting June the First simultaneously with the battle of Phdlentonburg onlya slight distance away struck struck Heidi June the first first at the same hour and spread up as far as Big Girl Knool o as quick as fourty eight hours and ten minutes.However there were many different opinions as to the real origin of the flood.General Hendro Dargar and his assistant the main heads of the Gemini consulted Rodney Graves Dargars Captian n and they had a theory that the inundation which visited one quarter of Calverinia and three thirds of northern Angelinia states originated through seventeen dikes being bursted and commenced in the vinicity of Heidi Junction and was not the rush of the flood which as reported struck Jessica two hours before.He declared Heidi Junction was th first victims.On that hour a flood was reported by signal stations moving in a northerly direction and with a speeed of a runaway train from Aronburgs gun.It moved up the Mid-Allister run like the inroads of the sea and swept upon Heidi Junction with such force that it carried the whole city all before it.The Mallory Aronburgs Limited special train ran into a portion of this flood and the crews reported

e o enough wreckage floating on the flood to rebuild a hundred cities.
The supposition that this same flood struck Jesi Jessica first by doubly doubling back on its tracks after striking the Mic-Allester levees and dikes he thought was a serious mistake as Jession is northwest of Heidi junction and east of Angelinia Agathia.The first knowledge of the terrible force of the flood was a torrent of sixty five miles an hour p u pouring over the lower sections of the city and the whole country all around on the evening of June the 1th and the fullforce was not expended at Heidi junction untill three days later untill only ten thousand houses out of a million was left and yet in total twelve down wrecks.High floods waters afterwards were reported rushing with great force and wiping out Jesi Jessica City.
The Heidi Junction disaster General Darcar thought was a distinct section of the flood from that which devastated Jessica and was confined to the region around Heidi alone.
There were two theories about the cause of the disasterous flood, one that the engineers of Glandelinian armies blew up theulevees of the Aronburgs Run at high flood tide, and the other that Glandelinian troops wishing to cover the retreat of some defeated Glandelinian army blew up the dikes of the Mic-Hollester Run and the Norma run river at the same time besides destroying two big dams near by.
Soon after the news was on the world of wires that the country of Calverinia and Angelinia was suffering severely from the most devastating flood ever know of and as hundreds of thousands were reported under water and scores of big cities reported the astounding and desolating force of the flood, Big Girl Knool became a silent city. There was not any kind of communication being recieved for long days and nights and all that time the most authorititative and urgent messages were sent as far as wires would carry them; and the tempest of waters was then crashing through the bigger cities of Henrietta Angelinia Agathi- Dorothy Gale and others of Calverinia spreading eastward, westward and northward bound.But like a score of others Big Girl Knool was also entirely cut off.There was then the most intense anxiety anxit anexity throughout the nation and as the flood roared on with terrible tales of destructi n destruction and loss of lives came news of a disastergus and frightful christian defeat at Phelantonburg and the destruction of half of the armies under the two vivian generals.All river bridges were gone and no messenger could succeed in getting any where near the flood.One who came as n e n near as po possible gave out a story that made even the vivian girls laugh him to scorn something that seemed beyond belief and exaggerated out of the ren resemblance to any truth but finally it was learned the true tales of half of the horrors had not been told.When the extent of the flood disaster was approximately known it was more than certain that the awful desolation wrought included the destruction of hundreds of thousands of lives; and him dres hundreds of millions of property, the loss of all articles even in the most remote Catholic church even thing even to the most Holies of Holies being swept away on the flod making the disaster one of the most awful in the records of any kind of memorable calamites illustrating the appall ing force of waters the tremendous possibilities of the force of floods that the enemy will have the meanest thought to let loose on an unoffending populations.
For a time as the flood spread everywhere the whole country was filled t with the greatest apprehension for the fact that like other cities even big Girl Knool seemed to have been inundated by the flood was carried before all telephone wires and poles were swept away and the flood as in spread and increased extinguished intelligende of its own progress and hundreds of millions awaited the worst that might happen while the stricken could at best only themselves obey the injunction "Pends be still" for there was nothing to do for the bravest but to be composed and wait.
This dispatch can really give an iden of the deadly work of the flood and its horror and m mystery.
"Pandora City.Heidi County.June the Third.-The offices of the general Telegra h Companies in this city is being besieged with so many incessant and anxious inquiries as to the extent and result of the awful flood that cut off Big Girl Knool from communication with the rest of the world. Rumors of the most direful nature comes from those parts of Southern Calverinia many of them even intimating that Big Girl Knool and a and many other cities have been entirely wrecked and that the flood which is four hundrid miles in width is covered with the dead bodies of its victims and of wreckage.For weeks the fate of the survivors was not known at all.It was even remarkable that were were so many thousands of the bravest of the telegraphers missing when it is a part of their training of duty to hold their positions and to stay where their work is done as long as there is any possibilities of usel usefulness whether assailed by fire flood or storm.The superintendent of the great Abbiesnnia Girl Knool isone of the outside terminals who was in Angelinia Agathia when the flood suddenly appeared and after he had seen and heard the facts of the devastation so terribly wrought said;
"The first train to leave the outer regions of the flood contained a strong delegation to inform the outside world of the very catastrophe caused by the enemy and to ask for help from the entire nation of Abbiesnnia itself.The trip across the lowest portion of the flood was as thrilling as possible andone of the most dangerous imaginable. The engineer declined to pu to pull the train any further than Dorothy Gale City declaring that it could not run through such an inland sea.The telegrams coming in everywhere also stated of the havoc wrought on the many railroad lines that run into and out of Big Girl Knool city.One of these contained news that the last passenger train of the ferious Aronburgs Limited left Pandora city on the morning a day before the floods.Since then traffic on over two hundred railroads has been entirely stopped.The head of the Abbiesnnia Gondinia and Calverine railroad was greatly worried that nothing had been heard from this train known as the Aronburgs Limited Nos 10 which was supposed to be due in Big Girl Knool on the Night of the sixth of June.It was last reported to him to have been seen stalled by the flood at a small station fourty miles north of Big Girl Knool and nothing has been heard from it since.He thought it possible that this magnificent train was caught by the devastating flood and was wrecked or inundated.
This incident then strikingly shows the startling chances all railroad men were led to take in so broad a sweep of overwhelming war destructions. Emperor Vivian Hannib said while waiting for news that he did not believe the business portions of Big Girl Knool city suffered very much because most of the big blocks of buildings were of brick concrete and stone and of the most strongest and modern architectures.
But he said nevertheless;
"I cannot understand why I do not recieve no more accurate news of any kind from Big Girl Knool or other points of the floods.Even if all such amount of railway and telegraph communication between the flooded regions and Pandora has been interrupted we have wireless and therefore there should not be any difficulty in obtaining a full account of events.I wonder why my daughters do not convey me the news they scout so much.Their own stillness even surprises me.I am really worried beyond comprehension."
He could not see that it was ever possible the disaster throughout so much of the country was so terribly crushing.The wireless was allright but all these signal stations and their operating apparatus were all destroyed and the biggest cities in the region we re were wrecked by flood and seas of rushing dashing r wreckage borne down by the floods on the night two days after the flood the Angelinia Agathia Chronicle had a little intelligible account of the flood that had gathered all over the country and cite strange and characteristic courre and phenomena;
"Telegraphic communications, with Angelinia Agathia, Dorothy Gale, Heidi junction and hundreds of other places is out of question, no calls can be from the wireless as the flood waters have leveled the stations and the wires and poles and played havoc with all kinds of telegraph and other instruments.The depth of water at Heidi Junction and other place places is sixty feet according to some reports while the torrent swept on at six ty miles an hour speed.This according to the Gemini Bureau tends to prove that the centre of the flood in this location has moved further up tward Big Girl Knool.All that can be said is that the flood is slowly gathering force at this latter city, and is steadily rising every day.The course of this flood has been most extraordinary and in light of past events the flood signal and other officials were at a /loss to account for its strange behavior after rebounding from the Mic-Allister Run dikes.Instead of speed as sweeping across the Mic-A llister run valley and fully into the Mic-Hollester woods then moving up in its course tward Maria Osborne and Paznas as all its great predecessories have done the flood had to cut out a new path for itself.
It did not swing off the Aronburgs Run Region on its way down the Mic-Allister run Valley but drove directly across the country northward striking with full force the cities and towns in its paths
The great majority of the floods in the past have struck the Aronburgs Valley only and then lost themselves in the powerful Mic-Allister stream, others have spread over its valley without doing any too much damage but the present flood did not do this/from where it first started however the force of the flood had spread out so far that it was slowly abating however. The Gemini Authorities believed that the strength of the water currents was spent and that within the next month of or so reports would begin to come in over the repaired telegraph wires. The spreading and slowing down of the rush of waters at places near the scene of the worst of the floods indicated for those section that the worst was now over and that the flood was losing its intensity.

One of the war correspondents and a well known newspaper man of Big Girl Knool city reached Angelinia Agathia June the seventh after terrible experiences and gave this account of the flood disaster.

"One of the most awful tragedies of the war and of all nature of all times has not only visited big cities like here and Heidi junction but also Big Girl Knool. Most of the city is in ruins the dwellings of 550,000 inhabitants have been swept entirely away the rest are in ruins and the dead will number probably sixty five thousand. I am just from the city having been commissioned by the Mayor and the citizens committee to get in touch with the outside country and ask for help. This is the nearest point at which any kind of working telegraph and other instruments could be found, the wires as well as nearly all towns and villiages between here and Big Girl Knool being wrecked or swept away and some are at still under water. When I left Big Girl shortly before noon yesterday by means of a strong boat the people were all marooned on the top stories of their bigger buildings and wreckage from other towns and villiages was jammed up in the flooded streets.

The total wreck of Big Girl Knool city was indeed brought about by an enormous flood so terrible and with such force that no words whatever could adequately describe its intensity and indeed this flood for three weeks turned the city and all the sea surrounding country into a raging sea chocked with swirling floating debris ....

The flood began to touch the city of Big Girl Knool at ten oclock on the morning of June the third. Previous to all that the great flood had been raging elsewhere and had gone up very high. The waters at first came into the streets of the city from the north east and indeed was or seemed to be in direct opposition to the forces of the torrent from the south and west. While the torrents rushing into the northern sections of the city the other coming floods rushed in from other sections simultaneously.

When noon approach it was surely apparent that the city was going to be visited by a terrible disaster. Thousands of residents along the lower portions of the city were being hurried/ ahand abandoned the people fleeing to the dwellings in the higher portions of the city. Every house of the stronger and larger sizes was opened to the many refugees. The waters was rising constantly and rapidly and the strength and speed of the torrent was so fierce that nothing could withstand it. By seven o clock the waters of the current met from all directions and with the approach of night the entire city was submerged. The flooding of the big electric light plants and other power houses and the big gas plants of the city left the place in total darkness. No gout into the streets was to face the danger of drowning. To remain in the weaker houses was to court death. The flood waters was then rushing through the streets at a most terrible velocity, immense rods, cisterns, portions of wooden houses telegraph poles and wires and everything was borne down along the flood path and the noise of the rushing waters and the crash of falling buildings was terrifying beyond description. The waters rose steadily from dark until midnight the next day and then remained steadily as it was. During these weeks after this awful day the people of Big girl Knool city were like rats in a trap. The highest portion of the city was from eight to fourteen feet under water while in the greath majority of cases the streets were submerged to a depth of twenty eight feet. To leave a house was to take the chances of being drowned. And to remain was to face death in the wreckage.

Indeed such days and nights of unspeakably agony and horror never have been equaled. At about midnight without apparent reasons the waters suddenly began to stop rising but nevertheless it had not subsided. Very few if any of the buildings were escaping injury from the force of the current. Even during all those days of horrur there was not a dry house in the city. The people who were marooned by the flood on their top floors could see from the upper windows the most horrible sights imaginable. In all the streets within their view they could see immense processions of bodies. Four hundred corpses flow floated by in one minute. The whole business section of the city was being stripped of very every vestige of habitation the dwellings the great bathing establishments and every other structure being carried away by the flood or their ruins being piled like windrows far into the main sections of the city according to the frenkish actions of the torrent. The city of Big girl Knool was already ready to be wrapped in sackcloth and ashes. The sorrow horror and fear and suffering of the marooned people in the upper stories without food or drink were beyond description. The grid grief of those who lost their all is unspeakable.

The days before the flood the people of the city were quite happy buoyant and had despite the war a bright and prosperous season opening most auau auspicious ly but now the city with many others have been stricken down and crushed by a mi misfortune that never befall any community before in all real l history and the inexpressible anguish of the surviving people appealed in vain for help to feed the hungry, and afford relief for so many of those, who in the twinkling of an eye lost all their homes loved ones and the savings of a life time to boot. The flood rages on. The city in dark and a pall beyond thinking has fallen over the living. Those who are marooned in their houses must clasp hands tearfully, gaze into each others eyes and say nothing. To is pitiful and sad beyond expression.

and this terrifying flood that produced such a distressing and overwhelming disaster was predicted by the Gemini to strike Big Girl Knool june the second at night and therefore created much apprehension but that dan day and night had passed without the prediction being verified. The conditions however were as ominous as they could ever be the danger signal was constantly given and every point outside of Big girl Knool city were warned. However early in the morning there came a dismal thundering roar far off that gives warning of trouble while there was some signs of the coming of a flood. Early in the morning waters began to come into the city but increased in volume as the day approached. But eleven oclock in the morning it was almost five feet deep in the lowest places at noon the strength of the current was increasing and was driveing tons of wreckage before it and tearing things up in a lost lively manner yet for a time none of the people felt any serious apprehension though the residents nearest the lowest portions of the city were aroused to the dangers that threatened their homes and as the stu endous waves of the flood began to send wreckage in walls crashing against the houses the people began to make hasty exits to secure places of safty in the highest portions of the city. Two gigantic sections of the flood were striking through big girl knool city. At the beginning of the flood all the waters did was just chock the sewe sewers of the city but after that even hour the streets began to fill higher and higher with torrents of rushing waters communicat ions became cut off and the hepl helpless people were sou hought in the flood. Nu sience was forced every were to suddenly come to a stand still car and railway traffic was impossible and all those who had homes and yet had some chances of reaching them by wading or swimming in the water or either by conveyances or otherwise hastily left their places of buisness or other points and even offered great prices for any kind of a wagon or car that would carry them through the flood to their frightened and endag endan endangered loved ones. All railroad co communication was cut off for al trac s were washed out all wire communications failed and big girl Knool city was completely isolated from the world. The strength and rise of the flood increased every minute ever moment rather to a foot and the night drew on with dreadful apprehensions written on the faces of every one. Already hundreds of thousands were struggly struggling desperately and bestbravely with their frightened families against the mad swirls waves of rushing currents of the flood for places of better refuge and thousands were drowned or killed by wreckage hurled against them.

One thousand big public school buildings, hundreds of hotels, the big hotels and the court house, churches in fact any plane that offered apparently any place of refuge from the flood elements become crowded to their utmost with refugees. Darkness settled on the city with the stars making the scene more weird as well as the rising moon that showed all the horrors of the ever rising flood which rushed now with frightful velocity. Priests strove desperately to save their Sacred Articles but in vain everything was borne away by the flood. Two minutes before ten o clock at night the force of the current had reached a velocity of twenty to thirty six miles an hour and was increasing. Wooden buildings crashed against houses everywhere, and buildings that had stood before now tumbled or crashed or floated away like boats crashing death and destruction to all within their confines. Churches crowded with refugees collasped burying within.One hotel ten stories high was moved from its foundation by the force of the rushing waters and it tumbled and crashed down upon other buildings carrying death to thou thousands.During the force of this downfall of wreckage roofs and every material of wreckage flew upward or whistled through the a r air windows were driven in by flying bricks or shattered by flying slate.Telegraph, telephone and eletric light wires two blocks away from the crashing hotel with all their masses of wires were snapped off like pipe stems before the rush of wreckage.The streets became a mass of wire water communications were broken making water and food impossible to obtain .What velocity the current attained after the flood reached its highest mark is purely a matter of guesswork.The heavy detonations of falling buildings the deafening banging and s lamming of wreckage passing by and the piercing cries for help everywhere in the torrents broke the air and tye roar of the flood.Dead bodies floated like marching armies of troops in the flooded streets.All this made a night and succeeding days and nights for nearly two weeks and a half that can never be obliterated from the memories of the searchers after the flood had subsided.

thousands under the wreckage, school buildings collasped or were moved off their foundations and down they toppled upon the frightened occupants

The highest point trouched by the flood waters was seen on the walls of the Press correspondents office building which was for days filled with thous- thousands of frightened women and children.This was about twelve thirty. It then showed or started to rise very slowly and by One thirty had reached h l half way up to the third story window or reached a depth of thirty feet and then began to remain just as it was for so many days. At two oclock in the afternoon however nearly three weeks after the water began to slowly ebb but ran out very slowly and it was not untill six days later before the highest streets was almost entirely free of the dreadful flood waters...Thus passed the most frightful and destructive flood devastating a country which could have ever been written by any one. After the flood had entirely subsided from the streets of the city it was filled that following night with countless numbers of berefit des titute and homeless people while the visit to all the temporary morgues and other places showed by the fitful glare of lantrens and candles stretched rigid in death, thousands of all ages, nationalities and conditions..Even hund thousands of whole families were lying dead side by side from the father and mother to the innocent babe.Armies of men on the verge of despair and insanity were searching frantically for their loved ones amid the slime and dirty waters of the lower streets in debris chocked alleys by ways and under the wreckage of their recently happy home.

Hundreds of thousands of mothers daughtr dauthers sons and relatives of all kinds were also engaged in the grewsome search for lost dear ones while thousands of others were bordering on the very verge of acute insanity over the appalling berea vement that had so suddenly come upon them.

George A Nelby one was a military operator despite all his desperate and brave efforts to save them lost his wife and four children and did not know where their bodies were placed or whether they were carried away by the flood.Another military telegraph operator whose wife and two children, two sisters and his mother and father were lying in a morgue was insane over his loss.One small wooden orphan asylum was crushing crushed in by a brick house falling upon it and all the children within the structure including the attendants and the matrons were killed.

And so the awful list could be continued untill I could fill a million volumes to finish it.The lowest section of the city for days was under fourty feet of water and a big mobolizationcamps and barracks outside the city t at that point were totally destroyed the hundreds of thousands of soldiers and officers there having a most miraculus miraculous escape from drowning or being killed in the wreckage.Thous nds of substantial residences in the eastern and southeastern part of the city were destroyed and the death list there was large.A heavy mota mortal ity list was reporte also among other residents down the city proper as all sections were deeply flooded and all the surviving houses were to a great extent very insecure.

The heaviest losers of by the flood was the Big Girl Knool Grain Elevator Companies, the Abbiecannia mondinia and Calverinia and otherimportant railroads and it would be months probably before any thing like a real esti estimate of the loss of the loss of life and proper r property can be made..The loos told in the first of the list was frightful and the forth coming will be ernormous beyond compt comprehension. All telegraph offices throughout the whole nation were in a plight because of this flood.The wirew comunication with a thousand tons of companies were down in the flooded regions.There was only one wire out of Angelinia Agathia and that was only in use by the Emperor.Tremense gans of men were being put on by all wiring com companies straightening up as many poles and stringing wires as enemy enemy sn snipers willalow them.Two days later the Abbiecannian Western Union had ten wires out by way of Heidi Junction and Dorothy Gale city but two hundred men paid with their lives at the hands of snipers before the work was successful.Not only did the enemy cause the flood but was now doing all possible to prevent repairs to the damage done by it.Ten millions of peo le throughout the nation tried to get telegrams out to Big Girl Knool city and expressed themselves about the Glandelinians in various ways not fit to write here when they found they could not.The night night the conditions had improved sli htly as to wires despite the attemptes of the enemy to frsustrate the work and some of the wiring companies hoped tomove business north and east.A number of newspaper men came up to Angelini xAgathia during the flood on a raft and each man of them had from two hundred to a thousand messages in their possession from people in Big Girl Knool to those out side.Later a number of boats arived to the city and this brought more than two million written messages.It looked as if all of the Nation were trying to send messages into Angolinia Agathia as quick as a wire was re ported in shape it was quaded and men espite the risk from glandelinian sharpshooters were put to work getting messages out and recieving them.

All National correspondents of all outside newspapers were also piling matters up so fast that later all the postal departments refused to recieve any more''Special Deliveries''.The Abbiecannian Western Union continued to handle them however but subject to delay. Two days later many of them were still seen hanging on hooks as no means were seen to send them off.

At all these offices extra clerc clerks had been constantly put on duty untill there was not even the slighrest room for any more of them towork and yet the messages continued to pile up and the correspondents were filing all matters to be gotten out.The wires were being put back into commission outside the main flood zone with remarkable quickless despite the efforts of the enemy to stop their work and soon it was probable that ''Specials would be handed out with greater ease.Every person who was ariving from Big Girl Knool city brought messages to myriads of friends and relatives from those unable to get away because of the flood still retainings its highest water mark out in the country side.Very very few of the messages were of glad tidings for they tell o that the senders were alive, but the mahority of them told of death.

The best of the official news came very slowly and therefore more than confirmed the wildest and most alarming first dispatches. Professor urner chief of the Gemini Bureau said on June the fifteenth that the flood which had developed u into such a devastating torrent was still central all around the Aronburgs run Region and Near Heidi junction but that nevertheless now it was rapidly losing its destructive character.At that it will probably pass as the most disasterous as well as most peculiar floods on record.

On the same day Chief urner recieved the following te e telegram from General Hendro Dargar the Main supreme Person of the Gemini;

''wirst news from Big Girl Knool and other places just recieved by train on the Evan St clare which could get no closer to the flood than six miles where the seas of waters still remaining is chocked with debris and floating houses and strewn thick with dead bodies.As far as within sight there had been two hundred thousand corpses counted from the trains. Hundreds of river craft are in the flood.Nothing can be seen of Heidi Junction.Loss of life and property throughout the whole flooded district extremely appalling.Weather clear and bright throughout country with gentle southwest winds.

General Hendro Dargar.
Gemini supreme Person.''

''''''''''''I fear''''said chief urner''that we have not yet begun to get even the sligh test idea o the loss of lives not only at Big Girl Knool but throughout the flooded region of the country generally...''' The first great loss of life reported in Big Girl Knool city was that at St Anns Church on the All streett where many of the most prom inent citizens and priests and women and children lost their lives and the survivors maimed and imprisoned..Those who were killed were nearest the alter front of the curc church and despite the fa ct that the flood rose and rose and sti ll continued to rise they were making light of the danger jocularly telling each other that they would stay near the Alter under any conditions.Suddenly the wall of the church supporting the alter crashed down into the pulpit killing all of them and demolishing the alter as well.Those in the rear end of the structure who had taken refuge up on the galler and other high points of the church escaped with their lives whether you believe it or not having escaped with their lives in a miraculous manner.The falling roof and walls and the high alter caught on a portion of the gallery the people standing on it dog dodging and resting under the r debris.It required four hours of hard work to get them out. Thecpriests were caught in the crash and killed.

A On thr same street a number of women and children were imprisoned in the residence building near the church by the water and the tons of debris.They were rescued by a relief party headed by the very Mayor of Big n Girl Knool city.Bu M Many of them were fatally hurt.Coming down Rand street and going out to Aberdeen avenue by climbing over the piles of wreckage which had once been residences four hundred bodies were observed in one yard and seven hundred in one large room in another place, while as many as sixty thousand bodies were to be lying singly and in groups in the space of one block.From the identifications found on many of the bodies it was evident they were no residents of ig Girl Knool but had been brought down to the city by the flood from other towns and left in the streets when the flood subsided.Notable among the sufferers was the Mayor of Big Girl Knoolwho had for years had a fine popular country resort specia ly for poor p orphan asylum children and who was known to every visitor to Big Girl Knodl.As the poor old man helped in the relief and rescue work he continually bemoaned the loss of his wife and children and everything he had on the oith.Where his resort once stood near the big Yellow Brick Big Girl Knool Road facing the distant Arunburgs run there is not a trace of a building to be seen only a vast expanse of water and floating debris and bodies .

.His great army pavilion known as the Pandora, the big childrens leasure resort known as the Calverinian Olympia and the big River bath houses were all swept away into the flood.Near the river there were many dead bodies.Only a few of them could as yet be rescu recovered.

Getting to a point where the flood was still raging the party under the sorrowing Mayor went back down Aberdeen street tward the main city. The misery of so many thousands of the poor surviving people all mangled and hoited pressing to points in the city for medical aid was greatly augmented by scorching hot weather and a blistering hot wind.Stopping at what was once a small grocery store to avoid some of the worst of the hear heat the party found it packed with injured and starving.The provision in the store had been ruined by the o waters and there was nothing for the numerous refugees who came hungry and fatigued.This place was like a hospital and not a store.

Further down the street some one in what was a piece of a restaurent which had been entirely submerged by water during the height of the flood were serving out soggy crackers and bread to hungry crowds of people. Indeed that was what all was left and these were soaked with water and the people who were fortunate enough to get these were good and hungry and made no complaint.

On the fourth day after the flood started to recede the flood had receded now also from the lowerportions of the city but the streets nearest the stil continueing flood still contained from two to three and a half foot of water.The big railroad station during the flood had been selected as a place of refuge by large numbers of women and children alone. All the lower windows of the building and a portion of the lower walls of the structure were parcially caved in by the force of the flood and all the time they were marooned there the refugees expected every single moment to be their last.But yet escape was entirely impossible for about the building itself the water was fully eighteen feet deep for days.Many small outhouses and shanties were then floating about but there was no means of making a raft or getting boats.

"Indeed so far as can be learned up to eleven oclock ion the night of June the fourteenth approximately over eight hundred and fifty six thousand bodies had been picked up or at least seen I mean in what can be properly termed the Big Girl Knool flood belt.Several hundred thousand of these bodies were observed by rea railroad and other relief forces operatin along the shore of the flood for a distance of fourty five miles above Big Girl Knool and Heidi's Point.These bodies were reported divided between Little Girl Knool, Calverinia City, River Brook, Cyemberlane Heidivjunction and on up tward the direction of Henrietta.Bulletins recieved in Angelinik AGathia's railroad headquarters stated that many advanced relief workers penetrated some distance across and through the flooded region as far as Heidi jun ction and sent many couriers back to the more solid land.These couriers reported that six hundred thousand dead were found in one space of ten miles outside of ig Girl Knool city and that six hundred thousand corpses were at oneplace in the city itself itself and four hundred thousand in another.They stated that though the situation in Big Girl Knool city as far as they had been able to go was terrible beyond all description yet all these bodies were not of the city itself but of those to me down into the city from towns and villiages fully devastated by the flood.Yet the outer sections of this huge city appeared to be one vast pile of wreckafe and broken houses, except in isolated spots, like a thousand devastated Galvestons in one, and at all points where the city was not totally ruined many morgues had been in improvised.Thousands of the persons who were injured by battling with the worst of floods were said to be dying from lack of care and for want of fresh water but that rescuers and provisions as yet could not reach the place because of the depth of the water outside and for the fact that so many railroads were washed out.They stated that fresh water and medicines were fully needed at once or all of the survivors of the flood would surely perish.Also statements were made that there was not even any food left that was fit to eat that everything was soaked with muddy flood water and that starvation threatened the flood victims who were fortunate enough to escape alive. There was also the gravest danger of looting and nothing could be done to prevent it.The situation at Big Girl Knool city later was that all atrempts to reach the city was still of no avail but outside the flood zone where they could be reached all bodies of the dead were being disposed of as quick as possible. Thousands of them were burned and hundreds of thousands buried or dumped into the river with weights on them.Indeed the safty of the living was a most grave question and nothing that would tend to prevent the outbreak of an ernormous plague was being neglected.It was also found that large numbers of the bodies that still floated on the flood were washed back upon the shore when ever others had just been cleared away and the situation was thus being rendered worse th n than before.Therefore it can never be known how many will how many lost their lives as nearly a hundred villiages and towns had been totally wiped out altogether.

All efforts possible were being made to pick up the dead bodies that one even was floating on the remaining flood in the country.This was aoful hard and most dangerous work for you would have to go out in skiffs and boats and rafts to fish for the bodies in the raging flood and few men could be found with sufficiently strong nerves to last at it more than thirty minutes or less at a time.All of the bodies not flo floating on the water were already badly decomposed swollen to ernormous proportions, and of so dark a hue that it was impossible for any one to tell except by a hair when any hair was visible whether the corpses were those of human beings or not.

The most determined efforts by high local and military aurthorities were made to bring about a semblance of order a although the situation still continued to be most discouraging.The work of disposing of the dead progressed slowly because of the danger even with v every available man and horse engaged in hauling the bodies to burial places and fires. The Mayor of Big Girl Knool city repeated his assertion that the number of victims of the city of Big Girl Knool would reach 25,000 and many estimates were as hirh as thirty thousand despite the fact that hundreds of thousands of bodies were found in the wreckage.It was also learned that two hundred and seventy telegraph operators employed by one company out of two hundred and seventy two lost their lives in the flood.The str stench from so many of the decomposing bodies and carcasses of animals and the like as well from the awful slimeand filth left in the streets of the city by the receding waters made the work among so many of the dead a most fearful task.The thousands of men hal handling the bodies were changed every three or four hours and indeed hundreds o were overcome while engaged in the grewsome work.

The air was literally poisoned by the fumes from the numbers of decom posing bodies of the dead and it literally threatened to reap a hav harvest for thousand s of those injured or made sick as a results of the flood succumbed to the effects of the poisoned air.Every effort was being made to get the women and children of the city away from the lower portions of the city and away from the town altogether before a general pestilence should break out but the flood outside the city barred all such purposes.Immense loads of lime and other disinfectants were needed most badly and only a little of this had managed to arive by boats.The lack of horses cows and mules was one of the most serious features of the dreadful situation for better progress could have been made in caring off the myriads of dead but such animals to draw carts and wagons were not at all available. There were no attempts whatever made to ind identify any of the dead for the majority of the bodies were decomposed far beyond any means of recognition except when some article in the pockets gave the name the body was thrown into the river or buried and burned unrecorded.

Five hundred disguised Glandelinian soldiers caught robbing the dead and private property were shot dead by the military. It was believed that summary execution would immediately put a stop to this practice but it did not. The Glandelinian disguised roober robbers had become bold and bolder and bolder cutting off fingers and ears of the dead women and even the fingers of little girls to obtain jewels and rings. One of these Glandelinian ghouls who was arrested had in his pockets thirty three childrens and two womens fingers hacked from their hands on each of which was a most valuable rings.

The Mayors report to the headquarters at Angelinia Agathia advised the abandoning of all works at Big Girl Knool and i he said that according to his opinion Big Girl Knool was destroyed far beyond its ability to recover. his did not dishearten the business men however for they declared the city will be rebuilt on account of its great losses.

All the sightseers and all those who did not come to help in the relief work were refused admittance to even as far as the edge of the flooded regions as already there were too many persons there for the meager supply of food food and all of those in the flooded regions were almost perfectly devoid of any shelter whatever. And even yet the full or any amount of the water supply had not been restored.

For all points throughout the flooded regions a new census was suggested as a full means of learning the actual loss of life and property. It was said that in no other way could anything whatever like an accurate estimate of the casulaties of the flood be made.

Relief parties and others committees from the other sections of Calv r Calverinia began to arive and as usual they were so much in numbers and to a certain extent in the way of the people of Angelinia Agathia and porothy Gale cities that they seemed for a time to be a full impediment to the prompt relief which they themselves were so desirous of offering and most of them could not reach the other places which were cut off by the flood. Many of the relief expeditions had committees large enough to consume one per cent even ten per cent of the provisions which they themselves brought. The relief sent from Pandora arived on the 12th of June and these were distributed as fast as possible to the many refugees who had come from the flooded regions. It consisted of long lines of cars of ice and provisions and came by way of Pandora. The greatest trouble of all seemed to be that those of the millions who were in the greatest need through no fault of those in charge of the distribution were the last to recieve the aid. Hundreds of thousands of them were so badly maimed and injured and also sick that they were unable to even apply to the many relief committees and the committees were so overwhelmed by hundreds of thousands of of direct applications that they were unable to en send out any messengers.

The wounded refugees which had been brought into the cities that either survived the flood or were not touched by the flood everywhere needed the attention of doctors and physicians and despite every desperate effort there was great danger that a large number of them would die because of the sheer physician impossibility to afford the the them the aid necessarory to save their lives.

Every man in the city of Big Girl Knool able to work and work was also engaged in the work of relief with all the willingness and energy he was capable of but despite their utmost endeavors they could notkeep up with the increase of the miserable conditions which surrounded them. And pure water itself could only be obtained by abled bodied men and then with the greatest difficulty. Doctor James Stanchlin who was also busily engaged in the relief work declared there were three thousand people in two big hospitals who were without water. They had been making coffee and cooking what food they had secured in the flood waters and using that as their only beverage.

Even and sharp contrast painful contrasts in all human nature were brought out by the duties which devolved upon stricken Big Girl Knool. The Mayor of Big Girl Knool was the richest man in the city and the most right righteous. And his assistant was a favorite in society of the churches. These two men were among those who put lime and other disinfectants upon them selves went into the morgues and worked for hours and hours in the most dangerous and grewsome tasks of all the handling of the decomposed corpses. It was indeed a kind of work which a man with the stoutest heart would have shrank from. And these two great men volunteered for it.

The people of Big Girl Knool as a whole dealth heroically with their most great emergency. Not even the slightest exceptions were made.

much exercise of great force was deemed necessary in the hours of con fusion which followed the awakening. The citizens worked but the city had recieved quite a number of Glandelinian prisoners sent under guard. Therefore when the citizens organized for the burial of the many dead that had come down into the city by the current of the flood some of the prisoners horrified held back and refused to help.

"You Glandelinians are responsible for this disaster and therefore you will have to do it. Come we want you." one of the citizens said to the Glandelinian prisoners.

"We are prisoners of war and do not have to work." was the curt and hasty reply. Shots rang out. A little later and thse and again the lesson was speedily repeated. After that every Glandelinian when called upon took up the duty assigned upon him. At a general meeting of the relief committees reports were constantly recieved from many of the various wards. The chairmen called for armed men to assist in getting more Glandelinian prisoners to bury the dead and clear the wreckage and all the arrangements possible were made to supply the demand. There were plenty of volunteers among the citizens for this service but not enough weapons.

Many of the surviving people told war correspondents and news paper men of getting out of their houses in the lowest sections of the city just in the very proper time. They told of seeing processions of people men women and chilsren struck by swirling debris while engulfed in the roaring waters and all were crushed to death before their very eyes. One brave man was seen to be cut off from all of the members of his family just as he had succeeded in rescueing them and saw them sink beneath the water on the other side of a strong barrier. He turned in to help rescue others who were in peril and did not care whether he perished or not. One man was seen to carry his six years old child in his arms from his his floating house only to see a swirling beam strike the child on the head killing hereinstantly when they were in the waters. He himself suffered a broken leg and bruised body. Eighteen hundred persons were caught and trapped in a big Catholic Cathedral and it was all presumed th at all was lost as many have been reported dead who were known to ha ve been inside that big church which despite its great size and height was swept away entirely.

Many of the bravest of the men who were in Angelinia Agathia at the time the flood devastated Big Girl Knool city swam or floated the flood on the days after it receded from Big Girl Knool to reach their families whom they fortunately found to be alive at Big Girl Knool.

M bat of them had swam from pier to pier on the still remaining railroad bridges and at each they had rested.

In the big fire Heidi Junction Telegraph signal Station which stands about two hundred and thirty feet high on strong firm rocky ground about three hundred and sixty persons sought refuge from the dreadful flood. Many were thre there whose homes at Big Girl Knool had been swept away by the rushing torrent and others were residents of Big Girl Knool who had t come to the outer limits of the city in their endeavors to reach their imperiled fami lies. Among the latter was one of the Mic-Hollester and Pandor a railroad managers. He stated that when these two hundred or more refugees spent three weeks in the building they nearly faced starvation and almost died of thirst. The supply of fresh water had soon been exhausted and therefore dirty as it was some efforts had been made to xsecure. flood waters by catching it on buckets suspended into the torrent from the top of the structure. The experiment was a success in a way but it demonstr ated a remarkable incident to the force of the flood without detatching the bucket from the chain it took out its bottom and therefore the buckets could not be used as it could not contain anything without a bottom. several attempts however with a stronger bucket resulted in a supply of water which was sufficient to quench the thirst of the excited refugees. At times when the flood waves grew wilder the spray was shot skyward over one hundred and sixty feet, and usually splashed those inside who were nearest the windows.

In Big Girl Knool City itself not including the others, two days after the great flood had subsided the bright moonlight enabled the many rescueing parties and also the Glandelinian prisoners to continue by night their work of securing the dead and of relieving the injured and the needt. As far as said before no estimate whatever as to the number of killed or drowned could be made. Estimates of the missing from Big Girl Knool city itself ranged all the way from six thousand to over twenty five thousand persons. Many bodies were carried out to all portions of the country by the receding waters of the flood, and never to be recovered.

While the ernormous searching work cons continued along the devastated railroad lines was kept up for a distent of thirty seven miles or as far as the still remaining flood would allow it it would never be known how many were fully lost owing to the understanding that there was such a large territory of flood swept country that was still under deep water for more than two hundred miles.All over the country many searching parties had walked and rode the shores of the flood in search for dead bodies and many were recovered but none of them were identified.
And in the meantime on June the 12th a dispatch was sent from Big Girl Knool vier via A gd Angelinia Ag athia containing this awful and shocking information which showed the cruel nature of the war Maddened Glandelinian soldiery;

"Ten thousand disguised Glandelinian ghouls, eight thousand of them Zimmermannians, and two thousand of them wheelers were caught after robbing dead bodies and trying to massacre refugee women and children they put up a desperate fight but they were deaptured.Their pockets were filled with jewelry.These Glandelinian vandals were not shown any quarter and were all shot down.In about all since the disaster had occured about fifty thousand Glandelinian ghouls despoilers of the dead have been shot down and some Glandelinians who attacked women and children were shot dom in the very act by the enraged citizens.Fierce and stern martial law reigns here.Friends who like the soldiers help them and therefore fiends like these rebel bussards who thrive at such times as these are s not shown the slightest mercy whatever and they are given no trial. The orders are to shoot them down and the orders are obeyed.
Occasionallly large hords hordes of disguised Glandelinians who were said to be mostly Zimmermannians attacked squads of soldiers guarding the big hospitals on t the night three days after the flood had receded..... within two hours scores of thousands of shots were fired and it was es said by reports that sixteen hundred of the those Glandelinians were killed.And every hour or half hour during the same night other shooting affrays were reported at the military headquarters.The following morning vandals even attacked helpless injured little girls in a hospital and murdered them in the most cold blooded manner.However the christian soldiers who were on guard finally caught them and bles blew their heads Of hundreds upon hundreds of reports of many similar cases had reached the headquarters of the military proving that throughout the region of the flooded country the disguised Glandelinians were rampant.Even eighteen hundred maruaders caught time and again looting the bodies and wrecking stores and other places the next morning were killed by the soldiers. Yet despite it all the vandals and ghouls have become bolder and bolder even cutting off fingers and ears and other members of the bodies to secure valu able jewelry.Throughout the region of the flood the very Glandelinian ghouls were continually holding ancorgie over the dead and at many times shot it out with the christian guards.The majori ty of these were Zimmermannians and others in disguise but there were also the fierce Charians and Scooldiers who took part in this awful desecration of the many dead.Some of them were even Tus Turmermai Turman Turmermannians and many of them had managed to leave from the Glandelinian armies and entered the devastated regions under th guise of "e relief work and not only did they rob thr dead by but they mangled the bodies in order to secure their booty.A party of two hundred Glandelinians were seen return ing from a desperate looting expedition.They had stripped the corpses and even stores and other places of all valuables and the pockets of many of these looters were bul bulging out with the very fingers of the dead which had been so cut off because they were so swollen that the rings could not be removed.Incensed at this desecration of the dead the loot looters were shot down after a hard fight and it was determined t q that allthose found in the act of robbing the dead shall be shot without a trail.During this wholesale robbing of the dead not only were fingers and even heads cut off but ears were stripped from the heads in order to secure anything of value.Private citizens who could had also endeavored to prevent the robbingof the dead and on many occasions have killed the offenders.One time two hundred were killed in a fewminutes and another time nearly a thousand.Among the many incidents of one of the nights was the besieging of t a force of Abbisan ians who were guarding a ruined orphan asylum.They were surrounded by ahorde of armed Glandelinian vandals who came to avenge the slaughter of their comr ades. It was said that several hundred thousand shots were exchanged.The cp Captian in command j killed fourteen of the vandals with his pistol and about nearly two thousand were killed by the soldiers.Every minute during the night a fresh vandal shooting affar affray was reported.It also became evident that the burial of the dead would have to be abandoned because of the rebels even frustrating that work and shooting down their own comrades whom they saw doing the work under guard and shooting the guards also.The heat of those june days were intense and so intense t hat bodies decomposed before they could be taken from the debris.Then torches instead of shovels became the order and when ever bodies could be seen in the ruins,the ruins were quickly lighted and big fires soon spread everywhere and lisked up the dead.One hundred thousand people were at present at thia spot all waiting for transportation over to Angelinia Agathia and others for day to break so as to permit the final burial of corpses and the disposal of the vandals.But the last of them were waiting for the chance to get as far away as possible from the terrible scenes of the inundations.Men who will work for even a little while were found very scarce and those who were willing had a desire to be h the boswhich did not help matters in the least.However organized forces of the Glandelinian prisoners were being still sent on the way and strong forces of soldiers also to t stop the work of the ghouls.

Despite all the efforts of soldiers throughout the city to stop them Glandelinian thieves,have still continued the work of robbing the bodies of dead.Many were caught outside of the city at the horrid work and when searched the fingers of little girls were found in their possession with rings on them.A ory of lynch then was met with great favor.From lamp posts and even telephone posts and trees dangled the bullet riddled bodies of these Glandelinian fiends who rifled the bodies of the flood dead.On Rickson street was observed a long row of bodies vandals shot while caught robbing the bodies of the dead.Many of the vigilantes caught the Glandelinian fiends at work,they were stood up on the streets edge and executed.There the bodies lay d festering in the sun and there was no provisions for burying this class of dead. But the more vandals were shot the more the military soldiers were in danger.From every guard duty post a soldier was fired at in ambush and shot down, th the lives of citizens were not safe and houses every day some where burst into flame.One Glandelinian who happened to be an Omarian was caught at work cutting the ring finger from the body of a ten year old girl near one of the streets which was thicker strewn with deads He was strung up tothe branch of a tree with ropes but immediately rescued by a squad of his own comrades and his own executers strung up instead.Even outside the city and out in the country where the bodies of the flood victims lay on the edge of the flood was the main harvest field of these Glandelinian ghouls who were armed to the teeth and fought it out successfully with guards and soldiers to a T.And whatever of value is taken even the bodies of the soldiers are robbed.There was not enough soldiers on hand to stop this awful work of Glandelinian vandalism as the main government aurthorities had all they could do to watch the movements of the armies and keep them reinforced and to protect their own property.There were two hundred thousand bodies found floating in the Mc-Allister run many of these being cast upon the shore.All these are raked as these had been robbed of whatever aeticles of value they have,in the shap of watches, rings and even money.No efforts are made to take the jewlery off for the very fingers are cut and the rings slipped or forced off the stumps.There was no color line whatever in this line of work of desecration desecration.
Fever is still spreading among the survivors and the strongest of the medical staffs are unable to cope with it.200,000 are ill with a strange plague.....
And what little water there is is polluted with disease germs and the pestilence is spreading with alarming speed.Nothing can stop it as all efforts to aid is cut off by the flood and though the arival of doctors and supplies come and still come by the wholesale wholesale wholesale wholesale but the flood is in front of the places where the survivors are in the greatest danger and nothing can be done.And where medical aid can be sent the enemy prevent it.
All the parents are warned under severe penalty to keep away from all the dead wagons into which their children have been tumbled and long barrel ed rifles back up the warning.
This is done in a christian spirit and not meant to be brutal.The safty of the millions still living especially of the survivors makes this course necessary for the hot sun of a dry June ,oath and an unusually dry one at that has already breeding disease and pestilence from the many hundreds of thousands of dead bodies that are decaying.The whole city of Big Girl Knool was and is still a great charnel hell.The thousands of dead wagons hurry from place to place filled with the awful cargo and then speed away to the river docks and other points where the scow of bodies are then dumped into thousands of scows and towed u out into the deeper portions of the river.The waters of the river floated the weighted bodies for a few moments and then swallowed them up.There was no time time for services, no prayers, no tears, just a 'splash' 'splash' as the corpses are thrown to their last resting pla ce.Then the funeral cortege of long lines of scows return to thedocks for another good load.

The awful rifles and winchesters quell the resentment which arose in the breasts of the heart broken relatives as many other bodies are loaded into the lines of dead wagons.It was all done by the orders of the Mayor of Big Girl Knool who said: "The living survivors must be protected from pestilence."

Still it is a harvest for the ghouls.In the ruins of many a store and houses hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of goods had been carried away by the rascals.These human vultures looted when they could fought it out with the avenging soldiers with surprising success and the staring eyes of the dead had no terror for them whatever.

One of the busines s men of the most excellent standing(he stood up and intelligence told one of the Angelinia Agathia news paper men on a boat bound for porothy Gale(a while) some time after the disaster that the banks in Big Girl Knoolcity were bankrupted on account of the inundation.. and refused to pay out any sums whatever.He declared he had been in and out many times trying to get his own money and was also on the relief committee.However he had no reason to tel tell an untruth nor did he have any attention whatever of telling any.Yet however his statement was without facts.The banks of Big Girl Knool had paid the depositors in full and all to those who wanted their money to repair the damage done to their houses, o with many hundreds of thousands of stories. The strange disposition to jup at conclusions, to repeat rumors as facts was a most common failing.

Indeed so ormormous and terrible had been the calamity that no story of escape or tale of horror seemed impossible. one told Newspaper men that the city had been buried under three hundred feet of water.The news paper men looking the situation over knew it was a falsehood for the water line in the highest point of the city was really observed on the walls of the strongest buildings and if the flood had been that deep over the city there would not be a building left now not even a foundation.

Even when newspaper men and war correspondents reached the city the thing was too vast altogether to make the slightest attempt to investigate any of the stories, the features of each wrecked building and every seperate happenings of one hundred thousand happenings. They were forces to use their own judgement about whatever a man was ready to tell.Indeed every prolix person they interviewed was a perfect loss of time.They however asked hurried questions they did not have the slightest time to compare one mand story with another.The result was that hundreds of thousands of buildings were reported wrecked or washed away by the flood which were totally unharmed. Immense numbers of persons who were said to be dead were still alive.All shooting affrays that never happened were accepted as truthful. nd supplementing this gross exaggeratin exaggeration by men of high degrees by officials by militia officers and the reports of thousands of persons who believed neighbors and relatives and the like were dead because they had not seen them one the great constitutional liar.

Indeed this great flood calamity was the turning house of this liar he bursts his chains(whether he was chained or not) as it is said it, the devil will do in the last days of the world and for several days an d nightsran roit in the city of Big Girl Knool...

Yet the most fantastic efforts of the spinners of yarns could not beat the awful truth.It was simply a whole sale lying about details of the general facts were far beyond exaggeration, except by an hotel clerk o in porothy Gale who reported to anxious inquirers on the night after the flood had receded in the most monotonous tone this information:

"Angelinia Agathia, porothy Gale, Heidi junction, Big Girl Knool and ten thousand cities and towns are wiped out by the flood. The flood extended twenty thousand miles and was a thousand feet deep near Heidi junction. The survivors are marooned. ll who can must leave Calverinia the day before to morrow for the whole nation will be flooded and burned up.100,000,000 are drowned and sixtymillion injured."

Curiously enough a ll the stories of the greatest horror possible were the chief delight of the exaggerators.They did not tell joyfully that every one in a flooded building had been saved, but that they were all buried or drowned in the ruins and that only surviving dogs howled over the masses of wreckage.One man went a out the worst places of the wrecked city and babbles to the Abbieannian soldiers that he was a war correspondent by profession who had been sent to Big Girl Knool on private buisness.He said he saw the dreadful results of the flood and had afterwards formed a corps of many reporters but he finished by saying to one soldier:

"But whence comes from this city so much exaggeration.One reporter told me he had cabled one million four hundred thousand words to the Angelinia Agathia Daily Times and had compiled a list of four-hundred and fourty four identified dead citizens of Big Girl Knool city.Wha why was it not probable sir that this reporter could have told me that he was cabling19,000,000 words on one small sheet of paper with big red letters and had a list of one billion dead!"It would have made the exaggeration bigger."

The soldiers laughed and so did the correspondent, who went on to say: "If the city is so full of liars as this it is of no use for me to be hear here as I cannot learn anything worth while."

when it came to the stories of the Glandelinian ghouls robbing the dead and stores the favorite yarn was that so well dressed strangers and nuns and priests had been also suspected of being vandals and that in each in stance the soldiers with unerring aim had shot the ghouls to death.and these stories were believed by all who repeated them and yet no one ever found the soldiers of or the ghouls in question. At the same time ghouls and Glandelinians did loot and looters were shot by hundreds and thousands but the real stories of how, or when were lost were lost in the stupendous background of death and destruction.

Illustrating the human weakness for such exaggeration the man who insisted the dead mambered four hundred thousand was the very same manwho asserted that in two years of war the Abbieannian country will be giving freedom to child slaves and the war wswas only growing in fury with no success for the christian side any none nearer than before.....

Another day after all this desolation came this "Beautiful News":

"he burial of the countless dead is supposed to go steadily on but hidden Glandelinian sniners and ghouls and others fire con the workers and do all they can to prevent the success in the purpose.All the corpses are in the open along the shores of the great flood still existing and these which have not been removed by searchers are torn bodily open by the vandals.The labor of clearing away the debris in the city itself in search of more bodies began at Thirty first Street and Aldbrne Avenue one of the worst wrecked parts of the city and so many bodies are found here that it is evident they came from other towns washed down upon the city by the waters.Two thousand prisoners ariving under strong guard as well as nearly three thousand volunteer citizens were put to work and in half an hour thirty five thousand unindentified corpses mostly women and children were found within the space of three hundred yards square in wreckage that is too strange to belong at all to the houses of our grand city.Thousands of whole families were found dead piled in the wrecka wreckage in the most indescribable confusion.

Old women and yound young old men and children crushing by the swirling rushing timbers were by scores and hundreds and thousands dragged from debris not belonging to the city six to twenty deep.Aged fathers were clinging to many more robust forms, ch ldren clinging to mothers skirts, young girls with their arms around brothers and sisters and mothers clasp ing babies in their arms.Indeed these were the horrid and melancholy sights seen by those digging among these ruins.From what is viewed here three quarters of the wreckage in the city came from other towns and villages which shows the force the flood must have had.In dozens and hundreds the bu bodies were turned up by pick and shovel, rake and ax. The body of one woman with her children clinging to her torn dress had an identification makr mark which was a letter and also the place where she had lived.It was addressed as; 1456.st Peters Street.Angelinia Agathia..nd her o body found in Big Girl Knool a hundred and fourty miles south.Away to the left south and north of the city the wreckage stretched miles and miles.Popular sentiments n insisted that most of the wreckage which contained the greatest number of bodies be burned but the military aurthorities had hesitated to give the order for fear of starting a big fire that nothing could stop.

six days had passed since the flood subsided and stilleverything was total

Paralysis. Even still it was the crisis period. And just now it seemed as as if the crisis was not going to pass safely. What had not been accomplished since the flood left the city was amazing and it was almost as incredible as some of the effects of this awful visitation which was without precedent. The surviving people were too sad and panic stricken and too horrified and did little but go about dazed and bewildered and only gathering a few hundred of the bodies which were in their way.

However all prisoners that had arrived under guard were now at work and bodies which still lay exposed in the streets and which were so necessary to be removed to somepoint lest they be stepped on were disposed of in any way possible. It was a prob problem of mortality such as no nation ever faced. The danger of the pestilence was increasing wildly and seemed about to take possession of what the awful flood had left. Therefore immediate disposition of all these bodies was absolutely necessary to save the living and therefore more and more were pressed into the self service at the point of the bayonet. Brandy and other strong drinks by the bottle bucketfull was carried to these men and prisoners and they were drenched with it, and the stimulant was kept at hand and applied ci continuously and in this way only was it possible for the stoutest hearted prisoner or citizen to work in such awful surroundings. Under the directions of military officers thousands of bodies already collected were loaded to barges of burned in the streets and those loaded on boats were taken far off down the river to be cast into the water.

A systematic effort had been begun to obtain the identifications of the dead brought down into the city from other towns so that information could be used for legal purposes only especially for the purpose to find out true circumstances of the freakish force of the waters. And therefore partial figures from those taken from all kinds of strange wreckage made the number of strange victims found rise as high as nearly five hundred thousand in and outside the city. This is regarded as only those washed into the city by the flood and not the dead people of the city itself. And the work of clearing all the streets of the accumulated debris was proceeding somewhat more rapidly although wide regions still remained untouched. Eighty thousand prisoners and eighteen thousand citizens are ve wielding pick and shovel. Many strangers who managed to come to the city in spite of the flood as sight seers before strict regulations wer e put in force have now been compelled to work at the point of the bayonet. bodies till from strange towns are being const n s constantly unearthed and it is estimated that at least least twenty thousand to two hundred thousand more victims still lie beneath all these strange ruins.

It is feared fully two months will have to elapse before the city itself can be cleaned. But however the city in the business section is slightly beginning to look like itself again. some street cars are beginning to be in operation in the business part of the city and some water service has been resumed ..."

CHAPTER EIGHTY FIVE...

T THE AWFUL SCENES AND INCIDENTS OF THE TIME OF TERROR IN BIG GIRL KNOOL CITY, AND WHEN CITIES AND TOWNS AND WHOLE VILLAGES ,RE DESTROYED AND DEVASTATED WHAT AWFUL CARNIVALS OF CRIME ARE COMMITTED BY THE GLANDELINIAN GHOULS AND VANDALS..... THE SURVIVORS SUFFER WHEN IN TERRIBLE NEED. OTHER INCIDENTS OF THE GREAT HORROR.

MANY soldiers and officers with their families near Big Girl Knool city where the mobolisation camps and barracks and fortifications were wiped out had thrilling experiences which can be recorded here. One of the officers whose name was Dagon Stoneman and who was in this camp when the flood started and when the whole camp was almost swept away could be most interesting. He was there with his family a wife and four children near the streets of Company M.

"The flood started later in the afternoon and lasted four days and was very bad but not as yet devastating" said C Colonel Stoneman "but by the fourth day early in the evening the flood waters became furious and was carrying wreckage by the hundreds of thousands of tons from where I knew not where which acted as avalanches of batter ing rams against our strongly erected wooden barracks. I left my own house which was threatening to go before the crashing lumber jams and went to a tall brick barrac s of three stories which had a strong basement and which stood at the corner of the street of Company L. In order to get there I had to wade through the wreckage and rushing waters and carried first my wife and then my children over on my head. We stayed on the first floor watching the race of lumber and then were horrified to see so many bodies coming down on the flood waves. Soon to our horror and surprise the waters rose and rose untill it became toohigh to remain on the first floor it haven risen ten feet in three hours and the current was growing stron er. Then we were forced to the second floor second floor and stayed there during the remainder of the flood nearly for three days an x and a week more untill we witnessed the full sweeping away of the encampments and the loss of lives among countless soldiers. The flood receded more slowly than it began and then we t returned to one isolated brick barracks which was still standing and waded through three feet of water. I carried my wide wife and children on my shoulders my feet and body being in the water. I had since learned that three thirds of the soldiers of that vast camp were the only survivors. Indeed the scenes of desolation was simply awful beyond description. For many miles or as far as I could see in a district of country which had been thickly settled by camps not a barrackswas standing except three and the region was strewn with wreckage of buildings borne from towns and villages by the flood and also from Big Girl Knool City.

Masses of timbers were piled up in windrows or strewn like seas of wreckage everywhere and countless numbers of dead bodies of soldiers, men women and children were to be seen among all this wreckage. Still this wreckage was still borne on the top of deep waters way out on the countryside and where the camps had been was still three feet deep and did not seem to intend to recede any further and we had to swim to some point to seek better shelter and something to eat and therefore headed for distant Big Girl Knool City. When we arived there we observed that the same utter desolation and horror existed there. All that we met in the streets when questioned by me said they had lost everything. Later when we had time we walked down to the outside section of the city and saw dead bodies piled up everywhere and far beyond as far as eye could reach a perfect sea of water jammed in many places by insense stretches of floating wreckage and houses. We counted over two hundred floating houses in one stretch and not far from us we also counted nearly twenty two thousand bodies within sight in the water as we walked along the shore of the great flood. As we did so we wondered how it could be possible for enemy engineers to have been able to accomplish the making of so ermormous and ve devastating a flood and hoe they could have been so hard hearted enough to do so in the bargain. We finally got to the Mic-Hollester Run River and left for Angelinia Agathia on a boat and arived there at three thirty in the afternoon. I immediately took the Aronburgs Limited for Pandora Abbieannia."

Up to the time this officer left Angelinia Agathia two hundred and eighty thousand bodies had been burned or cremated and sunk into the river waters with weights fastened on them. Of the camps only the strong stone and concrete fortifications and outbuildings survived the flood

at least they were damaged but not swept away.These fortifications known as fortress Hiddmanner proved a haven of refuge for nearly ten thousand home driven and flood driven refugees but women and children alone. this immense fortification with its many armed buildings, supply houses and generals and other officers headquarters and barns occupied four teen blocks.The grounds of the fortress was surrounded by a twenty foot stone gravel and dirt breastworks surmounted by the greatest cannons and which had withstood the worst cloud bursts, storms and blizzards and other past floods in big Girl Knools history up to the occurance of this recent flood.This wall of breastworks is now entirely gone with the exception of a few small sections which could be seen standing like marking pillars to show where the line of breastworks should be.The cannons each of which had weight weighed about twenty tons can be found no where and everything belonging to the batteries was swept anyway.No one had been refused admittance to the fortifications during the awful days and nights of the fearful flood. even refugee Glandelinian prisoners whose interment camps had been wipedout by the inundation were taken in without question and the fortifications were thrownopen to all who sought its protecting wings. The officers and soldiers and even the wives of these officers went among the terrified sufferers whispering words of cheer offering what scant clothing that could be found in the place to those who had been stripped almost naked by the flood and calmly admonishing the terror stricken refugees to have faith in God and tried to restore normal conditions for the children who kept the place in an uproar from their screams of fright.These poor frightened children however grew wild with fright however as the flood raged and raged with greater force and they cried and screamed and shrieked until the nerves of the other refugees even the Glandelinian prisoners were shattered and a dreadful panic seemed to threaten them.The officers however by becoming stern and severe managed to restore quiet and told the children just to calm them that if they did not remain quiet and stop their fears they would be left to the mercy of the flood and that this was neither the time and place for such awful scenes.The children became calmer and listened attentively.The fright and excitement had been increased before this by the fall of the north wall ofone of the structures in which the children and women and had sought refuge the wall having given way before the pressure of rushing wreckage.

Before the flood began the fortifications and the camps was to have opened for the arival of a large number of newly inlested scod soldiers that were to come on various trains and many of whom had already arived at the camps.There were over fourty hundred officers in the camp when the flood began.However when so many refugees began to reach the strong fortifications and ask for protection an attempt was made to keep a register of the towns they had been swept from by the flood but then the flood driven refugees began to arive in hundreds and therefore there was no time to ask the names of the towns they came from.Many were dragged in through the small windows of the fortresses and others were dragged through six feet of water into the lower portions of the building which had been abandoned because of the sudden invasion of the waters. Thousands were rescued by ropes ropes from floating treetops or snatched from floating houses, roofs, rafts and wreckage or dragged from the water and taken from house flats and floating doors and furniture as this was all u hurled in the rushing torrent through the grounds of the fortresses.

One un was rescued from the flood. she had been seperated from the rest of her Companions in a fros the ruins of a Catholic ospited when it went down before the jams of wreckage and sweeping waters. she was in the rushing waters but managed to swim to a floating house top to which she reached but the roof soon struck some obstruction and she was then thrown off.the poor woman was tossed by the force of the flood upon a floating door and clinging to this frail support she was thrown against the walls of one of the fortifications and was pulled into the building by some of the Glandelinians themselves. While Angelinian soldiers were then carr caring for the sister a young brother of the sister who was a Priest battled with swirling wreckage and waters while clinging to only the floating limb of what had once been a spruce tree and he was just outside the walls of the fortress.He heard the cry of a number of women and children near by and finally rescued some of the children who floated nearest to him even at the risk of his own life.A rescueing party was sent out from the fore fortress in a strong rowboat these going on in response to the cries for help and found the young priest and the children and carried them saftly to the fortress.A man woman and their family were swept from their shattered home from Big Girl Knool city and became seperated from the wreckage by the strength of the rushing waters and wreckage of other houses that collided with each other with terrific force and noise. The man was rescued after difficulty and taken to one of the fortifications. is only covering was an old bed sheet which one of the soldiers about the fortresss could give him. The only dry garment to be found for his wife was a soldiers uniform that was too old to be worn any more by the military.His wife put this on and during the long hours of the night and days of the time of the roaring flood went about the building doing what they could for their fellow sufferers. They never found their children who were swept to their deaths in the flood.

It was also in this structure that one of the head members of the Geminian Association found a refuge.His home was in the lowest section of Big Girl Knool city was destroyed and had in it about thirty eight persons and he was the only survivor the rest having lost their lives. The Chieftian of the Gemini was for t hree days and nights carried on drift and wreckage untill it came up to the fortress and then he was rescued from soldiers on the roof. He was badly hurt and was now being taken care of in one of the Base Hospitals.

Everywhere in the city and elsewhere after the gradual subsiding of the flood the survivors were stupified. Nevertheless the surviving women of the city engaged in work which was without precedent in any relief work for they made many bags into which they placed big lumps of camphor and these bags had strings by which they could be fastened at the head of the relief workers so they rested under the lip by the nose. These were worn by the many men and prisoners who were so continually engaged in the search for and cremation of so many bodies.

Wherever they could be made in the country and in the streets of the ruined city there were countless pyres where human bodies and the car casses of many of the dead animals were disposed of by fire. Seperate funeral pyres were designated for human bodies and animal carcasses and yet the work did not progress very rapidly because of either the hinderance of the flood or by Mu Hidden enemy snipers and ghouls who fired on the workers.

Ninty five per cent or more of all the hundreds of thousandsof bodies that were recovered were completely naked even women and children. The terrible current of the flood stripped all the victims of all traces of clothing whatever and even articles that might lead to identification.

From the fact that so many children were found in the floating wreckage that had slave brands on them it was evident that the flood had swept away child slave plantations and other places not leaving a single soul alive to tell the tale of the horrible work of the flood.Another remarkable fact of the flood beside that of bodies and wreckage from other towns being brought into Big Girl Knool City was another which showed the irresistible force of the flood in packing the wreckage of other towns in t he city and the debris in t he highe t mounds imaginable in the portions where the buildings were strong enough to resist their pressure and that of the water and in this wreckage was seen a great amount of water remaining.Ten days of hot sunshine and strong hot blistering winds and nights of hot still weather failed to draw the water held by these jams and windrows and mountians of wreckage which formed into wi water tight ridges formed immense tanks to hold the remains of the water which had flooded the city.While in the City the ground allaround these ridges was dry and hard the removal of the top ridges disclosed many feet of water.

One war correspondent tells general vivian this story;

"It is easy for you and a l other generals to see if you was there as awful as the widespread calamity of flood has been a few hours or more of delay w would have c more than doubled the loss of life. It had es been proposed by the government to send in vess almies to for tify the devastated districts before the flood occured and only a twelve hours delay in the flood would have allowed the arival of ten million soldiers with little experience to battle with the flood conditions which swp swept so many into eternity.Another lesson should be impress ed upon the minds of the people everywhere --as long as this warrages war rages not to be overconfident of their security for no telling what enemies like the Glandelinians will do."

The following story o f one officers experience and that of his family on those fateful days and nights in the flood torn encampments could mad make a stirring and wonderful scene of the flood;

To the Angelinia Agathia News;

Allow me to hand to the National goverment and to all my friends a story of my experience during the a f awful flood and I certainly feel very fortunate to be alive to tell the tale. The flood rose to its might at about the sixth day of its duration. I was pacing up and down the hall of my headquarters in the encampments with my wife and three children and a number of other soldiers who had come to visit us from Heidi Bayou. As I felt the house start to move and the roof cracking from the shaking of the building I looked up and saw that the ceiling was about to crash in upon us. Indeed probably at once a thousand thoughts must have passed through my mind for I saw the great danger that we were in and knew as I looked outside and viewed the raging flood all around us that if the flood kept rising any more my home would soon float off or go to pieces before the constant bombardment of the wreckage and the rushing waters, and that we would all probably perish beneath it. At about three oclock in the afternoon the water came flooding in through the windows of the second story and we were driven up to the attic and water was pouring in upon the floors in every room of the house. There we saw that the only chance to save our lives was to desert the place at once and take our chances on the drifting and swirling wreckage which was piling up afloat under the front gallery of my home with the water about fifteen feet deep and I felt also that I had no time to lose. The rush and roar of the flood and the noise of the wreckage was getting furious. I told my wife and the children to stand ready for me to place them on the stronger masses of the floating debris. Therefore as I opened the top window of the building we were nearly all swept off our feet by the water which suddenly came rushing in. And indeed the sight before me was fearful more fearful than I could ever describe to save my life. Rushing past at a furious gait while sticking up and pointing in every direction were the swirling rushing floating timbers. After some difficulty I finally got the women and children safely seated and after climbing up myself we floated off with the drifting wreckage. After a severe struggle only three of us came out alive. Finally we spied a big raft floating toward us and we managed to get on it. And as I stood up to look over the pile of windrowed and floating wreckage everything of which surrounded us as it moved swiftly a piece of plank was shot out by the force of the current from the drift and it struck me right in the face cutting my forhead severely and the blood poured from the wound. Very soon I became exhausted and faint from the loss of blood and sank down without being able to move hand or foot, and with this gash la d laid open I felt my end was coming soon. I therefore said good bye to my wife and children and after praying for them beggi begged themnot to give up but try and live the flood through no matter how long they would be marooned on the fl floating wreckage. After this I do not believe I knew anything for a long time but after a while hearing strange sounds I began to come toom little and raised my head. I had t do some thinking when I saw my wife who was then crying most bitterly. Therefore seeing I was still living I felt more courage but when my wife told me one of the children was gone I began to think it would soon be all over for us but nevertheless I said no I will not give up under any condition. From then on all of us made the most desperate struggle for our lives and the safty of others. We could hardly see any thing for the blinding spray of the flod, and as we were being driven on God only only knows where a piece of tumbling timber from a windrow of wreckage towering above us struck my wife on her head and killed her instantly and a part of the same timber struck me and fractured my shoulder but even though I was crippled I was even then determined not to give up and to die fighting. After being tossed from one place to another we finally drifted under the windows of a big house which was standing against the flod and seeing that we did notfloat from this spot and that the house looked solidand was a brick structure I first got in the window and found myself in a large room with all kinds of furnutre and even dead bodies floating allaround.

After getting my children in all wet and tiredout with their hard battle for safty we heard voices and I called aloud for help. An old woman came to the door of the watery room we were in and after seeing our sad condition h she guided us up to the top flour and then did everything possible to make us flood victims fel feel more safe and comfortable. We were marooned in that building for over two weeks and when the water did go down it was very slow in receding. I take great pleasrue pleasure indeed in extending my most sincere thanks to this lold lady who gave us shelter from the raging flood and helped to save my two remaining children from dying of starvation and exposure. I feel very gateful to both her and her family and even though we did lose our home and everything else we had in the world I feel fortunate to be alive and thank god I saved the last of my children."

The terrible destruction all over the four or five hundred miles of country done by the enraged flood encouraged by the fatal turating of dams and river levees did not confine its path to only towns and villages and the places of the living but also invaded and wiped out hundreds of vast graveyards and cities of the dead throughout the country. The flood indeed was not a respector of the persons places or things of the moneo memoritos sacred to any of the living the waves of death and destruction tore the countless dead from their many graves and the over ground vaults which marked the last resting places of all that was so mortal to all those who had gone before. Six hundred cemeteries small and large at every point of the flood presented the most heart be bledd bleeding pictures of the astonishing and ghghoulish work of the flood. Not only were all these graves robbed of their myriads of gra deas and vaults built of stone and conxrete and iron crushed crumbled and scattered throughout the country but every trace of the cemeteries were wiped out. Hundreds of thousands of metal caskets containing the mortal remains of precious ones wermall swept fromtheir tombs and fed to the greedy angry fury of the flood. Even all the best of the Catholic Cemeteries suffered the greatest in the destruction of vaults s many of which w r were many of the most magnificent structures ever made and which were built to stand for ages and strong enough to resist the worse storms. These burying grounds werd in the path of the main rush of the flood and were the first to suffer from the furious work of so devastating a flood. Not one vault of any of the six hundred cemeteries no matter how strongly built they were withstood the fled. In all the cemeteries all the tombstones monuments with sacred Statues of any kind all of them having withstood the windstorms and others of many years were swept clean away and though which were found were demolished, broken and carried to a distance of a hundred miles from their former places. In all all the surviving tombstones or those which were seen were sorry wrecks. And of all the countless metal caskets with their sacred dead that were disentombed none have been reported found. It was hoped however thry would be heard from later. All these metallic caskets fell easy prey to the raging flood in its wild race overthecountry after once released from the tombs as all the metallic boxes floated easily all of them being covered with heavy wood and to the casual eye would resembel resemble w oo wooden caskets. In many or nearly all instances all the graves even on the highest point of ground were completely washed but and the peaceful rest of all the dead rudely distur eds One huge vault standing fourty feet high were ninty nuns had been laid to rest was found strewn all over the territory not far from one of the cemeteries, but not one of the caskets could be found.

For this cruel and unusual desgructive destructive war at least itcan and will remain forever as a startling study of human nature especially among the Glandelinians that the ravaging hordes of disguised Glandelinians worse in nature than the cruelest of criminals who infested the f,oo flood torn ruins of pig Girl Knool City just as the same class appeared like so many beasts of prey when the waves of the flood yeiled possession f the havoc made at the other citiirs and towns that survived the disaster but were left in water soaked ruins. The genus Glandelinian thieves who plied busily his strange n n nimble ar' of picking pockets and other deeds did not do it because he desired the property himself but for the sake to amuse himself at the our outraged condition of the helpless christian enemies whom he hated most bitterly. These rebel sharks took advantage of the desperate straights of the homeless people by even charing the most exorbitant prices for carrying saved goods and baggage or conveying persons to places of safty and the like, nd even the Glandelinian d vandals and ghouls fought among themselves over the sought for plunder and prizes just as the starving wild beast of any kind might be seen to fight over a choice prey or as buzzards and wilder birds like the vultures and eagles and the Falcons with whetted appetites mightwrangle over carrion and other dead carcas es. These a quarreling and fighting Glandelinian rascals indeed made the air in the flood ruined city smell like as of hellfire by the impious oaths and shocking imprecat ions and blasphemies they re yelled out at each other through their clenched teeth. Thousands of weeping women clung to unhelping and helpless men and little children countless members of them most of them the sons and daughters of wealthy parents but now all in dirt and rags screamed and moaned and even praye pya prayed in the agony i of terror and broken heartedness.

The frenzy of criminlity criminalty in the city of pig Girl Knool surpassed any act of vandalism among Glandelinians ever knowns One of the war correspondents looking up one of the still half floodedstreets of the city could observe it was full of people all the distance swaying and surging under the reign of vandalism fire.This was when the flood was just beginning to manifest itself.Around near river Street the scene of panic was far worse.Here for the first time in his life one would have beheld scenes of violence that would have made his blood boil.In front of big dry goods stores half ru.u ruined by the rising waters men were loading.store trucks with silks and expensive clothing in defe defiance of the employees and owners of the places.When they had piled all they could on the trucks soldiers came running up and shouted to them not to drive away or they would be shot to which they replied''fire as u and le damned''and they went off.just elsewhere in the city the force of the flood forced tons of fancy goods and other articles into the flood over which the wreckage and panic stricken people passed with utter indifference untill they werecswept away.

After the flood the whole remainder of the city was rich with treasure and hordes of glandelinian vandals forced their way into the ruined stores despite the efforts of the military and flung out the valuable merchan dise to their fellow-comrades in the streets who recieved it without the slightest disguise and made away with it.Those who would have gone through the streets would have observed the throughfares utterly blocked i with all manner of wreckage intermingled with all manner of goods and valuables and vandals helping themselves in the dark of night.The flood tearing whole buildings open had brought some article with it so that the biggest piles of wreckage presented the most astonishing wreck. Intermingled in a conglomerate of con u confusion among the wreckage were torn and ripped valuable oil paintings, books of allkinds, dead pet animals, rats, cats and cows and chickens and horses hogs and so on, bit big and smallcmusical instruments, childrens toys, mirrors and bee bedi bedding of all of kinds.Added to this all kinds of goods from stores were in the wreckage and the vandals took all they could find they even broke into liquor establishments and yelling with the fury of demons brandished brandy bottles and defied all the christian world to come to throw them out of the ruined city.The brutality of the scene and the horror of it all would have made any one feel sick.One rascally vandal stood up on top of a piano in the wreckage and declared that the flood was the friend of glandelinia and another one like it would help Glandelinia win the war.And he wanted every one of his comrades to help themselves to the best liquor he could secure and continued to yell from the top of the wreckage pile untill another glandelinian vandal probably more drunk than himself flung a piece of board at him and knocked him off.Near this chaos were hundreds of frightened children wailing and cry ing for their parents.One little girl in particular whose golden curls was all around her back and shoulders ran screaming up to the men and asked if one of them was her fa h father but they immediately shot her dead.

The worst specimens of human nature are seen at their wickedest among the fierce glandelinians in cities just after some terrible war disaster and all innocent people involved in the d calamity but who still live are also for the time not themselves and many go mad or are made helpless in their despair.The glandelinian vandals coming to the scenes of devast devastation are usually as much affected in their minds but instead of themselves being overcome and rendered inactive by terror and horror they are then more active and dangerous and desperate for their cause than before they become in very fact as fierce and as savage as the worse of most insane men or criminals.At Big Girl Knool city this peculiar indulgence in glandelinian vandal criminality in the presence of the wars most awful of disasters was marked as it never was before in any real country of the world.The glandelinian vandal criminals here labored in some ways under a slight disadvantage for the reason that the track of the gigantic flood was too strong for them and they could not possibly begin their general work of plunder and raps immediately after the flood had receded but had to wait untill the flood had taken a few more days for even parcial redession before any of the vandals bent on their work could possess any advantage whatever.The wreckage strewn streets were impassable to any one with wagons and teams and people on foot could not get over the wreckage very easily.Many of the glandelinian vandals and spies and robbers were possible assassins and lurked amid the windrows of wreckage and the heaps of stones and bricks of fallen buildings for easy prety prey.Hundreds of hold up cases were reported every half hour and rumors of assassinations of even children were rife and true and this caused an astounding panic to seize upon the surviving people. There was the same kind of mental distresses felt here that agonized the surviving people of the other devasted hou citiesxand towns.There was just as much cause for it in Big Girl Knool as there was in the other awfully stricken towns and cities and more cause too.Men and women and even children who were loh h obliged to go to and from the flooded districts parsially clearned lleared of wreckage feared every moment of taking their very lives in their hands.Thousands of collapsed stores still had unruined goods in them all buried in the ruins and a hundred thousand money vaults and safes all known to contain treasure had not been opened since their closing on the day at the beginning of the flood and Glande linian vandals by digging down to them could easily work in securiety.Guards strong in numbers in most places were placed over the safes by the owners of the ruined banks and other places but most of these were attacked and killed by the Glandelinians and the money stolen.One of the happenings of which more than any other alarmed th tmid surviving inhabitants of the city was the releasing of the glandelinian prisoners in the big interment camp near the Nobolization camps close to the city and lett ing loose desperate glandelinian soldiers of all degrees and sects, some the dangerous Scoodlers out of the place and letting them reach the higher ground where the flood did not reach them.General Heldon in was in charge of the interment camps at the time the sene general Heldon who was afterwards killed at the battle of Cedarnine.His account of why he released the prisoners, thousands of them was that the flood had risen to the second floors of the barracks of the prisoners camps. inally it was rising to such a height that the lower portions of the structures had to be abandoned.Buildings and barracks of smaller sizes on all sizes were literally floating off like row boats or falling to pieces and the prisoners in the upper floors of the barracks almost half xdrowned as they were ran to the windows of the buildings and uttered fear ful yells and blasphemies and imprecations t as the horrid fear that they were to be drowned like rats in the tr aps possessed them.There were ways to get up to the roofs of these structures but these opene openings were fastened down.Seeing that there was nohope of preventing the buildings from being flooded even up to the third stories and that the waters were stil rising higher every hour the general ordered the cells to be unlocked and within a few minutes the prisoners all bare headed and hardly without clothing and barefooted were swar i swarming upon the roofs yelling like demons and blaspheming something awful.

When finally however the flood receded these prisoners were not prisoners any longer but swarmed through the streets of the city the ex prisoners swarming into stores raided it of good clothing and fled to remote alleys and dark passages where they disguised themselvescas well to do survi ving citizens of the flood.

Even when the owners f goods after the flooded city was ruined succeeded in hiring expressmen to convey them to places of safty there surely was no certainity that they would be hauled far though as high as two hundred and sixty dollars or more a load was paid for the srf services. The expressmen were honest but the wagons that could go through the streets parcially cleared of debris were followed by howling crowds of disguised glandelinian vandals who killed the expressmen snatched the goods and made away with them despite the fire of soldiers who chased them.In a large numbe rnumber of instances the very rebels and other Glandelinian thieves got possession of the wagons and drove off with rich loads of dry goods jewler jewelry and other merchandise to many out of the way places.Even all the thieving horror had ensed in scenes of most daring and open robbery.At the beginning after the flood had first receded the glandelinians had evaded observation to some extent for fear of the soldiery who were ordered not to give quarter, but now as the terrors of the flood and its results aggregated into a an intensity of awful misery the Glandelinian thieves of all grades and ugliness dropped all pretense of concealment and plied their calling most boldly.They would storm into the stores smash away at the very safes and if as happily was most of the cases they failed to make an opening they would turn their attention to secur ing all value from the stock that they could possibly carry away while other thieves and vandals would slu slouch in after further booty.

And also the prumish of a share in the spoils gave them the assistance of some of the very express drivers who stood with wagons at the very doors of stores and waited as composedly for a load of stolen property to be piled in as if they were honestly recieving goods fo from the rear of stores whore they might be employed daily.And the wagons once heaped up with these goods goods were driven pell mell through cleared up portions of the city and out into the country.The on owners kicked but it was of no use.They were obliged to stand quietly aside and see their establishments cleaned out by the thieves and then laid in ashes by flames at by the Vandals.The instances of this awful robbery were not only con fined to the sacking of stores alone.The rebels would raid into the ruins of the private dwellings that had lain in the track ofthe flood and snatch cupboard, bureau trunk or mantle anything of value. Interference was useless and sucudal. The scoundrels hunted either in squads or platoons were inflamed with drink and flourished deadly weapons. In alli s instances also women and children were stopped as they were bearing from their ruined homes objects of great worth and the articles torn from their grasp by the unresisted gangs of vandals.

The most wicked actions of the wicked Glandelinian vandals usually took nlaces in Big Girl Knool city than any where else after the retession of the great floods. The vandals had a desire to ha s a renewal of the disaster but of another style and therefore cases of terrible incendiarism were so freqne frequent that the surviving population grew nervious and very anxious. Most of the disguised Glandelinian vandals began to carry the incendairy torch. Many were shot and none were arrested because these kind of fellows would not allow themselves to be ta en alive and fought to the death like the raving mad dogs. Several of these vandals occasionalyy when captured after being severely wounded were found to be real women. One disguised Glandelinian was detected by one of the soldiers on fuard in the setting fire to a bi building near Fourty Fifth Street and he was immediately shot dead. A negro soldier sho r shot and killed a Glandelinian who was attempting to set fire to a big house in the same street. Another woman was taken in the act and instantly hanged. Ten men were shot while attempting to set fire to one of the ruined windrows of wreckage which once it ever got a good start would set the whole country afire. Hundreds of more of these kinds of incendairies were killed in all sections of the ren in remaining city. On fourteenth Place several rebels were discovered in the basement of a half demolished factory with torches in their hands and alarm being given they first escaped into the street and ran for their lives. A crowd of citizens men women and even children followed them and coming near enough stoned the rascals to death. The spirit of outlawry continued for days and days and could not be arrested not even by the coming to the city of an increase in the military. General Phillip Phelan had also an extra force of Winkie Abyssinkilians at his headquarters and these he also sent to the city with the hope that they would be of very good advantage. He also sent a number of squads to the post master of the day who required it to defend the half ruined postoffice at Twenty Sixth Street near Princetonia Avenue.....

But still more and more troops were ride needed and so the strong Infantry of Home guards from Hinsdale commanded by general Nelson Henry Turner was ordered hither by the war department upon their ariv l there was a great joy among all the surviving good people of the city but yet even these were not enough to arrest the disturbances caused the edged by the Glandelinian vandals. It shoul s s'ould in the city by the Glandelinian vandals.

It may be added that during all this time of trouble with the disguised Glandelinians and the fear a ong the surviving people the Mayor of the city of Big Girl Knool and all who were in aurthority as city officers and did their duty toard preserving the peace suffered greatly at the hands of these vandals and the Mayor was shot and seriously injurs by vandals who attempted to rob his own home.

It was impossible absolutely impossible without dispute to overcome these vandals or to overthrow the glandelinian element. It took nearly ten days or evemore before the ful realization of the proportions and pitiful awful horrors of the flood terror throughout the country. Hopes ardent hopes that the first awful stories of the death of so many hundreds of thousands, and the destruction of three hundred towns and villiages and scores of cities as being only exaggerated faded out and not only the nation but the whole world was aghast and from all quarters as far as could be reached came aid by wire and railroad as far as thry would carry information and transportation; and to make matters still more unusual many of the recruiting places in l other places in loyal cities and towns gave in reports to the War Department that more men were inlisting in the army than the biggest camp can handle and that aid was needed for this also. Money by billions of dollars was recieved relief trains were hurried by the hundreds as far as Angelinia Agathia as all that far they only could go, for everywhere in the flood stricken districts there was pestilence and fam ne threatening, there was no water, no light at night and the million of found dead were so fearful a mass of bodies for hundreds of miles that the pestilence was threatening tospread at the same time, the swarms of vandals sent from Glandelinian armies descended upon the ermormous wrecks wreck in greater numbers all being the best of marksmen and there were many of the survivors s demorilized for they appeared to think the end of the world was at hand and the robberies and nameless outrages throughout the whole devastated regions made up a most surpassing horror. Worse than that in battles and frays with the vandals there was als always ten and twenty soldiers shot to death to one vandal. The whole nation was beingaroused. Scores of millions were inlisting and were frantic and desperate in their desire to get in the armies right away. On the tenth of June the following telegrams passed between the Palace of emperor vivian at Angelinia Agathia, and Big Girl Knool which was the centre of places asking for aid for the stricken flood di districts;

"Big Girl Knool City;
To Emperor vivian, King of Abbieannia;
Angelinia Agathia (Angelinia State)
"I am one of many who have been duly deputized by the Mayor of this city and the relief Co Committees to inform you that the city as well as scores of others not swept entirely away by the flood are in ruins and certainly many hundreds of thousands if not millions are dead; and scores of millions houseless. The tragedy is one of the most frightful of any disaster of enormous proportions on record and caused by Glandelinian engineers bursting the Big Dams and leveas and dikes of the Arunburgs Run River at a junction between Heidi city and Jessicia. Help must be given by the Nation or the suffering will be appalling as a plague is breaking out and scores of thousands are dying of hungry. Food, clothing and every thing will be needed at once. The whole north and southwest city of this city of Big Girl Knool is swept clear of every building, and its streets is not strewn only with its own ruins but that of buildings brought down by the flood from other towns; the whole river wharf front is a total wreck and not one of the houses of the city surviving are really at all habitable. All water supply is out off for the whole district of the country and all food stock is da a damaged by flood water. All bridges hundreds of them are swept away and stranded river crafts and steamers and other ships litter the country. Little girl Knool is not heard from and no news can be had from the region of Gallilies hun where the flood was just as devastating as around Heidi junction. When I left for Gallilies Run this morin ng the search for bodies had continued with increasing energy but hidden Glandelinian marksmen even try to hinder this work. Corpses were everywhere as thick as on the field of o s of our bloodiest of battles. current of the flood through Big Girl Knool city sped twenty to thirty miles an hour and carried everything from towns and other villiages right into and even through Big Girl Knool at the same time waters of the flood were over the government buildings here to a depth of three feet over the roof haven r risen fourty or more feet at its greatest height. Water has now subsided from city but water still remains in the outside country district and is a perfect sea filled with wreckage and bodies like immense log jams. All our survivors are left absolutely helpless among the wreckage, vandals are fierce here and we are cut off from the world here b every means except by boat. What the enemy should deserve in re repay for this I dare not tell you but I can think a lot.

To the Mayor of Big Girl Knool City.
The reports of the greatest calamity of all on recro record which has befall befallen Northern Angelinia and a part of Calverinia and other points of the nation bac besides those of the ravaging forest fires exco excite ny profound sympathy for the sufferers as they have stirred the hearts of the whole country and is already seen by the results. whatever help it is possible to give is being gladly extended and terrible as the consequence of the disaster has been it has had its good effects by caus ing so many more men to join the army and thereby prevent which I and the whole government hate "A draft law of Conscription. Have directed the Aurthorities of the tribunals to supply as much rations and other goods upon your request. A portion of general vivians army will be immediately forwarded toward Big Girl Knool to arrest the outrages caused by the vandals and if this is of no use then I'll order the whole army on the work.

EMPEROR VIVIAN, RULER OF ABBIA
ABBIEANNIA. ANGELINIA AGATHIA. (ANGELINIASTATE)

GERTRUGDE Angelinia or Angelinia Aronburg who had witnessed the scene of the awful flood and gone through some of the experiences wrote also a letter to ones of the other generals and then send a long one to the vivian Girl Princesses and issued the following a appeal to them:

''To the vivian Girl Princesses of Abbieannia:
Known as the Darlings of the Nations:
Commanders of boy scout and girl scout regiments and Authorities of all generals in Armies throughoutout the land:
All the Red cross Corps:corps throughout the nation is appealing to all sides and to you my friends for Help and for the full privilige to help in the most terrible disaster of all times which has befallen Northern Angelinia and southern Calverinia:We can remember the past flood horror of the Hensendale Country some time ago last year during the early part of the war with its hundreds of thousands of dead and months of suffering and needs of relief and turns confidently to all the people of Abbieannia whose full sympathy has never failed to help provide the relief that is asked of it now.So many years of experience on h many battle fields for the Rab Red Cross renders the obligations of the organization all the greater.The nation has long learned its fullwork and it must ask in open its accustomed avenues for their desired charities:It does not beseech them to give for their sympathies are as deep and their humanity as great as its own but it pledges them to ask for more recruits to do the work of relief among the stricken victims of these terrible fields of d suffering death and devastation.The red Cross needs many new recruits:and dear friends from what I hear a full conservati ve estimate of the loss of life will be over one million and the number of persons taken ill with plague will be about thirty five thousand:At least nearly fifty five million are shelterless and wholly destitute.
The Entire remainder of the pu population is suffering is less degrees.no building in any of the cities that survived the inundation is left intact no matter how strong they were,not a single building escaped damage and half the whole number of towns and villiages and cities in the flooded districts were entirely obliterated:Heidi junction was obliterated first.There is immediate need for every supply known and all the near by cities and towns up north where all protection from the rebellion armies is assured will have to open asylums for ch ildren children who were left orphans:All sections of the flood regions is cut off from all communications:My My god violet and your sisters you cannot comprehend the awful magnitude of the disaster unless you were to come down here and witness it yourbelf:It is beyond describing, the great sufferin g and loss of life, the sean of floating wreckage and the damage beyond description:Heidi junction a city bigger than both Dorothy Gale and Angelinia Agathia is totally wiped out only a few thousand buildings remaining and they are total wrecks,id should be sent to your own home town An gelinia Agathia which is the only nearest base of supplies and for furnishing help.The Gemini Members have good organizations started but nothing can reach the stricken cities except by boat and even by that means it is exceedingly dangerous as hundreds of miles of country is still flooded.
A l the sufferers of this flood which pro ved so disasterous to life and property in the country are in immediate need of assistance and I would request that all soldiers that are not even needed for battle squabbles respond as liberally and as promptly as possible to the call for relief. Our sister city Big Girl Knool has also been visited by the frightful inundation and is still cut off from all rail and wire and other communications with the outside world:The flood extended as far north as Abbieann:All the refugees bring the most alarming reports of great loss of life and property and the cruel wor of vandals.The newspapers are also gi ving extended accounts of this awful calimity which place it among the most disasterous ever heard.An forwarding papers to you. The people who had survived from the many towns and villiages are now in the most sore distress and as further reports come inthe death list grows and the property damage increases:The stock of ill farming districts for hundreds of miles is killed and the drops scores of millions of dollars worth are wiped out.I urgently ask your liberal and immediate assistance little Princesses and know you will do so for your cause. P andora city and Wic-Hollaster and Glorinianng and Lucille Dickson were in the track of the flood but though seriously a effected will take care of their own injured de bury their own dead and help those most seriously effected.The results of the appalling calamity was also very severe in its results at Angelinia Agathia and Big Girl Knool and the property of the government buildings had been damaged.Your father and Uncle have issued a call to the people to contribute to the relief of those afflicted by the disaster.And Jennie Lunker and Angeline Riches wishes to convey to your Little Majesties the expression of their deep felt sympathies with the awful mis fortune that has be allen the country in the south and so many of her towns ad cities and mourn with you and the people of the nation over the terrible loss of life and property caused by the inundation but they say that the magnitude of the disasr disaster is equaled by the indomitable spirit of the nation and is as a spur to the nation in trying its effort to come out victorious in the worse of all w wars on record.I sic sincerely he e hope that the nation willrise again to new efforts and repay the enemy in all that is possible for making such an awful disaster.

Your Friend and loving companion.

The reply from the vivian Girls was as follows:
Gelmanrinia Junction.
June the fourteenth.:1913.
To Gertrude Angeline:
Your message of condolence and request and of sympathy is very grateful to us and the people of Abbieannia and in their names as well as ours as well as on behalf of the many thousands who have suffered loss of property and the millions who have suffered bereavement and irr irreparable loss in the flood disaster we thank you most earnestly.

THE VIVIAN GIRL PRINCESSES.

I T was some time after the flood disaster that the surviving people of the districts seemed to realise their troubles. Every one who had survived had looked death and all its horrors in the face. The curtain of the form of well ordered life had been immediately torn away from the weak flesh and the curruption of the human flesh:Every one had seen the death agonies of others and had looked into the graves or upon the fire windrows burning the dead:Every one had seen death yet the survivors had born themselves with fortitude had tried to perform the duties of the hour of affliction dalmly and had looked dry eyed upon the many pulled fires that burst up every hour or so and then deminished only to blaze up again:every one had tried to appear composed and brave.
All the days o after the flood were beautiful:for days the sky was unspeakably se rene and smiling,the air though scorching hot for days was mile and gentle and the nights just right.Yet no one could sleep profoundly for every one who wake up and again look upon scenes of chaos and desolation:Seas of water and floating wreckage out in the country, shattered buildings and gaping wells in the cities and towns that survived the flood, countless thousands of fallen and torn trees lying brown and dead amid masses of timbers as if a maelstrom had twisted them together.All these things the survivors saw in the w streaming sunshine and then again and again came the realisations face to face with death is awesome indeed seeing what this human flesh is like after the spark of life is gone is both awesome and horrible.
''she cant saying''she was beautiful in death'' is shown to be a mockery, a mere delusion, a mere saying of no account whatever for beauty last only a few hours after death, except through the efforts of art:This also is both awesome and horrible but it was not sorrow. there was another emotion.To realize indeed what had happened is over after it is over is sorrow and remourse and at Big Girl Knool and many other places countless hundreds of people wept and even vowed revenge on the Glandelinians:A Glandelinian prisoner at work had to be more closely guarded for soli by soldiers for fear the citizens would mob him.a day all the people are heart broken and revengeful.Glandelinia was responsible:Glandelinia shall pay for it is in the worse way possible:some religious services were held in some of the churches that survived and in private houses but the mahority of the people could not bear it and in some the very hymns and songs had to be stopped for weeping.The sound of praise made many people turn about and put their hands to their faces and go away:At the St Anns Great Catholic Church which was also ruined but which Masses could still be said the people who entered did not remain long.They could not bear the Sacred Songs, the preachings and the prayers.It all seemed a mockery.It was the effects of sorrow.The most pitiful thing of allin Big Girl Knool city was the distress of so many persons who were or had been so well off, but who had lost all their money in the devastated banks and whose homes and sources of income were allgone.Every one suffered loss.In many instances not even Mass could be said as the flood a had carried away even the necessary articles for the Necessities of Mass.The flood spared nothing. Everything on the line of church goods was gone.No wonder even the priests who preached without Mass extorted the people to take it out of the glandelinians preached that no matter how serious the situation was to rise in might and power and Holiness and smite Landelinia as she should be smitten.

One of the scenes that could be realized was one that was witnessed in the city of little girl Knool which despite itd name was very large and only a quarter few in buildings than Big Girl Knool.At the time of the flood The Empress of Abbieannia that is the mon mother of violet and her sisters had gone to that city to see some of the highest Members of the Gemini that resided there.Indeed she had just reached the city in the to see the flood descend upon it and wreck nearly all the houses and sweep many of them away.She confirmed the reports to herhusband the Emperor of what that flood really was in a special f delivery letter which came from her to him and it was written as follows!!!!!

JUNE THE 12TH. 1913.
TO MY DEAR HUSBAND.
THE EMPEROR OF ABBIEANNIA.
ANGELINIA AGATHIA!

I am indeed lucky to be alive and to even have a few minutes to write about the awful situation and that I have a few m n minutes to even collect my thoughts and to be able to tellyou of the horrible disaster down here.It is perfectly confirmed without the s ightest doubts whatever that it really was the responsibility of the enemy and that more dams and levees have beenblown up by the ene y than even the rep reports tells. The scenes in , ittle girl Knool city is frightful.Thousands of dead are in the streets of the city the number of drowned said to be nearly twenty five or thirty five thousand, and all the country outside the city is water logged and the wreckage is intermingled and strewn with countless thousands of dead bodies of every description whatever.

The whole country for hundreds of miles is desolished.Despite the flow still running outside cities and towns there is not a single dr op of fresh water to drink and for all of the population that is surviving food is almost impossible to obtain and even plagues are raging beside so many being threatened with starvation and suffering and death from thirst. If help does not reach us there will be the greatest famine on record and also the greatest sweep of plagues ever known in all the world.there are so many dead in the city here that there is no time to try and identify the bodies at all, the workers and enforced glandelinian prisoners are just throwing them on drays and taking them to river barges where they are being loaded like so much lumber and taken out to the deeperportions of the river to be cast in the waves of the water.I was at one of the to devastated wharfs of the river yesterday for a very short time only as it was more than I could bear to witness these scenes, and saw many long lines of barges and boats and trains of wagons and drays loaded thick and overburdened with their awful gruesome freights.The condition of the bodies are simply frightful and every one of them are nearly naked and the weather is so c scorching hot that every one are rapidly decomposing.God alone knows how many dead there must be throughout the whole flood and it must be simply awful.Outside the flood where the water still remains in the country districts the floating wreckage is f u full of human bodies and dead cattle and horses and other animals all blistering in the hottest june sun ever known for that month in Cal orninia history(if she has one) It will be impossible for any amount of workers and r prisoners to remove the dead from the floating debris for months not unless the flood waters recede altogether, the whole country aldeis frightful beyond description.I saw one thousand and one hundred and eighty eight bodies taken from one block of ruined houses .every one who can is striving to get all the bodies out of sight for fear of the plague spreading all over the nation and then throughout the whole w orld.

I was through the floodfrom beginning to end and I never expected to get out a i alive but thank God not one of us in the same house was killed. How would my daughters fell if they had recieved the news that their mother was drowned in the flood!On the fifth day of the flood we were quickly driven back up to the second flood floor of the house and up one stair case after another by the rushing roaring great waves of the flood waters, and the swirling wreckage dashed against thehouse like the roaring of cannons and rattling of musketry.The house was literally bombarded as if by great cannons and how it stood I can never tell.I could see out of one of the upper windows and the current was then rushing over thirty miles an hour perhaps fourty, and the wreckage passed by in jams and intermingled were bodies they say brought down from other towns and villiages, the greatest frak of a flood ever heard of.Never shall I forget the sight as day and night for over two weeks more passed and ogne and worse of allwas the last night of the flood before it began to fall back.Then I thought of you and my little Darlings the Princesses and my two sons and friends and prayed as hard as possible that if you heard of the flood and would know Iwas in it you would be comforted.Do Not let my daughters know of my experience for fear it will be to much for them.The roof of our building was gone having caved in when a crash of avalanches of wreckage shook the house from the blows parts of the walls have fallen allaround us but we stil have something like a floor to support us and [illegible] cannot tell you it is too awful. I am surp sup osed to be A good Christian like all others and to be good in all ways but God, how can any one h fail to hate the enemy when they do all this to gain their wicked end.I do for one and wish them all the harm that can come from the effects of the war.If you would only say so I would order our armies at once to give no quarter hereafter.I with many others was nearly drowned trying to get home at the beginning of the glood at three oclock in the afternoon.Many of the occupants of the house were almost crazy from fright and horror and some are in a most dangerous condition.I ,lost everywhere I brought here from Home and though I'm supposed to be an Empress of Abbieannia and your Darling wife you ought to see what I'm wearing for my good dignity now.U You would die laughing.I'm a hobo now in dress and you would never rego recognize me.I had to borrow these cloths from some poor beggar I found who survived the flood or otherwise I would have gone naked for days.The stench from so many of the dead bodies is awful.

Even brought down into the city by the flood but still alive are thousands of horses and cattle which are without owners, and a re in the most pitiful condition whatever not a drop of water for them to drink since the flood except the dirty water they drive for in the u inundations. And the surviving people of Little girl Knool ---I wonder that the whole city is not a mad house from the horrors.No account can exaggerate it.It is absolutely necess ary that everybody in the wi whole of Abgieannia do what they can and to punish glandelinia as soon as possible in a way she'll never forget.....

Nearly all my Royal Servants who accompanied me even the famious old Butler and Maid who had been so well loved by my dear little daughters my Housekeeper and a number of other maiads and the Excellent Cook you liked so well.The city at my orders is strictly under Martial law to protect it from the mob of Vandals for many are here.

Last night and even to day many vandals were shot and papers and every kind of article were found in their pockets.General Aberdee is at our house protecting us with a strong guard.They even had to shoot many in their desperate but failing efforts to keep the horrible glandelinian ghouls under control.To my idea this is not a war.It's butchery on the part of the glandelinians.Colonel Andro is next in command and is also doing all the noble work he can.I even have done all I could to help the dying and wounded.We were in the strongest on of many houses in Little girl Knool. Probably that is all that had saved us.For many bo blocks reaching into a score of miles in the once beautiful city not even a single house remains not even a strong building that is not totally demolished, just torn board from board and piledup.I even have climbed over wreckage not belonging to the city fourty to sixty feet high in the outer limits t of the city to get to places.I think we were more fortunate than any one else in our sectio section of the town.I think not one was killed in our part of the building though our esca e was narrow.with the exception of the one survivin surviving servant of mine all were apparently very calm throughout the whole flood, though I reckon every one quaked inside---I know indeed the that I more than quaked.

I am not so well either though I had something to eat this morning and a little sterilized water.Coffee is plenty but pure water scarce.Even to day the flesh slips off so many of the decomposed bodies as the workers and prisoners take hold to drag them from the ruins.They are even pili g piling them in great heaps in the streets and burning them.Even all the horrors add every hour.I have even seen men shot down in the streets by the score by the soldiers and have seen ghouls shoot it outwith the soldiers and shootthem down also.Even the stench is untold.For nights the awful smell kept us all awake although we are utterly exhausted.Indeed the horrible experiences it will take years to tell and more than a lifetime to forget. nd if you could be here you would realize that your anxiety was nothing.It is so pitiful to see thousands of husbands with a look of despair in their eyes searching vainly for their wives and little children wives for their loved ones, and most sadly of all the many survivin surviving children to be left orphans and homeless looking into every ones eyes or faces with frightened appealing eyes.It is simply heartrend ing n and fills me with a loathing for the enemy.No I am much better off. I am safe so please don't worry.To my idea all the accounts of the catast rophe in this city which could have been written in the midst of al all this wreck are like many photographs that fail to be developed.All the newspaper men who are here from Angelinia Agathia are so confounded ath at the immensity of the disaster that they do not know how to write anything about it.

One said to me when I interviewed him;

"No Your Gracious Majesty, I can't write this thing.I'm too excited. The scenes here bemumbe my mind and I have failed miserably to write my story and therefore expect to be dismissed by wire."

This man was not joking to me,at all.,ll of them are newspaper men who are very skilful experienced beyond measure and who had hastened to the scene of desolar desolation and catastrophe to describe what they could see to the waiting world.But when they observed what had happened they felt theirutter inability to write any picture of it because the scene horrify them too much.Even the stupefaction of many scores of thousands of surviving persons are threatening to be infectious.There were hundreds of thousands of narrow escapes, hundreds of thousands of dea deeds of heroism, hundreds of thousands of instances of helping others, tens of thousands of pitiful deaths but all belonged to one element of fl flood and death.These newspaper men floundered in an endless sea of materials therewere more conflicting stories and theories about the distan disaster than could fill all the books of al all sizes in the whole world.One of them was that the flood struck little girl Knool from the east and north simultaneously.It was said that a man could wade across the Big Girl Knool road to day and see more sights than could fill as many books to describe.Yet for years to what I heard the people of Little girl Knool have schooled themselves that the day when a great flood sweeps the dikes of the rivers would prevent it from coming upon the city and therefore a great disaster would never come.There was also a theory that the position of Little girl Knool City prevented it from ever being struck by any big flood.when the rivers did overflow and caused by cloud bursts and storms and also from melting winter snows in spring floods of great magnitude have come have covered the lower sections of the town but the streets were only flooded a fo foot deep only even in the lowest places and nothing resulted.We all know that any man woman or child in the fflush of health strength and other enjoyments knows that he must surely die some day but this knowledge has no worries for him or her. he or he enjoys life.just so Little girl Knool was not worried.although it knew the bit big Aronburgs Run River was always treacherous in spring or stormy summer seasons it was like a person enjoying life for Little girl Knool was a city rich and most beautiful and even Holy.If a disasterous flood ever came it would be many centuries hence and then Little Girl Knool would probably be a great city surrounded by a wall that no flood could ever tear down.It was believed she would be a wonder of the world.

The city of Little Girl Knool was rich and most beautiful for her size and for her population.even valuable earth had been brought from the far distant Glengiglomenean Islands and also from the soy ing and the Catherine IdlesIsles and the strangest trees and the most magnificen shrubs had been trained to grow on what was a winter countrys soil. This city too was very remarkable also for the many magnificent Catholic schools, Orphan Asylums and hospitals reared by its wealthy citizens and called by their names and the names of the Great and well known Saints. These apparently massive as well as most stately structures gave an air of great security to the city.they were indeed an evidence of great con fidence wealth and goodness and peace and were great stone and brick structures that contrasted very quaintly with the many bi g wooden dwellings of the city.And as a matter of fact dear Husband never within the memory of the oldest inhabatant of Calverinia had the city of Little girl Knool or other already devasted so badly ever been engulfed, there had been inundations but they were nothing.These many cities differentiated between inundation and torrent.Inundation might come--the water flood rush was another thing. owever when there is no telling whatever what the enemy would do there is grave danger ahead.We have observed the great massacres of children the terrible forest fires, and other great dist disasters but did any one in this country ever think the enemy would cause the overflooded rivers to rush out of their bursted dikes and levees and drive all the water out and then roll them over hundreds of miles of land!The people had said the glandelinians would not.They would not even have the nerve to do so.But what do they think now?

The flood dear Husband after lasting nearly a week in a very deep swiftly moving inundation became a roaring torrent chocked with avalanches of wreckage at about three oclock in the afternoon on the eighth day of its duration.It brought down millions of tons of wreckage through and upon our town from other places that were swept away and bodies of people that never were seen in Little girl Knool are found by scores of thousands in the wreckage now so that it is impossible to tell what the real loss of life was in the city now.and while the flood was sweeping away smaller houses or tearing them to pieces or while the avalanches of debris was crushing everything before it and while whole scores of houses per minute were being swept away and verandas and roofs of other houses torn l oose and walls cracked and fell and while the streets became logged in wreckage borne borne down by the flood the awful question arose if it was the time when in the course of centuries the city would withstand the deluge.

Schooled for scores of years to decry fear of the awful catastrophe scores nay hundreds of thousands of the business men of the city remained in the business part of the city and did not go home to their families.Others most anxious about their goods remained to protect them from the water and had men working frantically to bring every thing possible up to the upper floors.Thus it came to pass that nearly all of the men who had gone home to their fal families perished in the destruction of their homes while all those who had remained to look after their worldy goods were saved.

The people of Little girl Knool city on which was on a high plain were all fully acquainted with certain higher ground which any visiting stranger could not observe for the whole place or the whole city itself looks as flat as a pancake.In the early days of the flood immense files of men women and children were seen making their way to the "rig ridges" as they usually call the ground which is a few feet higher than the gener level of the plain.hey were taken in by all those who lived in the higher and stronger houses untill each house contained nearly a thousand persons and was jammed like sardines in a box.Immense crowds went in high wagons and carriages or in street cars which were still trying to run others rode in immense mule trucks and motor trucks and automobilesand other land craft.In most cases to keep from being made too wet by the rushing waters the people stood up holding to the pins of the trucks and to each other.All the way from one foot to three foot of water covered the streets at this early period of the flood and the waters ran through the streets like mill races.Debris swirled about on the water telegraph and telephone poles and wiring crashing down and timbers rushed by with a menace as great as a bombardment of battering rams.big wooden cisterns which stood on pins were torn off by the rushing waters or hurled loose by the bombardment of wreckage and the people were forced to dodge these great rollingobjects.The trees of every kind had no tap roots and therefore the force of only that three feet of f water upt uprooted them in every direction.Still the people would say to each other;"Let us be glad we are not in the western part of the country where they have such awful big Typhoons."

The River side of the city contained the immense river wharves railway yards of a number of greatlines and the most of the business district. The other outskirt sections of the city was a very pretty heavenly resident residence district called "The Town of Paradise."Along tward the seventh day of the flood the people who lived in this Paradise section of the city began to be engulfed by the great waves of the ever swiftly rising flood.It was coming then as exactly as an ordinary sea wave roll ing upon the shore only of a ful and most devastating magnitude.In a short time from now on the water rose more than twenty five to thirty feet high.

Those who had fled to the business districts and the higher build ings of the city or as much as ten or twenty blocks away from the river side of the city were chiefly endangered from the bombardments of the hundreds of thousands of tons of wreckage not by the water, which then was not deep enough to drown a man who was a good swimmer and was not injured. But those who had remained in the outer limits of the city and near the Paradise section had a little show for their lives.They had believed against doubt untill now it was too late and therefore at this awful moment as the black darkness of night at this awful time descended and the houses by the thousands at once began to rise and tip and float away or crash down into shattered wreckagethe people who could emerged to swim for their lives.The stronger no doubt could be able to sei e timbers and try to do all they couldto float toonfty but burdened with the weaker they sought to use the pieces of frame houses roofs and f floating sections of flooring or the immense jams of floating wreckage as rafts and tying themselves together with ropes and sheets.The houses at the outer limits of the city were nearly all frame many of them large three and four story buildings of the most ornamental architecture.The great torrents and rushing waves of the float filled with wreckage swept one thousand houses against another thousand and hundreds over the other.Therefore the entire front sections of the city was fairly pushed and hurled back all the houses being hurled against other houses with terrible destructive effects.Meeting this resistance the water spun around in terrible roaring whirlpools and cataract or water falls and geysers.Thousands of victims were caught between the houses or buried under the floating wreckage and if not drowned outright were crushed to death.The force of the waters burdened by the tons of wreckage it brought from other l places pushed the wrecked houses for thousands of yards untill a great wall of wreckage miles long formed thirty to fifty feet high and which rested against all the strongest houses that had withstood the flood.Several to ten thousand yards of houses were compressed, twisted pounded into an irmense breatwater hundreds of fert thick.The labor of a hundred million men for many months could not have built any structure so strong and compact.It was stouter than the strongest of any masonry for it could not c e crack or crumble.But I believe this great and unusually formed bulwark added by the other wreckage of the flood saves the rest of the city from being swept completely away.After another week of horror the waters began to gradually form to its own level and all the people who were in the districts that escaped total destruction, that were saved from destruction by the destruction of the other houses said to each other gladly!

"See the waters are gradually subsiding.I knew that K little girl Knool could not be engulfed.

The next morning after the flood the people who survived emerged quickly from their many places of wreckedcshelters and were surprised to find even the strong sections of the city shattered in every direction. I went with them to see the sights and saw that the houses were torn like the Typhoon torn the cities of Abidannia, like the great typhoons have torn other cities and towns.Worn out by the awful tr terror and the hard work to keep the windows and doors fastened t and the waters out of their houses many persons in the more fortunate neighborhoods pottered about without the slightest knowledge of the real horrors of the awful calamity that had stricken Big girl Knool City.Some did not know for nearly three days afterwards.

I accompanied some of the men w o had remained in the huisness districts untill the flood grew too great to venture home ward and upon my setting out with them was horror struck first by the destruction done by the flood even to the strongest of the buildings then by the sight of so many naked dead upon the streets and of thewater logged wreckage lying in windrows everywhere in the streets.Palid with dread and numb with remorsebecause they had not gone home at any hazard they rushed over the rubbish tward their homes only to find them gone with their families and all.Lucky were those who were able to once again greet their dazed families.

As far as I advanced through the main parts of the city I observed the buildings had been almost torn off from their foundations the lower portions were gutted of everything they contained walls had fallen houses of any size had been moved bodily for hundreds of feet from where they stood, but the flood water had not done any exceedingly amount of damage except to stocks and goods on the two ground floors or to house hold fueniture in the lower rooms of the structures.....

But when I neared the outer limits of the city with the explorers we came to an immense wall of wreckage stretching as far as eye could see.Those explorers who I came along with and who pushed so laboriously through the wreck laden streets the slimy streets smeshed with the bodies of the dead to this point were indeed fully unprepared for what they saw.In deed I was probably more unprepared than they were.We climbed upon the great wall of windrowed debris and beheld a great sight that stunned us.Beyond where we had been so accustomed to see big avenues and thousands upon thousands of homes there was not i nothing but a level sea of water shoe chocked in places with jams of debris and floating houses and all bodies and the swelling undulating dip of these waters tossing and leaping in the last throes of their wild work made a scene never to be forgotten.In a few weeks the re/ief expeditions with surgeons and Red Cross Nurses and others which had been sent to this city from other places became so numberous dear Husband that they even had to drum up the patients.When I was m marooned in the building I saw some rescue work done by others some that ended fatally.A pretty little girl floated along on a small raft with two boys and a woman whom some of the rescuers in another house within sight picked up and handed them through a window. The raft then tipped as he tried to climb in himself and he therefore fell into the water.He reappared clinging to the fragment of the house but was evidently hurt and somewhat dazed.one of the men in the house then descended holding to a rope and brought the man to the window and he was rescued but the rescuer in turn lost his hold when a swirl of wreckage struck against the rope violently and he was swept under the house before my very eyes and drowned.

Another man who lived in the north end surburbs in a big wooden house went out to a big barn to release his only horses and some cows and gave them a full shance for their lives.The horses came out immediately and swam after the man to the front steps which held and walked right up the steps in the interior of the house and went into the upper floors the corws and the calves followed directly after the horse and had gone into the attic.Another horse and a pig not only then came into the same house when the door was opened but as the waters rose and rose went up the stairs to the third story where as I heard even after the flood had subsided these animals were still lodged as they were afraid to come down.I saw one instance where a mans cow managed to get up on a floating raft or what had been a floating veranda of a drestroyed house.During all the while the flood raged and raged,, the veranda continued to float wheron the cow continued to remain and after the flood was found there with water still all around him.Many of the people v wisely turned their horses and other animals loose on the streets at the beginnig of the floods steady and swi t swift rise and they all turned up all rig t right afterwards.One of the pitiful sights was the that of so many dogs and cats and other house hold pets wandering about over the wreckage looking for their homes and masters and mistresses which had been swept away.One of the men picked up four dogs from apile of wreckage. and they were indeed very glad to change from the rafts they stood upon all surrounded by the water upon to the raft whereon there was a man.

The estimate cost of the aid so far extended as I have learned was about $40,000,000, or nearly a hundred thousand dollars a day, the great bulk of the aid going to the many thousands of men at work in the city cleaning up the wreckage, digging for bodies, clearing the streets and through them to their families.No abled bodied laboring man no matter who he was was allowed to escape any amount of work whether he liked work or not, and whether he needed aid or not, though most of them did.This applied to those only who were not prisoners or war.Practically every abled bodied prisoner was also put to work at the point of the bayonet and unless he worked he got no supplies nor any food or drink. The mahority of wages consisited entirely of rations only given only according to the number and needs of the laborers family regardless of the amount of work he accomplished.

Asfast as goods and provisions could arive to little girl Knool they were placed in the warehouses from there the different ward chairmen of the relief committees requisitioned them and they were taken to the supply depots in the different wards.All day long for days I have seen motly crowds around every one of these depots children at least predominating at least two to one of the grown people.Every applicant p assed in review before the award chairman and recieved something what ever was needed.

Yet the supply of food stuffwas said to be very adequate and there was still a great shorta e of clothing and none of the cars could as yet reach the city itself.And all refugees are still crowding all the trains that can run and also crowding the boats leaving the city and at the same time the supplies that were to be forwarded are ariving.One of the most remarkable things attending this disaster at little girl Knool city dear husband was the strange and brave fortitude of the surviving people.Their tremendous loss in relatives, friends n and property was so terribly overwhelming that it is too much to be expressed with outward grief .When the flood itself had junt began I reached home after wading in water up to my neck and made immediate preps preparations to take my servants where I felt their safty would be fully assured.The water however began to rise so rapidly that in fifteen minutes or less we were driven to the second floor and then to the third and then it was impossible to leave the house.At this time all houses within our view went down with t e their occupants all men women and children.Then down the flooded street came rows of wooden houses which struck a telegraph pole and stopped directly in front of my house.I heard women screamin and children crying and my ser servants risked their lives to rescue some and did so but were drowned when they tried to save themselves.Other cottages and houses came sweeping by and crashed anny the gallery of my house.Many houses floated by all those dreadful days and nights carrying sometimes great crowds of terrified people and f could see them struggle for life.At the worse of the flood I surely was expecting it to be my turn next.Time and again would come the piercing screams of women and children followed by a great crash as houses turned over on their sides and was driven past by the flood which was running fourty miles an hour to my idea.The water was already reaching into the floor of the third story and the waves kept knocking us about that fearing it would rise higher we stood on high tables and made up our minds to seek shelter on the roof nests.

Finally the waters began to gradually fall.When after it receded I looked about and could not see a house for miles there was nothing but a flood of water in every direction.In the morning we found our house was off its foundation and was in a different street at fr at which we lived first.

Now as the flood a has receded from the city and as I escaped and d as I a safe I ask you not to worry and to tell my dear daughters that you are s safe as your own home was not covered by water though only a little inundated.I hope to hear from you soon and when you write please address me to Jennie Turner to where I am going.

Best love and kisses to you and my dear daughters from Mrs. Mrs Anna Vivian.

CHAPTER EIGHTY SIX..

THE AWFUL MAGNITUDE OF THE MISFORTUNE THROUGHOUT THE COUNTRY. WHATATHE MEASURE OF RELIEF WOULD COST. THE HORROR AT GALLILIES RUN AND OTHER INCIDENTS OF THE CALVERNIAN FLOOD. THE MOST GREWSOME STORY THE WORLD WILL EVER BE ABLE TO COMPREHEND OF.

GENERAL Dargar who is the chief head of the Geminian Bureau and who had usually investigated the strongest interest of the whole country of Calverinia and other parts of Abbiannia said on the date of June the 17th that at the least more than I $105,000,000 would be required to put even the ruined cities back on their feet, but this was only what was merely needed to clear the wreck.Of what measure of relief would burn and bury the countless members of dead,clean and purifying the streets of the smaller cities feed and clothe the living and place all the survivin people where they can be self sustaining was a hard question to answer indeed.He was asked question upon question on this situation but his reply was;

"Why ask me? Yet what I think it will take one hundred and five million dollars to relieve the stricken cities and towns that survived from the distress from the floods.And only that sum alone will be needed to clean the wreck and dispose of the wreckage strewn outside in the country to remove the ruins and dispose of some of the dead, but w t what is needed to sustain the living survivors is a question that is hard to answer for any one.To feed and clothe the people would cost much extra and to have the means to have the surviving people who have lost everything to make a start toward the restoration of their homes would cost nearly a as much again and probably more.So a only do this for the clearing of streets will take every single dollar of $105? $105,000,000.

Even one week after the flood had subsided from the cities and towns it was said the many injured were recovering slowly from their injuries but that so many men and women and even children were suffering from nervious shock that it was apparent that many would go insane and that they found it impossible to sleep.Food for some points that could be reached and was not hindered by the flood was coming in by the boatloas boatload faster than it could ever expect to be handled or given out and it was coming in such generous quantities that no further doubts could be entertained about supplies."

The full estimate of the numbers of survivors dependent on the many thousands of relief committees varied from 18,000,000 to 25,000,000.The date date of this information was of the sixteenth of November and still in the countryside the flood so lodged logged with wreckage showed no signs of going down.

In the business center the streets of some of the bigger cities like Angelinia Agathia, Dorothy Gale, and Glorianna and Lucillie Rickeen had been cleared of wreckage and opened but yet all thebuildings still showed marks of water but all goods possible were being displayed and all business was being transacted and all recruiting places were recieving more enlistments than they could hand'e Handle.Even the mobilisation places in the city could not handle all the men inlisting for the army.so far up to now there had been no need of the Abbiannian government forming the Conscription Laws.

All these cities mentioned were all gradually assuming the appearance that had been so well known before the outbreak of the flood.All the main streets were being lamp lighted and the no strils were no longer assailed by foul smells except in the outside circles of the destruction where so much debris stillremained untouched.The cremation of the dead was still beingpursuhed and yet it was said it would be many months before the many working parties as there were could get at the last of the bodies.The whole three hundred mile of country except the biggest cities were still submerged and towns were still under water.

The horrors of the region of Gallilies run where more than thirty four towns of good size and big populations had been swept away were just being learned at Angelinia Agathia.In this region no one escaped with their lives..One hundred and eighty thousand bodies found in that neighborhood were buried within the last two weeks and more were being found.Between twenty and thirty thousand bodies were counted a ong the piles of the long railroad bridge between Heidi Junction and Godfrey Point at Gallilies gun a distance of fifty six miles from Heidi function.

In the Sides,light's gun section about 200,000 more were reported lost eighteen thousand have been drowned or killed in the parcial destruction of Randall city.The farther the many working parties and the Clandelinian parites of prisoners reached the more numerous became the dead.fires were burning every thirty feet on the shores of the flood, and in many of the streets of some surviving cities.The Mayor of Big Girl Knool said a week and a half from the date of the outbreak of the flood;

"The Majority of our cities have suffered such immense damage and such loss in every way that we are so absolutely broke that nothing can be done to repair what we lost.Big Girl Knool city alone not counting the others must have suffered in my own estimation based upon all the reports I have recieved nearly two hundred million dollars in property alone. The total loss in all other places God alone knows.All the shipments of disinfectants and a food supplies which are expected to be on the fire cannot reach us on account of our being isolated utt ll by the flood and what can we do to me meet the immediate wants of the people.The few Airships that the government have are not enough to bring in supplies.not one of our cities or towns most hardest hit by the disaster are stillable to regain any of our transportation facilities and stocks of everything and we are not even able to do anything what advantage.We have throughout the region as I hear between 11,000,000 and 33,000,000 men and prisoners at work searching for bodies, clearing the streets of the ruined cities and towns and burning debris and trying to locate bodies still in the remaining flood, but these are a mere handful that should be mee ded.Of this work which should be done as fast as possible in the interest of the living, countless thousands of hidden Clandelinian vandals nd and sharpshooters are doing all that is possible to hinder, and though some of the prin cipal streets of our city had been already cleared the vandals are even trying to swell the disaster by starting big fires.I hesitate to say how much it will take to put Big Girl Knool alone where her surviving people can be able to care for themselves.Certainly fifty five million dollars will be the most of a moderat e estimate.There is not a single building that escaped dwmage or total demolition every house is torn through and through in their lower sections roofs are crashed in and all need to be straightened on their very foundations.If our city could even get 10,000,000 more it would not enable the people to become self sustaining.

It is true Big Girl Knool City, Angelinia Agathia, Dorothy Gale and others were said to be the most beautiful and the most wealthiest as well as Holiest cities of the country.but all the rich people every where in the track of the flood had everything here and are crippled. and even the Insurance has been wiped out by the floods.even all people who had moderate means who had hon a builded on hard earned salaries are all ruined.The class dependent dependent upon labor suffered as bad as no any and must be furnished something to do for even the smass smallest wages or must suffer.Many of the investigators who have been among the people everywhere say that there are scores of millions who are helpless and without homes and shelter who must be fed and clothed and sent swftly from the region of the flood and carried along for ever so long.My God who can comprehend the awful situation of the disaster.The contagious diseases is still spreading and the dreaded plague known as the Flu is starting.Hundreds of thousands are suffering from shock and exposure and from injures recieved among the ruins and it is reported that there are fourty five thousand ill from Sar Scarlet Fever and even hundreds are suffering from Rabies and Hydrophobia.....

The city of Big Girl Knool alone I am convinced not counting the bodies brought in from other places by the flood, lost fully 55,000 persons.Down outside the city were scattered between twenty two and thirty three thousand persons whose identification proved they came on the flood from our sister city Little Girl Knool.From so many reports coming in it is surely apparent that most of these people lost their lives. The country side where smaller towns and vil lages stood seems to h v have been swept clean.

A mobolizat ion camp at Little Girl Knool was wiped out by the flood, and the trained men and raw recruits there numbering a hundred thousand men came out of the flood with a loss of eighty seven men.Many of these regulars floated fifty seven to a hundred miles on doors or outhouses and other wreckage and one officer was carried all the way from there to

Pandora city having floated on the flood for six days and nights and suffered intensely from thirst hunger and exposure was was rescued more dead than alive.The small number of sur vivors were barracked in a small camp of tents untill they could leave for Angelinia Agathia to be outfitted and armed.the officers and men lost everything and had to get clothes from citizens to clothe them.The members of the Gemini undeto undertook to see that the children of the general did not suffer.The t others also took a personal interest in this sad case.The general who had been in charge of the mobolisation camp at Little Girl Knool came to take command of the new troops a few days before the flood began.His family consisted of his wife, mother father and his three little daughters, aged five six and ten.He had moved into a smal building to be used as his headquarters.when the flood suddenly tore away the house and engulfed them all the children alone somehow somehow managed to save themselves and floated for a hundred miles on an immense raft of tightly jammed debris and were rescued in the flooded streets of Lucille Dickson City.

The general, his wife and parents were lo st.The number of our persons who could and who fled from the flooded regions during the first two weeks after the National Wreck was said to have been about eight million or more.The latest list of burned and buried dead at that time accounted for 1,44,078 persons.The heaviest of all the losers here is the municipality of the cities and towns.To look at it now"Continued the War Mayor of Big Girl Knool it would seem that our whole Calverinian Country is ruine d utterly ruined financially but it mus t be that there is some certain way out."

The whole country in the south so badly devastated was surely in a bad position.Before the flood all the cities and towns had a total assessed valuation of $1,226,77,888 on a bases of seventy per cent value.and on this there was a total net indeptedness of $125,678,999.Various citizens and the Gemini estimated the loss had been at least total throughout for all the towns and villages swept entirely away.Of the big cities still standing but so terrible devastated they had not yet reached the legal limit of bonded indeptedness but under present conditions after the flood was now far beyond it.All the cities were in a bad way financially on account of the war expenses even Angelinia Agathia and Dorothy Gale being many months behind in salaries.Now nothing was left.The problem now is how to float more bonds when all the assessets which made former issues so good have been so fearful wi ed out.But in other ways for the bigger cities not too hardly hit by the flood the situation in all parts were said to be somewhat improved and as it is hoped with continued fair weather continue to improve.

The great loss of life occasioned by the flood at Van dall City near Gallilies gun and elsewhere on the region of Aronburgs gun was said to be about twenty two thousand wil while the property loss was at about $32,000,000.One of the head authorities who lost all his property in the flod, fifteen houses, and all his possession and whole family applied for work to avoid having to go on the streets and dig bodies but soldiers forced him to the wreckage at the point of bayonets.It seemed harsh but the condition of things did not except no one.The most reliable informat ion obtainable places the total dead around Gallilies gun between five hundred and five hundred and fifty five thousand.Yet it was said that in most places where the flood had left for total the situation was growing rapidly better and that two million men cleared no st of the wreckage and got all the bodies out they could find but thatthe majority of the peoplesti found themselves dazed and shattered as a result of the flood and knowing the enemy was responsible were infuriated and everywhere the very prisoners had to be more strongly guarded or the enraged citizens would have linched every Clandelinian they a laid their hands on. even children when they sawthe opportunity stones prisoners even under guard or flung mud and clay into their faces and even flung it at the soldiers towhen they interferred.The loss by every city facing the river on their wharve wharf stocks was total and the companies that owe owned every foot of the docks exacted a total loss of all freight entering or leaving either by rail or boat.the most profitable of all docks in the country at Big Girl Knool city and Lucillie Dickson suffered a total loss in all stock valued at $22,678,999.The loss of railway stock was not estimated.what was even most needed for any of the stricken cities was money.Millions of persons who owned their little homes or big hoses and the most valuable property sufferex total losses, losses that not even any amount of money could ever replace.They could not even repair their houses by means of even the heavy insurance they had on the structures but because all Insurance companies Loan Committees and Banks had been wiped out toall totally by the flood and those in charge had been drowned orkilled.All these people are fully dependent upon the full generiousity of the outside world and upon all the relief committees to prepare for the rigors of the approaching fall and winter and to refurnish the surviving homes with the necessities known.Indeed no one who had not been a an eye witness to the desolation which has swept over this section of Northern Angelinia and southern Calverinia could have the faintest conception of what it all would mean.The little stream lknown as Callilies run runs into the bigger river known as the Aronburgs run and at this point the flood was really at its worse and every town and villiage in this location for more than sevety two miles in length of ground had been absolutely demolished and two cities Vandalia and Randall had been almost buried under water.The few surviving unfortunates of these two cities even the richest were now without a cent and no clothing on their backs.And yet the depopulation of the ruined cities and surviving towns still continued but many of the families and others still refused to le ave and were still living in their wrecked homes or out in the streets.All of these surviving houses were without floors and devoid of all sanitary provisions and as the serious outbreak of the sickness had at arted all means possible was being made to even compell them to seek shelter elsewhere .The foul stenches from so many remining carcasses made sleep almost impossible at night and all the strangers who did come to the devestated cities did not remain long because of the terrible order or from the fear of being forced into the dreadful work. The line which was ordered did not yet arive and at many places some increase in the sickness and pestilences was already noted,, and a general outbreak would soon occur that would spread all throughout the country if something was not done at once to get the cities into a more sanitary condition.

Thesurviving hospitals and other buildings contained over sixty thousand sick and injured women and children, who were being cared for by soldiers, Red Cross Nurses surgeons and Cathlcic and other priests. Yet many deaths were occuring at these hospitals even though at these places there was no lack of medicines and medical aid but the suffering and sick people who were in sad need of medicines could not be reached.

Appeals from all places have reached Angelinia Agathia and other big cities asking that any surplus of help be sent them.

Even on the following day the work of burning decaying bodies and other carcasses which were being found under every pile and windrow of wreckage still continued and in some of the ruins great piles of bidcos humans and animals were frequently being found and it seemed as if they would never cease to appear.It was like having a million pount box full of rasins and of some one trying to reduce their number quickly and yet only withdrawing the rasins one by one.No attempt at keeping a count of the number of dead was made yet and that was one of the reasons why it would never be known how many were destroyed by fire or cremation.

The waters of the flood remaining out over thevlower levels of the country was still giving up dead bodies constantly as if it wished to get rid of them and the shore portions of the flood and some portions of the interior of the woods were found strewn with them.

In Valdalla city on the Callilies Run out of a score of thousand huses there were only one or two houses in a condition to be habitable and near there the searchers and workers found thousands of bodies of dead animals and humans.The latter had been par cially burie burned or other have been buried but the hands and feet of many could be seen protrud ing from the soft muddy earth in many places and there was not enough peo ple left surviving in that district of the country to bury or cremate the dead.

Big Girl Knool city and many other big ones had been struck many times by floods, partly injured by terrific storms, almost snowed under by fierce winter blizzard storms but this experience did not convince the inhabitants that a disaster like this would ever occur as long as the country exists exists .It was however proposed by the Ab Abbiennian government of taking steps to prevent a repetition of the awful disaster. The Emperor of Abbiennia and all his Royalty called a general Convention and therefore things were decided in some ways and opposed in others. The plans of Count De Biff was to erect dikes and levees at every dangerous part of the rivers that not even an explosive blast could wreck very easily and to fortify these dikes like fortresses seemed very feasible but the others did not agree saying it would be of no use.Emperor Vivian thought that the good old fashioned way was the best to make plans for solid concrete dikes twenty feet high above the water line and extending along every dangerous point of the river and to encamp large armies there and also to increase the number of guards at every point.The others gave this plan some cond consideration and therefore the experts drew plans and maps of the rivers, while Emperor ,ivian decided to make ready a strong letter to the Glandelinian government telling of the awful results done by the flood and of the serious consequences that were to follow if any of the Glandelinian generals by their orders were to make another such disaster.As to his letter see sixteen chapters from this. Emperor ,ivian had said during the council

''From what I have heard the formation of the great Dikes of the Maria ,ic-Allister Run which stretched between Glorianna city and Heidi Junction pocketted the water of the immense flood as like a huge dam and as the flood increased with speed and violence and hurled wreckage upon it the water of course was like the sweep and rebound of some huge tidal wave which carried the backward flow of the flood over Heidi Junction and ward and upon our own city and Dorothy Gale with such devastating effects.At Heidi junction and Jessicia and Henrietta the three places hardest hit whole scores of thousands of buildings brick concrete or wood were literally washed away in a fashion as if they never existed there leaving not even the very foundations to indicate that buildings ever stood there.In these three cities the water rose the deepest especially at Heidi junction.Had the wreckage of the houses of the other towns and villiages that had been swept away not formed into an immense jam near and south and west of these three cities especially Heidi junction and extending along that portion of the flood for more than sixty miles this ernormous body of water hurled back by the resistance of the dikes at ,ic-Allister run would have swept these three cities entirely away and the number of dead would have been horribly quadrupled. The great wall of w indrowed wreckage formed what some would say a immense dike in the path of the main flood and had it not been for that dike equalizing the flow of the flood elsewhere in the whole extent not any lf of the survivors would be here to tell the tale now.''

According to general Dargar ,the buildings of all towns in the path of the flood had been spread in wreckage over one quarter of northern Angelinia and a third of southern Calverinia.

''This flood was a outburst worse than a million cl u cloudbursts''he said ''but never such as in the memory of man before.Still we never know your Majesty when the enemy despite our threats threats and warning s as to the consequences may make one come again and we should prepare against it accordingly.What we want is not to prevent a flood if they make one as they will be too quick.We want to make things that willcause the flood to spread out more slowly and not come upon our towns and cities like the ocean driven insane by the terrible Typhoons we are so well acquainted with.It was the force of the rushing waters that totally wrecked so many towns not the depth.''

The Head Army Enginneer leader attributed also the damage of the many cities and towns in part to the queer formation of the dikes of M is-Allister run and the formation of the landscapes allaround that region which showed that there was no means for the break in the force of a flood coming from the Aronburgs run.Other investigators proved another contributing v.u cause.It had been seen by record investigations that the dike to Heidi junction was in part to the collapse of the big Leb Levees of the same river which did not withstand the force of the torrent and which had originally protected the southwestern end of the low portion of the city.In the regular course of the roaring flood these were leveled off by the r torrents.And there was said it to be a third cause.Near the dikes of the Mic-Allister Run there was a long shallow bar of sand and gravel extending for nearly thirty three miles and which had been formed as a sort of second dike to resist the flow of water should any portion of the dikes burst open.owever the force of the flood from the Aronburgs Run had a tendency to drive all before it and when it poured over the sandy dikes the waters piled up windrows of wreckage over it, and then instead of surging back and brea ing poured over it deeper and deeper and therefore this point of the ground formed an immense pocket. this when it could not withstand the waters any more and the pressure of the wreckage this long sand bar or dike collasped almost along its full length at once and thus the reason w y the waters poured upon Heidi junction Jessicia, City and Henti Henrietta like the flood di upon johnstown Pen.The big wreckage wall also banked against the dikes of Mic-Allister run added to its strength and thus it did not yel yeild. Had it done so the whole of southern Calverinia also would havebeen as badly flooded and the river would have been completely drained out.

Even when the eighteenth oand nineteenth of the month of June Passed the work of renoving bodies from the masses of wreckage every where outside the remaining flood still continued.Thousands of bidies were taken out of the wreckage and with all that that had been doen to recover the bodies buried beneath or pinned under the immense drifts the work for a ll this length of time seemed to be scarcely started.

Even now the time to dig a few graves was not on for the decomposing flesh beaten and bruised beyond recognition was hurried given up to the flames.The numbers of prisoners and even volunteers from other parts of the country for this grewsome work was stillcoming in fastEven all the abled bodied men who had been avoiding the dead under ordinary circumstances were now working with a greater will and energy in helping to put them away.A great deal of the work was being done at the wreckage mountian at Dike Number XO at Mic-Allister Run.On top of this pile of wreckage but under the bricks and timbers twenty thousand bodies had been ta en taken and cremated.At other portions to make the work more quickly the men were at setting fire to the upper sections of the drift not under water and the biggest bon fires in the world were raging along the dikes. elsewhere large forces of men and r prisoners were stillengaged in the work of removing the dead from other portions of the resisting dikes and at this point it was said thewaters of the flood had ran to a height of fourty to seventy feet and hun hung up in the tops of tall trees that had withstood the flood, such as populars furs and big pines were thousands of the bodies of women and children which to cremate or get rid of the workers had to set fire to by igniting the needles of the furs and pines.so hundreds of big fires were set on purpose to get rid of the dead as quickly as possible so when night came these fires made a glow seen for nearly a hundred miles away.All along the shore line of the stillremaining flood the searching for the and the cremning of the bodies that either perished or were swept upon the shore by the flood waves was being prosecuted vigoriously.

To make stranger things in this story even the Aunt of violet and her sisters had an experince in this flood.owever the house she occupied and which had not been overthrown though mangled and which stood at Angelicia Street Heidi Junction city has a great form to be witness as to its strange wreckage.She t wrote this story of her escape to her Husband Emperor Hanson vivian at Angelinia Agathia

''Heidi Junction.
Calverinia.June the I3th.I9I3.
To the Emperor of Angelinia and Calverinia States.
Dear Fa. About on the tenth day after it began the waters started to quit rising and then quickly began to recede and when the waters had gone down far enough I could see immense oceans of wreckage alloutside the city and our home.It was then I had my first gleam of hope.This seemed our repay to come here visiting a little child slave which I wished to take to Angelinia Agathia where she would be adopted by some kind couple whom we told them of .As the waters st arted to fall dreading the fall of the tottering walls of our shelter I and the little child clambered out of the rear wall to the piles and windrows of water logged wreckage out side where we sat exposed to the hot sun and the fierce hot winds untill three oclock in the afternoon when several brave sol i soldiers came and announced to us it was possible to get away and find better shelter. These two soldiers who knew me knew I had taken shelter in this building with the child slave and they came through all the flood and danger to learn out our fate.The gladdest sound the child said she had ever heard that was that of their voices.Those soldiers kindly hastened hastened us off fearing the res rerise of the flood.Never before in my whole life did I ever observe such a sight that met us as we left our nook behind and looked up what had once been the street I found the child on. For miles and miles where there had been a jam of immense houses not a one was left standing.It was allwater and floating wreckage and bodies. As we went on we and the soldiers waded in water up to our waists and one of the soldiers held the child over his head to prevent her from being drowned.Sometimes we lost ourselves in pockets and holes in the flood but we were pulled out by the soldiers.Then we came to huge floating drifts over which we were forced to climb at the risk of life and limb. Fourteen of these we encountered and once we had a fullview of the flood which stretched as far as a sea untillwe could not see shore on the opposite side.Finally we came to one of the strong remaining houses of the city of Heidi where though it was a wrecked building we nevertheless found much better shelter.Two days later when the flood waters left the city altogether,,, we managed to secure an old boat which brought us down to what was left of an old grocery store.We boated into the store making coffee and getting what little food we could.The desolation caused by the flood is something that no wor ds or language can ever describe in a hundred thrillion books.The water stood eighteen deep in front of the strongest building in the city the highest point of the city.Of the surviving structures not one is sound and look like rambie shaken down shacks. very other house had been completely demolished.

y have seen the horrible work of the vandals.These glandelinians do not steal important government papers and other army valuables only but have hacked off ears and fingers bearing diamons and rings and the vandals have placed these valuables into their pockets saving they would make money to help in the cause of their fighting armies.The bodies of rich refine women who wore the finest clothes ever seen have been stripped of the last thread by the vandals and left to fester in the hot sun.All the very ruined residences and other buildings left standing have been broken into and jewl jewleryand other valuables stolen and some of the wreck has even been set on fire.I saw a disguised vandal captured and he was carrying a largebasket filled with Abbis Abbe Abbieannian Ten dlla bills which he had stolen from a ruined bank.Also from his pants and coat pockets protruded rolls of bills as big as the right o tigh or of my leg which he claimed to his captors to have found in the pockets of many of the dead men.

Upon all hands this horrible work of vandalism is going on.The offen ders are not one of the Nationalities of Abbieannia.They are all Glandelinian soldiers in disguises.Even these vandals steal all the liqui liqour they can get and beastly drunk proceed with their dreadful campaign of vanda/ vandalism.They are dangerous to fight with and ten guard are shot by the vandals to one vandal shot by the guards.Immense bodies of troops are needed at once.The hiding place of many ghouls are usually discovered in river dredges and these vandals only shot it out for two days with the citizens and officials before they were killed.I must close as I cannot bear to tell any more of the awful flood.

Your Loving wife.

Empress vivian of Angelinia.

One of the best and probable most inspiring and a plendid chapters of this war History could be of the fortitude of all the sur viving people of the flood; the swift coming courage that rose above all the discourage ments using among other things the very debris of the wrecked cities to make more bu ldings for the new and greater cities and to show defiance to the enemy.Indeed in a part of the midst of a flood calamity which of allkinds of calamities was without parallel in the history of the world itself and which probably could never really happen unlessthe ocean swamped the land the people looked upon the wreckage of cities and towns of fifty and sixty years accumulations and had the resolve that the cities and towns should rise again.

It was the same with the survivors of the two cities that were so terribly wrecked at Gallilies gun w and where thirty four towns had been completely wiped out and their wreckage strewn far and wide over the country.With unspeakable woe on every hand with death in many strange places, with a sea of debris and swirling water all over and around the two cities with in these cities alone five or six hundred millions of their hard earned property swept away in an hour the hearts of the survivors even here were still brave and they looked into the future with more undaunted hearts than ever.As in realty there has never been such an awful calamity so here in this fiction calamity there has never been such a cheerful fortitude in the face of ruin and destruction.At the point of Gallilies gun the water was about fourty miles in width, and sixty or more in length and fourty deep atthe deepest even now and all jammed with wreckage floating houses and the like from towns far away which were brought here by the flood all the way from Aronburge gun.As far as they could go hundreds upon hundreds, nay thousands of train loads of provisions were coming forward to the flood survivors with allspeed from every watter quarter of the nation and armies of soldiers that were not needed in battle and had never been yet needed since the war commence were also advancing to succor the needy and do what ever was possible to put an end to the work of the vandals for good and all.Some have already arived to the places that the flood did not make unapproachable and more was still coming.Train connections were being reestablished between Dorothy Gale and Pani Pandora and also Angelinia Agathia, and steam fire engines from all all neighboring cities had already arived to prevent the out break of fires and to help the city department pump water out of basements and more and o more were on the way.It seemed impossible that any big fires could ever break out now with so much water on hand.

a as wide length of time seemed to be scarcely started.

Already contracts by thousands were being made for the rebuilding of some of the devastated blocks in these cities and the clearing away of the debris still continued especially at points where the waters was so far subsided that the wreckage could be handled..In the bigger cities ruined by the flood however fortunately the money and securieties in all the banks big or small were safe.The railroad were working like mad and with all their ene energies to erect new tracks and to send in trains to bring the many survivors out of their afflictions.Hundreds of mill ons in capital was being invested in the re a reparing of these roads to see the afflicted through and workmen and prisoners were at the toil here also as all camps were sending prisoners to every point where they were needed to be impressed at the point of the bayonet and to give money as wages to those who will work more willingly.The Mic-Hollester and the Evangeline St Claire known as the A bbieannia ondinia and Calverinian railroads hadrebuilded their tracks as far as Dorothy Gale with special reference to a great commercial mart at the latter place and they there fore would not fail to sustain the needy.

No one belittled the dreadful calamity that had befallen the nation.The world have never seen the likes of a real disaster as this, no books ever gave fictional account s of disasters like thi s, certainly not even when so much of Holland was inundated with the probably loss of four hundred thousand lives and hundreds of miles of territory. Besides this flood before there had been cities afire that gave credict for a record breaker like the burning of London England, or Chicago and moscow but one greater scale.Take the burning of Angeline city, Calverine, and Pullaway for instance and the destruction of Adrean for instance.But these are fires and not flood and caused only a hundred to die or less.The losses the nation has suffered on account of these calamities as well as the floods and fores fires, terrific explosions and the expenses to keep up the armies must be horns but theplace the ties and the men are there to commence at the bottom to work up again not at the bottom either for Abbieannia has credit at every land and by the experience of the upbuilding of armies big enough to crush Glandelinia and destroy the wicked rebellion wil- soon come.The whole christianworld was sending relief to Abbieannia.and it was now hoped the worse of allwar disasters was all over, that all danger will be past and the war can be resumed on a better scale and more fair fighting with the enemy.It was said the whole nation was cheering up but nevertheless was writhing in untold anger at Glandelinia for the unusual disaster. Probably on the 21th of June during the time probabl when the battle of Calmanrinia may have been raging elsewhere, that day may have been called the day of transition from chaos to order in the flood stricken cities though it looked upon the surface like chaoes only. The Mayors and the city governments were already busy providing for the restablishment of quiet and confidence and the like and everything was being done for the ressurection of the devastated cities, but little of this was apparent to the general observer.The visc visitor that would have come to the unwrecked portions of any of the big cities would have only observed slight traces of the floods havoc.He would have seen an occasional face of some one appear on the street har haggard and red eyed from the effects of the previous three wee, s awful experiences.They would see water and other carts and wagons moving through the streets and being surrounded by men in dressing gowns, and women and children in their funniest and meanest wear, bearing buckets and pistu pitchers to buy at a shilling or a penny a half pail full the fluid which had so suddely suddenly become so unusually precious .The visitor would see wagons drive up to church doors carrying sick or wounded victims of the recent flood now first furinshed with shelter.He would see hundreds of fire engines from abroad as wellas those belonging to the department of the cities already in poss position or getting into position to pump water from flooded basements of big buildings and thr like their occasional sharp whistle being almost the only sound to break the solemn stillness of the streets.Sometimes the visitor would see wagons of every description and in numbers no one could think the ruined cities could ever boast ply ing hither and thither some unloaded and other loaded down with bodies and they would be driving the horses with reckless speed.

Many if the people who came to any of the flood stricken cities and survivng surviving towns and took a survey of their present conditions and the desolation caused by the flood, and the wide expenses of water still remaining in the country over the land were shocked y by it beyond comparison and went away sa ing the cities and towns could not be rebul rebuilded in less than a generation and that it would be months and probably a year or more before the last of the flood would be gone.

Yet the first hours of despair afr after the dreadful incalculable flood calamity could be described in a million ways and yet not be described as it really coulx have been had it happened for fact in any country in this world.In every street, ally or door way and court of the ruined cities and towns could be seen trembling exhausted ragged human beings men women and children pale with fear, and desperate with utmost uncertainity and revengeful against the enemy.The hetorogeneous crowds could be seen standing or sitting in the streets or as they lay prostrate in despair on the steps of houses and everywhere with looks of grief and despair on their faces .

On the twelveth o night after the great disaster occured in one of the chief buildings in Pandora city a great council held by all Military officers and the li e who had congreated there.There were present one of the highest Barons from Angelinia Agathia, the two sons of Emperor Vivian, and the Premier of Abbiennia and some of the highloyalties of distant countries.The Baron himself in a most graceful and strong speech made a memorab e utterance grateful to all armies and army officers throughout the nation who heard or read it and it was alsopleasing and uplifting to all the business and other men of every city throughout the nation for it appealed to the chivalry of commerce and the nobility of all humanity.The Baron said it;

''On account of this unusual great war that is tearing our countries further and further apart,, half of our nation and many of our cities and towns have suffered the consequences of a great flood caused by the foe and in a all cases it is some event which when it occured was a cause of world wide surprise and tremendous distress and horror for all the sufferers and those who survived the terrible disaster.In this as in everything else our nation had been devas ated in many spots by the rebellion and now at this year and in the approach of one of the lovliest oe years of the seasons of centuries and of the best of months of any year we have witnessed Calverinia suffering from one of its direst calmities, a time just passed when over three hundred villiages and towns were swept out of existance by both fierce forest fires and dreadful floods, and many big cities wrecked and dreadful losses of lives yet we all can recall the enr energy the courage the faith, the enthusiasm and the fortk fortitude with which all the citizens not only of the survivors of the flood but of all the nation itself met and faced and partially conquered the most appalling calamity of the world.Indeed for my part I wi' ll a ak always remeber the dreadful day for as you all know its terrors were frightfully reverbrated throughout the whole world even far beyond the lmi limits of my own country but of all things which I most remember of all the great acts of courage and heroism which were brought forward the one thing that struck me most was not only the appeals issued for the restorations of homes and the succor of the people so suddenly stricken down but the sudden immense armies of men quickly inlisting into the armies because of the disaster probably for duty's sake or to be avenged on the enemy.This caused anxappeal issued by all recruiting stations in every city and town in the country not for troops but for room and provisions and means to handle the ernormous numbers of men who came to inlist.They appealed not for money or uniforms but more soldiers to help in direct the men more doctors to examine them for their entrance into the army.This was an unusual honor to th the ''Abbiennian Name'' to see so many inlisting into the army and coming so fast that not even the biggest o recruiting boards could handle the situation.Schools and big public buildings were turned into recruiting boards and yet they had to appeal for help.Help help help.Is all they cried. They could not handle all the men fast enough.I saw in one place t a whole crowd of men and outside the place was a line of waiting men nearly five blocks long.This was seen at nearly every recruiting station in the big cities and towns.and this was caused because of the awful calamity which has befallen the city.Many of these men inlisting into the army lost friends and relatives in the floods and battles.In y my estimation, and also in my full judgement this was courage and honor of the highest order.And yet when ever you meet courage you are sure to meet justice and generousity.I was standing near one of the recruiting stations and asked one of the men who were waiting;

''when do you'll think you will be in the army.''?''

''Oh by to morrow.''He answered.

''I asked him if he expected to be there that quick.He answered yes he would he would go by himself if he was not sent.Thus we see we need no draft laws in our honerable country, no disgraceful Conc conscription of men for our armies.''

Indeed the story of this great tragedy of the war which occured in Northern Angelinia and southern Calverinia can never be written by me as it would ha have really been had it truthfully occured.Since the worlds worse cataclysm of those terrible three weeks and ten days large forces lf faithful men all war correspondents and newspaper men and the Gemini and others have been struggling desperately to convey throughout the nat ion and even to the whole world itself from time to time as much particulars of the tragedy as possible.

They have written and sent in much of the reports by wireless and the like but it was impossible for them to te l all and the whole world at best can and will never know all of it for the millions of horrible tragedies written by the flood disaster will forever remain mysteries and if they had really happened only Eternity could reveal all.Perhaps at that it was best that it was so for the horror and anguish of those fatal and fateful days and black nights were mercifully lost in the screaming tempest of shrieks and cries and pleads from all those who were being engulfed and buried forever beneath the raging billows of the torrent.Only god Himself would have known and therefore for the rest let it remain forever in theboundlessness of His Great omniscience.

But if so the realm of finity the weak and staggered sea senses of mankind may gather only small fragments of the dis in disaster and may strive with the mostincompletenss to convey what we say is the merest impression of the saddest and most shocking and astounding story which could have ever engaged the effort of millions of reporters had they been sent to find out the deta ls.

Poor Calverinia.The mournful dirges of the flood breakers which still lash the shores of its boundaries could nevervin all the time the real world would.continue to exist give expression to the almost world wide sorrow and woe which throbbed there for days and days, and if the sobbing waves and sighing winds of the ocean God's great funeral chor choir fail how can the weak pen and apps lled thrilled and excited imaginations of the best and most learned of all writers and story tellers ever perform the task .

not even the very human heart can merely feel what language what la will never be able to express.And in the case of the survivors of stric on Angelinia and Calverinia the heart surely must break before it can begin to even feel.Many of the searchers and other workers struggled all dayto reach the desolated city of Little girl Knool but could not make it as it was impossible to reach it on account of the flood barring the wayTo see what the flood reall really did Gertrude Angeline, Jennie urner, and Angeline ichee and some of their boy s and girl scouts took a small boat and spent five to twenty hours rowing and pushing their way through the flood forcing aside wreckage and timbers and floating trees and also bodies and finally they landed on dry land near Randall Cit city on the Gallilies un just as the very stars were coming out.The ver very atmospherh smelt of death, and the scouts in full unifor to show who they were walked in dejected heart sick spirits through the quiet streets tward where they knew the great Turner Hotel had stood.Long before they reached it they had seen in the streets the naked forms of men women and children floating either on the flood waters or lying in the streets and they were so depressed that they were all heart sick.Of their experience, here Gertrude wrote to Violet and her sisters in a letter which reached them in two days;

June the fourteenth.
To the Vivian girl Princesses.
Cedernine Creek.
Dear Princesses;
We did see and observe something that we never wish to again.Randal city was nearly as badly stricken a s Heidi junction and Jessicia.Gallilies un is a se seas of water and wreckage.Bodies float thicker than soldiers we have seen lying on the field of battle all men women and children. Thousands of men were grouped about the streets of the city tal,ing together in quiet tones.We saw sad and hopeless women with despair written on their faces all being seen in dismantled houses and destitute children were about the streets crying pitilessly for their parents and all about them was wreck and ruin.Jennie turner did not cry as I did over these scenes.She couldn't.she was madder than a maddog.Night had dr anw drawn a gray pall over the unfortunate city and for a while the early summer moon was covered with dark clouds which hid the place with shadows.

The city is under martial law and all strangers were required to give an account of themselves before being allowed to proceed. We were known however and the soldiers did not question us.The fact however that the streets were almost impassable on account of the debris kept us reminded that we were in the midst of unprecedented desolation. We detected the oder of the flood waters and the smell of fires that were cremating the bodies. The following morning, the sun drew aside the heavy curtains of darkness and the storm clouds, there having been a severe storm that night, and revealed a scene of devastation that was or is impossible for me to describe. I and my companions spent all day driving or riding about the passable portions of the city and observed the saddest spectacles that we have ever seen in our lives. What were once the most splendid business districts of Randal City are wastes of water and floating debris.

The big river business district known to the richest men in our country was lined on both sides with windrows of wreckage of houses that did not below belonb belong to the city mingled with crumbled walls and wrenched buildings and the street was a mass of debris such as boards and timbers splintered timbers, iron pillars, broken stones and brick and the same was true with a score of other streets and every other street of the business district of Randal City. The stores every one of them were totally ruined and deserted and the blight of destruction was visible as far as we could see. Other parts of the city had been swept away all the weaker houses having gone off with the flood. And as horrible as all this is it is as nothing compared to the hopeless faces of the miserable men women and orphaned and other children in the streets, nearly every one crying. I will not undertake to describe them I cannot stand it to, do so, but as long as we live we will never forget them. It made Angelina ichee and o my scouts and even Jennie Turner hide their faces in their hands.

Many of the survivors I knew personally and these gave us some greetings but God it was nothing but a hand shake and flowing tears. It seemed that every body I knew had lost nearly every one. The tears in their eyes, the quiver of their voices, the trembling of lips. The wit wistful appearance of the children, the plaintive sound of their weeping and crying and pleading was cutting to the heart. The brand of agony and sorrow was upon the faces of every one we met and despair was written across their very hearts. I would myself be willing to commit sucide to plung a dagger through my own heart or put a bullet into my head before I'll ever endure this experience again. We felt we were the biggest fools to go there.

My Dear Princesses you must pardon the personal nature of this narrative but how do you expect we could stand these scenes. It is impossible for me to write without becoming a part of the tragedy itself.

I met Walter Starring here who was on some kind of investigation duty the lad you little Princesses and I have known since the beginning of the war and all his people. Indeed I had in my younger days been an inmate of their own home in Sacremento Abbieannia. I hardly knew him when he stopped me he had grown so much and was in such a splendid uniform.

"He said "Mu sister and mother are at Angelinia Agathia all refugees having arived there. their house in this town was destroyed, hurried out into the flood but they are alive. I'm going to the armies and will be avenged avenged on the enemy if I have to fight forever."

I knew knew the poor boyscout had woe in his heart and I persisted in my questions.

"No Gertrude I was only fooling you." he then said with a strange light in his eyes. I" I did not want to scare you. Really Gertrude I was fooling. I'm the only one left. Father Mother, and my little baby sisters and my Uncle and Grand mother and Grandfather---they are all gone. I have no one now."

I felt like run running away from him. It was it seemed more than I could stand. I felt as if my heart wouldburst it was so full. I even then burst out crying as if I was a weeping baby. I remembered the last time I saw this poor boys family before they left Angelinia Agathia. I remembered little Catherine Starring one of the most beautiful children I ever saw whom you said to me Violet almost resembles your dear sister Jennie. I recall her beautiful eyes and long golden curls and I remember when she kissed me good bye and joyiously told me she was going to Randal city to live. And because of the darn enemy this was her fate and Starrings. And now Starring is alone with no one to make his life happy. I saw the light of revenge in his eyes a fury there despite his grief that almost frightened me.

with all my former enjoyment of seeing the movements and actions of the Glandelinian enemy, recalling how I have laid o upon hill tops hour after hour looking at their distant camps and listening to the mysterious voices in the distance, yet when I think of Starrings family as some of their victims I shall hate Glandelinia forever. And yet indeed what can this grief of mine and of my friends ammount t o inthe presence of the agony of so many thousands who loved the fourty thousand souls who in this wrecked city were forced to take leave of life a mid the wild surging waters of the biggest flood one ever could think of. We surveyed the dismantled business section of the city for half of the day and here the streets were jammed with ruined houses, furniture, cooking un utensils bedding clothing carpt carpets window frames and everything imaginable to say nothing of the numerous carcasses of the poor horses cows, and horses and oth other domestic animals including cats and dogs. Hundreds of the biggest wooden houses and even brick were c completely capsized, many were flat upon the ground with not one timber remaining upon the other, others were unroofed thousands were twisted into the most fantastic shapes, and there were still thousands of others with walls partly intact but which had been stripped of everything in the way of furniture and house hold materials. It is not an uncommon thing for us to know that the rush of flood waters goi g at high velocity to perform miraculious things but this torrent which ran at the rate of thirty miles an hour as some told me repeated all the tricks wind of typhoons and cyclones have accomplished and the flood gave countless new manifestations of its strong mysterious powers. It would take me years to write of all the strange and curious things to be seen in the desolate residence streets, how great trees by hundreds uprooted in the country and taken down into the city by the flood were driven through sometimes three houses at one time, how tele graph po les and pieces of timbers were driven under railroad and car tracks and how furniture of all kinds were transferred from one house to the other.

More ominous than all this were the vastpiles of debris inside and far outside the city from which emanated orders orod odors w which told of count sea dead victims beneath men women and children and probably even animals whose silent lips will neve reveal the agony from which death w lone released them. ore sorrowful still what we saw was the tear stained faces of the women, half clad, and injured who looked listlessly from the windows of their wrecked homes, haunted by memories from which can never can escape--the loss of little babies torn from their breasts or their children and husbands and mothers all hurled into a vast maelstrom of destruction never to be seen again. What were all those wrecked and dismantled and totally ruined homes to the vacant dismantled breaking hearts within? Will our own world ever know or learn the real dimensions of the flood dimaster which crushed northern Angelinia and southern Galverinia and left that country broken and disconsolate like a poor little wounded bird fluttering on the white sands of the ocean. And the beautiful farms, and beautiful meands meadows and the country side, the magnificent woods the beautiful scenery of northern Angelinia all that would have made a nature lovin lover die to miss what had become of all that Mishapen, distorted, blotched and drabbled and crimsoned wreckage and water strewn and soaked the scenery of that was gone only a flood logged with wreckage bodies and floating house tops and as far as eye could see of trees spread away to the horizon from east to west its ugly scenery rendered more hedious by the glinting rays of the setting sun. All the scenery of that part of Northern Angelinia State once a magnific ent Paradise of which no one would dare to leave once he swt hire his eyes upon is has now disappeared and in its place is purling wreckage s a soaked waters and dead bodies. Far out here and there near Gallilies Run could be seen the piling where once rested magnificent lacesplay places of amusements. The waves of the still remaining flood were lashing the once beautiful meadows and lawns which once stretched before small towns now gone before the waters into jams of wreckage. And this flood was sticking with the remains of the ill fated human beings, dogs, cats, chickens, birds horses cows fish and all animals of creation.

As far as eye could reach were massive jams of ruined floating houses wreckage times and debris all shattered and torn and some of it smoking and steaming on top. We ever wrote "When war wings His wide desolation" did not guess wrong. He ought to see this and maybe he'd write something no one would dare publish.

At a great distance we noticed large clouds of smoke and running to the scene th nking some of the ruins were on fire we found a large number of men and soldiers, and some Glandelinian prisoners feeding the flames with the timbers of the wrecked homes, which once gave such a charm and beauty to the shores of Gallilies Run. And why these big bonfires that were nearly as big as a real house afire and making just as hot flames...???? The soldiers and the prisoners were burning as we observed thousands of the human bodies fished up out of the flooded river and the fuel was the windrows of their former homes which the poor victims once did occupied. And yet this awful spectacle was but a small fragment of the strangely murderous work of the greatest flood disastr which had swept any land as long as the world had existed. There were along the shores of the flood at this sections countless piles of sand and mounds of earth in every direction and I knew what they were. And I observed many men and even prisoners there along th at mutilated shore shoveling these uncanny mounds and putting bodies in graves. Indeed we saw what they were doing. the bodies that had been fished out of the flooded river were being buried deep in the sand and gravel. running beyond the grave diggers we saw prostrate on the sand of the shores of the river the stark and swollen forms of men women and children and floatingout further in the flood were other bodies as thick as logs in a jam also soon to be brought in and buried.

The waves of the flood were but the hea hearsace bringing in the countless dead dead to be buried in the sand along the shore. It is the contemplation of such w a scenes as these that staggar out con sciousness and sting our very souls. They told me and my companions with sad humor that what I and they had seen right here was as nothing to what I could have seen had I been here with them the days of the flood. but they did not know I almost lost my own very life in the flood and had been caught on a raft not far from Heidi junction. However I am glad also that I did not have the chance to come here sooner with my companions and we are all sorry that we ever came here at all. what we have already seen and of our experiences of the flood itwelf for those many days has been sufficent to make us all miserable to the longest days of our lives and what we have heard dear vivian Girl Princesses that we could not see and could not have seen had we been in the flood at this quarter of the disaster will haunt us by night and day as long as our lives remain. Indeed I am telling of an incident repeated to me and my friends wjo were with me by one of the most promientnet and distinguished citizens of Randall city. That day we saw seven thousand bodies gathered into one big ruined isolated house near the shore of the wreckage jammed river. no recognize any of these bodies was nigh to the impossible. ll the bodies were swollen and decomposition wjasxsetting inso rapidly that the men were even loathed to handle t them and indeed the oder of death was in the air no matter where you go. There was not enough to handle all these bodies. some of the soldiers who knew us asked us earnestly what disposition should be made of this horrifying mass of human flesh but to even us it was animminent probelem. while I considered the matter we were hauled before the Committee by one of the soldiers and they informed us that there was no time whatever for any deliberation that so many of the bodies asxwe even saw ourselves were already bursting untill the very intestines came out in masses. It was impossible to bury them and they could not even be incinertated in that portion of the ruined citywithout endangering more life and more property as there was not even any fire department in any condition left to putout a big fo fire once one got started.....We ourselves finally suggested to the committee that the best thing to do was to load the bodies on barges or ships or on anything that floated on the water tow them out to the deeperportions of the river near by and sink them with weights. We told the comitee that the situation was so terrible that that was the only thing to be done.

Many of the private citizens wrecalled for to perform this awful duty men who had lost famicies in the flood but they quailed at the task and I did not blame them. And who could blame them. They were told that the most quick of allaction was necessary or a terrible pestilence might come and sweep off the blaance of the living. Still they.wereimmovable and all of us knew it was no time for dallying.

But at that time fortunately many prisoners were being brought in by bthe boat load from some far off christian camp and companies of soldiers with rifles and fixed bayonets were quickly brought to the scene and these prisoners, besides forces of citizens were compelled at the very point of the bayonet to perform this sad, sad duty. By the hundreds the dead were loaded on barges every body as naked as it had fairly come into the world men women and children, al all classes of society and station and condition were represented in that awful mass. The scene sickened us shocked and terrified us but we stuck it out as we would dare anything four the Good and the Cause of our Holy Country. The unwilling prisoners who were being forced to perform this dreadful task were compelled to bind cloths and rags about their nostrils while they were at the work and occassionally citizens passed whiskey and brandy among them to nerve them to the work though to our opinion they did not deserve this as it was their ou own kind who caused this awful disaster. How I hate the glandelinians. I hate the sight of one man of them. One prisoner spoke to me with a sneer and I hurled a chuonk of mud into his mouth and spattered his face black. who can ever conceive the horror of this dreadful situationYet after a while the three thousand bodies were piled upon a long li line of big barges and tugs pulled them slowly out to the middle of the river. hen that far where the wind tossed waters was rolling a little high said the soughing white caps with Gods benediction breathed in the moaning winds,, all that was mortal of these was consigned to the bottom of the ri ver. And yet this was but of another awful incident of the sad tragedy of which I write to yo my dear friends. I met general Saul Marcus of general Vivians army known well in all christian armies for his unusual deeds of bravery and he was a member of a party who struggled for three days and nights to get to Randall and he landed out of the flood late on the third night. It was a most anxious and sad time for him poor soldier for this is the city of his birth and before the flood, he had his father, mother, a Grand and Grand father and Grandmother, six brothers and three sisters one of them only a little girl living here in addition to his wife and son and an Aunt Uncle and a Mother and Father in law and other relatives and not one of them survived. His friends who had escaped told him how his son a lad of twelve ye ars of age had placed his grandmother on the roof of the house after it was floating in the current and had made a second trip to bring his aunt to the roof. When the lad returned the grandmother wa s gone finding in the raging current her final peace. the boy and the rest clung to the roof for a day before it was crushed by wreckage and they too all perished. Every one had been swept away to feed the fury of the flood. General Marcus told me in a with a funny smile that he had sent to emperor vivian a special delivery letter with a petition in it asking him for the permission to take no more prisoners..

How many thousands of stories of sorrows like this remain to be told can not now be numbered. The anxious surviving people who have been straggling into the ruined regions of the cou try from a distance hardly ever found adear relative or any one not missing and who numbered among the scores of thousands who became in a few brief hours of thedays of the flood the victims of the enemy's remorseless furies.

It is with the greatest reluctance that I relate one case that came under my own observation. It was so horrible that perhaps I should not have told it to you dear Princesses at all but only such instances can convey a faint idea of the horror of the flood disaster at Randall. while rowing near the river wharf a perfect procession of bodies was floating plainly into viewand among one of these was that of a naked woman with a half born inf n infant plainly in view. It was a shock to us that made me weep.

How can God allow suchthese things and not even take a handfam ther christian officer in the army had arived the same day we did looking for his little daughter who fortunately was foundalive and well. He told me I "I was forced to help the soldiers and prisoners bury sixteen hundred at Ozma Town last night and all these victims it is said came all the way here from Heidi Junction. The other buried fifty eight thousand Hleid junctio victims outside of Randal the day before yesterday. Coming down Randall Bayou I saw numberless bodies fleting in the wide expanses of wreckage strewn waters, and numberless legs and arms mostly of women and children could be seen protruding from the wreckage. I believe there a re scores of thousands of women and children in the flood strw strewn wreckage near the mouth of this bayou. As soon as the prisoner can be brought o up to do the work badly needed here these poor victims should be looked after.

without the slightest question of a doubt most of them may have been from Heidi junction and vinicity. as none of these bodies were from Randall. Among other things I saw were many thousands of huge tombatones with inscriptions and rusty caskets which had been left on dry soil by the recedding of the flood.

Getting a little used to the scene we continued our trip through the city on the next day. This time we left Randall and went to V n Vandalla only a few miles further away. while we were on our we way we observed agains barbed wired fences, rail fences the bloated carcasses of numb numerous horses pigs and cattle their swollen limbs stiff tward the sky, and yet we saw others browsing around the meadows which was a roaring sea but only five days ago. Thissight was the first we ever observed of death with living creatures surviving around it and every one of us as if to avoid the increasing fear and horror that arose in the mindsof each of us began to express how wonderful thin this thing could be that is so many of these poor brutes are livingand so many are dead. To us it indeed was a most strange foolish talk but a most beautiful one to me. allthe surviving trees still standing wer were leafless and without their bark. Could any man or woman live in such a dreadful scene. Yet here and there we did observe a large country house on a high rise of ground even now tottering and in it could be seen some distressed man woman or child looking out over the devastation of his or her all. And so they could live and hope take on a new life.Then the fields and country side began to show us what was remaining of the flood and what the awful flood had accomplished. where the water had slightly receded could be seen the highest grass and shrubbery all laid low.The flood was very angry at this spot beyound the slightes slightest doubts.Our boat went on Jennie Turner taking taking a turn at the oars.As the boat continued on we were more quiet while our boy scouts worked and pushed aside all wreckage that tried to obstruct our view.

We were not doing any talking now.Only the rowing sound could be heard. Hope had gone with the sight of the once beautiful meadow grass so brutally laid low.We knew we were within the land that this flood demon had so lately ruled.Our boat merely because of the debris floating on the river was forced to stop every now and then while the boys withpoles and hooks cleared the way and therefore our progress was very slow.Once in a while they were forced to shove aside bodies of men women and children.

Jennie Turner giggled at this.It was not glee it was getting too much for her.She even wanted to shoot a Glandelinian prisoner and how would have had she had the chance .I felt the same way myself.Angeline Nichse had not stopped sobbing since we came here.The scenery of the distant flood still remaining and the wreck a schocked river added to the effect. I was here at Gallilies run way before this happened.It had been a paradise which many would have loved to see forever.It was now like invading the territory of the awful.On through this jam our boat slowly made its way.Outside of the very river seas of debris and bodies of all kinds covered the prairie and the forests of trees looked as if a cyclone had torn them.Such beautiful trees.All this wreckage no doubt was from the many towns wipedout near Gallilies run because all this could not be from any other places.

All the ground for miles and miles was covered with the sad fragments and remnants of homes of towns and villiages which may have stood many a mile away.Tingled with the wreckage were lace curtains, furniture of all kinds, broken trees, childrens toys, ladies toi oi toilet articles bed c,lothes childrens shoes, shoes of all kinds from shoe stores clothing of every kind known in the dry goods stores and in fact everythingthat goes up to make up a ni ce little town.I picked up a letter lying in the soil near the edgeof the river and read the first lines:''My darling child.''I threw it away.I could not bear it.At this point we were six miles away from Vano Vandalia city.Soon we arived to ''where in the world was Vandall? I looked at Jennie Turner and she looked at me. I felt sure we lost our way and we started to go off in another direction but all we encountered was a big sea of water and floating wreckage. Yet as the wind was not strong the flood as wide as it is was like a country pond gentle and its edges lapped and kissed the few blades of grass that grew down where the rise and fall of a tide would have been natura l. The flood seemed however t to mson like the sea.But the edge of the water merely gurled but nevertheless every little wave was throwing up within sight among the floating wreckage the dead.Even the bloated cows horses and other animals which provident farmers in the country had owned and petted were there.Thousands of chickens , as many more rats, dogs cats everything it seemed that breathed was there dead and swollen and making the very air horrid.Among them were thousands of people.Finally we came to a point where we saw men and even women burying what dead they could take out of the flood.I saw them take swollenwomen and swollen men and children and with the quickest work place them in t trench graves.It was a terrible sight but what else could they do.There were no burial services.

The men and even the women who did the work were simply doing what they could to relieve the air of them as much as possible.They were not at all gentle but how could they be gentle when the b bodies floated near with their black swollen faces their terribly swollen tongues and the oder of decomposition threatening all those who ,ilived.This scene struck us with horror.But it was the only means to quickly get rid of them.There were many bodies buried there that day buried as best as these poor people could bury them with the idea wholly that they should be placed where their friends and relatives could afterwards find them and to protect themselves against the danger of disease.

In the debris observed floating on this vast flood of water was everything. We had to land shoreward as to pi o push the boat through this we did not dare to try because of the decomposing bodies.We viw viewed it then and we were all impressed with the idea that this truely must have impressed the surviving people that the world was at an end.But why did we not find our way to Vandall.For as far as we could see there was nothing but water and wreckage.The very debris h had been broken over and over again by the torrent.We found blurred letters floating in the water.I fished out one of them and it began''My Darling little Wife''I closed it there and thr threw it back among the fellows on the floating drift.She was dead.I knew it.I walkee up to one of those burying a body and asked him where I could find Vandalia.

''You mean what was the city of Vandall''He said with scorn in his voice. ''You are not blind are you little girl.Don't you see the flood right here. This is Vandalia.''

I thought he was mad and I said ;

''You are mistaken sir.Vandalia is not water.It is a city. ''

''Right you are.''He said.''But here is where Vandall stood.Nothing is left of her now.''

That was the end for us of this scenery.Vandall wiped out with the death of probably all her inhabitants.We are now on the train for Angelinia Agathia .We do not care to write any more so now I&ll close.

Your loving friend and compan ion.

Gertrude Angeline.''

PART TWO OF CHAPTER EIGHTY SIX.

IN INCIDENTS OF THEHORRO S OF THE DESC DESTRUCTION OF THE CITY OF VANDALIA. T THE ACCOUNT OF THE RUIN BEYOND DESCRIPTION ALL IN THE VINICITY OF GALLILIES RUN.

THERE were quite a number of incidents that occured during the total destruction of Vandall city which had so surprised Gertrude Angeline and her companions.One incident could be this.A house belonging to George Algro fell before the current and he managed to fight his way out with his wife and a little child who was sick in bed for two weeks.He managed to get both to the bigger house that was next to the one he lost.This was the hose of Anderto running.This house also went down before the force of the flood andthe whole family here was lost.Mr Algro caught a large piece of flooring put his wife and child upon it and then he himself swung onto this and even after he was so ad he did ot under t understand how it ever stood up under them for a fullday.All tho time he kept telling his wife not to allow the chil d to be swept away Along in the early morn ing after floating all night the raft struck a large floating tree and the strange craft was swept from under them.Algro caught a large limb with his wife still clinging to him and holding the child with one arm.By this time the man was completely exhausted but he managed by a hundred successive desperate efo efforts to get his wife into the tree. A little later another man ofv man of heavier weight was seen coming through the rushing waters and he grabbed hold of the lower limbs and was advisednot to come up any higher for the man was afraid the tree with four people on it would be made top heavy and hurl them all to their deaths.Finally when daylight came and the flood slowered lowered quite a good o deal he pushed through the flood with his wife and child and after working for three hours he reached some high land and eventually got to some sheltered.Not untiltwo days had passed had he or his wife and child sufficientl siffu sufficiently recovered from their exhaustion to even eat a little.Everywhere along the shore of the flood here workmen and prisoners were seen digging for bodies in the debris and found so many that they had to be cres cremated.Another rescue deed was heard of before the flood finally swept the smallcity away.This man had heard constantly the cri cries of some people outside just at themoment when the flood was starting to recede.They were calling for aid.The man made a rope and started out to find the peo l peoplewho were calling but the current tore his rope to shreds and he had to return to his house ro make another and much stronger rope.The cries of the people still filled his ears.He went out a second time and after being going for what seemed more than two hours to those of his friends wh who were waiting he returned with the people.They had clung to the branches of a poplar a tree.A little cat remained mewing over a pile of wreckage that was on the edge of the shore where Vandall city lately stood.It was suggested that he was guarding some ones body n and therefore the rescuers dug beneath the spot and there they came across the remains of a li- beautiful little girl who they identified by the clothing and diamond rings she wore as Starrings youngest sister of whom Gertrude Angelina had written of a popular little child well known both in that city and elsewhere. Starrings whole family who had been at Randall had been drowned and their bodies no doubt had been swept this far by the dreadful waters. The father was said to be a general who was killed at the battle of Ester Starring early in the war. Gangs of men and Glandelinian prisoners clearing the wreckage of large numbers of houses near Northb Avenue and Center street at Big Girl Knoo, found a live child locked in a wardrobe. It was impossible to identify the house or the name of its former occupant as wreckawge of other houses were piled together inimmense masses of brick and timber. The wardrobe was pulled out of the wreckage a dozen feet from the ground where it had been buried beneath fourty feet of debris. The little baby seemed the moe the worse from his experiance of four days looked up in a wardrobe beneath a mountian of wreckage and how it was possible that the water did not float the thing or find entrance and drown the child was a wonder that surprised even the Glandelinian prisoners. At Vandall the destruction of the biggest Catholic Orphan asylum in the country and the loss of all of the children except three of the men attendants was told by one of the men survivors who came through a most terrible experiance by dint of Good Providence.

These three boys came through with scratches and some minor injuries cuts and other br uises and their lives and their names are Albertia Kortmann, aged thirty six, Father Francis Boilen, age fourty four, and Whilliamson Caldwellian also aged thirty six. (pick up sticks) The latter was the much large of the three men the other two being somewhat undersized.

The priest went to a sister living in Randall and was not seen.

The other two who were more injured were taken to Big Girl Knool and placed in a surviving hospital in the ruined city,,, where their wounds were dressed and where one of them was seen by a reporter from Angelinia Agathia city. O he man whose n m name was Albert Kortmann was c foriegner and he could not yet speak the Abbisannian language well and so the statement devolved entirely upon the other man to tell the tale.

According to the story this man told whether it was believed or not by the reporter all the children over seventeen hundred of them were gathered with the sisters and many of the workmen in the immense Bapel chapel on the third floor of the building that is in the north wing of the structure.

The force of the flood was hurling avalanches of wreckage in a fearful ram outside, buildings by the thousands were being shattered at once by the force of the waters or carried off like so many boats and fearful of what would happen to the or phan asylum and those inside they all engaged in prayer. The east wing finally went down before the force of the crashing wreckage and roaring waters and they were then driving from the chapel to the floor above that is thouse who could get there many perishing as they were overwhelmned in the chapen chapel when the torrent broke in with crush and roar, the water comi g coming in at every section of the building and threagening to drown them all. Many of those who could managed to clambor out on the r of roofs of the parts of the structure remaining but not all and those who did succeed were terrified by the terrible destruction of the building and the city itself. Finally along about ten oclock in the morning the manmas not positivean to the real time or the hour the force of the flood intensified and gre worse and the whole city was being torn to pieces and immense jams and floes of wreckage swept before the insane waters. Then the remainder of the building went and the roof went into the water. What became of the others the man declared he could not tell as it was too much for him. All were drowned like rats in a trap. Caldwellan only knew that he managed to getout of the buildin building somehow and caught a large piece of drift which he believed was tr the part of some roof or something of the sort. The priest broke through a transome and trying to rescue some of the children managed to get out of the transome but the children were swept from his grasp and they were drown drowned. The priest drifted for some time and finally caught an immense tree to which he clung most desperately and soon found that the other two men had caughtthe same tree. Prior to that they had been seperated but a strange fate had attracted the men to the same place. This tree it turned out later had caught in the wreckage of a whole p lot of houses. There they re a remained all night and all the next day untill the drift grew so immense and soldi solid that it threatened to crush the tree. At one time the orman fellow was about to give up and cried out that he was drowning but Caldwellian caught him and lashed him to the trunk of the tree with a piece of rope that he found there. In that way his life was saved. When another day had passed, they found that they we re alone in the open flood sea on the immense poplar tree. The tree however soon broke adrift from the wreckage and strange as it may seem brought ther the boys and the men toward the shore of the floof flood. They finally landed saft y saflty and started northward not knowing which direction to take as the flood was raging in nearly every direction. They finally brought up to what had been left of a smalltown something like ten miles from the place where the orphan asylum had been so recently located. There they found some home of an old lady but were unable to get anything to eat because the poor woman had nothing herself. so they headed on tw toward the city of Randall but it was a long hard pull through some less deeper stretches of the flood and hungry and faint for the want of fresh water and food, they brought up at a house that had gone through the flood,, was partly de molished and at the back of which was another ruined house supporting it.

Therethey remained untill portions of the flood disappeares from this location and ever every minute had been afraid that the flood would rise in its might and fury again and carry away the place of refuge. but the flood did not rise and in the morning they started on reaching Randall city during the later part of the day where they got some food from a ruined store. he two men who had beem injured ore more seriously were sent to Big Girl Knool by a swift boat.

It could be said it of the local accounts that during the day of the beginning of the flood near Gallilies Run the rising flood had been cutting up funny and strange didoes and rising and falling every which way. This was on june the first and the flood center was deflected east toward Heidi Junction and north also upon Angelinia Agathia but also going out of its usual way to strike Vandall and Randall. On the next day June the 2th the flood increased with astonishing rapidity and then came a hard driving torrent of wreckage and debris from other places which began to bombard every town on the Gallilies Run as if with the most terrific gun fire. The flood waves were continually rising hurling the seas of wreckage before it with mighty force and bursting buildings like that of spray and engulfing many within in before they even thought the disaster was upon them. At times some of the immense floes of wreckage would twirl and swirl on and disappear leaving the flood waters almost clear of pounding crashing wreckage and then as if gathering force anew more seas of wreckage would sweep on anew battered away many more houses and carry all before it. Earlier in the afternoon al the towns had gone down before the flood and the fury of the flood increased by the bigger jams were rushing upon Vandall and making it almost impossible for the scores of thousands of frightened people to even have time to save them selves. Houses by the hundred per minute were being swept away. The northern end of the city of Vandall not far from the demolished orphan asylum had been entirely washed away and formed a huge jam of wreckage which for a time seemed to check the floods advance further in that direction although the fierce waters at that time dashed with a terrible roar against it and then turned around it like a big whirlpool. The scene of the dreadful flood and the total destruction of y n Vandall was as grand as it was sad and appalling. The flood in its anger and covd covered with so much swiftly tossing and rushing wreck ge wreckage was a sight almost magnificen nangini magnificent though most awe inspiring to behold. Nothwithstanding the terrible noise and the increase and extending of the flood hundreds of thousands of people who were safer on the upper dry lands not yet inundated by the waters went to the edge to behold the maddened sea of waters and thundering crashing wreckage with the purpose mainly to try and rescue all they could. Here rescue work was quite successful and hundreds were taken from the torrent.

Even well dressed men women andchildren came at the edge of the flood and picked their way amid the swirling pools of water and the spent waves to get into mid way and to pass along to safer places where a good view of the sea of waters and debris might be obtained so as to reach the ene endangered more easily. For a few minutes they succeeded in this work but as the flood kept rising more andmore they they were driven back further and further, the clothing of the most daring of the rescuers, even women and children were ripped into ribbons yet the people abandoned themselves to the inevitable and went around rescueing people when they could reach them, careing not for the flood nor worrying about their clothing or that their own lives might be also in peril. Many of the rescuers with abundant foresight appeared on the scene of disaster in their very bathing suits, and of course they were right in the edge of the flood rescueing people from the very jump.

At Randall city the terrible flood carried away over half the buildings and wrecked the rest,,, leacing a sea of wreckage where that portiono

t the city had e been. In the meantime Walter Starring the son of the x general who was killed at Ester Starring who lost his whole family in cluding his beautifull little ci sister in the disasterous flood at Randall and who himself at the time was at Heidi junction through the terrible catastrohpe there had also written to the Vivian Girl Princesses the sad and thrilling story of his experiences .Acopy of this letter they sent sealed and waxed to their father the Emperor of Abbiennia and this is the way he wrote it;

JUNE THE THIRTEENTH.1913.

TO THE VIVIAN GIRL PRINCESSES.

Am writing to tell you of my awful experience here in Heidi ,unction which I had during the dreadful disaster.As terrible as it was and so sudden the flood nevertheless did not o come without warning but the full danger which threatened was not realized not even when the fullforce ths of the flood was upon the city.On the day of the first the flood had a fury that showed it was angry and dangerous.The next morning it had grown suddenly into a furious torrent that began to destroy hundreds of the best structures and the wrecka wrecking of the outer limits of the city began with total horrors beyond description.The waters of the flood pushed onward like a roaring tidal wave loaded with wreckage that xr ashed upon our houses like battering rams per millions per blow.The flood came at a most t errific rate from the north and south and west simultaneously.

Still the men not realizing the danger went to the business distri ts of the city while thousands went on the high f factiry roof tops to witness the grand spect acle which the raging flood presented as it crashed and roared like a gigantic maelstrom around the city.As the hours rolled on the force of the water gained in velocity and the waters rose higher and high and the debris increased. he rushing water torrents changed from the north now to the southeast and more terrible torrents came tearing from the west filling the higher streets now and running like the waters of the storm maddened sea.Still the great danger was not realized.Men and even women attempted to reach their homes in carriages wagons, boats or afoot in any way possible whole many others more reckless went boating in the flood for a lark.As the day wore on the waters increased in depth and speed and the torrent of wreckage tore more madly through the city batterin houses to pieces by the score of pe per minute.Men now who had delayed starting for home heping for an abatement of the flood concluded that the flood would grew worse and went out in boats and on the debris in that roaring furious t orrent, others wading through water and among debris, dodging the rushing timbers, doors, and wreckage of every kind that swept tward them like flying missiles.

Still the terrent increased in speed e en even after it seme it was impossible to be more swift.The current changed from west to northwest and crashing the wreckage madly against the rows of houses with such force that no wooden building particular could withstand them and none wholly escaped injury.The maximum velocity of the sudden rush of the worse part of the flood will never be known but by the swiftly passing wreckage and the quick movement of passing houses it was believed to be as fast as the fasted of the Aronburg Limited Trains.But the flood at that time was as nothing wi when compared with what followed and the maximum speed must have been as great as sixty five miles an hour.

The most intense period and the most anxious time was between the first rush of the floods worse torrent and the six or seven days and dread ful nights following when the flood was at its height.For all those days and nights with a raging ocean of water and wreckage rolling and crashing around them with a current to terrific in velocity that none could escape its fury with roofs being ro torn away by flying wreckage and waters andbuildings crashing all around them by thousands men women and children were huddled in the upper floors of the biggest buildings or on roofs and steeple tow towers caught like rats, expecting to be crushed to death or drowned in the flood yet out off from escape, food and pure water and even in danger of fire when some buildings on the top floors threatened to burn.Buildings were floated off or torn down by the score of thousands burying their thousands of persons, and were swept on by the roaring maddened flood po piling up in great heaps of swiftly moving floating wreckage intermingled with bodies of drowning and killed people.Hundreds of people were thrown in the water every second during the height of the flood some to meet instant death others to struggle for a time in vain and hundreds of thousands to escape death in most miraculous ways. Thousands of the dead were carried away in the flood.Thousands of bodies were buried under in gnidts i the floating wreckage.Many who escaped were in the roaring waters for hours and hours at a time during those days clinf clinging to the drift wood and were landed battered bruised and torn far on the dry land beyond the flood.Others were picked up by rescuers in the flooded rivers.And all during the terrible flood countless acts of the greatest bravery ever known were performed.Thousands and thousands of brave men as brave as the world could ever know dear Violet and your sisters buffetted with the waves and ruching wreckage and t rescued hundred and hundreds of their fel fellow men.Thousands of them went to their very deaths--the death they knew they must surely meet in their desperate efforts thousands of them perishedafter sa ing others--great heros, mar y maryres men who did surely exemplified that sumpreme degree of love of which Jesus Christ did speak; "Greater love no man hath than this, that he lay down his life for his friend."

And many thousands of the men who had surely laid down their lives in this dreadful flood did so in their desperate and wild efforts to save their families, many to save friends, many more to save people women and children of whom they had never heard because they simply knew that human beings were in danger and they counted their own lives as naught.

It is the awful irony of fate dear Little Vivian girl Princesses that so many thousands of those who had left their own homes to seek immediate safty in other buildings perished beneath ruins or in the waters while in most cases their own homes as I observed had remained standing.Thousands andthousands of people took refuge in the homes that had been quickly deserted by their former owners at the sudden outbreak of the flood, and therefore were lost.And those who had remained in the seemingly insecure buildin s in the stru t structures long seemed to be unsafe in case of flood time escaped unhurt.Even as the great flood and its danger was not realized in advance neither was it realized by many during its progress. Many living on upper floors of stronger buildin s slep while it was intense.And even all the horror and extent of the flood was not realized when it passed.Yet as the days grew on the awf awfulness of the wars biggest catastrophe isnow being ascertained and appreciated.

At this time when Im writeing to you dear little Princesses, x six days have already pas passed since I have put in with the awful flood and though they h v have been awful days of suspenser to me I have gone to Randall city and am here to look for the remains of my mother and brothers and sisters.It seems I have been dazed.I have not been able to collect y my thoughts untill to day after I learned of my loss.I a have not found any of their remains yet but expect to find them to morrow.I willeither find them in about three days or so or probably not at all for the searchers a re going to have all the debris overturned in the locality and if they are not there in the wreckage of Randall city then they have drifted out in the vast spread of the flood which of course I think is very unlikely.

The city of Randall ix already under Martial law and Abbiennian soldiers are patr lling every street day and night.Every surviving man has got to do some work here if able and can leave what survivied of his own business.They have recieved orders to burn or take out to the river all the dead bodies as fast as they can find them.I have been helping clearing away the debris that is where it is mo t most likely to find the bodies.I have a permit from the general however that if my family is found that their bodies will not be interferred with if not decom posed and I have secured an undertaker with large metallic coffins who will take charge in a minutes notice.There are thou thousands of men and glandelinian prisoners working here and there in thr wreckage but the work moves on very slowly and it is wearisome the wreckage is so twisted and wedged as to be almost impossible to get it out or even a timber pulled out.It is the most awful sight I have ever witnessed in my life worse than the most terrible scenes of battlefields.Every few minutes somewhere even within one third of a block of us they find too many dead bodies which I cannot bear to tell of the number and often where there is so many there always will come more and more.Yesterday we took twenty five hundred from one b, block.It was a large building three stories high two blocks long and a block wide.Many people had gathered here for safty but the water rose far above the rose in half an hours time and all died together wedged in between ceiling and floor or piled every where in the rooms where they lay.There are hund reds of surviving houses in one great hap and I cannot scarcely recognized a single piece or even the place where I ured to live with my father and mother and the children.For three blocks to six vblocks wide and for about six miles alo g along on my own street solid blocks and dwellings and hotels and the residence part of our city there is not even a board lifet left to tell where the houses stood.It is all swept clean and all may have joined the flocs of wreckage that is seen on the vast expanse of flood waters still remaining.....They have got probably the bones of over twenty thousand and that is not half the number that must have been drowned here at Randall. I do not think that more than two thousand of them have been buried in coffins. Scores of hundreds were taken out to the river and put overboard and thousands and thousands more are being burned every day and night,, and countless hundreds and countless hundreds are yet to be dug out of the wreckage.

Six of the great Catholic Orphanages collapsed with about thirteen hundred children in each all the children having perished it is reported.

The main street car works and car barns are fairly swept away with about all of the employees and thousands of houses went down or to pieces with from one to sixty to a hundred people to per house. A great many of these must have been killed or injured or drowned after getting on rafts by being enfuled by the floes or of wreckage or by the sudden rush of the waters. A survivor of my home who saw the tragedy of my family came ve y near perishing herself. I do not know how she ever averted it but I suppose dear Violet and your sisters there is no use thinking of that now. She told me that she and my family left our home thinking they would be muchsafer in a large house not dreaming that even that house which was a brick structure would be washed away. They were across the already flooded street to the fine large house built on a concrete foundation high off the ground too. About two oclock the flood grew worse a l of a sudden coming like a terrible tidal wave and began to break up all the houses around it and the wreckage of other houses was hurled against their new refuge .

She told me they had so arranged it that if the big brick house did show any signs of collapsing before the force of the flood she was to take the lead, and my mother would come next and the children were to follow simultaneously out of windows and try to secure footing on the more firm of the floating seas of wreckage. In this way it was hoped they would all save themselves as they would have to depend on the floating debris for rafts. There were as she said o more than three hundred persons in that brick house beside my family and herself. They were overconfident the house which had two and a half thick brick walls would stand anything if not for th that they would probably have left on the rafts before the house went down.

My family had gathered in one room she told me nd all at once when the height of the flood came like a terrific tidal wav on the sea the house went from its foundation and the water came into the third floor waist deep the roof and walls crashed down and all the occupants on the top floors all made a brack for the ro roof doors but could not get the sky lights open. They then smashed out the windows and she led the way. he had as she told me only got part way out of the house when the house fe l fell to pieces. She was hit on the head by so e something and it knocked her out headfirst and into the water. She did not know how long she was down as she said she must have been stunned, but nevertheless she came up and got hold of some of the wreckage on the other side of the hou se the current having hurled her against the floe. She could see some men on the wreckage to her right and left and another in front. She went back to the roof of the big house and headed toard the sky light which the occupants had failed to open. With the help of men we broke it open but I and they could only go part way in as one side of the ceiling was not within three feet I think of the water. There was not a single thing in sight. She went back and got on the other side of the roof but no one ever came up that she could ever see. They must have all gone down at about the sa e time but she did not be able to guess why they did not come up unless it was that when the house bro broke down before the force of the flood the wall loosened from the floor and with the lurch they were thrown through the crevice and held down by the floor or the floor of the veranda outside. I was a wonder th at the woman and the men did not get killed when they returned on the roof for just as they left it and got on another drift the house disappeared altogether. She told me she then started to leave by partly running and swimming from one lot of advancing drift to another. The flood was full of tops and sides of flo floating and bobbing houses yet I think she gained about two blocks on the debris in this way and got in the shelter of some h very strong building but it also was fast going to pieces and she was afraid of getting buried. Just then as she told me the part she was on started down on the flood like a gigantic boat n and she managed to stick her head and chest into an oldclothes chest that was lying in the debris she was on. She could hardly hold this down l on its side from being captized but that was what saved her life again. Finally when the thing was benched on the shore side of the flood she was within thirty three miles from where she started. Her head was bruised and her hands and legs were cut a little which she did not know off untill three days after and then she could not hardly get her hat on. Her clothing she told me had been in rags and she had to borrow an old pair of pants a shirt, and one mans suit of underwear and two pair of torn shoes a great outfit for a lady indeed.

As soon as possible I went with this lady to the location of the big house but not a sign of it could be found dear girl Princessa and not a sign of any house for miles in this location. I then went to what was left of the cith city hall to get some help to recover the corpses thinking I guess that I was the only o e one in that awful fix. The Glandelinian soldiers and the other prisoners as well as the rescueing parties started before noon that day to bring in corpses from other sections of the ruined city they brought them in large wagon loads and in auto trucks of about a hundred to six hundred a time laid them in long rows to be identified and the next day to my surprise and horror had decomposition set in and they all had to be loaded on boats on the river and taken to the middle. The prisoners and workers even buried the bodies wherever they were found and at other points the corpses were being burned by the thousands. The men even started removing the debris and burning it and when they came to corpses they were just thrown on the burning pilesMy mother had more than fourty four thousand dollars to her credit at a bank at Randall city but of course even though the bank was not damaged I could not as yet get the money as it was closed before that time on account of the disaster but after I telegraphed to the Abbiannian government I was abled to get identified and the bankers have therefore agreed to let me use it for any expenses connected with my work in trying to find the bodies of my family.

Indeed for any time it is the most awful kind of a disasterthat has ever happe ed in this country or any country in the world altogether. Thousands upon thousands of families have gone down to their deaths, and there is not even a sign of anything left of them. It seemed as all of the victims of the flood were cool ad brave even to the very last. It seemed that in Randall city hundreds of houses fell to ruin and wreckage in an instant. Whatever happened to my mother and brothers and sisters I do not know. It seemed all the way through that they were to go and I was to survive. But I'll fight all the harder against the enemy for all this. The last few minutes and days I experienced in Heidi junction city was indeed a terrible time many in the rooms in the same structure with e were on their knees others were wild with terrible fright. I had kept on telling them that we were safe and about some of the words some of the women said were that God would take care of all of us anyway. The men in the building with us were brave and perfectly cool and so was I and then all at once we went waist deep into water. But that was all the further the flood rose. Yet I cannot tell you all of the awful suspense that was those fullten and eleve days shut in on the top oflder of the building and the water rising every hour and we unable to get out or seek refuge anywhere in case it should rise above the top floor which all the while it had threatened to do. But it seemed when the main crush came it was all over in a minute. I am satisfied none of them with me met death and any how for we all sought refuge on top of the roof, the building remained firm and therefore we escaped. But our's was the only building in that sextion that su sruvied. I met Gertrude Angeline at the wreckage near Randall city and I was forced to tellher of my ll loss though I did not like to do so. If I do not find any trace of their bodies in a few more days I will have to give it up I thinkbut any way I c cannot do anything for them now. I am now getting along right as the soldiers are su plying the survivors with rations but for five days the food and water question was a problem.....

your best and loving friend/

The General Tribune of the Angelinia Agathia N es News press has been ever since t spring sprung into existance (that is in this story and no where else) been recognized by the whole Abbiannian Nation and that whole world with the atran o progressive development of all Abbiannian news and journ l journalism; any part of it may be said to be in all respects notible and most commendable--as of the most honerable distinct ion and a great aid to the Abbiannian nation. The full swift growth of the dignitiy and the prosperity of all of the Angelinia News presses has since the beginning of the gre great Glandico-O Abbissanian war been more rapid than that of any other news paper in the Abbissanian country. Yet the work of all the Angolinia Agathia News Paper concerns in the (supposed history) of the ever memorable flood that wrecked forty cities, and wiped out five hundred small and big towns and villages i tin the southern parts of Calverinia and northern Angelinia States(the latter hardest hit) is considering all the surroundings, a wonderful achievement and one that will indeed be regarded by the readers of all the presses throughout the Nation and the world itself, as of most extraordinary meri merit the one thing that was equal to the occasion worthy the opportunity of the occasion considering the terrible risks the correspondents and news paper men took to obtain the news of the most horrible disaster of the war---a flood that wiped out more than five hundred miles of land in width and nearly two thousand miles in length.

Without the slight test doubt the successor of the Angelinia Agathia Daily and Evening Tribunes is also in rgely due the curious dual character of the news of the devastation of Heidi junction and ailpoints of the flood especially that around the location of Gallilies GUN where of every part of the flood that was the hard-s hardest hitWhere were the cities named that were wipedout by the flood!

Randall, Randall partially wipedout, Heidi junction at the south of the Mid-Allister gun and Harriettathe resources of the office not in the sweep of the most terrific devastation in the war so far were available providing the war correspondents had the Nerves to risk their lives to obtain the news.Yet it was the feeling of the special war and news paper correspondents, though much extremely good work was done that they had not been equal to the grevsome and dangerous task for it was as the Angelinia Agathia Herald and Daily Nerd said in a black headline;

"THE DEVASTATION I OF OUR COUNTRY BY THE FLOOD IS BEYOND THE DESCRIPTION OF ANY MAN; NOT EVEN THE ANGELS CAN DESCRIPTBE DESCRIBE IT."

This gap though the special correspondent's was most faithfully and widely written was filled also by the local papers in a manner that for the Abbissanian Nations that will be forever fatiduasit will quote the following paragraph of one of the Daily evening papers of the Angelinia Daily Tribune as follows;

"Angelinia Agathia.Wednesday.

The southern parts of Calverinia; that is the southern part in the extreme a little northeast of Angelinia Agathia known as the Mid-Allister mundand Gallilies GUN regions has been the scene of one of the worse of all the greatest of any catastrophe ever known to happen in any country since the world began.Our nation since the war has begun has suffered terrible loss from gigantic forest fires; big explosions; losses of navies, and destruction by the war elements of many other descriptions but nothing in pened yet that ever can be compared to this great inundation purposely caused by the enemy engineers at the orders of their Glandelinian generals whose names we are not aware of us.Nevertheless the engineers who were found guilty and the evidence against them have been taken two days after the outbreak of the dia disaster and for the lives lost in this dire calamity have paid with their very own by being burned at the stake.The story of the great flood that covered more than two thousand miles length of country and five hundred and sixty in width and which began June the first and ended June the twelveth especially from the big majority of big cities will never be told.Words of the best of all writers in the world are too weak, too cowardly to express the unusual horror the awfulness of the flood itself to even faintly picture the wide spread scene of devastation wreck and ruin misery suffering and grief.even those who were so strangely and so miraculously saved after unspeakable terrible experiences who were spared to learn that their families and property had been swept away spared to witness scenes more horrible than massacres of children; the fury of battles, and the wreck and ruin of explosions even those cannot tell the story.It will cost the Nation one hundred billio billion dollars to refuge the numbers of survivors.There are millions of stories of the most horrible deaths as the eye of man ever looked upon, millions of stores of strange daring and reckless individual heroism stories of wonderful rescues and escapes, each of which at any other time would have been a marvel in itself and would command thewhole interest of the worldbut in a time of horror and disaster like this when a flood so intense in its fury as ever longed in its dreadful work of total destruction so wide and lengthy in its worse scope and so infinitely terrible in its consequences had ah has swept nearly one quarter of a nations cities and townsand whole forests away and ruined property. in big cities for many p miles on either side and killed as many people and rendered one hundred million homeless and even drowned whole armies of christian soldiers and ruined and totally wrecked mobelization camps that were even proved by experience to be fully typhoon and earthquake proof proof the human mind surely can not comprehend all of the horror cannot learn or know all of the dreadful particulars.everyone who had been interviewed by the correspondents have stood speechless and utterly powerless to relate even that which he felt and knew.

The best of gifted writers have written and told of terrible storms at sea; of the wrecking of vessels, or of the devastation of towns and cities and of the shore where hundreds may scores of thousands of lives were at stakes and even lost.Gifted writers have written and told of most dismals sole lamb storms that secured big floods of other kinds earthquakes and the like and of the awful results of avalanches down the mountain side or of big tidal waves sweeping with terrible results upon the shore.Yet that task pales into the most insignificance when compared withthe attempted task of telling of a big flood; which after arising so suddenly lee as at the orders of the rebellion armies s threatened the lives of perhaps one hundred million men women and children sent to their deaths perhaps over two million poo people and left other millions ecluded, cry ing and wild with grief, and left millions more homeless and in fully destitute and still millions of others to cope with the most grave responsibilities to relieve the stricken; to grapple with and prevent the terrible reign of the anarchic vandals to clear the bigger cities of the decomposing bodies and rotting carcasses; to perform tasks t hat try mens souls and sicken their hearts.

The results of fierce storms at sea and of those sweeping upon our lands like in the past has been terrible in the extreme, but never in our worst storms that strick Calverinia or Abbissanidas whatever had there ever been such dreadful consequences as those which followed this terrir terrific flood on o our lands.and it is men who bravely pushed through the terrors of the flood who faced death for hours and for days and dreadful nights men ruined in all property and bereft of families who took up the herculean herculean and well might impossible of all tasks of trying to bring order out of chaos of caring for the many survivors and getting the dead away before they made a pestilence that would probably sweep many millions out of the world.

Even our news cannot under any conditions command too highly the great and noble work done by the armies of volunteers minds the disastrous flood of june the first.the great catastrophe through which the nation is slowly passing has brought out the fact more and more strongly than it has been s or demonstrated in any co.municity that there is more good in any man than there is evil.The very Glandelinian prisoners themselves were not even half as bad as the pessimists tried to make out and they the were horrified at the awful results of the flood their dastardes so far away had caused and did not approve of it at all.

It ain always is hard to say that fully half perhaps two thirds or more of the lives lost in the flood devastated regions of Gallilies GUN and elsewhere where thirty four tyons were swept away were all lost in the determination to save other hundreds of thousands of strong men and strong women refused to rise and leave more helpless members of their families to die.They made up their minds to save the seeker chee or perish with them and in many cases it surely was perish with thembis soon as the country realized the herculean task before her in burying her million or dead it was hardly necessary to call for vol unteers and the majority of Glandelinian prisoners who were sent to help in the world came not against their will but all ingly.There was not to be seen even an able bodied man of any one in the streets during the most trying period that followed the great flood nearly every one Britain and Glandelinian prisoner who had been able to do a goods days work had been at work and there had only been a very few cases where it had been at all necessary to impressmen or prisoners into the service.The awful catastrophe has demonstrated to the whole world the manhood of Abbissanias splendid manhood and splendid citizenshipin making this nation it is very cheering to say that these words in a general way apply to the Glandelinian prisoners as well as the christians.On the worse night and day of the flood many a Glandelinian prisoner turned loose from the flooded interment camps risked his own life to save that of christian soldiers or women and children.In this perilous work of which he could have escaped from had he been mean enough to do it the Glandelinian soldier was much better equipped than his enemies when he fought in the great war because in the main majority of cases he is in much better physical condition and is more of an athelete.The news throughout the nation it itself had heard of thousands day hundreds of thousands of cases where even the very women and children owe their very lives to the incensed Clandelinian prisoners and the news has ever heard of only few cases where the fellowand clandelinian prisoners have become vandals of which es gained by their captors had gone about the company streets more free now than before and deserting of the acts of heroism they have performed. For their deeds they have been allowed more pr y privileges in the new internment camps, have been allowed everything and even their freedom if they so desired it providing they faithfully swore they would not fight further in the war.many of these prisoners as general Constantinian Aronburg stated have been so shocked and horrified at the disaster that they have turned over to the side of the Nationalis instead.The days and weeks following the flood would have been very black indeed but for the ray of light shed by the vast armies of volunteer workers and rebel prisoners which went to work at every task with heart and soul to bury the dead, fish as many dead as possible out of the vast flood waters st ll still remaining and open some of the streets in the big cities so that communication could be had with different parts of the cities.Now that the balance of this gigantic task throughout the flooded country is about to be turned over to millions of others who are approaching the region to do the work the news cannot refrain from this need of praise to the volunteer laborer and the wil ing clandelinian prisoners.

Northern Angelinia and southern Calverinia when their sad trial came, when their men cities and towns were wiped out completely and wrecked cut off from their sister states and the world in general and overwhelmed, hundreds of thou ands thousands of their people chilled one third of the nations property damaged except the mountains, and the millions of survivors walked, said countless indescribable horrors, as if in fever dreams, saw behold infernos of battles forest fires, and floods, such as hants never imagined or ore painted was fortunate in the possession of the energitic premier of Angelinia Agatha and other big leading cities, and her news papers were of the first of her interests to shoe the inspiration of probablereconstruction when ever it could be accomplished.

General Senor Pedro Segno Evans who was in charge of one portion of the wrecked Rehabilitation camps at Angelinia Ag athia said that most of the devastated regions of these states in spite of all hinderance from the enemy must be restored as soon as restoration can be accomplished and that the ruins of all the buildings in the bigger cities must be made much stronger than those which had been swept away by the disastrous disasterous floods.General Hugo Segno Evans was not at the camps at Angelinia Agathia at the time(get your dine) but he had been in daily communication with all his military associates during and ever since the calamity.s

"Largest forest fires still raging elsewhere, and this dire disasterous floodhas taught the whole nation a large number of most significant things ," said general Segno Evans in an interview. "these disasters have demonstrated rather clearly that the /o loss of life would not have occured and the great property damage would have not come if all levees and dams or dikes of these dangerous rivers had been strengthened by fortifications and guarded by great armies of soldiers that are not necessarily used in battle.Yet I don't mean to intimate that there would have been any means whatever of preventing the enemy from causing such disasters and that there would be for the country any escape from such great damage.There was no great escape from loss of life and such devas tation but we should have suffered much less if most of the dikes and levees had been first more s substantially built and more strongly ramified and fortified.

The city of Henrietta being at the start of the flood surrounded by great walls of wreckage hardly suffered great loss in life although this ci ty was in the path of the worse portion of the flood.Yet these great walls of debris in some measure served to protect the city from being wipedout as its nearest neighbor Heidi junction and Vandall were.The greatest force of the flood headed for Henrietta but the wreckage walls served to hold back most of the water and therefore even the big city should not have been badly flooded at all had it not been for the fact that the southern portion of the walls of wreckage gave way at the floods height and battering a way through a part of the city.I think too that if possible if the enemy do not interfere with fort her explosions th th that the dikes of the Aronburg gun will be built higher and stronger than they were.The dikes must be rebuilt.It is the only means of safty for any portion of northern Angelinia, and southern Calverinia.Our government spent sixty million dollars ten years ago to make the very dikes of the Aronburg gun which the enemy in blown asunder and we floods are so extensive at dangerous periods of the year when the river overflows the rebuilding of the wrecked portions of the walls of that long dam is absolutely necessary."

This was i or is an expression worthy indeed to be fully remembered with the brave words of many christian general when they struck the keynote that Abbisannia should rise in all her might and crush clandelinia if she had to extend the last man of her nation and every woman also to do so.The following telegram was sent out from the fifteenth by the President of the Evangeline st claire or Abbisannia Gandinia and Calverine railroad).

"I am now issueing full instructions to all our agents and higher members that the Evangeline St claire will be rep responsed for all private and military business on we hope the very twenty first of this month at which time it is hoped with much big guns o ganda of prisoners and others working will be completed completed.All othe r roads have been combined for work on the Abbisannia Gandinia and Calverine bridges crossing the Miss.olester gun and a ll officials express also the ut most confidence that not only the Evangeline St Claire, but also the Miss Holester and Pandora, the Great International and Gandon, the Southern Abbisannian lines, and the Pandora, Heidi function and Angelinia Agathia roads will be able to handle all trains again and sent passengers n and freight in and out for the good of the military.The relief supplies are still being carried in by all horses and ships possible and all the medical shipments from northe.n northern Calverinia n and other por tions of the nation ha ve gone in that way.The Heidi function and Angelinia Agathia road has called from its full extension from Pandora Abbisannia, to Crowley southern Angelinia all the men working there to as to the flooded districts and to h he put to work on all points of the line as far as the flood has receded and if possible to bridge the flood and make new tracks at all points possible to do for the means of trains to convey soldiers materials and arrive to the stricken cities and towns still surviving."

Official reports from all points of Galilisa run a few days or more after the great disaster told of more extensive desolation than was ever expected.The reports came a week after.

ALVINNIA COUNTY.

ALVINNIA COUNTY.

In the region of Alvinnia county near Galilisa run there are only six towns left out of ten and a total of one hundred thousand people living in towns and on a country house if not drowned or killed are missing.The surviving population of Alvinnia county now to be sheltered and fed is said to be about only one thousand three hundred out of a total of a million.What becomes of the rest is mysterious.

Hellsburg, with a total population of fifteen thousand people is not heard of and all the people are missing.Here the towns of Riverston Big Heidia town Chodelater and Austinia and Chickadee, Hickerton and Waldorn were said to have existed with a p opulation of nearly a hundred thousand.There is nothing now but a vast deep lake of water covered with floating debris of all descr-iption and intermingled thickly with bodies As far as Vandalia care of provisions have come and other cars of food and clothing and relief workers but as for that no one can go any further than Vandalia as the flood further on makes all things impossible.along the full length of the shores of that once beautiful river of Galilisa run from Heidi junction to Henrietta city there are countless thousands of dead cattle, including horses, pigs, mules, thousands of rolling goats, chickens, and dogs and cats and all farm animals known including droves of sheep that should be immediately dramated.

ANGADIA COUNTY.

In the town of Caldwell which was half swept away there are only left out of 10,000 of the population three hundred and fifty destitute persons and of all those in theimmediate vicinity they are the only survivors that can be accounted for.Provisions supplied sifficuent for immediate needs only.There were five big towns in this region of Arcadia county but where they are no one can say.The whole county is a sea filled with wreckage of houses, trees, fences and railroad bridges and looks like a vast country side laid waste.It is one of a most terrible disaster the world ever knew.

HITCHCOCK COUNTRY.

iIn this county and immediate vinicity are more than five hundred people destitute out of hundreds of thousands who are missing.Of about thirteen towns of this county only two are remaining and these two towns of fifty thousand people have only two hundred houses apiece remaining and they are sad wrecks.A sea of flood waters cover this section still the lowest dept from four to five feet, an unestimated number of people were lost, and for the time being is is feared the very soil will be seriously damaged by the effects of the flood waters.There are probably 100,000 dead cattle alone within a spa e of ten miles surrounding the surviving town of Aldrich including thousands of goats, hogs, and other farmanimals. Fever is now setting in among the other few survivors.An idea of the fearful velocity of the flood that swept over this immediate section may be imagined when it is known that the Stanchlin city Gran Grain Elevator is now standing high and dry in a garden in the small town of Gertrude a distance of fifteen miles from the place it was moved from.

THIS committee reports that only seventy five families or three hundred persons of out of fifty thousand to be cared for.what became of the rest? prowned?The surviving people have no money and all their po proprty property is destroyed.In this country one hundred small villages existed fourty of which were dear destroyed and fourty more of which were swept away.And there are only about four houses left of every one of these smalllittle surviving villages.How many lives are lost is unestimated. One big town here known as Meadwick Bayou isagid to be completely under way. water.The population here is said to be mainly Abbiesnnians.A shipment was made the few survivors of provisions and medicines but these things it is said are only slowly reaching them and have to be conveyed by boat through the wreckage and these boats have to be pushed through at the very risk of those who are bringing the supplies.Of these counties there were known to have been about thirty four big towns, and they have either been swept away entirely by the flood or are under water completely.As soon as possible soundings will be made of all the flood remaining to find out if such suspicions are true.

Clothing has been coming into Angelinia Agathia by the thousands of car loads every day for a week since the great flood but the people who are more destitu ate have hardly enough to even cover their naked naked ness There are scores of thousands of little children he who have not even enough clothes to go out on the streets since the flood.

There was a qua question much discussed in emperor Vivians palace and this was whether there were two distinct floods from the Aronburgs gun. As far as he was able to get the reports he had been informed that the disasterous flood started at Comal c town near the dikes of the Aro b Aronburgs run but that it was first heard of as being off Comal town and from the start even faster carrying before it a whole forest of trees a hundred miles in extent, and was a district flood from the one that was said to have devastated Gallilies gun and laid Vandalia and Heidi Junction low.Many of the christian generals bears The reporter cut in this theory but said nevertheless that some places had warnings of it before it reached Comal town further north.He also saysthat he believes there was a smaller third inundation in the wake of this Heidi special all floods as it were within touch of each other almost combining into one vast flood that destroyed all before it. Perhaps the habit of floods therefore starting on its work of devastation in pairs has their influence in causing these strange controversies.The same reporter here quoted says of the Mic-Allister gun dike wal' in question

"As regarding the wall of dikes the t here as being practicable in causing the rebound of the waters upon Gallilies gun and upon the cities and towns there, there arose in the reporters mind these dangers;This wall had been constructed with the full purpose to keep the full extent of that river from emptying its contents during flood times upon the land but that it did not serve for the purpose to holding back the roaring flood from Aronburgs gun and instead hurled it back with redoubled force upon Gallilies gun and wiped out vandall and Heidi junction.It did not break the force of the flood waves in their batter ing strokes and weight against its own di es and the only thing that saved

these dikes from giving way was the wall of wreckage that the flood so suddenly lodged against and over it.Another danger was the height of the flood and its speed and the volumes of water thrown into the big pocket at Mic-Allister gun and of which the di es resistance aided by the wreckage forced this enormous body of water back tward Gallilies gun where this wall of dikes dammed the flood up for hours and caused the greatest loss of life in the flood right at Gallilies gun.Heidi junction and all her neighborhing towns were as if in a big maelstrom and from which point the waters in so exceedingly a short time rushed into and all around the city and caused the greatest destruction of lives and property t there and also at Vandalia.The prevailing and longest continued direction of all the floods disturbances was from the northeast at this vinicity driving great volumes of wreckage from all towns and villages it swept away upon Heidi junction and Vandall in a southwest course but I never apprehended an exceedingly deep sea of water covering the region of Gallilies gun from the northeast when the floods main course beggini beginning from the Aronburgs gun was exactly from the southwest. For three weeks where the stream known as Gallilies gun existed there was for hundreds of miles a raging sea.And when this sea of flood wat ers had been brought about and a sudden and rapid shifting of the floods currents from the northeast to southeast and then southwest and straight east, and then suddenly again come down from the northwest as in the instance forced the flood waters upon Heidi junction like a tidal wave from the sea we can imagine the terrible work of destruction to that once beautiful city and Heidi junction is now a prostrate and moaning victim of that which the nation has long feared.

Can any amount of engineering skill and science discover and apply a power to break the force of floods ashermani feated because of the enemy' wanton nature?I do not believe that our river Jetties played any part or were at all a factor in producing the great wave which also rolled over Angelinia Agathia and Dorothy Gale and wiped out Jessicafor the flood extended much further than the Aronburgs gun Jetties that still remained and if possibl any one observed it we would greatly wish to know the result when these seas of water struck and broke against these jetties for from this may possibly be drawn important conclusions as to the effect on river breakwater walls which would be the same as dikes protecting our country side from the devastating effects of floods and torrents."

A large encampment of barracks and tents also stood near one of the towns near Gallilies un and it suffered just as much as those at the outskirts of big Girl Knool City.mo make matters worse none of the barracks build ings were strong.they had been built rather to only house soldiers and officers and not even to resist an engagement with the enemy should a battle result here.The flood burst upon this encampment like a tidal wave and wiped out everything in half an hour inclu ing two hundred and twenty two thousand of the three million soldiers who were mobolized there. "t wa s was a horrible disasterthere not even the fierce commotion of the air and sea could not do all this.There was nothing unknown or miraculous about any one who escaped here and those who did escape were rescued either by comrades or others.The encampment had been in a large wide valley of the Gallilies un and not far from the city of Heidi junction.

In contrasts with the awfulscenes of this dreadful war the excellent work of the thrilling saving of lives at this devasta ted mobolization camp during the furybof the flood by the surviving officers and men of the mobolized forces here was unusually magnificent.

One of the surviving officers stated the work of rescue thus;

"All the sheds and biggest and smallest barracks of the encampment about 100,000 in number and all three story structures made of wood have been either completely leveled to the ground or swept away by the flood.A million tents were carried off and all the vast trees of the surrounding forest. I do not think that there is one single barracks of the strongest kind that had not been completel/ prostrated by the flood or carried away with the waters rushing through at the rate of more than sixty miles an hour.most of us who succeeded in getting out of the buildings floated on hu e huge rafts and occassionally succeeded in rescuing soldiers who were stru struggling in the waters among the swirling wreckage.Roofs and floors of big wooden houses soon passed us from Heidi Junction city and onto this we succeeded in gaining a footing and as the rafts were more secure than ordinary wreckage we tried all kind of rescue work and again succeeded in saving nearly thirty soldiers and managed to draw them and the raft tward the shore side of the flood.

However it was soon more than useless to try to row or paddle the big raft against the terrific current and as the waters at that time was over fifty feet in depth ropes were cast from the s o shore or the raft would be paddled along near the shore. And this was accomplished only by the most herculean efforts on the part of the men who were on the floor raft but between paddling, swimming, and floundering along in the outer edge of the roaring floodthe raft would finally be secured to the shore.

When it was all that the survivors with me could do to pull other rafts and floating debris covered with men toward the shore side of the flood against the fierce current of the water. By desperate working for a full day and night the brave boys succeeded in rescueing nearly three hundred thousand soldiers and even thirty hundred men women and children whom they withdrew to a place of safty and provided them with enough provisions for their immediate wants. Finally on account of the darkness of the following night the increasing violo vo violence of the floods current and the vast amount of wreckage floes coming down on the flood and also of the sudden and wide spread of the flod the rescueing parties were relut l reluctantly compelled to withdraw. On board many of the other rafts and wreckage floes it was a period of the most intense anxiety for all the other survivors. No one dared to sleep on those improvised rafts and it was almost by the almost super human efforts of the officers and men on these rafts that the majority of them rode out the flood in safty. Yet most of these soon came ashore.

Yet out of the number of soldiers that were in the camps that had been so suddenly engulfed we believe that there were over 222,000 lives lost. I cannot begin to tell the number of barracks and tents and outhouses and sheds swept away or demolished. It is indeed the most dreadful catastrophe on record and as long as this war lasts there will be no hope of reconstructing the devastated districts overran by the flod "flood."

A message delivered by the King of Hicksnoile in the name of itsgovernment and people not only expressed sincen sincere sympathy for allythose who had suffered as a result of the war catastrophe but bg begged Emperor ivian to allow the nation - to give aid if possible to help his nation srush the wicked rebellion of Clandelinia. Also Protestentia and Condencinia presented further condolence in behalf of the sufferers and offered aide. The Protestentia ing wrote to Emperor ivian;

"We are stilldeply impressed by the misfortune that the enemy had caused to take 1 place. I express to the government of your Majesty the further and more sincere sentiments of our kingdom the assurance of the keenest sympathy and beg of you if need be to ask of any help you need and we surely will render it to you, for return of all the you you for all the aid you rendered to us when inflist ed with the worse storm the world ever seen."

The heart of the whole world had been touched and shocked by the disaster and of the fierceness of the awful war and this continued to be evident by messages from every nation in the world a offering sympathy and aid. All these extends of sympathy and offers of help were recieved by Emperor ivian with tear filled eyes. Even all the governors throughout the Abbisannian nation had sent aid and the whole nation itself was aroused by the catastrophe.

The generals had offered to lend the aid of all boyscouts [illegible] be spaced.

It had been first believed that the beautiful city ofvanna Aronburg had been virtually wiped out from the whole Calvorinian map by the air blasts and concuss ions of the explosions, but yet what remained indeed presented a most gloomy sight upon while all the rescue workers were [illegible] of the many school buildings and orphan asylumns for the bodies of many more children thought to be still buried there, countless numbers of black and white heasess heasess were atill streaming into other towns with the remains of the many yet to be buried. Many soldiers themselvrs continually stood guard over the many victims or worked most fevorishly at digging the long graves and also searching the windros windrows of ruins while detachments of ing infantry completed arangements for the rehabilitation of the once beautiful city.

At present not one building in the whole city itself still left standing was fit for occupancy. There was not time for many services to be held here either. Sometimes some one said a prayer, a hymn was sung followed by the reading of the scriptures, then another sad hymn and neighbors or sil soldiers replaced the ground they removed earlier in the day. Several hours were sometimes required to complete the burials of the trench graves and it would be dusk before the sorrowful task was completed. In one street especially on the sidewalk not too heavily littered with the debris long lines of little white caskets were added to those that were to be buried. Many of the workers prepared to turn over every brick in the debris of the schools and homes in t he hope of finding the bodies of more children. They even reported that they expected to find the bodies of at least a number of the attendants and teachers besides the children. Many of the hundreds were already buried. Over all the city hundreds of funerals had been held every minute. The business of identifying the many dead children had been hindered by the fact that the number of those who were badly injured and in hospitals in other cities were the only one. Who could identify the deade.

Carbondaler and Gretchen hospitals announced that all those badly injured in their many big hospitals were doing nicely and that no more deaths were not expected. The t raffic congestion itself was so bad in Anna Aronburg and on the roads near by that it had been thought that most of the remainder of the burials would becposponed untill another day when it was hoped that the conditions would be somewhat better. Even now it was taking many of thefriends and relatives of the army of dead hours to go the few miles from Carbondaler to Anna Aronburg city.

Meantime vast National guard a officers under command of many generals and other officers from Carbondaler were rushing work on the rehabilitation of the city. And as a result of another meeting held the day before by federal, military, state and red cross and civic organizations it was quickly agreed that steps must be taken quickly to guard against the danger of the approaching foe or even agaist epidemics to those who were to be returning to their wrecked homes. According to all the medical regiments of men and officers which had arived from cities and towns elsewhere will attempt to direct the health and other welfare work in the devastated regions. The relief work which had now been throughoutly organized was running more smmothly and was also accomplishing very much good. More tents had been quickly erected for the a many slightly injured who were being relesed from the hospitals. Buildings not badly harmed by the disaster had been used for hospitals and as clothing and food depots.

Many experts arived in the devastated regions to studythe effects of the concussions of the earth, and the air waves by the explosions which they termed the worse of all disasters of any kind in the whole woiled. Other explosions had been of shorter duration and taken in more area with their concussions but noe ones have ever taken such a toll of lives and caused so much damage according to their statements.

he explosion evidently had itsorigin around Anna Aronburg on the Aronburg Run T'said one of these officials.

A man who saw the explosions occuring determined what it was, prepared for it and its consequences saw the concussions of the air and ground destroy the city of Anna Aronburg, and then helped in the work of dragging out the dead and dying from the debris, and told his own story as the city was burying its dead and preparing to rebuild the homes. Before he had been a citizen of Carbondaler, formerly a City Major and he told of hearing the crashes and seeing the clouds shooting high up into the air and also of seeing the funnel shaped flashes of fire clean ing the surface of the earth as the clouds rose up like hud huge rolls from a volcanic eruption.

"I went to see a friend of mine to talk on the outcome of the conflict so far. We went outside at heari g the deafening booms in the distance and saw big black and white boiling clouds looming in the horizon and rising upward to a great height with flashes below. We went back into the house as we felt the ground trembling fiercely under our feet not knowing how severe the disaster was going to be. As we looked out the window we s could see the cloud was becoming bigger and shooting higher. On the horizon during more flashes of light we could see debris which seemd to be floating in the air on the crest of the clouds and at first believed it was the approach of one of our old fashioned ty phoons. There was then a series of bigger crashes, and suddenly ty the house we were in was lifted for about five feet and seemed fo for a moment to move through the air and then settle about twenty feet distant. Feeling a strange sensation we then got outside as fast as we could especially when we heard the roar of falling houses. My friend was then knocked unconscious by an object that seemed to literally fall from the sky. I also felt as if I was going to fly and was being drawn up straight into the air, then I felt no wind of any kind, then something strange made me fall down. I saw a post near by and thought that if I could get to it I would not be sucked up into the air by the strange air wave. I finally grabbed to it and held tight but by that time it was over and then I heard the cries of babies and children everywhere and then of frantic mothers searching for their chiodren. I would o go to one group of persons and start elsewhere to get help for them only to find others more desperately hurt. Then I would hear other cries, and find others stioo still morecseriously injured, and see many who were even killed.

Yet all the desolation and terror left by the effects of the dreadful explosions which in the state of Angelinia itself alone killed more than five hundred thousand persons and injured more than five million and caused property damage to exceed more than five hundred million gave way continually under the cheerful influence of the vast army of re lief workers headed by the Abbieannian Red Crosse. More and more order was appearing where chaoes had reig reigned for four days as the berraved were being comforted, the many injured cared for and the dead quickly buried. The situation in northern Angelinia seemed now to be well in hande Gertrude Angeline city where more than four hundred thousand lost their lives and several thousand more were reported missing and completely devastated on its northern and north western sections would soon be completely rebuilt. All of the survivors of that obliterated sections of this s city announced they would still remain and rebuild their homes no mat e matter what it would cost.

Meanwhile the steady work of clearing away the debris at Gertrude Angeline wheresuch an awful number perished second to Anna Aronburg was progressing most rapidly. It appeared that the death list at Gertrude Angeline city was increasing steadily when some of the injured died by the score.

The military aurthorities in charge of the patrols guarding the wrecked homes put into effect new traffic regulatens which provided that all vehicles not engaged in relief work should be rerouted so as to permit clear roads between the rescueing town and the stricken city. The roads here also were almost impassable.

Even here the mighty Angeline Run River which was causing also some apprehension appeared now to be receding and only the low lands had become flooded.

And the work of rebuilding all homes possible and factories was also planned and in most cases the destroyed buildings would be replaced by bigger and more beautiful ones. All the railroad shops and stations damaged on thenorth side would also be rebuilt.

Soldiss watched closely over the wounded children as they lay in the temporary hospitals in the city of Carbondaler all victims of the war's disaster. When the doctors would remove the children to redress their wounds the soldiers would follow. The children were even showered with candy, flowers, dolls, and what toys could be obtained. The parents of these children had been killed or fatally injured from the ravages of the destruction.

thousands of the witnesses of the awful disaster declared that the bodies of these little ones and their teachers had been piled on m matresses, boards and also cots and blankets on either the debris covered play grounds or also on the sidewalk and there was no one there to come and cm claim them. as most of all the adult population of this section of the city were either killed or had been taken to hospitals. Fire completed the destruction of the school house and from that it was thought probable that many of the bodies could never be identified. Many other school buildings and homes had been destroyed but the loss of life there was small. Next next to Anna Aronburg this city suffered the greatest lof loss of lives and property with about one quarter of its residential and business districts completely demolished. Here also occured the destruction of the greatest Angelinia old mines in the world. Despite the shocks, the other secon sections of Gertrude Angeline city which had escaped damage was one of the main rallying points of the rescue forces, in the northern part of Angelinia state. All the thousands of hospitals in this city and other big buildings n and also the armories were filled with the many dead and injured transported there from other towns destroyed by the disasterous shocks and air waves. The shocks almost elemental in its intensity of air waves, was meteoric in duration. At every point visited it had only been from fifteen to sixteen seconds in duration. Indeed since the war began this may have been the nineteenth such war di a wi war disaster since the great explosion at Jennie Vivian Town. Three great disasters with heavy loss of life and property damage also occured near Delight's Junction during the battle of Worth Instantaneously sixty thousand were killed by a terrific explosion at Kenwallie, while one hundred and nine thousand perished, at Wieghburg Landing and Angelinia Crania. Fourty thousand deaths were reported in an explosion and storm near Pullway.

during allthosesix days while details came of the desolation left by the explosions came in on so many crippled lines of wire communications relief had been continually rushed into the stricken area. And according to all available reports the s storm of air waves produced by the shocks came without the slightest warning and the inhabitants of all the cities and towns had no hea to flee from its wild fury. Thousands of stories of the erratic behavior of the air waves came from all points. With an irresistible energy that crushed entire blocks of buildings per second, destroyed mine tipples of all the hundreds of mines in that region, uprooted millionf of trees and bushes and snapped telephone poles like matches the concussions and air waves continued for fully sixteen seconds. Some buildings by the very concussion of the ground was hurled for hundreds of feet and ten grain elevators in the city of Anna Arenburg were moved from their foundation for sixty feet

The immense q army of common sight seers tha that had expected trips to the devastated areas of Gertrude Angeline city wereto be disappointed, even if they meant good as military lines had been drawn around the zones of destruction and only those on relief details were to be permitted through.

Countless narrow escapes al all of them completely miraculous were related by as many survivors of the disaster in Gertrude Angeline city.Thousands of persons had been literally hurled through the air for yards by the very air waves of the explosion, and yet lived to tell of their experience.A mong those was a priest, and a brother of the Good Father who was with him.He saw the buildings began to fall, heard the explosions and saw their clouds and sensed the priests out of the priest house.Just as he was leaving something peculiar seemed to pick him up as if he was only empty air, twisted him around and then dropped him into the river four hundred paces away and int6 the point where fortunately there was only three feet of water.The priest was badly stunned but was consciousness enough to keep himself from drowing by keeping his head above the water of the river.He had been bruised by a stone which hit him in the back while he was up in the air, though where the stone came from no one knew.

Many others, including women and children were blown one thousand yards by the air concussions and wee severely injured but would recover.Most of these were taken to the hospitals at Angeline city.In the city itself countless numbers of frieght and other cars were blown off the tracks by the air waves, some as far as two feet.Thousands of automobiles were completely demolished in all parts of the city was w by the air waves, and others were rolled about like base balls or rubber balls and the like.A bunch ofchildren playing near a small hill were lifted over the si hill by the very concussion of the ground, and hurled fifty feet to the top but were not dangerously injured.

One hundred and fourty persons in a big boarding house near an orphan asylum escaped without evenscratches although the sixty four room building was flattened to the ground by the shock of the air waves.Many escaped injury by being in basements atthe time of the disaster.Thousands of miners were six to seven feet beneath the earth in a number of big mines near by when the explosions broke out.Though the concussions did not ruin the mines themselves the air waves cut off the power from the cages of the mines, and demolished the buildings by them, and all the men were forced to climb to the surface while they wondered and talked about of what in the world had h ppened.

BEAUTIFUL JUNE

Indeed the June Month of 1913 was a si stirring one o for Calverinia, notwithstanding the reports of some unusual flood horrors going on in the Central part of Calverinia und Northern Angelinia(see prou proceeding chapters.() other great disasters occured which is to be stated in this chapter though they happened after the bigger disasters just mentioned each occuring simultaneously one on the 30th, and two on the 16th and seventeenth.. The worse two were at Calmann and Hendrick cities lasting two days or more. At Calman city in the extreme west a seige had continued for a month and enraged at the long stubborn resistance of the besieged, the Glandelinians when victorious broke the protecting walls of a Dam above the city, which flooded every part of the place to a great depth marooning the inhabatants on the upper floors. While this p upon the city killing many of the inhabatants in the ruins and setting the upper stories this occured the Glandelinians massed their n batteries and opened a terrific fire of the houses on fire. This horror continued a day, untill fifty thousand inhabatants were killed in the ruins or perished in the flames.

Out of expectation of mercy for the inhabatants of the city the garrison finally surrendered, and though the soldiers were spared, many of the inhabatants were brutally massacred while others died in the flood or perished miserably in the flames. The remainder of the city after the flood receded was sacked and burned leaving three hundred thousand people homeless, ch who having been spared were deported from that section of the country by the enemy.

The total loss of life through flood, fire and massacre was about one hundred and fourty five thousand men women and children. It probably can be said to be one of the worse massacres ever committed by the enemy in the west. During the progress o f the flood, whole troops of soldiers shot down all who were carried out of the city p the by the flood on house tops. Or even just for sport floating house tops were shot at by cannons, the people in them being killed. People floating down i on rafts were shot and killed by shell fire. Hundreds of houses crowded with people were se t were set ablaze by fire shells and panic caused a great loss of life. Many who could jump from windows took the chances with the flood than perish in the flames. For a long day and night Calman city was a reeking inferno of fire, flood and thousands of great shattering explosions. Houses filled with terrified women and children were blown asunder and all perished amid the wreckage. It was a terrible war tragedy, and feeling he was responsible for it for resisting the seige, the commander to save the rest of the inhabatants hauled down the National flag and put up the white in its place.

Not content with the victory the Glandelinians waited untill the waters went down, and then swarmed into the city committig committing countless thousands of outrages, torturing women and childre children, and raping young girls. Many thousands more were murdered, some were besieged in burning homes, and put to the sword as they tried to escape the flames. The horror continued for a week, untill the commander satisfied, with the result gave orders for the massacres to cease.

He then gave the rest of the inhabatants a weeks time to get out of the city and country, and as they fled they were outraged for scores of miles. They were not allowed to take anything with them, not even provisions and clothing, and famine stared them in the face. Driven from home and city these poor survivors finally three weeks after reached a large christian camp near the Abyssinkilian border. While they were being taken care of a large part of the army went to retake the city, but when they reached it, found the enemy gone and the place in smokin smoking ruins. To e persue the enemy would be to leave the camp behind, and so the army returned to refuge and care for the homeless. At this time it was reported that the Central Calverinia flood was doig its worse.(see chapters of flood)

On the 17th of June Headwick city also was visited with disaster of a terrible magnitude. A part of the Central Calverinia flood was said to have hit the whole city, flooding the streets with from ten to twenty feet of water marooning the inhabatants on the upper floors for many days. The flood struck June 7th. At the height of the flood fire broke out on the upper stories of the buildings becoming a terrible con flagration, forcing many thousands to take the chances drowning. The city had a population of seven hundred thousand, 10,000 were drowned, and 70,000 were trapped by a terrible conflagration and were either killed in the awful panic that followed, perished in the flames, or were drowned in the rushing floods or buried under neath falling walls as they sought to save th m themselves.

Houses by hundreds full of people, some afire were swept away by the flood. The fire after burning for four days reached an enormous munition factory, which caught on the upper section. The flaming debris soon caved in despite all efforts of the employes to stop the fire, and a terrific explosion followed that shattered the building and shook the city, and for twenty days that section of the city was under a terrific bombardment as shells . exploded everywhere. The explosion blasted out windows throughout the city among surviving buildings. With the combined horror of flood fire and explosion and the sweeping away of many thousands of homes it was estimated that out of 700,000 three hundred thousand survivi survived.

One half of the city was totally wiped out, the majerit, of the upper sections of the buildings being burned. What was left of the city was inundated for thirteen days and the marooned persons who survived were about famih famished when relief from the northwest reached them. The disaster to this city caused by the combined triple calasities was enormous, and wiped out nearly five hundred million dollars worth of property. 7,000 buildings were swept away by flood, 45,678 by fire, and the remainder of the city damaged by explosion, flood and bursting shells. The rescuers had to accomplish their relief work by boats and rafts, and provisions had to be brought the same way.

Also on June 30th the Glandelinians created one of the probable most peculiar and freakish disasters ever known along 200 miles of the Angelinian coast. It resulted in the destruction by fire and si sinking of many ships of various sizes, the burning of a score of sea coast towns, and the flooding of thirty other.s It resulted also in four tremendous forest fires, each burning a million acres, big mountain slides, wrecking of river shipping, and causing a once supposed extinct volcano to show signs of spirited activity.

What ever the enemy did was a mystery, but it com combined in thirty other incidents which began and occured on the same day, and continued for a month. 14,000 people lost their li lives, and nearly 250,000 were rendered homeless, and lost much of their belongings. On the same day Mandrill city in Western Calverinia, 200 miles west of the big flood was destroyed by a terrible fire that rendered over six hundred thousand families homeless, and burned away more than $365,200,000 worth of city property. A number of enemy fire bugs set the blaze in four sections of the city at night, and placed obstacles in the streets to prevent the fire departments from ru rushing to the p blaze.

The fire was burning for four days, and was terrible and nothing could check it, though hundreds of departments came to combat it, and though the reports are not confirmed, it was said that 10,000 lives were lost in the panic, or trapped in streets walled up in flame, or in burning buildings, while the burning sections of the city became a sea of fire. The fire burned at a rate of many districts a day driving the surviving inhabitants out of the doomed city to seek shelter in woods, by the shore of streams or other near by towns that rushed them aid as speedily as it was possible.

It took a relief however for general relief to reach them from the east west. The light of the fire could be seen for 300 miles, and by day the smoke could be seen for a hundred miles and when observed at that distance could be seen to spread over the whole sky above the horizon like line like a walled up thundercloud which is sometimes observed at a far off distance.

So far as known it was the greatest city fire on record and resembled the Chicago of the present time burning at once. When the fire was in full sway the heat was plainly felt for fourty miles providing the wind was off from the direction of the burning city. If observed from a great height at night the scene was like that of a vast lake or sea of white hot molten lava rolling great tongues of white hot gases upward. After the main conflargration died down, the smoke from the smouldering ashes was so thick as to give the same smoke appearance as seen in great big forest fires. And the ruins continued smoking for a month.

CHAPTER EIGHTY SEVEN.

TOTAL DISASTER DEATHS REACH NEARLY NINE HUNDRED AND NINTY NINE THOUSAND.
TOTAL CASUALTIES ESTIMATED AT ABOUT FOUR MILLION.
TOTAL CASUALTIES ESTIMATED AT ABOUT FOUR MILLION,
AS A RESULT OF THE CONCUSSION AND AIR WAVES CAUSED BY THE WORSE EXPLOSION EVER HOID OF AND THAT LEFT COUNTLESS MULTITUDES HOMELESS IN THEREGIONS OF SOUTHERN CALVERINIA, AND ANGELINIA
TOTAL NUMBER OF CITIES AND TOWNS DAMAGED WITH LOSSES RANGING UP TO NEARLY EIGHT HUNDRED MILLION DOLLARS GOES UP TO ABOUT FOURTY SIX...!!!

INDEED THE EXTENT OF THE DISASTER, as well as the tremendous loss of lives, and every other complication proved it to be the most devastating disaster that any country even in our own real woild had ever experience in a hundred or more centuries involving in total about fourty o six cities and towns and small villages and thousands of country places and farms,, including about thirty country home asylums collecting a full total of dead and injured toll estimated at the upward sum of four billion fivehundred thousand and causing property damage up to nearly eight hundred and ninty nine million. After all the checks had been made it was found that the state of Angelinia itself led the o total death list where it was believed it went up to as far as six hundred thousand. The totaly loss in property in that state was believed to reach five hundred million dollars.....

And so prostrated were the whole northern state of Angelinia and also the southern parts of Calverinia that for for over six days the exact figures on loss of life and on property had been impossible to make it out without delay although every minute during those day available reports had been triskt ris trickoing in from all territories in which communication was cut off added to an increasing death list that indeed was shocking to the very world itself.

Nearly all of the towns and cities affected by the concussions and air waves of the tremendous explosions virtually were destroyed beyond repair and fire in many places as well as outside the cities and towns and in small forests and plains and the like added to the great horror and the havoc.

Indeed in Angelina Junction and also Certrude Angeline city themselves so terrific was the force of the very air waves caused by the awful explosions that thousands upon scores of thos thousands of bodies were gurled a mile while timbers, furniture furniture and o all kinds of metal materials from the wrecked city of Anna Aronburg were found in Certrude Angeline city, fourty miles away.

With the final checking up of the loss of lives the absolute greatest loss of life according to estimates occured in northot northern Angelinia where more than five to six hundred thousand had been reported killed in three big cities alone. The total dead in eeastern Calverinia where some towns and cities suffered somewhat severely stood at slightly more than a score of thousand, while more than twenty three hundred deaths were reported in Calverine city itself far up north and some in Vivian Wisbay and Angelinia Agathia.

In allother parts of the country also shaken heavily by the concussion no loss of life was reported, especially in southr southern Angelinia and Abbisania and Abyssinkile although some damage was done in every big city and town as stated in the first s chapters. At first it had not been clear whether this was an isolated disturbance but there was a full possibility that it was from the same explosions that caused such havoc in northern Angelinia and southern Calverinia.

All through those six days and still going on the reports of the most terrific damage continued, and continued, and still continueto pile and pile up that it grew so high that at first the very nations of the world itself would not believe it true. The shock being nearest was hardest felt at Certrude Angeline city, Anna Aronburg and Angeline Junction where it left hundreds of thousands of dead in its wake. The other towns and cities nearest or furthest also suffered as severely all homes being totally destroyed either by the shock, air waves or flames not one building being left standing. In thenorthern and north western parts of Certrude Angeline city which had suffered soxseverely and which had been completely demolished was still burning in places and fire departments by hundreds were still working on the conflargrations and even used all kinds of explosives in a most desperate effort to stop the progress of the flames.

All these parts of A Certrude Angeline city had had been compe completely obliterated with the heaviest loss of life next to Anna Aronburg her nearest neighbor. One of the most saddest reports came from the extreme north part of Certrude Angeline city where a small school house was destroyed with the deaths of every one in it. The air waves coming with such violence crashed away the roof of the structure and from the concussions of the ground the lower walls collapsed burying all the children and their teachers who died of suffocation under the debris...!!..

CHAPTER EIGHTY 8.

SMALL FORCE OF GLANDELINIANS UNDER GENERAL W HILLIAM SCHLOEDER MF DEFEATS AN OVERWHELMING FORCE OF ANGELDIANS† UNDER GENERAL H.J.DARGER WITHUT WITHOUT A BATTLE BY MAKING A PECULIAR FLANK MOVEMENT..

While general Hansons armies were besieging the enemys forces near he city of Phelantonburg, other occuran ces were just as remarkable and were happening at about the same time.One is well to note andwhich was another hing that was most astonish ing to the whole world. One thoof the biggest christian armiesever formed at this time was under the leadership of general Henry Joseph Darger one of the best known chrstian generals Hanson ever had under his service. It wasgeneral Dargers purpose to bring up his armies with the intention of reinforcing general Hanson and vivian at Phelantonburg and help them capture the enemys army that was half encircled there by the two christian armies. At the time thatthe Calverinian was being tied tried for his assassination of the Glandelinian general general pargers army was concentrated near the town Genitoque , which issituated near he great Stanok River. Not far away was a large Glandelinian army but to inferior in size to be able to battle with general pargers army without a disasterous defeat.

His glandelinian army was commanded by general Whillims schloeder, a wicked general equally as horrible in character as the one who was assinated by the Calverinian citizen. His generals knew the intention of general Dargers armies and they warned general schloeder that if he did not do something very soon it would be probable that general parger would move upon him in overwhelming force and destroy his army completely. At first general schloeder did not knowwhat to do. His own positions were weak and insecure, and his army was on bad ground, while the positions of the christianarmies could never be carry by assaultby anystrong force.

To make a desperate assault would b have been like sucide. General Schloeder decided to find out away to work the defeat of so great a christian army withoutan actual battle.

He went out on a scouting tour, and went around clear to the rear of he main christian line and after touring around about hit upon a plan. On the centre of the christian rear there was a great ravine fully unoccupied, and he realized that if he could suddenly in the night place half of his army in the region of this ravine, and while doing so also mine h it he could accomplish the surprise of his own life. He decided to do the work. First he had the mine shafts made under the ravine and which were extended some considerable distance within the rear of he christian line. This took about two weeks t accomplish the mining underground but it was done, in spite of the obstacles in the way. As soon as all was finished there was about nearly a hundred thousand pounds of guncotton under this portion of the rear of the christian lines who were not aware of it. A score of thousands of men had been at work making this gigantic mine galley.

Assoon as all was totally finished, general Schloeder marched about half of his forces to the rear of the christinline but keeping keeping itout of sight. He surveyed the christian position, and then as soon as all was clear he mansevered his lines untill he had a pwperfect line of troops equally the length of the christian rear. The christian rear of course was extremely strong in force and positions, and had guards watching for any surprise attack w that they always surely feared would be made, but general Schloeder did not intend to make a deliberate flank attack untill the opportunity presentd itself.

It was his intention to explode the mine, which he c knew would create such confusion and panic withinthe christian rear that he would then have a full chance of ma ing a desperate attack, which would clear the region of all the christian troops in that location. If the rear was routed this wo ld throw the other forces into a retreat, and thus the result would soon be a great disaster to the biggest christian army ever yet muster mustered into the service.

The wicked Glandelinian general was however as careful as possible in working his scemes, because as matters would have it therewas so many christianscouts out roaming everywhere as thick as fleas on a horse that the slightest degdetection would have caused for the glandelinian army a frustration in all the attemptsalready made, and the mine would even be detected and captured. The time to explode the mine was set on a Friday at ten o-clock in the night when everything would be quist. The day was just now only monday and there was still time for the work to be accomplished.

General Schloederduring that time had the mine tested on several occasions and by the face felt sure that his purpose would not fail now even if the mine wasdiscovered by the christians and the quicker it was discovered the quicker it would be set off. Finally the day came and the general waited impatiently for the approach of night. The day threatened to be stormy as the preceeding days had been hot but nevertheless the general felt stil ll more confident of success. And he was not to be disappointed.

MORE TOPICS ON JULO CALLIO, AND HER SEIGE/

In the meantime whih while the seige of Jub Julo Callio was in full progress and the enemy was still a standing their ground against t he the seige most successfully reports of many incidents came in as quickly as wildfire. Hansonia Johnston a christian general while out scouting, saw within his very lines at a distance his very wife and and daughter daughter being killed by a bursting shell as they went too near the firing line. Simultaneously that moment the fortification of Evapolistia was blown to destruction by some gigantic explosion and the t own of Abbisania was razed by shell fire as foe forces moved forw ard through it with the evident purpose to att ack.

On the same day a great fire was originated by the shell explosions and seethed over the wooded regions near the fortifications of Marcuccian and clouds of smoke rolled into t he air as if from the crs crater of an active volcano in full eruption.

The scene was becoming worse than those had wit nessed during the spider typhoon in Abbisand Abbisannia, and also outrivaled its horror. Frightful damage was done by shells and great explosic explosions everywhere, and the list of great disasters that occured to both sides already during this seige would take a whole book to fille.

If one was even on the edge of the crater of an active volcano he would not witness a more fearful sight, or hear any louder noise. Some Glandelinian armies had attempted recently some sorties against the christian line, and were compelled to retreat across what seemed a fiery pit of hells s mouths. so numerous was the shell and mine explosions.

General John Evans who was moving his armies forward to help in the seige rushed to the rescue of one of the christian fortifications and though during a severe engagement his lines were in an awkward situation the men nevertheless seemed to struggle with the same remarkable fury which maddened Blongiglomenean Creatures attack their own foes. The christian army was worse than even a big demonish monster when aroused and destroyed every attack upon the christian lines. During this battle of St Peter general Slater on t he foe side had a terrible adventure and though he with fourty men escaped the terrible ambush he left upon the field over fourty thoud thousand dead a terrible scene indeed, and the frightful screams and savage ferocity of even the plongiglomenean creatures seemed unable to outrival the christian attackers, when with the wildest fury, they made a savage attack upon the Glandelinian columns under general Hendon Baskerville Francis and distroyed his whole command and wounding the general severely.

During the seige and activity elsewhere general Griffith on the christian side while out scouting and making maps of the enemys position at Julo Callio had some thrilling adventures with enemy cavarly, and Gargolians and was pursued twenty t imes but was not captured, though on one occasion he was threatened with instant deat h when close to him a shell exploded killing six of his followers and wounding seventeen. The glandelinian shells have indeed great power and are indeed the most savage rival of human beings. Indeed the fierce and incessant bombardment of Julo Callio and Norma Catherine seemed t o be as if the cruel treatement of the inhabitants of the two cities was being avenged for wild was the fury of the bombardment, and even the violence of the eruption of Krakatoa could never make such a frightful din. The cannonading of Julo Callio was reported to be heard at the distance of six thousand miles. I would like to call this the beginning of thrilling adventures for Angelinia but I guess it ought to be called the Beginning of Hell.

One general Griffith with over six million men desperately assaulted one of the fortifications of the foe and was caught in a storm of shell fire that threatened to annihilate his whole command and he had to withdraw. Other wonderful occurances was witnessed by reporters and correspondents, as well as another great storm of a score of thousands of cannon and shell fire, eruptions of mines simultaneously, the battle with a force of Gargolian and christian cavarly and a great storming attack upon the main christian line nort h of the city of Norma Catherine all one one d day.

On the First of June more great things occured at Julo Callio. Ten times in one day did six christian generals ran from one danger only to jun jump into another but escaped whole. A big labyrinth of mines were also exploded under one of the enemys fortifications which could have done credit to the noise and havoc caused by the eruption of Mt Pelse in the Island of Martinque only though five islands like t hat would have not been as bad had even the whole volcano blown itself i to pieces. And the ch cloud of powder smoke and dust hovered in the air for a whole day before it settled or disappeared. God only knows how many glandelinians were killed by this great explosion but it did not daunt the survivors and they only opened upon the christian line a roaring thundering inferno of cannons, and set a whole stretch of abandoned towns and fortifications for the distance of ten miles on fire and made the scene look like a worse hell than ever.

The The Cavarly went back to their ownlines and theirleader reported the find. The Glandelinian army in retreating t ward the town had literally placed themselves between two great christ ian armies. To fight a battle with the two with any success was utterly impossible. It was at first planned to explode mines and galleys under the christian lines but then at this point no such thing could be accomplished as the sentries o along the christ ian front and rear were too watchful and so nothing was done. General Victor learning that a big christian army was also north of the town decided to communicate with it and did so and so both decided to encompass the foe army and capture it if possible. It took some time to make any kind of movements as planned. Then came the disas ter. The enemy engineers had mined gallies under the big big town with the intention of either destroying a portion of the christian army and thus in t he confusion effect their immediate escape. Of course this work took some considerable time but nevertheless many thousands of men had been at work and h thus itwas accomplished in less than three days. On the evening of the third day while the christ ian armies were completing their manuevers the bib biggest forced mine ever known yet by exploded by the Glandelinians under the great town. The explosion was of such great force that it tore the entire town high up into t he air and all the wreckage came down in a perfect rain of fury on all sides. Torrents of w wreckage fell among the christian lines, but the concussion committed incapable damage among the enemys lines instead, killing their main general M.T. Head, sixteen others and over five hundred thousand men. Trees all around were shattered, and fell among the enemyn lines encompassing scores of thousands of men under their branches and hald g half of the debris of the town fell upon the enemys lines burying a fearful number of men under the wreckage. Fire of severe character followed among the provision wagons in the enemys lines almost immediately, all the tents of theirentire camp burned down and three quarters of the ammount of their ammunition went up in a million of smaller explosions also killing and maiming many of the soldiers.

Such a catastrophe intended for the christians, and which happened to the foe instead threw the remainder of the glandelinian army into a dreadful pan panic and for near y nearly four hours the whole region was like a madhell of insane men in gray. The surviving generals and officers could not stem the confusion and the glandelinian army persued so closely by the christians that nothing could be done had t to finally surrender to save themselves from utter ruin. It was one of the worst disasters yet that had befallen the glandelinian cause. It is probable that the Great ~~St Anthony~~ St Anthony turned the tables on the enemy because because of their degrading the town named after him.

While the foe armies under general Whillian schloeder hadbeen whipping one of the biggest christian armies ever mustered into service, another christ ian army despite all tricks of the enemy enemy had captured a very large Glandelinian army just just after their main general and others had been killed by the concuss concussion ofa g great explosion of t heir own making.

SO IT DOESAPPEAR that both the christians andthe enemy were both even at t hat, don't you think s o so. If general HansonEvian could capture t he big fortified city of Phelantonburg, th there would be another good vict cry for the ch christian nation. Wile the se ge of the city of Phelantonburg was going on in better w away than before and when it seemed probable that the armies under the risked Manleys would not have any hopes of holding out in case they batt led with the christian army concentrating upon them a chri christ ian spy was captured by the glandelinians under general Edward Zimmermann and in his poss session was found this alleged oath which readas follows:

"I Swear by t he Almighty God, by all in heaven and upon earth, by the Holy and Blessed blessed prayer Book of our Church, by the blessed virgin and Mot her of God, by Her Sorrows and Suffering at the foot of the cross, by her Tears and Wailings ; by Saint Sa int Patrick, by the Blessedand Adorable Host, by the Bless ed Rosary and Holy Beads, by by the Holy holy and blessed Church in all ages, and by all our hundreds of thousand thousands of Holy National Martyrs to fight the wicked Glandelinian armies untill we die, waging wading into the fields of Red Gore of the Glandelinian tyrants, and Murderers of our Glorious cause of Christian Catholic Nationality, and if spared to fight untill there is not a single vestige and a space for a footprint left to tell that the Holy Soil of the Angelinian Countries was tor trodden by the Glandelinian rebels, and Child Murderers, and moreover, when the Glandelinian Robbers and Beasts in Calverinia are driven either into the sea or back to t heir own land, like the swine swine that Jesus Christ caused to be drowned, we shall rush onward, take glandelinia, root out every v vestige of the accurs ed blood of t he glandelinian Rebels, and Murderers and possess ourselves of the treasures of the Human Beasts that have so long kept our many sles filled with Child slaves, in chains of bondage and driven folks and other persons during the war from o our own genial shores to seek refuge in foreign lands. To all this singly and collectively I swear to Fullfill as before mentioned with my eyes blindfolded, not knowing whom to me administered this oath so help me G od. And we shall not give up the conquest till we have our Holy Father the Pope complete Ruler of the whole Catholic world as he was before the glandelinian rebellions."

Finally the direct time came to explode the mine, and the signal was sent to those who who were t o do it with t he batteries. Through some misunderstanding in orders the work was delayed, but nevertheless the general managed to get the thing to be straightened out and so a little after ten the mine w was exploded. It cannot hardly be described how much noise the explosion ocdally made, but nevertheless for that moment it actually looked as if some great volcano had broken to pieces with with within the christian lines, and the flash was t so bright that many were almost blinded. The full number of troops in the rear who were killed by the explosion could never be accurately estimated, but nevertheless it is probable that one third of the whole christian rear had been destroyed. Great fires were immediately started by the explosion, and amid all the turmoil of the roar of the blast, the whole christian rear that survived were thrown int o an instant panic that nothing could control control officers and generals dashed this wayand that in an effort to stem the confusion but in vain, and as all the men were rushing toward the main christian lines in utmost precipitation, the whole gray line covered by ava advancing batteries of artillery rushed forward simultaneously yelling like hundreds of thousands of demons, and firing heavy volleys that seemed to make the whole region blaze like a conflagration at night.

At the advancing batteries alsoopened fire at long range and hurled shells every where the effect was like magic magic.

So sudden was the disaster, and so instant the attack, and not knowing how many may be advancing in the dark the other portion of the christian line broke into confusionand leaving everything behind fled in precipitate flight. It was indeed very astonishing but nevertheless it happened. Thevother section of t he glandelinian army that had been left behind at Genitoque, wsoon received a message ofwhat was going on and their generals decided it best now to take a hand and complete the confusion before the main christian line should rally those who were in confusion. So as soon as possible it advanced to make a surprise attack. They came on with fiercer yells and with the suddeness of a tidal wave. The Angelinians did not have even a moments time to fire upon their sudden and unexpected assailants, and after a few minutes of desperate fighting with the bayonet, or sabres and daggers, the frontal column of the Angelinian army withdrew in the same hopeless confusion. All the christian generals tried their utmost to stem the retreat but in vain, and within five hours after the enemy pressed their desperate surprise attack attack to utmost ferocity the biggest christian army ever known was retreating southward in the greatest confusion. General Darger happened to be absent at the time, and when he a arived to the scene he made all attempts possible to rally what portion of the army he could, and partially succeeded, but could not actually hold the enemy back at that point. Toward morning most of the christian army had been rallied, and the enemy knowing it was impossible to push their success any further had withdre withdrawn to better order but nevertheless the whole christian army had been scattered widely, and had been made to retreat for over thirteen miles before general Darger had come up and by desperate efforts restore order. General Darger had a force of over 150,000,000 men and he was wholy who wholly astonished when he learned the size of the Glandelinian army which had been only ten million strong. He at first had not known what had caused the precipitate rout of so vast an army as his own, but nevertheless he put in the ca claim that his officers allowed their commands to be taken by surprise and that despite all what occured he would not under any conditions acknowledge that he was defeated. It took three days of fierce efforts to get the main army collected together again, but to advance back to the town and his former position was now out of the question for during those three days the smallest of glandelinian armies which had defeated him had been reinforced by others, and he could not risk a general battle when his whole army were still in a disorganized condition.

It had been the most astonishing event in the whole war up to now, and his army had been forced to abandon about one eight of its artillery. And during the attack the enemy had captured about half of his provision trains, three thousand pieces of artillery twenty five million muskets, thirteen hundred battleflags and standards of all kinds, and nearly thirty million prisoners. To tell the truth no matter what the Angelinian general acknowledged this affi affair was indeed a great glandelinian victory. A very small force of Glandelinians had by just making a mine defeated one of the greatest christian armies ever mustered into service in the western part of Calverinia, and had captured the biggest number of prisoners known with ut without a single loss to themselves while over thirty thousand christians had been killed and wounded during the affray, and ten generals had been show and wounded by the glandelinian attackers.

"It was certainly one of the best attacks that could have been made" Said general Schloeder in his reports to the Glandelinian aurthorities. "I defeated without a battle and within five hours, one of the largest christian armies ever mustered into the Angelinian service, and mainly by mining their rear. I had expected to defeat the big army alright, but the defeat I inflicted was far more severe than I ever comprehended. I totally routed it, and it took general Darger fully three days to rally his scattered army. I took thirty five million prisoners, besides one quarter of their provisions, and thirteen hundred pieces of artillery and many battleflags. If Manley would make surprise attacks like I have accomplished

I can assure you the rebellion would be easilly won. It is easy to like the largest larest of christian armies when you know how to do it.''
The ne news of this defeat of so vast a christ ian force wasstartling indeed t to the whole world when it leaked out by means of war correspondents and report ers of other nationalities who were always around to watch t he occurance of every different scenes. It made many of the christian nations fear for sure that in due time the entire rebellion would be-wn by the wicked glandelinians, because it seemed s So from the fact that so small a glandelinian army was able so easily to overthrow with within five hours so vast a christian army, and under so such a great general has Jarger was.

When general anson ivian whose armies were besieging the city of Phelantenburg heard of this disaster to general Dargers vast army he deemed itpossible that it was from Dargers absence from the army at the time, and called the disaster as from a complete form of neglect and carelessness and held general Darger responsible, but did not punish him for it nevertheless. The defeat of general Dargers army made it quite hot for Hadhowever however. He found it impossible to advance on account of obstacles in his way and he had to do what was more prudent, and that was to retreatfurther southward and make his recess in the mountains where the enemy could notfoo followhim.

To make it more descriptive I must say at least t hat this was one of the most shameful christian defeats in t he war, but I will say also that it wasnothing compared to a great disaster that occured elsewhere.

T his disaster happened also almost at the same time but it was something entirely different than the recent occurances. The christian armies under general Francis vistor was moving up the valley of the great Mc-Hollester Run river in pursuit of a glandelinian army under general M. T. Head.We advance and retreat of the foe had been stupendous, and the g christian force that had been following it was quite deal larger than the fugit ive army. Nevertheless the glandelinian general was not daunted by the fact that he was being persued by a much larger than his own and decided to do something that would soon stop the advance of the christ ian dog''.

In the vinicty of the town of Pryor was a very large dam, and this the Glandelinian general decided to burst with the purpose of flooding the entire region and stopping the christian advance. He at once put soldiers to the work of placing the explosives with which to blow up the dam, when christian scouts perdieving the attempt of the glandelinians reported it to the christian generals. The christian generals sent out large forces of cavarly which after a fray of considerable severity stopped the enemys work, and secured the explosives. once frustrated general Head nevertheless was Not daunted, and decided to make the attempt at night. While his plans were in progress for the destruction of the dam which if occuring would wipe out hundreds of thousands oflives at once, other glandelinian generals under Hisconmand made other attempts to stop the advance of the christian army. In the vinicityof the glandelinian army but which lay open to the christian advance was a long railroad viaduct of wood, and this the glandelinians set on fire. It made a pretty good blaze making enough smoke to be seen at ten miles, but the christian advance was not checked, and before he realized it general Head found he himself and hiswhole army entirely surrounded.

However hi this glandelinian general knew that the county around had hills in wch which there were many secret passage ways underground, and caiverns with outlets on both ends. To thes he and his whole army took,and when he daylight dawned the christ ian general and his officers and other generals werecurprised to see that the whole glandelinian army which they had so nicely trapped had gott p entirely disappeared as if the very ground had swallopwe swallowed them. They at first did not comprehend the situation, but nevertheless they had prevented the enemy from bursting the den and causing a trage tragic disaster that would have compelled the whole nation to render aid t to the frightful number 1 of strickens.

It w was at the town of St Anthonyof padua that the terrible disaster happened.
It turned out t hat the christ ian general haddiscovered the retreat of the enemy an and how the Glandelinian army had so escaped. Discovering the route of the retreating Glandelinian army, gen general Vista Victor of t he christians immediately persued, but could not hardly gain upon the enemy as the retreating glandelinian army had had a good start and was a day ahead of the advancing christian army. Thetown od St Anthony of Padua was about ten miles north of the retreating glandelinian army and knowing that in due time it would be pos pi possible that the persuing christian army would catch up with him, general Head decided to halt his army there and either threaten to give battle or do so. It took a swift march to reach this town and on the approach of the foe the inhibitant s fled but not after setting fire to much property, farms and breaking down bridges and destroying grain elevators. Seeing that everything had been mostly destroyed by the fleeing people of the town the glandelinian general sent out a body of ca cavarly to round up the fugit ives and make them pay dearly for the destruction. To the dismay of the cavarly who were rushed out to do this they beheld right in their way a large force of Abbissinians encamped north of the town and to whom the fugitives had fled. Who this christian army was the cavarly did not know, but nevertheless they beat a hasty retreat as a number of Abyssinkilian batteries started to salute them with a perfect rain of shells and shrapnell which sounded like a hail of explosions above them.

In Julo Callio and Norma Catherine a re world n of madness and misery seemed to reign and at times during the seige so loud was the noise of gunnery and bursting shells, and exploding mines, that it seemed as if all volcanoes in the world would have been drowned out even if they did completely blow themselves to pieces and mountian ranges were made to tremble for the distance of three hundred miles so violently as to dislodge rocks from their precipices or sides. General Hanson and his other generals had once made up their minds to make a trip to the region and view this greatest of a seiges known but on account of so many activities he had to keep up with his armies he always lost the opportunity. He also wished to help this seige and bring an immediate fall of the big besieged i city. Many of the generals who commanded the armies who were besieging Julo Callio had viewed the eruptions of Mt Calverine on many occasions but never heard such din as this. During the day of June 7th more sections of the big fortifications of Marcudian was razed by big explosions, and the concussion of the blast wrecked general Hansons headquarters within the christian lines, sixteen miles away from Julo Callio on a high hill. The explosion caused suspicious looking clouds to hover over the enemys lines for the full day and while child fugitives were ting rescued he recieved a report that along his own left near the southern outsk culskirts of Julo Callio the enemys shell fire had become a screaming tempest of horrible explosions, devastation and destruction of lives. Also a cold blooded murder of hundreds of child fugitives was committed by glandelinian cavarly within sight of the christian lines, but christian guns let go upon these assassins and for also them all.

general Aronburg of the glandelinians on the same day found he was being spyed on by members of the christian Gemini and though he was infuriated, and threatened to treat them as only deserve to treat the damned, the spies could not be captured and during the rout of persuit the commander of the persuers predicted he had lost a seven hundredmen before the persuit had been given up while only ten of the spies had been shot down.

Another christian spy an officer, made a trying sacrifice by spying on the same general a littlevtime afterward and there was a lively scene as his troops persued this spy. The spy gave a good example of what it is to meddle with the Gemini and two glandelinian officers and about thirty men were shot down before the spy succeed in making his escape. Some lively times at Julo Callio indeed! Maybe the virian girls should see these ones. Even during the same day ten Geminian members of the Angelinian one hundred and fifty fifth infantry kidnapped a glandelinian general and six of his officers and became persued so closely that they could not escape killed their prisoners to effect their escape. Simultaneously to another point on this very same day general Lanagerine Mc-Hollester of the christian side, captures spies from the foe, interfers, when a cavarly force charges his very headquar ters after breaking into the christian lines, and with the help of general Price Gemon captures the whole forces.

On the left of the christ ian line, more fires were observed to be burning near the enemy position, and general Beckhead who directed a glandelinian division at this point attempted to wreck his vengeance on the christians, but the burning of the Andrsen fortification, and the attack on the Virginia fortification frustrated any attempt on his part, and a strange dream of captive children in the fortifications which was of deliverance immediately came true as the christian forces captured it and routed the foe at this se section to the main line securing all the poor children and sending them to the rear. These children showed marks of horrible suffering too revolting to relate here.

Same time happened the daring escape of a glandelinian general by the name of Woolis but he was persued to the very enemys lines, and after some spirited fighting retaken and shot.On the right of the besieging christian line an assault of Abyssinkilian troops was made upon the Lawndale fortifications but without a success. The whole day was a thrilling and anxious one for both sides but it finally passed without the christians breaking the enemys lines at any point.

The glandelinian railroad trains of privisions and munitions were wrecked and blown up during raids at night under cover of the continual earthak earthshaking artillery duel of both sides, and a dangerous runaway of a thousand glandelinian horses occured when they became frightened by the blinding glare of another mighty explosion two miles away and which thundered like a hundred million cannon and fill the sky seemingly for hundreds of miles with a storming cloud of flashes and a shooting tongues of flame.

All Angelinia was not now crying ''Wait to all glandelinian Butcheries of christian Children''But was taking it out in the destruction of glandelinian prp property and lives. A sanguimary attack was made upon the Geden fortifications by general Procilas Christ ians during the night, but was repulsed. Two generals on the foe side during this struggle were hemmed in by the Nationalists and fought des desperately for their lives and freedom and finally escaped after shooting down a hundred christ ians. Simultaneously christian troops made a desperate assault upon a glandelinian forces refuged in some extensive cavern near Julo Callio but could not capture the Befoe forse, but mined the cavern and blew the glandelinians all to eternity.

The battle and seige and bombardment made the scene an awful spectre of hell and flames and explosions, and flashes of all sights, seemingly an unsanny night indeed.

During a smmsmodic part of the artillery duel that night about eleven o-clock a part of the walls of fortifications called St Ritas was torn asunder and twenty three thousand glandelinians were buried under the fallen walls.. During this scene of horror scores of christian officers daring to go out-scouting faces hundreds of dangers at once, and were i in constant perils from the glandelinian Rebels, and they had many thrilling escapes, such as from shell fire, from the musketry fire of m snipers, and mmsmsades, and from pervuers, and bloodhounds of the foe and secret enemies hiding everywhere in the dark, or even that some of their own followers may b be sneaking glandelinian assassins disguised as Angelinians.. Some of these officers viewed the destruction of Fort Calverine and the destruction of ten thousand glandelinians simultaneously, and the saving of three hundred Angelinians who had been pursued for six hours during the day and three hours during the night.

Another party of these officers when pursued by fierce Gargolian Kurds was saved by searchlights, and a force of Abyssinkilian cavarly. They also escaped death from a distant explosion, and one of the officers killed general Brone and wounded Colonel Frank , nakely two leaders of the kurdish pervuers in spite of the perilious position they were in when pursued. They indeed faced a more serios of perils that noisy thundering night than any one can conceive, and mre greater perils than any of the Vivian girls or their companions had ever risked.

At midnight while still continuing their scouting a typheon storm of shell explosions was breaking loose, and a series of ships floating down the Norma River was wrecked during a fiercer cannonading on the shore close to the christ ian lines, and christian troops labored all night facing dangers of all kinds, and under constant fire to rescue those on board, and amid the appalling fury of the artillery tempest rescued them all.

At half past six in the morning June Second general Hansons main line of batteries on the right went into more general action and the destruction progressed. Talk about the subject on earthquakes. Here was real earthquakes. Every explosion that occured resembled a frir frightful eruption, and the flames of fire that resulted when much material caught afire resembled a series of blood red rivers of destruction hurling seas of smoke clouds into the sky so thick that for the dit distance of nearly five hundred miles the sun failed to shine at all and it was quite dark for the distance of a hundred miles auth of Julo Callic tward which the smoke was driven by by a high nort heasterly wind. During this great bombardment everybody had narrow escapes from annihilation and during the worse of the catastrophe and the greatest violence of the explosexplosions the glandelinians made a fierce attack lasting three hours upon a line extending for forfourty miles but was repulsed with frightful wholesale loss in generalsofficers of all ranks and men.

This seemed to be the result of Gamon causing glandelinia of a serious Orime. A great attack resulting in massacre of glandelinian troops and a repulse occured early that morning, three other serious fights were also on, and two generals went through aninferno to save their troops from destruction. One attack of the foe had a an appalling fury and tore through a portion of the christian line under general Crowley but the foe here were also beaten back after all days fighting. At other points that day of the seige while the cannonading was growing stronger a hundred terrific collisions occured between the opposing forces at different sections almost a simultaneously and from the losses inflicted it apparently was the first bloodiest clash of the great seige, and the final contest of that bloody day.

June the third passed without any infantry action and the artillery somewhat slackened up but on June 4th came the beginning of the Norma Catherine Storm.

On the christ ian center besieging that section of Julo Callio raged ten sanguinary conflicts for the possession of the Fortifications of St Gertrude. The Angelinians attacked but were driven back and the results of t he enemys hammering counter onslaughts tore the christian line badly but an increase of the bombardment brought the enemy to withdraw before furt her damage was done.

At the extreme right of the christ ian line a general artillery fire of redoubled fury was let loose and a seriesof battles also raged throughout the day.

The Bristle Fortification was captured by christian forces but it could not b be retained and it resulted in another another great glandelinian victory. The ports of Angelina Run was also assaulted and the struggle was a reign of terror but the attack was repulsed. On this same day general Hanson Gannon who advanced his Abyssinkilian forces to capture the Marthian fortifications had received news about the failure at other points but he imprudently went on with the intention to capture the fort and positions of the enemy at all costs, but he was endangered by the foe forces alw almost surrounding his army and he was forced to fight with all his might within the very might of the fortifications of Dargin and the christian lines. General Hallingtons glandelinianrepulsed six charges of the christians but general Frank ganson Carol arived with his own Abyssinkilians, and after inflicting terrible slaughter upon the enemy drove the foe back, and rescued Gannons army. Other generals sent forces to their aid, and also same Baldwinsons advance upon the foe and though the battle still continued on the center it soon gradually ceased and the foe gave back and retreated to their own post positions.

Indeed such exciting things occured durig during t he seige of J ulo Callic. It was really a result the christ ians wh who were getting the worse of it without mistake A t t his junction of one of t he main G Glandelinianfortifications afrightful carnage raged for the w hole day w ithout a single paus e and caused completely the two commanderswith their commands w e were compald compelled to surrender to their wicked Glad Glandelinian enemies . A cyclonic like attack was also made on a lag a lag large Glandelinian position near Norma Catherine thirty five miles away, and though also a hellstormof batt le raged also here the christianswas repulsed wit h the loss of general Dago Berger J as Saunderaburg who was killed. The enemy fought obstinately ele elsewhere during the same day ep especially at The Rivertown of Arnola where also the christians recieved a crushing defeat and repulse. It was the first greatest Glandelinian victory during t he seige and the struggle had been fought out to a bbe bloody end. The Glandelinian forces in t his struggle was outnumbered five to one by the christian forces ud under Judas but checked their att ack on the fortifications of Norma Constantinia.

At the conclusion of t his bloody carnage raged near t he fo rtifiest ion of Gloriola where t he christian forcesforces under genem l Arcola Hanson made sixteen fi fiers onslaughts every one of wh which were repulsed with frightful slaughter.

However t he storming batt le for the possession of this fortification continued on t he second day and in this part of the engagement one quarter of the christian forces ran out of ammunition and here the battle closed without any hope of victory for t he christian side. Another frightful carnage also raged at Norman Bridge which made a scene greater than the reign of terror in Norma Catherine, and the Glandelinian generalsgenerals discovering t hat great overwhelming christian forces were on t he oppod opposite side of the brige bridge and dangerously close to the city, and fee fearing that t hey would advance on thepositions at Norma Catherine and mk a bad break in t he main Masonic Line, made a series of most violent onslaughts and drove al before them , carrying t he charge away into the first christ ian position at this location, and all the effiorts of t he christ ians in countercharging failed to dislodge t he foe. This crit ical situation made a very anxious time for t he many christian generals and general Mansion did not knw what to do as many of his officers had been killed or captured during that tremendous action. Forts Batt le and Daisy were razed by t he christian gunnery during the battle of Norma Bridge and the struggle raged for t he dis dis tance did distance of ten miles ab ndng ab along the Norma Run where in the evening the enemy even made a desperate attempt to carry t he main christian position. It was a batt le fiercer t han t hat known to have raged at Apple Orchid but this time successful for the foe who were now in full possession of the bridge and a good portion of the main christian line at this sectiom.

Elsewhere during t hat day the fortifications of Violet Paul and Violent Lansin were blown t o atoms by christian mines which had been set after two weeks work and t he wreckage was scatt ered over a wide terretory. The fortifications of Gloriola No. T wo was closely besieged by christ ian troops but the besiegers were soon driven back t o t heir own position with losses that was uncomprehending for the size of t he troops engaged and general Henderson Hanker on the christian side lost his right leg and arm in an explosion as his troops were retreating.

During the night more engagements raged for the possession of Norman Bridge as great forces of christ ian troops were hurled forw ard to retake it. The first t w o hours the christians recaptured the positions held by the enemy, though the battle was extremely sanguinary and most frightful. A lull was then on, and then the batt le recommenced as t he christ ian forces strove to ret ake the bridge. Another hour of t he fright ful engagement and a frightful storm of carnage raged . Mask were thrown the christ ians with half theirnumber down. Again a lull, and then again the mount erous christ ian forces surged forward. More bravery of generals was treated during t his struggle t han can be put u in a fuel book but t he attack ton no advantage at all. The severest action of t he nights struggle turned the scene into a sham conflargration, and the fearless charg charge of general Godds Angelinians was met bravely by the cglandelinianswho stood their ground nobly and p opened for two hours upon t he attack att ackers over ten thousand cannon. General Godd was killed, and his forces cut to pieces and routed back to their own works just when t hey were almost in possess ion of the bridge. The bridge was heaped like a mountian with dead and wounded Angelinians only.

This long struggle and sad results however did not daunt t he main christian commanders who directed the storming battle. On the right of the long bridge on t he christian side in possession of the fo was the string of fortifications known as Marie Stanck Salient. The fearful batt le was thus soon on again when fierce and wild attempts were made by the Angelinians under heavy artillery fire to capture this string of fortifications. So fierce was the engagement t hat afterwards this fort was called Fort Da,mnation, and the struggle known as the Marie Stanck Massacre. General gladerlinin Stanck of the foe side lost his life in successfully driving back three millesAngelinians, but when his army under a new commander counter charged the christians it met annihilation.

This deadly struggle for the possession of the fort was soon successful, and the christian troops got inpossession of six longstone walls, and as the Glandelinians charged furiously six times to carry these death dealing stone walls they were repulsed with the los os loss of ten generals killed every time and an unaccountable number of men who were horribly mangled by shell and canister fire. General Melby Accountants on the christian side fell mortally wounded during this battle reign of terror at the st one walls/ and general Adele De Garbe Bonaparte also a christian general in counter charging the foe had his head blown off by a shrapnell.

The highest part of this struggle caused the deaths of many a Glandelinian general, and their main commander at t his point Shoemannia Turner was killed, and also Physcian Herdrude.

A fierce artillery duel also raged here simultaneously, and the christian guns destroyed the Fort of Mildred Carris. The stand of the main Hanconia line saved the other portion of the routed Glandelinian force from being followed, still prevented the christians from ret aking the bridge, and prevented the Glandelinian rear on Normas Run from being attacked by the battle frenzied Angelinian hordes who yelled worse than t he Glandelinians did themselves who flushed with their success thus far tried with all their supreme strength t o obtain possession of the bridge and the works on their right. It was now ten o-clock at night and still the battle raged. A port ion of the christian force got whipped and retreated, and the enemy rallying stormed the christian line in possession of the Salient once more attacking the christian line like the heavey sea does a breakwater, but the massacre was resumed with a repulse of the foe. The fury of the battle along the right was extremely horrible but gradually the Glandelinians desist ed for a time and there was another lull. General William A. Evans was saved from t he horrors of a Glandelinian prison by fighting his way to liberty during the battle and he retired from this revolting horror and battle of damnation. The experiences of many generals on both sides during this batt le was enough to stag startle any one but there are too many to describe here.

Other portions of the besieging line had concentrated along the upper banks of the famious Sunbeam Creek, and upon the fortified town of Vivian Wickey where the fortifications of St Dennis Denineau was located. Here also came the same night a main action probably another batt le of Sunbeam Creek though not so fierce as the former but equally as stubborn. The main fury of this struggle brought a advantages to the opposing opposing sides by the wholesale but the foe won the greater number and t he fierce battlecries of the opposing forces roared above the crash of the battle. Simultaneously t he besieging forces made attempts on the St Denineau fortifications, and also fierce endeavors to capture the fortified position on the upper Ophelia Run and also along the main section of the Battery line river but of no avail and at all these places the christians met a crushing defeat and were com pelled to retreat back to their own positions.

Simultaneously the fortifications of Aurandecallic was assaulted but of no avail. The prolonged bomb bombardments and the series of battles was laying waste to whole forest forests. It was a frightful butchery, not a seige. The fortifications of Aurandecallic was again burning. To give the full and different descriptions of the whole seige of Julo Callic as should be would take many volumes, and also all its horrors, besides the progress of the destruction from point to point.

It was now the seventh day of June and the seige had brought no better luck for the christian lines, than when it had started. There was frantic appeals for help everywhere among t he besieging christian lines for the harrowing misery of the countless thousands of wounded was dreadful dreadful. One day more there was a lull in infantry attacks though though the artillery duel was now at its utmost violance. Then came a deep crate christian assault upon the fortifications of Jennie Turner. Ten hwra he herculean onslaughts were made by the christians only to be completely destroyed. Onice the enemy made a great charge and despite the over whelming number of christians defending the works in front of that besieged fort carried all before them, and cleared t he whole region in that quarter of all the christian troops routing them in all directions with appalling los loss of life.

Fort Trecian was also also assaulted and it gave t he christian attackers a hell of death and destruction. The shells hurled by the guns of that fort during the frightfulonslaught comiscommitted fr frightful damage and drove back the largest christian troops.

On t he same day elsewhere a fierce christian charge was repulsedalong the Norma Run River and one third of the command captured by the enemy their leader having surrendered. General Hanson Ogletorp came t o the rescue of the main force however whic was heavilyattacked and amid the dread dreadfulscarnage dreadful carnage along his lin lines pressed t he assailants assailant s back and placed the Glando, linians between two fires. The foe forces retreated to their Swaninca dia fortifications where they opened one of the first fiercest fiercest and most successful batt les of the seige, terminating with the recapture of the Glorinia, Beppo Lansin, and Angelinia Agathia fortifications and a complete withdrawel of the christian assailants whose whole line was torn in pieces by the enemys curtain fire of musktry and cannon.

This battle produced another reign of terror a real dorm of wars devastations, and t he concussion caused the leveling of villages not far from Julo Callic and the destruction of Fort Lot inia. After this great repulse of t he christians on this fatal June The Eighth there was a lull ad then the fierce carnage along the christian lines resumed as the fo foe came back at them by making a violent counter assault. Frightful now was t he slaughter once more. The Glandelinians carried the christian position near the Dargin Hills after a bloody maelstrome of slaughter but depite the wholesale death strugl struggle they failed to captured the christian army they surrounded though they almost almost annihilated half of it. Elsewhere on the right of the battleline general Deventions line of Turmerannians crushed itself to pieces against the wall of purple coats but won some advantage nevertheless. In this disaster to the christians their t wo generals Zimmermann Edwards, and Hanconia Zoo Ras were killed, and a fearful counter charge of the extreme left of the christian right met massacre and a complete disasterous repule of the main line at the same moment.

Federal Zimmermanns troops made a wing during the meanhile meanwhile and attempted to strike the fla Gladelinian troopsa the rear but during the charge he was killed and his force banged to pieces, and then carried to the four winds by the most terrific violent tmendeous counter charge the Glandelinians evermade before during the seige.

The battlesfrightful roar surpassed everything everh heard during the seige before, and though the Glandelinians under johnston federal fairly drove all before them on t he christian center their main commander was wounded, and this drove them to demorilization, and the advantage they had gained was lost as they had been compelld expelled to st op just when t hey were winning a complete victory, and withdraw to their own position.

None of the generals on both sides who survived could ever forget their experiences during the battle, and how by their methods their lines were saved from total defeat which threatened them. At other points of this immense battle line a portion again extended alm along the banks of the Sunbeam Creek, and extended beyond Jennie Vivian, to the Neiklingburg fort ifications and even to Cedernine;. Near Cedernine pit iful scenes of slaughter and assassination of general officers occured ad one general who almost proved himself a second general Whilliamsberger Zimmermann, and who also was a fury was shot to pieces when he ran in front of a p spitting machine gun, and one other general stated-afterwards that when charging he would sooner meet a thousand octopuses than one Glandelinian face-to face in a mad rage, and that if t he sea had been in an inferno of waves the Glandelinian att acks could not have looked any worse. He said it was a blood curdling massacre of troops on both sides.

Even terrible was the fury of a conflargration that was set by this tremendous battle and a great storm of shell fire annihilated hndreds hundreds of thousands of Glandelinians but still they held on. At one point near the Neklingburg Fortification the enemy had won a sweeping success especially along along the Wickey Lansin Run and it was in vain for the christ ians to reform the panic stricken divisions who on th almost threw the whole army into confusion before it was withdrawn to t he rear and and under cover. After this tward noon t he fiercer struggle was resumed with redoubled fury and during a fierce charge that the christ ians made many b brigades me met destruction, and whole armies of troops rushing forward on a line twenty miles long was shot and ripped to pieces and fairly torn inside out.

The whole christian line then was again thrown into confusion, and their general Bicknell Baker was severely wounded, and the main commander Hanconia Legate, Here Sanders, and Frans Francois Hanconia were dangerously wounded.

The battle after a slight lull then progressed with the foe coming on to the attack in a perfect wave and soon again the battle was in full sway. Baldwins christians stood a frightful punih punishment ad gave aid and a gave as good as they got, but soon t here was a literal crush of hell, Baldwin Baldwin waskilled and his army almost cut to pieces and driven back.

Most peculiar thing about this battle w as of the fr frightful forest fires that were set by the enemy in their desperate attempts to stop the dep desperate christian onslaughts. The fortifications of Colleyer and Stanck were also attacked and the generals who led these ch arges had the most thrilling times of their lives as the enemy finally repulsed the attack, and only God alone saved these generals from death of severe injury. Even in the midst of the forest fire there was a perfect charnelhell, but here the enemys counter charge was checked but not completely thrown back, though general frank Hanconia of the christians came out with colors flying. Battle still raged with frightful fury elsewherehowever.

There was desperate but unsuccessful attempts to reduce the fortified works of Fort CrowleyIII and the result was of the most spirited cannonading of the seige during that whole mont h. The frightful slaughter on thisoccasion was uncomprehending and the cannonading of seven hundred thousand big guns was unceasing along this one point a battle roar that shook thewhole city of Julo Callic asif with an earthquake, and even t owns and cities along t he river front for the distance of hundreds of miles. During this battles attempts were also made to capture these fortifications on the river and land at the same time but all these were repulsed.

On the left grad center of t his great batt le line general Annals Christ ian division tried with might and main to capture the Evangelinia St Clair fortifications and so t errific was the gunnery at t his point that it seemed as if terrific storm of fire had been let loose, and the battle raging for a score of miles seemed now to be spilling an ocean of blood. Generals Jennings, Joice, and Ten others were in great peril as their divisions were shot to pieces by the enemys cannon storm, but they were rescued in time by reinforcements, and it seemed as if the war ofhe worlds had broken lose when the enemy counter charged, but a big Glandelinian force ten million strong faced an annihilating fire and had to give way after attacking steadeadily for nearly five hours without intermission. intermission.

T his wasby Hanson Vivian afterwards called the Battle of Norma Catherine or Normas bridge.

On the following day t here was a x series of great occurances, such as raids, great explosions fires, and a complication of diferent kindsof disasterbut no infantry action, t hough cavarly engagements were often and fierce. Crimes a andsecreleges a this day was comitted by the foe within sight of the christian lines. On the tenth of June it was apparent that t he bombardment of the foes positions at Julo Callio seemd tobe at its highest fury, fr for nearly a million cann were thundering. Late in the afternoon of the tenth general Mansion the main commander of the besieg armies ssent a large force under Hansonto storm a portion of the enemys line at the southern outskirt s of Julo Callio. It was attempted but after four hours desperate fight ing the christian column was smashed down and routed. A large force wassent to the rescue and saved the depleted force from disaster. The foe did not follow up this success with a counter charge this time and on t hat day there was no more fighting with a infantry.

All t hrough this day many christ ian generals outvscouting continued incessantly to have t hrilling times t hrilling times. One batch of officers were persued by glande linian cavarly for two miles, but general Hansonia Shoemania came to their rescue with a squadron of Concent inian cavarly and after a sharp skirmish drove back the wild persuers. Simultaneously a Christian soldier had been captured by glandelinians, and was being led out t o the field to be shot as a spy when a body of spying Gemini interfered rescued him shot down eight y two glandelinians and ade off with the one they had rescued, besides a whole plan and setiesof maps of the enemys main pdins positions .

One Glandelinian general who had been persued by Angelinians got trapped in a den of rats and had to surrender. Some other generals who had been with him managed to effect their escape. Simultaneously a christian cavarly, and a glandelinian force of dragoons fought for the possession of a prisoner the enemy had in their midst. The foe however being overwhelmed were beaten and t he prisoner was rescued. A christian cavarly also making a raid rescued a wholesale number of child slaves whom they came upon within a portion of the enemys lines. T hey were persued but outdistanced their enemies and escaped saftly to the christian lines.

On this day a desperate battle raged on the river when an Angelinian fleet steaming up the stream attacked the Glandelinian squadron stationed there. This artillery duel between the two squadrons of ships, each being three hundred dreadnaughts was of terrible violence and killed all the fishes in that locality from the con cussion.. A desperate Sortie during the night brought on the captures of t he fortifications of Arenburg, And Glorinia No. III. but the attempt on the fortifications of Marcocinio was a failure.

The attacking fleet was also repulsed, the forts captured were retaken and an attempt by the main christian fleet to blocade blockade the northern branch of the Norma Catherine River was met with a frightful repulse. A desperate battle also raged for the possession of Julo Callio yeland in the middle of the Norma Run River but it was not in favor of t he christians as an ending and the att acking christ ian forces withdrew. Fort Prunia was also captured by a surprise attack, but the christians were not able to hold it as too many Glandelinian cannon was trained upon it and the scene had been like a world of fireworks at play.

A battle also raged between two fleets at the mouth of the Norma Run and the Norma Catherine Rivers. The christianswon here an d drove the foe fleet back back to its lair. On t he morrow the christians being again in possession of the fort called Marcocinio, the enemy drew off for a respite and to gain breath. On this day June Eleventh there was a sort of lull in the camonading at some quarters. Glandelinian forces being in peril from swiftly advancing forest fires, changed the formation of their positions, and strengthemd the fortifications of Marcelcellio.

Wb Who would like to be in general Purgatorians place for a short time? Napoe ialy when he saw how relentless his christian enemies were in the seige and attacks upo the series of fortifications.? The Cabibble fortification was also captured by the christ ians during a sortie, but here the enemy under general Mc-Whirther corner made a farce attack and this became a drama of horror and massacre for the extent of ten miles in a few hours. It resulted in the recpeare of the fortifications, and the christians were driven to a long stone wall position. The glandelinians having ngened and changed their formation, soa came on at another charge with the purpose of capturing this new position. The charge was promptly repulsed with a slaughter that I do not dare t o relate. A second time t he Glandelinians in fearful numbers swept forward. Cannon and musketry greeted them and tore their whole line to pieces, and slew sixteen generals, and wounded over fourty others allseriously. This demorilised the survivorsband t hey retreated in confusion. A third time they rallied, and recieving reinforcements from t he main line against again swept forward to the attack, but t his time with redoubled fury.

During this assault ten whole lines of turnerannians and Zimmermannianz were crushed, and the roar of a hundred thousand cannon d fairly deafened soldiers a score of miles from the scene. Thisch arge was called a charge "That carried all to hell" so many glandelinians fell but nevertheless it was successful, the stone wall was cap tured and the christians had to withdraw back to their own position with flags in tatters.

During the meanwhile at another point of the storm of seige the fort of Marischoeshanice was also captured by t he christ ians This soon caused a frightful battle line of slaughter ten milesalong miles long, and and after t he Christians were driven back a thousand terrible explosionsoccured in the plains in front of the besieging lines that looked like the outburst of a thousand volcanoes simultaneously. The whole Christian army besieging the city was almost deaf for three days after that, and all had been thrown off their feet by the con cussion. It had been a horrible disaster, but it enabled the enemy to win at this point a great victory. Tward evening the enemy blew up the stockades and fortifications which were easiest for the christian assailants to capture.

Thisproved to be one of the mod most terrible disasters of the seige so far. On the twelvth of June came a great batt,e storm. It was the purpose of general Manson to capture the strong fortification of Marshmallow. As he was preparing for the interprise the Glandelinian batteries shelled his whole line in general fury, and the din was a perfect salvoes of scores of thousands of cannon per hour. The first terrible onslaught was made, and ended disasteriously, and two christian generals were killed. The second general onslaught was made and was a perfect and bloody horror. So fierce was the batt le and cannonading that it appeared asif the whole world had been caught in a maelstrome of flaming comets and stars, and suns, and hurled to immediate destruction. And the din was so terrific that it sounded like all the explod explosions were from t he planets bursting to pieces.

The bravery of the many christ ian general many times during this assault saved the christian t roops from disaster but nevertheless the assault was not successful and during t he whole retreat back to their own position the christian colums had to fight the savage hordes of Glandelinians under general Braggard untill relief was sent them by general Mansion, and the counter attack of the foe after two hours desperate fighting repulsed. This time whole Glandelinian hosts were fairly but thered by christian gun fire, and though persistent in further attacks through an diform of shell fire the Glandelinianxs could not accomplih a success in forcing the christian position. The air seemed now to be a mass of flames, from new conflargration and the smoke clouds made it quite dark which probably hid the piles of dead.

During this struggle officers of all rankswent through incidents that were more thrilling t han ever angelsprobably can describe.

This struggle was struggle was one of t he gravest dangers of the seige and probably of the war itself. But generals played clever tricks and by this meanscaptured the fortifications of Radcliffe and from this was able t o cannonade the attacking Glandelinians and force them to retreat back to their own works. Simultaneously there was another fiery war of the worlds and this happened on the river. Admiral Zimmermannia made an expidition down the river with the intention of making an attempt to capture Julo Callio and Norma Catherine by river. He had six fleets and each were of a thousand dreadnaughts. The shore batteries at once opened upon his ships, and also the forts. Terrible destruction of ships occured during this monsterousconflict which conflict which lasted a fulld day. About five hundred thousand cannon thundered all t hat time with a continuous roar t hat shook the whole region, but the fleets met failure and did not capture the fortification by sea. This was almost a deadly dilemma of the christian fleets and it took the greatest difficulty to save the whole fleet from either dest ruction or capture. General Flandertine of the foe who repelled the fleets attack also had a delemma als but he saved fort Vandalia from destruction by seeing t hat t he guns were aimed correctly, and by tricks on the admiral managed to win the noisy day. Hindernine federal on the Glandelinian side was wounded by a shell explosion during this wild all days bombardment. Simultaneously a drive was made against the Calmarinia fortification, and att acksom the Jennie orie fort, and a struggle raged along t he Norma Catherine battery line but t hese were only christian failures.

The fortifications of turner was also assaulted and t hat known as Vivianie. The christ ian in t hese sorties faced a perfect wall of glandelinian rifle fire, and the christias facing annihilation withdrew to cover. One general on this occasion made a daring rescue, and fought a bloody battle for the possession of 10,000 child slaves about t o be slaughtered and rescued them. Hanconia Manders made a threat to blow up ton of t he glandelinian fortifications thatvsame day but did not do it as he was frustrated.

General Purgatorian was angered by this persistent attack of the christians and also afraid and had sent an appealto Manley for more help or he would have to soon give into his besiegers.. At times during that day the fury with which his armies had to face from the Angelinian fighters was something t errible and he had to repel storming waves of onslaughts here and there as repeatedly as a prize fight er wards off blow of his his adversary. All that day the battle made a volcano of flame and din from horrible earsplitting explosions One of Hansonias whole wings was wiped out by christ ian artillery fire and he himself was wounded. The Pandora fortification was ruined by christian fire bugs.

Even at ill on this same day on the right of the seige tward the afternoon a sanguinary sanguinary and pugnacious attempt was made to take the Clybourne fortif ications by do storm. The bravest deed of one of t he christian general saved the Angelinian army who made this gigantic assault from annihilation. He moved his troops to the right under a galling fire from machine guns and occupied the fortifications and when general wjenst ien Tamerline struck his forces a series of blows it took all the desperation and courage the enemy could muster into themselves to drive the christ ian out. The Maximilian section of t he fort t he christians as they retreated blew up. As the enemy soon counter charged a furious storm of battle was resumed but t he att ack met a bad bloody failure and general Agamocillico Francis of the foe was compelled to retreat, but was surrounded and finally made to surrender.

At night time of that June the eleventh the fortifications of Jennie Wren, Wilkerson Janet, and fort Meldora was attacked by strong christ ian forces, and for a time were voc victorious though their lines were crushed and mangled. General Hamston Tamerline again struck the christians a series of the hardest blows, but only a t remendous sea of slaughter, the main portion of the christian line in possession of the fortifications under general Baldwin Chaplin held the desperate assailants at bay untill he could withdraw the depleted christian troops to a better cover.

There was a lull of nearly over an hour then the foe swept u upon him but was cut up and routed. It was another drama of horror and a line of hellstug of war. Ale it was a bloody angle of the slaughter of annihioation. Simultaneously a carnival law broke out on both sides that probably could be again heard for three thousand mi miles, and there was a hellishlat battleline between t he fortificationsof of Chamberlains and Opholia. General Vivianias christian columns were forced to ret reat but Hansonia made a desperate stand before he recieved his mortal wound. After another lull and after the christ ian line had rallied the furious storm of onslaughts were resumed and the fortificat ion of Big Bethelina was captured and blown up. The fort ification of Madge Evans was razed and that of Jennie Turner also by the christians who exploded t he ammunition after capturing them, and h thisgreat storm of wars devastatin during t he seige seemed to paralise the enemy but it did not daunt them though they seemed to becoming played out now by this time.

Horrible scenes of misery was witnessed among the many wounded. The main fortification of Evangelinia St Clair was bombarded but it only seemed to arouse the glandelinians to fury and they returned the shell fire tenfold. T he fort of Violet Lansinia was assaulted but not captured, and also fierce actions occured for the possession of the fort ification of Steadman but of no success. The fortifications of Fisher, Jennie Clorinia and Vivian, and Wickey were also st ormed that night at the cost of the annihilation of whole armies but t hey were not carried. Freaks were left by these attacks. A smashing blow was struck at Fort Museum but suffered a reverse.

Fort G Gretchen was assaulted that night by dreadful numbers of Concentinians which was successful but at appalling loss of troops and christian generals. A furiouse counter charge was prompt ly made by Gargolian cavarly against the christians but a force of Concentinian cavarly rushed up to meet them, and after a most dreadful cavarly struggle of four hours' duration the Concentinian cavarly was shamefully beaten by the fury of the Gargolians.

During this fray several Angelinian generals had been lost in the enemys region, and witnessed a scene of horror and desolation before theysucceeded in returning to their own lines.

One was of a force of glandelinians attacking a fugitive train pulling through the region loaded wit h ten thousand child refugees enrout to Abbieannia. A cavarly force of Abyssinkilians rushed to their rescue defeated the foe and saved the train. As it was impossible for the train to go any further it was abandoned and set on fire and the children taken to the christian lines, to be sent t o Abbieannia by rout of Abyssinkile. General Lord was also a christian in peril from foes and once he was almost captured, but a friendly glandelinian interfered for him and he was st-alone. Despite the dangers, that he was in when surrounded by christian troops a glandelinian general obstinately refused to surrender and so was massacred with his whole command. This caused the capture of Fort Alhambra where the enemy made a fustrating attack but were outwitted. During this night of horror volcanoes of fire seemed to appear everywhere and one christ ian general who was captured refused to betray his arg no matter what t ortures he was forced to undergoe. During this time there was to the enemy a strange bloodcurdling mysterious signals which they could not understand and what appeared to be hands of fire in the sky afrighted some of the generals and surprised Purgatorian the main commander of the foe armies at Jule Callio and Morma Catherine.

Two cavarly officers of the foe had an experience in an attic of a general headquarters when christian snipers in trees near by were hailing the house with bullets incessantly throughout the whole terrifying night. Simultaneously a daring attempt was made by a body of glandelinian cavarly to capture general Mansion by riding within the headquarters. They almost succeeded but though they failed, it does prove that it shows that no matter how fierce the christians are in fighting the Glandelinians feared them not or any of the christ ian generals. On the left of the besieging lines a glandelinian force under general Federaller in att empting to ride his cavarly through the eastern christian wing was repulsed and almost overlapped, and he had to place a big conflagration of woods and towns t o save his army from capture and too vigorous a pursuit. Then Fort Donolmie was blown up, which for a time placed nearly fourty great glandelinian generals in peril. During a lull in furious conflict furious and lively maneuvers was made by both desides, and then h the fearful storm of slaughter and horror was on again once more. It was a war of the world on land. After six hours more of desperate fighting along this line the christ ians withdrew and recrossed the Andrean Run stream, while general Federal turner attacked Hansonias retreating christ ian troops on the rear. At this time general vivianias forces was crossing the river at another point and caught the fh flank attackers on their own rear and the glande Indian army almost surrounded and infiladed fought as they never fought before. Despite Vivianias coming to his rescue Hansonia had to at ill continue his retreat but at one of the fiercest parts of the six hours-conflict, there came another new turn in the struggle with the rolling up of the glandelinian force at every point, and were frightful loss of general officers. Hansonia was severely wounded as his troops retreated through a partly burning forest under shell fire, and general vivianis was unhorsed by a shell. The christian line however was again in peril on account of general Furgat orians actions and as the daggle struggle raged furiously on the right, a desperate attempt was made to capture general Aronburgs position. But Aronburg Parson was successful in repulsing the foe and compelled the enemy to recede. On the other section of the line near fort Journal the christian troops in counter attacking met a smashing defeat but soon resumed the assaule nevertheless.

The christians at another point captured a score of stockades mined them and just when the enemy in counter charging retook them let loose the mines and hurled all t hese Glandelinians to perdition. It was frightful the results of so many dreadful explosions at once but it stopped the advance of Bicknell Purgaterians main advance, and prevented the recapture of Fort Anna Maria which the christians had also captured.

Tward the breaking of day there was a short lull in this titanic struggle then started bloody manuevers tward Fort Wickey Lansinia. During this time despite all pretentious general Maldon Hallers flank was crushed in with frightful slaughter as the enemy assaulted him both front and rear. Hansonia was again totallyworsted as he came to general Hallers rescue and was himself wounded a second time. General Vivianis army then was thrown upon the foe and was almost beaten down, but general Hinderius Johnston prevented a disaster by concentrating his main force along the Morma Catherine Run and defeating two gigantic glandelinian waves of assault, one at Annis Ickeer Fortifications and another issueing from the direction of Morma Catherine. It was a great slaughter of whole glandelinian armies but it drove them back nevertheless, though it was a spectracle massacre. Ten generals fought in this struggle desperately for their lives amid this scene of horror.

General Hansonia Evans captured with a small cavarly force during the meanwhile a large batch of prisoners. Many other generals had thrilling experiences during t he rout of one of the christ ian divisions, and were almost captured by the persuers before a change in the affiars saved them. Even poison vapor shells were used during this fray. Bicknell on t he christ ian side rushed to the rescue, and what other thrilling things the generals went through only God himself could relate. One thrilling adventure followed another and along the main line of Hansonias front the foe forces were finally beaten in their desperate assaults and two more of their own generals were severely beaten.

Three were seriously wounded.

During the seige up to then the village of Latruva two miles southwest of Jule Callio was threatened by the christians but not as yet assaulted, and also was Brigans but these too were too strongly fortified and general Mansion did not want to attempt it without more aid. At Holie one attempt was made by the christians but ended in a greater disaster than ever. Bondinia Run, Beaut. ies Lane was occupied by christian forces but here the enemy made no attempts to dis, dislodge them. Badula was also menanced and Poverty Row but still they were left untouched.

General Transit attacked to bring his forces up nearer to the fortified town of Gatherlingburg but was cannonaded out of his position before he got within sight of the town and the Melkingburg fortifications opened upon his rear and routed his army back to its own former position. Mansion sent a fleet to take Landing Island but it could not getthere. Bosaulu was also t oo strongly fortified to be assaulted, besides Halfacow and Glamdonburg each two miles away from Jule Callio. An attaak was made upon Glamsburg recently but did not result in anything dec dsisive, and an attack on Aurandice also but nothing good resulted.

General Hennie made a drive against t he foe but was worsted. His attempt was upon Violet Paul and Melfort held by generals Saten and Cannons glandelinians. Turner Hill also extended here but was not assaulted. One of the best and strongest fortificat ions of Julo Callio was Fort protestia confronted by the besieging troops under generalGag-Gag who also threatened Beonia. He also was concentrating forces upon the fortress of Ah-pickadee-Powad and Powad commanded by the Glandelinian general Francis Schmidt Phillip a great Glandelinian general and an old name Another fortress was Gandonlinia situated on a portion of the Angeline river held by a portion of generalGalo Galsces glandelinians which also occupied Southlingburg, Powad, and Latruva and Zanagustopolis where at the beginning of the seige a seething caldron of battle had raged. Here many glandelinian generals had been and were still in great peril from the besieging christ ian forces, but seeing all desperate means of escape for the time being cut off-they hadresolved to fight untill the last drop of blood. Wicked as they were the glandelinian generals were indeed the bravest rebels known.

Kittens Escherts and Franciscanna was a two large towns guarding approaches to Julo Callio and it was still held by foe forces which prevented any big armies of christiansfrom reinforcing those who were besieging Julo Callio. During the el seige a general learned of a child whose name was Francis Lillian who was a child slave in Julo Callio and he launched a fierce assault up to t he very doors of the city and into the very streets with the purpose of rescueing her but met a disasterous repulse and with the loss of hald of his command. The real tortures that the prisoners must have gone through in those besieged cities was terrible, and the christians besieging the cities made it worse. Many t imes purgatorian made and had made fierce attempts to raise the seige by asking Manley to fortify Francis Atlanta the nearest Neighbor of Julo Callio. This was soon being done, and the first occupation of new forces started near Illenia. Once while this was occuring a report that general Mansion was dead came in and if it had not been for t he other generals who found the report untrue a terrible thi disaster would have occured to the whole christian army and theseige would certainly have been raised. One general to prevent a disaster made a daring leap out of a train while it was going sixty miles an gour, and gave the news that it was untrue.

Spies entered Julo Callio with the intention of trying to rescue little Francis Lillian but they could not succeed and almost got caught themselves for their pains. Att empts were made to blown up christian ammunition trains but these were frustrated and the plotters caught and not shot. During the thirteenth of the month there was hardly any cannonading, but there was mysterious sounds, and at night strange and mysterious glows of all colors a in the direction of the enemys lines.

On account of the threatening si situatia of t he seige the Glandelinian generals threatened to start another massacre of christian women and children still held prisonersin the two besieged cities, but as the Angelinians were again menancing Normas bridge, the massacre was not committed for fear t he Angelinians would slaughter the prisoners prisoners they took in revenge.

It is indeed a question of who should be the generalson opposite sides who ought t o be rewarded for their patient suffering for their cau ou cause and for their bravery shown A in this desperate seige battle. On the evening of the thirteenth of June The glandelinians fearing fearing that if the christian position was not forced from the Norma Run Section the Angelinian would soon obtain possession of Zanagusta polis, the glandelinians decided for once with their commanders to wage a general battle. So a fierce struggle was at once commenced following a desperate attack. The numbers who charged t he christian position on this occasion was unaccountable and the losses they sustained also, and though a foot hold was obtained on a portion of the position the foe was finally repulsed with still heavier losses. Nevertheless they made a se ond attack equally as fierce and as determined, while simultaneously a desperate fight again waged for the possession of Norma Bridge as christian cavarly attempted to take it from t he glandelinians. While this was going on the christian center under general Vivian Consumon was shelled and driven out of its position. Two desperate attempts by christian cavarly was made to take the bridge but was unsuccessful.

The battle had a frightful fury in the vinicity of the bridge and a Glandelinian cavarly and dragoons had to be sent to quell the storming christian mobs of cavarly. once after a third attempt the bridge was hastily recovered by the christians, but the enemy promptly counter charged and were crushingly successful in the fourth engagement but failed to drive the christian forces very far and met a fire that show shotdown half of their number. General Mansion had hopes now of seeing the bridge once more in his possession and so made a strong demonstration. Hanson Perner wh who assaulted the enemy a fifth time at the bridge was killed and general Roswell, Buster, and johnston Nichos three brothers were wounded and the attack was unsuccessful. The christian ms main generals were puzzled over this situation for he had expected his ruse to wo work and had only ended in disaster to the christian troops.

A general Assault of great force and fury was then made upon the bridge by cavarly and infantry together supported by artillery and machine guns, and extra cavarly, and infantry but this great assault was also repulsed with twn christian generals shot down and the four columns torn and mangled to pieces, and driven back in the wildest disorder.....

Howevert he generals managed to rally these christ ian forces by exerting their utmost courage and stragetem and thus reinforcing these four divisions, two cavarly, and two infantry made a sixh despse desperate assault . Thisassault seemed to bring on a perfect o warfare of titans but was repulsed with the same result. Again with indis crimimate fury another assault was made, and this time it was parfially successful but another general Johnston Buster was wounded, and Roswell Johnstonia slain. general Shields on the christian side directed assault number eight, and learning that his own right wing was threatened with annihilation supported it with all his artillery and cavarly. The battle now raged with extreme fury, and the losses on both sides was frightful but still more fearful was the christian losses for they were the assailants and were frightfully frightfully exposed while the enemy were not.

This eight ass ault turned out as a success better than the seventh but the enemy promptly counter charged with such violence that the christians could not hold and the result was a complete and bloody repulse for the christians again.

The enemy followed up their success by a s second counter charge attacking with the pressure of an avalanch, but so fearful was the christian resistance that the enemy could not make any headway and a gap being made by the enemy extending their lines too much the christ ians finally rushed through in a counter charge themselves and put the whole gray line to flight. The glandelinians however attacked again and it seemed to now as if the fiercest part of the battle was raging like another Dunheen Creek.

It resulted for the enemy in another bloody repulse. However before the foe had been driven back they had almost succeeded in driving back a good portion of t he christian line. But all attempts of the christians to obtain a foothold on the bridge was out of the question.

Along the Norma Run the battle still cont inued to rage. Here was another c counter mending death dealing stone wall. Great glandelinian waves roared forward against this christian positions but were fairly slaughtered. This finally concluded this portion of t he action for two hours and general Mansion now began to win more ground than he had possessed before and the glandelinian army retreated to their post position back to their own works in a total rout.

Simultaneously Hanson Buster had moved his own forces to flank general Mansions assailants. He captured a portion of the-foes line of positions in this movement, near the location of Normas Bridge, and brown Charleston advancing also to take the enemy in the rear accomplished much while the extreme christian rightwhich had been driven back in confusion was reformed by general Vivian Saunders, and Shields who had been caught at a disadvantage and placed b between twi fires was also aided and the glandelinians were compelled to withdraw .

Again simultaneously general brown Cammillian had made a vain desperate attempt to hold his ground and had been driven back also when the progress of the battle changed its course and amid its surpassing horrors Cammillian was able to rally his troops and drive the glandelinians back. So eng Enraged were the glandelinians over this sanguinary repulse that their leaders defied god c sause it to happen again. They had no chance to assault this time however for the christians rushed forward themselves and general Phelan Mc-Hollester who had been withdrawing from M Normas Run in the face of a heavy glandelinian onslaught soon rallied and a terrible fire was opened along the advancing christ ian line and finally meeting with disaster upon disaster the final portions of the glandelinian wave recoiled in confusion and retreated in a rout. Phelan Mc-Hollesters glandelinians rushed up to stem the confusion but the panic spread to his glandelinians and the whole line had to be withdrawn to the rear under cover of the glandelinian artillery fire.

During t his one tremendous a action a great christian force advanced on the two fortifications of Cromer and Andrea, and of the others known as Fort Ece/ Fort Rae, and Fort Logan. These were captured by the christ ians, and the enemy finally strove fiercely to retake them. At these points there wa asl also a seething storm of battle and general Zimmermann Evans endeavoring to move for general Corbinnias christian line in his efforts to get around to the glandelinian rear was unsuccessful and he was repulsed, with the loss o loss of general Vivianis Germania who was wounded.

The glandelinians had thus turned the tables on general Zimmermann At once section of general Zimmermann Evans line the enemy caught the rear unprepared and this made a successful flank attack and cam captured general Demineanna. The other portion of the main christian line who had captured these fortifications were well prepared for the storm.

They after a lull fought a ferocious action and captured the fortifications near the towns and Mildred and Greenburg but could not hold them long as the enemys batteries commanded them out. Many generals witnessed harrowing scenes that bloody moonlight night especially in one of the stricken christian linesowhich had been driven back, and to make matters worse there were five horrible explosions, and from unseen quarters a perfect hurricane of glass though where the glass glass came from was a profound mystery.....

General Waldorf at this critical time was in general Bicknell Saunders camp, and had rode to the Abbiesnnian lines in possession of t he fortifications of Cromer and Andrea and had also witnessed the great explosions which of course was far from these fortifications.

They watched the storm of battle threaten to move tward their way, and also wondered what caused all the strange noises that they heard high up in the air. They also heard that the christians had suffered from frightful carnage in attacking and capturing the fortifications of Villisn and Francis, and that another force of Angelinians had captured a squadron of landelinian cavarly who had attempted to kidn kidnap one of their superior generals.. And general Zimmermann Evans was terribley angry over the failure of his rear movement and made other attempts to do something to force back the angry landelinian attackers but had series of severe and most exciting experiences before his movements was finally accomplished. Then came a disaster caused by a line of mines exploding for the distance of twenty miles, and which sounded each like a million cannon roa roaring in one simultaneous crash. If someone probably had been at night near the entrails of a active volcano they would not havewitnessed a greater sight than on this long Norma Run battle ground where in one single night series of titanic conflicts...

Another attempt was also made to do harm to general Mansion, and simun simultaneously one christian general who had committed a blunder by doing some heroic effort saved himself from the dangers of disgrace. Geneal[general Zimmer]Zimmermann Evas Evans also cleaned up seventeen furious glandelinin glandelinian generals single hand, and then when the enemy that night even tried to flood the region by bursting two big dams, general Evans by heroic efforts, and by all kinds of plans and movements prevented his attacking and attacked troops from being c caught in the roaring torrents, and stilled thw the wild grief of the wounded who had been in the greater danger by also saving them, and frustrating the attacks of the enemy at the same time.

While general Zimmermann Evans was doing this a terrible catastrophe occured on his main left wing and it was a disaster caused by a severe explosion within the christ ian lines similar to that which so long ago occured at Jennis Vivian. The explosion killed a score of thousands and committed incapable damage. There was now a conclusion of thrilling experiences for some other christian generals and these were of pering persued seventeen times by enemy forces, and one general and his whole command was lost in the midst of an inferno as a forest fire almost overtook them and only by means of stragety did the general and his force escape this awful danger.

Then more fun began. A charge made by the foe more savage than the raging fury of a scene made by glengiglomenean creatures began, and was repulsed with the loss of half of their number. This was indeed an exciting tussle, and during the struggle a daring jail break was made by 100,000 Angelinian prisoners who took up arms and escaped by shooting down scores of glandelinians. Simultaneously elsewhere that night there was a horrible massacre, and if the elements went mad the din could not be greater. What followed still elsewhere was a terrific battle with 10,000 glandelinians and Fourty thousand futi fugitives and the fugitives won and escaped. Again simultaneously some one among the glandelinians had the spunction enough to raid general Mansions headquarters with the intention of assassinating general Mansion but his attempts was frustrated, besides the plot of another to poison the whole of Mansions command in order to kill the general of or the c child fugitives who had been saved by the christians, and also in an effort to raise the seige. An imposter was also captured, and Fort Vergiller was also burning.

The glandelinians were indeed facing grave conditions in Julo Callio and o Norma Catherine for plagues were now sweeping here and there among their ranks, and tens of thousands were or had been t dying per week. The fort of Ziegler was in the hands of the christians and the threatening storm of the seige was growing more threatening every hour. One general during the attack of the christians on the enemys positions had seen his own columns driven back torn in pieces, and then his own joun o journey was back through an inferno.

Tward Midnight the batt le had still a fiercer outbreak. The fortifications of St Anna, Maria, Francis, and Maria Atalnta were blown up by the christians con cen trating their artillery upon them killing all who occupied them and sending flaming wreckage into the sky for nearly a thousand feet. It seemed to be the greatest struggle yet during the seige and Federal Vivianana soon made a desperate assault on the left wing og the glandelinian force occupying Norma Run and soon it was again a hellish storm of screaming battle between the fortification of Franciscanna, and Mare, Maria, and on the stream called Zoe Rae Run.

It seemed a forlan forlorn hope for the enemy indeed to make a successful stand and my indeed what a fearful crash and uproar of hell the long lines of cannons on both sides made, and now it was a more frightful scene of bloodcurdling slaughter an as the almost preternatural fury of the battle extended along general Vivianannas center. General Shields attacking glandelinians coo columns were outflanked but fought stubbornly in the midst of a roaring inferno but of no avail and so terrible was the slaughter that he was forced to fall back. The enemy however under Shield drove on in their second counter onslaught which became more general than the other, and which spread to a greater length, but it was also repulsed as well as the third assault also. Frightful was the fire of cannon and musketry along the Abbicannian line.

It was a fire which for a time cleared the region of the assailants. Onslaught No. four was made by the enemy but ended in disaster. General Chumbersburg then arived to the scene and routed the fifth assault on the christian line, and made a furious attempt to capture Normas Bridge but was disasteriously repulsed himself. A sixth assault was made by the glandelinians and it was also repulsed. Who would believe it, but the enemy made assault No. seven. It was frightfully repulsed but again the attack was made the eighth assault being a vertible storm of carnage. Generals Sprowder Johnston and Hansonia Castoria we were wounded on the christian side. Again an uproar of hell prevaled along the whole christian line, the region of the bridge was an inferno of cannons, shell explosions, mine explosions, smoke fire, and rifle discharges, and while the enemy after being repulsed, made a nit ninth assault, christian forces not active made attempt after attempt to capture Normas Bridge and the fury of the battle was something terrible.

Two times it was a seething storm of carnage near this bridge, but elsewhere the Angelinians were again victorious and carried all before them counter charging the disordered ranks of the enemy and carrying all before them, but the batteries of the foe soon drove them back to their own positions, and again they were forced to sustain another desperate Glandelinian assault. This assault was also repulsed, but the eleventh assault was almost won before a change in affiars made the foe side prevail just when success on t he christian side trembled in the blance.

On both sides of Norma's Run there was a regular seried line of hells tug of war and the twelvth assault of the glandelinians resulted into a massacre, and a dissolution of the glandelinian assailants who gave up and retreated. Another assault however was again made with the fury of desperation each assault having lasted about twenty minutes. This was the enemys main desperate efforts to raise the si seige of Julo Callio.

The action along the christian right wwas equally as violent and general Huebaum [illegible]-Chirberson tried to fairly blow his way into the bowels of the earth as it seemed as he commonaded the whole christian right and the positions to cover the assault of general Francis Dargin. He fierce attack was made on the whole front of the christian right, but he was repulsed, though at one point general Manley Gannons christians had less at first driven back and general Melfort had to stand ground to cover his retreat. Gannon crushed the foe however assaulting him and saved Melfort as soon as he was able to rally his retreating forces, by wheeling around and taking the enemy in the rear.

Manley Johnstonia on the center of the christian right sustaining the same assault had also been forced to retreat but the charge for the enemy was soon disasterious for their leading general Germania Rain was killed and his troops fled in disorder. General Zimmermann-Edwards then made a mad charge, and simultaneously general Germania Johnsons glandelinian cavarly in counter charging met complete destruction. General Hank Jones with a body of christian cavarly crossed a shelled zone under fire and though in peril from the storm of bursting shells maga managed to get his force through without much loss and reported his experience to his superiors. Victorious assaults were also made against the christ ian right, the seventh of these assaults driving Manley Huebaum Francis army of Abyssinkilians from their position near Fort Franciscanna, and a eighth assault drove it still further back, but a furious counter assault drove the enemy back, and enabled the christians to recapture the last position and repell successfully the other assaults.

Upon general Meldorfs Hansons christian line near the bridge the enemy made a number of assaults, one two three four five, and fifth and all these werevrepulsed. The result of the next assault was almost disasterious to the christians, and then came the seventh assault which seemed to give to t he enemy inevitable success, but it was repulsed as well as the eith eighth. The ninth assault brought some general success to the central body of the glandelinian assailants for theybrecaptured all the lost ground they had lost, but the christians though driven into great confusion and panic finally rallied, and the result was the rout of the glandelinians.

The tenth assault of the enemy caused them to suffer greater losses than ever for it was another hellish slaughter, but the christians nevertheless were victorious again repulsing it to the very last. A twelvth assault was made by the enemy with redoubled violence and it was repulsed. The next assault was of still greater violence but of no avail for the whole Masonic line was repulsed and thrown back in wild confusion it being a more frightful slaughter of the glandelinian waves.

At the third section of the battle six miles north of the bridge the christians had been pressing on themselves without for a while sustaining many heavy assaults though their general Handon Hindernine had been wounded. But as they stillprogressed onward the slaughter began to grow worse, though the enemy began to fall back more swiftly toward their own position amid the thundero thundering uproar of the covering batteries. Then a great assault was made upon the enemy by general Sultonius Gero George and the enemy were apparently victorious and drove the christians all the way back across the wide plains of Lincoln Run. A cavarly force was then sent against the enemy but it was cut down and routed. The christian armies reformed on the edge of the plain just as the foe started forward to make a counter charge. While preparing to meet the tremendous charge one portion of this vast christian line on the edge of the plain was caught in a trap and threatened with disaster. Then the whole line had to give way without giving the enemy a general engagement mu just then, but further on they f reformed and gave the enemy serious resistance amid a storm of blood and fire. For quite a while the struggle now continued for the possession of the plain and the situation remained the same though it was becoming a warfare of tita titans. There was then help sent in thevline of reinforcements it still it brought no change.

Again the whole christian line learned of one of its wings under another Hanscnia being threatened with annihilation, and though they were holding the enemy at bay and had annihilated several of their large grand divisions it seemed evident they would have to fall back unless something could be done to prevent the disaster. A great force of christian cavarly was then sent forward, and they rode fiercely into the Glandelinian columns committing a great massacre their general being Barrymore.

Sa Simultaneously the Angelinians under general Baremore vivian made a desperate stand a little beyond the main christian line, and the glandelinian generals Shoemann and Tamepline who drove hard against the christian line were wounded. general Baremore vivian had to retreat before this tremendous onslaught of the foe forces, but the glandelinians here made an immense folly by continuing to advance, for while terror and death was striking everywhere, a force of christian cavarly tore into them from the rear, overthrewthe whole column and stampeded it to the plains across which it was driven in widely scattered groups under a storm of shrapnell fire which threatened to annihilate any living pla person and thing on that bloody Lincoln plain.

Elsewhere the battle had raged and progressed with increasing violence and redoubled fury. Thevherculean advance of the enemy had been still held at bay along the center at the edge of the plain amid the fiery conflargration of battle, and the enemy generals made frantic efforts to push onward their troops. It was some of the first of the deadliest carnage of the mighty struggle and it is hard to say whether contending armies of demons and angels ever fought like this, and refuse to acknowledge their defeat or victory even. Thevenemy went through a storm of blood and fire time and again but still at this point at Lincoln pun the christian line remained firm and terrible-was the loss of Glandelinian generals as the horror of the bloodshed grw. soon the glandelinian right began to recede, and though the whole christian line seemed to be bathed in an inferno of blood and fire, they began to press on like an avalanch of hellish fury. At the center the enemy still held on but a cannon fire of great intensity torn their line and they also began to give way across the plain of death. The action now seemed to be coming to a conclusion for the dreadful night, and general John Ambrose Evans who commanded this division showed his bravery indeed in holding sovast a foe force at bay, and by doing all the signalling himself to his officers when ever he gave orders. The final issue seemed to be an avalanch of slaughter and a tragedy for glandelinia at the same time. There was also a violent and desperate fight between a glandelinian un army under general vivianis and germanias and a christian cavarly force under whilliam A Evans which made a noise like a violent thubderstorm. It also resulted as a Glandelinian defeat.. It had been a massacre, and not a battle.

A disasterious attack simultaneously was made upon the two fortifications Croner and Andrean and the Angelinians were rp routed.

Despite the fact that the glandelinians were standing the seige so gallent ly, and with such evident success it seemed apparent nevertheless that many of the christian generals were human fiends and at times seemed to be too much of a fury for them. One christian general whose name was Lent clashed with one of the superior glandelinian vgenerals whose name was Spent face to face, and cut him down after an hours sabre duel. The third outburst of the terrific conflict occured at nine oclock that coming ,o morning after half an hours lull and the result was a resumasation of the massacre and the capture of another of the fortifications and six glandelinian generals and nearly one hundred thousand child slaves who were terrified almost to unconsciousness. General Evans Jackson had also a tremendous outburst with the enemy forces and whipped them. At nine thirt y o-clock it was report ed that one of the christian generals and his orderly was lost just as the glandelinians made a great attack upon a christian position near the region of Francis Creek. This brought on another murderous rolling drum drum fire of artillery on bith sides, and little good it did too.. A serious check was made in the desperate glandelinian attack however, and when general Franklin fellwounded general Evans Jacksonia also fell and general John Evans had to come and take command in his stead. The struggle then continued, and while it progressed general Evans had a few minutes time to visit the wounded generals and give them consolations. During the struggle many of the child slaves and captives who had been rescued proved themselves to be littlehuman angels of-mercy to the wounded of even both sides but recieved little results from the vicious glandelinians. General Hanglandelinia was sent by general Purgatorian to stem the desperate christian tide, and general Starring also but it did not seem to stop the christian progress any. General Purgatorian in the meantime had succeeded in locating the quarters of general mansion, and first shelled the region and then threw upon the christian line in that location a furious attack but the attack was beaten back with great loss, poss hoss.

Fort Hanglandelinia and Hoffmann were blown up by the enemy at quarter to ten. General Mc-Allister Hoffmann had some experiences when he captured fort Mc-Allister and no sooner had he withdrawn his troops to saft y there was a fearful exp,o explosion. At some points of the fierce battle line christian forces suffered very sad defeats and repulses, but at other portions it seemed that victory was being accomplished. It was a roaring battle line fourty six miles long, about half a quarter of the length of the main besieging-encircling lines. general Francis Madden was also in command of the besieging glandelinians and he fought desperately to regain the forts in possession of the christians, but the many cannons started some mad shooting and it was only a mirea miracle that the glandelinians escaped destruction. During this struggle many child slaves tried to escape the enemys lines and were recaptured, but a counter charge of the christians caused their rescue and also resulte:sin the capture of two glandelinian generals a great force of [illegible] which could of [illegible] MAN PROPOSES, GOD DISPOSES, SO BEWARE YE VIPERS OF SATEN AND TAKE HEED.''

Some more child slaves had also a christian general who were prisoners also escaped from fort Manlay and though persued for ten miles two of the men fugitives and the general in defending t h e children killed, general Raymond Donaldson, Richardson ,oganda, n and Federal Stanck, and a large force of glandelinians were led into a ambush.

General Smithsonia madden of t he glandelinians was also captured, and general John Evans got into action in the woods near Julo Callio. While a part of his troops were repulsing the enemy Evans went out scouting but was almost injured when caught in a furious shellstorm. He however escaped from the glandelinians who finally persued him and running them into an ambush caused their capture. He even caused the annihil ation of a squadron of a buch of would be kidnappers who had rode way into the christian lines with the intention of trying to recover some of the escaped child slaves.

In the woods general John Evans forces licked superior divisions of the enemy, an unheard of thing in the war before. Simultaneously he led a bloody raid intl into one of the enemys fortified positions and within the enemys lines burned a generals headquarters down and captured important weapons, plans, papers, and the generals coat and hat. His generals saw much during the bloody battle, and also witnessed the capture of general St clare August inia, and what was done to him. General Butler made a desperate sortie way into the christian lines at about ten thirty o-clock but was driven back by the advancing pressure of a part of Mansions main left wing. A mine explosion of the greatest flr force occured within the christian lines at this time but it did not do anything unusual this time. Then came another attempt during a lull to assassinate general Mansion which was foiled.

The christian troops near Norma Catherine had in the meantime captured Fort Moriathy and Bucklemary and captured a great division of prisoners. Then one of the christian generals made a startling discovery, a big gap in the christian lines and reported it before it was seen by the enemy and caused a disaster. The gap was soon closed. The battle at about quarter to ele eleven resumed its maddening fury especially along Evans lines, and after general Bicknell arived with a part of Mansions Abyssinikilians he rushed them into the worse of the action. As the christian line being victiriously advancing rushed on to better success still, a large force of Abbisannians under generalgrowu Carasuo narrowly escaped an ambush formed by the Gargolian horserannians. Purgatorian saw that once more his forces at that critical direction was bin being driven into hopeless confusion and once more he brought all his artillery in action and brought on another world shaking artillery dusl. Then came a disaster. Seventeen glandelinian fortifications were set on fire during the fierce hubbub of shell explosions and all the m magazines and ammunition in them blew up tearing asunder the enemys main position and destroying a terrible number of regiments of men and enabled general Manson ogans flank assault upon his left attacking column to be successful and to turn the foe forces back to his rage and misery. Simultaneously general Halsteder Richardson had a fierce battle with a portion of the enemys lines but was overthrown and compelled to seek shelter in the rear.

It happened that during this wild retreat, a body of Angelinians came upon a large pen where certain -kid of captive wolves had been kept and these were turned loose upon the persuing glandelinians who had to shoot them all down before they could resume the advance. And what do you think og general Phelan ohnson? To be persued, and yet escape, after rescueing hundreds of children and conducting them to the christian lines all by himself a feat that was astonishing, and all under fire at that too. Plots were discovered also by the th ousand, and a real insulting scoundrel of a glandelinian insulting the Angelinian flag he had captured by shot and killed by a Angelinian sniper wh who lurked in the tree tops. Night time soon came on again without any furt her infantry infantry activity for a while, but do during the early part of the night there was a series of mysterious lights seen by all the christian generals, and several of them had an exciting scene in the darkness. Soon tward ten o-clock at night the desperate struggle was resumed resulting with the capture of the city oof fortifications called Phelantonburger.

This resulted in the freedom of nearly two hundred thousand children and the capture of one million glandelinian prisoners and a hundred and fifty generals besides ten thousand battle flags and a large quaunty of ammunition and wagon trains of privisons. yven two generals proved despite the odds against them to prevent a massacre, and had also an adventure with a horde of Gargolian furds who pursued them and the children they had saved from massacre clear to the christian lines, and part way within, and then escaped after a skirmish but without retaking the children.

Other seried advantures the generals of the christian army had which are too numerous to relate here, but during a desperate flank attack upon the christian line which was desultory and unsuccessful mansions main line threat threatened a serious activity.

The left of general Mansions batteries were stormed at midnight, but the christi n christian generals turned the tables on the glandelinian assailants and general Penrod oswell hurled a force of Abyssinkilians upon the flank of the flankers and overwhelming them, overthrew the whole force and drove it back to where it came from in the wildest confusion. Again an attack occured somewhere else but the enemy failed to carry the christian position. yort Terwilligers was also assailed and a glandelinian garrison here almost wiped out beforevit recieved reinforcements and repulsed the christian assailants.

One other christian general and even Gertrude Angeline who happened to be here at the time were fugit ives, and it was she who brought the general safily to the lines and guarded him from perils of all sorts he faced to his utter astonishment. gertrude Angeline was later while out scouting in peril from the foe, but she collected a squad of troops and battled with the enemy as if she was a soldier and saved her self and them from utter annihilation and saftly reached the christian lines.

gertrude Angeline though a little eleven year old girl was a fighter just as the soldiers and a perfect wild cat as the glandelinians always called her. gertrude Angeline for her bravery was rewarded by being saftly conducted tward general Hansons army under strong escort with the report of her bravery and a request to make her a guardian of his nieces.

Fort Gertrude Angeline was finally attacked and taken by storm by the christian troops and general roscoe and a hundred thousand Angelinians who were held prisoners here were rescued. At the left of the fort the enemy made a desperate stand raging a fiery inferno everywhere all along the line of battle, and as this glandelinian force was between three protecting main bodies of yurmerannians the christian attackers finally withdrew with their booty and escaped out of the half circle formed around them with those they had rescued.

During the lull came another unsuccessful attempt on general Mansion, and the general had to have all points guarded so strickly that no foes could enter again. Then there came a report of Julo Callio flooded by the enemy bursting a leves of the norma river in an endeavor to frustrate the christian seige. yhen came another report of the deliverance of millions of child slaves who were rescued at Catherine Run where a foe position ten miles long was captured by a desperate fray. More astonishing things also happened and the curse of Annie Aronburg on the enemyd of Angelinia and the vivian girls seemed to be the cause of all this. yort Canoxoance was also stormed but not captured.

yhen came another disaster to the glandelinians such as the destruction of one of their wings of troops and the capture of one of their highest generals, and seventeen thousand more child slaves, and the burning down of all their mills for the distance of fift y miles a long string of the biggest fires ever seen which clouded the sky as if with a thunderstorm with so much black smoke. One glandelinian who was a Calverinian by birt h was set free by the glandelinians by mistake, and though a Calverinian born glandelinian he was loyal to christianity and frustrated the glandelinian agents when they made another attempt to enter the lines to do harm to general yansion. Already series of glandelinian armies had been shattered by these tremendous Julo Callio battles, and a glandelinian assault upon the rear of yvans right wing met disasterious defeat.

Fort yorten and Clyde and Franklin, and also Lp ierce were assaulted but the christians gould Not capture these. yort Americano was attacked fiercely and so was Lillian, ish, and Pragonia but in the frightful fury of the strugg,es the christians here were also worsted. yhen came the frightful tidal waves of Abbiesmnian war forces at these locations but one half of the attacking christian forces met destruction and was compelled to retire. General Fullerton Ambrose cal came to the rescue but a little too late and was also compelled to cover the retreat, and then retire themselves...Forts Cedar and Fair were blown up by shell fire, and the main force of a desperate glandelinian counter charge struck the left of the christian line and carried all before it. The fortifications of Mildred and Carried suffered terrible damage at that same time by great explosions and fires set by the retreating christians. hat the christians did capture, but could not hold they destroyed and devestated.

On the morrow the battle became general and terminating.

The battle could be heard in Julo Callio and Norma Catherine as plainly as if it raged within the very cities. The battle became like a mad hell of demons at war. The full fury of this part of the battle broke out along general Hs Hampsonias christian line, and part of his division met annihilation. The battle indeed assumed a fury that was terrible and more violentbthan may other conflict of the seige seen so far.

And the disasters that occured along general Hempsonias lines was dreadful. General yansonia was killed amid the crash of hell and two other generals fell wounded but still the christ ian line held on.. Even general yivianis failed to withdraw despite the assault upon his lines and general Zoe Rae yivianis brought up his own cannons and gave the enemy a terrible ordeal of facing a terrible drum drum fire, and this finally enabled general yivianis to advance. yhe glandelinian force now started to recede. But as the christian line was advancing a portion of yivianias left was driven into confusion, but the main line still continued to advance in a furnace of misstry and volcano of flame and din and a storm of hell along the enemys line. general Tenerline of the christian side ran into great peril during this engagement and how escaped the ambush just by his quick witts and by the help of his officers and men. Another daring rescue of child slaves also occured, and the fortifisation of St george on the yuebanna Run was blown up by a storm of gang-gang-shells.

yhe great action at this point now had a conclusion but greater scenes were elsewhere and better experiences of generals occured. yerrible scenes occured within the fortifications of yaris, and yllan when the fortifications were set on fire. Two generals and their commands were caught in ambush and general yivianis was killed and his orderly wounded.

Then ense the advance of a christian force that attacked so swift ly and so furiously that it was known as a furious furious human typhoon of Angelinians. General yivianis yindernine was worsted in his attempt to take the works on the right of the latura fortifications and an immense loss in trains carrying soldiers and provisions occured at the same time amid the typhoon fury of the attack on a line of forty miles long. Frightful scenes of indescribable ferocity occured near the fortifications of yalilllis, and general Tenerline Anchitze a christian commander with a force of one hundred thousand men wasxambushed. General Federal Clock also ran into the trap but escaped unharmed. The general highest fury of the charge was fearful indeed but it terminated into another con conclusion with a christian repulse when it might have been a success. Simultaneously general yivianis yindernine saw a portion of the enemys battle line swerve to another quarter and strike the main right ring with a swing but go back in tatters. It seemed to be an ocean of carnage and slaughter.

A fiery hell of damanation. yhe fortification of glorinia and Zoeina was also forced but retaken by the enemy. yhen came the inferno of the Sacremento fortifications another drama of horror. Still the main of the enemys line held its ground.

Will the Angelinians win this tremendous four days battle of yorma yun and capture Julo Callio?

And who will be responsible for the loss of the battle to the enemy if it hp happens?

Soon came a second frightful assault and slaughter. A third assault was made when the second was repulsed, and despite its fierce violence the christians failed to carry the Casteria position. yhen came the first rear ho real horrible commanding of the battle, the ridges of damanation, the assaults upon yarnation fortifications and a renewal of the terrible volcano of flame and din. Then the result was another massacre, a drum- drum fire of cannon, and a seething storm of misstry.

What many of the christ ian generals endurg endured during this battle could not be described neither the number of children who were slaves they released. ow these children were rescued could not be understood but t hey were. general Baldwin of the christian side was killed during the struggle by a turating shell but his death was avenged when the Angelinians slew ten thousands prisoners for the brutality the child slaves had suffered. By t heir perserverance it seemed probable that the christians was gaining possession, and had embushed the glandelinians in a stretch of woods near the river. Soon came the first of the fiercest part of the terrific carnage.

General yivianias command was annihilated, and frightful losses in general officers commenced.

It was a redoubled storm of slaughter and general Meldonia who strove to restore a broken portion of the christian line was severely wounded..... It seemed apparently that the glandelinians would again be victorious in their desperate charge, and the battle line seemed to fairly run red. Even a whole christian line was withered and destroyed, and the second and third crushed to fragments, but still the survivors held amid a cannonading that shook the whole battlefield widly. yhen came the battle inferno of the Catherine and yivian fortificatiogs which by means of mines the christians blew up after being driven from them. Again the glandelinians threatened to be victorious and general Benedictus's line of Abyssinkilians was driven back for a while.

Still the battle now continued without a moments pause and fearful was the results of that four hours onslaught of the wild glandelinians. It was a wild bloody angle, and seemingly the slaughter of perdition for it resulted in the complete and utmost annihilation of general Dargins christian army. Then after a slight lull in the infantry actions came a general cannonading predicted to be heard for three thousand miles again.

Then followed earthrending explosions and general Fuller Thomas and Ambrose Hullers famious charge upon the main wa Cranio. fortifications which caused a new hellish battle line between forts Ophellia and Chamberline, and which was followed by three desperate assaults upon the Mc-pollestinian position with the regulas of Cannon Mc-pollester and the frightful slaughter between Ophellia and Chamberlins fortifications.

Again actions raged near the fortifications of Nvangeline St clare and where the christian forces recieved the severest punishment but stood it manfully and gave as much as they got and carried the fortifications at this point and held them too and Hindernine franklin came to the rescue and reinforced them with artillery and infantry besbesides cavarly.. The enemy retreated from this section in a pandemonium of rout which continued for quite a while. General Michael Hanson also assaulted the enemy at Norma Run positions and recieving hald was able to keep up the panic among the retreating Glandelinians with the help of the loud thunder of general Baldwins guns.

Hindernine Hendonia also carried all before him the results of his charge being most fearful to the enemy and as general Waldonia Jacknell came to the aid with new forces sent by Manston fort Beppo fell into the hands of the Angelinians and the christ ian generals Hansonia Johnstonia and Senguine Antonio and Costellio trapped a section of the retreating Glandelinian forces and threatening it with annihilation forced it into a surrender. The remainder were rescued by the main body of Glandelinians sent by Purgatorian and now the situation still remained the same and though more help arived to the enemy side there was no change in affiars as yets It seemed as if the christ ians were surely going to force all barriers this time.

Already thirty three small divisions of Glandelinians had been annihilated since these mighty and tremendgus engagel engagements started, and frightful was the loss indeed of christian and Glandelinian general officers. Hansonia Johnstonias command had by this time been suffering such loss it had to halt in its advance but secured a good position which it held and the enemy in counter charging him was repulsed. Then followed the inferno and scene of mortal carnage at the bridge once more and some more horrors in the lanes and on the great Lincoln plain and of the bloody angle. Shoemannia Caner came to the rescue of Johnstonia but was wounded as he reish lished the broken christ ian line. His fall caused a frightful pandemonium of a panic and confusion but it was stemmed by other officers, and as more help came for these forces and also Hansonia Johnstonias during a lull they were better prepared and though in the next assault the enemy attacked, and the carnage was worse than the previous part of the battle other christ ian divisions came up on the left and right and those who had been thrown into confusion by the first shock were speedily rallied. The carnage then went on with increasing fury and the Angelinians again began to gain a temporary advantage, and made another herculean advance amid vivid sheets and jets of flame and terrible heartrending slaughter.

All of the divisions along the Norma gun section were engaged and soldier became the loss of general officers on both sides amid the frantic efforts to check the enemy. Soon however the enemy finally began to give way again but the battle still retained its withering fury without a pause now, and the savage ferocity of the combatants was astonishing being like armies of contending demons and it was a question when either side would ever be licked. This batt le was a regular crimson tide. General Hansonia Johnstonia was now wounded but retained his command amid the fierce conflargration of firing and hells crashing uproar. The carnage was raging all along the line and general Violetdinia whose line was giving way was now rallied and the struggle grew worse than ever. The Glandelinians however soon retired badly smitten and th rashed with a worse loss of general officers and officers of all ranks. with a preternatural fury the battle last

The two main wings of the chgistian forces now started forward again and it was now a question whrh whether the Glandelinian forces could hold out in the seemingly worse of the battle and general Hansonia Johnstonia wounied a second time was almost deafened by the din. Gannons line of advance seemed bathed in an inferno of blood and fire and lost three staff of his officers and it was wondered if the frightful slaughter of officers would ever cease. A part of his line was crushed to fragments and driven into confusion, but rallied and restored by reinforcements advanced again.

Still there was no intermission but a horrible increase in the terrible battle, whose awful grandeur, and frightful savage ferocity surprised the generals of both sides. The whole christian line at this portion was in general action pouring a storm of sheeted musketry fire as they advanced and attacked. Then as they get to the main point and changed front general Johnstonia planned a counter charge upon the main line of the enemy in possession of the Norma Run. During that moment plans of his were seized by a spy and though the plans were not recovered the spy was shot down while being persued. The attack of the christ ians seemed to be like a hellish avalanch the glandelinian fire now being at its worse blasting streams of fire, and seemingly blood red rivers of destruction tearing up the attacking christian forces, but now surely despite it all it was more apparent the christians were going to win and it seemed apparent of the downfall of Julo Callio and Norma Catherine.

The Glandelinians under general Hansonia Federal at this moment counter charged in vast numbers but was crushed to fragments and Federal was killed. A disaster and tragedy reared among the Glandelinians at the same time, and Johnstonia Hanson on the foe side was dreadfully mangled, and general Harold Teen horribly s shot and torn. Still onward advanced general Johnstonias christian columns and the wide spread destruction of the battle now extended and grew to a more savage fury and it is probable that earth quake and eruptions of Mt Calvarine could ever make such havoc and din as this grand Julo Callio Seige contest!!!!!

The Glandelinians still in possession of one of their main fortifications tried in vain to hold counter charging the Angelinians amid a literal sea of chaoes, and over awesome multitudes of killed and maimed but were driven back. Fort Garry commited bloody destruction and frightful damage to the christian armies and the destruction of a whole christian line began to make a change in the turn of affairs now. The storm of flaming Glandelinian musketry and cannon made a terrible torrent of death, and a vast portion of the christ ian line had stopped advancing, and it was a wonder that the grass and flowers did not whither before this hellish warfare and amid such frightful ghastly sounds of the yelling of both sides.

The glandelinian forces seeing the christian forces had estopped in their advance soon came forward themselveswith frightful velocity and this time the battle was like a hellish vision and a scene indeed worse than the infernal regions. Avalanches of shells seemed to tear everything down and the Glandelinian attack was like a vertible storming assault of hell itself. A portion of this glandelinian tidal wave missed general Trochus line by moving too much eastward, but the foe line combed its way through the central portion of the christian line and consited maniacle destruction of whole christian brigades the scene being a hedious nightmare. As the assault continued, and as other portion of the christian lines under Johnstonia was swept successfully by the wild onslaught there was a blinding uproar then at the crisis of the onslaught a portion of the line began to give way and retreated in panic.

The battle had a more frightful fury at this point and a worseuproar than elsewhere produced a frightful roaring cloud of death. Then came the final fury of the fierse and greater destruction here than in any other part of the battle line. One explosion onslaught and its frightful results was the gradual overthrow of the christian line which had surged forward so far into the enemys position. Then after a lash onrush of the enemy upon the christian line, all was settled and the fortifications were all abandoned and the christian forces withdrew back all the way they had come dejected, discouraged, and filled with deispir. They had won a good stretch of ground and had been now compelled to lose all and retire to their position to resume the tiresome seige when it had been surely positive they could have broke the foes line.

Unless Norman Bridge and Normas Run was forced Julo Callio could never be approached.

What caused the enormous loss of life among the christians during this action was the blowing up of the fortifications of AndreasIIIII. This battle made scenes of sur passing horror and misery and a second terrible scourge. Many a great general had a narrow escape from an awful death, cruel ofreaks were left by gang-gangshells and battle storms of similar character were raging elsch elsewhere near Norma gathering with the same results. The whole christian army besieging the city had been cruelly torn up by enemy shell storms and had witnessed the powerful fraks left by great explosions.

And many and frightful were the colors of the shell flashes and appalling had been the uproar of the battle and Costellices christian division had been annihilated, Jonnistonia was dissilusioned and the whole scene during the retreat had been one immense mass of seething struggling maddened, panic stricken human beings.

Jennings pickens christian division had been th reatened by a portion of the assault which did not carry all the way up to the christian position, and though appalling had been the fury of the waves of Glandelinians surging upon Aronburgs and Kauffmans lines they had been repulsed. When night came on the air was filled with a strange weird light.

Scenes of preternatural horrors also proceeded this bloody battle, outs ide of the frightful experiences the generals on both sides also had, when on both sides a fierce fight bro fire broke out and burned thousands o to death. The Glandelinians blamed this fire for to on account of the christians and for revenge killed hundreds of t their victims amid indescribable tortures.. so hot had been the weather during the June month tha t hat many wounded now picked up for days and left lying among t he dead were fairly en endagre endangered by magots and many went insane from neglect and torture from their wounds. And attempts of the Angelinians to rescue their own wounded was in vain for the Glandelinins frustrated everything on h this line of work, and those who had the daring to go out on the battl battle field nevert heless to rescue their wounded comrades went through perils that the a g angels no doubt would fear to experience. Attempts to rescue ten of the wounded generals was in vain and twenty six soldiers died for this act of herosim. General Joice violetter was rescued by a squad of Angelinian cavarly under fire, but though the interprise was successful only a handful of the rescuers came back to tell t he ttale.

One officer whose name was Colonel James Aronbug h who went out with a party of christ ianogrenadiers to rescue a red crossnurse got caught in the pathbof a gigantic mine explosion. He or those who were with him were not inju injured butnevorthelessshe and all were buried in a perfect clu cloudburst of earth, debris and bodies that had come down after being thrown hundreds of feet into the air by the force of the explosion. He and the others were smothered to death before any one could come to their help.

Thrilling work also went on when wounded soldiers were being carried to the small town of Angelinia rmer which was later mined by the enemy when the wounded had been moved in time, and blown to nothing. The inhibatants of the town of Joice St Clare had been tortured by Glandelinian savages, and the thrilling work it took to rescue them from these human fiends was beyond the best persons description.

Thousands of soldiers died in rescue work and general Turners squadron of troops who had went out into a wooded region to rescue the wounded there was endangered by a terrific conflargration, ambuscades, snipers, shell fire, and mine explosions, and by floods.Heartrending sorrow and misery was everywhere.....

Soldiers who lay everywhere all wounded were also in danger of dying fro thirst and exposure, and it was for them all hours, and hours of ,isery and terror for shells and bombs exploded everywhere and death for all was certain. It was something worse than a seige. It was hell a thousand times confounded. Two shelters made for wounded soldiers who were rescued were destroyed by explosions and a number killed. More shelters had been erected wibin the christian lines and these were also struck by shells, and reports also came about the advance of the conflargration. It seemed to if millions of wounded lying in the wooded portions of the battlefields would have no escape from a complication od dangers from death, and the swift progress of the flame burning the forests appalled them and such heartrending cries for morey, prayers and curses was dreadful to hear and filled the air like the howl of millions of hurricanes. Scores of the thousands of dead were buried under blazing wreckage, and furt her loss of loss was incurred when the conflargration caught to up to many strethes of woods were the abandoned wounded lay. Troops during the lull in the struggle were sent out to fight the conflargrations, and a desperate fight with the fa flames resulted in an attempt to save the wounded. Glandelinian snipers and sharpshooters hindered a good deal the work of this sort also and then counter attacks, and flank attacks on the conflag conflargrations brought no resultsfor the fire progressed onward burning all before it and thousands of more wounded met a fiery death. Hundreds of brave rescues were made in the midst of the inferno of fire and two christian generals vivian Anfk Angelic, and Robert A Hanson met their own deaths when a abandoned mine reached by the flames blew up killing all within the vinicity.

Many regions of the battlefield had become impassable on account of the conflargration and it int indeed became a tragedy.

Thetown of Garries Squ are was reached by the conflargration and the wounded there had to be hastily moved to better quarters and had been rescued more dead than alive on account of suffocation by smoke and fumes. Terrible loss of lives of the wounded also resulted a sad incident indeed.One soldier made a sacrifice in rescuing single handed many child slaves abandoned in old ruined schoolhouses which were in the path of the approaching fire storm. He by cool presence of mind got them all lined up outside, and then led thro them through unseen dangers untill he reached the christian lines without a loss of any one of them. Great heaps of wreckage made by explosions were visible, ruins of important buildings were visible, and the christ ian fortification of Aronburg which had been abandoned by the christians on account of the near approach of the flames was burned after all had been removed.

Railroad yards in the vinicity of Julo Callio but in the possession of the christian armies were crammed like floods of human beings with wounded brought there during the battle and here also conflargrations started burning, and thrilling indeed was the frantic efforts of soldiers and officers in bringing them out of harms way. Daylight was turned to midnight by the clouds of smoke burning houses, and from the coal yards close to the railroad, and also from long lines of freight cars, factories, and buildings of all sorts on either side of the tracks.

Terrible scenes also were witnessed here showing indeed the powerful effects of shell fire and general Aronburg who had a great and extroardinary experience with a party of glandelinian cavarly when rescueing wounded with his stretcher bearers was killed by the explosion of a gasoline tank near the yards set afire by enemy firebugs.

One of the strangest freaks of all after the battle was the results of one explosion that tg threw up into the air and then into the very christian lines a string of fourty burning fright cars, from a distance of eighty blocks.So many marvso iouc freaks were seen near the railroad yards caused by shell fire that it would take a world of books to write. One was a train freak which showed t hat shells can do any thing. A train that had been derailed during the attack of the foe which had surhad urged across the yards was replaced by on the tracks by explosions of shell and their concussion.

Wounded confined in buildings, frieght depotts, and stations and cars had a narrow escape from shell fire and flames of burning coaches and gas tanks.

Thousands had been driven insane by losses of privisions, from harrowing experiences and from the earsplitting noise of the hubbub of shell explosions, roar of cannons, and millions of mine salvoes. One of the more marvelious freaks of the shell explosions was of a grain elevator whose wreckage had been scattered for blocks and whose grain had been sent flying in all directions like small hail for a mile all around. This destruction caused six sixty million dollar damage in heavy loss of trains of care from fire in the immense Julo Gallio Railroad yards on her outskirts within the possession of the christian lines. Many times rescuers had their way bk blocked by an impassable sea of burning wreckage which no made a heat felt for half a mile as plainly as if you had been only two feet from it. The christian generals were extremely horrified by these awful sights, and of the corpses washed in blood, of or sights of a countless thousands of victims with all vistage of their organs exposed, and bodies torn asunder, and mangled beyond destdescription and many still alive and in horrible agony, and notvable to be moved. It was truely a literall hell of scenes and tortures and for many poor wounded indeed rescue work was in vain as fires burned onwardtoo fast. Victims were fairly hung by shell explosions and their concussion, and those who had been rescued were rescued after difficult work. It was indeed a peticus sight.

No could have witnessed all this scene of frightful torture and bore it, and to realize vi what it is for the wounded to be lying long time without being moved among decaying bodies of the dead amid scenes of such horrible suffering and despair. Death came to the relief of many of these poor sufferers. Later on th is region was always known as''The Plains, of Hell''.

The fortifications of Julo Gallio was called the fortifications of Damanati on. On account of these scenes general Mansion was compelled to sent an a ppeal to the world. Then came the death of another of the wounded christian generals picked up up out of that battle field of horror. It was the most serious situation of the christian armies ever engaged in the war who had went through such a hurricane of five days bloody battle, and whose-men now trying to rescue their wounded comrades, were either hindered by shell fire, Glandelinian snipers, and attacks, and by roaring seething conflargrations..

While all the thrilling times were on in the attempts to rescue the wounded under all these myriads of difficulties, general Mansions whole series of batteries were again in titan throes with the Glandelinian fortifications, and batteries on the hills and works, and the horrid savage cries of the Angelinians as they became exultant over the damage their cannons om committed was terrible indeed. Clouds upon clouds of wreckage p'et into the air ev at every explosion, and during the explosions of which there were scores of thousands per minut there were frightful cloud formations and dreadful flashes. The torrent of shells hurled by the christians was indeed a roaring storm of explosions and death and destruction, and caused the deaths of many Glandelinian artillary officers of all ranks. The cannon fire of the enemy along the edge of the plains bordering a portion of t he es extensive Marcucian lanes had a frightful violence and fury but did not slacken the christian artillerybfire any. Mansion had opened this terrible duel to cover the rescue work as much p as possible and to interfere in the enemy preventing the work. Fort Aurm urandecallioe and Marcocellioe holding over a hundred thousand Glandelinians each and many cannons were badly razed by the christian shell fire and fort Marcocellio was setbon fire adding to the harrowness of the frightful scenes. This cannonading at last enabled most of the rescuers to accomplish better work.

The fortifications of Angelinia and Agathis within the christian lines was also burning and the fire with all its surpassing horrorw horrors was approaching fort Chamberlane.Frightful destruction of fort Jenniewrentownia was also progressing, and the main fury of the conflargration was reaching up to the wooded sections of the Marcucian lanes it being a roaring sea of death and destruction. Firefighters were trapped by hundreds and died by scores or overcome by smoke andcheat. Horrible was the destruction of the christian seige fortifications Marc Marcucian, Aurandecallo, and Marcocellio which were being wiped out despite all the desperate efforts to stop the flames.General Hanson Powers who led a bunch of fire fighters was repulsed and trapped by the flames, and when they got out of this trap ran into a ambush set by the enemy, and had to fight their way out in the most savage encounter yet.

It was apparent indeedh that the city of Julo Gallio was being threatened also by the conflargration and who can doubt that the enemy were fighting the fire just as desperately as the christians were. But still the frightful progress of the flames seemed not to be checked, and the forts Derophia,, Woolia and Pounces of the enemys caught fire and the conflargration then became a hell pit of fire and confusion a hundred thi times confounded.

On account of the conflargration the christian forces had to change their respectable positions and blow up the fortifications that were endangered g by the approaching flamesand during the time the necessary orahges were being made there was a hot debatement between all christian officers and generals on the horrible conflargration and its causes.

All this inconocivable havoc could not be comprehended. During all this horrible night and day one of the christian Geminian bodies accomplished a great spying exploit on the enemy. A number of them were captured by the fierce Glandelinians, and being confined overheard a plot of t he enemy generals to mine underground and blow up all the christian lines if possible. Seeing a chance they seized many important papers, and escaped after being discovered and persued for nearly twenty miles. It was good information for the christian generals and every guard was told to look out for all attempts on the part of the enemy. One of the other spies in leaving Purgatorians lines, ran plumb into the camp of another Glandelinian army but escaped after being captured twice.

After a lull of infantry actions for about t hree days in which however there were occasional artillery activity a fierce attempt of the foe was made to take the christian fortified works under Warren. It resulted in a long distanced retreat of the foe who were driven to their main works at Julo Callic Run. The christian positions on the right at White Rose Lane was assaulted in a desultory manner, and simultaneously assaults were made upon fortified positions near Campbell Run, and White Rose River. Three attempts were made at these points and at another simultaneously upon the christian fortis fortifications of Clinton and St Elizabeth. At scattered points of the seige for three days the series of smaller conflicts continued. Glandelinian forces were driven out of fort Calverinia which they had succeeded in capturing, and were forced to take a desperate sa stand at fort Angelinia and Kirknool, and finally repulsed the christians. Fort Catawba was blown up after sharp fighting and then resulted in another long retreat of the foe back to their owkrs. Fort Carolinia was stormedbut failed to be carried. Simultaneously on that same day a severe naval engagement occured on the river after the bombardment of Glandelinian shore batteries and fortifications was started by a christian fleet and which caused the fleet to be attacked by a large squadron of foe battle ships. The christian attack was repulsed.

The christian sailens of Fraim and Davis were attacked tward noon each about five miles apart from each other, and series of battles throughout the day raged for the possession of these two points. Along the Norma Run and in the vinicity of the bridge occured twelve smallerb battles.

Late in the afternoon general Manley Johnston was sent forward with a large force of Germerannains to attack the christian fortifications on the center. It resulted in quite a sharp engagement but Johnston was crushed and he himself forced to retreat under cover of cannon. Then came thousandscof night operations on both sides. Fort Federal was bombarded wildly in the early morning, and three battles raged for the possession of fort Gilmore. Fort Breckenridge was stormed captured and blown up before abandoned on account of a counterv atartillery attack. Fort Goddfrey was assaulted by foe armies and resulted for a whole day in a new fiery war of the worlds. It was an exciting time for general officers on the christian side, but the christians were victorious in this sanguinary battle. At other points that second day of series of battles fort Messina was stormed and taken by the Glandelinians and also Killmat after frightful carnage but the christians came back like a h thunderbolt and the foe were forced to flee after desperate fighting.

General Evans making a movement on the Lincoln plains was checked in his advance but no battle occured . Sinta , Anna and Jause fortifications fell before foe attacks but the foe could not retain them and were repulsed, which resulb resulted in a rout of the Glandelinian attackers, and with the capture of fort Wrigley. Henvensued the pouring of the christian troops upon the left section of the foe positions which resulted into a desperate storming attack which within fifteen minutes broke into full sway. It was repulsed with great loss. Desperate actions also ac occured for the possessions of forts Tantermegro, Pegasus, Polydectics, Pickford and Germaine ielding all christian fortifications. Here the enemy met the most frightful loss and won not even an inch of ground. The cause of these Glandelinian defeats was from unaccountable blunders. Appalling power was put into the Angelinian and Landelinian attacks and again made the region of Julo Callic an inferno of terror and destruction. Even to impede further chances of an Angelinian advance the Landelinian with their cannons tried to make a valley of death of the whole region for fourty eight hours with their broadsides of scores of thousands of cannons at once. To take the fortifications of Marcucianna resulted in a horrible storm of carnage and disaster but-it was a failure. Forts Liebermann, Thanhauser, Avezzeno, Montrose, Grace De Linia, Hedda Zimmermann, Thansour and Bender were attacked by foe forces but the attacks failed. The christian line at the south bend of the Norma River was also stormed by artillery fire and attacked by infantry ten times during the day but the attacks won the Glandelinians only repulse after repulse, and disaster upon disaster. The north Bend of the christian line was not touched.

The fortifications of Pirene, pe La Greece and Fountian Spray were cannonaded by ten thousand Glandelinian cannon and reduced considerably and then a wave of Landelinian troops twenty miles long made a desperate assault but was wiped out by christian infantry and cannon fire. This was something shocking, but the second Glandelinian column still more immense came on with a better caution but appeared as if they were the gray fiends of the uttermost depths of hell issueing from its very mouth through the smoke of battle and destruction. This attack was also crushed but not wiped out.

Another Glandelinian attack wasmade upon these two fortifications and the christian line but was dissilusioned. Again a new column rushed to the attack. Part was annihilated, and the remainder defeated entirely. The next assault resulted in the capture of the two fortifications, but the christians by fighting through and through every portion of the ra remparts in counter charging a either cut down the Glandelinians captured great numbers and routed the remainder and cut them down allhe way of the retreat. For Pottisgazeeza close by was not touched by the assault but some generals went through thrilling experiences whice on their return to the christian lines with some prisoners they had captured and who had been startled and almost stunned by the appalling roar of this bloody battle.

After these series of engagements, came more fires and big floods at the same time. Terrible devastation resulted from this and great lossein lives. Also all night long the sky was covered over and anon with frightful colors of peculiar flashing lights and sparklers from mysterious origin. Fort Mc-Hollester II. Was flooded and another fortification called Jennie Bandernine was crushed by the sudden flood wave and many drowned before they could seek safty. To try to break the christian line the enemy when attacks failed resore resorted to floods and fire. Yet even these failed to accomplishe anything for the foe and only tightened the seiges.

The fortifications of Costellio was wiped out by fire, and fort Jennie Glasce was destroyedand the whole stretch of the Norma Run River and other streams within the extensive region of seige and battles, and devastations of all sorts became one mass of seething wreckage and human beings. Fort Richee Jennings was threatened by the foe in the meanwhile but nothing occured. Fort Vanity Fair was attacked and blown up and then flooded. Fort Aronburg and Kauffmannia was also slightly effected by the flood and during the nextnight of the flood the sky was lighted up in a peculiar weird color.

Some generals had reported that evening that an immense tidal wave of water had partially devastated the fortifications of Richardson and Mildred Johnnie, but though a frightful roaring flood of water and death was seen in the vinicity it was found that the fortifications thus named had not been touched by the flood and that the reports was also false rumers. The flood had nevertheless a frightful fury west of the besieging christian lines and this caused a greater and more ernormous loss of life than the still raging conflargrations had and horror had been added upon horror.

It was again one of the terrible scourges of thecseige, ad as floods had occured of simal similar character. This flood had caused some wide spread destruction and made a regular sea of chaoes and caused mil mulitudes of soldiers who were brought to be killed drowned, maimed or driven crazy. That night the darkness on account of h thick smoke clouds from far distant conflargraions outside the flood zone was still more appalling and the strange mysterious lights still continued, and plainly revealed the wild destruction caused by the flood.

This flood was afterwards known as "GENERAL PURGATORIANS TERRIBLE REVENGE."

The whole co n country of Calverinia was reported to be affected by the force of the battles and cannonadings of this one frightful seige and was known as "The Glandelinian and Abbieannian war storm".

It was certainly a saddened and devastated Calverinian country. Abbieannians who had been within the christian fortifications of Lady Decie during the flood witnessed about only half a mile from them a terrible battle raging that night for the possession of the fortifications of Hon. Catherine which resulted in a bloody Glandelinian repulse. Angelinia simultaneously made a maddened insane effort to reduce six Glandelinian fortifications which had committed a considerable pepperty of the christian lines.

In the same night the Glandelinians stormed the christian fortifications of Hon. Catherine. De. La. Poer. erestfordt. It was a struggle near as severe as that on the Norma Run though not lasting all night. The battle first raged with the capture of the fortifications, than general Logan ivian came up with christian troops and drove the foe back. He was wounded howeVer and his force soon routed when the a enemy attacked anew. General Gannon then t hrew his forces upon the enemy and after a fiercer fight committed a great massacre of Glandelinian troops before he also gave way before the assaults. General Concenine Evans drove his own troops also u.. the enemy and had his own hot time of the battle, but now a series of frightful disasters had occured to the enemy, and all efforts to retake what they had lost was in vain, and an attempt to blow up a bridge in this location was frust rated by cavarly.

The battle nevertheless continued untill the Glandelinian force attacking here was crushed. The main Glandelinian general Manleyatte was killed and the other positions the enemy had forced were retaken by the christians with the capture of the Glandelinian general Livian ermania.. Six Angelinian officers during this bloody fray had went out scouting but got into an encounter with a horde of Glandelinians under general Manly and in the fray he was killed besides three quarters of his command and fourty other generals and fourteen were wounded.

This resulted in the capture of and destrucion of the Glandelinian fortifications which from hundreds of fortifications within fortifications was known as "The Fortification of Cucumber Hundreds." Then still the battle foe a time continued untill a force of christians bridged above the enemys lines and caused a frightful disaster. Then the survivors fled and abandoned the attack along this quarter for good.

At some later time that night the enemy made the most desperate attempts ever seen ot obtain possession of the christian fortifications on the right known as the Bristletoe and Henrietta sailents. This point was more strongly guarded, and at this critical time general Manson had been around inspecting and when the christians had been thrown into confusion by the violence of the attack, and while he had been doing his utmost to rally them he recieved a severe wounde wound. Heneverthelees to prevent further disorder remained in the field of battle untill compelled to go to get his would dressed. This struggle resulted in the destruction of general Fuller concentinis Ambroses Glandelinian division and here it seemed that the Glandelinian power of attack was now broken for a long peroid for no attacks after his disaster happened again in this location. Ballards fortification was blown up by the enemy during this battle and the fortification of Ave Maria-flanked the foe with a cannon fire that destroyed all before it. This wasoto the Glandelinian side at Julo Callio one of the most frightful disasters of the seige and war. The Glandelinian army under Darger who also attacked was destroyed, and twenty great explosions occured just when t he foe had obtained possession of some fortified works and destroyed fearful numbers of Glandelinian soldiors. Earthquakes were caused by these explosions. This gave the Glandelinians warning that it was dangerous to attack the christian lines. Simultaneously however at another point the christian fortification of Santa Glauss Anna Marie was attacked under fire and it was a great battle also though only of three hours duration. Fort Liss ,its Lisson Pirrian twenty hundred yards from it was also attacked this being a mad conflict but the foe armies were dissilusioned, the remainder cut up and thrown into confusion and totally routed. General Muebaum Manleyate Francis xseeing the almost annihilation of his army was compelled to flee but was shot to death by Angelinians who laid in wait for him in ambush. fort Februarious was set on fire by the christians by means of fire bombs and a grw greater disaster was caused to the enemy by fi forest fires of their own making which they intended for the christians and it was seen that all attempts to break the christian seige was unavailing.

At the same time general Mansions center where fort Marygold was situated was shelled but during a fierce and bloody series of attacks made by the christians the Glandelinian positions were temporarly captured and this resulted in the taking of six scores of Glandelinian generals and officers of all ranks and the capture of a whole army which the Angelinians in their magnificent retreat brought back to their lines.

Jacken Manleytter Johnstonia a Glandelinian general seeing what h was left of his sadly depleted army flee fled to Julo Callio and appealed to pPurgatorian for aid. The seige was now more se general and more furious and frightful was the ferocity of other battles as the christians themselves attacked. Mansion on one occasion had one quarter of his army in action at the battle of''The Assumption of the blessed Virgin Mary''. Every assault he made was repulsed, but then to make it even every bloody counter attack of the enemy was repulsed with frightful loss and with the capture or destruction of many Glandelinian officers every time. Manson destroyed general Laymans right grand division when he made an attack that carried all before it and Evans helping him in making a charge that was the most famious and destructive of the battle caused the capture for good of this section of the enemys position, and badly jeopardized the whole Glandelinian position.

This was the first greatest outcome of the seige thanks to the Blessed Mother Of God who helped the christians win this battle by the name of her Assumption and which was really the first bloodiest of theseige and raged for three days. It had been a terrible battle and in order to avoid the disgrace caused by the defeat twenty Glandelinian generals committed sucide and others attempted sucide but were stopped by their own officers at the risk of any penalty. During this battle general Marsh Schloeder made a great raid and captured fort Gertrude Angeline. Then came the fall of fort Paraphrase, Sienna Orelei and of J Yukaloo and of Gertrude Offmm also enemy fortifications. Then two other fortifications of Tarantelle Sicilienne, and La Bohome resulted this titanic struggle.. This was the best results that could be obtained and which brought the seige a mile and a half nearer to Julo Callio and Norma Catherine, and placed the besieged Glandelinian army in a ticklish situation. Shere was now a lull in operations and preparations were made to relieve the suffering wounded, and the terrir terror stricken fugitives and others rescued from the foe. It was apparently sure that Glandelinia was being justly punished.

This great seige so unaccountable,, covering in large extent great sections of the countries around Julo Callio with a heavy storm of devastation, and doing tremendous damage a to cities and towns around from shocks, concussions and noise of many explosions, and to orchards, crops, and whole farms, and to the opposing sides , as well as to Julo Callio, Norma Catherin,e and Jennie urmer, and Madge Evans, are declared by eye witnesses in Galverinia, war correspondents, and reporters as to be the longest and most sanguinary seige ever seen in any war yet.

Even early in the month of April immediately following brilliaj auroral displays of searchlights on both sides, two mines close to Norma Catherine and numerous other mines that night in widely seperated parts of the besieged regions exploded like volcanoes bursting into violent eruption.

From th ese explosions which had been extremely deafening and which had destructive force there suddenly came belching forth vastquantities of smoke clouds, earth, dust and debris to great heights. The millions of tons of dust, debris and wreckage and earth from these fifteen hundred mine explosions quickly sau saturated the upper atmosphere of the Galverinian country and formed a screen which prevented the full warmpth of the suns rays reaching the country of Galverinia and which was exactly as if a gigantic sunshade had been spread over the sky. Just as persons are cooler on a hot hn day when they raise parasols to protect themselves from the hot rays of the sun so was the whole Galverinian country made many degrees cooler by the interposition of this screen of blasted dust between it and the sun and which caused Galverinia to have an unseasonable cold April when April usually is a warm month.

The explosions caused blizzards of dust and debris to be spread to a great extending territory, and it extended so high that for ten days itvshut off so much of the suns warmpth that the temperature quickly stayed to the below freezing weather, this low temperature transforming what would have been warm spring april showers and rains into fearful blizzards of hail and snow that caused wide spread damage allthroughout Galverinia. It was the first April of that sort ever witnessed in Galverinia for twenty five years.

If so many great explosions continue as now seems likely and the dust screen between the Galverinian lands and the sun keeps growing thicker and thicker, it is probable that the Galverinians will be looking forward to more unseasonably cool weather all summer long and to a winter of unusual severity.. A tremendous explosion which destroyed the fortification of Krebus at the southern outskirts of Norma Catherine killed by the shock alone all vegetation which could develop and ripen throughout the whole region, shook half of the opposing armies off their feet, ruined houses and towns seventeen miles away and razed every window in the houses of Julo Callio and Norma Catherine, and shatt ered a whole fors forest of trees and killed all the fishes in the river in that vinicity. The blast killed two hundred and fifty thousand Glandelinians and the dust that was thrown up hid the sun around Julo Callio for three full hours as a h thunderoloud.

This explosion heard plainly a hundred miles threw up countless tons of fine dust and snow and earth high in the atmosphere and over Julo Callio interposed between the sun and the Glandelinian army as a hufe cloudy umbrella. The dust and flying debris thrown up by this explosion as well as the sudden flame produced by the blast was known to have risen as high as two miles. The grains were so minute in most of the dust t hat gravitation had very little effect upon them and theybrequired a long while to fall back to the earthe suefaces. In the meantime all the dust not fallen are taken by the strong Galverinian winds and strewn throughout the whole upper atmosphere untill no part of it rema remains unaffected.

On the fourteen of April Julo Callio was the scene of one of the greatest explosions on record. Fort Kattemaii a fortification upon fortification, with ramparts within ramparts, 77,500, feet long was set on fire by christian shell fire. It had all around it, as well as near it many ammunition dumps. The whole buisness exploded. The noise itshookdeesse it made was heard in the city of Angeline(Angelinia) 1,750, miles away and across the Galverinian mountians at Francix Atlanta 2,650 miles distant. It drove instantly many hundreds of thousands of Glandelinians fairly blind from the din, killed scores of thousands others from shell shock though ften miles away from the expl o explosion, and killed six hundred and fifty thousand Angelinian troops on the christian right though thirty miles north of the great eruption. Intense darkness caused by the smoke and lasting for three hours black as midnight in the daytime prevaled over a vast area, lasting for one hour at the Galverinian town of Kodiakk IDO, miles away. Sixteen generals had their headquarters within the christian lines razed by the concussion, houses north of Julo Callio were leveled to the ground and sixty thousand houses in Norma Catherine were blown in th by the blast. Wij d Windows in every town or city in the whole country of Galverinia report ed broken windows, and of jumping furniture, and everything in the steets. In the town or city of Galverins a great glass storm was reported from broken glass falling from window of thousands of tall buildings.

The sulphurious fumes from the exploded powder and other explosive materials were distinguishable in Gertrude Angeline(Abyssinkile, 6,500 miles from the scene of the explosion. dust and debris, and fragments of human bodies, and blasted wreckage fell at the city of Angeline)Angelinia, and in the vivian valley fifteen miles from vivian Wickey and in julo gallio every steetreet was covered with broken human beings, fragments of wreckage from the fortifications and desposited nearest the scene with four and a half feet of dirt and debris of all sorts. Roofs of a hundred thousand houses in Norma Catherine were razed. All Vegetation was annihilated by the cloudburst of debris and by the concussion, and bears, rabbits, Caribou and other animals went blind from the shock. IO,000 christians were shocked to death by the explosion, and IOO,000 others were also shocked but survived as derelicts and helpless cripples. All fishes in the Norma Catherine and Norma Run river were found dead in that vinicity, and the explosion had a strong enough concussion to cause the deaths of fishes in the very Mc-Hollester Run River two hundred miles away. This brought for more than three days more than a wekk of usua ususual disasters to the foe side. Following this great explosion there were tw weeks of red sun sets all over Calverinia due to the dust cloud that enveloped the entire atmosphere which was also noticed in Angelinia and Abyssinkile.. This most immense fortification within fortifications was literally blown to pieces and it killed the entire garrison and built up in a single moment a pile of blazing wreckage two miles in circumference and twenty feet high at its highest part. It was evident that the explosion was plainly audible at the distance of over two thousand miles. Thus is the reason that April was known as the month without a spring. This long continued cold it was known was due to this great explosion which killed so many lives and injured fifty thousand others. For three days sunlight was excluded enough to fail to shine at all and it was estimated that enough debris and dust was thrown up to cover h the whole two besieged cities and probably the whole State of T exas to a depth of one eight of an inch in a moment. uring the April month every storm that came was snowstorms. And for some reason the heaviest part of the dust cloud hovered over Calverinia. This was probably the greatest explosion catastrophe of the seige and for a month the atmosphere wasfogy with its dust. General Mansion wrote to general vivian who was at his advance on Phelantonburg at the time;

''Your excellency general Vivian;
''Since that great explosion there was a fog all over the region of Julo Callio. It was of a permenant nature, and dry and had sulphurious fun fumes. Rays of the sn passing through it were so faint for two weeks than when collected in a warmed room in the focus of a burning glass, they would scarcely kindle paper.The suns rays could not get through the dust to the earth or all events suffered so much interfere that the heat supply furnished by the orb was largely shut off. No wonder that the month of April was severe.''

Your servant general.
Mansion.88''

It seems incredible that such a magnificent explosion c u could be the means of inflicting unseasonable cold weather and blizzard storms in Calverinia during the month of April when spring should bein full blast but such was actually the case. This single explosion did emit a dust cloud thick enough to make a whole continent shiver, but when one explosion happens others are apt to happen simultaneously.

''Indeed the very thi g thing.''Exclaimed general vivian to his brother general Hanson Angelic vivian bounding ipto the air like a ju,ping jack and up setting his inkwell in his excitement.'''he very next idea for us of if we wish to prevent the ene y from capturing the city of Phecantonburg and frustrating our plans.''
''hose plans--do you mean?''
''ours.''aid Hanson vivian to his brother.At this moment a little round faced Angelinian boyscout struck his head inthe doo way of general Hansons room and regarded the two christian generals in chief very solemly indeed. As a boyscout he was working his way through the boyscouts course and one of his earliest duties was to wait upon any of the christian generals he had been commanded to.
''e did not call you son.''aid general ivian in a dignified tone. ''Stop gaping and fetch my had. I'm off to my own lines. nd mind yur boyscouts take their drilling lessons regularly while I&m gone to my duty.''He added as clapping his tall purple hat the laddpeld out to him on his head.
''yes sir I will.''aid the littleboyscout very respectively respectufully.''e'll hurry ba bac back sir on my account.''
This last remark the general did not hear for he was already half way down the steps and ord ordering his o horse to be brought to him. General Robert Vivian whose headquarters was two miles south of Phelantonburg where he and his brother had halted their mighty christian armies was in the southwestern se tion of the countrynear Grahams lanes and he was making himself one of the greatest generals in Angelinia or in any place else for that matter. He had made many attempts to grsus frustrate deeper desperate attempts of the landelinians and so great were the generals who followed under them that it seemed as if they had swallowed knowledgeof every kind with ease and pleasure and then spent the restof their tim in moving various divisions against the enemy making great advance, campaigns ad and outwitting the enemy in all the games.. No wonder he and general Hanson Vivian were so well thought of in Anhrlinia and Calverinia. And yet it was a wonder they did not think well of themselves and the fact that they had no pride in them was a mystery!'I
''I hope my other generals wi'll be delighted with my d idea. clever though I may be.''He murmured to himself twirling his mustachoe and walking rapidly down the pleasant white lane to where the orderly and the horse was waiting for him.....

Every telegraph and witrless station broadcasted the alarming news and the more than fifty thrillion inhabatants in every city and town in the nation were totally plunged into a state of fear and excitement all dreading an impending doom they could but imagine and fro from which there was no hope of escape.
Never before had any of the many Abbiesannian cities and towns been in such a state of excitement and suspense.The word passed along by the wireless and telegraph quickly spread throughout the states of Calverinia and Abbiesannia in general.In every city throughout the nation in general police and fi fire stations and recruiting officers and even the weather men were besought incessantly by telephone for news and advice.And to make matters worse there was startling news of big frightful battles g having raged in many places and big forest fires, and one big city called Angelinia Agathias burning down to the ground rendering millions homeless and this with the result of the several great explosions and other fearful disasters just having occured lent support to the warning of the other impending disasterous earthquake making explosions.
The dire news spread rapidly throughout the Angelinia state also and created the greatest alarm, particua particularly in the southern and northern sections.
The situation throughout all the cities and towns probably never had existed before.The average citizen of each place and soldiers of all armies, and big mobolization camps vaguely appreciative of the unusually tremendous fury of the war and possessio possessing a fresh recollection of the recent explosion horrors and of the great battles and fires raging elsewhere were prepared to be scared to death when the information was passed out that at some other place raiding rebel troops may cause another big explosion or some other disaster of exceeding great violence.Certainly never before in Abbiesannias history had all the official public safty organizations in every city or town or rural district been assigned definately to the duty of awaiting the arival of a pree predicted disaster caused by Glandelinians or to be on the lookout to prevent it if possible.
That afternoon at two oclock the chief of police of every city dictated the following message across wireless and other police instruments which linked headquarters with every station;

''TO ALL COMMANDING OFFICERS;
I have been advised by higher Tribunals that the enemy is tr threatening to raise cain by causing another big explosion somewhere, and that forest fires of awful unaccountable magnitude are sweeping northward, one big city called Anfgelinia Agathias is burning, and that battles and great disasters are occuring everywhere. Notify each and every member of your command on this condition and keep them on the alert to prevent it if possible, and render all assistance possible if it should occur with force enough to damage city or any amount of cities and towns by air waves and concussions.Also direct all members of your command to make detailed reports to you at once of all incidents that happen and to arrest any suspicious characters seen in city or surburbs and to question and examine all strangers entering or leaving city and town.''

And coincidently with the flashing of this remarkable order from every police chiefs officer inball the cities throughout the nation this message of similar perport was put on all private telephone systems which connected the office of every fire chief ib the in the city and other cities and with every fire station and the like;;;

''You will be obligated to notify all men off duty to hold themselves in readiness for this emergency.They shall also d consider this main notification a most final warning and if the disaster should occur every one shall be obliged to report to their respective stations at once.''

Every telegraph station were busy for hours.All the excited announcements do continually vieded with one another to get a scoop on to the coming disasters. Also in the meantime the orders of every chief of police and the chiefs of fire-departments had been obeyed.In every police district , in every city, police men had made and were still making door to door canvasses.Each police man or fire man called at three hundred or more houses.And to those who responded to his ring or knock he uttered the simple admi admont admonition;
''Beware the air and ground vibrations of some big explosions.''

Qs the hours passed on during that time the fears within the cities and tow towns became intense.The chief of pol ice and all his aids went almost crazy from the quanity and q quaility of the telephone and telegtaph calls so incessantly recieved.

''At exactly what time will the enemy set off the big explosion, and where?''

''Will all our city be swept away and all of us killed?''

''Oh Where are the safest places for us to go?''

Thousands of such questions were incessantly squealed, howled, bellowed, chattered, and gasped across the phojer and written through the telegraph telegraph instrument In all thesefrqntic petitioners the chief n of police and a l his aids offered all kinds of advice and assurances.Yet the chief of polics were tearing their a hair tward midnight.The whole nation was muttering anathemn upon the heads of those Glandelinians and vandals responsible for the recent explosion disasters.Then came the following bulletin;

''No forcast of a powerful explosion nor its most devastating effects that could possibly be constructed as indicating earthquake concussions and air vibrations has been ever issued by the police, or fire departments, and all these special warnings have been circulated and distributed by the Abbiesnnian Government.such alarming conditions have been indicated for all out lying districts because of the recent disasters.The earlier announcements to this effect originates in some misunderstandings.All we can do is to warn you to he prepared and do our own part in preventing such disaster is possible.''

The worse prognostication brought out thatthe following official communication had been dispatchse from Angelinia Agathia;

''Beware of explosions causing shocks ammounting to severe earthquake shocks may at any time during the war be expected near all cities and vid nity.''

Among these was the strange contrast of other disasters reported from the north and from the south of Calverinia and also from the west that occured some time before.Terrific battles raged in middle southern Calverinia, while all the disturbances and disorders of the war were prevalent in northern Angelinia state and around vivian ¿ickey.

Emperor Vivian himself said more than once after a scrunty of the National Map that the war conditions represented on the map was the most remarkable in all his experience and of the existance of the nation.Officials of the agricultural surveyatations said that the violent devastation of the war had damaged crops to the extent of scores of millions of dollars.Also following another seige of Jennis ¿urmer or ¿urmer city an explosion of terrible intensity occured in the evening two weeks before the one at Big ¿irknook.In the space of a second trees throughout and inside the city were uprooted by the concussion, roofs innumerable crashed in, glass windows were smashed and thousands of persons injured.Many cities and towns had been also rocked by this tremendous explosion and the help being rushed to the stricken area was being held back by big fires, horrible floods, battle and war crazed regions and the fury and danger of the ¿landelinian armies.

The towns were almost completely razed to the ground, thousands of underground mines were shaken and the miners trapped and all cum communication was completely cut off by both the disaster, flood and the enemy.

Five thousand were known to have been killed and the property damage was estimated at three hundred and thiry five million dollars.All relief organizations could not reach the scene on account of hinderance of flood, fire, and the enemy, the now wide spread damage having been wrought by one of the concuswions of the most severe single explosion ever felt in this territory.The tremors of the blast even outrivaling in local intensity the disasterous concussions following the Cedernine and Big Girl Knool explosions disasters.special trains carrying physcians, nurses and supplies which had been rushed to the devastated districts were forbidden by for armiesoto go through.

It was estimated that the number of injured numbered eleven thousand in one plac alone.Two thousand were killed, and a hundred thousand had been made h omeless by the shock and the flod flood and fires that resulted.The concussion was said to have centered at Jennis ¿urmer fifty miles from Madge Evans city.All lines of communications into the stricken districts were still down.Trains by the score were even wrecked and in thr absab absense of reports from one relief train it was feared it had been captured by the rebels.The city of Kennon which boast of a population of one million was reported in half ruins while near by towns were completely destroyed.New forest fires were even started and no aidof any kind could reach the stricken district.

There fortunately was no damage at the higher parts of the city but nervi usness caused by the recent Aronburgs gun explosions disasters terrified the inhabatants of this city whose leveled norty north section had not been rebuilded yet.Yet the startling news from the scenes of this expl osion and its concussion and the tidal wave that swept fourty miles inland at many places continued fragmentary the day after as communications were being only partly restored.

The first dis dispatched news stated that the death list at De Cotic was not less than five thousand.Another large town built at the foot of a high cliff was completely buried by the collaspe of the hill side by the concussion, with one thousand five hundred persons dead of suffocation under the debris.Allertown a bayside village was wiped out by the tidal wave and some of its wreckage found thirty miles from shere she had stood.Relief stations still failed to reach the districts because of the interferring ¿landelinians.A few hundred were injured at Aronburgs ville and Annie Aronburg due to a fierce panic.Annis Aronburg on high ground and ten miles away from the sea reported that the tidal wave caused the flood waters to rise thirty feet in her lowest streets.The shock and exposure took a heavy toll of lives for more than a hundred miles.In Anna Aronburg ,a many buildings were considerably damaged and some smaller buildings even fell.The center of the shock seemed a s also to be near this city where many structures not injured by the big Aronburgs Run explosion were destroyed.No reports as yet had been recieved from rural parts and on account of the tidal wave there was a flood of great proportion which failed to have followed the recession of the mighty surge.However it was hoped that the worse danger was now over in these places where fire and flood did not follow the shock.Yet the cities were still in the wildest confusion, every person being in the streets, and afraid to go back into the buildings.

The greatest damage of all was done at ¿urmer city where a big fire is raging, the city being doomed and the besieged who escaped the foe on account of the outside floods demolishing their campswith the population fleeing to Aronburgs guns.The large villiage of ¿odland was wiped out by fire the shock wrecking the railway station the town being a sea of fire.

A large number of trains due to the districts bearing relief were still missing, and the fears that they were seized by the enemy was now fully confirmed.One train was wrecked and another overturned.A great cloud of smoke rolled up from the burning places which appeared to be big cinlerpiles after the shock and fire swept them.

The small city of Javana was completely swept away by fire which breaking out in twelve districts had enveloped the city by night and was still burning burning.At the concussion of the explosion thousands of houses had caved in.All the refugees terrified were still rushing out for other zones where they hoped for safty but they faced danger from the enemy everywhere andfrom raging floods and fires.And it can be believed that the casualties were heavy for throughout a hundred square miles an area near Gertrude Angeline city virtually all the towns and villages were level with the earth snapped away by the air vibrations, explosion shock and the floods and fires.

Air stirring reports trickling into Angelinia Agathia from the devasta ed arens gave eye witness accounts of the scenes of unspeakable horror that followed the explosion concussion fire and tidal wave.The unusual disturn disturbance had reached the full measure of its intensity with all the suddenness that was alarming and which gave residences of the stricken places no chance for escape into the open streets.Large numbers of people were reported to have been killed by falling materials from the sky hurled nearly a thousand feet by the force of the explosions.In the ruined towns and cities the water mains were buckled by the concussions and even severed and fire fighters were unable to halt the flames.The worse suffering and casualties were caug caused by the great fires which broke out after the concussion.Many agreed that the scene of horror similar to those witnessed during the Aronburgs gun explosion horror were enacted here double.The residents panic stricken tried to escape into the open but many were pinned down by the falling debris, and hundreds died in the flames which just as quickly followed the violent concussion the houses of some of the ruined towns burning swiftly like tinder.Even to the last official relief agencies failed to reach the devastated areas on account of the hinderance of the enemy.More than three quarters of the town of Jenkben of one million people was also in ruins as a result of the fire that came in the wake of the concussion and the number of houses destroyed will exceed hundreds of thousands.About 16,398persons were killed and 20,682 injured. 22,948 houses were destroyed. Hundreds of thousands were rendered homel homeless.

More than five hundred towns and cities and villiages felt the concussion with slight damage however.The concussion caused a tidal wave to strike along the shore of Abbiesann bay for the extent of fifty miles or more causing heavy damage to a number of towns.But here no loss of life was reported, though hundreds of thousands were rendered homeless.The to tidal wave rolled in someplaces more than a mile and a half inshore carrying wreckage and shipping of all description with it.

At Abbiesannia creek the outgoing tidal wave mucked the entire creek dry and carried with it a fleet of boats belonging to fishermen.No estimate could be given as to the property loss in this section.The wave followed the concussion of the explosion instantly.The force of the wave was shown in the swooping away of large towns near the shore, and extensive damage along a good part of the shore.

Other strange incidents of the war was as follows;;Between the tire of these disasters, and flood, and fire horror in northern Angelinia state and the perfect wave of horror further south or north a battle of unusual intensity was raging at some unknown place probably Cedernine k just now accompanied by great tragedies scattered conflicts elsewhere and terror beyond comprehension.The situation as a whole was quite abnormal for any war and remarkably in favor of the enemy.

A severe skirmish also occured at Faults Store where and suddenly reached the full proportions of an extremely violent battle.The shell fire of both sides uprooted countless large trees, tore a veranda off the christian generals headquarters and ripped the roofs off many buildings and shattered their walls.

Conflicts elsehwere also caused damage mounting to scores of millions of dollars in northeastern An Angelini a State, Centralcalverinia and southwestern calverinia.sixty thousand persons were injured in northeastern Angelinia, and Central Calverinia and the property loss was estimated at from thirty to sixty million dollars.For nearly a thousand miles all the wires of telegraph and telephonespoles and companies were down, and many points were cut off.

Throughout the country more than one hundred thousand big fires were raging.

From the recent explosion near the bay the town of De Coty reported that a little after the explosion a fourty seven foot tidal wave swept in from the bay and there had been a concussion of great intensity.The villiage of Alubensia was greatly damaged and following the tidal wave there was a thirteen foot influtuation in the level of the bay the greatest in the memory of any person living there even in the oldest age, and without precedent.

The greatest change was probably at gloria town, where the water rose more than sixty feet and fell seventy e feet leaving a part of the largest or leaving a part of the largest andsmallest ships on the bottom or in loading slips.

At New Allania the variation of the water was sixty feet and at high tide towns which had never been touched by the waves of the worse storms were swv swept to places and carried out.

The current in the Lake Angeline River was suddenly reversed at the moment of the great explosion when without apparent cause the water raced upstream at the highest ve velo velocity.The local river gauge showed the water to be still flust uating the morning after the explosion, with the water front line, two thousand three hundred and sixty yards beyond its previous low mark.

This movement of the bay struck a sw series of most devastating blows at all points or of the bay's shorw line causing property damage that was too heavy to ever be estimated in a hundred years work at figuring, and resulting in the most frightful loss of life.

The tidq tidal wave here two hundred and twenty feet high swept virtually the whole shore of the bay north and sh south from the mouth of the Corn river at Angeline Junction city to Gertrude Angeline raising the water about sixty feet above normal of the greatest high tides.The main fury of this irrestible wave seemed to be centered near Gertrude Angeline city where between the lowest and highest level of the water there was a di fference of eighteen feetThe same variation was reported from Angeline junction, a d Marcusian and other places.Severe earth tremors accompanying the explosion were said to have caused havoc at Stanck city.The cities of Angeline junction and Gertrude Angeline alone reported scores of millions of damage done by flood though the high points of the city were not reached.Here at these cities also most serious damage to sh all kinds of shipping and bay front property was reported from flower dale flowerdale, charlottesville, north of Angelinia Aronburg, Aronburg, lainsville, and Weldon icknell, Gertrude Angeline and many other places along the shore.OReports from Gertrude Angeline city coincided with the other cities in setting the time of this record breaking disturbance as between six and seven oclock in the morning.

At Gertrude Angeline city residences for miles and miles along the beach front were demolished or swept as away and the fluctuations along the shore lasted over a pr period of thirteen hours.The whole of the cities of Gertrude Angeline and Suburbs were momentarily terrorized by the concussion and immense tidal wave caused by the explosion, the majority of the people tumbling out of their beds and rushing out into the streets in a most terrifying panic.

In addition to the horrors occasioned by the concussion of the distant explosion and the sudden i r inroads of the seas, the remainder of the mighty city was exposed to the ravages of a fierce and raging fire.A few hours after the flood had receded the part of the city not touched by the waves appeared in a series of big blazes which at the approach of night time became so terribly bright that a person could read by it at the distance of more than three miles from the conflagrations.It was soon on fire in many places at once probably a thousand places at once, and after the disaster the fires continued burning for days without intermission, despite the most desperate attempts ever made by human beings to stop its furious progress.

Despite all the efforts of many fire departments that survived and from cities and towns that did not suffer the effects of the catastrolphe the fires continued steadily to consume everything the shock and the tidal wave had spared, and yet the people though dejected and terrified had courage enough to venture down to save what ever they could of their belonglngs, yet every one had their eyes tward the flames and wtood looking on with silent grief which was only interrupted by the cries of women and children calling on the saints and angels for succor when ever the conflagration beca began to come tward them.The cause of the fire was brought on by kitchen stoves that had set fire to wreckage.Throughout the city a scene of great horror could meet a persons eyes. From one street after another in the parts only leveled by the sudden shock the scenes of horror exceeded all descriptions, nothing could be heard but sighs groans and cuteries.You could not meet with a single one in the streets who did not bewail the death of his nearest relative and dearest friend, or the loss of all the property he had, and no one could take a single step without treading on the dead and dying, in many places lay coaches and many kinds of wagons, with their owners, horses and riders almost crushed in pieces, here thousands of mothers with children of all ages in their arms, ladies richly dressed, priests friars, and the like either in the same condition or just beginning to expire, and many were seen buried in the windrows of rubbish and crying out in vain for succor but were left to perish with the rest.

At the sea front and on the beadhes were seen vast windrows of wreckage pulled back from the city by the receding tidal wave.

The shore for a considerable distance along the coast was rent by the fierce tidal wave, and all the ground along all parts of the sea port which had been quite level was now inclined tward the sea, the dept of the water having at the same time increased through the displacements of portions of the bottom.The quay was entirely gone and the fragments of them could be seen in the wreckage higher up in the ruined city.

But it was in the city itself that the most terrible desolation of the whole explosion concussion was wrought, a most complication of disasters having followed the shock, fire and tidal wave whose terribly intensity was augumented by the large stores of oil kept in good parts of the city which was the size and population of New York. The whole nation was touched by the deepest sorrow and anger at the harrowing spectacles of so many of her splendid cities and her beautiful country side instantaneously changed by such terrible and unexampled events of the war into devastation and heaps of ruins.The concussion of the earth caused by the explosion had overthrown from top to bottom every building whatever.

Great pawn repositories hundreds of them, and large hospitals, c cathedrals and big monasteries and other buildings, nothing had ever escaped destruction.

Hundreds of religious persons could have been observed working their way over the wreckage in dismay, to seek if possible some place of refuge and safty from the flames with the small number of persons escaped like themselves almost by a miracle from this worst overthrown overthrow of any wars great explosion.

The sight was the most fearful since the war started, but there was one yet more terrible, that of the largest c proportions of the citizens dead anddying buried beneath the ruins of their do dwellings without it being possible from want of soldiers and laborers to withdrawn from beneath the rubbis those still bleeding.

Insults of fearful shrieks, cries, groans and sighs all the ass ascents of the wildest grief were heard everywhere, whilevit was impossible to redeem from death those wretched victims rendered still more harrowing the voice of desis despair that appealed so frantically and yet so in vain for help and compassion.

The big scourage of fire had been added to all these awful calamities and even terribly augmented their unspeakable horror. The fires having been lighted in the kitches before the disaster occured had kindled various combustible substances found among the remains of the ruined houses not touched by the sea. many columns of troops hurried to the scene but the enemy came up with an army and driving off these troops prevented aid and it was impossible not only to extinguish the fire but to even stop the progress of the flames, and the fury of scores of thousands of ferocious Carolinian vandals who com itted all kinds of atrocities with the injured.

CHAPTER EIGHTY NINE...

THE TERRIBLE EFFECTS OF THE EXPLOSIONS CONCUSSION AT THE CITY OF ALLENDARIO. THE UNUSUAL AND MOST FRIGHTFUL LOSS OF LIFE EVER CAUSED BY THE CONCUSSION OF EXPLOSIONS. A COMPLICATION OF HORRORS, ADDED TO COMPLICATIONS OF HORRORS. A GRAPHIC DESCRIPTION OF THE MOST AWFUL CALAMITY OF THE WAR SO FAR. MORE RECENT EXPLOSIONS AND THE CONVUS CONVULSIONS CAUSED BY THEM. SINGULAR CONFUSION CAUSED BY THE VIBRATIONS OF THE GRO N GROUND. THOUSANDS OF HUMAN BEINGS HURLED VIOLENTLY THROUGH SPACE. A FULL COUNTRY SIDE SUNK BY THE CONVULSION OF THE EXPLOSION. OTHER INCIDENTS ABOUT EXPLOSIONS AND THEIR EFFECTS. WHAT WILL BE THE WAR LATER ON.....

THE effects of the concussion at the city of Allendario make have taken the lead of any place ever reaed by the concussion of an explosion yet. The evening had approached with a dark stormy sky but in the morning it was serene and most beautiful.

About seven oclock in the morning clouds of immense size was seen rising in the sky along the far horizon and a crash was heard that could probably have resembled the sudden firing of all the biggest canons made in the world at one time. At the moment of this shock and before its most violent concussions the foundations of many large buildings, great churches andeverything gave way being leveled completely to the ground. All of the larger buildings, palaces, churches convents, public offices and houses innumerable were thrown down by the shock. It was terrible and most uncomprehensible to think that all this occured within a space of less than one second.

At the time the shock was felt in the city many persons were taking rides in boats on the Aronburgs gun river about two miles distant from the city itself.

They were astonished at hearing the distant crash and also of their boats making a strange and peculiar noise as if they were instantly running aground, for they knew they were in deep water. In thesame moment they observed in the distance that all the best buildings within their view were tumbling down. At this same moment a most strange commotion was observed in the water of the big river. It appeared that the bottom of the river was being agaited as if a pan of water being shaken and the many vessels lying in the mouth of the river were torn from their anchors and suddenly dashed against each other with the most greatest violence, so vehement as to cause the very smoke stacks to fall and in others the sailors and passengers could not even tell whether their vessels were afloat yet or had gone aground.

About only one moment after the shock had ceased the waters of the big Angeline Bay rushed suddenly and with the most incredible velocity and force into the river and over the land like a mountian of water. The water of this arm of the Calverinian seas had been ebbing for a long time, and a strong gale of wind had been blowing from the east but nevertheless the sea at the mouth of the big Aronburgs Run rose instanteancously above the high water mark for more than seventy feet. It was the same tidal wave that had rushed over the land for more than twenty miles from the beach. It almost instantly laid more than half of this big city completely under a roaring fury of waves and water torrents that was so irrestible that the strongest houses collasped before it and the work of destruction was completed beyond believing, and all the fact that the ormormous volume of water spread so far over the land for hundreds of miles along the sea front did not extemt the unfortunate city from the effects of such an awful inundation. The sea even swiftly entered the streets of the highest parts of the city, and a series of large stone quays and other big piers along the water fronts had been detatched from tyeir foundations by the well of waters and suddenly hurled bottom upwards and whirled and crashed onward through and into the streets of the city being carried far into the interoir interior. As quickly as the terrible seas of rushing waters had swept through the city and over the lands for so many miles so quickly did it retreat to the sea carrying back with it avalanches of wreckage miles long and perfect jams of trees thicker than the mighti st log jam. The high wave however was known to have returned thirteen times before the waters of the bay came back to its normal level but every time fortunately with a much diminished force and less volume of water.

It could be stated that by the effects of such an awful inundation alone not less than two hundred and sixty thousand persons perished and only because of the tidal wave. The larger number yet killed by the ruines of their houses were crushed under the debris.

To all these simultaneous disasters had to be added a countless thousand others beyond description and most horrible to describe. All the mills had been overthrown even grain elevators and the like and bread the most needful of ailments failed. and the aurthorities had to remedy the evil of the Glandelinian armies by sending by various railroad immense armies to drive the foe out under any co conditions whatever. All the water courses had been turned aside, the public fountians were drained and there were no mills any more with which to grind corn. This aggrav ation of so many disasters added by the cruelty of the enemy armies had reduced almost to des despair the few remaining inhabatants who demanded with loud cries bre bread for their subsatances. ome bemoan their goods, others their parents.

In spite of the most tremendous zeal and activity of many soldiers who could drive there in restraining Glandelinian vandals and other Glandelinian robbers, there were yet to be found thousands of wretches without either an humanity in them or even religion of mercy, who to add to all the horror displayed before their eyes had con ttimes to pil lage not only all the private houses not shattered into ruins but also all the p public edifices and even the ruined pawn repositories. It seemed that so many places being in possession of the enemy that nothing could be done to redess such awful manifold misfortu misfortunes so rapid in their succession. Many dispatches were sent to the emperor of Abbisannia beseeching him to transmit if possible the biggest armies he could rapidly muster and provisions andmoney and even soldiers Norman and Glandelinian prisoners to clear the roads and streets and high ways covered by the ruins and corpses. lso he was beseeched to send to the stricken regions prov isions of all sorts for the feeding of the surviving inhabatants despser dispersed in the plains, and who dista distitute of food had been obliged to take flight from the burjing towns and cities.

According to high official reports made soon as possible after the destruction caused by the concussion of the explosion throughout this whole region was immeasura bly immense. The loss of life was appalling hav fourty million having been rendered homeless and twenty more million facing death from privation and exposure. The unestimated number of deaths were of those buried amid the ruins of so many houses of the towns and cities while others perished in the fires that wer e kindled in most of the cities and towns par ca particularly in Abbisannia City where the flames were fed by great magazines of oils and bursted oil and other tanks. ot a few espec ially among the country folks were suddenly buried under falling debris hurled all about and upon the country side by the force of the explosion itself and so great was the for e of the shock of the explosion that at about two miles from the blast the ground wasxso full of fu fissures that it had the appearance of having been shivered like glass. And many who had been only half buried in the ruins and who might have been saved had there been help at hand and no hinderance from such a heart less enemy were left to die a lingering death from heat, exposure thirst and hunger. Many religious persons such as priests, nuns and the like perished miserably in their vaulted sacristies where they had taken ref refuge being entombed in them alive by the masses of cr shing rubbish and lingering for days and days during which their cires for help had been in vain.

Still worse was the savage glandelinian d vandals. They hastened into the ruined towns from their distant armies like vultures to their prey. Instead of helping the sufferers they ransacked the smoking ruins forplunder, robbed all the dead corpses, and the injured entangled alive among the rubbish, murdering and torturing injured children and committing such atrocious crimes that it could be not written here.

There were many cases however where many persons were rescued by more human Glandelinians after being in the ruins for several days. ome others were all delivered at the end of four days and some on the seventh day after their intern interment. Those who were thus rescued all declared that their direst suffer ings were from hunger third thirst and from the heat.

In many parts along the coast the concussion had leveled whole cities and swallowed their victims by tens and hundreds of thousands. At the city of Judianan the shock of the explosion killed ten thousand fivehundred persons and at the city of Antec the concussion was still of greater force q and which slew more than two hundred thousand persons and at another city about thirty thousand were killed.

So violent was the concussion near the city of Catan that many images and even statues and the like were fairly turned around, and houses and other structures had their forsorpositions from north to south changed to that of east and west. There were numerous instances on record of this terrible disaster which showed the immense for e of the concussion and which appeared almost incredible for even a most natural earthquake to perform. he most elevated portion of a high hilll hillock ten miles from the scene of the explosion was seen to move up and down for that one moment, thousands of persons were raised r hurled up rapidly and thrown to a distance of about sixty yards from where they had stood, houses were hurled from their site and hurled to places higher than on those on which they had been built.

The foundations of thousands of the biggest buildings were moved completely from the very ground and with such violence that the strongest and most soi solid structures were broken to pieces and scattered about, and even the hared cement which had united the was crushed into dust. Even the corpses of many of the inhabatants of one of the ruined towns were found on the top of small hills seperated from the place by rivers and several hundred yards higher than the site of the very town. These persons had been fairly hurled to the top of the hill by the violent upheaving of the ground caused by the concussion of the explosion. This shock of the explosion was certainly the most destructive, and this had never been even observed in the most calamitous earthquakes of natural cause. The large palace in one of the towns presented a most silgular appearance. Its high towers were built of iron and concrete and its walls up to the very roof were intermingled with criss crossing of iron and wooden gems and made of concrete blocks and stones. They were shivered into mere blocks and fragments and thrown completely to the ground. On each side of this monsterous building were a number of large sq uare buttresses of good solid concrete work six feet square. All these were thrown down and one wall which still remained was twisted in a northwesterly direction each presenting an angle with the rest of the ruined structure. This same kind of ruin was noticed in many other places. In many ruined villiages the largest and heaviest fur furniture were turned in the same direction. Many persons who at the sudden shock had been in the streets and escaped from being crushed under the ruins of their falling houses were so violently tossed from one side to the other that many of them recieved severe injuries, and many were maimed. Others for that one second were lifted up, hurled through the and thrown down at a distance from the place where they had been standing. One at the same time were standing near the harbor and were thrown into the sea by which accident however their lives were saved.

The part of the plain near the Angeli e river also suffered severely from the terrific concussion and the effects extended as far from Gertrude Angeline city to Angeline junction a distance of more than onehundredcand eighty miles. The principal seat of the concussion was consequently nearly equal distance from the bay of Calverine and Lake Angeli e and from the shore of the Calverinian seas.

Those wh coucould have visited the scene of the event could have obse v- observed that a tract of land many miles in extent near the town of little Anna Aronburg became mysteriously covered with water ten to fourteen feet deep after the explosion and concussion, and half an hour afterwards the water so suddenly disappeared and left a strange stratum of sand in its place. Simultaneously elsewhere large lakes some twenty five miles in width and fifty in extent were formed in the courseof half an hour, and others were simultaneously drained. The graveyards at Little Anna Aronburg was hurled down into the bosom of the Aronburgs Run river and the ground whereon the city was built and the river bank for eighteen miles above sank eighteen feet below their lower level. The neighboring forest for a hundred miles presented a most singular scene of confusion, all the trees standing inclined in every direction like so many towers of pisa's all having their trunks and branches bro en and almost devoid of leaves.

The ground near Anna Aronburg city proper at the time of the disaster swelled up so as to arrest the Aronburgs Run river in its progress and to cause a temporary reflux of its waves that severe and devastating floods followed. At the point where the explosion occured the earth rose in great clouds and vast volumes of smoke, volumes of water, sand and pit coal and other materials were hurled as high as any one could imagine. The people in the country who witnessed this explosion said it looked like a volcano blowing itself intothe air and the crash was heard for five hundred and sixty miles as plain as if it was only ten miles.

The explosion dug great chasms into the earth and at onepoint it appeared as if the explosion had exerted its tremendous force upon the roof of some hollow cavern, or had burst open the ground and blown into the air everything placed on it.

The explosion was said to have had such force that every town wrecked or not wrecked were showed heavily by all kinds of falling debris and materials from the very skies and the smoke hung in the air for more than half a day.

So war a go far as the war had raged up to t now this may have been the most fearful and at the same time the most destructive explosion on record. Yet many great explosions had occured during the war since it began. The force of all these other explosions appeared to have been subjected to great variations in their intensity. In most of the explosions and the shocks occasioned by them were exceedingly slight. The effects were scarcely felt and passed away at the same moment.

The larger number of concussions caused by explosions consisted of ob only a lost slight tremenbling of the ground which could only be percieved by the most attentive observation and then only under very favorable circumstances. When they passed away it was impossible to discover the slightest trace of their activity. But some explosions had been attended like the recent big ones with effects so terrible and destructive that no other calamity in this war or of nature itself can be compared to them.

TERRIFIC EXPLOSION AT [redacted]. abbeann

WHAT IT DID!

I should also give this account of another disaster that occured near Cedernine 2 weat after the battles before the battles

The tremendious concussion of an explosion or series of explosions that gathered in more than fifteen thousand fictims victims in the Calverinian Provinces of Landonia, Pandora, Meltoria, Vencentoria Vencentorio and Gin Hickencile effected districts to an extent much further than was at first supposed. The concussion was the most severe however at Heidi's junction near Calumetta Junction. The explosion occured on the evening and the concussion was extraordinarily vehement leveling everything whatever in t those provinces, even destroying trees and everything on the highest hilltop and things on the extreme edge of the river and destroying the strongest buildings, which an Angelinian Cyclonic storm of the worst features usually cannot even razed half way.

It was said that the explosion tore a hole fully for thousand yards across and dug it to a depth of three hundred feet. Hundreds of farm houses, and barns were demolished by the shock, many even roling over and over like objects in the face of a big wind, or hurled about like so many structures of cards, and thousands of live stocks were killed. A train a long one filled with soldiers on the Abbisannia, Bondinia and Calverinia railroad in Anada state was compelled to turn back on account of the disaster. Several hundred railroad men werekilled not only in And Anada State but also on the singline in the state of Angeline line near Vencentario City.

In Bindmanjario near Vencentario City scarcely a building was left standing so severe was the sudden concussion. The northern part of the state of Angelinia was also affected severely by the concussion. Great damage was done in Polychrome many buildings being razed, and scores killed, a various railroads reported many washouts caused by the walls of some dam being leveled by the concussion, and telephone and telegraph wires were badly affected.

The list of towns and cities damaged by the concussion, flood, and fire, and with loss of life and many thousands injured are as follows; St Michael, one hundred killed, one thousand injured. Nelsonia, Johannaville, Russia, and Mar ionvi le ion thousandkilled and twenty thousand injured, Mullens, many dead, Adelinia, one hundred thirty killed, two thousand injured. Mass Town, four drowned, forew overcrettors, one thousand dead, thirty six thousand injured. South Chantler, two hundred killed, four thousand injured. Adeline, ten killed, one hundred hurt, Chisholser City, ID,000 killed fourty thousand hurt, one hundred thousand homeless.

The shock was also felt in northeastern Calverinia from west to east, across Schilder and Oneida States. The worse of the shock extended fourty miles from Vadersville, Angeline vime to Bellington Bell the latter being thrown down completely Oneida state both on Dorothy Gale and Crowley Railroads

EVERY BIG CITY IN ABBISANNIA AND CALVERINIA TERRORIZED
BY WARNING OF MORE GREAT EXPLOSIONS. ALL FIREMEN, POLICE AND THE HOME GUARDS OF EVERY CITY MOBOLIZE TO MEET EFFECTS OF GREAT IMPENDING DISASTER. ALL STATIONS DO BROADCAST ALARMING
NEWS, PLUNGING ALL CITIES INTO GREAT AWE. CALLS SWAMPS ANGELINIA AGATHIA.

account of the great recent disasters at the frightful battles at Delight's junction and of the ernormous devastating explosions, all cities in all parts of Abbisannia were in a state of approaching terror empt emotion and excitement because of what was said to be an official National warning that at any place next the enemy was likely to set off another such ernormous explosion which would shake ny number of cities to the ground.

account of such warnings official od orders were given to the members of police forces and fire departments in every one of the cities and towns to stand by and be prepared for the impending catastrophe wherever it may occur.

By the fierce heat of the conflargration in the woods so near the hills in got going up the sides of the wooded regions, the sides of the hills were almost melted, and a small volcano scourched by the ha heat,,, was almost turned back back into lava, its crater on one side being filled with running lava coming down from the scourched sides of the mountian, the heat of the conflargration coming in contact q with the lava, having melted it to running heat,,, and though it did not effect the mountian enought to burst her into eruption, some slight fissure eruptions occured, but these gradually ceased.

DEBATEMENT ON THE HORRIBLE CONFLAGRATION AND IT'S CAUSE..

The cause of the wide conflargration is definately unknown unknown, though for many reasons, those who are in guility is much disputed. Manley to cover his withdrawel from Mc-Hollester Run after the conflict there, had set fire to forests and grassy plains, though not intending to make a general conflargration which resulted weeks later cannot be confirmed. It was however believed that the fury of the battle itself was the cause, and of general Federal firing the-Mc-Whirther L Plains after the battle of Aromburgs Run whic where the biggest glandelinian army in the war met the most disasterous defeat ever experienced by any beaten armies in any wars. General federal being al ways called the human tornado was generally blained for the main destruction that resulted as his fires formed new ones nenear the main sea, burning since tthe battle of Cedernine or Stanek, which had weeks l later crossed the Camillia's Run with irrestible fury, and it was stated-that he made one with out Manleys or orders which really enraged the wicked glandelinian commander to white heat. Another thing that angered Manley was that the fire had stopped his progress on Mc-Hollester Run after the second battle there, when he was sure of gt getting general vivian in a tight fix. General vivian Himself was madder than he had ever been before as even his own peaceful homes and most beloved country where he had lived with his parents and other relations when a little boy was desolated. Hanson had managed to escape with the others, and had resumed command of his armies, who were striving to out maneuver both the enemy and the forest fire at the sametime. John Evans who had been reported killd killed during one of the battles, had not been as reported he having been found by the vivian girls that is Violet and her sisters a leader of the mos most desperateof the fire fighters.

''It is terrible''He said whe when he met the little girls sometme sometime when the destruction had swept beyound the limits of the Chamberlane ridges, and when it had been two weeks after the battle and the enemy were still retreating.''Such fierce heat my men had to face.We chest checked it though near Evangeline St glare. Though we could not save the towns of Chambles, and Chamberlane.''

The little girls told of their experiences in graphic details, leaving out nothing, and then Jack Evans had come up.

''All this was done in fourty days.''Said general Jack Evans with a look of horror in his face.''And had been burning many days before the past battle of Glorinia.I have seen great forest fires before, rescued you lit tle girls out of forest fire traps when d caught in them but seen no forest fire to surpass this. Even the eruptions of Mt Calverine and her destruction was put to shame.''

''It is all of general Federals work that new general Raymond Richardson Federal as they call him''Said violet bitterly.''He can't win on us by fighting so he has to burn o us out of the way to win. But now I fear that the wicked Glandelinian causeis lost.And hope so too-they can't make repreparations now because it is too late, and their invasion with the defeat of Glorinia is now completely broken.''

...ultitudes fled for their lives.There was no moce to warn them of the terrible ...anger.They ran through the smoke we wreathed streets pellmell leaving all their belongings behind.A mass of orphan a children sprang for a church for refuge but before they could reach it a great mass of flames overwheled them.But sheets of fire rolledup from the distant buildings being first struck by the flames, the buildings catching on fire in nearly every direction.It was a fearful sight, and suddenly from the very heart of it rang the cries of thousands in hopeless peril, crackling shrouds of flames enveoping upon them.The flames seemed to sear the skies,and was so bright that no one could bear to gaze upon it.All the buildings were now catching on fire,and the heat was so intense that many of the fleeing persons were overcome and perished. So fiard tre other sections of the city swept that awful cloud of flames destroying everything in its path,and the shrieks, screams and howls of the multitudes that were dying overcome by this death hell was heart rending.The surrounding districts was as far as eye could reach lighted up like a dazzling inferno, and the most monsterous mass of fire extended from block to block and the noise of the wind hitting the flames with the din of the dying persons was terrific.The flames even acted insanely. They leaped they leaped, they soared toard th toard the clouds.It was a hellpit of fire and mad.Even the whole sky over the burning city seemed to turn into a fire blood.So fire storm had advanced toard Mc-Hollester junction and when the city fought the smoke clouds were in wonderful shape.In three days the whole of the city of Mc-Holl ester was left in a sea of burning wreckage.The force of the wind itself had been terrific tearing the buildings into ruins,and the flames burning the wreckage ascended to great heights and even flared and sheeted across street after street.All of the buildings were furnaces.Three thirds of the inh abatants had perished.and the formation of the smoke clouds had the most freakish signs ever seen, some of the clouds being in convulitions too numerous and fantastas to describe, while everywhere could be seen extraordinary smoke bubbles which extended toard the horizon of flames and expanding to the length of indescribabi lity. At several parts of the main clouds were several large black depressions in the shape of spitfiretlames, and from these were heard funny but weird humming sounds as if some child or man was whirling a twelve inch ruler with terrific revolutions around on a string.So thick was the smoke of the fires and so extensi extensive that darkness spread as far as Calverine.Not even any section of the most solid and formidable forests could stand the hurce convulsan onrush of the wildstorm and the flames that had burned everything down in its path.The seas of fire were in such terrific confusion, that the trees fell in countless numbers heaping themselves up in mountians of blazing debris, thousands of blazing branches, and debris of every description being hurled forward by the wind like fish, and scattered with a great uproar, bustle and clamor.The wind even drove the surface of the seas of flame along the skies in showers of fiery spray.Thousands of great tongues of flame were even darting into the air, seething,undulating, and roaring.The very flames seemed to have lives of their own, and the f ames were forced across the skies to enormous distances.One section of the fire so forest fire reached near Fanins but did not hit her, another swirled upon the thickly wooded parts of the Panama Run region and burned all before it.

Hanson and the othe others in due time fortunately found their way out of the region of burning woods before the main fire came upon them, but even if escaping it as several weeks before they would their way back to the main army which was completely discouraged over the affair, and scared almost to the point of total demobilizating i on account of the failure of their chief commander to return as soon as they had expected him to .

Even the lurid flames of some new conf l conflargration could now be seen in the northeast, the whole distant sky being reddened with its glare, the advancing fire in the south having formed terrible fury by this time, and was pursuing Hanson and all his followers, like an advalen advancing cyclone of wind and fire.And the hurricane of wind was was heavily laden with the pungent biting smoke, and not only that but the flames was rushing onward among the tree tops with the rear of a very steam blast, and now there was fearful peril of them being overwhelmed and roasted alive, and the sky overhead became covered with the blackest clouds as if it was the very roof of hell, and the distant roar of the approaching flames sounded like the warning cry of some strange beast.And Hanson and the rest had the frenzy of a single idea.They must u nder any condition escape the terrible sea of flames which at this point probably came rushing on at the rate of seventy miles an hur, the whole world seeming to suddenly grow chaotic and terrible..Onward and onward the plunged over everything being obscured by the smoke, the flames leaping wide strips of flames of fallen trees,and singing thevery ground with its its terrible heat.
The very mountian ranges seemed to have gone mad, and the world seemed to become as a molten planet..Withe heat of the approaching conflargration itself streaming the fugitives with a stti sting like the cut of a thousand lashes, while the hot air pierced their lungs like acid fumes.As they continued on burning trees fell at their very heels, in fact on three sides the burning trees and branches fell crashing about them being con consumed in a breath as the fire storm reached them and the wind sped the sparks produced by the trees striking against each other like white hot bullets.And a hundred feet abovethe fugitives no one could have breathed and lived.Their tongues were beginning to swell, and each gasp for air was the cost of a biting exhalation of burning gases and smoke.Over them the hot winds blew and the air pressed like hot needles upon them, the sky was lurid with flashing sheets of flame, which was coming nearer and nearer..he progress of the flames was now for a time arrested by the Nic-Hollester gun River but the glowing mass of flames at length became so great that they ignited allthe trees on the other side.And the conversion of the water into steam produced a commotion which for some moments had has been able to again stop the progress of the flame,but the wind blew through the storm of fire tearing asunder the masses of trees, and throwing both flames and woods into amazing confusion of chaos, starting new great fires as the other side and formed at once a mass of flames more than thrill thirteen million cubic feet.The velocity of which the flames now advanced was now frightful, and all of the fire line burned with extraordinary rapidity the main fire con had since it started forward covered the distance of two hundred and fifty leagues.It really burned forward with the rapidity of the hurricane itself, throwing a most terrific glare upon the heavens at night time and filling all the surrounding lofty mountian regions and valleys with a great sheen of dazzling lurid light.
The awful spectacle continued furiously the quantities of the flames being enormous and on the southwest side of the Chamberlane Ridges another great stream of fire was burning its way through all the forests.and the burning trees were fairly lashed into fury by the wind which tore its way through the burning woods, and yet Hanson and the rest had some hopes of el uding their fire enemy but the flames roaring and shrieking in rage came on with terrible speed.They realized they must re reach a wide expanse of water of er they would be lost.The flames reached even the wide openings in the woods which checked them not, but igniting the trees beyond them came on with a most terrific velocity ever seen in forest fires before.

In spite of the most desperate efforts the fugitives from many villages were overwhelmed by the furious torrents of flames.Savage roaring sounds, howlings, rattlings of falling trees, the shrieks of the overwhelmed, the groans of the unfortunate dying, and the roar of explosions was appalling, yet all this appalling tumult did not prevent Hanson and the others from hearing the shrill serpent like hissing of the blazing mass, while the fury of the wind, wrenched upt uprooted,and withered trees, and shattered houses of small towns into ruins in the twinkling of an eye, the wind roaring and howling in the most appalling manner and I don't believe that any living professor of any kind can have any idea of the horrid ferocity with which the conflargration burned onward and the whole scene if viewed from a great height would have appeared as if the valley of the of death had burst open into a sea of fire.Men and animals we e were carried off and dashed to death by wind blasts.Trees numbered by the thousands were torn by the roots the violence of the wind rending many of the houses to fragments, many mulitudes of people being literally blown off the ground,then flung into the awful abyss of flames.

The conflargration had advanced as fast as the hurricane of wind could drive it forward burning its way near Chamberlane and Ophelia junction woods and filling sky with an awful glowthe clouds of fiercely glowing sparks and embers spread in a dazzling array across the skies.While Hansonhand the others were flesing ; the city of Nic-Hollester Turner was hit by the forest fire or at least the fire was threatening to even surround it and so peculiar werr were the exertions of the afrighted inhabatants seem, that their swift preparations for flight could not be described, the confl argration burning tward the city with appalling swiftness

Its full fury of the gale burst at length. A series of violet violent blasts ripped through the swaying burning g trees likeprojectiles and the waves of fire broke like by Niagaryas of flame, the wind now coming in redoubled fury beca ing a screaming roari ng gale, while now the sky was being covered with scudding clouds of sparks, embers, and flames.Never before had there been suc an uproar of flames and winds, all the wooden houses in the villages and towns struck by the great conflargration col/ collasped like matchwood before the fury of the worse hurricane that ever existed during forest fires.Whole houses were picked up bodily, and dashed in splinters to the ground blocks away, carrying with it the bodies of its occupants.A furious glaring brightness set in, and now the fullfury of the fire storm came, the very heavens being ablaze.The wind blew down trees like straws, and fanned the conflargration which made the whole scene red as hell, the red flames spread and sheeted stretching redly, and ghastly over the skies, burning furiously through the trees andso intense was the blaze that it brought vividly into view even the sharper outlines of the most far distant hills hundreds ofmiles away.The deafening uproar of the flames and wind terrified the brave Vivian girl s; especially as the wind piled the trees down by hundreds of thousands at every blasts.
The blast of the conl conflargration made visible the whole expanse, the flames being lashed into white heat.Many times the solid masses of clouds appeared to break, and by the piercing tongues of the conflargration to form all shorts of shapes too easy to be described, the frightful flames always hurlting upon one another so to that to Hanson and all the others the awful clouds made a scene as if the world was haicsing a hove of the demons demons.suddenly to the far northwest the whole earth and sky becamelighted by a most intense glow never before seen so bright, and the fugitives looking in that direction saw a section of the Bonded Hills shining with the most terrific mountian of fire.

All the gills within sight were on fire which lighted up the whole atmosphere far and wide.Yet the distant valleys were stillquite dark and shrouded save in several places which appeared, serpentije and irrigular rivers of white hot flame from new raging fires.The light stillullminating the scene increased to ten fold brightness, then suddenly an unearthly luridness fell upon the air, and then came such an awful brightness, that Hanson and the restliterally shaded their eyes.And yet with an increase of this awful brightness the wall of flame rushed up the main line of ridges the most awful fire sea ever seen and over the broadest of the most monstorous slopes of flame there now seemed to spring cragged and stupendous arches as it were of blood red hell fire, which as from the very jaws of hell itself, ascendi sheets of dazzling flame seemingly a thousand feet or even more more.

And the roar of the conflargration was heard the loud rattling of swaying trees and branches hurltling against one another as they disappeared among the roaring fire sea, darkening for an instance the places where they fell, the next turn into it: the burl burnished lues of fire.At the same instant gushed forth volumes of the blackest smoke rolling on in the face of the hurricane.The awful sheets of flame continually pierced the clouds over the summits of the burning ridges, and spread in a fiery arch all over the mountian sides, the conflargration lighting the country allaround with such an intenst intense glare that afterwards the glow of the conflargration was reported to have been seen for fivehundred miles.
The blinding sheets of flame rose to a stupendous height, followed by rolling columns and wreathes of the blackest smoke, then again the gl flames.And in the distance could be heard the appalling cry from mangled forms, that rolled and writhed on the ground under the onrush of the fire storm, and even clouds of thick crimson colored smoke also hung over the scene like a bloody canopy.Flames shot thousands of feet from the burning regions, which increased by the hurrican e spread a rain of fiery sparks almost over the wh l whole country side outside of the fire which in another days time were also to dissolve into a roaring mass of fire that would sweep everything before its glowing billows.A few minutes more and the big fire flood pron probably moving eighty miles an hour reached the wooded and village dotted plains and the crowds of refugees, terrified and panic stricken were forced to flee before its glowing ocy waves, and the voo volumes of suffocating smoke that blinded them.And form a distance came the wailing piteous cries of many who escaped not, as the billows i of fire swept over them, burning and destroying, and melting everything in its fiery path.

Suddenly there was a blinding sheet of flashes th that arose seemingly many thousands of feet into the air, and through the clouds of smoke seemingly to tear it asunder.
There was a terrific booming sound, and a crash that almost stunned the multitude as a big explosion rended the air, a all the mountians in the northwest seemed to be engulfed into a vortex of seething flame that burned everywhere, and the sky seemed to be one sheet of flame while everything was all dense smoke.

The very eastern horizon was almost hidden in the wreathes of smoke and the rest, untill more and nearer and nearer came the conflargration, far behind Hanson and the rest, untill the distant woods now only thirteen miles away became a mass of flames.

flying snowstorm of embers, and the buffetting of the wind against Manson and all his followers was indescribable. Strong trees could not stand the gale and were immediately thrown to the ground and engulfed amid a sea of fire. The big fire sea was even so furious that the center was heaped up like moving fire mountains, the glowing sheets leaping up into the air like from a great bottomless sea of fire with a sullen roar; the furious hurricane sweeping over them and driving their crest of flame along the sky in the form of thick cirrus clouds. Blazing trees by thousands per second swooped to the ground, taking leaps like greyhounds, and the depth of the fire flood appeared to be very great, the wholeline of fire being actually heaped up in the center like a broken wave, from which clouds upon clouds of sparks were thrown into the air. The sea of flames fairly hissed and roared, as it undulated, seethed and twisted, the great slabs of flames seeming to have lives of their own, and to be animated with dangerous fury. At times ferocious whirlpools of flames were formed which seemed to such down flaring trees headforemost, but an instant later they again appeared, flaring torches, with every vestage of branches and bark completely burned away, and soon consumed altogether.

At the times when the whirlpools of flames appeared, the scene was terrific, the flames, battling, raging, seething, currents of fire opposing greater currents, wave seeming to fight wave with a hideous roar. Many times a wave of fire seemed forced into the air by the terrific collision with another from an opposing side, and was broken into masses of long roaring seething tongues, which the hurricane drove in sheets of fiery sp spray along the surface of the struggling fire eddies. And the furious waves of fire with the hot wind rushing into it, tossed in every direction, and yet at the same time were forced forward by the irresistible pressure of the hurricane. The great clouds of smoke was wonderful. They seemed mounting to an indescribable height, and wreathed up like exhalations from the craters of volcanoes, twisting themselves into fantastic shapes, that seemed to stretch forth arms to seiz seize the r refugees from the threatened towns, amid all the horrors of the fire flood. The torrents of fiery sparks was also wonderful to behold, the fury of the wind beating, and buffutting, and twirling the trees about as if they were without the power of th the slightest resistance, and the columns of sparks drifted, and swept madly in every direction. First a torrent of sparks pours through an unburned forest of twisting straining tr trees, to kindle new fires, then another descends among the prairee grasses not yet reached by the fire, with a third comes driving through the air in the force of the wind that blew down t the trees.

All this while to the ear of Manson and his fire fighters and the rest, including Violet and her sisters was a descendic orgy of sounds, the fire itself f iry, hissing and roaring, the twisting trees were groaning, and the wind howling and bellowing in thousands of different accords. Whole ok trees were l all afla and many already beat down at a perilous angle fell with thunderous crashes which reverberated amid the mad furious roaring of the fire sea.

The whole scene behind the fugitives was a tumultious mass of embers and tree s, and the huge seething extravagant stretch of flames rushed on over ravines in thick glowing sheets and dazzling brightness and with a tremendous crashing roar. Along the river banks crowned with ever green s trees, a tremendous arching flood of flame impelled forward across the wide stream as vigoriously as if shot from some wheel constructed by a titan millar caught these trees, and now the big town gabbling Bess had been herded in by the great wall of seething flames, the conflargration swarming toward the stretches of unburned forests.

The wind fairly became a screaming gale and the hard battling trees with the wind of wind upon them crashed into the flames, and received a head long swo swoop of the fire sea that went roaring furiously among them. The swaying woods recieved walls of zilling flames, all the boughs, leaves, and branches of thousands of evergreen tres s at once were burned away in a seconds time, and the trees jarred wildly, seas of fire consuming them, as the wind hurled them broadside to its Whooping fire billows pounced a upon stretch after stretch, the fire flaming right over the the whole length, and hiding them completely in a roaring mass of flames. As many appeared through the fire flood, they swung fiercely to the gale, their very branches being swept clean, and as Manson glanced into the distant smother of flames, at the dishelveled tops of the burning trees he noticed to the right the worse of the fire was coming almost hidden at times by the clouds of smoke, then the big fire wall burned nearer with an ominous roar, there came a mighty mass of seething flames, and trees by the score of thousands fell to the ground with a shocking crashe

The woods were in a welter of surging flames, thumping, shudderingly, warried deadly by the frenzied rush of the winds. Every fiery surge swooping on, caught roaring over new forest tops and rushed in avalanches of flame through the lower interior the wind battering their branches topieces in its increasing fury, the pondered trunks crashing like thunder, the ragged ranges of flame stretching for miles, and now everything seemed to be going under the terrific blows of the wind blasts a pall of fat back b black clouds rose up in the distance stacking themselves upon one another untill they resembled a huge pile of rounded boluderss al le trains could run, and so they escaped just like Manson and his fighters did, by finding refuge in caves, tunnels and other places. All the bridges crossing rivers for miles were blazing, stretches of woods along the Mic-Hollester, Mi-Murthur, and Aronburgs gun and others heavily boarded in timbers became like rivers bordered by seas of hellfire, millfishes were annihilated, and the wny the water of these rivers condensed so much stream that it whitened the clouds of smoke with volcanic eruptions from steam heated vents in the craters.

It was almost impossible for fleeing multitudes to be saved or rescued in thex mountainous regions, even sections of the Arabnie Creek, and river were turned into seas of seething clouds of flames. The fire poured across every railroad track in furnaces and all the g bridges were going. The smoke was sothick that nothing even in front of the cavern could be seen, and the first of the next town to be reached by the fire was Mic-Hollen only half a mile not north of the cavern, and while the flames were pressing down upon it, the men, women, and children, at the roar of the approaching fire storm, fled for safty. The forest all along the railroad lines was in one sea of dashing advancing fires. On one ridge where green forests had battered by some tremendous battle lately stood there was now spread a scene of desolation and horror. Blackened trunks piled in the sport of that mighty fire were lay likestraw, lay thick on the plains also and all the mountian sides were glowing like volcanoes covered with red hot lava, from the embers. The trees that still stood upright were s stripped of limb and bark, mile upon mile of these hills rolling away without a sprig of green to east the wreckage and glows of smoldering fires.

After many hours of wandering through smoking debris Manson and his fire fighters had by guides reached a part of their lines, still b ttling the flames with them ravaged to reach a part of their lines.

"My gracious I never knew that forest fires would advance in such a terrible way." declared Manson, while Violet shook her pretty head as the distant fire roared on and piling up darker clouds. "Now I certainly know what it is to be trapped by forest fires."

"Is this is is the worse forest conflagra conflargration conflargration that we ever had." said another general. "And this one had originated way before general Vivianis had his driving at Manley at the last battle of Mic-Hollester Rans." He finished bitterly.

"It is easy to see that a big sea of fires." Exclaimed Judge Vivians. "It's a wonder we escaped as well as we did. And a ll those fighters are perishing just for us."

"Will it ever cease untillwe get at Manley again!" Asked another officer of general Manson. "Those distant fires seemed to be getting worse."

"I hope not." Said Mansons. "I think it has caused enough destruction already."

"Look!" exclaimed Angeline Vivians. "That sea of fire has already struck the foot of the wooded regions near the Vivian Girls."

Manson looked and saw it was true. Suddenly Violet gave a frightened glance toward another big section of the fire, and observed that on account of the fury of the gale the conflargration was dividing into two parts one part a hissing sea of fire would be following a ravine where they were to pass through, and from where they were the heat could be felt. Jennie Vivian was walking by general Mansons right side and she said in evident terror.

"Oh, please se Uncle let's get away at once for I'm afraid the fire is going to get us!"

"Yes, let's do get away." Declared Violet. "Please do not let us all perish in such a fire."

"But where can we go if we leave!----"

He was interrupted by a roar as if the heavens were aflame and Manson saw for facts that they were a good deal safer where they were. So therefore slowly dropped his hands to his side.

"We don't we want to stay here and perish, but we cannot escape, for we are again surrounded by fires. If we leave we shall only run into those seething flames."

"If we could get off before it surrounds us entirely I think we will escape."

Said an officer, "but of course we are safer here."

"Oh let's go!" moaned Jennie. "Oh please let's go."

But Manson only refused saying. "Don't be fools, trust in God. We cannot escape that is all there there is to it and the first man that dares to attempt the fool hardy deats sh will w be shot."

"We will all die, see if we don't." cried Catherine sadly. "We can't stay in this smoke clogged ravine, and the flames will surely reach us."

She watched the roaring flames in terror, and Manson noticing the thick shrubbery in the ravine, realized at last that it was an insecure retreat, but then did not know that to do. The amount, and size of the big gi fire moving toward them p occupied the whole widry width of the Mississippi Ri e River having already burned across the Aronburgs river shore line and destroying everything that obstructed its course and other raging fires having made a jud junction swelled it to an enormous volume of flames, and this conflargration swept on toward the fugitives in the ravine. Onward and onward progressed the and ad ava, avalanch of flames in h great sheets that hurled themselves bodily across the sky kie like so curtains. The wind of the hurricane came seperately trying to cover the ground deep i with the men soaking a gunny w sack with w water and slipping it over his head and dashing into the flames. His fire fighters, soon began to prepare for flight believing with woeful fear that H anson would never return but in a little while he was back to lead them on. He halted them every little while and dashed off on his perilous forays coming back always to beckon them on, and long before that the general Hanson could have easily reached a place of safty, but his arm army of fighters could not have saved themselves. Hanson finally reached a peculiar cavern of great width and length, running into a larger cavern beyond without flooring, toward which he had been walking, and ordered the others in. Even then the timber in front of the cavern was on fire and it seemed an insecure retreat, and some of the followers questioned Hansons judig judgement w and would not enter.

"Get inside that cavern," Said Hanson drawing his guns. "It's death for the one who disos disobeys me. Look at that approaching ocean of fire. Are ye fools."

It was a wide cavern and timbered outside all its length heavily with high pine and evenergreen trees, while near the entrance a small stream trickled. Hanson was the last one of them all to enter the cave, and he ordered all to lie with faces on the ground or against it, and began dashing water from the small pools upon the burning timber in front of the cavern's entrance, which was already becoming packed with smoke from the outside fires. They all found breathing more difficult than they had in the open, and they begged Hanson to let them go. By this time the fire hurricane had mounted to its height, and the cavern was surrounded by a raging seething sea of fire. Hundreds of trees fell near and across the mouth of the cavern pouring fresh volumes of smoke into it. A goodnumber of Hansons officers helped him to keep back the fire from the smaller timber inside the tunnel until they w fell one by one overcome by the smoke and the singing heats, the others lying on the ground were praying, begging, and gasping for breath, and in the next few minutes that followed the whole scene became like as a maddened hell. The wind roared and screamed like raging insane nature herself, and gasping animals of all kinds driven into the cavern by the fire outside, even small young Bolngiglosaenon creatures and one largeone were almost deprived of every sense by the need of air to breath and they grappled fiercely with Hanson and the other men help ing him , only to be shut down, the poorbeasts being raving maddened animals deprived of such reason as men seldom endure and live. But Hanson brought them down one by one. Only the Blengiglosaenean creatures seemed better reasoned and went as far into the caverns as they could to escape the smoke. Hanson himself stood th at the mouth of that bo black pit and lived, when even men who breathed near the ground smothered and chocked. Indeed their only refuge was now entirely surrounded by fire, a roaring, screaming, howling furnace of fire burning around it, even over it, protected only by the low banks of the streamlets, from being crushed by tons of tp toppling trees which fell across it by hundreds with thunderous crashes, and at times the smoke became so dense in the cavern, that soon Hanson himself was compelled to lie down with his face ag Against the ground, while the others were struggling for breath in the smoke clef clogged tunnels. Blazing moss, bark, and foliage fell upon the roof of the cavern incessantly, while the se of flames pressed down upi upon it with a roar, the whole forest in the location being on fire, the heat being so intense that it melted all the bowlders lying near the tunnel, and made the rocks of the cavern entrance red hot outside. From road to road the flames leaped with the speed of a fast express train, saw sowing storms of brands upon the unburned forest to kindle slower and more deadl deadlier fires.

With the fire came a terrific gale of wind blowing like a tornado. Stones of a ton of thousands of pounds in weight, tons of gravel, and debris of the forest were hurled before it, the clouds of dashing smoke fairly whitening the skies, which was fire tainted, scorching, thicker than ever. The smoke was so thick that nothing could be seen in the tunnel, and even there on account of the wind the flames began to reach in after them, and would have got them had they not gone back further. A big riverlet ran through or into the cavern, and by keeping their clothes contun continually wet, they managed to endure. By the din outside, of the and the wind the sound of the echoe in the dreaded floorless cavern beyond was terrific and uncanny.

The heat was so terrific along the stretch of railway yet just seen beyond that pick handles were utterly consumed, especially where old abandoned tools lay upon the ground which had been thrown away. Water barrels at the outside end of the caverns entrance was broiled and evaporated away, the staves burning down as they sank, while fishes in the stream twenty yards away were dont cooked and floated by the thousands. All the ties of the railroad were by only the heat burned out of the railroad tracks, the rails, were bended, and blucked and l melted and kinked like wire, while all the gravel stones of the road was so mel melted that when cooled off they lay almostlike a cement bed. Everything was swept clean to the mouth of the cavern, and it was a wonder how Hanson and the others survived that suffocating smoke and blinding parching hell of heat, while simultaneously in all this more than two hundred thousand men, women, and children became refugees from the flames flying for their lives, to the lakes and margins or to railroading of the night and from the region of the Mic-Mollester gun it came. The hurricane added upon the smaller fires proceeded by the storm of sparks from the main conflargrath flanking them furiously scattering them abroad through miles of forests, on neighboring mountian ranges, each falling spark to kindle a raging fire storm of its own.

Strange gusts sprang up w whistling their sharp notes above the roar of the great tempest amid the fire, and the crashes of falling trees, and incandescent flames. In the superheated atmosphere it again appeared as if all theworld were on fire. All the burning stores were sending sporting columns a very sea of fire having rushed up the mountian sides. Incessantly the roaring flames rose to the heights of hundreds of feet increasing and spreading its waves. On the ridges where the timber was thickly crested flaming limbs and burning seas of moss were carried all over the forest by the hurricane, the flames catching the foliage. In a breath thousands upon thousands of trees on the mountian sides were stripped of leaves andlimbs, and general Hanson and his fighters who had never witnessed such an appalling sight fought desperately but many perished being trapped or overcome. Even many of the dead fire fighters could not be identified. In many cases the bodies were entirely consumed, the watches knives, coins and pick axes carried by the men being melted. Human beings had perished in greater numbers in other and greater disasters than these, but never had human beings lived through the tortures of this hell which all these fire fighters endured in this raging fire. Two thousand soldiers and many officers, even with women and children they had rescued were caught in crevasses, and ravines when fleeing from the flame, which became roofed in roaring howling curtains of flame and many thousands of others with women ahd child refugees, floundering through burning woods to lake margins, to river sides, maimed and blinded and injured in many ways. Through the terrible seas of fire which swept all of the ridges in its path was seen of the brightness of a sea of white hot coals and the roaring fire s destroyed all the towns in the plains. Trees were falling in every direction, the fire was fairly screaming, and the wind howling. Over the mountian sides across an old burn strewn with logs and forest debris streamed an unbroken hissing fiery flood of flames. And even for miles from the main conflargration the air was so hot that it cut the lungs like knives like fumes of acid, steam smoke and gases were stifling, while the despairing fire fighters struggled desperately, shrieking prayers to the God Almighty. The horses ceased to rain fire, and the longs along Hansons trenches caught fire as it was a marvel than that any of the brave fire fighters were escaping as they did from it, the flames closing around everything in its path. The desperate fighters after two hours of facing this terrible broiling heat retreated swiftly through the stifling smoke, over beds of hot coals, under the swinging mass menance of burning branches, and tottering tree trunks. The smoke was so thick that the course of the great sea of fire would not have been seen if it had n t been for the dazzling glow of the flames. The icy waters of the Mic-Mollester Ram River had been heated by falling tree tunks of burning trees which pent u itup in a horrible mass of fire, and fishes in the stream had been broiled. Canson and his generals now became alarmed as the forest fire only a mile away from his fighting lines was becoming a screaming hell. The smoke wasbecoming so dense that the fire fighters had to use flash lights to prevent themselves from becoming seperated and lost. It was impossible in spite of the giant flames and glows of sparks and embers to see any thing a few feet away, falling trees crashing to earth through the limbs of others. "This is one of the most gigantic war horrors that had ever raged." "Saidone of the generals. "These forest fires are terrible columns of clear white screaming fire springing up like the wile-the-wisp feeding upon air."

Checked it seemed at length that some of the fire was checked by the stretches of clearing made by the fighters, but finally it crossed making the country region as bright as Dantes fire inferno. All the trees had that had not caught on fire were shattered by the wild tempest of wind then to be consumed by the fearful onrushing tongues of flame. Waves of fire more than two hundred and eighty feet high, burning incited with the most irresistible energy and fury sweeping away everything and le boiling rocks of allsizes such fire streams as now appeared had never been known to burn as this one did. It's destructive fury, and the speed with which it really traveled was marvelious and unko unknown and the very boom of the flames roared like a thou thousand artillery. They formed stupendous whirlpools of flame. Yet although a few sea usl usually travels up mountian sides much slower than it does in crossing a level plain this one burned indeed much faster, and when the van guard of it reached half way up the burned ridges at the start it had become a spouting blast of flame leaping across chasms and ravines no matter how wide. Yet the hottest part of the fire was rushing tward Hansons solid line of fire fighters. The whole scene was like a country and mountinnous region being consumed by the infernal regions itself. Hanson and hisline of fire fighters had stood against the seething conflargration for hours in blistering parching heat without the slight est weakness and were forced to abandon the fight, to escape the threatened regions, but be discovered that behindsold and hundreds of thousands of his men were hemmed in by the fire, the rest of his fighters having escaped. Hans Hanson led them on ordering a complete r retr a retreat. Hanson was now nearing a new forest fire of burning shrubery and ground debris, and so was compelled to halt his

Mile upon mile of Marcocellicos streets rolled away without hardly a fragment of a wall to appease the melencholy sea of debris and glows of smouldering fires which made Marcocellio resemble some huge volcanic crater steaming with fumes and glowing lava of different brightness, from high pi points of view. Nearly one half of the population of both these cities were rendered homeless, and thousand had perished, the rest having escapedby way of the big rivers and the Mic-Gollester Lakes, but the two cities were wiped out in property loss.

The fire wall driven forward by ahundred and eightymile an hour wind was so high and extensive that it burned through wide stretches of woods catching not only ten thousand refugees, but thirty thousand others in its path, burning all the trees and melting all the rocks and bowlders. As the conflargration continued on it swept a hellsea the Kauffmann woods having entirely disappeared, being destroyed by the sweep of the titanic wave of fire. The clouds of smoke ascended as they spread out, while a fiery red cloud in the form ofmillions of sponges capped a portion of the Gondinia Hills. From great ravines within easy reach of general Hansons sqi swiftly retreating armies, arose immese immense rolling clouds of smoke and streams of roaring fire which igniting the foliage above formed indescribable sheets of flame. Above the whole scene the black clouds of smoke hung like a stupendous pall or canp canopy and began to spread forwiles at once, As the conflargration grew nearer clouds of smoke was observed to become of great blackness with glowing bases, and the surface to rise upward with appalling speed. The whole surface was agitated in tumultious glowing billows and the darknessx darkness it cast was more supernatural and fearful than words can say or describe worse than even the cellis of the sune or moone.

The whole cloud was even spreading and expanding in the most terrible manner as it edged forward, and in a few minutes all the country far from the forest fire was involved in its most fearful darkness. The distant glow of the flames which had been hidden by the sack cloth like cloud appeared overcand anone. Notwithstanding allthis there was a dead suffocating sepulchral silence, and though everything had been blotted from view of Hanson and his retreating armies, an angry bright fire like glow as if it were the world on fire now became visible under the smoke clouds.

Of the hundreds of thousands of fire fig hters who had been fighting the forest fires everyone was doubtful of successfully combating the flames. Everything was obscured by the pall save by the fearful glow which flashed fiercely under the dark and silent clouds and the universal gloom and the hills still burning lookedlike high ridges of fire. The darkness being reddened and the glow increasing many of the soldiers arose to their feet but moved not for none could stir from the place for the horrible depth of gloom. They talked to each other in hushed whispers as an undefinable dread being upon each mind for the sudden x catastrophe was so awful. Two long hours of this supernatural darkness continued, and all this while the vast crowd of soldiers dug trenches and made gaps and avenues, others waiting for what they knew not. At times amid a strange ominous roar the cloud rising above the horizon seemed to be parted by fearful columns of hissing flames that pierced into the sky for thousands of feet, while terrible showers of sparks began tofall like lances of fire seemingl y to blast the air while the flying embers in coming into contact with each other looked like flaring bursting shells. Suddenly all the darkness that had filled the air now seemed to concentrate and gather about the burning hillsides again so that the mountains of flames became invisible. This was folowed by a great exclamation of horror. In a few minutes they again showed the wholeline of distant ridges seeming to d s dissolve themselves into fire, the surrounding woods in the lower regions were on fire and above the whirling sea of fire appeared the fiercest rolling back clouds. The very far diatant sea of plains seemed to yurn into a fire ocean, and while Man on and ost of his retreating armies looked with fear upon the scene the whole of the many columns of fire changed into one terrible fire sea and forming at its advance guard a gigantic wall of glowing brightness shooting high into the air and from this earthly hell poured rays so bright that all the country for miles becameslighted up like a red infernos. The other hills seemed now to be allon fire and through the woodedplains pgured roaring rivers of fire, while the fire fighters cursed and swore at the luck. uddenly all the region of woods bordering the Mic-Gollester Run River burst int8 flames and the whole mountains were the isolated flames previously rab raged a risinious vapor had now arose and the very nature seemed to mother under the curtain of smoke gases. People panted for breath of untained air, and their lungs were burning, their eyes inflamed, the approaching fire seas being large and destructive, and now even the se srebus darkness hung over all the regions. he was no carryingpower in the air, sounds being muffled as if by a vacuum. Birds staggered in the vaporious chaoes on bewildered wings panting, lost in the continuous darkness. Then cameat length a timid wind sighing throughthe tall trees. It struck hot upon the crowds of h fire fighters. It burned upontheirlips, ruffled the cloudly mantle for a moment, soon to die away again. Again it stirredlike the cautious step of a thief, and again hotter and clearer freshened steadily but did not b blow away the thick clouds. he tempest o oncoming by the forest fires was approaching to addto the terrors of the conflarg ation.

hose of men women and children fled before the raging red death, and the smoke became so dense it was impossible to see anything a few feet away. The thick clouds of smoke as the fires approached the town of arsucian seemed to be condesn condensed with others for heavy deluges of sparks fell, and manyplaces that were already reached by the flames were burned to fragments, and Marcucian recieved a furious snowstorm of sparks, before the main fire driven forward by a one hundred mile an hour gale hit her.

groushes of trees were ignites ignited by the torrents of flying sparks, and many flat house tops were covered with embers to a depth of four inches, which soon turned the roofs into blazing infernoes. Then the conflargration struck with a terrible outburst of flames. Millions of planks planks and beams burned in every lumber yard, and during the final onslaught hundreds of thousands of buildings were burned to gutted ruins and many fell downs. Tons of burning debris were scattered about in the streets, and it seemed as if thrillions of fire demons were producing the atmosphere into tit titanic convuls convulsions of fire, and spreading the destruction everywhere. through the wooded regions north of Marcu inn city waves of fire more than two hundred and sixty feet high rolled fore forward, burning away everything. Blocks of stone in ravines from thirty to onehundred tons in weight, were melted by the fierce heat untill they boiled and seethed like volcanic lava, and fierce flames swept the front part of Marcu i Marcucian away. such roaring walls of fire as never seen beforeburned through Marcucian and the flames burned forward at a rate beyond anything known in conflargrations. The walls of stone buildings r n like water from the fierce heats. Imagine a big wall of fire traveling tward you at a speed too great to be iredietely be estimated, and you will be able to conceive in some measure the magnitude of the flames now bu ning all of Marcucian and heading forward through other woods, and sweeping now upon the small town of Murrianie.

It burned through with frightful speed forming stupendous maelstromes of flames and hissing and roaring like a thrillion whirlwpools. It fina lly wiped ut every building in its path the flames shooting up into the air in the form of gigantic arches. The flames even burned all of Marcu ian and by the immense conflargration with which no maligude od of dragons could stand against, and from which they could not even fly andlive, many buildings were consumed bricks and all, the flames by this time having mounted to its height, and the whole city of Marcucian was a seething volcano of flame and smo e smoke. Clouds of sparks and embers were swept high up into the air by the upward draught, pouring fresh destruction everywhere. And from town to town the fire storm sped, then stones of a tgou thou thousand pound in weight , tons of gravel, and even mounds of dust and sand were consumed, and burning debris from withered trees were carried into the air for miles by the gale of winds. And the storm of fire was so terrific in its advance along the stretch of the Mic-Gollester and P Pandora railroad which ran through this region, and which was heavily bordered with timber on both sides, that this region was literally cleaned out.

The railroad ties were literally burned out, the fierce heat of the fire bending and buckling the rails, and on some occasions even melting the rails away. Everything was swept clean up to Aurandec llio Aurandecallio. Clouds upon clouds of sparks dotted the sky, which at times seemed full of fire, the city of Aurandecallio itself being surrounded by a ocean of flames and before the inhabatants were aware of the danger they were out off from escape. More than two hundred thousand men women and children perished when the hurricane of fire seethed upon Aurandecallio from three sides at once. In one big tenement section, sixty thousand people were burned in the wreckage of buildings that collasped when gutted by fire. All the bridges crossing the river which ran through the city were burned away, the steel frame work being melted and twisted into many str nge shapes, the maelstrom of flames pouring across the boiling rivers, being mingled with the multitudes of the screaming victims, who dived in, believing there was means of escapes in the waters.

The swirling clouds of smoke from the burning buildings was so thick that nothing no matter how near could be seen. In Aurandecallio no one survived the great disaster. The town of Marcocellio near by was stru k th by the great fire storm at the same time though she was situated fourmilesnorthwest of Aurandecallio. hile the flames were pressing downupon Marcocellio the roar of aurandecallios destruction could be heard, but the afrighted inhabatants got little time to save their house hold goods, and during the disaster thousands ost their lives. he wide extensive forest fire all along the stretches of railway lines were swept by a fire sea so f fierce that nothing there whatever could survive the bath of destruction. Over an acre of more than six hundred miles this terrible destruction had already spread, and the air was ful of debris, dust and smo e clouds for over a distance of twenty miles. Heart rending was the destruction of Marcocellio. here a beautiful city lately stood there was now axscene of desolation and horror, crushed and mangled remains of buildings burned to gutted ruins in the sport of that wild destructive fire storm. while theburned and scorched tree trunks of fire swept woods lay as thick as hshay. he hilly region around Aurandecallio and Marcocellio stood stripped of limb and bark gaunt skelt skeletons in a picture of death.

and the whole of the many columns of clouds changing into one vast spongy pillar spreading and expanding and forming a perfect canop in the sky. It rose and even sometimes above the clouds the sky seemed to be filled with fire, which made Jennisp-Wren-town and the surrounding country for a great extent becom a lighted red hell. Whole forests were literally burned to ashes by the immense fir oceans which seemed to be a all of smoke while the upper stratum ascended in l roaring twisted funnels of fire, and nature herself seemed to be comitting sucide so terrible was the destruction. amid all these scenes could be heard the horrible cries of the victims engulfed in the flames. The forest fire seized upon small towns in its path, the oceans of fire being scattered abroad. the fires swe crept upon the main lines of woods sweeping away an entire forest on the neighbori mountian ranges, each ascending eddie to form a fire storm of its own. The blask clouds were contu contin ally pierced by the flames and nothing could be heard a the roar of the flames as the whole of Jennis-Wren-town soon burst into a sea of fire. In the region of Angeline Riches and the Marcuccian gun Regions north of Jennis Wren-town the conflargration was so fierce that it appeared as if all the world was destroying itself. With titanic fury the flames roared, and a very sea of fire bu n burned its way toard the Marcuccian L n Lanes. Amid the ear s expliting r of explosions that scattered the wreckage of trees about the distance of five thousand feet, the fire burned fiercely across these wooded plains and upon to the platu ea platueas despite the energitic efforts of the fire fighters, incre the spreading destruction, moving across small creeks, and along on top of the tre tops and whole seas of flame were carried onward by fierce gales, the flames sweep through the wooded Marcuccian Lane gun districts burning all the foliage away, and seas of pendent moss with the hissing roar of millions of gigantic sky rockets. In a breath thousands upon thousands of the proudest tr trees were stripped of verdure, and never before had any other big forest fires before make a more appa sight, never before had the s ies looked so hedious, and the very atmosphere was with a roaring which would have done credist to one of the battles of Angelinia Agathin itdw itself.

Cloudsupon clouds of trees were fired like hissing gun powder. No seas of red death could be compared to such terrible fire destruction as this, and indeed indescribl was the fury of the flames sweeping the Marcuccian Lanes. Hundreds of fire fighters who had stro ve with might and main, and with many various means to stop the vill progress of the flames, were struck by the maelstroms of wreckage, from fallen t burns to earth on hands andknees, being struck with death suddenly as the rearing ocean of flames reached them. Many bodies were literally roasted to ashes, the flam scarcely even leaving their bones. It was horrible to imagine the red roaring death which overwhelmed so many of the brave fire fighters. and the injured i and the in juries to the thousands may scores of thousands of living, was more serious than the sufferings of the dying ones. Never before in all the war had the soldiers lived and died through the tortures which hundreds of thousands of fire fighters endured in this raging hell store storm, as it burned its way through the Marcuccian Lanes.

Thousands upon thousands were caught in big or small ravines completly roofed in by a se sea of roaring booming flames, which roared de deafenily down hill to to thill top in their thunderscof horrer, as they burned on, lying there through hours and hours of terrific heat, and destruction, maimed, fly fleyed, blinded, contorted, and suffering the horrible pangs of thirst. For hours during the terrific increase of the fire the destruction became more terrific. The fire storm passing from the Marcuccian Lanes reached the wooded Mic-Whirther Plains beyond, and burned fiercely across the plains, through immmerable glens, and lanes, becoming maelstr of seething roaring fire oceans, and the sky here seemed to be all of fire. This terrible sea of fire advanced with the speed of a hurri cane, the sh whole world to turn into a fire pit, the whirling cloud formations being of blood red color. Trees by the hundreds went crashing to the ground in every direction, the fire vil was fairly screaming like a hundred million demons, and the torrents of sparks mingled with the destruction. It was a veritible sea of death, and the whole regio seemed to be a pit, a pit of hedious red. Over all the mountian sides, bearidring Mic-Whirther plains streamed an unbroken roaring sea of fire, and nothing could be heard amid the drea ful roar of destruction, the heavens seemed to be sheeted with fire, and on the advancing side of the extensive conflargration the smoke of widely formed smudge fires was so thick that the course of the main fire could not be seen. And the conflargration came upon hundreds upon hundreds of them sands of gigantic explosions abandoned by the christians, which exploded with resounding crashes worse than the e heaviest of cannonading, and so loud was the uproar that the world seemed to be blowing to pieces.

The town of Marcuccian north of the Mic-Whirther plains, a big city rather was the next reached by the advancing o inferno. Soon Marcuccian was the scene of the wildest confusion.

an hour the edge of the conflargration had reached Phelans street which was changd into a hell of the greatest destruction. Reddish and yellow colored clouds, spread the black masses ,expanding out rapidly, the scene now becoming appalling. ultudes of men, women and children, were engulefed in the flames before they m chance of being rescued from the wreckage, and the air was filled with ful shrieks. The uproar of death cries awas awe inspiring. Wooden houses were blast- explosives bythe fire men in their desperate efforts to stop the progress of ames, but nothing could stop the ter rible tempest of fire which ignited tered ruins as fast as they fell, burning in a terrifying manner. ay to the west an awful sight was revealed. A monsterous death hell of flame ng a moving wallof fire that seemed to extend to the very clouds came pouring from a sea of building wreckage. The awful sweep of flames came so ething on, the main powder factorues factories which without warning blew up with a din, the explosions rendering the buildings to fragments, tearing the victims burning laudreds under tons of debris, suffocating many others with the clouds and hurled multitudes of blazing embers among other buildings filled with which also blew up, crushing the walls on top of the victims trying to and flooding the streets with a quivering sheet of flames which killed or burned outright.

the flames progressed igniting a grain elob elevator which was surrounded by ds of fugitives. This also blew up with such force, that two blocks of houses in the twinkling of an eye were rended in pieces the explosion filling the t as appalling roar, and thirty thousand others perished, while avalanches wreckage fell everywhere.

cloud formations under the main canopy spread out and strangely sa, colored clouds, forming in the weird aspect of millions of sponges spread r upward from the hor horizon and rose at a terrific rate. During other lar explosions wreckage flew about only to be w swallop s wa llowed up perfect sea of fire. Above the whole burning section the spongy shaped cloud like a stupendous carmine pall, and continued to spread, and the glaring tongues of flame shooting through it at intervals made the scene all the more parts of thi s swiftly ascending under clouds were of the blackest color, and attractive si ht(fight) and seemed to be in the form of two luminious dragon wings spreading hundreds of miles over the city, and filled at times t sheets of flames. The whole surface was agated in tumultious billows and ion,, and the redness it cast was more supernatural and more fearful, great conflargration before since the war began. The earth was literally burnd red hot and fearful indeed was the scene in the grave yards where the dead of been burne buried. The tombstones and stone b vaults melted like lava, and the bodies of the freshly buried dead scorched to blackness by the ground. All this was fearful. The rising wing shaped clouds of such immense as from the center of the main st i string of forest fires to the west and ing northeastward outflanked the city, cutting the inhabatsns from escape northward. Suddenly the frightful cloud was observed to become of frightful with rolling b ases and to rise upward with awful speed under the higher and push the latter forward, spreading and expanding in the most appalling as it pushed up to the clouds above, while an eminious intensely pillar cloud extended in front of it toward the horizon of house tops and in a few later not only Jennis Wren town but the woods on a portion of the slopes of Branch of the vivian gills, and the surrounding country, and the wooden plains was seen to respond to the glow of the appalling conflargration . the red glow for a time disappeared on account of the thickness of the clouds, and everything became hidden in the sack cloth blac mass which over- every reigon north of the advancing fire storm. hundreds of thousands of houses on Mic-Hollester Street every one was burned ground, the conflargration assuming frightful fury, and soon an angry bright as if it were the world on fire was visible along the Eastern horizon which however to break the darkness, to any great extent, the darkness at times Jennis-Wren- own out of view. Everything was obscured by the black save by the fearful shine of the flames which flared sublimity along the darkness and destruction continueing many multitudes of men women children trapped by the north east progress of the flames in the west, were from their feet by the concuss ion of fearful explosions, only to be buried by blazing wreckage. The sudden outbreak of the fire storm was unaccountable, was also fearful. At length the conflargration burned onward, hundreds of sands of sparks, and blazing embers being swirled about by the wind, while now a of flame seemed to strec stretch across the whole vast cloud, the flames seemingly last the air, and torrents of flaming embers deluged the houses. the southern and western part of the city seemed to disolve itself into fiercest seas of fire, the surrounding hills and wooded plains counter raged fire and on the boundories of the storm of fire appeared whirling clouds of sparks the roar of the flames was so great that it seemed as if the ground trembled,

In less than four days three quarters of the city was then only burning fiercely, and yet altogether consumed. he hotter became the fire the faster it progressed. Many fugitives hundered by the tangled masses of wreckage could not escape fast enough, only few of all the survivors not rescued from the wreckage after the disaster, escaped. It was a horrible scene indeed especially when the whole of the city was going, and o nehundred thousand, old e o old men women and even children perished miserably in the flames. Through vigorious means and various manuevers genera, Vivian armies managed to escape from the forest fire, but many guns and ammunition were aban doned to the flames the sky being rended by myriads of terrific earthshaking explosions. From a safe di tance general Hansons and the two vivians, and even Violet and her sisters viewed the destru ction of Angelinia Agathis, and with tears in the e eyes.

The day was sultry and the sky filled with an oppressi ve w warmth. Everything in death silence. Hundreds of thousands of horses belonging to cavarly men were seen straining at their halters and looking upon their masters with strange eyes.

Caresses could not, and would not comfort them and they were not assured by words. Many dogs howled, and raved, and by terrific lunges broke their restraining restrictions tethers and d sh dashing madly everywhere caused maddog scares at many places. Thousands of fowls of a ll kinds here and there deserted their coops and nests, in refuge only God knows where. he creatures of the air wre were frequently seen flying toard the north as if persued by a foe that struck greater terror than any man or beast, and scarcely would cats lift their heads in sight of a man or more late this pathe great tragedy was imminent in nature. The air was charged with a warning man could not read or understand. Nothing on the trees stirred or moved. The stag atmosphere which had been so clear that objects could be seen at a distance of more than ten miles from a high point of view, was now obscured by a thickness base, and the rising sun shone as red as iron under the smiths hammer. The heat was intolerable and late that afternoon peculiar changes anew were noticed in the a atmosphere. The silence of the calm seemed to stop the beam beating of many hearts the silence was ever so dreadful that it seemed to resemble as if the armies were assembled before the Tribunal of Jehovah awaiting their Judgement.

And terrible darkness had been gathering over Jennie Wren Town in Calverinia county miles east of Angelinia Agathis and suddenly the oppressive silence was broken by the far distant roar of the approaching fire storm. This brought a general thrill of horror among the Angelinians stationed there, for they knew what was coming.

"I don't like the oaction of these clouds." was the comment of many officers. "They seem to be moving upward in all different ways, and listen to that rolling roar. My how it makes the eith r tremble."

"It's an approaching fire of somekind." Said general Malhoof. "And these an ele clouds o are freakish and my how dark it is getting."""

"What is that funny noise?" gasped another officer as a queer hissing sound filled the air over above the city in the far distance.

"It is probably the flames." Said a man beside him. "Look how e queerly the clouds are movings" uddenly a queer snarling noise seemed to come from the direction of Marenelia as the thunder of some explosions sounded, and the ground seemed to tremble. Then came the crash of some big explosion in the distance, which probably meant that many sections of trees were being blasted to the earth in the frantic efforts to stop the flames. Then amid the thun der of the explosions there came a loud irregular like thousands of cannon from an exploding powder house, while the deafening din of the unfortunate victims responded in a more universal roar, and then far in the distance thousands of buildings started to burst into flames. (Why)

The first onslaught of the conflagration ignited all the buildings in the outskirts of Jennie Wren town, hundreds perishing before they could escape, while at the same time avalo avalanches of flame poured from the wreckage and whole se ctions of buildings became furnaces, while thousands of strange mysterious explosions went off in a furious rattle. The uproar of the destruction continued a while from the flames a large column of the blackest clouds tinged with a color arose in the air, while a sea of fire sweeped with a blasting roar through the of trees. This soon became into one and thousands of men, women and chil children, who had just been re u rescued from the wreckage, and who lagged behind the main sea of fugitives were burne down amid the hideous sea of fire.

In the distant horizon the main canopy of smoke clouds seemed to become so that it seemed as if the end of the world was coming the lower portions of the cloud becoming blazing red , while the snarling red tongues of flame lighted up the see o scenery at night, far and wide.

P.Partial.
PARTIAL DESTRUCTION OF ABBIEANNIAN CITY BY FLOOD AND FIRE, AFTER MYSTERIOUS CONCUSSIONS LIKE EARTHQUAKES, AND AIR WAVES.

The large number who were so furt fortunate to survive the destruction of the large city of Abbieann, by earthquake shocks, flood and fire, and also from the horrors of Glandilinian Vandals will surely never forget the terrible first morning of June the 11th 19[illegible], some time probably later after the terrible battle of Phelantonburg which was over a hundred and eightymiles distant south. Angelinia Gronburg, Jennie, Wren, and Angeline Riches, also Hilarea Maxwell, and some other friends of theirs were in that ill fated city at the time; and so shocked and surprised and horrified were they then, that they only have a vivid remembrance of the evening before.

Gertrude Angeline herself had claimed before that she somehow or other had been slightly suspicious, and had sensed impending disaster for varying lengths of times before the concussion of the earth came. and she said, the shocks were more from distant; Mysterious than of a common natural earthquake, and which made her remember the days Like the great Mid-shirthern Sun, and Lake Bellicia, horrors but that this was the greatest Mid horror of the ear.

Jennie Wren herself was said to possess some kind of strange psychi c power, and she had declared to Gertrude Angeline, that she felt as if some great [illegible] in the air, and that at night time she often dreamed that the city either had [illegible] into smoking debris, or that weights were on her head, and she walked on the [illegible] of some great abyss. Once Angeline Riches said she dreamed the whole city seemed to sign into the air in a cloud in one of her dreams, and that afterwards the [illegible] was under a sea of water. Milared Maxwell said that she fancied in her [illegible] of Calverinia was under a supernatural warning. She maintained that, in her sleep she had [illegible] some sort of supernatural warning. She maintained that, in her sleep she had [illegible] that the figures of Violet and her sisters appeared to her seemingly enwinged; [illegible] was ascerted that on the same night when she went to bed on the night of the [illegible] found difficulty in breatying. Knowing the da had been warm she sat up in looking out the window said she saw an immense cloud rolling inmillions of [illegible] high into the air and spread almost the same way far overhead, as if it was an immense thunder cloud, but that the color was black and white she knew it must [illegible] big fire.

Gertrude Angeline said herigalde told her, that at about midnight he observed in the [illegible] in the same location where Riches saw the big clouds rising, an intense [illegible] and that frequently she had observed from the cloud and along the horizon many [illegible] looked like blazing meteors or comets daggers shaped and flamed colored streak [illegible] with or upward across the sky, and bargi so funny into millions of other kinds of light that he believed some mountain blown by might have suddenly turned into a volca [illegible] in violent eruption.

Miller knew it was a big forest fire far away from the city which had struck a [illegible] dump and started explosions more sublime than the greatest di p display [illegible] Yet even this was not the cause of the disaster. Even to many of the people [illegible] city strange supernatural warnings were conveyed, especially those who [illegible] ng the omens. Everybody of course had thought of the recent big disasters [illegible] by Glandilinian vandals and other enemies, because of the past horrors already [illegible] in the war such as these disasters already known which occured at Glendals [illegible] the 19th 1912 and which flood being general had hundated nearly four [illegible] ndred miles of country side, and of other disasters occured at Schlosdortown, [illegible]ville, Lake Bellicia, and of another big disaster which had occured early in [illegible] also affected scores of towns at Lallilies Sun, and where the cities of Big [illegible] Pool, Heidi Junction, Jeeslidia, Little Girl pool were hardest hit, and even [illegible] Agathis suffered but none of them believed that such a disaster would occur up [illegible] far north, because the region was usually protected by Christian armies. [illegible] were the explosions came from which destroyed the city and flooded it. No one knew [illegible] till three weeks after it. (See main description of flood horrors in proceeding [illegible] sters and learn how easily flood could have been prevented if the government had [illegible] the proper provisions against such disasters?()()

The city's mayor had made the statement, and announced that he had been told by [illegible] soldiers by mail that there had appeared to be something suspicious by enemies [illegible] the Christian country going on near one of the very long dikes of the Big Norma [illegible] river on or about May the 29th, and said that if the Glandilinians were really doing [illegible] that they were suspected of, there would be an explosion which would open up [illegible] Grande dike and cause a flood which would break all records entirely as the [illegible] was in a terrible flood stage at the time because of recent heavy spring rains. [illegible] claimed the explosions could be made of such force in blasting asunder this dyke [illegible] they would probably cause earthquakes like that which destroyed the towns around [illegible] Bellicia, and picnic Lunsin. his theory however was not new, other investigators ha d sompetetive sure thing. It was given wide publicity chiefly because of th energetic labors of many who tried to warn towns and cities close by of the impendin disaster, and giving accounts of recent flood fire and explosion disasters.

Angelinia Arenburg and jennie tutmer urmer had left thearmy atthis time to be about a weeks furlough. As they went into the downtown street of Abbie-ann city they neverbelieved the city could be so prosperous during a war like the one raging, neit did they expect to see it more stimultaing more alive then on the afternoon of the fourteenth. It was a perfect late spring day in June but almost too warm for comfort, and as the two beautiful gir hirl heroines slowly walked down the street tward an o square they saw far overhead a thick bunch of rolling clouds, of white pink and dunlish color eve evening though it was afternoon. At first the two girls thought a thunderstorm was coming but looking more closely at the cloud they observed it was smoke?

If anybone had if any one had ever observed immense rolling thunderclouds, with probably millions of fantastic rolls in it towering to great heights, with an underpart of darker color than they will know what this cloud looked like.

Since this was to be the last day for the girls in the city providing they wishe to go to Angelinia gathia to inspect thevacabelization camps there as asked by visi her sisters, Gertrude having suggested to jennie to take in a show with her, but Je did not care for a movie at that time saying that she felt of some impending disast and that she therefore preferred to walk. The two then ate a leisurely supper both being hungry, washing it down with only black coffee and ending with ice cream at a little Abbieannian restu restaurant on upper hannia Street.

Abbieannien city I must tell the reader is in this story about a little bigger than new York, rooklin and "obk Hoboken and ondon, including hicago put to getyr put together and has as many inhabatants as all these cities combined but all Abbie and not one foriegner nor disloyal National even though it is situated in northwest alverinia. Intending to go to Angelinia gathia the next night, Jennie urmer Turn had made sleeping reservations on a Mic-ollester and Pandora train that left the Un Grand station at eleven thirty oclock the next night. She wanted to take the Arenbe Limited but had been informed that on account of the war raging in the territory between Pleantenburg, Calmerinia, and Cedermine creek, no trains on the Abbieannia Rondinia, and alverine railroad were running any further south, than ransie Allen go when supper was over, the two girls had another day to remain with their girl friends, including Penrod who was with them.

They walked slowly across the city to the Allgrove otel where Gertrude Arn had taken up her lodgings with her guide this hotel being At ester and north Avenu st michael treet.

" Well jennie we had a good meal for once since we left the army for our fi furlough. said Gertrude. " want to come into my room for the evening?"

" yes if you don;t mind. But where is Angeline Richoe, and Mildred Maxwell. h promished to meet me at north Avenue at two oclock and here we are at the spot and they are not here, and its half past two."

" Maybe we were too late in coming ourselves said ertrude."

" That could not be the cause. exclaimed Jennie. " I believe they have gone to se where that big fire is. They are very interested in big fires and will run to one immediately."

" Su such a plan is none the better for them" gertrude agreed." But it seems t far to go and see it, and it might not be in the city at all. And how about Penrod."

Both she and jennie, and the two other girls ate dinner with Penrod the noon time the day before.

" Oh he is very clever. He is not given to any worldly priase. He is as brave as good mannered as he is good looking too. And he certainly keeps himself clean an never has a dirty uniform on like most other boy scouts do."

In the meantime Penrod had gone out with Angeline ichoe and Mildred Maxwell though they had ridden in the street car in the direction where they saw the immen smoke clouds rise, and stayed on the car as far as it would go, they when getting saw the smoke was as far as away in the horizon as when they had first observed it.

" osh and thought it was only a few blocks away" said Angeline ichoe with stamp of her foot. " It might have been at least a mile. Where is it do you suppo suppose Penrod?"

" I cannot tell. said he. " We,ll walk over and ask that policeman ."

They were in a moment standing before him and he asked " well little girls and scouts of Abieannia did you have a good street car ride."?

The popl policeman saw they were in uniform and therefore had questioned the " None better" The copper agreed." And how about your companion."

" She's smart."

" And she's as pretty as a robin a daisy" said Penrod." And she certainly wears fine uniforms. But sir I have asked if you know where that fire is over yonder."

The policeman looked closely and said;

" Why that is no fire children. That's a big thunder----shy in Heaven it is sm gun. And it looks like a thundercloud. But I cannot tell. If you go to the roof of big nineteen hotel building over there you may be able to see its source better."

ing the officer they went tward the hotel and took their way up to the roof by means its lengthy fire escape. up on the roof they found it cooler and a wind was blowlong a wind was blowing lightly. There were many of the hotel occupants on the roof, and ne had their attention directed to the unusually large cloud of smoke. Angeline ed sniff xcontemptuously.

" that must be a real hell of a fire where ever it is" he said looking at the rising ud of carefully. It looks so large even when rising from the very horizon line and yet ere we can tell it is far from the city itself." He walked over to the other side of e roof and took a look at the upper sections of the smoke clouds.

" The smoke clouds are so full of reols and bul bulges that it makes so great ight that even most of the people below in the streets are sitting on door steps, or ning out of windows, even sti stopping in the streets or on sidewalks gazing at it" ontinued. " Over yonder that square is so jammed with people that you would think fire was burning there. Yet no sign of a fire anywhere in the city."

" it's just over there though in the southwest, and so large are the clouds even from the horizon that it makes us think it is only a few flocks off."

" I did not think it could be so far, just because wanted to see what it most complained Mildred."

" It goes to show that things are not what they appear, and that what you may think ay be altogetyer altogether different." said Angeline.

" I did not say thought it so close as all that" Declared Mildred. " I said did like to be disappointed."

Penrod and Angeline smiled. Mildred always had these fits when she thought she would ve and find it too far away. She would be enjoying herself hugely when she ddenly remember that h she would be suddenly disappointed, and as good a girl Mildred, she nevertheless did not approve of the things she thought h she would see, e would find too far away to her liking. Whereupon she would immediately come out th her complaints. Mildred was about nine years old, beautiful, well formed and ong for her age, and afraid of nothing ex except sin and lightning. I think she ars lightning however to sin.

" I believe that big fire cloud is a fake at that" she grumbled with fine scorn, though in her heart she knew as well as Penrod or Richoe did that it was a fire of enormous proportions." I believe it is only abig thunder cloud after all. If it was a fir
I believe it be proved. There's no place or means to show it is a fire. I looked at this already with my field glasses and see nothing that would reveal a fire Anyhow if it is a real fire then it must be half smoke and half rain cloud. My it rolls rolls even across the sky and it seems milesthick."

Angeline Richoe laughed, handing back Mildreds glass for she too had been looking at it. It remembered her comment when she saw the cloud first the evening before.

" How prove that is really smoke?" she demanded, as she and Richoe and Penrod looking like by the open windowlooking at it. " Mildren looked at the horizon line ce again and said she saw an immense cloud roll upward from the horizon as if e was trying to puff its insides out, and that there was a few flashes of ghtening it like lightning.

" It the one great scene as if Mt. Calverine was a blowing p up w" was her explan of the scene she witnessed, and then she pointed down the street to another bulk ing on whose roof was a crowd of men women and children watching the great clouds, ud spread with its continual roll over so much of the sky, and push upward d spread with millions of other big roc rolls, one above the other, and yet spread with uned darkness under neath.

" See " ildred indicated them" Everyone is looking at these clouds."

Without preface or apology Penrod turned to Angeline Richoe.

" going to leave the city to follow after and see what the fire is?" he demanded ply.

" I'm afraid not it is further than thought" she returned wondering how he had guessed that she had wished to.

" Why not girls. If you desire to go ahead. But I'll remain for a time with ude and jennie, and then if they like, we,ll go too."

" thanks Penrod for your permission. That's all I've been waiting for. But then don't want to go there, unless the others go with me."

Mildred wiped the glasses ofthe field glasses wiped the lens of the field glasses n then handed it to Penrod so he too could take a good look.

" Maybe you think that fire is too dangerous, to throw so much smoke into the sky that" Angeline Richoe said." But if ertrude and jennie intend to go and investigate in case they too observe the smoke why I'm willing to go with them. I wonder h what y think that we did not wait at the appointed place at two oclock for them."

" Maybe they knew the reason by this time. And jennie is a girl with plenty of torlent d brains. Besides she is a good daring girl scout in the bargain and will go any ere. She is a thousand per cent better girl than even the Princesses themselves, and eve ey themselves said so. I have watched Violet and her sisters together, and they ed as Jennie urmer a whole lot."

" Yes but remember you are Angeline Richoe without family, torlent or brains" Penrod with fraternal candor. " That's why they too are apt to pick you. Girls like you and they like to make war martyrs of themselves while boys generally stay at home and hide like chickens when they see the butcher coming."

"Shut up Penrod that's not the way to talk" said "Mildred." Besides , don't think boys are all chicken hearted because they stay at home and do not enter the army as s

"Don't you believe it. I've heard a lot about the child slaves, but they don't

"why how could they, but the slaves have made a name of themselves by living

"Yes and they have just now a hell of a place to live and work in" Penrod grow as he walked to the west side of the roof. "The rotten apartments used by masters

Mildred threw back her pretty head and laughed.

she again. "And I have not yet met a citizen in tyl this city, man woman or a chil destroyed everything in the commercial, financial and the artistic world that was centered in these regions."

"Yes but only a thousand or so were drowned in the Mic-ghirther Flood, while they say only a million were recovered from the other flood. And think of the fright

Penrod looked at his watch and turned to go down the fire escape.

"Time to go back to Gertrudes hotel?" asked Aiches

"Nearly." Then he grinned. "I admit" He said" That as long as this war contin

The whole three went down the steps, and walked tward the street where the stood. Then penrod standing in front decided to wanted to go down town for an hou

Therefore he turned and shook hands with the two girls.

"If I see anything good down there I might stay till past midnight" He smiled." I see you girls as if you were my s sisters even if you are Abbiemnians, and I'm an old foreigner. In fact all you Abbiemnians qualify better than all of the worthy foreigners I have seen in Canadian and other American cities. We have been here in this city nearly a week, and never heard one man say a bad wor,d never saw a child refuse to obey its parent, and Last Sunday no one missed mass, and kept the pri priests very busy. As for the women folk they have reached the point where they'd rather listen to a sermon and go to mass every day than a person would rather go to a show. The same with the men. No one scolding each other, no mothers or fatyers nagging their children, children getting into trouble, fighting, or doing anything wrong. That's the test of the love, especially with an Abbiemnian. Such scenes does not come in New ork, Montreal, or other places I've been over the seas. So I'll enjoy the holiness of these Abbiemnian cities while I may. I'll come to the hotel in several hours, and tell you girls and Gertrude and jennie other discoveries I've made. But look out. I may make friends with many other girls."

And grinning mischieviously he started away and then paused.

"Then I come back I'll tell you of what the down town stores look like, and where we can buy many things we'll need for our trip to Angelinia Agathia, which we proposed to go the flood there, providing a train will take us . I'll bet we'll find people there the same way."

"You bet you will." laughed Angelina and then as he waved his hand they waved back and shouted;" Don't forget the address of the hotel, and don't make a mistake and try and find the fire."

After the girls went inside Penrod took a down town street car, and then after walking for the girls went inside Penrod took a down town street car, and then after slightly went to where the store was, and bought the book. Then he son wandered irres olutely about the street. Many persons passed back and forth, and being of a foreign appearance despite his uniform the boy thought when alone every one would ente.
stared him curiously but it was not so every one. just went about their business. Yet was illogical but an overwhelming desire to see the big Norma gin river as it glided through the big city had come upon him, and stopping a little girl on the street, he asked her which street was the bridge across the river.

She looked at him for a moment and then said;

"It's a long ways off, but if you like I can take youthere."

This surprised him for he had never expected it. But he declined the offer, but said it was good, the girl knew he was foriegn and a stranger in the city and she said;

"But if you go so far alone you might get lost. I know the way there, and back to his street. Don't worry about it, I'll take you there."

And so he went, and after several hours he was back on his street, and then before the little girl went he offered her a dollarvfer her service but she smiled and said;

"Thanks little boy but you needo it more than I do" and after kissing him suddenly on his fire head she ran off waving him a farewell as she did so.

Penrod then happened to remember that a policeman had told him of the nature of the Abbiemnian children girls or boys, and now he had one experience which he desired to tell Gertrude and the others by telephone for he was too impatient to hold it in his thoughts to get back . Therefore he stepped into the nearest phone booth, and first called the hotel.

Believing an answer he asked;

"Has the girl scouts, Angelinia Aronburg, and thevothers returned to their hotel?"

"Who is this speaking?" asked the proprietor of the hotel.

Penrod told who he was and recieved answer;

"They are on their way upstairs sir just back from supper in the hotels dining room, If you'll walk a minute I'll ring the room."

Penrod waited for a minute and then-

"Yes" came a voice which was Gertrudes.

"Angelinia, This is Schofield Penrod. May I see you for a moment or two? I must get out of the store, and a little girl took me to the river and I like to see you all because-- I'd like to see you" he ol concluded lamely when she answered;

"No Penrod you could not see me now. This is a telephone not a telescope." she said this quite dead into the mouthpiece, and Penrod almost burst out laughing.

Then she continued" "you had better come over and tell me. We are up here in the room and we have been watching that distant fire. Why the sky is all aglow. But why were you in such a hurry to speak now."

"Why asked a little girl to take or to direct me to the river as I wished to see it badly, and she insisted on taking me so I would not be lost. She took me all the way back to this street street and when I offered her a dollar for it she refused to take it, kissed me and ran off."

"Penrod. (" Gertrudes voice was decided." That is nothing unusual. You'll find it that you get used to it." He had been astonished for Gertrude had not gasp at his announcement. The sound of her voice was more like an excited giggle..she said

Waiting for a minure and then the telephone operator interru t interrupted-

" Your time is up, place."

" Don't cut us off yet please" Penrod said. I'll drop another nickle." He fumbl into his change pocket and finally dropp d dropped it in. go the conversation contin
" Penrod dear don:t forget your promiah to tell us everything you see when you return said Gertrude."

Penrod happened to look around and saw a number of people in the drug store. By t time he was excited, and some one stepping up to the booth looked closely at Penrod
It was the little girl who had befriended him. Then knowing that time was precious penrod hung up the reciever.

With all the people in the store looking at him penrod did not know what say next. He had a vague idea that the little girl had told them of his goodness to her.

" Are you going home now" asked the little girl.

" Yes" said penrod. " I live near Northavenue." He was so embrassed now it was the only thing he could think of saying.

" Then I mean to go with you" she said. But I cannot tell you why. You are a stranger here and need to be directed so you won't be lost. All these people said, they wish you were their son. They all like you."

As she wished to go with him to the hotel he did not object as she said her moth lived up that way and she too was returning home.

To get the car he wanted penrod had to walk north on St anne avenue. He was then very much elated, or at least he was not conscious of any feeling of elation ov though the little black haired girl befriended him and wished to accompany him. In was worrying over the most trival details of the engagement between glandelinia and annia, and the outcome. He was greatly concerned lest glandelinia in the long run should come out victorious in the long run, instead of Abbiannia, winning the war.
And it was the first and only time in his life(probably if he did not live a billi million years before this) that he was ever even ever disturbed by the strange acti of the glandelinians, and of the great and many disasters he had heard of, and can which was raging now. He had friends in Big Girl school and also in Heidi Junction He was worried as he could get no word from them. He also worried about Violet, and her sisters, because he had not seen or heard from them a long time, and having h they intended to go to Heidi Junction he feared they might too have had experienc the flood disaster and might have drowned. He saw how people were in Abbiannia, h
dear all the little children were, to friends and strangers and parents alike; no being punished for anything, for they did no wrong, parents good and kind, and every respectable to you. And when he thought of what the Glandelinians were doing, and the great loss caused by the disasters, his own nature had changed. first when he over with Greatheart, he had only a mere desire for adventure, just to see what a war looked like, and how two armies of both sides would fight but he never expected war that was waged against humanity an nature combined by a ruthless enemy. He was if he would be quite right to tell gertrude and her friends that he could not help hate such an enemy, and if he did that how he could prevent them from knowing that really be on his mind.

These and other ridiculous details occupied his mind, while he was walking Twenty First street. There he stopped as his little companion reminded him he was again going the wrong way. Penrod looked at his watch. it was just nine oclock. H His companion retraced their steps to Pine avenue and waited for the car which is this street run every five seconds that is each car. He caught the first uptown car intending to get off right at the corner of the hotel where the little girl w to bid him good by for the night.

As he it happened the car was crowded. He and the little girl walked forward and stood at the front door in the car at whose right was the motor mans box like control room. To that circumstance he and the little girl owe their lives.

As the two car train raced down the street at twenty miles an hour, penrod constantly watched the red and green signal lights that flashed past as the car ra along, or stopped with a rattle of doors, and a grinding of air brakes, at the for in the streets of Abbiannian cities and towns cars do not stop at every here, but only at stations like the "leveed," and only at three miles apart. The stop was at Nine Ninth street. More passengers got off that entered the car, all jolly crowd of men and girls which filled the aisle behind them. The train moved ring speeding speed as she went. Then came the first shock of some far distant ion. This occured just at about ten oclock but penrod would have sworn the shock from an earthquake and was not caused by any explosions. Yet it shows how little credence one may give to ones own judgement of time. The car had been moving at a twenty five miles an hour or over, when suddenly the car lurched, and simultaneously Penrod saw tremendous showers of glass come crashing down from all the windows of building tall or low. Then he and the little girl were thrown violently against the of the motor mans control room, and at the same instant the lights went out, both in the street car, and in the streets, and all windows of houses that had been lit

The train then left the track and with a tremendous crash of glass the right hit the wall of a house for the train was mysteriously thrown clear of the tracks and ran clean upon the side walks. The motor man fell sprawling out the door and a full minute he lay upon the car floor numbed in mind while his plapalsied limbs

ing the war, when he was close to a battle line, and "Glandelinian batteries were sending their shell and shrapnell far to the rear, and when one could hear the -yi-yi-yi-yi-yi-yi- scream of the shell of the hiss of grape and canister before hot the ears. But the very blackness of the darkness outside, and yet in the pierced by the red glow of the far distant fire was as terri- terrifying and fascinating as the trains sudden derailment with its accompaniment of wails and shrieks from the injured. He knew how a person must feel at the moment when a earthquake disaster really overtakes a town.

motor man, the little girl, and the fragments of the cars door had fallen upon rod. He stirred and muttered in Abbiannian" My God have mercy upon us." He was just ering to his feet when a second shaking or tremor of the ground threw him down his shoulders digging into penrods stomach, and making him yell.

" Jet has exploded" Pgenro- penrod gasped!

" It ain't no explosion, at least I don't think so." He returned. " That is an quake, for I have been in several before."

rod felt sure it was a quake caused by an explosion but he did not wish to argue the motor man. Just then in the streets there was a terrific roar as the front of buildings reeked and collasped upon the pavement and half of the train was instantly ed.

" Good bye Abbiannian" The motor man found his feet and helped penrod and the girl to get up.

" Come along with me" he ordered. " We must get the people at of this wrecked as soon as possible somhow."

" But, in all that wreckage?"

" Yes, in all that wreckage", save, in the streets of the city, and in other houses illed them in the wrecked, save, in the streets of the city, and in other houses ed but starting afire was bedlam. He slid the front door open, unhooked the guard , and dropped down to the tracks." Come along little boy and girl" he ordered." We will hurry to the next station and get us some help from the people there. and we will have to get lights as we cannot do anything without a light."

rod hesitated about stepping down in the street

" The children need not be afraid of the third rail now" the motor man assured them.
" Electricity was disconnected by the quake."

The two children hastily stumbled along behind him more than once tripping bris in the streets and columns that had been shaken from their places. They left e house of the wrecked debris covered train behind, and found themselves silent part of the street and which silence was as oppressive as a tomb. Once both motor man and the little girl fell upon a girder and penrod stumbled over them as they regained their feet they all heard a loud hissing sounds, and also ered by a sudden brightening of the sky, that a big fire was starting in some part the city.

" What that noise?" Penrod asked, but in another moment he certainly found out, for smell the sweetish sickish or oder of illuminating gas. The motor man sniffed too.

" It's a broken gas main in the street somewhere" He said shortly." And we have to if those poor people in the wrecked train has a chance for their lives--look out all run for it." The whole three did, and got away just in time for a wall story building demlished before by the shock but still standing finally ed and crashed like thunder into the street, and the three of them were smudged in horrible cloud of plaster dust, while a board and brick hit the motor man on the back him flat upon his face. No one was injured and getting to his feet he broke into shuffled run. " Hurry" he urged. They stumbled on. They were trying to breathe a little and hurry as fast as possible) and at the same time keep an eye upon any wall might be sagging forward from any half wrecked building.

Far ahead of them down the street something startled the three for it roared fully like an approaching express train. Penrod realized it was not just as he instinctively thought to flatten himself against the wall of a building to let it
. It was the sound of water, it was a perfect deluge of water, pouring down the street and into many other streets like a huge tidal wave. The whole three hit the water simultaneously.

" The earthquake might have destroyed one of the levees of the river" The motor said. " We will have to swim for it."

In another second or so the man himself was waist deep in the water, and it hit penrod and the little girl like a wave, which lifted them from their feet and they stretched their arms to swim with a purely instinctive motion of self preservation. A third and higher rush of water engulfed them, and they felt themselves hurled back through the street in the direction from whence they had come. Penrod swallowed a mouthful of water struggled gasped, and sank. Then his knee hit something hard. Half waking, half swimming he felt a concrete step, and above it a picket like fence. The deluge from the broken flow of the river had tossed both the boy and girl like driftwood upon the platform of a building. Penrod never knew what because of the little girl or the motor man who saved his life by leading him from the wrecked train. perhaps with their best better meas

but direction they may have reached some other platform and escaped into some high build his but that could not be really hoped for for it was more likely that the rush of water which lifted the boy up to safty carried them both down the street, and hurled them against the wreckage. He clung desperately to the iron iron pickets moving cautiously along them until he reached a open door way i to a four story building in which most of the people were huddled in terrified groups. He waded past the house however but k but keeping to the dryer part of the side walk and then reaching a hilly slat in the p street free of rising water so far crawled on his hands and knees up to the highest point hoping the water would never get up there. And his teeth were chattering from the chill of the water.

From the moment of the first mysterious shock, when the train had reeled off its track, the boy hadsbeen in the most p oppressive darkness he had ever known. It could be compared to the interior of the smallest room on the darkest night, plus a strange blackness that weights one down beneath it. However now the street was light, though there was no moon or stars no street lights, or lighted houses. The light came from dozens of wrecked houses that were burning near by like huge mountain torches. throwing a terrific heat even from that distance. About him the street was fully da but looking southward, toward Ade street he could see an indistinct mob of fugitive quickly crossing the street, and they seemed to be moving toard Riverview Avenue in ina direction away from the river itself.

Between the spot where penrod stood, and the Hotel where he and Angelinia Arenb and his girl friends lived, six blocks below, the streets were half filled with debris fronts of buildings had crumbled out, completely blocking all traffic. Far beyond down the street where the flood had entered he could hear the water hiss and boil. And at first he really wondered where the flood had really come from and then he remembered the long li dike of the river not far from the river side of the city. must have gone or broke down during the qk quake, allowing the river water to surge into the lower sections of the city.

Penrod realized he must find gertrude Angelina and her girl companions and t them to some place of safty if indeed there was any such spot existing upon the twis earth. In other tremendous disasters refugees, and historians had mentioned the sam paralysing experience, and the thought that any calamity so tremendous must have bee shaked by every person living in the world itself. before penrod reached the hotel another shock lasting only a second however made him reel in his tracks and then go flat upon his face. That seemed to have been the final vibration, which occured at eleven oclock at night, but that simultaneously to the shock penrod felt sure he ha a strange & far off noise like rolling thunder. weakened, giddy, he got to his feet, again fell into the street. building fronts, and stone cornices that had been loose by theshocks of a few minutes before crashed to the pavement and in all other buildi still standing furniture was crashed and all remaining window glass crashed down. penrods very eyes the outer wall of a large building rocked, and slowly, majestically crumpled into a heap.

All the rooms in front of this building was left exposed. in it furniture of all kinds including a grand big piano hung precariously poised upon the very edge of the sagging floors. As said before there was at this time no sigh or sound of human near penrod, and surely he might have been in one of those old dead cities so often heard and read of, especially pompeii whose ruined dwellings are peopled only by bi and other creatures on wing. The open doorway of one of the nearest hotels was parti blocked by carved stone decorations and other wreckage which had fallen from the fr at the eighteenth floor. One huge block had crashed through the pavement leaving b bblack hole into which a little of the rising flood waters poured and gurgled.

And indeed the menance of that dreadful hole made penrod dizzy, and therefore crawled around he carefully upon his hands and knees, afraid indeed that he would would be seized by vertigo and tumble in. Then he dragged himself into the lobby.

He was surprised to see the little girl who had befriended him sitting there but quite terrified.. Except for her the entrance was deserted, and smoke came from the interior of the great structure which proves it was on fire some where. she had a c for light stuck into a large p spool hole which stood upona table, and she was upon an old chair seeming almost too afraid to move. but on seeing penrod enter she aroused and looked relieve.

"Hello" he called. " I'm glad you have escaped theflood. but nevertheless looked to be half drowned."

"yes , escaped the flooded street" penrod gasped steadying himself against table. " I'm glad you to escaped the trainthat was wrecked and got clear of the though I don't know how you really did it."

"I swam." she said. All the rest were drowned."

The horror of it all was strongly upon penrod but still more upon her." I know eve y one in the train must have been drowned----a whole train full as the wreckage reached down upon it from the building covered it so no one could get out of the re there these two. the little girl nodded understandingly.

" sit down my boy" she said. " We are safer here than anywhere else, providing

" where did they all go to"? asked penrod.
" Search me." The little girl shrugged her shoulders." I only saw them go ard that street(indicating with her finger) when those buildings yonder came n them at once. They did not even have time to scream." so sit down and keep me
, I'm afraid here alone."
" No thanks little girl, it is not safe for us here. We both must be going."
" You are not going to go out to night amid all these falling buildings, are you?
you are not intending to commit sucide." she said this while she wiped the tears her eyes."
The sound of her voice brought penrod to his senses as nothing else would have penrod nodded.

the little girl decided to go too then and penrod blew at the candle and put the

" I hope we will be in good luck" said the little girl as she accompanied him. " And you will find your friends safe. And remember if there are any more shocks of if

" Are you the only one alone in here little Girl ? ." Penrod asked.
" I'm the only one who was alived for , entered here to get dry" she said." There some parts of this house that is all broken down-----and----and---you cannot count those lying dead I found in many rooms above which all fell and then is on fire. Oh it is horrible." But I guess the most of them went outbin the panic and got killed by the falling buildings. It was unbelievable here then of such horrors. But we had good luck so far."
They walked cautiously around the big hole in the pavement which had unerved penrod before when he entered, they looked up and saw that the hotel was a fifteen story structure, that one side of it was down into rumshakle ruins and all other portions were enormous volcanoes of flame and smoke making a light that reflected the darkened skies for many blocks. As they looked they saw other big fires were burning far off. They reached Caldwell Avenue which was a perfect litter of all kinds of wreckage many of which was smoking and smouldering already. There were many bodies in the wreckage but not one of them was alive, there was not a sound, a cry of any one wounded calling for help. It seemed as if a terribly destructive tornado of city wide size and unbelievable killing stringer force than a tornado had accompanied the earthquake shocks and like some huge mammoth vacum cleaner swept up the streets levelling the strongest and most massive of all the buildings and killed the many thousands of men women and children who had lived along the street. Much such sights unnerved horrified both the girl and boy. Along Twelvth street the old stone and brick buildings for blocks and blocks were almost entirely leveled crumbled by the repeated shocks. Some walls had tumbled into the cellar while all others had spilled over like childrens blocks upon the pavement, or other heaps were left in the same ramshackle ruins you see in pictures of a ruined town after a big tornado had ripped through.

The hotel occupied by Angelinia Aronburg and her girl friends was on the other the east side of the street. He and the little girl went tward Riverview Park Avenue without the slightest thought of the difficulties they were to encounter. It seemed a simple matter to walk those eighteen blocks or more that seperated the hotel they just left with that oc occupied by Gertrude Angeline and the others.

Indeed it was a strange adventure night, a strange night for those on furlough, an improbable incomprehensible and yet a fascinating experience. Less than three hours had passed since penrod had had telephoned to Gertrude Angeline, and Penrod felt he had lived through a week of terror. Minutes and even yards were sometimes inadequate standards for measuring time and distances. Any one may in an instant be able to throw a stone across a gulf or crevasse, and spend more than a month or so in reaching the spot where the pebble landed. Or even any one may crowd into a single night or evening, the adventures of a normal lifetime.

As the two continued on, penrods foot struck something soft and yelding that upon the pavement. He bent over and lighted a match for the distant fires were only insufficient illumination to permit him to discover what this object might be. It was the body of a man face down upon the asphalt, the first of many thousands of bodies that they passed. In the mans arms was a rosary, which he had been praying on when a ton of stone rolled down and pin pinned him beneath it. The boy and girl shivered and went on.

At a first glance from quite a distance in the dark penrod thought the many apartment buildings along Riverview Park Avenue had scarcely been harmed. They appeared to be still standing, and to have survived the crash in all their brick and stone beauty, but nevertheless a much closer view showed the havoc that had been wrought and the rear of those in one perfect row were all afire and burning fiercely but there was so much smoke rising amid the flames that just now at a distance they had failed to throw any glares. Like the street he had left, the scene was the same. whole sections of the pavement and sidewalk had dropped into underground passages that lay beneath the street the tunnels through which the Micogellester and Pandora trains pass pass in entering the city from the north or south to the Union station. These yawning holes were gigantic man traipe traps for from them came the roaring and hissing of torrents of water showing that these passages had been flooded as well as the lower streets of the city nearest the river.

For a time Penrod thought it would be impossible for him and the little girl to go and besides he did not like to risk the terrific heat from the rows of burning buildings beyond. However he discovered that some still girders and even sections of the pavement remained to bridge the street. Therefore gave the little girl directions to do as he and therefore both of them fell upon their hands and knees, and crawled cautiously carefully alongs ragged steel beam to the center of the street, where a whole block of reinforced concrete had remained in place. There both of the children stood resting watching the increasing numbers of big fires with fascinated awe, flames whole blocks and leaping hundreds of feet throwing a terrific heat and glare and seeming to dart tongues across the sky. They then looked up and down the thoroughfare hoping to see other survivor but all he could see amid the ruins of buildings which were now revealed by the glare of fire, many objects half concealed amid the debris that must been bodies. In fact penrod began to wonder if he and the little girl were the only in Abbiesanni City left alive.

High up perhaps on the tenth floor of an apartment hotel a block below them floors were a mass of flame and which leaped a hundred feet from the roof a flickering light like fire appeared in a window. Beside it was a dark figure gesticulating frantically and penrod knew it must be a man or woman in peril. Before he could say anything the upper section of the structure which was afire crashed down with an awful thunderclap filling the sky with spark and the structure was soon no more. The scene frightened the boy and the girl whom it had been impossible for any one to rescue.

In order to reach the opposite curb, it was necessary for the girl and boy to go along the jagged steel beams the skeleton skeleton of the street. The girl was allowed to go first and she made it without mishap. But as Penrod neared the east side walk, something from above fell on him fording him to slip, and for a breath taking second, he hung above the black hole of the railway tunnel. The water below which appeared to be getting boiling hot as it was Hurling clouds of steam seemed to rise up like a living monster to seize him. His right hand was cut by whatever fell upon him, but he hung desperately on and managed to go forward.

The cross street on which they found themselves at the end of this dangerous journey was made impassable also by windrows of fiercely blazing and smoking wreckage or great holes in the streets and passage and side walk. But both of them taking the chances were able to make their way along, avoiding both the holes, and piles of stone and brick and going around the fires. In the open door way of a shop stood a big dog, [illegible]

[illegible] with fright even as he growled fiercely to warn the children away from the [illegible] he was guarding. Between two large steaming holes in the pavement pinned in [illegible] place by a small an avalanch of rubble from a building front stood a large wagon. [illegible] and three women were seated in it, all of them wearing evening dress as if they had been driving home from an evening church service. Two of the men appeared to be sitting in the seat and the others were in the rear. About them in the wagon were all kinds of rubble. It was obvious that the wagon could not be moved and it was evident the horse was dead for where the horse should have been was a high pile of bricks close mater and wood work. The men and women of the wagon at a close view could be seen to have also been killed.

A man wearing a gray coat and running at top speed turning the corner at Alton Avenue almost knocked penrod and the little girl down as he ran into them. He was without a hat, and wh wore neither collar and tie. In hisright hand he carried a roll of bills which he grasped in the middle, crumbling them up as if he was afraid some one would steal them. He might have been a vandal and therefore Penrod pretended not understand Abbiesannian when the man spoke to him and handed the lad a ten dollar bill. Finally the man who seemed to know a little english himself said;

"I'm what ze call heem a stranger hewh." Can se tell me which is ze beest way to get out of zis city?"

"I know not what this city is." Said the lad as he returned the money. It was plain the man did not comprehend penrods reply.

"It's a good thing these dam foriegners don't understand Abbiesannian." he growled as he went off. Then turning he quickly ran away from the two retracing his steps to the point from where he came. Penrod and the little girl followed him. They then came to a street which was quite passable, although greatly littered with brick and stone, glass and debris. Two street cars were to be seen on it, but partly off the tracks, but it was a fearful night nevertheless. As far as eye could see, all the houses on both sides were in flames so fiercely afire that the flames were trying to meet on the opposite side, going up in one perfect sheet, and throwing a heat which almost singed the two where they stood. To go through here was impossible and they therefore retraced their steps to another street where as yet there was no fire. At this street they found the little girl expected to meet a lot of fugitives, and all of them to be moving either northward or eastward tward the upper end of the city. But there was not a soul in sight, and in the upper ruins of buildings revealed by the light of fires they were horrified to see thousands of corpses amid the wreckage and many bodies lying in the street as thick as on a battle field.

The two decided to go down this street but found their passage blocked by a tangled map of steel brick wood and rubble every kind of wreckage from building that had collapsed down. They therefore turned straight eastward through twenty third street to North Avenue. The little girl who walked along side of him did not seem to be exhausted for she shuffled along silently with her eyes to the ground. Penrod then began to find a an easy way to go told the little girl to wait for him and went on. He was gone to about ten minutes and finally when she almost grew impatient and began to think he had deserted her, he returned.

"Let up to a high ruin to have a view of the second section of the city." he observed in a colorless monotone of a voice. "No one can get through there. I do not know how to go to get to North Avenue."

"I don't know the way to North Avenue? Well I know and can take you easy." she said.

"But you can't." His words came as if he had memorized them and was now repeating them in his sleep." There is no way to get to North Avenue by these streets."

"I mean there are so many buildings burning in that section, that one can't find a way to get through."

"Yes. And the flames are a sight. And when one building or a group of them at a moment were dark and solid it suddenly bursts into flames. I observed where a row of houses over the fire seemed dark, and almost suddenly they were all afire. It seems as if the whole city is burning. We must get to the hotel before the fire comes that way."

Both he and the girl climbed a high pile of debris that stood on the site of a row of buildings and looked over the scene. Then it was possible for even the little girl to believe what Penrod had told her about the fire. No spectacle like that long sea of roaring leaping flames had ever before been staged for human eyes to witness. As far as they could see the great rows of houses seemed packed solid with leaping walls of fiery flames which leaped skyward to a prodigeous height. The flames even filled the streets from one side to another without a break. This was not really a fire, no, in the sense that the word should really be used. Rather it was a muster of an ocean of the infernal regions, porus pouring out of every house top window and from t street to street from eve y house, flat androcockery. They leaped mountain high as it seemed never quite rolling but yet rolling, and moving forward at a great pace. It seemed as if they were in some big cavern under a volcano, and as if they were facing a rolling wall of white hot lava, being hurled upward by the infinity of pressure from beneath it.

It was a tremendous sea of fire a mighty cumulation of flames which had reached that pitch of fury and sight where words are impossible. The boy and girl were stricken dumb by this terrible sight. Then in another section to the southward, aided by the gl of this enormous fire another great scene presented itself. As far as they could se in that direction the lower section of the city seemed to be packed solid with a str mass of something black. It filled the distant streets from curb to curb without a br

But at one point because of fallen materials and stones, it could not rise above and th a terrible roar swerved to the other side but moving entirely away from the open stret left for the two children. At first they thought it was a mob of people, a muster of all humanity pouring out of every street, crawling up town at seemingly a snails pace, never quite haulting never really seeming to move. At first they thought it was a tremendous parade of the helpless survivors of the wreck and ruin a might accumulatio of refugees who had reached that awful crisis of despair which words cannot to save my life do describe. But as they watched they saw it undulated quite funny, and seem to slowly heighten, and it seemed as if a river of black tar or something was emptie into those streets taking part in the pageant of wretchness and despair. Penrod who ha had his field glasses, and thanking the big fire for giving him so much light took a good look, then looked at Jane his companion.

"My God" he said to her in Abbleannian" it's a big flood, a torrent of water,

"I thought so" she gasped. The "The city is being destroyed by fire and wa

Penrod thanked God that he did not have to cross that horrid torrent and tha the streets to North Avenue was on very high ground. Yet it was more terrifying than any physical barrier. The flood headed not their way it is true, but it did not turn the right or left but continued to rise and rise, and before their very eyes, many o houses were being submerged and appeared all for the darkness and strange lights of the fire to be sinking into black muck bogs.

"We got to get to North Avenue as it'll rise that far on time and even quic quench most of the fires." he gasped. "Hurry Jane. I know the way. We must get there on time. I dread the flood more than the fire."

He took a deep breath as if he were about to dive into the distant rising flood.
A street closer by was flooded by a portion of the torrent but not enough to make traveling dangerous and into this they went and were carried along with the cooling waters which relieved them a great deal from the heat caused by the big fires.
Suddenly there was a terrible stunning crash in the direction of the fire, and a perf eruption of flame and smoke fairly rolled upward. The flames had reached a munities factory and within that region now there was a display as on a battlefield as shells bursted and flared and thundered in endless salvoes. For a minute the two children were stupified. Then as the water they were in continued to rise too Penrod felt he w go mad like an animal caught in a thicket. Both felt certain if they did not watch themselves they would be sucked under by the current, and therefore both struggled o fighting their way onward inch by inch, always remembering the way people fight their way in a flood. By the time they had landed on a curb on a high hilly street and got free of the flood waters, they observed the flood had carried them twelve to thirtee black blocks nearer to North Avenue and that the buildings of that street were in sight some in ruins others in tact but not as yet afire.

To avoid the heat of the fire in the near distance and which was heading their way they staggered into a side street. On either side the old brownstone resid had suffered badly. Outer walls had fallen, leaving rooms exposed like stage setting and within were seen dead bodies or also among the lower wreckage. In the street wa thick cloud of plaster dust that burned the eyes of the two children and partially obscured the distant glow of the biggest fire. More big explosions roared and rocked half ruined buildings. Half way through the block, the little girl suddenly stopped front of the wreckage of a house that lay on the side walk.

"pardon me" she said" but here is where I used to live."

In the glow of the fire Penrod could see that she was ten years of age, and and that she were the style of dress becoming to the Abbleannian children, her lon black curly hair was now somewhat disordered. Penrod stopped.

"My parents lived here, oh I hope they are not killed." She said a look of fear on her face. "Please little boy tell me your name?" she asked it, without the slightest hesitation or embrassment.

"Marce Schofield Penrod. And I'm a boy scout in Emperor Vivians army."

"You have good luck" announced the little girl hopefully. But if my parents are dead I'll be all alone. Oh I hope they are not injured or dead. My house gives me hop because it is not badly wrecked."

She took his hand and led him upstairs toward a room where he could hear a faint voic culling. Although much plaster had fallen in the big hall showering the dark woodwo work and ruinacoting with a white volcanic like dust although the great glass chande eliers had fallen breaking the newel posts and littering the floor with fine bit glass one could sense the house belonged to and had been or was still occupied by people of wealth and good taste. As the top of the stairs his pretty little guide th open a door and led Him into a dark room. From the shadows beside a bed a woman and man came forward, and two other little girls. One of them was black haired like Jane the other of course being the same and were else evidently her sister. The other who was a tall woman seemed vaguely familiar to penrod, and she was their mother. A man also rose and they certainly gave their exclamations of delight to see that Jane not harmed.

Then after the hearty greetings were over the little girl who had been Penrod [illegible] and pa. This is Schofield Penrod, by soldier boy guide." she then turned [illegible] "My father, mother, and two sisters. Penrod shook hands with them, and having [illegible] confessed their right names, which were Julia, Georgianna Storio, and the parents [illegible] said Mamzie Storio the father said with a slight burst of laughter; [illegible] "we've got down to some hiding place before anything more happens."

"I can't stop and its terribly dangerous for you to remain also" Penrod murmured.
"I'm looking for some of my girl scout friends. They roomed on 8t Anne Hotel at North Avenue. I'm on my way there."

"But they might have gone out before the shocks." said the little girl called Georgianna, while the others looked out one of the paneless windows. The father found a bottle of milk from an ice box, and poured some of it into six glasses filling them to the brim. Jane and penrod sat on a chair close to a window and while he was preparing to drink the milk he again said;

"I'm sorry but we cannot stay here long. We must go soon, I have to find my friends and not only that but the longer we remain the greater will be our danger."

"Of course we won't need to stay long, but I don't believe you'll find them now, even if they were not hurt, hurt in the shocks. And you'll just make yourself unhappy looking for them and increase your own perils."

Then the mother told of her experience,

"After our supper to night" she said" We were all saying our Grace after meals when--she shivered slightly---this earthquake happened. We saw many houses around us go down in heaps, or fall to pieces. My brother who was visiting me that night his own wife and children ran out and they followed him." It was fully a minute before she finished her story. "Some of the walls of yonder house fell. Their bodies are under the wreckage. I ran down after them and I saw it happen. No one escaped alive from those buildings across the streetes."

Her breath came quickly, then she recovered and finished in quicte quite a mer matter of fact tone." Then I feared for Jane who had been out on a long distenced errand for me, and how glad I was when she came and brought you up. We think if we all stay together we will not be so frightened and we'll all accompany you to the hotel."

"But you don't understand the peril." Penrod made a more final protest." We must hurry and find them. You see it's Gertrude Angeline, Jennie, Turner and two others."

"I think they have been looking for you and you won't find them. And if you go they will find with my daughter you'll be hit or crushed to death in the st e streets. It is hop lessness, is it not better to stay here, among friends, than be out there in the wreck of the streets with sagging full walls liable to crash down upon you any minute. Here we may be we can be safter until relief searching parties comes and brings us to a place of safty."

Penrod for a moment almost surrendered to their warning. After all she was right.
There could be more danger outside than there would be inside. It was better to wait till rescuers found them then to risk sagging walls of half ruined buildings out in the streets." But how could he hope to find his girl friends, and were they too locked in their cellars they still at the same pla e places. Soon yet from a far distance came a strange sound like some one striking a chord upon a giant piano, like a chord ended with a peculiar kettle drum syncopation done upon the bass. Then it broke up a thread of melody set in strangely harmonieus negroid minors. Then the kettle drum introduction repeated several times and ceased altogether with a one prolonged loud noise.

"I wonder what that was" said Jane's father as he was putting on hi his coat and hat.
Penrod suddenly recalled penrod to his senses. He rose to his feet.

"What's the matter Julia pleaded." Are you getting impatient, or scared. Don't mind telling us like that."

"Sorry" Penrod said, " We really must hurry on. The city is on fire and part of it is already flooded."

This was being confirmed by Jane did surely hustle them and they all hurried down the stairs and out into the street. They carefully avoided stepping on the heap of stones and bricks beneath which lay the others. In spite of the fact that this street was littered with the wreckage of buildings, and even the elevated lines of the city of Jane, it was seen that many refugees had taken shelter here at the first shocks, and had been caught here in the others and were killed all in a bunch as thick as a several con gestion, and part of this district was on fire. To go on would cause them and Penrod and his friends to be caught in this fire maelstrom and perish altogether, and therefore they made their way down another wreckstrewn street. They found Magdria Street an almost impassable with greater holes in the pavement than seen partly in other streets, and therefor therefore it was with co considerable difficulty Penrod that they crossed this street, and two others.

But then they reached North Avenue they had little trouble, as at this point the fire was still far distant and seemed to be going another way and they soon reached the luxurious up apartment house on North Avenue where Gertrude Angeline, and her friends had gone for a night sleep and rest. Penrod was relieved greatly to see that relatively speaking, while all other houses around were razed, the hotel was undamaged.

lié led the way into the wrecked door way, and after lighting several matches found the staircase but it was completely down and covered with a high mound of wreckage. Though the building looked all right from the outer side it was partially wrecked inside. He the others had to climb over the wreckage to reach the room occupied by Gertrude Angeli and the rest, and as he did so penrod wondered if all his efforts had been futile. He amid the wreckage that there a great numbers of bodies of women and children and also and he had a vague feeling that the interior of the hotel had been wrecked so badly that every one might have perished. Hours had now passed since the shocks, and far in the east there was the coming signs of day light.

But penrod knew that these girl heroines were calm; they had gone through many ter terrific adventures; had been almost trapped in devouring forest fires and escaped; nd went through other record breaking dangers and escapes a escal escaped; and the gi were clear headed; and intensely practical and he knew would not if alive go away wit first trying to find out if he was safe or not. More over according to the laws of emperor Vivian they were responsible for his safty, and he was responsible for what would be their lot. Except as a last resort he was sure she and the other girls would not have exposed themselves to the excitement and dangers of the streets unless they were in search of him. But he hoped inwardly they were still there.

He asking the others to remain outside in the hall stood before the door of their suite and rapped loudly. There was no sound. As he heard sank and also had a sensation the floor under him was sagging slightly. And after the scenes he had witnessed in the streets; the big flood; the big fires; which were still raging realised how little change or chance there was that he would ever see them again if too were lying underneath wreckage in their room. He then attempted to force the do and picking up a rock for the outer wall of the hall was half wrecked and lying floor he hurled it with all his might against the door. Just as the door crashed he heard foot steps ascending the steps below and quickly drawing his pistol as h feared vultures he l pointed it down the steps and shouted;

" Who comes there"(motioning his friends to hide in a dark corner)

"Who's up there" came in a little girls voice whom he recognised as Angelina Fonburgs.

" This is Schofield penrod. Is that you gertrude. Where are your companions."

" I knew he'd come; I knew he'd come." Jennie's tone expressed infinite relief.

Then at the top of the steps appeared the girls who told him briefly that they had searching for him all night after the wreckage was made and on coming near the hotel on their return had seen him and his companions enter. Penrod had succeeded in burst down the door, and the girls all went inside; followed by the others; and then Gertr quickly closed the door.

" I'll light a candle untill you get your belongings packed up. I brought told them.

" We didn't dare now" Gertrude protested." It is not safe. There are big fires rag many districts and we might accidentally start another one here. And be careful to glandelinian vandals are already at work. We have heard terrible things during our for you, and we have to keep our eyes open in case they try to come in here."

Penrod nevertheless struck a match and lighted the long candle stub. Penrods had put every one of the girls once more at their ease; and the fact that the man had with his wife and children accompanied penrod had flipped back his coat and show them the butt of two long pistols and a cartridge belt around his waist gave more confidence. Despite peril as it was, with the city menaced by flood and big fires, and vandals about looting the wreckage, the man lighted a cigar, and the atmosphere less tense.

" When did you come back?" Gertrude asked of penrod.

" About a few minutes after you came. I was on my way here immediately after th second shock. I was on a two car train and it was wrecked but I escaped and this little girl who was with me though every one else was killed in the wreckage of that fell upon the cars."

There seemed no need of distressing the girls by telling them that the lest in of the city was fully under water; that the probability was that maybe all of the inhabitants of the city perished, and that another shock might cause the river to the very district they were now in. Nevertheless penrod insisted, and the others a with him that it would be wise for them all to walk sout northwest out of reach of and fire untill they reached the highest section of the city near Lockwell driv
the highest part of the city where a flood would have to rise to the depth of a hund and and fifty feet to reach those streets. Gertrude and the others said they felt enough to attempt the trip dangerous as it was, and that they felt sure they would happier and safer in the open air.

Although nothing was said about it, penrod sensed that gertrude Angeline and friends had sensed his and ,anes understanding. Penrod again told them to put on clothing they needed best, and to collect their valuables. While they went in the to dress; gertrude who needed not to chance remained in the room and penrod told her a low tone what had happened to the lower sections of the city, and how terrible th big fire big fire was and how swiftly it was spreading.

" It seems to be" penrod concluded" That our best plan would be to get up great part of the city before the flood reaches us, or the fire consumes our way of ape. As to the groups of vandals we can fight our way through them. Even if we cannot ad boats to cross the Norma and river at fifty ninth street and Heidi Avenue relief will eventually come from that direction, and even if it does not we know how to make our way to the christian lines alone; and report this unusual disaster.."

She assented;

"At least anything is much better and safer than waiting here like this with flood and fire threatening us."

" yes. And we would have gone on our way before knowing that you can take good care of your selves but Jennie insisted that we go to look for you penrod; and insisted insisted that while we searched you might come. And you did."

Penrod then hesitated while she added;

" if you h h had been gone it would have been pretty tragic and Violet and her sister sisters could never get over it."

Penrod just then they were surprised to hear voices in the hall outside the doors. Gertrude alarmed and whispered the one world;

" vandals."

" bring that battering ram John" a man suddenly called." Here's a locked door and we'll force our way in."

" Jennie turner look it after we went in?" quarled the man, under his breath, but it is evident she had not done so for as penrod rose, drawing his pistols and slipping off the safty catch, the first man who surely was a Glandelinian vandal spoke again;

" This door is not locked; it had been broken down by some one."

The door then suddenly opened admitting three vague gray like figures; two of them with electric torches which they turned full on penrod, and the girl, while another was lifting a pistol.

" Throw up your hands you ted heeds" growled the one with the gun." We are taking up retribution for the cause of our country, and you christian dogs can go to heaven just fired before he finished his sentence; penrod in a good crack shot; but never before was only ten feet away, and even no one can miss at that distance. The pistol burned a second in the small room; and cries of excitement came from the other girls in the room and one of them appeared to see what had caused the sudden shooting.
He rushed forward toward penrod falling on his face. Jennie who came out to see what all about, also opened fire bringing down the and and second man, and his electric torch still burning rolled across the floor, and went under the bed. The fyi third man hastily snapped off his light, and the room was again plunged in darkness for Gertrude had also suddenly blown out the candle. penrod bent over to secure the flash light at that movement saved his life.

The third man fired and the bullet crashed into the wall where he had or near the head when the boys head had been. penrod suddenly tripped over the man he had shot and fell on top of him. Instantly the third man who was in the door way believing he killed penrod turned his torch on Gertrude Angeline who had drawn her weapon but pulled the trigger at fault.

" Don't get fresh you bushy haired cat, haired cat." He warned her recovering her with a pistol. Gertrude had found the trigger working again; but he also made a target for and as the rascal stood there his light in his left hand. He had rolled half over and pointed his pistol at him; and both he and gertrude had pulled the trigger at the same time. They were so close that the powder flame burned his coat and vest. He staggered; reeled toppled over.

" Penrod" Angeline Lches called from the bed room. " Are you hurts"

" No."

Then penrod, Gertrude and Jennie saw the gleam of a moving bulls eye of light in the corridor. Evidently other members of the glandelinian vandal gang were either out side or had come in. Gertrude stepped behind a column, while penrod rolled over the floor to the door and fired at the source of the light. Six shots replied. Both penrod Jennie, turner and Gertrude; and also Gertrude and children Mildred Maxwell fired again and soon heard the sound of two men falling to the floor, and others running swiftly down the stairs, cursing and blaspheming.

" It's all right Children, and " Ichee" penrod shouted to reassure the other two girls not yet fully dressed. Then he quickly secured the flash lights that had been dropped from the hands of the Glandelinian intruders. Angeline Lches coming out armed half with one of the lostars pistols so that each of the girls could have an extra pisto all and all be ready already ready in case the same gang returned or other glandelinian visitors appeared. The man himself dragged the bodies of the three dead men into the corner of the corridor covering them with a big rug which he took up from the room and so that the other children might be spared the sights.

Then penrod scouted ahead so as to be on the lookout for glandelinian lostars, while the others followed him quickly down the stairs. It had been a dark yet fire lighted night with the ruins of the city appearing like a city of the hades regions when penrod had entered the building and when they left it was approaching well night to midnight however the whole sky was thickly covered with smoke which was convulted in most fantastic rolls at upper and lower points, which at some points spread out in columns of great pools or like mushroom forms; and a half twilight veiled the street.
and long rows of ruined buildings and above them and within their ruins hung a thick fog of plaster dust. somewhere to the straight east and also in the northeast, the gr set rolling columns of bl black smoke penrod had ever seen in his life rolled blac

the n ney and beyond he could observe a perfect cloud of flame which rolled and tu almost like the smoke there was no much of it. But penrod and the rest also found th street(north Avenue) filled with water and the flood was moving slowly but gathering inch by inch in depth. The others did not understand where the water came from but pe was shrewder.

" I wonder if the flood will engulf the whole city and put the fires out" he whispered.

" What flood?" asked Angeline Riches.

" The flood thatthese shocks brought."

For the first time the girls really despaired,for it seemed they dreaded the flo more than the fire. On account of the thick clouds of smoke that covered the whole s from the big fires, daylight came very slowly, as if on a dark rainy morning after nights severe thunderstorm, or as if the smoke clouds themselves were reluctant to clear.t close the haven which the darkness of night had almost completely hidden fr the sight of the survivors. As they reached the more higher points out of reach of th slowly rising waters and where the flood had not yet tried to reach, the districts seemed here more like the city of the dead. Indeed there were no words in the englis language to describe the numbers of bodies of men women and children found amid the debris of which were exposed to the eye sight of the fas fugitives. Penrods plans h were vague enough. They all hoped to reach the most highest sections of the city bi the floods rose too high, or before the big fires spread near and so much around off their escape altogether. There they hoped they might find some way or means to re the Norma Rum river and reaching the christian side of its shore, and then get a tra some kind going south. But the bodies of so many dead bodiesitt people on the stree half covered with wreckage, and strewn about in many places as they were in groups swarms that varied in size, from a dozen, to a thousand persons, seemed to have be killed more during attempted flight than by being caught inside their houses, and many might he also have lost their sense of direction in their flight and been by crashing walls and other debris.

The children and the men took some routes to go out of sight of these hor views, but no matter where they went bodies were seen amid the ruins or on the stre as thick as dead or swarms of flies on dead animals. As the daylight slightly in they observed more details, and noted some of the many vagarieties of the actions strange and sudden quakes. On one street sulled Baldon the spare apartment, bui stores, and the likeas far as you could see down or up on the north side were abso absolutely leveled, while on the other side of the same street, buildings apparent built of the same materials,seemed to have escaped serious damage, but nevertheless in the path of one of the great fires.

With the waters of the flood coming up here, seeming to rise at a rate of a fe at every half hour, the fugitives were forced toard Icknell Avenue. There in spite the large holes in the pavement they were able to make more rapid progress, for they less hindered by wreckage and dead bodies. At this point they passed thousands of d ed parambulators and goearts, and beside them lay the bodies of their owners, go soon after the first secondary shock parents had attempted desperately to wheel the children and then seized by a sudden terror they had picked them up and carried the in their arms only to be overwhelmed by the wreckage of front falls that collapsed.

Near fifteenth treet they came behind five men hammering desperately with ir ges upon a large safe which they must have dragged from the wrecked bank close by ous the children coming but paid no attention, and allowed them to pass on un-hind though they scowled fiercely. Penrod and the girls had hold their pistols ready for vice, and therefore it might have been the reason why these dlandelinian vandals di attack them. And penrod and the others were impressed by the fact that almost ev every dead man he met amid the ruins wore a beard. He did not know why he should observed it but it was nevertheless one of the curious things which he noted. An Another thing he noticed was that many of the dead women had clung to their who had been killed with them. There were girls also who were wearing only night bath robes and slippers----there were many such---She also carried fancy beads hands. Near alder square, they noticed a sheet stretched tent fashion over the s walk between two heaps of stone that had fallen from a building front. As they ca close to it, they saw the body of a young woman lying under this frail canopy. Beh was a small baby, and that too was dead. On the high point of the city, near glisten Street, the party halted and looked back. Strangely enough the sky line was thickly obscured in smoke as far as they could see. But it appeared from a distance that mos of the big buildings stood intact, although many of the curtain walls and most of the orn ornamentation and fresco work had been shaken down.

And to make matters more clear the steel frame work of high buildings in which the of the side walls, floors and roofs, is carried or help up by steel posts had little harm. Older and lower buildings belonging to the type known as " Wall bearing construction" because the floors parry the weight of the floors walls carry the of the floors and the roofs had almost completely collapsed.

Whenever the condition of the wreck strewn streets permitted it, the little party walked four abre abreast. Penrod and the man walked on either side of the line of girls in order to help them as much as possible over the windrows of wreckage.

Through it all, and despite the sights they witnessed they appeared to be perfectly calm and composed but did not say a word now. Angelinia Aronburg, clear eyed, her golden hair scarcely disordered, her smile ready any time that penrod or the others glanced at her, was in her oldest uniform and was carrying the other uniform in a bundle. In that custom it appeared as if she was going into a goal field. The other little girls including jane and her sisters were marvellous: although they seemed to be the only surviving persons of the wrecked city, they rose magnificently to the crisis. Not once did they complain.Finally however they began to think of how they were to secure their breakfast. But penrod turned them all down a side street which did not seem quite so wrecked or body strewn and made for a door way. Over it was a delicatessen sign.
They found the doorway half blocked with loose r brick and piles of broken timbers that had tumbled down from the walls above. Penrod entered first but with some difficulty, and peered out what provisions he could find to the others first. The breakfast consisted of canned beef, a can of tomatoes, a cake of swiss cheese, and several bottles of mineral water for coffee. The girls despite the sights of a wrecked city and the dead bodies around almost laughed at the assortment of food.

Of the mineral water, with a dash of souffee grounds was a good send and it made passable coffee at that. They all had been more conscious of thirst than of hunger, but had been saving the water in their canteens for an emergency later in the day.

After they all had eaten, they observed one of the big fires was following after them, they were in the path of it, and it was coming pretty fast. To escape being walled in the mob of dead bodies thickly strewn among the wreckage, and to get out of reach of the big fire which was throwing a terrific heat even at that distance, and making the atmosphere uncomfortably warm like on the hottest days of summer.

The flames of the great fires in the southeast, at their right glared like a half molten lave in the very sky and the heatwave from it at that distance was terrible. At this point the number of dead ones some somewhat diminished. During the early part of the travel through the wrecked city no t one of the girls or the men had uttered said a word word. How they somewhat grew more courageous and resumed talking and they thought that outside the city and far off , in l other big cities all over the wildest rumors of the disaster would spread throughout the world and from town to town with thorrible speed.

From a great height, and the fugitives going to the top of a building not badly ruined and which was a thirteen story one they saw that in the straight west the, entire river branch of the city had been entirely destroyed, and that half of the city in that location was under water. This showed that their route were cut off in this direction and that they must go north. They came upon a wrecked orphan asylum somewhere in the wreckage above they found one of the dead sisters. About a thousand dead bodies of children were strewn all around. near by but standing upright was a priest, still and of good size, and standing half way up from the heap of wreckage which had buried the childrens home. But he too was dead.

" This is certainly terrible, it is just like failing to head the hand writing on the wall" said " ertrud to the rest." Just look about. See this great city destroyed almost in ten seconds by the worse earthquake ever known to occur. It is just like godess Pompeii perish because of its wickedness, and yet not one wicked soul could be found in this city. Why does this happen to the Abbiannians and not the enemy, when humanity is so torn and afflicted by a great holy war. It seems like the nation that is fightaous seems like ripe grain for the sickle of the reaper."

" I don't believe it was really an earthquake" said Gertrude.

" And why not" Asked Jennie Turner.

" Why because there were earlier in the war other disasters which resulted in floods and fire and it was blamed on on the enemy" said the lad." But the people were impr pared except in the Mi--girther Rum flood and also great loss of life had occured.
In my way of thinking it's a good thing the people of this city who were probably all killed were but cut down uprighteous in the flower of their youth, and unwilling and unprepared were summoned before the Throne of God."

" Amen men" said the girls.

" If it surely looks like the harvest of the Lord" said Angelinia herself. " I wonder how many Glandelinians would be found ready to be judged?"

The children, even the man and woman almost laughed at these last words.

" If there are you can count there" said penrod. " They need to seek repentance more than the rest of the world to my way of thinking. I'll bet there is not me Glandelinian that'll be saved, but one that has even the heart to repent. And I'll bet that some way or other the glandelinians were responsible for all these dreadful scenes we bitness in this city. Look how the fire is burning."

They all looked t a tward where he pointed almost believing they were in hell themselves at this moment. Their gaze followed his, and as it did their ears caught a sound that had not heard before--a sound that would be like the purring of a sort of meter but it was not one to be sure. The roar of the sound grew louder, and then from behind a rolling wall of smoke that seemed to stretch clear across the sky like a big long thunderclap and thunderclaps a great flash of fire rolled upward. A gasp of astonishment almost of fear went up from the children and Penrod said-

"It' it's only some explosion in the dire fire."

A heavy shower of burning embers and wreckage fluttered down and disappeared in the of sight. Again and again came the flashes flashes and it seemed an age before the stopped and the falling wreckage cleared off. but before long some of the burning debris reached where they stood and the man got a rap in the back from a burning board that him yell. The close falling of broken embers and flying sparks caused a mad rush of the party for safty. One big piece of wood all aflame descended close to Angelinia Armburg, she jumped and it fell in front of her feet, and then others had to fight to prevent her clothing from burning off of her. The whole scene of the distant fire now forgotten.

The fierceness of the disasterous scenes made Penrod think it would be wiser for whole of them to go into some big building and wait untill aid had arrived, for he could not and would not believe that it was possible the population of the whole city had perished. But the others insisted that the shortness of food load and water would cause them trouble and unnecessary suffering and that therefore it would be the best plan to continue to push forward untill they would reach the relief columns. About toward noon they reached one hundred and eleventh street. Looking down from the higher point of the city, they saw that the usually placid german river, or the point of it that seperated the biggest part of Abbiesan city from the rest had either been it's terrific ravages of turned into a huge lake, as the entire sea of water was by the river was strewn with floating wreckage of every description. The flood had rushed fiercely into the city demolishing every structure that the strange earthquake had spared. Even against the stone piers of ruined bridges great heaps of driftwood had been piled. Two miles further down at the main high bridge, they could see a solid adventurous men crossing from the Abbiesan to the other bank walking with comparative safty upon the wrecked houses, boats, scows, wooden piers, and all other wreckage which the water had piled into a huge misshapen windrow of hemps. This appeared to be grounded upon the pier stumps and the ruins of a great stone causeway.

"There is our only means to get across the river to the shore beyond."

Penrod pointed to it as he spoke.

"If these men who can cross there, did it safely" replied Angelinia Armburg" we can manage too, but we'd better keep our eyes open as they might be vandals."

To understand how this great barrier of wreckage had come into existence across part of the flood, one must therefore imagine the many miles of great docks, and that stretched from the lowest Abbiesan heights districts, and on other points on bank of the great norman river up past Orman's Island to the entrance of the bay near the city but west. Along these miles of water front, every scow, boat, patch many of the piers and store houses themselves, had been snatched up by a moving of flood waters released from broken dams of the big river, that had risen into the directions of the city like a tidal wave. Nothing quite like it was probably ever seen before and it must have been a magnificent spectacle when that huge flood wave was treated in the upper reaches of the harbor and swept seaward bring a bringing a the wreckage with it. At the time the party quickly quickly appreciated the barricade as the broken dams the river had sunk back somewhat to its normal level, although the the flooded regions of the city a very strong current held downstream running from river itself into the general flood, which all but was threatening to completely the lower sections of the city. A long wrecked ferry boat rested on the mud and the opposite bank. They all carefully climbed through it to the upper deck and from manages to reach the top of the long windrow of wreckage, fully sixty nine feet the water.

"The giants of the planets must have beenplaying jackstraws or something like with the lower parts of the city....." said Gertrude Angeline to the rest.

And beneath their

And beneath their feet heaped by tremendous forces whose peperful beyond any mans comprehension were huge harbor lighters. They surely might have knickknacks of a childs playroom, drifted to one end of a giant bathtub or lily Hundreds of millions of great and small timbers and wooded wreckage of every mingled with trees that had been piled piles up and heavy planks and every thing like an enormous log jam of the Atlantic ocean so as to say except that ponent parts were larger than any logs.

A half dozen thousands of wooden freight cars, swept up by the flood from railroad yards mingled with passenger cars, and a large number of big and small engines, combined with big wagons, street cars, and engines and factory machinery all kinds were here infinitesimal portions of the wrecks. It was easy for these who had not used the wreckage as a bridge, very few progress from the west to the east bank meant climbing over dangerous slippery that they constantly risked a fall to the river bed below. The girls may without assistance, but Penrod and the man had to lift the girls bodily and while. They toiled across as carefully as it was possible, but once Penrod paused of the pile and thought he noticed the water beneath him running more swiftly and rising higher. A large shattered yacht, which had been a very splendid one, barred their path. It partly lay on its side but a large and jagged opening in its hull permitted Penrod and his followers to crawl through and into the cabin and up the companionway to its deck. There they let themselves down on a mass of tangled planking and railroad iron. Then the last barrier was a sort of raft perhaps a former floating wharf. As they were carefully climbing upon it, they all felt a movement beneath their feet. Hurried they all looked up the flooded stretch. The flood was rising with the fury of a tidal wave. The water of the flood had ruentered the river at one section untill the river was forced to mass itself below the level ground north of Abbiesan. Now the whole tremendous flood was sweeping back into the city like a tidal wave. It was coming down from all points as far as eye could reach in sight like a torrent that follows a thousand broken dams. It was a great swelling racing tide that carried a windrow of whole houses on its crests.

Even as they looked a preliminary movement made the windrows of wreckage creak and groan. A higher tidal wave was close behind, and in the distance Penrod believed he observed something among the city like enormous clouds of steam rising into the air. It was probably the flood putting at most of the fire still burning in the lower parts. Then they saw even in the higher sections of the city rows of buildings crashing before the rush of the flood. They felt sure that in another instant they too would be instantly swept away.

Penrod, Gertrude and Jennie Armburg took the younger Abbiesanian children in their arms and shouting a desperate "Quick" to the others climbed upon slippery timbers that constituted their footing. Penrod missed his footing and fell heavily. But he was not injured even. The man helped him to his feet, and they struggled on, while in the direction of the city there was a tumult of roaring noises as if the world were coming to an end. But they did not stop to look behind.

"Wait, wait" just a minute" Groaned Julia as if she were pleading with a reasoning human being.

The girl slipped and fell, but Angeline Achee offered no protest nor complaint but helped the girl along, pity surely, for even as she spoke water boiled up beneath their feet. The flood moved while a great snapping and screeching told of the great strain upon the windrows of timbers. The raft or platform was tilted at an angle of an almost fifty degrees as the water tore the center of the river, while the roaring in the direction of the city was deafening mingled with a great noise like the hissing of ten steam from volcanic fires as the water was quenching the fires. The flood poured over the top of the barricade and the party for a moment stood helpless and felt sure they were lost, and started saying their prayers.

Just as they were about to be drawn back into the shimmering maelstrom, and just as it seemed the wave would hurl the windrows of floating houses down upon their heads, the water fortunately raised under the outer edge, and the whole mass of wreckage bridge, the water fortunately raised under the outer edge, and the whole mass of wreckage moved and crashed with the windrow of houses with a terrific noise that almost threw the party off their feet, but their raft righted, and then tilted forward literally catapulting the whole of the party across the two windrows and landing them safely on the terraced platform of the parkway in the higher and safer section of the city where was just now free of fire and water, hurling them above the site of the long railroad bridge of the Mis- sissippi and Pandora railroad.

Just as they reached the secure footing of masonry and rock,...the edge of the flood seemed to mark them as its victims. However Gertrude, Angeline, and Angeline were a few steps in advance. Penrod handed Jane to them, when the water rose and reached his waist, and it would have sucked him downward, not but Angeline Achee, clutched his gravelli, and Julia held the lapels of his coat with a tenacity and mus- cular strength one would have dreamed was concealed in their thin white hands. For a moment they all tottered on the brink, then they and the man dragged the rest to safety. As they all turned to look back the crest of the flood passed carrying with it the miseries only knows where every stick of the great jams that had composed the bridge, and the miseries of houses with it, while over the western part of the city hung a thick cloud of steam and smoke, and hail of it seemed to be mixed.

Exhausted by the physical and mental strain of these few tortured seconds, they all sat down. And it was a long time before any one spoke.

"Gosh" Penrod sighed" That was a narrow escape indeed."

And then they all laughed hysterically. They finished the coffee and water in the canteens and then walked slowly up the hilly streets toward the main western sections of the city, and the glorianton Roadways. Although the shocks probably had not been as severe in this section of the city, as in the victor, the many miles of apartment houses seemed to have suffered more than the buildings of down town Abbiesan. Later during the invest- igations the engineers said that this was due not to the methods of construction but of the peculiar violence and suddenness of the shocks and air waves combined. In the main however the scenes were the same of which they had witnessed before. Even as they observed here & crowds of refugees in perfect surges had been caught by a avalanch of wreckage from leveled houses on both sides of the streets streets and it seemed as if few every one had perished here as well.

as they approached a corner Gertrude seized Penrods arm.

"Look" she pointed in the far distance, and uncomprehendingly they all stared a the sound which they witnessed outside the city for they were nearing the outskirts. The city itself was surrounded by a raging flood. Penrod could not imagine how this w be and they all felt sure they were locked in a water logged city, where they surely would face starvation. But they proceeded with no little difficulty through perfect si of dead persons laying amid the wreckage, who stood upright in piles of debris, or lay in all postures mangled and torn. Just as they had reached the edge of the flo where it lapped the streets, and which allowed the lower section of the city to be under water, they were startled by hearing loud signal whistles proceeding fr boats. Then looking in the direction they came saw a long column of big and small boats coming, and in the bigger boats were infantry men four abreast. The men were purple uniforms, but were dirty, tired, sweating, and burdened with full cartridge belts and packs from which protruded their packages of emergency rations. A wild hoarse che went up from the child refugees, who watched the boats approach, there being a thous of them, some streamers and others motor and other craft. A first lieutenant stood at the head of one of the boats, and he called out to the children;

"Rations in the rear for the survivors of the city. Rations for all."

Penrod and the others loathed to say" No one seemed to have survived."

The regiments of boats filed swiftly past their colors came as if they were sailing into the war head itself. Following them came an engineers battalion, with its fleet of boats, its pontoons for bridges hauled by tractors on lumpous rafts. Next also boats were smart squadrons of cavarly preceding a complete field hospital. Then came of long motor boats and they literally groaned under the weight of supplies.

"You'll find a tent city and rolling kitchen up about four miles beyond the ri of the flood." called some of the men. Yet it seemed as if the column of men in boats would never end. Behind the army units came a navy and relief boat train and marine. train from the Angelinia Agathia Navy yard. More soldiers followed them in boats supply trains, artillery batteries, although the boats hauled loaded wagons instead of guns. It seemed like a file of ants pouring into a city which they by the aid of an earthquake and flood.

When the final detatchment had passed they walked northward following the arm Then they were a near enough to join the army, and pearod informed one of the offi who drove his boat close enough that the majority of the inhabitants of the city had perished in flood and wreckage.

FOUR days later they were in the camp of the refugee army relief but though soldiers secured as much as the city as possible they brought in no one.

"There is one of my friends" remarked penrod.

"I'm afraid he won't be able to recognize us." Gertruce returned." There are no signs that any of the soldiers knew us."

It was true. Most of the soldiers were strangers to the few fugitives.

"Maybe it is only a relief camp from some town" Angeline "ience suggested. Pearl went closer to the tent. Two boy scouts were sitting inside the tent. His head was before he realized the identification of one of them.

"Radcliffe." pearod shouted. "Radcliffe."

The boy jumped to his feet. He greeted pearod as if he had been the best of brothers he expressed some great surprise at seeing him and so many of the girls with him. "The army of relief parties came up here" Radcliffe said when the excitement of the greeting was over. Because we aimed to succor as many people from the wrecked city as possible. But it seems the soldiers find nothing else but dead, dead, dead everyw It seems unusual. I can't believe a whole city is wiped out in its populaties." Then introduced them all to his companion, who was a young boy scout they had never seen before.

"This lad whose name is peare Scallen is my lieutenant." Radcliffe needed a helper." He was given to my command three weeks ago."

"Can't the soldiers who entered the city find not one alive?" asked Gertrude was plainly puzzled, because despite all she had seen she could not really believe the entire population of the city had perished.

"Of course they have not confirmed the reports and the search is not over yet there is something discouraging in this were I'm telling you and over half of the ci is completely under water to the tops of the highest buildings, the biggest flood the world ever saw, Gertrude. Why the whole world will be talking about it. No one is like trying to steal a car without wheels. Pedro and I have heard and seen all that happened. The whole nation is aroused. It was been done by the enemy blasting the dikes of the river. For the dikes they used as I heard hundreds of tons of the worse explo known. It got the whole country rolling, and I've heard the cities of poverty pe is entirely submerged, that the city of Vignon is almost dest eyed with one hundred thousand houses swept away, with nearly as many at La pelaus, El veron, El pas, and a score of other places, and sixty million acres are under water. I took my friend with me for I wanted to see the wreck here and saw more than I exlected. The roads are touched by the flood are full of wagons."

Gertrude and the rest were horrified at this news, and could not hardly sleep the tents that night thinking of the horrors of the disaster and how wide spread it h been, and that it had been caused by the enemy. And oh y!. That night came some soldiers stopped in front of Gertrudes tent by an officer who inquired;

"Are you not been in the ruined city?"

"Yes sir."

"Then are the refugees you are supposed to bring in."?

"There are none sir. Others have come and reported the same case."

The officer went away dumbfounded. Gertrude sat up, excited, and watched the officer as he went away. There was something in the appearance of the soldiers that suggested to her that even more than a city wrecked, the most complex civilization in the Abbieannian world.

She went out and faced one of the soldiers.

"Why" she exclaimed. "You cannot find a living soul you say."

"Not one. You did not expect we quit work because we do not find any one do you!" The soldiers sarcastic expression surprised her. And he said again" That's what I have tried to tell every one here. All the people of Abbieann, exist only in imagination It is of no use for us to come up this way. The whole country ville is shot to pieces by this disaster. And we do not recover any of the refugees anywhere, except the few brought upwith us from beyond and they are only children."

Gertrude said nothing. She could not comprehend the magnitude of such a disaster. "If all is taking a disaster of this kind to make our government up", he announced" And if we know what these Glandelinians are when enough to do, war on nature, you and I will destroy a whole city of people. This disaster is so big that the whole world will believe it is true."

Then to the railroad track far beyond the stretch of flood a relief train whistled approaching. Gertrude did not stay outside to say much more but went back into the shadows of her tent and laid down on her cot. And she lay awake thinking of the events all night long, and could not sleep a wink.

The next morning after a hasty breakfast, the girls in going a little forward to watch the rescue of the flood which was full of floating wreckage at places at thisk as log had served a man seated on a stump flo fixedly regarding the little girls as they approached him. To Gertrude Angeline there was something familiar about his posture. She and Angeline walked closer and recognized the man. He was a foriegn News paper reporter through a pull in the Abbieannian government was allowed to write scenes of the war which at least true and decent. Gertrude Angeline had often helped him out in a the Vivian Girls knew a little english. His name of course was James Saunders. Up to this time for the aid of the Abbieannian government he had become a sort of night hawk for the Angelinia Agathia news service.

"My bille jesus." she said. "What brings you up here."

"Why it's Angelinia Aronburgs." He shook hands as casually as if she was his own child. "Why Gertrude the great christian girl spy."

"Sir!" But what are ye doing here?" she demanded.

"I'thinking" James groaned, imagine I could break a good story like this because I have been to print it or even put it on the wire, because the soldiers won't let me get my links. I'd like to file one hundred thousand words. The whole christian world is waiting, to hear of the disaster caused by the Glandelinians, and I'm dying to tell them, and the officers won't allow me to even get a bulletin out for fear they.ll fall into the hands of the enemy."

"Come with me James" Gertrude suggested. " I will take ye outside of the camp and we will find ye wire somewhere."

"Done." He shook his head emphatically." Got to say here. Maybe some of my staff will show up, and if they do and I'll be allowed I I'll get them quickly to work. I see no fellow in there who could write for me" He jerked his thumb towards a tent. If only here where one of the Vivian girls were I'd send the story to Angelinia Agathia through them and then I would be allowed to write it. With a story like this breaking!" He groaned" I ought to have a full staff."

"I'll take ye story wis me, if ye like. I'm going to leave ye camp soon to go to army under emperor Vivian, and the story will be safe wis me."

The sour face brightened.

"Great! Then wait a minute." he ran inside the tent reappearing shortly with some sheets of copy paper. " Here's a lead and about 10,000 words. Mark it follow and get as soon as you can."

Gertrude stuffed the manuscript into her pocket. James slapped her back in hearty nature. Think of it Gertrude, what a big head you could put on this story. A three line streamer of hundred four ot fourty six type " SEVEN MILLIONS DIE IN ABBIEANN." I could not need ask for anything bigger and better than setting up for a purge like that.

"Seven million dead James? Your praiseworthy desire for alliteration is getting the best of you, James you must have gone bugs" she added in her own language."

"But did you say" ? he asked not understanding what she said for she spoke Abbieannian.

"You must be exaggerating a whole lot." she said." There cannot be so millions killed by flood and earthquake. I hope so mind is not gone."

"There bug Gertrude there must be." James indignantly defended his own estimate of love

the casulties." ..by every one is dead in the whole city because the soldiers find only corpses where ever they go, and because all lost their lives below the north and east sections, and the last shock took all those that were left up to the south and southeast, and half the city is burned or under water and----and-- "

" you don't mean----"

" did you not know Gertrude. The lower end of the city is like an island sunk under the sea. The water rose above the house tops in that region after the first shock when the big River dam No.--- was torn up by a perfect eruption of explosions that sent debris and water thousands of feet high. At the time of the third explosion the city was low and another levee crumbled off clear up to the fourteenth levee letting loose a terrible torrent. Think Gertrude what that means. worlds greatest financial city and most go congested tenimants in the world all under the flood water or burned and crem "I want do do good stories one dealing with the human loss, and one about the financial districts and other portions of the city, biggest gold reserve as large as those known new york in merica is soprea of feet under water," his voice rose to a thin treble treble whine." I ask you gertrude is it right? Iean't send a word of it unless you agree."

Gertrude could scarcely believe the news.

" are u so sure!"

"Of course , am a live talked with many one witnessed the disaster. The fellow who is writing this went to look for himself and the soldiers all confirm the reports. He nearly got caught. By the way where were you when is happened."

" Gertrude told the whole stroy of her experience and the experience of her friends.

" Then you had better send a few hundred words of description to the stew, james directed." Don't forget. And send it off to Angelinia agathia as soon as you can. Every press on the map is waiting for it. good bye Gertrude. And don't forget to e on our copy right line."

gertrude assured him she would do all she could though she still could not believe the disaster was so bad as all that.

while this army remained at Abbiemann to try some work of disposing of the bodies could be recovered, Penrod and his followers, made their way toard their ne destination but first going northeast on a train so as to get to the town of guidi where they could catch a Evangeline gt Claire railroad train which running southeast would take them directly away from the scenes of the flood and to the city of angelina Agathia, from which they could get ce communications with the christian army to which they belonged.

Reaching that city th t is the town of Guidi the girls and Penrod almost dropped in surprise. They went by handcar as no trains were running here because of the disaster found this town also in ruins with a large number of its inhabitants killed or hurt.

This was where the book is obviously though it was not flowing, and several chapters of it was on file. To escape being murdered by one of the refugees of homeless in this wrecked town, Penrod, and the girls, and their friends walked north, suddenly they met a policeman one street corner and he stopped them. He had a very bad cut on his and there was a mal mass of congealed blood upon his tunic. in one hand he held his night stick, and in the other he was carrying an empty jugg. And at first the way he approached the children they either thought he was going to, arrest them on the charge of rubber necked night seers or that he was insane.

" Are you refugees from a wrecked town like our's?" he demanded.

"yes" said Penrod.

Gertrude then told him all, and then realising the fact the policeman saidd:-

" do you know where the nearest christian army is so that I can get some milk."

" no sir. The one we left is at Abbiemann."

" well that is too far. Where can I get some water."

Penrod seing a stranger in this town did not know where water could be obtained since it too was in ruins.

" Well I will have to get milk and water". The policeman explained. " I got about a hundred and fourty kids in there" He pointed to the ruined front of an orphan asylum. must feed them somehow, and they are crying from thirst now. They are the only survivors of that building which collasped by the shocks of the explosions."

" shocks of what explosions?" asked Penrod." This was an earthquake, sir not an explosion. Abbiemann city is destroyed entirely by it."

" It was done by explosions I tell you" insisted the policeman." but when I get the water and milk I'll prove to you kids that I'm right."

Gertrude however was the one who solved the problem.

" Did you try that grocery store over yonder!" pointing.

Across the wide street, behind a large hole in the pavement that marked the route of a subway for trains under ground, steam trains was the caved in entrance to a neighborhood grocery store.The policeman stared at it, and then grinned.....

" We might find something there at that Miss Aronburg."

" you others remain here and rest for a few minutes." gertrude told her friends. I the policeman will try to find some food."

But for fear something would happen to her they stu dornly refusen to let her go alone and therefore they were allowed to follow. The policeman and ames father dragged a plan from a wrecked scaffolding and used it to bridge the big hole in the pavement. The policeman crossed first, followed by the others all making their entrance into the store through the ship shop window. With a cry of deli Gertrude Angeline, and jennie turner found many quarts of still fresh and milk, a number of freezers of ice cream of four different flavors, a case of bottled water, and soft drinks, a gallon of drinking water, and added to this supply of rations, and the stores stock of vegetables of all kinds, bread, oatmeal and so on. The policeman beamed as he surveyed the food.

" Thank God and His blessed Mother" he remarked with great satisfaction." The poor kids will think I'm going to throw a party or picnic for them" He then stepped to the window, and bellowed" George, come here george."

And in answer to the hail(maybe it was a whole) a number of city fire men and others appeared taking the provisions and the policeman and the others passed them out and carrying them across the wrecked strewn street to the wrecked orphan asylum.

" those brave boys aided in rescuing the remainder of the kids from the wreckage." the policeman confided to them. " I was lucky to have that relief and rescue party come up here. It is reported six sixty thousand were killed in this town, and a hundred thousand hurt, and two million made homeless. Them kids have to have a lot of things done for them and the rescuers were married men but----" and he said no more but tears came to his eyes. Meanwhile the girls and Penrod had rummaged through the stock a shaken from the shelves behind the store desk and located other things, while after this Gert was went to a ruined drug store across the way and t brought back a first aid pack. And in spite of his protests" I can't bother with me little miss, the injured in the wreckage need aid too" she made the policeman sit down, while she carefully washed and dressed his wound. She must have surely tortured him immensely when she applied the iodine for the flesh had been literally stripped from his cheek bone. He set there through it all making no complained but when asked by Gertrude how he got it he then said.

" If I ever catch that dilandolinian vandal who struck me here he'll think he has met with another big explosion. It was right this morning while the rescue crews started working among the windrows of wreckage looking for those still living. I saw a vandal coming from a store to a wagon, and saw him three an old woman and a little girl from the road. He literally pitched them out into the street as if they were bundles and was going to drive off by himself with some loot he put into the wagon. I ran up and tried to drive him off, but he rose in the seat and struck me on the face with a big knife and got away."

" Here was that officer."

" are on this corner Miss Aronburg." The policeman inspected the bandage, admiring it as the fragment of a a mirror that remained in the store." Say you sure are a good girl scout and t no mistaking it either, tell the vandal surely must have knocked me out, but I came too found several of the rescuers were bending over me one of them throwing cold water upon me. Then a number of fire men came along and they aided me until I recovered. Since then we collected these children from the ruins."

" How long did it take you to get them all out?"

" worked until past morning beginning at two o'clock this morning. We got many who were old slaves, and they consist of Irish, polish, and others. And there are many who have not been able to identify."

Gertrude quite frankly admired him.

" Think it was a most wonderful thing for you to do." She said.

" Guess it was nothing." He looked at her with blue eyed wonder." Some one had to do it and the rescuing party came here. "

" But about your own relatives, and kids and children?"

The policeman looked away.

" We are going to have a mass said for them when we can find a priest." He said. They lived we, down below in the lower section of the city, and they never had a chance to get out. It's all on fire now."

Penrod took a piece of paper from his poket und scrawled upon it the location and name of the Regiment of the army he commanded. He handed this to the officer.

" You are too good a man to lose track of officer." Penrod remarked." Come to our regiment sometime and you may recieve a commission in the army as lieutenant. I'll put in a good word for you and so will the girls."

They all then shook hands.

"Good " Good luck officer."

" Good luck to you and thanks Miss and your good friends. I'll tell those poor little orphan kids that their party is on you."

After this the partystarted off for another town, the father mother and tyeir children of course l remaining behind an after bidding them a hearty good bye.

They took two days to find the right town where they could get the trains and the city of Blure Blue Bell they got the train they desired, but in the station they saw nearly all the men folk were excited by what they had read in the news papers and the great disaster. Penrod and his girl companions and even Radcliffe listened carefully to what the people nearest to him were saying , and indeed the wildest rumors were flew from group to group with the most incredible speed. From one group they heard that the entire shore line of the Calverinia cats had been destroyed. Calverine, Vivian Bay, Angeline Aronburg, Mic-Chirther Janet, and Anna Aronburg were said to be razed.

A woman was standing near them later and she was telling telling her husband how the inland cities had suffered even more than Abbleann. She said Angelinia Agathia lostevery window, Poverty Row was swallowed up by the floods resulting and that a ... of other cities were ruined. Of course there was absolutely no foundations for these ... for the city ofBlue Bell had no means of wire communicating with the outside world ... the first shock of the disaster. Penrod decided to buy a paper and therefore he went ... the newsstand and in a few minutes he and his friends was the truth.it was in big headlines and read;

CHAPTER NINTY ONE.

GREAT LOSS OF LIFE IN FIVE TERRIFIC MYSTERIOUS EXPLOSIONS. SIX HUNDRED SQUARE MILES OF TOWNS AND CITIES IN COUNTRY ARE WRECKED. DAMAGE IN BOMBON CITY OVER ONE HUNDRED AND SEVENTY EIGHT MILLION. DEATHS GIVEN STARTS. FIRES AND FLOOD FOLLOW DISASTER.

At daylight midnight probably June first, a concussion brought on by some explosion ... ... came with the violence of a tornado struck Bombon and vicinity last at midnight ... ...

boyscouts became traffic officers, and many wagons even became ambulances. At the St Joes Orphan Asylum there was sad scenes as the children were carried out to places of greater security. In the basement hall of the building a good looking whitecapped sister of mercy stopped long enough to explain that it was a miracle that no one here were killed. There were about sixteen hundred children in the building all asleep at the time the con concussion occured. The entire west wing of the building collapsed an sent the roof and upper floors crashing to the ground. This section of the building was used by nurses and doctors which took care of children who became sick and no one was in that section of the building at the time, and therefore no one was killed as the other portion of the building only suffered broken windows.

Another great Orphan Home at 1755 north Dearborn Avenue was as usual the victim of the concussion. By curious circumstances this big building had been wrecked by fire and storm several times during the recent years and in this concussion it met with disaster again. No one escaped alive.

In another building for half orphans of the same structure a few were saved. The Head "atron was awakened by the first explosion and so were the children, and fearing the disaster she sounded the warning such as they do in case of a fire, and the children all arose from their beds and walked quietly to the corridors and marched out of the building in perfect order before the second crash came. Just as the last one stepped in of the building there was a terrific bending noise, that made the very city reel, and the roof caved in and the upper floors were buried beneath tons of debris, and the big building went down carrying all the inmates. One little boy declared he alone had no chance to walk out orderly.

" I felt the concussion, and heard the roof crash in" he said and I made a break the door and tried to open it but for some reason I couldn't do it. I guess there was air waves produced by the blast which were so strong that made it impossible. I ran to the basement which I reached just as soon as I heard the upper part of the building co thundering down and crawled out of a window to see the streets shrouded in a thick fog of dust."

Next to this orphan asylum was the St Jerome "atholic Church which probably belo or had connections with the Home. It was was partly wrecked and its beautiful altars highly decorated at a great expense were shaken out, and directly north of it the St peters catholic church lost its steeple.

The Central Catholic publishing company which operates day and night, throughout the week, though closed on "unday, and other Holidays was situated about half a block from the home. In it at the time of the concussion were eighteen hundred men at night shift at work. James Saunders the president said that he was outside talking to a police on matters of the wars progress, when without a moments warning, there was a feeling a he was flying into space, and the front of the building collapsed almost at his feet, h being at the front entrance at that time.

" It was something terrible p" president saunders said. " before the rear of falle wreckage piled down; I heard men screaming for help. I tried to get to them but there there was another concussion and another wall collapsed and ran for my life. I did n know where I was going but nevertheless was determined to get away from there."

All of those men were trapped in this building, but eighteen were taken out alive immediately immediately and taken to hospitals though none were seriously injured. Fo others were unaccounted for but the fire men were digging in the ruins and were expect to locate them.

On some streets immense rows of apartment houses was as to say literally clipp by the concussion. The concussion overthrew these buildings like a cyclone tornado would have done. A little old woman in tears and refused to give her name, said that daughters baby cried wildly in the night, and she took the baby and seated herself at the window and sang it to sleep. Glancing up she saw a tremendous red flash far off i the sky, there came a terrific vibration, and she saw trees snapped off at their roots and houses go to pieces, and th inking a tornado was coming, she with motherly instinct dropped to the floor and covered the baby sit, both her body but the concussion came and wreckage from another building close by fell to the street with such force that a large beam came hurtling through the window striking the baby out from under her and slamming it against the wall across the room, how it escaped serious injury she cannot explain but aside from a few scratches it was unhurt.

" If landslinium vandals sneak into the town, shoot to kill" This order was issued by chief of police Mik anner that night to all police stations. " Do not giv quarter to an, one caught looting whatever."

The chief of police left police headquarters fifteen minutes after the devastatio was finished and personally supervised rescue and other work in the districts facing th scene of explosion where the de estruction was the greatest. Every policeman on the force was called out to duty. By telephone from the various districts not heavily injured by concussion the order for every patrol man to report to his district immedia sent out, and all firedepartments was on the run wherever running could be made. All the extreme northern section of the city comprising hundreds of streets suffered the brunt of the damage and lives lost. At this point telephone connections between police headquarters and the districts was greatly impaired and however many hampered communi cation regarding the extent of the damage and the progress of the rescue and rehabilitation work.

Fifteen thousand members of the National Guard volunteered their aid and were at once sent to the northwestern part of the city and aided, and pantry, A.E.F. and D provided a large number of willing helpers to the police forces. Many concerns that survived the catastrophe dismissed their employees to enable them to aid in the rescue work. So fast came the reports of the concussions so terrifying was the aspect left by it, that in the north central section of the city bounded by hundreds of streets and embracing a section as large as the village almost and those who were caught among its terrors saw it as the ancients saw mythical monsters in one thousand aspects. To some the explosions were like big balls of flame bursting from the horizon. To others everything turned red, and the vehicle upon which they were to be falling in on its self, buildings shook, reeled and rumbled, and people about their cars and the ground beneath their feet acted queerly, for only five minutes it seemed to rage, and then a flood of dust rose from the wreck as thick as human climbed and people scrambled from beneath the heaps as best as they could to look upon the ruins. The ruin is beyond all description.

The ruins of the north Side car barn is remarkable. Its roof has vanished as entirely away by a storm its great beams left hanging from the tops of cars that once were in it. The roofs of those street cars were covered by brick five or six feet deep.
Diagonally across the blocks southeast at Aberdeen street were whole blocks of buildings of all sizes with their fronts shaken out. It as though that strange monster had stopped life for a moment and the passer by was gazing upon the strange stage that was left set, yet to the far north and east of that just across Halton avenue, and Halsted, many houses were literally tumbled into heaps, with only odd walls standing.
Daily a constant menace to the lives of the rescue workers and during the day hundreds of curious to gather in the bodies of the dead.

On Allenby street the concussion shook fronts from buildings, smashed in roofs, knocked walls and in all cases tumbled about death upon the occupants. From the ruins in the corners could have gazed across vacant lots and yards, and empty squares in the city, but they were no longer vacant lots but strewn with beams and wreckage of fine wood houses, every fence and outbuilding leveled, and finally across the corners of the big houses on a score of other streets their south and northern walls seemed as if sliced away by strong hi sine so that again it was though some complicated stage had been left for them. Street cars were stalled in the streets, and wires were tangled loosely.
The front of big stores were shaken down, and near garden avenue avenue, great trees had been seen raising the sidewalk or slab of side walk with it. And everywhere, ever where segons and carts some of them turned upside down in their barns topless, some of them crushed down under the weight of debris.

Only a cornice fell from a big building at Henri venue but where this street met with from Central it was as if stepping into an innocent and virgin world. so different was the unharmed portion, but only half a block to the west and north, on Kimball street destruction was observed again and the same series of wrecked homes and buildings staring with open rooms to the street.

But on Linden Avelue Avenue from Calumet street the concussion probably struck with the greatest fury in the neighborhood of St Gero ystel the front of which and roof partly collapsed but there the expansion of roofs smashed down and driven outward by the force was far west as Calvert St Johns Cathwurst about thirteen blocks north.
The direction as far west as Calvert St Johns Cathwurst about thirteen blocks north.
The concussion also hit at Central street with its greatest greatest fury seemingly about Grandview other streets also in the neighborhood and further away to the northward and all these streets a tangle of wires. Those wires with their cross circuits gave the appearance of fibres to the concussions as one of the factory night workers from the wrecked mill observed it.

"We had about sixty eight men in the mill" he said" and they had just stopped work and was there the explosion came from when suddenly there was a noise of falling buildings across the street. I was to went to the door to look at the weather thinking a thunderstorm was approaching and suddenly far in the distance the whole sky seemed alive with flame only a moment. Then then the street was full of flying things and ruins of falling buildings and all was over."

James Manager owner of a small factory stood at the doorway, of his own at the first sound of the disaster. He had been awakened by the first concussion and had come to look. And then the second concussion occured he could hear many buildings crash down. He jumped back into his house but before he could close the door, he declared he was thrown by the air waves over against the wall.

"You see that ruin. That is a Home for aged. I saw it collapsed, and the walls were forced apart like some great force was pushing from inside them. And then the building fell and how many are still buried in the ruins I cannot say."

Everywhere during the concussion the sound of crashing glass could be heard. The air was filled with the huge missels, and great sections of roofs from buildings, were tossed about like straws by the air waves. Tops of wagons, cars, great chunks of glass and all kinds of trees, signs and movable objects of every conceivable conceivable size in all variety were hurled about, the larger missels falling with a crash to the ground.
Through it all a thick grayish white dust rose up in clouds hiding moon and stars and clinging fast to everything it touched. Most of the crowds first to flock into the districts on the following morning stood still in clumps in the clear spots of debris, a number of the most daring and a adventurous picked their way gingerly along the streets. It was a worried assemblage or mass assemblage and not of curiousity seekers. They all They all felt members of their families had been caught in the wreckage of the buildings when asleep and feared for their safty. There was no way of finding out and fires added to the horror. Travel through the stricken regions was at snails pace, even out of the question altogether at places and whole districts. Police and soldiers tried to quiet the more hysterical but with with little result.

Children whose parents had been visiting neighbors for the night a few blocks away went tearfully along the side walks. The people who were unhurt were left dazed uncertain what to do or how to do it and for the most part the activities of the first hour of early morning was solely conversational.

In many cases entire store fronts had been shaken down. goods that have been shaken from the shelves by the terrific conc concussion were sorted and those still in intact replaced. During the night with two or three feet of water now in the streets and the flood still rising the stricken city was in comparative darkness. The candle into use again in most of the surviving homes since electric curre current either has either had been shut off as a safty measure or lighting systems put out of order by the concussion.

Hour by hour the toll of dead and injured grew, as police, firemen, and nurses and other workers strove to bring order in the distressed area. It was a racking test picking over wreckage which might conceal men, women bodies. Far into the night the armies of citizens andsoldiers labored. With the coming of deeper water and darkness, the peril of rescuers grew greater the trunks of fallen trees blocking the flooded streets and high says and underneath the water lay a tangled wilderness of dangerous electric wires.

On account of the disaster the insurance adjusters stated the losses to all ruined buildings would go far up into the many millions, but each one of the men interviewed said it was too early to make full estimates as yet. That the total damages would prove to be nearly $200,000,000 seemed not to high an estimate according to many who viewed the worse devastated sections up north.

Also half of the large town of Georgenia lay wrecked and shaken that same day, owing to the fury of the concussions, and injuring twenty thousand persons and killing six thousand. All of the houses of the town were wrecked, about four thousand totally, the only ones that escaped with slight damage was the Mic-Hollester and Pandora railway National Depot and half a dosen dwellings case to it on the south side. Among the big structures demolished were all the big catholic Churches. Many thousands of homes were leveled. A train southbound pulled out of the station three cars length ahead of the conca concussion and was thrown from the tracks but no one injured.

The list of dead, victims caused by the concussions rechecked up, the twelfth of indicated the number of injured would almost double the statement of the first day the disaster and would reach 2,345,06. The dead numbered eighty four thousand with the certainty that that this number too would count higher during its increase from the injured list and possibly from the debris which still provided hunting ground for searchers. House to house canvasses gave fifty five thousand six hundred as the highest number of houses houses destroyed, and 100,000 damaged. It was this large number which gave pause to the counters who the day after the disaster gaved the list of injured at fifty over a million, and in the collapse of that many buildings it was also said reasonably be expected to catch a great number of victims. That more than ten million dollars worth of street cars were destroyed was another reason for checking the earlier death lists. And survey of the entire wrecked areas showed that the bulk of serious shock damage was done to resilent houses, apartment buildings, small stores, big and houses, small sto es and other structures. The opinion was expressed that the total loss would be a little over $300,000,000. Calling upon all members of his organization to respond to the Red Cross appeal, it was said many wrecked cities were flooded and not be able to get help from the outside, and that an emormous flood was devastating state. He wired Mayor Govinic of Confection city by wireless asking for help, but received the answer that a flood had also ravaged Confection and that city was cut off from the world.

Ten gangs of wreckers under the building commissioner continued to work at tearing down and clearing away dangerous parts of damaged buildings. Overhanging walls were the chief danger. Six thousand more men and sixty additional wagon trucks were to the army, of men sent by the department of streets to restore as many streets as possible to traffic as now the flood had gone down at Bonbon. And authorities say sight soers away.

Day and night since the disaster soldiers patrolled the destruction zone in darkness and daylight. They were of the Calverinian National guard, aided by the city police. The force of the concussion had splintered poles, snapped stand-arts and shattered about six hundred thousand dollars worth o worth of street lights. The were prepared to shoot all Glendelinian vandals but evidently none was seen, and as fortunately never have had the chance to enter the town. Most substantial buildings without the force of the concussion in most cases with little or no damage. Frame were either lifted from their foundation or splintered as kindling wood, but the brick and brick houses suffered only the los loss of roofs and windows, or collapse of tottering inside. This fact gave rise to an expression from many that it was the strangest work ever experienced. A study of the ruins wer where thousands of houses were found sitn one wall shaken cleanly out demonstrated the fremalan action of the concussion. It was pointed out that from the nature of the explosions it caused also an air wave with tornado effect so that the air was suddenly removed from around the houses and the iner pressure seeking relief forced out the walls or lifted roofs. In many cases clothing hanging on the innder walls was unmoved.

All Churches suffered to a total of $10,000,000. Immense damage was done to all schools but as one were in these buildings. Rehabilitation already started here was its highest side. Here for skilled and unskilled labor was promised in great abundance. The effect of this announcement was seen in the fact that sixty thousand men had been idle. Bricklayers, carpenters, roofers and plumbers were starting on the repair work already. The force of restoration was increased as several more thousand workmen were secured it clearing away the debris and making ready for the restoration of half wrecked areas. Hundreds of residents of other sections of the city continued to visit the devastated areas seeking friends and relatives many of, whom were were found dead. It was estimated that in the stre rt of street of Galhall at least fifteen hundred buildings, and two thousand five hundred small houses were destroyed, as rue after row of houses were absolutely leveled. In this section the wreck was at its worse.

The section around Ravenswood was hit unusually hard and is a mass of crumpled ruins strewed like cobblestones as if a giant tornado had torn through. Death and destruction was centered largely in the neighborhood of sixteen streets north and west of Sacramento. Fire also leveled buildings on Western Avenue, Fimlin avenue, and North Avenue.

The line of heavy damage extends as far north to the su suburbs of Belvidere.

The replacement cost however might be at a slight much higher cost and work than the worst of the damage. Nevertheless the relief work for the victims of the city was well under and food and shelter was made available for all refugees, and plans were laid for the handling of the collection of funds. To carry out the activities of the Relief Committees and to care for the immediate needs of the victims the general committee and the Red Cross sent out an appeal to the world for outside help. The buildings received so far from the more fortunate of the city totall totaled a little over $10,000,000 and the money was being raised without the aid of solicitors. And all available forces have been placed in service to carry out the work of policing the deserted areas. Hundreds of big school buildings housing over sixty five thousand, children were effected by the concussion. The damage to the school buildings was huge as the property loss may exceed ten million dollars.

A rigid investigation of responsibility for the causes of the explosions was being made so as to find out the direct cause.

Damage of $1,000,000 was done to houses caused by the concussion which affected the whole city. A score of towns were demolished, many houses were said to be burning and hundreds of acres of ripening corn was hurled down. In some fields a slight touch of frost had occured the water standing only a few inches from the tops of the corn and wheat ears.

Illeview County was also hard hit with an estimated damage of over three million dollars. Many towns were razed.

Upon fellow direction of disaster relief for the Red Cross, left Angelinia Agathia as soon as heard of the concussion disaster for Bonbon to take active command, of the relief activities in the disaster area. His departed departure, soon followed shortly after by Emperor Vivian had voice d the desire that the Red Cross and the War Department do everything possible to aid the shock victims. The Emperor had been in communication with the Red cross for ever y every disaster of the war and immediately upon hearing of the disaster he expressed deep sympathy for the citizens of Bonbon and other cities and towns and informed officers of the Red Cross that the Andalemanian Govern government was prepared to render any assistance that was necessary.

But it was soon announced the night after that no one from the south could reach Bonbon as a great flood destroying all before it had covered the country for hundreds of miles, and this message using telegraphed to Emperor Vivian almost threw him off his feet. He sent therefore to investigate by taking a route by rail to Delight's junction and after first interviewing General Jansion on the seige of Vivian Glacey, returned by other way to investigate flood news and narrowly escaped when the torrent surprised him at the city. Therefore it was proven that neither funds nor workers or relief could be sent from anywhere in the south. Mayor Altorio of Janvera city also extended the sympathy of that city to the sufferers, and was truly enraged and saddened when supplies could not be forwarded, and sent investigators at all risks to ascertain the cause of the disaster. If the Glendelinians were responsible, as in past disasters, they would pay for it.

CHAPTER NINTY TWO.

RECOVER ABOUT EIGHTEEN THOUSAND BODIES IN CONFACTION.
FEAR ONE HUNDRED AND FOURTY THOUSAND ARE KILLED.
SIX HUNDRED AND EIGHTY FOUR THOUSAND ARE INJURED, AND PROPERTY LOSS REACHES A TOTAL OF OVER ONE HUNDRED MILLION DOLLARS. WHOLE TOWN RAVAGED BY EXPLOSION SHOCK, FIRE AND FLOOD.

The mounting death list in the explosion shocked city of Confection neighbor of pob Bonbon in the devastating shock ruins had reached eighteen thousand, when many add t additional bodies were found and many injured died. still the relief workers and police continued the search for more bodies. Many of the dead had to be treated the same as these when Flood and storm overwhelmed Galveston, and with many thousands of injured in a most critical condition and the portions of the devasted devastated portions of the city still unsearched for bodies, it was believed the total num number of dead might reach one hundred and fourty thousand, while estimates of the property damage remained between fifty, and one hundred million dollars. Thousands of families left without a roof and thousands more left without home; and still more thousands with the sides of their homes laid open by the concussion slept in the streets or improvised quarters, and were fed from field kitchens placed in service by Red Cross Disaster relief forces. Soldiers and police patrolled the streets everywhere throughout the city, directing people thru a maze of fallen trees shattered roofing and broken glass. All of the citys eleven thousand policemen called out when the destruction occured remained on duty for days regardless of their regular hours. The convussions seemed to effect the whole city at one time rasing even the biggest buildings in streets innumerable.

Brick houses in all sections most severely shaken were shattered almost as completely as the frame houses and shed sheds. A citizens relief Committee of, two hundred and eighty eight, with the mayor of the town as chairman was hurriedly organized to direct relief work. The Red Cross placed a relief station at every corner of a street and many surviving wagons were impressed as ambulances. And throughout the wilderness of crushed houses fallen trees, wrecked factories, and business buildings and twisted wires men dug frantically in the darkness of the nights following. More bodies were being recovered,

And the rescue workers rushing into the zones found sad sights of men women and children who survived the disaster standing about dazed and helpless while others dug into the heaps of brick and wood for loved ones.

The concussions played no favorites. Homes of classic design, the humbler structures, schools, apartment buildings, police stations all were shaken down. At the first explosion the crashing of glass was heard, chimneys crashed, houses heaved and fell, while the air was whitewith dust rising from the ruins. witnesses telling their stories later spoke of sheets of flame their origin a mi mystery that shot up in five columns from the far distant horizon, and then disappeared disappeared.

Houses even moved crazily about overturning and wrecking themselves like play things of children. everywhere the thud of falling walls and chimneys, and the tearing sounds of verandas being wrenched from their foundations filling the air. Swift in their coming the con concussions were as quick in stopping. From the ruined rooms frightened occupants not injured appeared in a stream in their night clothing. They found a silence of fallen trees to block their way and now the sky was re red from fires. Hysterical women in night clothes supported by men picked their way out of the debris.

As the danger from fallen power wires became great self appointed guards stationed themselves until police arrived to take charge. A cordon was hastily placed about the sections while elementary work was begun within. As the news was fast flashed to the down town section the police and fire departments hastily mobilized and soon the sirens of fire departments and police ambulances announced the coming coming of aid. travel through the section was slow however and laborers laborers and all telephone connection was virtually stopped, and it was not until three days after that the suffering realized the extent of the disaster. Even news papers were powerless to gather the details of the picture and sketch reports were circulated, and all apparent exaggerations became real things shortly afterwards.

Sixteen school houses housing over eighteen thousand children were badly damaged and abandoned street cars still stood stood where they had been thrown off the tracks by the concussion, and the apartment house owned by the Mayor of Confection was unroofed and wrecked down to the first floor. The mayors family lived on the second floor and were killed.

personal experiences were recounted by many who saw the freakishness of freakish performances of the convussions. A man whose name was Ballenby was just returning home after a midnight patrol when the disaster occured. There was a terible flare of light in the sky fore away, and then I had to go mighty quick for some spot of open ground to be free from crashing walls or hit by flying boards and timbers. I saw a big wagon standing by a curb and I made a dive under it throwing myself down on my stomach and crawling under where I thought I would be fairly safe. But in a few seconds seconds a rebounding brick came whizzing in under the wagon and struck me square on the face.

I was dazed for a little while but not very badly hurt. When the convussions ceased the concussions stopped I got up and helped to carry the bodies from the ruins the nearest houses. During the time" Hecontunued " I saw things flying throughthe air like cyclone was blowing. The e west wall of a house closestos close to themagon and fell downward and that might have been the reason why the brick went under the wagon instead of. They e tell me that agril inthe house that was not totally injurse by the fall had a piano that was turned upside down but that one thing being even in bed was not hurt. Mrs Jennie Gloria, superintendent of the St Marys Orphan Asylum but which was mostly for crippled orphans, one which stood on Brigleys street said;

" I could not sleep, t sleep that night because of a toothache, and therefore I saw the flashes in the sky, and knew that s m something was wrong. The roof was shaken off girls ward on the south south wing of the building, but thu though all was asleep keep some of the children were injured. Nevertheless the larger ones were frightened but they realized the asterity of the supposed earthquake shocks, but the younger ones were still to realize the dan er danger were very quiet. Nevertheless all the children were very well behaved durin during the convussions.

From a point of vantage id a midnight running street car a passenger witnessed and dissesed the antics of the nights explosion dona concussion and described it as follows.

" As I e boarded the car I noticed a terrific flash far to the north and the was being succeeded by a strange yellowish green color and there was a sharp line of darkness bet ween between the blackness and the flashes, flashes. Four men sitting in a row were chattering carelessly. Two other men boarded the car and as so far nothing seemed to aid the flashes. Suddenly the street car staggered under the first impact of the concussion, tyo the front was lifted from tay the rails but was set on the track again with a jerk, and j jar. It rocked from side to side on its trucks. Then a tree fell just in front of it as the motor man being scared stopped. The swaying of the car now began to take effect upon the passengers. I was busy blocking around as when a wall crashed and I could hear from some of the women which indicated she feared the end was no coming. Her self was I in no better shape. I and some of the other men remained quietone, but soon the strange strange shocks died down. The whole thing was over the less a five minutes it seemed. Tumbling forth from the partly wrecked street I looked down Aterms Street struggling through debris of trees trees, wires from telephone poles, slates and tiles and a general desolation. I could not believe such a destruction could be accomplished in so in so short a time. Houses in ruin, had their walls completely shaken away from the top stirues, stories. Also debris started to stream in from the wreckage - so frightened hurried and calling for fearing a repeat of the calamity. In some some instances roofs and walls were gone and one could see beds and furniture standing calmly in their appointed places. At home lacking walls people still asleep and unmindful of the disaster were seen in their beds. At another a man sat upon his bed his head from arom small walls had been with his hands holding his his head, baffled and looking about him as though he could not realize what he had happened.

There were many who could not or would not believe the accounts of three tremendous explosions. But explosions and nothing else were fully responsible. I must must confess right right here that theyGlandelinians were not totally responsible. I must must confess right right here that theyGlandelinians were not totally responsible. I must must confess right right here that theyGlandelinians were not totally

"It's really without the slightest mistake the whole responsibility of the wicked Glenfrliniad Glandelinians." said Mayor Robert Bellen of Maywood town" For they alone have caused this most destructive and devastating flood that swept my beautiful farms away, and this proves that the Glans Glandelinians are not brave enough to even fight fair.."

The flood had at the start driven him to abandon his farm house, leave the crops to be washed away by the rushing waters and with his wife and children to go go to shelter on some high rise of groundground where he had make up his lost sleep and repair his nerves. By when he has been able to accomplish this, and he had done some special train for the purpose, he decided to join the army himself and fight it out with the very Glandelinians to a finish. If If the man had nought or reated a farm house and farm, the loss of it by a flood might have been more excuseable, but this happened to his old home stead where he had been born and lived forty one years without a sign of a big flood until recently.

The trouble began for him June 8th about nine oeclock in the evening or night. His wife had gone upstairs with the two children, and the husband in the kitchen was just about to blow out the lamp when he saw a number of running figures as if in panic go past his window. Thinking it was a number of troops being chased by his dog, he stepped out in a big hurry but the running figures were gone and there seemed by the sound of their feet to have been a hundred persons altogether, while he was wondering, and listening to a strange noise as of rushing waters somewhere, there came a furious outcry from his dog Sam in the woodshed. Thinking the dog had surprised a thief a rebel or vandal man maybe the farmer took his pitchfork and went there to only find his dog, apparently much excited over nothing. Then at that moment arose an uproar from the cows and horses in the barn.

These animals like Sam seemed very glad to see him and calmed down but again there was no visible reason for their creating a disturbance. He then was forced to drop the mystery to investigate a sudden rumpus in the chicken coop, and so it went for over an hour keeping the puzzled and annoyed farmer and his dog marching and counter marching, wondering what had gotten into his fool animals.

Then the farmer caught sight of a number of dim figures run past in the shadow of the corn cribs, hay stacks, southrough his young corn.

"What are you fools doing there" he, he shouted, if there was any answer it was drowned in Sam gams barks. The fugires which seem seemed big and small like shadows of men women and children did not pause or wait, but drifted rapidly along and one of them appeared to sail right over the top of the fence and followed by others disappear in the fields beyond. The farmer who did not believe in spooks, and yet the thing did look spooky to him nevertheless laughed and called after them;

"That trick is a great one. Come back and do it again some time."

He then returned to the house intending to tell his wife. And this was the evening of May 31th when this occured. In the sitting room he paused in sprw surprise and called to his wife;

"Minnie what did you move all the furniture around in the middle of the night for. Of course it is all right if you desire to make changes changes but you ought to get me and my hired men help."

"I did not move any furniture." came the sleepy answer from above. She had been asleep all the time but had been awakened by a violent jolting of her bend, and the swaying of the house which startled her. Her husband wondered exceedingly but decided not to say anything and also retired but not to rest much. As often as he got to sleep the horses would start stamping and neighing and the cows let go a noise like a hundred autos in a traffic jam and there would be a " Chicken Hullabaloo concert" in the big chicken coops and strange booming noises that startled the farmer as he felt the timbers building heave as if to toppling upon him.

"It has gotten to be a noisy farm all of a sudden" Said his wife.

"It sure is to night my dear but there has been strange people running north during the past hours and I feel suspicious."

His own dog could be heard charging about and anxiously calling to his master to come down and help. But the master thought this would be just what the strange person wanted and fearing Glandelinians roaming over his farm therefore refused to come down. Finally wishing to investigate the strange noises he heard he went down and discovered that a Statue of the Sacred Heart and another of the Blessed Virgin had been moved from its standing posture and shifted somewhere else, and that the picture frames were facing their fronts to the wall. The farmer wondered how this could have happened for though his windows were open there was no wind. At first he thought there was something decidedly queer about his farm.

It was bad enough to b have his wife nervious and fidgety, sure he thought the place must be suddenly haunted, and to soon have his animals getting peaked looking and off their feed from lack of sleep but for himself if this kept on it would be worse After working from sunrise to sunset in the fields a poor farmer has to have a night rest. finally he went upstairs, and sheer exhaustion finally drove him to sleep even through the complaints of his animals his wife suddenlywoke him with a nudge and startled-

"What was that terrible thundering noise .Dear! It sounded like real thunder but resounding in many echoes that seemed strange."

Dazed with sleep he would listen carefully, but heard nothing. During the first two nights he was certain that all this was the work of some Glandelinian and consoled himself with the thought of what he surely would do when he got hold of that scoundrel. But at the moment of the second thundering which he even heard himself and while the two were looking right at the pictures where some of them hung near the window in the moonlight they saw the picture frames suddenly present backs to them, the windows rattled, a strange strange moaning sound came down the downspout and the house swayed more fiercely than before. One of the children seemed to have actually jumped out of bed, while his wife naturally looked cute with her hair standing straight up, but she did not feel at all. Never did her husband who got up and lit a lamp and examined the pictures. In no way to be seen was there any means by which they could have been moved naturally.

There was no threads attatched to any of the pictures nor any other visible means by which they could have been moved naturally.

At first again it was his general opinion that someone perhaps from jealiousy was trying to frighten his wife away by making her think her home was haunted, so that the priests ,other who had or was living with the family in the farmhouse and her husky husband being aroused by the same manesfestations in his own room aroused, and the three first hands also were flung from their beds. These men were partis particularly particularly consistic about seeing the finish of these mes manfestations.

About I A M that morning the hired hands had been awakened by being thrown out of their beds without any one even having grabbed them, and then of the beds jumping to the ceiling and coming down again wi with a crash. Then there was some kind of terrific concussion and the next next things the hired hands knew they were coming to with the floor.

The other and father in Sam also were surprised out of their wits by seeing pictures and traditions or sway back and forth.

Even this short time they were all nev nervious wrecks and their birds and beasts were fit subjects for the Prevention of Cruelty ,eci society. However at daylight the terrific noises ceased but it was time for the farmer to get up and go to work. But the first thing he did was to appeal to governer saunders of Calverinia. The head of the State of Calverinia took it seriously enough to refer the matter to some of the militia and a number of soldiers came over toguard the farmhouse. Three spent the night in the barn, two outside., six others with the chickens, some in the house, and outside , while the remaining soldiers camped on the lawn to wing the supposed spooks when they again would make their appear appearance.

But no one appeared.

The next days the farmer in getting up in the morning found his whole farm flooded and the water rising higher every hour. Not forgetting the news of the past Lake Melicia disaster, he hurried improvised a strong raft and placing his wife and children upon it, and some of his animals also started off for a high rise of ground not far distant away.

The town of Mayfield not far from the farm was also flooded but as fortunate circumstances would have it, the waters did not rise high enough to engulf any of the buildings, and though the barns and others were ruined the houses nevertheless were not hurt except may even the barns. These sections happened to be on the extreme edge of the flood which gives the full reason, but nevertheless all the crops were ruined beyond redemption..

Seismographs at all Universities as far south as Angelinia Agathia, and even further were in cities and towns along all Calverinism, Angelinia and Abbiesannian seem comets, in many sections, also of grupoe Europe and in South merica during the midnight hour of from 1th registered what scientists at first declared and thought to be one of the greatest of natural earthquake shocks in all history. They declared large portions of northern Calverinia might have been disasteriously shaken.Ocean cables to many countries were said to be broken cutting off any means of early communications. The quake is believed believed to have spent its greatest force north in Calverinia somewhere close to Abbiesannian city, and many have greatly changed its contour.

One Scientist at north Abbiesannia said before the true nature of the disaster was really known;

"Earthquake shocks of unusual intensity rocked northwestern Calverinia to day and with many cable comm n communications in the northern seas of Glo-Ghirther and Calverinia being severed, and cities and towns throughout all of Abbiesannia, south and north feeling the five concussions which interrupted house hold activities of the inhabitants for three days. complete reports were lacking to day from western Calverinia where some say there went off five tremendous volcanic mountians in perfect explosions and there were indications that the center of the disturbances was twenty eight miles north of Abbiesann city, and effected the whole Western Calverinism Coast.

As far north as Pandora Abbiesannia state, sixteen hundred miles from Abbiesann

Dishes and windows were broken, furniture acted oracily, ceiling and wall plastering fell and clocks were stopped in all the towns and cities jarred by the concussions.

cables maintained by the Abbieannion army signal corps, between Sacramento Abbieannia city, Abbieannia state, and Angelinia Agathia were severed. The main shock was said to be felt in all of Northwestern Calverinia, such shocks strange to say being sudden and equally severe ending as suddenly as they appeared. Many millions of residents were said to have rushed from their beds in midnight clothing .Dishes rattled,and fell heavy night chandeliers swung and all sorts of big and small wall clocks stopped.

Even Angelinia Agathia city many hundreds of miles southeast of the city of Abbieann reported pictures hanging on the walls swaying slightly, but the phenomenon was not believed to be from an earthquake untill hasty wired dispatches telling of the disturbance in Northern Calverinia were recieved.

Angelinia Agathia reported the shocks at 1. 10 A .M. but the main damage was confined to broken dishes and windows and the stopping of clocks.

The seismic disturbances were reported in many parts of the Abbieannian state, all of the observers reporting that their instruments indicated a tre tremendious upheav of some sort of which they could not account for. The Head Dr of the St Gertrudes Univ sity of Angelinia Agathia reported the chart of his seismograph indicates the disturbanc centered in Northeast Calverinia at a distance of 2,344 miles, and lasted from 1 A.M to till ten after one and was of the greatest intensity on record.

Some reports also were that somepoint north west of Abbieann there had been simultaneously five heavy volcanic disturbances, and tidal waves dangerous to small ship also a occo occured along the west Calverinian coast.

THE OVERWHELMING DESTRUCTION OF ABBIEANN CITY, CALVERINIA STATE, AFTER THE LEVELING OF ITS BUILDINGS BY EXPLOSION, AS WATERS OF AN ENORMOUS FLOOD RUSHES DOWN UPON IT. ONE OF THE MOST PECULIAR AND TERRIBLE HAPPENINGS IN THE WAR. ACTUAL NUMBER OF DEATHS WILL NEVER BE KNOWN. FEW OF THE BODIES FOUND.

Early Monday morning, less than one half hour past midnight, June the First 1923, great explosions either in the levees of the Norma and graninia Run and other lakes, explosions that sent clouds of smoke as high into the sky as the fiercest of most violent volcanic eruptions and with as loud a noise caused within a few miles as stated in first chapter of disaster nearly 4,567,000 men women and children of the whole city of Abbieann(this number it is known by the Calverinians perished; although it is probable the loss of life is much greater. were lying dead in the wreckage of the immense city, billions of dollars worth of property was destroyed, the highest buildings in the city were razed, all elevated lines were displaced and holes torn in the streets, and only 10,000 of the big city, really survived for the night only to drown in the flood that quickly followed---and all because the members of the Glandelinian generals wished to stop the christian armies from advancing too far northand around Vivian Wickey to genoions aid. The public verdict was to the effect that Glandelinia was to blame for the disaster, as she had been to blame for the disasters of the past.

Hundreds of thousands of big business buildings, and millions of residence were destroyed, and less than a score of the structures composing the immense city, remained, only to be destroyed by the following flood, complete paralysis followed throughout the whole state, because of the immense floods that followed, and many years the ruined towns and cities would never be rebuilt, hundreds of thousands were driven by their sufferings and never would regain their reason in this life, fires. followed in some places, the majority of the refugees were cut off from succor and relief by forest fires, the enemy, and the remaining portions of the flood, and the nation had all it could do to care for the refugees untill they could get upon their feet again relief puring in from everywhere possible in the shape of hundreds of millions of dollars in cash, and thousands of carloads of supplies of all sorts. As the the business men pluckes up courage and went to work with a will when the panic succeeding the calamity were off, and it was to be hoped that within another year Central Calverinia will be greater then ever and add to both her wealth and population in open defience to the enemy.

At this point the magnificent and immensely large Norma Run River is three and one half miles in width, one and to three hundred feet in depth and passing north twenty southwestward tward and through Vivian Wickey, its waters being held within bounds by hunde dikes and lewees, nearly several m thousand miles long, one hundred and sixty feet thick and one hundred and twenty feet in height, the top having a breadth of few sixty feetThe river at this section is immense, and deep, and the dikes before the war had been widened and heightened, and one portion of the dikes had the property of the Norma River and gouth end fishing and river craft clubs, an organization of rich and influential citizens of Calverinia.

Because of the war, and during this time of the war, there had been seen so many suspicious men around these dikes, that many feared the river would be a constant menace to the residents of Central Calverinia, but engineers of the Mic-hollester Pandora railroad, regularly inspected the dikes once a week, and pronounced them safe, while the Clubs on the dikes authorized the imprisonment of every suspicious person found acting peculiar around the lewees.

The clubs leased the dikes and lewees in 19)- 1901 from the Mic-hollester and Pandora railroad Company. It did all it could to ally the fears of the people of North Calverinia, and said that nothing short of an extraord extraordinary convul sion of nature could affect the protecting dams and dikes, and that they were so strictly guarded that no one could open them with explosives.

The Central section of the state of Calverinia is in a situation that renders it unusually liable to terrible loss of life, in the event of such a disaster as had occured. It is a section of the country built in the bason of two different ridges of mountains though the mountains are far from each section, and many streams of beautiful appearance flow through, all of which finally find their way into the Norma and other big rivers, and thence into the sea. On the north side of Central Calverinia flows the unusually large Norma Run River, which even during the dry periods of the summer can be readily navagated by the biggest ships, but which speedily becomes a raging torrent many miles wide when swollen by the spring freshets or melting snows, or heavy summer rains, and rises half way to the level of the dikes.

On the other side of Central Calverinia, but which flows part way through the Mic-hollester Run River which gathers up its own share of the mountain rains, and melting winter snows of Calverinia, and summer and spring rains, and whirls them tward the Norma Run south near the mouth. But here the river turns and and goes straight south, flowing past Angeline Junction city and making a junctio with the sea. The awful flood however is supposed to be caused by the sudden outpo of the contents of these immense river reservoirs, together with the breaking down simultaneously of the north line of levees of the Mic-Hollester Run Rivers, togethe with the torrents of May and June rains that had already swollen these two big stre to triple their most unusual violence in their history and which is supposed to be t cause of the sudden subsersion of Abbieann city, and the sweeping away of about th quarters of it with the entire number of its dead citizens, the bib elevated struct and everything in it no matter what the weight and size was. The water piled up in overwhelming masses carrying before it everything for hundreds of miles south of Abbieann city, and nothing could check or obstruct its onward rush upon one doomed city or town after another.

Abbieann city, the head of the great disaster, is on the main line of the Abbieannnia Bondinia and great Northern and Calverine Railroad, 287 miles north west of Calverine city. It was as great a city as a city could have been, having as many buildings, as many street car lines, and cars, as many elevated structures, and everything you can think of as Chocago and the whole four or five sections of New York combined, and is the headquarters of the Great Alberto Munition and Shell works, and its acres of munition factories fill every big space that is open in view of the surburbs of the once great city. It had 1,000 big rolling mills that employed each singly, 60,000 men.

The people of the cities and towns south of the city of Abbieann had been war by the Signal bureaus of the approaching flood, as early as 1 oclock in the afte of June the 11th but not a person living in these uppermost towns knew the extent the deluge or its speed, and had not even a chance for half an hours preparatio before the floods swept the houses off their foundations and tore the timbers and hurled before it an immense avalon avalanch of wreckage and materials of every destruction for the extent of many miles with the force of millions of tons of weight at a rate of sixty miles an hour. Escape from so swift and huge a torrent laden with the wreckage of Abbieann city was utterly impossible. The Abbieannia Bondinia and Calverine railroad made up trains to get as many people away as possible and thus saved many lives. It took the flood however from daylight Jun the first untill midnight to sweep the three quarters of Abbieann away.

Fourteen miles south of Abbieann city was, or lay the town of Abbieann where a little stream by the same name enters or empties into a creek larg than itself and the town or city contained about 178,000 inhabitants. It has not heard from but it was said that about two quarters of it was swept away and the over sixty thousand of the inhabitants lost their lives.

Four miles further to the east, on the north source of the Sunbeam river which ran parallel with the main, line of the Mic-Hollester and Pandora railroad was the big city of Poverty Row. It had over eight hundred to a million of more inhabetants ninty per cent of the houses being on a wide flat and close to the riv

Sixteen miles further southwest, was the cities of Vignon and La Polana and cluster of sister cities, Mandro and Murcann and Mildred Greenburg, including St Marie and Francis Atlanta with a total population of over 4,567,000.

The great damage to the eastern and western section of Mildred Greenburg and Francis Atlanta Cities was largely due to the rebound of the flood as it swept around the wreckage dikes formed north of them in the first gradual rise of the flood on the first few days. The wave spread east a hundred miles untill it reach the Mic-Hollester Run and spread against the stream, and pasging over Murcann to depth of thirty feet in some places. It was related that the flood carrying so much wreckage from Abbieann city and the other places further north increased the extent of the disaster in that section.

In Murcann as well as in Mandorn across the river which turned into a big inland sea almost in a day the opinion was expressed that up north so many lives would not have been lost had the people not believed with their experience of the news of the former disasterous floods of Lake Seliola, the Mic-Hollester and Mic-Whirther Run and other war disasters that there was positively no danger, and that the enemy would not dare go so far north or send agents so far north to burn river dikes up there. After passing beyond Abbieann city, the pressure of the was so great that it forced its way against the natural chanel of the distant Mic-Hollester Run River not only over Murcann and Mandorn but all the way down to the junction The city on the southern Calverinian boundary line, to join in with the northern Angelinia flood, and spreading far beyond to reach even Lake Pitts and make a reversal of the horror of November 1912. By the terrible flood communication by rail and wire was nearly all cut off for the whole Abbieannian region.

The exact number of the victims of this most dreadful of all disasters on record, can never be known. Bodies belonging to Abbieann, Poverty Row, Ablean, Vignon, La Polana, Mandorn, Murcann, El Verso, El paso, Antonio, Mildred Greenburg, and other towns were found beyond Angeline Junction, 128 miles southwest of Angelinia Gathia, which is all probability were carried to that place from the northern cities, including the wreckage, and house hold furniture and bee bedding. The terrible many miles long holocaause at the barricade of wrecks in front of Mildred Greenburg and Francis Atlanta, where hundreds of thousands of old men women and children, were turned from the waves, to be crushed to death while thousands frantically tried to swim through caused the most terrible loss of life. The loss of property so far is not known, but the loss of property at El Verso is said about $10,000,000.
$10,000,000. On the very Tuesday after the ernormous catastrophe began, there came out of the military headquarters at Pandora city, who was a soldier, but for a soldiers had scarcely more than a few rags to cover his nakedness, and a hat that looked as if it had gone through a million battles and yet survived.

His name was Herbert Bowan and according to the papers he showed he blonged to the army under general Concentinia Greenburg, and at the time had been granted a two weeks furlough. He stated he had been a fugitive of the flood, and big forest fires, and supported himself during his long journey toward Pandora mostly by hunting, fishing, and raiding some of the enemy supplies. By almost superHuman efforts he succeeded in working his way through miles of burning brush and big trees, keeping his clothing wet, and also swimming and wading across flood, in order to retain for him self the results of the frightful deluge which he said he saw the start from the North section of the Norma Run River from the bursting of the southwestern Dike. Bowan said that he had been watching things going on around that district a considerable time and th noticed strange men, hundreds of them employed in various capacities about the dike of which he did not like and was suspicious of.

"And what did you do about the matter?" one of the officials asked him.

"I had repeatedly" he declared, "Called the attention of the member of the various river fishing clubs to the various strangers working around the dikes, but I recieved the reply, that these men were all right, that it may be they are inspectors looking the dikes over, and that they were built to stand for many centuries and that such a thing as its giving way was among the impossibilities.

I did not hesitate to continue my warnings, and finally the boat man looked it over themselves. Finally I was instructed by one of the strangers who accosted me one day in a wood to 'shut my mouth' or it would be cut-croaked." I was given to understand that these strangers were tired of my spying on them, and the less I said about why and what they were doing there near the dikes from thence on the better it would be for me."

"Tell my mun what was the next move you made?"

"What do you mean sir by move?"

"I mean what did you do next?"

"I then laid my complaint before the mayor of the city of Poverty Row, not more than two days before the catastrophe. The Mayor who survived will tell you himself. I told him that the river was rising to an unusual stage this monty because of heavy rains in spring, and of the melting snows of last winter, and that if it were as I ex pected glandelinians up to mischief about those dikes, and if they were to set off any heavy explosives, the dike would certainly give way."

"What did the mayor do then?"

"The mayor promised and did sent troops and experts to examine the dikes and see that the strange strange men were doing there, while he made an appeal to the State, to have all dikes and river levees examined and strictly guarded. Somehow the proclamation did not good, the strangers no doubt being shrewd and tricky, and as you know sir, the disaster occured."

"Was you as they say a personal witness of the disaster at the beginning sir?"

"Yes sir."

"Where at?"

"North bend. Ten miles north of Abbieann city."

"What did you observe? Give us a good lengthy detail."

"Well sir for four days previously to the outburst, the river waters were higher than usual almost up to the level of the lowest dikes, and the force of the water in the stream was so great, that the floating objects of the things seen occassionally as the water passed by at a great speed. Just to relieve the pressure a little one of the dikemen operating a small spillway opened. opened it, and the water poured out and squirted fully a hundred feet from the wall. To me it was a splendid sight and there I knew the river would never reach above the level of these dikes. But all this time I know from various reports that every branch of this mighty river more closely resembled great torrents than the usual placid streams they are, and were probably supplying the immense river with quite 332,000,000 gallons of water hourly.

At 1: O Clock Monday morning, during a thunderstorm, I was awakened by an unusual sound which I thought was the loudest thunder of the storm, but the ground shook shook so hard that my house crocked like a cradle and the upper portion fell in. I was so scared thinking an earthquake was coming with the storm that I rished rushed out of the house into the dashing wind and blinding rain. I was then about a mile back from the northern dam, or the dam north of me, and by a fitful flash of lightning, noticed that the surface of the ormormous river seemed to be lowering

Well sir, I surely could not believe my eyes, but I waited for another flash of lighting lightning and soon found that my suspicions were undoubtedly well-founded I could not see what happened then because of the darkness, but as soon as daylight came, I not being able to sleep any more that night, I ran across the levee to the dike nearest mine and saw that the water of the river was absolutely welling out from beneath the foundation stones and gravel and earth of the great dike, and far beyond the whole landscape seemed a ocean torrent of water moving at a terrible rate, loaded with trees and wreckage of every description. The dam nearest to mine was not blasted sir, it was the one which caused all the distant water I observed.

But the force of the shock must have undermined the dike I observed. I stood there helpless, and confounded, and watched the gradual development of what is to be the most disasterious flood in the worlds history.

According to my reckoning it was 6.45 when the earth, stones and gravel in the center of the dike began to sink because of the undermining, and within another a gap of fourty feet was made in the lower half of the long walls face, through which the water poured in a torrent almost as wide as the now raging river itself.

By eight oclock the toppling masonry, which before had partaken partaken the form of a long arch, gradually fell in, and then the remainder of the long wall was forced gradually outward like twin gates, and a torrent twice the width of the river was foaming and thundering all over the tet territory from the big gap. It was awful."

Bowan became so awe struck at the unusual catastroghe that he was unable to leave the spot untill the waters tu churning out the gap spread into a sea all over the country within his view. How long a time elasped he did not know before he resumed sufficient power of observation to notice this, but he did not thinkmore than half a hour elasped. Bowan said had the strange men been driven away or arrested the disaster would not have occured, and the possibilities are that millions of lives would not have been lost.

Author John Torrington, one of the most noted engineering experts in the Abbiesannian country, T said of the dikes of this river, before the flood and his words were truthful:

"No engineer of known and good standing could possibly have failed to be expert in the construction and reconstruction of these dikes, and the dikes were very superior piece of work and a kind wholly warrented by good engineering practices of our day, and therefore nothing short of a convulsion or terrible blasting could ever bring them down. Both the original dikes and the reconstructed ones, were built of earth and gravel, and sand, and quicklime mixed with fine grounded stone, with heart walls and rip-rapped throughout its whole width and length. The earth alone was of a sticky clayey quaility, the best of earth for adhesiveness, and made in watered layers, as well rammed down as it ever is possible, as is still shown in the dikes.

The new reconstructed ones, were not only rammed down but mixed with materials like sand bags, and everything used from grounded stone, rock dust quick lime and mortar, the earth simply dumped in as if it was meant to stay there despite even the worse of earthquakes, and the ramming upon it continued for days.

It has been an acknowledged principal of dam dike, and levee building for many years and the invariable practice to build central double walls six feet in thickness of only solid masonry is constructed in these dikes. It is doubtful if there has river dike or levee of any height which lacks this central interior wall.

Shrewdness, carefulness, and great distinction is shown in the construction as Wainwright heads the construction of dikes these days, for as seen the middle of the new dikes are considerably thicker and stronger than the old ones. It is also crowned as much as possible in the middle and lower sides by all the rules and practice of Dike and Levee engineering."

Another expert engineer speaking in defense of the engineering construction of dikes and levees said:

" All evidences can prove the strength of these dikes. Therefore the force of explosions must have been terrible, especially as to make a double disaster into one. And after the blasts had the breaks began at the ends, the out of the ormormous torrent of water would have been gradual, and though there would have been an extensive flood just the same, its force would have been slow, and little or no harm would have resulted. And had the dikes been cut gradually at the ends instead of the center, the suddeness of the break might have been completely checked, the wall crumbling away

most more slowly and gradually, and possibly prolonged so that little harm would have been done sec except for the flooding of streets and homes to only a certain extent and no sweeping away of whole towns by the wholesale.

There was an unusual stage of the river at the time which threatened to overflow some of the lowest levees, which proveds, provided the water would have to rise seven nineteen feet above the ordinary level before it would pass over the crest of the lowest levees. This brought men to quickly raise the level of these dikes, and therefore this was done sometime before the disaster happened. There seems to be no account for the force of the explosions, the destruction of those dikes resulting from the blasts undermining them from below, and of other dikes being razed by the extraprod extraordinary force of the convulsion. The estimates for the dikes call for half earth and rock, but there was an indication of extra more solid materials in the nearly constructed dikes so that I believe the enemy who set the explosives must have stored quantity enough to have blown up a whole city at once. The rip-rap was strongly supplied through and through. The blasted dikes was one hundred and seventy two feet high, and 200 feet thick on the top. The fact that the dikes blasted were reconstructed ones made by the plans of Mr. Wainwright made is specially hard for the enemy to destroy them unless they used extra strong quantities of explosives, and these dikes withstood for ages the strongest pressure of water."

In the rush of waters upon already wrecked Abbiesann city all was over in a night time. The flood from different sections rushed down upon the city with a terrible speed when released from the river, sweeping forests of trees, houses and buildings before it, before it struck the city, then cleared out three quarters of the city and going all the way down way past Mildred Greenburg, covering the vast seas of debris from the city and hundreds of towns in front of her and Fortis Atlanta also on the north, which found an impassable barrier to the passage of anything except the vast agent of destruction----the flood which passed around, overflowed it, and rushed on to wreck fresh destruction through the southern part of the country. One of the most terrible and yet extraordinart and astonishing sights ever known on record, was the long seas of highly piled wreckage of every description north of Francis Atlanta and Mildred Greenburg. This consisted of girls, and furniture of all kinds, which would take a vu volume to list, all piled into al almost solid mast. Here were the torn and rended remains of big wooden houses crammed together as close as possible in millions, and the mutilated remains of countless human beings. The flood at this point which reached Mildred Greenburg and Fortis Atlanta on June the 2th and lasted untill the 22th at its greatest and was one of the incidents of the central Calverinia disaster, that made the whole world sit up and take notice.

The story cannot be fully told, nay one could not look at this vast sea of wreckage without a great shock to his sensibilities. So tangled and unyielding is this mass that even explosions as great as those which shook down cities and towns, and lit like the flood would have little effect upon it.

The high rise of ground overlooking Abbiesann city the view is a prelude of the visions that are to follow. Looking across the seven then remaining flood the first object that catches is the tallest buildings standing as a guardian over the remainder of those left of the once large city---soll tary sentinels sentinels left on the hill after the battle. Still further on, where the largest portion of the city was piled, and where the greatestof all buildings had been, not a vestige of these remain even though the water had gone down so that the deepest is only ten feet.

As the flood was advancing tward Mildred Greenburg on the 2 th of june, early in the morning the people of the city had been warned that the flood was coming. They took the hint, but could not believe and did not believe that the flood would be half as terrible in coming down that far. Therefore many of those who doubted the real horror of the deluge were before nightfall of the first day scattered far along the shore of the flood, cold in death, or met their fate in piles of blazing wreckage, wedged together at many various bridges that failed to give way to the flood, making a horror a hundred times as great as that witnessed at the Stone bridge after the Johnstown flood. Those who could escape were marooned on the topmost floors of houses that were nearly three quarters of the month, where they were living a horror which only Heaven alone knows.

Early in the day the flood first did start gradually and swept through the streets of Mildred Greenburg. Every little creek, and distant river were being forced to receive the water and overflow their very dikes they rose so high, river rivulets became rivers, and creeks were turned into long lakes. The Evangeline Plaine running past Mildred Greenburg far east, overflowed its own dikes which it never did before in a hundred years or since the dikes had been built, and the damage caused by this overflow, and the gradual approach of the first of the flood alone would have been large, while gradual the wae waters was bringing down lots of wreckage and trees piled against the houses north of the city and started immediately an immense pile, but there was more horrors to come and the results were so appalk appalling that no human being living could have anticipated them.

At two oclock in the afternoon the flood grew stronger, and rushed like a mill stream through the city, and rose and rose, the horror beginning like a galva ste flood of a hundred times greater main however from the size of...size the city, an the now resistless flood tore away more houses. This was the real beginning of the main twenty days and nights of the real unspeakable horror. The flood brought down its torrent continually hour after hour the enormous mass of wreckage and floating houses until the north section of the city became chocked up with all kinds of debr
The first of the debris destroyed houses but the wrecked houses gradually builded a jam. The lines of the two water courses passing Mildred reenburg, the River gt clare, and the Aronburge Run south were by this time completely ob obliter
, and the whole country around Mildred reenburg was like a raging sea, loaded with wrecke The great wreckage jams tried to level everything before them, crushing framehouses like eggshells, but had the wreckage passed on through Mildred reen well the city might have been spared much of its long drawn out horror, but there would not be any of it left now.

There were already dead and dying, and homes by dozens had already been swept a but the dead could only be counded by tens, and not yet by scores of thousands.
Being builded up and wedged fast at the north of the city the gradual increasing ammount of wreckage extending for miles in length formed an impenetrable barrier,

Hundreds of thousands of people had moved to the second and third floors of their houses, and seeing the gradual increase of the flood had hoped that the w was over, and that it would soon subside. There was no chance whatever to get aw were cooped up like the people during the hurricane at Galveston, but had they k what was instore for them the contemplation of their awful fate would have been to make mannen and women of the whole pop population.

Only a few hours had elasped from the time of the gradual rising up of the long wreckage barrierer barrier, when the final force of the waters of such an immense flood came like a tidal wave. A long towering wall of water roaring li a sea wave swooped down tward Mildredgreenburg with a force that carried everythi before it. Had the irresistible torrent been able to drive before it this barrier, the whole of the city of Mildred reenburg would have been carried away. The la hundred mile rampart of logs however recieving added hundreds of millions of ton of wreckage checked the torrent, which struck like a tidal wave against an unwa breakwater with a deafening earsplitting roar. But the water though hurled back came forward in a higher torrent and poured over the barrier, while the torrent filled in the flood making a new and wide channel through the heart of the coun and the city, but at this point its flow was man more gradual and only rose and untill the water was up with a level with the wreckage or to the fourth flood of floor of the tallest houses. Again and again did the hud huge flood hurl itself against the barrier like the ropes repeated charge of a large army. But the ba stood firm, except the extreme east of it which gave way, and some hundred thousa houses of a city far beyond were carried away in the new break. Through the gap and joining with the flood coming in from the the east the flood was diverted in the direction of Vignon and in thirteen days hundreds of thousands of buildin probably valued at a hundred million dollars were eb engulfed and laid low. Thous of houses with their occupants were swept away into the seething torrent,

It was now night, and intense darkness added to the terror of the sit Then came flames to make the calamity all the more appalling. Hundreds of buildi loaded with marooned and terrified refugees on upper floors, crashed in from th of the waters, and the inmates of but few of them had had time to make their esc and those the that did threw themselves into the swirling waters and swam for fr and wreckage. just how many people were imprisoned in the wrecked buildings may never b be known, but the number can be estimated at between 1,000,000 and 2,0

A wreckage floe piled to the height of eighty feet floated down and struck a building which fell before it. Then came another horror. Remaining build of good size almost crammed with refugees as thick as sardines in a box became af and flames commenced leaping from the roof, and upper stories. some stove was k set fire to one of the buildings, and the scene that was then witnessed, is beyo description. A terrible panic ensued, There came shirks and shrieks and prayers the unhappy beings and men women and children were killed in the confusion as th crowds fought to get out and throw themselves into the water. But many were held by timbers and watched with indescribable agony and horror the flames in the build tops creep slowly tward them untill the heat slowly scorched their feet, and they were slowly roasted toed death. nothing could be done to save the unfortunates fr the flames, but few were really burned to death, as these houses being gradually undermined f nally crashed into the flood and the people were drowned.

Meanwhile Abbiesnn city had been literally wiped from the map of Calveri big as the city was, good portions of Poverty Row was swept away, and Abiesnn was tn thing of the pa past. The city of Vignon, had nothing left of it but wrecked buildings and windrow c windrows of debris in the same state as alvaston, and nearly the whole of La polanna was Gone, and El Verso wrecked. Hundreds of thousands of people were drowned in the wreck of their homes, hundreds of thousa swept away in their dwellings and met death in the seas of debris that was ed badly about on the surface of the flood, thousands as had been said were ed while marooned on the top floors, and hundreds of thousands who sought safty floating driftwood, and went through the same horrors as the victims of Galveston, overwhelm overwhelmed by the flood or washed and mangled to death against structions. The instance of heroism and self sacrifice were never excelled, perhaps no spalled even at Galveston. Men rather than save themselves alone died with their families in the torrent, and mothers willingly gave up their lives rather than desert their children..

Enrico Borino, a young engineer of The Mic-Whirther Run Dikes saw an old man floating down on the flood near the dry land, with agonised face and streaming hair.
He plunged into the torrent, and after desperate work and almost losing his life, the attempt brought the old man safely ashore. About half an hour after he had done this the upper story of a long wodden house floated by on which were two children a little girl and boy of some family alone of which the two survived. Borino again waged in, and swam to the house, though he was repeatedly assault by assaulted by drift wreckage and almost struck by a floating piano, but he succeeded in saving both children though on his return trip he was badly beaten, scratched and bruised by the floating timbers and wreckage, and one sharp board cut an artery in his left wrist, while his children were likewise attacked.

Another man within two days saved one hundred and sixteen lives at al Fletcher at which the flood edged but did not touch. At the town of Caldwell this was on the edge of the flood, but which recieved some of the water, a man wo and children six little boys, and girls, making fourteen altogether were seen floating down in a large floe of drift. The drift moved at nearly express train speed, and when it got opposite to the shore where a crowd of people had collected mass of drift commended to part in several sections and to swirl and turn around by desperate efforts the man and also the women succeeded in getting the little on a large floating tree. just then the tree washed close to the shore, and the rope was thrown out by three or four of those on the shore. One of the ropes fell on the mans shoulder, but the current of the flood whirled the tree away the man saw at a glance that he could not save the little ees, so he threw the rope one of the children who was alone saved. A moment later a large floated house with a crowd of men women and children on the roof came floating along a moment later later the tree struck the house, the house turned over, and the tree under simultaneously nd in a second those on the tree and on the house were in the seething waters, being carried to their deaths.

Another man known as Helsio of Angelinia Agathia Avenue, East End of the city by that name, distinguished himself by his bravery. He was a messenger on a fast mail train which because of the flood, flood had to turn back at Turner Junction.
As the train passed a point, where the water was full of struggling persons amid floats of wreckage on the water surface, a woman and child floated in near shore.
The train was stopped, and Helsio undressed, jumped into the water, and in two trips with the seething waters, and the sweeping wreckage which fairly bombarded him reached with mother and child.

A special train pulled in at Turner Junction at 11, 30 oclock and the train was notified that further progress was impossible. Nevertheless the greatest excitement prevailed at this place, and large parties of citizens thronged on the shore and all the time endeavoring to save the por unfortunates, that were being hurled helplessly on the rushing torrent.

The tidal wave of the flood struck Turner Junction just after dark and in five minutes the Evangeline St Clare river running past here, rose from its usual level the Evangeline St Clare river running past here, rose from its usual level to sixty feet above normal, to sixty feet beyond that, and this flood tide, which was fifteen feet above normal, to sixty feet beyond that, and the waters went over the protecting dikes and levees, and spread out over the whole country like a wide sea but still did not flood the city. Soon myriads of houses were floating down, and clinging to the debris were thousands of women and children, shrieking loudly for aid. A still larger number of citizens including men and children gathered along the shore of the flood, and then they were hastily reinforced by tyousands thousands from other far distant towns further back.
Many people brought long ropes, and these were desperately thrown into the boiling waters again and again as whole multitudes multitudes of people drifted by in the efforts to save as many of the poor beings as possible. For three hours and a half all the most desperate efforts were fruitless. Even hundreds of the men swam out into the flood as far as it was possible in their efforts to reach some of the victims but they could not reach one. At last when the rescuers were about giving up all hope, a little girl with long bubbed golden hair astride a single roof managed to reach hold one of of the ropes. She followed directions from shore tying it around her waist, and then she was drawn slowly tward the shore, but again and again was violently struck by the floating debris, but managed to continue on, and was successfully pulled on to the dry land, amid the cheers and prayers of thanksgiving from the onlookers.

The little girl was taken to the town of Turner Junction and cared for in the home of the rescuer. The little girl was an rescued child slave, who had been in an African asylum at the time of the flood. Her name was Helen Daley and her rescuer was the Mayor of the town John H Altoria. The little girl was about eight years old. Her story of her frightful experience in the dreadful calamity was as follows:

"I was in the upper floor of the home, abed that night, saying my prayers before going to sleep. In the pormoritary at the same were the rest of the kids, my brother and myself. We were brought there when we we set from two weeks ago when the christian soldiers raided a slave plantation. Shortly after I had said my prayers, there was a noise of roaring waters, and screams of people. We all left out beds in hurry to see what happens, and saw persons running for the houses and others calling loudly for those below to come to the top floors.

One of our attendants came up in a hurry and told us to all go to bed as the waters would not rise further. We obeyed, but the noise of the waters grew louder, and finally one of the higher matrons of the home told us to get ready to go to the roof as the waters were already rising to the third and str story of the building. We were preparing to do so we heard grea great noise which told us houses were being swept away, and then we all ran to the exits which lead to the roof up above. The home was three stories, and we all crowded in terror on the roof. There were ne nearly two thousand five hundred of us.

Still the water kept rising the movement of the torrent swifter, and we could that the big home was moving, and we found ourselves being all carried down stream.

Then suddenly to our horror most of the building began to part into three or four pieces untill finally every section of the building gave way and the most of us were hurlid into the waters of the torrent. I managed to get onto the roof of a floating house, but soon this roof commenced to part, and was afraid I was going to be drowned, but just then another house with a single roof floated by and came alongside mine, and I managed to crawl on it, and floated dwon, untill nearly dead from exhaustion you saved me. After was thrown from the caving home inone the struggling forms of my playmates but Im sure they were all drowned and I never saw them again. I floated on housetops for two days and nights. I saw one of my playmates on a tree but she must have been drowned, as the waters were still rising fast. My brother also floated past on a tree that morning. My sister saw drowned. My Attendant and sister jane was also drowned. The scenes were terrible those two days. Live bodies and corpses were floating down with us every minute, and away from us. I would hear persons shriek, and pray, and then they would disappear. All along the land on this shore were large crowds of poole people people we who were trying desperately to save us, but they could do nothing and only a few including myself was rescued, rescued."

This little girls story is but one incident and shows what happened to seven Orphan Homes. Heaven only would have known what had happened to the hundreds of Orphan homes in the path of the seas of rushing waters, it being impossible to get anything in the way of news for many weeks, save meagre details.

An eye witness at Turner junction station tells a story of unparalled horror which occured in the flood which passed the city at this point at a rate of thirty miles. Hundreds of groups of people on rafts and drift, and floating doors and the like were to be seen coming down the flood every half hour. Often ropes were thrown to the nearest groups, but this they all failed to catch. Soon a young man and two children were seen coming down the flood on the part of some house floor. At the point where this raft came closest to shore a long rope was thrown them, but the speed of the torrent pulled them away before the man could catch it. Between this point and the town the man was noticed to point toard the woman and children, who may be supposed is his wife and children. He was then seen to instruct the woman and children how to catch the rope which was being thrown from other points along the shore. Down came the raft with a rush, turning once in a while like a pinwheel.

As they swept closan to the shore he reached forth and seized the rope, and was almost instantly in the water. He was jerked violently off the raft, and away from the women and children, who failed to get a hold on the life line.

But seeing that two other ropes being thrown had got tangled into some part of the raft, an raft and that people were pulling it in toard shore he took heart, and allowed himself to be pulled in toard shore. For a moment the raft floated down, but the ropes held it taught, so it could go no further, and the people started to draw it in toard the bank. Then another man threw a rope and the woman and child together grasped it, and were pulled off the raft into the water.

The rope however broke, but the woman succeeded in getting hold of a branch of a floating tree, and aided the children to get into the top branches. The wo an held desperately on with her hands and rested her feet on a large pile of driftwood. A piece of floating debris struck the drift, sweeping it away. The woman hung with her body imerished in the swirling waters. A pile of drift soon collected, and she was enabled to get another secure footing, while several men who being good swimmers had plunged in to swim over and bring them ashore.

e succeeded in rescueing the woman and children, and then went for an old man who was on a piece of floating debris. As he was pulling the old man close to shore, there was a sudden crash, and a section of a floating wooden house, parted and they were able to secure this. A number of ropes were thrown, which held the house, one rope being fastened to the chimney, and the man and the old fellow were drawn saftly to shore. It was a desperate effort at rescue lasting two hours, and before the eyes of the horrified spectators on shore it was feared they would be drowned every minute. After this rescue a woman with her two children a boy and girl were seen to pass close by clinging to the roof of a coal house. A rope was thrown toward her, but she shook her head and refused to desert the children; but all were saved

A few miles below Turner junction, the drift going in toward shore. From other points on the shore of the flood the residents succeeded in rescueing fifty families from the flood, men women and children. Several men, one woman and four children succeeded in getting out of the water without aid. They were kindly taken care of by the people of these towns. A little girl passed close by shore just before sundown. he was kneeling on the part of a floor and had her hands clasped in prayer. Every effort was made to save her but for an hour proved futile. A railroader who was standing by and which piteous appearance of the little waif brought tears to his eyes, noticed the raft coming still closer to shore. Finally a rope thrown by some dexterious man encircled her and she was soon ashore. All night long the crowd stood along the shore, the water rushing past with the roar of the wind in a hurricane, carrying with it many parts of houses, whole houses, debris of every description, furniture and trees and freight cars. The flood had evidently increased its force and site up north for it increased at this point so that by morning all the inhabatants had to abandon Turner junction and go further up on higher land. But no more living persons were being carried past. Watchers with lantrens paraded along the banks untill daybreak, when the first view of the awful devastation and havoc of the flood was witnessed.

When the great waves of death swept through the city of Johnstown, Pa. the people there, who might have had some chance of escape, without the slightest doubt, fled hither and thither in every direction. Maybe they had no definite idea where they were going, only that some crest of foamingbthundering waters, higher than the house tops were roaring down upon them through the Conemaugh and Stony Creeks; and that to get out of the way of that, gone in their terror must have dived into the cellar of their houses, though this was certain death. Others got upon the roofs of their houses and clambered over adjoining roofs to places of safety, or the majority of those who went to the hills the water might have caught some in its mad whirl. The people who went to the hills and probably easily managed to save themselves. These people lived near the banks and probably managed to save themselves. These people either stayed out on the hills wet and in many instances naked all night, or they might to find farm houses that sheltered them.

Not the people of the many Calverinian towns and cities did not have even this slightest chance. there were about 345 places that survived, not counting the big cities flooded with great damage, and these three hundred and fourty places each went through a double horror similar to that of Galveston Texas, but there was only two differences, Galveston had one night of it, these towns, but some exceptions, and instead of only one to thirty five days and nights of the same unspeakable horrors, the great difference these places were not hurricane swept. But in other ways the horrors were alike, people being cooped up in the upper stories and seeing their fellow husbands and children drown without hope of rescue.

When the people who had survived began to think of all of Central Calverinia was a wide country buried forever beneath a sea, and when the flood did go down the people had to put up in sheds, barns, and other structures hastily erected from the debris. They had to sleep without any covering in their wet clothing, and throughout the days. They had to sleep without any covering in their wet clothing, and throughout the nights it took the liviest kind of skirmishing to get anything to eat.

And for a full week after the recession of the flood the surviving people were dazed by what had happened that they all appeared crazy, and for that matter they are dazed still! They went about helpless, making vague inquiries for their friends, and hardly feeling the desire to eat anything. Finally the need of creature comforts were overpowered thrm, and they woke up to the fact that they were faint and sick, and it was some days before relief could reach them.

One of a large number ofwitnesses who were far above the danger line on the far extreme northeast bluff of the immense city of Abbieann and who saw the first rush of the death sea, said that it was preceded by what he at first thought was a peculiar phenomena, which he at first through, was a sudden violent volcanic eruption breaking loose from the location of the main levee of the river near southeast gund. He said that a few hours or more before the sea of waters had reached the city and start flooding its streets, there was a tremendous eruption somewhere straight northwest of the city. He said there was a trerendous flash as if a torrent of molten lava had been shot from a wide volcanic crater, and as dark as it was, he also said the cloud of smoke shot so high into the sky he could never estimate the distance, but never saw a volcanic eruption throw clouds so far upward as this. He said he saw huge fragments of earth rise high in the air as if the whole country was being shot up, and the next moment saw what appeared two undulating bright red flushes of light down through and up in the rolling shooting clouds in two directions, and portions of the river go upward like two enormous waterspouts. The next minute after the terrible crash of the explosion which threwhim and all his companions flat on their faces had died out, there followed the roaring of waters as if a huge tidal wave was sweeping land, and then there was a terrible r of rocks, debris earth, boards and a fierce shower of waters like a cloud burst was everyone there. He was struck by a piece of timber and he knew nothing more for seve hours. This was really the explosions which wrecked the levees on the southeast section of the rivers shore just a few moments before the flood.

An aged woman was rescued alive from the attic of her floating house. The house had floated down to Vignon from poverty Row, and then eastward to old the shore. The woman, woman said her experience was terrible. She declared she saw for t days and nights thousands of men women and children floating down in the torrent to meet their death,, some praying, while others had become actually raving maniacs.

One of the most queer of all sights in the edge of the small surviving section of the once ermormous city of Abbie-Ann, was a three story brick residence, stand with one wall, thevothers having disappeared completely, leaving the floors suppor by the partitions that had withstood the tremendious shock of the distant explosio

In one of the upper rooms which was a large one could be seen a mant with a large lumbrequin on it, and a clock stopped exactly about twenty minutes after six in the morning. In front of the clock was a small fan on which the design proved had belonged to a little girl, though from the marks on the wall paper the water had been pver over all these things.

In the upper part of this city, where the back water of the flood went eastward through the city with diminished force there were many strange scenes. Th thousands of high wooden houses were toppled over in long rows over one after t other and left where they lay. One of them was turned completely over, and stood its front on the foundations of another house, and its rear in the air. Not a spi escaped alive from this city, thus making it the greatest disaster ever written.

Every floating house had its own story. From one a little girl and boy went the garret escaped by sepping a hole in the roof. From another a man leaped to s shore as it was whirling past and fell twenty fivy feet upon a pile of locked drift and escaped with a broken leg. Another was said to have come all the way down fro Poverty Row floating for days, and finally landed on the flooded flats at the city site of Delight's junction, where the soldiers there would still point it out.

A war correspondent, desaribed the situation of the flood and of the situa of Central Calverinia ten days after the disaster in this way.

" So vast is the country side of destruction that to get even the slightest idea from any point level with even the summit of a high mountain or hill, or up a balloon is simply impossible. It must be viewed by examining a map. From the west of Calverinia, down to northern Angelinia, and through the state of Angelina line, to just east of Angeline Junction and Gertrude Angeline cities the whole panorama could only be seen at probably the height of six hundred thousand feet.

But looking down from a great height a good view of what is left of Abbie city could be observed. How so many houses of so large a city could have been swept away in a days time seems inexplicable, and yet how so many of the surviving houses happen to be so queerly twisted could be made perfectly clear.

The city was built in an almost equilateria triangle, with one angle point squarely up the Evangeline St Clere Valley to the northeast, and at the northerly westerly angles was the junction of the Sunbeam creek and Rockwell river going toward Norma River where it is said the flood came. The other angle pointed down the same valley of the Evangeline St Claire river. It was a city perhaps big enough to house, merican cities like ew York and Chicago, and then to put England with it combined, had all the same accomodations as both Chicago and ew York, were or was the greatest railway center of Calverinia, had many street and elevated lines, subways and all kinds of importat buildings, Liberiers, and every thing an ermormous city could boast of, busides the most righteous and respectable citizens the state could boast of. Now about three quarters of the immense triangle covering about thirty square miles of ground, and formerly as covered with buildings as the whole of New York and Chogago combined is swept as clear as a platter, except for three or four tall half shook ruined buildings that stand near the angle which points up the Evangeline St Claire.

The other section which was as big as London England though flooded to a of one hundred and sixty feet so that only the tall still standing skyscrapers above the water, remained because at this point, the course of the flood, spread more gradually over the flat districts around that section of the city of five fourty miles, and therefore only the smallest and lightest buildings like wooden houses were either swept away, or jammed up like big bunches of junk against the half ruined skyscrapers and other tall buildings.

The whole body of water, which at the start spread out for a width of fifty miles and moving at a state of seventy to a hundred miles an hour issued straight the huge gaps in the broken levees in an solid a wave as if it had come from the after an earthquake, and tore across the more exposed parts of the city in the same fashion as the earthquake tidal wave did at Lisbon but with more terrible velocity and pressure, and so on through the business and best and most expensive parts of Abbieann city at the upper and lower part of the huge triangle. Here a cluster unusually strong sy skyscrapers and one ermormous two block long and six story high Orphan asylum which withstood the torrent to the last aided by the conformation of ted evidently divided the flood. The greater and stronger part of the torrent turned to the southwest. swept through the lower section of the city, and within twenty four rs all that section of the city was gone. One of the big bridges near the city ossing the Evangeline St claire in the meantime for a while acted as a sort of a dam and turned part of the torrent back teard the north, where it finished the work of the triangle turning again southward and then eastward. The flood that went through the east part of the city was gradually reinforced by the back waters from the bridge and this action of the flood alms almost gave it a regular whirling motion from right to left like some ermormous fifty mile wide whirlpool and which made a tremendous city like whose centrifugal force was like the center of a fifty mile wide cyclone which twisted everything it touched. This accounts for the comparatively circular path through the middle section of the surviving se city section of the city, where its roundabout course through the thickly clustered buildings of every kind was as plain as a circular highway.

The force of the flood rushing through eastern Abbieann gradually diminished and at the places where the currents of the torrents seperated the buildings were either ground to pieces or carried away, and at the ends the houses were only carried or wrecked from their foundations, or turned over on their sides or upside down.

Further down they are not single but great seas of ground lumber. To the northeast the work of the waters de of a different sort. It picked up everything except the big buildings that divided the current, and piled the fragments against these still standing buildings, or swept them over and on down the main course of the flood for nearly the whole distance the flood took on its course.

This left the great yellow sandy burrdh plain, ten miles wide and fourty long, where stood the millions of best buildings of Abbieann, its strongest elevated structures and everything a city holds, the big opera houses, the big hotels, the huge asylums, the large churches, the hundreds of big wholesale ware houses, sh p business houses, factories, railway stations, and the finest residences, and which sent all the dead bodies of those killed in the wreckage caused by the shocks of the distant explosions.

In this plain there is now only a vast stretch of wreckage covered waters, with one tall skyscraper whose sides are gone and only the steel framework left, a splitting steelframework of some other and lower building of three blocks long, and the few buildings of the triangle: One tall concrete residence badly damaged by the detonation shock of the explosion is also standing but the upper stories are soaking wet and dripping water to the flood below.

All these surviving structures do not in the law least relieve the shocking effect of ruin and devastation spread out in those plains, beyond which still lies still like a seaof water but by contrast makes it more striking fearful and fascinating. The part of this surviving section of the city where the flood tore the s narrow circular path there used to be a number of great elevated lines featured on which trains ran into and out of the city on the Mis-Hollester and Interurban Railway. Not a piece of this remains, and some of the queerest sights of the kind are there, though so far few people have been able to come and see them. Of the big wooden houses taken down by the flood from other sections of the city there are scattered helter-skelter helter skelter, thrown on their sides, showing their fronts of roofs, and about twenty eight of these houses were not in the neighborhood of Abbieann city nor anywhere near it before. They must have come down on the breast of the flood sea from as far up as the city of Macall and arrived safely byother towns and villiages which were also taken away by the flood of the flood and finally settled in their new resting places little injured. Delight one long row of them extending for two miles and packed as closely together as dishes in a box and every one tipped over at about the same angle is only one of the thousands of the queer freaks the force of the waters water played.

I got into one of these houses in my boatride over the flood into the city today. The lower story is still filled with dirty muddy water, and everything in the upper floor had been completely turn out. The large center rug which was a very expensive one and was rended into thousands of the smallest t strips on the floor by the sheer force of the rushing tide. Heaps of mud gravel and clay stood thickly and to a great height in the corners.

There was no sign of furniture, and the walls and ceiling dripped with moisture as if it was raining in big drops. The plaster of the ceiling was gone, the windows all and all were gone and the ruin blew in and to my dire surprise the only thing in the house that was really left intact, and which made me suddenly take my hat off and was myself was a solid good sized statue of the sacred heart of jesus.

Our blessed Lord surely looked down upon a sad wreck of what was once a home. There was a long pullman railway coach in the middle of a broad street half way out of the door, and another big coach which was a parlor car stocking straight up into the air with the hind wheels of trucks completely buried in the mud. Inside these coaches were the bodies of the passengers. I saw a long house standing close by and a coach was half way through the walls. Some big railroad yard had also been thrown about the main open spaces of the city for there was long trails of coaches and cars of all kinds left half submerged in the water, mingled thickly with freight care and reaching for over eighteen blocks. and from the appearance of these cars, they surely did not belong to any of the great railroad yards of the city. Where in the world did they come from. One h house had been left up over two four story buildin that withstood the torrent in some mysterious way and then had ste settled down across the opening space between the two like a strange sort of bridge so its former occupa might have got into it again with a six storybladdert ladder.

Down at the extreme lower end of the flood, where its force was greater, there was a house standing on its front and held there probably by being fastened in the deep mud. Through its side, rear and back six trunks of six good sized trees long ones had been driven like arrows and there they stayed sticking out straight in the air making a very strang strange and almost comical sight indeed.

In the muck near gere here was a large wooden Church, a square one, and fourty feet high, and far down on the flood outside the city, near the debris about one large surviving bridge was its steeple. A floor with about thirty rows of exper pews stood straight up like some wall against the side of the bridge. What was once the f organ but now in fragments was strewn all about it, and the city or town that had contained this beautiful wooden atholic hurch was no where. The Alter, the Holy of holies, the Monstrance, and even the Chalis e Xhales Calice ch with the Particles of the Holy Communion was found on top of the bridge, not at all in injured or harmed, in the least bit. The crucifix of the Alter was found in the ruin of the bridge tenders poo pioket house.

The remarkable remarkable stories that have been told about people floating than two to three hundred miles on the flood and living to tell it are easily credib after seeing the evidence of the strange course of the flood throughout Central Calverinia, and down to Northern Angelinia Angélinia state.

People who stood near the ruins of Delight's junction long bridge bridge near that city saw four women on a roof float down toard the, turn a short distan above, and come direct for the bridge. Then they were seen to go far down on the current to the lower part of the town and were rescued as the house floated into the highest section of ground in the flooded christian camps from the second sto window of a barracks building. This house and the four women floated all the way down from Vignon to Delights junction, and Vignon is north of Poverty row, the lo being nearest south of Abbieann.

A man who was impri imprisoned in the attic of his house floated all the way down from Poverty row to Delights junction, but failed to be rescued there, and it is rumored he and his family were saved in Heldi Junction. A long ti for them indeed in that situation

Even at the outskirts of Angélinia Agathia city there is a house which can the way from Homer the furthest distanced city struck north of Abbieann city. It was a man who lived near Abbieann but was working at Homer when the flood came. He said his house was the only building in the town that survived the concussion of the explosion before the flood came came though the house he floated on was not th Before he was even carried past his own home in Mildred Maxwell according to other refugees he had refuged himself on thirteen houses, each breaking up in its turn on the fourteenth he was carried past his own home, and coply told the people in the upper stories of the nearest houses to bid his wife goodby for him if she survived. The house passed Francis Atlanta next and parted in the middle and then he was on a raft the man then carring on a conversation with the people of the upper stories of that house and giving direction for his burial if his body should be found.

The last time he was on the roof of a wooden house this house grounded at the city limits of Angelinia Agathia, on the 15th of june and in an hour or two man was safe in a house. And all the evidence possible showed that the man floated all that distance, and he was almost overcome with exposure, hunger t thirst and mad from the horrors of his experience and exhaustive efforts ar preservation.

Three girls and one man who went by on a roof crawled into the branches of a tree, and had to stay on the floating tree four days and nights before it floated shore and they were rescued. At one time hundreds of floating houses were lodged together near the shore of the flood, and the brave man on the banks went out from the shore and stepping from house to house roof brought in all the men women and children found on roof tops or attics.

Large numbers of women and little girls crawled from roofs into the attics of houses lodged near the shore of the flood. In their struggles with the flood their clothing had been torn from them, and rather than appear among the people on the crowds on shore they stayed where they were untill hunger forced them to attract of the windows for help. Some men then went over with clothing offered by the kind spectators and soon the women and girls were refuged among them. At this stage of the flood more persons were lost by being crushed to death than by drowning. As they by on roofs or doors the toppling houses fell over upon them, and killed them.

CHAPTER NINTY FOUR

A DESCRIPTION OF THE CITY OF ABBIEANN. ONE OF THE MOST PROMISING CITIES IN WESTERN CALVERINIA. HOW THE DESTRUCTIVE FLOOD DESCENDED UPON THE ILL FATED CITY, CAUSING A TOTAL LOSS OF LIFE OF ITS ENTIRE POPULATION, AND PROPERTY A DISASTER WHICH FOR ALL THE WAR MAY BE ONE UNPARALLELED IN THE HISTORY OF ALL FUTURE WAR DISASTERS IN THIS STORY. SCENES OF HORROR AND DEATH, AND SUFFERING . HOW THE FLOOD DISASTER CAME TO HAVE ITS ORIGIN. AN OFFICIALS REPORT ON THE FLOOD.

The city of Abbieann before the destruction by shock fire and flood was situated on the east coast or shore of the enormous Rum Norma Rum River about seven miles east of the high levees or dikes. It was large enough to have put all sections of New York, London, Chicago and San Francisco together in length and area, and its present limits being the limits of the original corporation and the boundaries of the freely situated lands purchased by or from the Imperial Authorities of Abbieannia by the first citizens in 1810 for the sum of five million dollars in Abbieannian money. After this the city grew unusually fast, and most of the streets of the city are named after the great persons of the country like in America and also why those of cities and impoe important personages in heaven, and extend in all directions like in big cities, and are broad, and every street into n uptown, downtown and in the suburbs are beautifully and thickly lined with trees.

The founders of the ornormous city donated to the Nation every sixth block throughout the whole city from east to west, north to south, and also gave many sits for public parks, and set aside many entire blocks for big High schools, seminaries and gave to every congregation of priests a valuable site for a Catholic Church, and also added the big five proof orphan asylums and other homes.

The growth of the city in population was fast because of the nature of the climate and that for a remarkable fact that for the population Abbieann doubled the amount of people of any city in the whole of Abbieannia itself. The population in 18(8, 1898 was about four million showing a great increase in thirty years. At the time of the disaster the population could have been estimated the same as would be found in Chicago, New York, London and San Francisco to day. Abbieann had over fourty miles of completed river docks and many others under construction, all of which were fully equip ped with all kinds of modern appliances. The Abbieann Wharf company which owned practically all these immense river docks had expended countless millions during the last five years for necessary improvements in the way of magnificent grain elevators and all facilities for handing grain and all other materials during all months before the large river going craft lined the docks often two thousand of more steamers and as many small and large vessels being accommodated at one time Beside the numerous smalle r sail and sailing craft doing a large coastwise trade. One of the chief and most magnif icent efforts of not only the city but also of the whole Abbieannian Country, and perhaps the whole world was the manufacturing industries and other plants. And in this branch of industry Abbieann lead any city in the world by all in number and more than a hundred per cent in capital employed and products turned out. Of factories and other kindstries the city had nearly three hundred and sixty five thousand, employing a capital aggregating ié $ 16,000,000 for the factory with an out put of twice as much in a year. The toy companies also were numerous, candy shops and the like. The city's like construction formed one of the chief features of its commercial advantages. The construction began in 1866after the first big flood from the river progressing with during all the years before the war, when the desire of the citizens for a first class harbor led to the formation of a permanent committee which succeeded in getting a bill through the Abbieannian Legislature authorising a issue of over sixty six million dollars on the harvor.

The bill provided tht that there should be three parallel stone and cement jetties extending nearly twelve miles out across the river one from the western section of the city of Abbieann, the other from the north point and the third from the south. The jetties were sixty feet wide at the bottom and sloped gradually to about thirty feet and were about thirty feet wide at the top with railroad tracks running their entire length and which railroad was the property of the Abbieannian government. The imediate effect of the earlier construction of the jetties was to remove the inner shore of the mighty river which formerly was about three feet above the water, and which now was under ten feet of water. The principal street of this big city was also known as Broadway, which was the longest and broadest street of the whole city. Besides being the principal port of Abbieannia, Abbieann was the financial center of the state of Abbieannia, and all of the largest business houses in Abbieannia had their buildings and offices on the Broadway street. There were thousands of business houses to many to be named here but the principal ones are as follows;

John Turner & Company, Grand National Banks of Abbieannia, most modern and beautiful building in all Abbieannia, two block long and a sixteen story structure, in which were located also the offices of the Abbieannian and Pandora river steamship lines and ocean steamship lines combined, and also the offices of sixteen Abbieannian Lords and counts, and also of Adelishied ... one one of the main leading Barons of the State and nation.

Concisely put and with no waste of words, the following story can comprise the history of the unfortunate city.

1 It was the richest city of the size in the world.

2. It was the largest city in the whole nation and the most extensively commercial.

3. It was the gateway to an ... ormous trade ... of all kinds of goods, situated as it is ... between the great ... ord granaries, and ... of other nations. Lies two miles northeast from the rightangle section of the Great ... orth ... end of the ... orma Rum River.

4. Was a great port of entry and the prin ... principal river and sea port of the world.

5. It's harbor was the best, not only on the ... east line of Calverinia State but also the best of all ... harbors ... in the world.

6. It was the nearest and most accessible first class seaport and river port for all the states and provinces of Abbieannia.

7. It was nearly as great a railway center in this story as Chicago is itself.

8. ... anked first in all kinds of cotton and dry goods ... port of the World.

109 Its port charges were as low as or lower than any other port in the whole ... country.

10. It was the only seaport on the Mic-Ehirthian sea coast west of the mouth of the ... Erminie ... un into which vessels drawing more than fourty feet of water could enter.

11. Had steamship lines to many of the best ports in the world, and if I am allowed to say it inthis story even for London, ... ew York, New ... rleans and many other places and the ports of all coastline states of Abbieannia.

12. Has a harbor area of two hundred foot depth and over sixteen hundred thousand acres.

13. Has the lowest maximum temperature of any city in Abbieannia and Calverinia in summer and also in winter and is both an excellent summer and winter resort.

14. Has the finest beaches in the world.

15. Has the most beautiful scenery combining with mountain beauties.

16. Has catholic free school system unexcelled in the Abbieannian country.

17. Has never been visited by any epidemic disease or sickness of any kind since the city came into existence.

18. Has hundreds of miles of street railways in operation.

19. Has eletric lights throughout the city(plants owned by city)

20. It has hundreds of millions invested in safe orphan asylums and other ... homes and private places also hundreds of millions invested in docks, ... warehouses, grain elevators, flouring mills marine ways, manufactories, and ... houses.

Abbieann was one of the most promishing cities in all of Abbieannia, as far as ... banking, strength of its buildings and the nature of its inhabatants were concerned. There had been some persistent opposition to it however sometime before the war on the part of the Pandora and Vivian Mickey ... railroad lines that wished the train transportation of all freight goods and other products further east north, and south, but finally the geographical position of Abbieann city won the dispute.

... given the railroad magnate of the Mic-Hollester and Pandora railroad ... improvements in ... bbieann on the most ... colossal scale, involving an expenditure of many hundreds of millions of dollars, and Abbieann was the greatest shipping port in the world. At the time or at least a week fo before the tremendous disaster there was a large ... ray of workmen employed by all railroads lines constructing great docks, and ... arves which were to eclipse any on the globe. Some conception of Abbieann can be ... rmed by ... oppising the business districts of New ... ork or ... hicago, were to extend for ... many miles at a great height above even the river waters of below.

To say it right the beginning of the city was indeed of the most queer kind, indeed ... like a sort of ... aptian ... streeter ... oribin origin. The only difference however was that the ... earlier settles settlers who founded it bought the ground, and established a town ... company to attract ... immigration. ... ills and mountains making beautiful scenery ... ite ... many miles away. But ... a wide And deep river water way was there and also a deep bay of ... ay ... es and to the north east and south was one of the best farming country in the ... orld. ... o the settlers did not have long to wait. They held to their ... expensive fertile ... nds and traded with fleets of ships from other towns far away which sailed up and down ... the ... alverinian and other coasts from Angeline ... unction to ... acramento Abbieannia. These ... fleets brought outside traders to the small town. But as it ... grew it developed that the ... city ... export trade was all it had. It did a wholesale ... business indeed in the ... proport ... roperation of one hundred to O..

... In this way Abbieann developed in ... growing wise, great railroad bridges were ... constructe ... onstructed and connected with it across the river which were trestlework mounted on ... granite and concrete building into the river. ... con ... as a result Abbieann was a marvelous ... city ... till before the war it became ... of the most ... immense in the world. This ... was ... the situation when the Abbieannian government began to expend money upon the ... harbor, this was the situation slightly altered by time, when all railroad entered the ... city ... and out, when the Abbieannian government ... appropriated nearly sixty million dollars for the ... deepening of the harbor, and when ... export trade alone from Abbieann ... approached ... nd ... part of hundreds of millions of ... dollars ... annually.

... Virtually this was now the city of Abbieann almost wiped out by flood fire and shocks. The ... frightful ... Norma ... Rum ... flood ... from ... the ... bursted ... dikes which ... after the ... shocks ... descended ... on ... and ... the ... beautiful, ... prosperous ... and ... progressi ... a city of Abbieann on ... June the ... fifteenth ... 1913 ... causing the total destruction of many thousands of the best districts of ... the ... city, ... sweeping ... away ... countless ... numbers ... of ... dead ... bodies ... never ... to ... be ... recovered, ... and ... partly ... burying the city till the ... highest ... buildings ... only ... showed ... above ... the ... water, ... and ... then ... ...

all the bodies with them. The force of the flood even on the highest of the city was equally malignant if not more horrible, fin fiendish and cruel, and tore great ten and twenty story buildings and beautiful homes to pieces seemingly with evident delight, tering the debris far and wide or washing half of it entirely into the sea with all the bodies, telegraph and telephone poles and wires were swept entirely away, railroad and bridges, the latter connecting the city with the land across the river was torn and the mighty tangled masses of steel bricks, large sections of walls and fragments of wooden houses, sidewalks, fences, and other things besides furniture of all kinds, whole wooden houses, and things of every description belonging to the city were afterwards seen floating in the bay and the river itself all the way down to Delight's Junction far past Vivian Vickey, rendering it impossible for either christian or enemy boats to make their way along for many days after the flood had subsided, and it was said for nearly two hundred miles off shore in the sea thousands upon thousands of human bodies were found floating in the water or being swallowed up by sharks.

Four hundred thousand soldiers who had went into the city to try and locate dead bodies were trapped in the city itself by the flood, and covered in the greatest terror for fourteen long hours, the intense blackness of the nights, the frightful vastness of the day, the gnashing and lapping of the waves and water torrents, the demoniac howling and shrieking of those gone insane from fright and exposure and the awful indescribable crashing and rending and tearing as the houses a thousand at a were wrecked and shattered or being swept away before their very eyes, ever sounding in their ears.

Often too the many friendly shelters where these soldiers had been forced to take refuge would be swept away, plunging scores and scores of these helpless ones into the mad current which flowed through every section of the city, and the soldiers inside were compelled to undergo the awful agony of seeing their comrades and friends or even relatives drown without being able to rescue them, and the flood was only safely when it drowned a whole houseful of soldiers at once. All during these twenty fearful days and nights until the days at last broken upon the recession of the flood and dawned upon the horror stricken country of Calverinia, the entire population of Central and Western Calverinia it self faced death in its most horrible shapes, by flood disease and starvation, and they could not hope for anything more than the horrors by the flood disaster, and one they realized that with every passing moment of these twenty days and nights hundreds of souls were being hurled into the torrent it was a strange thing indeed that all these survivors after the strain was over, and all dangers gone that the men women and children did not all turn into insane people.

There was not one single inhabitant of the central and western Calverinia old enough to realize the situation who did not have any other idea except that death was in store of for all of them before another day would appear, and when the long and weary suspense to which would be added the heat or the chill of the succeeding days and nights and the gnawing pangs of hunger and thirst, was at last broken by the slow receding of the flood, and by the first gleams of the morning of the twenty first day, the latter was not entirely welcome for the face was hidden by heavy and black clouds from which fell at intervals torrents of rain accompanied by lightning and thunder.

For every big city flooded thousands were swallowed up, and their bodies swept away entirely or mangled and mutilated by the seas of wreckage which had been tossed everywhere, and yet when the flood had receded and the work commenced to find up the haves not a body could be found for it was doubtless that all the bodies were forced to follow the flood waves in their sullent retirement to the waters of the bay.

Dejection and great despondency succeeded horror and fright, all of the business of every city and town had suffered such losses that they were utterly overcome by apathy, all the homes of the surviving people themselves were in total ruins, the streets were impassable, and the wreckage lay thickly on every side, all telegraph and telephone wires were swept away or torn down, and as many miles of rail railway track had entirely disappeared, and all bridges carried away, there was absolutely no means of kind of communication with the other world, not even by boat as the river and bay was crowded in floating wreckage. To add to this the strangest spectacle was also presented of the richest city of Abbleannia, Abbleann wiped out, while other rich in the richest and holiest country in this stray or the world in general if it were to say as lying prostrate, helpless and hopeless, such a prey to many glandelinia ghouls, and so on the people starving, and the bodies of most of the drown people beyond recovery, or soo scattered all over the country and in woods, to decompose and breed a pestilence.

Flood disasters which have occured with the destructive fury and enormity upon the regions of the Mic-ghirther Rum, Lake gelicia and other such horrors in this recent one which partly wiped out the city of Abbleann and destroyed many other places, and which during the war were unusually common to the southern and southeastern sections of the country of Calverinia, and some portions of northern Angelinia invariably have their origin for only certain cause, and not because of natural which the people of the nation at first were made to believe. The explosions which dikes and levees of the big lakes and rivers were created by so much powerful explosives as to go off with the force of gigantic gigantic volcanic eruptions, and which created fierce air waves and concussions as to result in the same horrible dreadful earthquakes of old times,. Neither do the explosions come from any like any else would expect but were absolutely caused by the glandelinians for some purposes regardless of what the consequence of the disaster would be that follows. The glandelinians do it for the purpose to stop the advance of some big christian army, but if any of the glandelinians when setting the explosion pecers would said, "well suppose the force of the explosions would wreck towns and cities, and floods destroy many lives of people not even fighting in the war what then?" their answer would be " They are all christian dogs, so what is that town ?" will for many weeks without even being observed and it being done carefully at night hundreds of glandelinians disguised as nationals worked in placing immense stores of explosives under the Number ten of the big or a gun River and in this particular instance the dike thus to be blown up, a vast some distance south of Vivian Vickey, was destroyed by nevertheless, and North of Poverty Joe, also south of Delsann. and also by The dike which was blown up was in breadth of from sixty to seventy feet and two hundred miles long, and twice a month was almost inspected by levee engineers and proved pronounced safe.

The flood which swept the city of Abbleann and many other places for many hundreds of miles it believed to have absolutely had its orih origin because one of the chief Glandelinian generals wished to stop the advance of an enormous christian army under general Grant who was advancing at the time to us it was believed reinforce general Vivian who was still besieging Vivian Vickey at this time and therefore a large number of men were sent with powerful explosives to blow up the dikes and start a big flood fight in the path of the advancing armies. It was never before since the war began had a flood destroyed cities as complete as this one or extended over such enormous territory as did this one but it is not however unprecedented. The reason this flood moved in another direction instead of the way it was intended to go was that the position of the ground was such that the waters went a northward instead of southward. Some of the floodwaters even made by the enemy in the past, or even big fires and other disasters ever stopped the advance of a christian army, even though they sometimes ruined but everything else in their paths, also this big flood ceased the advancing christian army and consequently moved northwards. Big forest fires were also at this time prevale prevailing in Angelinia and all of the country districts, just north and south of the flood which seemed to be the natural result after such cessation of two nations. The conditions of the land where these cities lay were such especially about Mt. Abbleann and other places that, when the flood burst forth the cities had no possible means of escape, whatever, and hence the most terrible results. And if there had been a chance for the roaring wall of water advancing with the speed of a runaway train, to move further straight eastward, it could in all probabilities have passed Abbleann, so that only the explosions would have taken place such a tremendous shaking up, up in this event the worst effects of all would have been felt around the besieged city of Mickey or Vivian Vickey, which except for its regions of Delight's Junction escaped almost entirely.

It was an absolutely impossibility for any one, even the most learned of all other capitalists, or the best and most learned scholars and readers to form an idea of the almost awful mangitud magnitude of this disaster within two weeks after its occurance. Not a city bigger than New York, London, San Francisco, and Chicago combined, with Abbleann destroyed by shocks with the entire death list of its enormous populat population not even giving them a chance to escape with their lives, and then such a fruitful city drowned under a sea of water, which when it receded had carried most of its water wreckage and nearly all the bodies of the dead away into the sea and far beyond recovery, for the city of Poverty Joe which for twenty eight days had been almost entirely submerged, the morning of July fourth, when the waters had partly subsided and the streets clogged with debris of all sorts and even here all the bodies of the dead had washed away and half of the city with it. The surviving people of Poverty Joe could not realize for three weeks after what really had happened. They first believed that it had been a natural earthquake, a volcanic eruption and a big flood combined, and believed that because the Nation of Abbleannia was Good God was afflicting the country just to try its loyalty to Him. But whatever they believed it did not shake their faith in Him, but nevertheless their sorrow and horror was great and they could not understand how He could have afflicted them thus so severely.

Forty thousand houses had been swept entirely away, fifteen thousand more entirely demolished, and not one of the buildings was fit for any kind of home. All of the people were absolutely apathetic, and they wandered around the streets in an aimless sort of way unable to do anything or even to make preparations to repair the great damage done. Fortunately for the surviving inhabitants so fierce and extensive had been the flood, that not even ghouls and vandals of the Glandelinians, and other glandelinian military thieves, thugs, vampires and bandits were able to get to this ruined city, and had they done so there would have been no bodies of dead persons found to mutilate, and business houses, and residence were so badly wrecked they would not have been able to fortify the ruins without risking the ruin falling down on them.

Colonel Immediately after the recession of the waters the officers in command of the force of Regulars stationed at the Mobelization camps which fortunately were on a high hill sent a large company of men to patrol the streets to be on the look out in case of the approach of glandelinian Vandals, and the governor of the state ordered out all the regiments of the stationary National Guard and various associations of business men also supplied the sentries who assisted the soldiers in doing patrol duty in the city and suburbs. During most other great disasters in the past the horrors committed by the Glandelinian Vandals had been of a most brutal character. Like during the great Lake Bellicia horror thousands of unprotected women who had survived the disaster, whether found upon streets, or in their ruined homes or in refugee camps were subjected to all kinds of [illegible] outrages, and even the very [illegible] jewelry, finding [illegible] like bodies during the great Galveston Hurricane were also found.

pedestrians were held up in the streets in broad day light, and compelled to give up h they had in their possession. The bodies of the few dead found were despoiled of everything, especially those of the Hickey Limbs in horror and in their haste to secure culables the Glandelinian ghouls had mangled the corpse corpses cutting off fingers obtain the rings and cutting off the ears of the dead women to get the ear worn thereon.

The majority of these Glandelinian thieves and vampires belonged to found out to general Mendoys army and some of the armies near Vivian Blue Hickey were reinforced by Glandelinian desperadoes from outside regions who took advantage the rush to the wrecked cities and towns immediately after the disaster obtaining free transportation on the railroad and river steamers upon a pretense that they were christian relief parties going to the wrecked cities for the purpose of assisting with the concentration relief camps and the gangs assigned for the care of those stricken ill with Typhoid. They finding no bodies here turned their depredations up the refugees and their outrages had become so flagrant and the people of the refuge camps so terrified in consequence of their depredations that the authorities of the relief camps being unable to cope withthem, an appeal has been made to the governor to send state troops and force the preservation of order.

General Reid commanding a division of troops in a fort near the relief Concentration camps was also implored to lend his aid in putting down these lawless bands, as he accordingly had sent all his men in his command. The general had ordered his men duty at once, with instructions to promptly shoot all persons found robbing the ruins and attacking the camps, and firing on relief parties. Most of the vampires found the these concentration relief camps were Gmarians, some of them however being Zimmerm the latter more being more savage savage and merciless in their treatment of their victims as the most abandoned of their horse criminals.

The regulars therefore had been put on duty as soon as they arrived and before the coming of another day had shot about twenty of the Glandelinian thugs who were outed on the spot when found in the act of robbery. In every instance the pockets of Glandelinian harpies slain by the Abbieannian troops were found filled with jewelry and other valuables, and in other cases notionably that of the dangerous Scoodlers were found in their possession which had been cut from the very hands of their vict which they held up in the camp, the vampires being being in such a hurry that they would not wait for their victims to take their rings off.

On a Tuesday evening that cold November day the government troops came a gang of one hundred and thirty Glandelinian desperadoes who were attacking a Red Cross Relief Quartermaster Storehouse inthe camp and with commendable promptness had put the ghouls under arrest, and fishing the proceeds of their robbery in their possession lined them up and without mercy shot every one of them. Many of the Glandelinian thugs fell on their knees and beggged piteously for mercy but no attention was paid for their feelings and they suffered the same stern fate as the
When the state troops arrived in the city of Relief concentration camps, they took same severe measures and the result was that within two full days these camps were safe as they should always have been. The very relief parties arrested every suspic character and the internment camps were filled to overflowing. These people were al found to be Glandelinians but as no spoils were found in their possession they did share the fate of the vandals but were deported as soon as possible to a military prison camp, as prisoners of war.

But ghoulswere not found in the city of Poverty Row and relief came then in the line of provisions, tents and all other articles. Every able bodied man volunteered for duty in relief parties, and by orders of the government Glandelinia prisoners were sent down and when ever a Glandelinian prisoner would refuse to do work required of him even while under guard he was orpaotly shot. By a week after the prisoners required had been obtained, and relief and Red Cross parties were fill to the quota deemed necessary, and the work of clearing the streets of the wreckage the treatment of the injured proceeded grandly.

One of the foremost officials of the Abbieannian Levee Bureau at Poverty Row made the following report, June the 16th 1913 in regard to the flood;

"The local office of the Abbieannian Levee Bureau recieved the first message in regard to this enormous flood at five oclock in the late afternoon of June the
It was then moving northwestward over the regions of Abbieann like a sea, and every threw after until the flood struck Poverty Row troops on horse back raced to the from different directions to warn of the danger, while the levee engineers from hills watched the progressive movements of the flood wave. An hour after striking Abbieann city the flood had moved on over near the Bengall states, thence it course and moved northwestward tward the sea, and was central over Ab Abbieann [illegible] morning, when further and more insisted warnings were sent to Poverty Row.

the morning of June the 16th the flood entering the town had increased in depth and and its crest was still increasing while it still moves westward and at nine the whole town was in apparent danger. The telephones at the various offices all places were busy until the poles and wires went down, and many could not get the of the telephone on account of the line being busy. People came to these offices immense droves inquiring about the water and where the flood was coming from. About the time the following information was given to all alike-

"THE DIKES of the Norma Run river is turn asunder and the floods are now upon the city south or southeast of us, and therefore if you cannot get out of the danger you'd better go to upper stories of your houses. One local forcast official and observer stayed at one of the offices throughout the entire flood although building was flooded and wrecked. Another observer left after he had sent the last which could be sent off it being filled at Oliverinie Junction over the lines. And at this time over half of the city was covered with tide water.
last of the observers left for his home at about six o'clock in the evening he had done all that was possible to be done, as telephone poles were then going entire city was then covered with water from two to eight feet deep and still steadily. On his way home he saw thousands of people and told all of them that was yet to come, and to those who could not hear his voice he motioned them to refuge on the upper floors.

flood on the second day after stood from sixteen to twenty feet deep throughout city with the current moving slightly over ninty six miles an hour. During the full of the flood the water carried off many houses which stood the force of the water days. The warnings of the Levee Bureau however were the means of many thousands being saved through the flood. It was so severe for Poverty Row however that it impossible to prepare for dest. such destruction and the flood rose so deep that lowest houses that were not swept away were entirely submerged. The levee committee to relieve apprehension stated on July the 22th that the flood had gone down almost nothing, and there was no indication of another flood following as the waters the river had gone down so much as to make such a danger impossible for a long time.

SAD SCENES IN ALL PART OF THE RUINED TOWN OF POVERTY ROW.

SINDROME OF BROKEDE EVERYWHERE. ONE OF THE SOMBRE SO LEMN SUNDAYS AFTER THEFLOOD. ALL THE PEOPLE PATHETIC, DEJECTED, A D AND HEART BROKEN. WHERE DIDALL
THE DEAD BODIES GO TO. MOST OF THE PEOPLE OF POVERTY MADE LIGHT OF THE WAN WARNING
WEN THE DISASTER WAS PREDICTED.

arriving people of the city of Poverty Row did not hardly sleep at all during the twilights succeeding the twenty days(daylight time), and for these many weary days presented face to face with death, and knew that many thousands had yeilded up their that millions of dollars worth of property had been totally destroyed. They and arriving people of many other flooded cities, had gone through about the same kind surpassing horrors as the people of the city of Galveston did during the hurricane except there was no wind, thunder lightning and rain, only flood. There was not yielding in the whole of the city of Poverty Row which not which was not entirely destroyed or demolished , and even after the flood had receded the people of the ill city ll lived in the shadow of death, all of them seemed or were helpless, and eve helpless, deprived of all hope and ambition merely waiting as to say for the appearance of the official death roll.

Ptell it right, Penrod, and his girl friends had found out long before this that because of this flood disaster they could not get to Angelinia Seathia, for the fact that they took was only able to run as far as Poverty Row city and that no further.
Therefore they found themselves marooned in this wrecked city of eighty thousand people, and after they left the ruined or half wrecked railroad depot they were surprised at what they observed on every side. No matter where they went, they saw that chaos and confusion reigned everywhere, death and desolation were to be seen on all sides ruined areas and ruin where the only things visible wherever these brave children would go, and with business entirely suspended and no other occupation than the search search for and burial of what dead they might be able to find among the wreckage, it seemed very strange to Penrod, and his friends that all the streets and big thoroughfares were not filled with insane victims of the floods frightful visit.

The children also observed that the people did not know what really had caused the disaster though they knew that some sort of danger had threatened them, as they had been warned repeatedly but the poor foolish people had laughed at all fears, [illegible] had went on as usual, and that when the blow came it found the city as well as others unprepared and without safe guards. Owing Owing to the stupefaction following this ca catastrophe, Penrod and his friends found that the people were in no condition ment-ever either physicial or mental, to provide for themselves, to repair the wreckage of t their homes and therefore of course like cities and towns wrecked by disasters in th past depended upon the outside world for food and clothing/. The Abbieann Abbieannia Government al and all the aurthorities of the nation with being compelled to pay for the expenses of the war, to carry on the armies to the finish, and all like forms had been taxed to the utmost by the recent disasters at Glendale and Sperryville , big floods and fires of the year of 1913 as well as the Lake Selicia horror, with the big floods now also raging in northern Angelinia with the blowing up of the pipe of the norma or Aronburge Mn. Run. terrific forest fire this same month of June ha were raging in northern Angelinia added by terrific floods the submerged districts comprising the most ernormous areas ever known for floods, and thirty townships were being completely covered by water, while already the forest fires were burning over three hundred miles of timber. To make it harder t for the Government at this very with this Abbieann disaster combining with others, far to the south the very city of Angelinia Gathia was being affected by the Arunburg Run flood, with over twelve thousand of the people reporting loss of all their property. Dorothy gate City is al flooded ernormous damage is being suffered, and many villages are under water great loss of life and property here is on and never alone knowns now many are being rendered homeless. This flood was even reported extending into southern Calvi with with losses of which nothing is yet known, Jessicia city reports fourty thous nousen swept away with twenty thousand losing their lives, while at gig girl nool five hundred thousand of the population were ruined by the same southern flood, wit thirty thousand persons perishing in Little Girl nool, while the horror is added t or near Galilies an where thirty four towns are swept away with the loss of larg numbers of the population.

Also recently just in November 1912 a great flood horror occured on the Mic-glin Run because of the enemy, and which taxed the Government exceedingly. And now no sa was that disaster over, when two big ones again occur, one in northern angelinia wh wiped out gig Heidi junction city, and flooded all towns as before predicted includ Big Girl knool, Angelinia Gathia and so on, and wiped out property at Galilies a also a flood of more ernormous proportions and on more dreadful consequence the same time in Middle and western Calvinia because of the same result, and with government so dumbfounded and flabbergasted now as to be unable to do a thing or with the situation, and the christian powers and their fi followers thundering i their rage and fury over it.

Penrod and his friends knew the enemy were responsible for this one here a they were loathe to tell the saddened inhabitants. As they passed through they sa that the inhabitants of Poverty Row needed immediate relief but nos they were to g was a mystery even if one train did run into the city, because the government and relief headquarters had all they could do for the flood victims in the far south, t take care of the homeless of both the forest fire and flood disasters, and so on, and even at that poverty Row was not yet in touch with the outside world by rail all communication was cut off, half of the population was taken away by the flood t heaven knows where, and the city was also cut off by a big forest fire fourty miles a forest fire so big, that atthat distance the smoke rolled into the sky in billow balls and curves far over head and lowering down toard the city as if a big roll cyclone cloud was coming. The city though not injured by the shocks as Abbieann ha was more sorely stricken by the flood, and though it appealed to the country at lar to send food clothing and sea water, nothing as yet could be done. In matters of s relief to so many stricken communities at once Abbieannia powerful as she was was helpless like a man bedridden and paralyzed all over his body. The main water sour were in ruins, and all water piping connections all broken or swept away so that th lack of pure water was one of the most serious of the troubles.

Never anywhere else, not either now in the south, or of the Lake Selicia disa Mic-Ehirther Run pleanter, or the Irlentown Town horror did a flood work more reall
All the eletric light and telephone poles were entirely swept away, whole blocks of business houses were prostrated or half swept away, and the streets were littered windrows of timbers, slate, glass and every conceivable character of debris, and yet not a single body or an animal was found under the ruins succomplete had been the fl work of sweeping the bodies away, even beyond recovery. There was not one habitable house in the entire city, and nearly every business house, was either wrecked entirely badly damaged, or swept into the sea sea.

Penrod and his friends were forced to remain in the city during the night t could not hardly sleep. On the following day they neard that there were deaths from nun,er and exposure, and that the lists were swelling rapidly. In passing through Heidi street the children observed that the people were lis living as best as it is possible--in the ramshackle ruins of their homes, in the hall wrecked hotels, in bro down schoolhouses, in railway stations, in churches, in the streets, and all seeming bemoaning the loss of dear ones. Penrod wandered slowly from street to street for fully three hours and one half and so great was the wreck and desolationtney observed on every side that they could not imagine a more sorrowful place. They saw the wreck of most street car barns, with half of the street cars swept away, they knew no trains excep except of one line could reach the town and that was from the north, and where over two hundred brave children went they observed sad eyed men and women walking about the ruins of their homes, and the horrors of the wreck, with the loss of dear ones beyond all human stream streets, and the horrors of the wreck, with the loss of dear ones beyond the recovery of their bodies monopolized the attention of any one capable of doing anything whatever, and it was sure fortunateal the fortunate that there was one thing that the city was lacking, it was not at the mercy of Glandelinian thieves and other such like military ruffians.

Penrod heard that all the finest churches were in ruins, and from Hendro to Center Street, thence to the mouth of the river not a vestige of a residence could be seen everything being swept away. In the main business sections of this city as they observed the water had been from twelve to fourty feet deep and up to the second stories of stores, and stocks of all kinds, including including all foodstuffs were said by experts to be a total losses losses. To these children it appeared to be an uncommon spectacle to see the inhabitants of the fated city wandering around in a forsaken and forlorn way indifferent to everything around them and not even paying any attention to the inquiries of friends and relatives, not even to the questions of Penrod and the girls.
Penrod as he was looking at one of the ruined houses which appeared to have been what was left of a factory said;

"Girls, God forbid that such scenes will ever have to be enacted again in this country.
Anything ought to and could be done to stop the enemy doing this."

Dorothy said in answer;

"It appears to be that as if this had been some wicked city we often read of in the Bible and other Good Books and as if the vengeance of God Himself had been visited in its most appalling shape upon this place which seemingly had so unwittingly and foolishly incurred His wrath. But the enemy was responsible I know it. Nothing else could do this complete not even a flood made by nature. I wonder if the people know this. They don't seem to."

It seemed fortunate after all that all the survivors who were being compelled to endure such unusual hard trails were temporarily deprived of their understanding, and did not know what really had happened, heard nothing of the fate of other cities, especially that of Abbieann, and that they all were so stunned and horrified at the dreadful force of the disaster they could not make out the enormity of the awful punishment inflicted upon them by the wicked Glandelinian enemies.....

After wandering around for a few blocks Penrod came upon a large dance hall from which had come the first loss of lives in the town, where many of the dancers lost their lives and where many others were maimed and imprisoned until the floods came and swept them entirely out of the building and into the sea. They were all dancing and having a very good time on the night of the first day of the dreadful flood, making light of the fact of the impending dangers when a wall of water rushing into the town like a big tidal wave struck the building with such force that from the concussion the roof and upper pillars of the building suddenly crashed in and one of the walls fell out, and came down with a crash killing an unestimated number of them. Those in the extreme lower part of the building escaped with their lives as it seemed in a miraculous manner.
As the falling roof and flooring caught on a long bar enabling the people standing near it to crawl under the debris. But the flood waters overwhelmed and drowned them all and gradually the force of the waters undermined the rest of the building and it also came dow down all then within three days most of the wreckage was swept away and the bodies with it. One man who was sent to summon aid was drowned at Center street his body being found a short time afterward in the main flood outside the city itself.

Fully one thousand seven hundred thousand people mostly women and children congregated at the immense city hall most of them injured more or less seriously and terrified out of their wits by the fury of the raging fl flood. One man from the build being called the garden Terrace reported the loss of the lives of every one in the flood swept building from which he escaped and that only a few of the bodies were to be seen said the rest of the ruins the other having been swept away.

He himself lost his arm and was severely injured at var various parts of his body and had a bandage bandage around his head. Passing along Grng Gringo Street out as far north as Edgemond Avenue and climbing over piles of lumber which once had been long rows of residents residences only four bodies were observed in one yard, and seven in one room in another place, while as many as sixty corpses were seen lying singly and in groups in the space of three blocks. This proved to show that few of the drowned were ever left in the town for the majority of them were not to even be found under the ruined houses for they had been swept to sea.

Penrod and his girl friends found the body of a woman near a place what looked to once have been a house on the corner of Center Street and Heidi Avenue, her features set in death, her lips however smiling her hands grasping her rosary tightly as if she said her beads even in her last moments. Penrod was told by some of the rescuers that the remain ing of her sister was never found and must have been swept to sea.

One of the rescuers said;

"I cannot understand how our levee on the river could have ever bursted, when it wa builded so finely and strong and when the engineers reported it safe and strong, we think that such a nation like Abbieannia which is so good, too good rather, where we never see any crimes, children never need even a scolding, nothing is ever done wrong, and yet to suffer such a visitation while such wicked nations like Landelinia get away with everything they do."

"Do you think God did this to try you"? asked Penrod just to see what the would say.

"I don't even say He did it, but he allowed it through His will nevertheless and though we won't complain as bad as the disaster is, yet the same we cannot underst it, and how he could make this disaster. He don't even deserve it, and therefore ca make out why it comes upon us. But bear it we must, as it all make us better if we are that way now."

"I know the cause of the disaster" said Gertrude at a look from Penrod.

"Not Him surely!" asked the man pointing upward.

"No. The blame is upon Landelinia."

The man looked at her sheepishly.

"I don't understand you" he said looking at her as if he thought she herself the fates.

"I mean what I say" Continued Gertrude indignantly. "You people are not the sufferers. What I could tell you you won't want to hear. Abbieann city is no more, big floods because of the enemy are raging down in southern Calverinia and Northern Angelinia, and the southeast is swept by forest fires. Abbieannia is at stake."

The man looked at her for nearly ten minutes without saying anything while his helpers looked flabbergasted hardly unable to believe the story. One of them walked up to her almost naughtily and said;

"Say my girl scout, I believe you are demented from the sights you witnessed Ach A big city like Abbieann wiped out. A likely story."

But the look from her that he recieved made him step back. He looked at his who nodded. Penrod and the others not wishing to say more walked slowly away while rescue workers looked at them, and one said;

"Why that is Gertrude Angeline and some of the famious Girl scouts. What they must be true. If so God help Landelinia. Abbieannia will pay back indeed."

They soon came upon the street wer where the ruins of St Anne Childrens Infa Infirmary for Contagious diseases once stood, and when Gertrude asked one of the workers there about what happened one of them said;

"Don't you know. Only three persons and these being sisters escaped alive fro this hospital, and hear the number of sisters, nurses, and patients was about fiv hundred. We have been working in this wreck for two days since the flood came and find a single body. I believe they all are in the sea."

Penrod or the others did not say anything to this, they were affected too much, b they went on and came upon the wreck of St Georges Catholic School. This building they learned had been chosen as a place of refuge by the people of that locality. M refugees had gone up to the upper floors thinking they would be safe from the flood somehow or other the waters had undermined this building, and it had crashed in, a few of those who had taken refuge there escaped, how many the rescuers could not tell child scouts, and said it would never be known for the bodies had been swept away half of the building was a mere shell.

Never before in their lives, not even upon battlefields and other had Penrod, Gertrude Angeline or the other heroines observed such a sight, and the sun itself as if it was unable to endure it, veiled his face behind the dull and lea clouds of smoke from the near forest fires, and refused to shine at all during the a day. Surely it was enough to draw tears even from inanimate things. At a union station the party came across the lifeless lifeless form of a baby boy within a fe of the station. They called to some men who came up and one of them gently picked and took it away. No doubt its parents were among the loss. As far as could be obser penrod asked one of the men if any one had been lost in the station and he said;

"No but they certainly won't forget their experiences. The station building ha been selected as a place of refuge by hundreds of people. The force of the flood too a portion of the wall, and the occupants marooned there without hardly sufficient fo for nearly twenty days every moment expected to be their last, escape had been impos it was impossible to render them aid, and about the building the water was fully two feet deep and rushing around it like a whirl pool."

"But how did they endure so long without food and water."?

"Oh there was food there, but only a scant amount, and once a couple of men floating about came close to the building and the people roped it and some took the chances of entering and found food within and brought into it into the station. Ot otherwise there was no means of making a raft or getting a boat and therefore the they were forcedto say untill the flood went down. About twenty of those taken out gone stark mad from their suffering."

Every building not totally wrecked by the flood was being formed into a hospital
As for the few dead bodies found they were being put away anywhere, and in one large clothing store on North Venue all the space that could be cleared was occupied by the injured. The girl And boy scouts went in and observed the conditions of these people. It was nothing to them it seemed now to see the fornlron and crippled and d into the streets, n and they also observed that the living had become so fascinated g the few few dead that were piled up that they could hardly be dragged away, thinking they might find a loved one among the corpses. There were dead only picked up or found g the score for the distance of ten blocks, even it was perfectly certain the number f dead, was by the hundreds, and by the thousands. It could not even be termed a city f the dead for there were hardly no dead persons found, but it had been a vast disaster nevertheless, the slains being probably the victims of the flood which swallowed them up ere their corpses into the ocean. But the dead were at rest, and the living had to suffer for even no aid was at hand, nothing it seemed could be done, for Abbieannia had all she could do to succor the flood victims of the south, and to camp the refugees of rth flood and forest fires.

In the large business parts of the town the damage it was believed would ever ever in the far future be even estimated. The expensive wholesale houses along North Venue had about seven feet of water on their second floors, everything was washed ut of their ground floors, and all window panes, and glass protectors of all kinds were dez l demolished. On Helena Street the water was almost as deep as it was on North Venue. All provisions in the wholesale groceries, and goods on the lower and u second floors were saturated and either rendered valueless or swept away entirely.

Penrod and his party twarn noon of their second day in the ruined town, came upon the ruins of an immense Catholic Orphan Home considered fire proof, and here the Girl scouts ov observed real heart rending evidence of the very heroism and love of the Sisters who had the little ones in their charge.

Here the bodies of the killed had not been swept away by the flood, and the bodies of the unfortunate little folks were found by the rescuers which indicated by their positions that heroic measures had been taken to keep them together so that all might be saved.

Penrod went up to the ruins with his friends, following the men, and came upon a spot where the very sisters had tied the children together in bunches of sixes and sights or even nines, and then tied the cords around their own waists, in the same fashion as had been observed in the Catholic Orphan Asylum in the city of Galveston after the hirricane. But this scene had only about nearly three thousand little tots and girls. The sisters had done this in the very hopes of q quieting the fears of the children and lead them to safty without fear of panic and consternation. But the flood waters rose so swiftly and the water pressure was of such terrific velocity about the large building that like at other places the structure had been gradually undermined, and in one immense block long five story structure came down all a over at one time burying the inmates with it from floor to floor in a terrible avlanche of ruin and burying them under tons of debris. Penrod came upon two crowds of children, tied together and attached to the sisters. He called the girls to the spot, and the men too, and not far by there was another heap piled on two Sisters, and what affected them greatly was that the arms of one pretty little girl were clasped around the sisters neck.
And that the arms of one pretty little girl were clasped around the sisters neck.
The rescuer workers set at the task of removing them but there were tears in their eyes as they did so and one of the men said to Gertrude who was standing near by—

"Who could any one believe that God would really cause this to happen. But I believe it was for our own God, but just the same I don't know why he did not spare the poor little children whom it is said He loves so much. I can't understand this at all."

But Penrod was right out;

"The enemy did this" He retorted. It can be proven. They blew up the dikes of the river at Abbieann and the entire population of that city is wiped out. We escaped from the city ourselves."

The man gave one look at penrod and burst out into a loud laugh, and some of the other rescuers also smiled, not that it came from the heart as they were too moved by the scene to have merith but the words of penrod struck them kind of funny.

"Stay my lad" Said the man controling himself." Are you crazy too."

"No I'm perfectly sane." Said penrod with desc decision. "I know what I'm doing, and God brought me and my friends here."

"Well you sure talk like it." said another of the men.

"What do you mean sir?"

"By telling us that the whole population of Abbieann is wiped out. That can't be possible."

Penrod flianed from his pocket the news paper he had bought in the town he left on the train and showed it to the men. They could not hardly believe their eyes. It moved and aroused them completely. The paper told also of the big flood raging in the south, and of the horrors people suffered down there, of Heidi Junction being wipe out, of the great loss of life life there, and knowing the enemy were responsible for other flood like disasters in the past the man handed the paper to the lad and said;

"It is true, too true. I cannot comprehend it. Here lad I'll take you before the Mayor of the town. He will only be too glad to hear of this. Why in the wreck of this place over three thousand children and ninty sisters and attendants were killed. We at first believed they were washed out to sea but our discovery of the little groups in the ruins indicates all were killed and buried under the wreckage. And I thought our town was the only sufferer. Come children to our majo Mayor. Show him the news paper and relate your own experience. He will report the disaster to the world."

As the boy and girls headed for the Mayors places with the man they learned that the greatest suffering was felt in this town too, even though the population had hardly sufficiently recovered from the shock of the mighty calamity to realize they were hungry and without shelter, but when they saw the Mayott men taking the children off with them they at first thought the children were arrested as curious see kers not knowing their through identification, and that they too need some allpossible to aid the men at their rescue and other work. At this time all relief trains that had been sent from other cities toard poverty Row were forced to turn back, the tracks being washed away and none could reach the other places also ruined by the floods.

The children were brought before the Mayor who recieved them as kindly as he could. Penrod handed the mayor the paper, and he glanced over it carefully . He then questioned the children and recieved a good deal of information from them, and which finallytresulted his his senting out the following appeal and news to the country. country by wireless;

"To the people of the nation of Abbiemnia in general.

To guro Mayor anden of Big Girl pnool city;

I regret to hear of the floods raging down south, where said junction and the places have been wiped out, but we too are suffering greater flood horrors, and it is my opinion based on personal information and of the news papers, that the city of Ann is wiped out with its entire population, and that nearly 15,000 people have lost their lives in my city alone. positively one quarter of the city of poverty row has been swept away and most of y the corpses were taken off by the flood never to be recovered. In my city there are many thousands of people who are homeless and destitute---but no there is no way of finding out just now. Arrangements will be made as soon as it is possible to have the women and children sent to Francis tlanta and other places, as just just now the means of transportations are limited, as so many other places are ruined and no trains can hardly reach us. Many thousands are still to be cared for. We will make an urgent appeal together, us in the central part of Calverinia, and northern Angelinia to the government of Abbiemnia for immediate aid. Everything is To be if revealed as to the nature of the disaster, the horrors ensuing and the cause. I will also appeal to the murthorities to send soldiers and prisoners under guard the latter to be made to work amid the ruin under the guard of sentries and under over rifles.

Walter John Altonio.
"Mayor of poverty pows."

Some relief had been sent in, one of the southwestern railroads to the city of parish sixteen miles away having been repaired, but for the rest of the way the boats which had been supplied were forced to take the supplies the rest of that way from that point (providing landelinian snipers did not interfere as usual)to poverty Row Town.

Food and clothing for women and children were most needed just then than anything else, and while it could be seen that the surviving men themselves could get along with the ragged clothes they had on, and what they had been able to obtain or secure the following the recession of the flood, the women and children suffered immensely, and there was much sickness among them in consequence, and they needed looking after and medical treatment. Penrod and his friends however observed, that the women and children of the city, were showing their example in many ways, and therefore were doing their best to revive the drooping spirits of the men folk and aiding them in other ways. Therefore about three days after the flood had gone dos down there was a better feeling among most of the inhabitants, especially as news had been received that within a few days the acute distress would be over, except in the matter of And also the proven news of the fact that their city was not the only sufferer. Abbiemnia city was wiped out with all its inhabitants gave them full rights to be and overcome with unselfish sorrow and remorse for their fellow neighbors, but they nevertheless they too were not so good off, for every house standing was partly with damp and unhel unhealthy, and many of the wounded and sick were not getting along as it was I hoped.. Many of the injured were being slowly sent out of town to Saint Francis Atlanta, Mildred Greenburg, St Marie and other cities, though affected by the flood also was not injured nevertheless, but thousands still remained. It was it was feared have endangered their very lives to remove them.

On a Tuesday evening ninty Glandelinian prisoners who were sent to the town to work among the wreckage under guard were shot down in their tracks by the citizen because they made a break to get away. One of them was even searched and a note found on which was written these words;

" I don't see why we glandelinians who are prisoners of war should be made slaves and work in ruins of towns of which we have nothing to do with."

In the afternoon of the third day, at the suggestion and advise of Radcliffe that is penrods friend Colonel Callen sent a mounted force of three squads of men under Adjutant Brooker to search a house where escaped glandelinian prisoners refusing to work demanded of them were known to have hid themselves and even armed themselves by plundering some an ammunition store.

" o not accept any surrender, give no quarter boys. We want them as prisoners no more." said the colonel. The escaped glandelinians however either had escaped from ion or changed their location before the arrival of the detatchment, for the raiders soon came back empty handed. Twenty cases of escaping Glandelinian prisoners were reported between four and eight in the evening, but it seemed that though they refused to do the work in the ruined town, and make their desire for freedom effective yet these rebels nevertheless seemed somewhat human for they did not looting or other work of vandalism, but were glad to leave the town and secure a way to their own camps when the opportunity presented itself. Yet at 8 O-clock a report reached the colonel(colonel Major) that twenty Glandelinians who had at first been working under guard at one of the houses had managed to slip away and hide themselves in a big house at twenty first and Eldon Road.

"Give them no quarter" commanded the colonel, as about fifty soldiers and half a dozen citizens, led by a sergeant, mustered before him for orders." I want every one of those twenty glandelinian soldiers dead or alive" said the cool colonel. " If they don't like this kind of work their own comrades elsewhere therefore had no right to start up disasters of this sort. The surviving inhabitants of the southern flooded towns are forcing "landelinian prisoners to work in the ruin and recovery of the bodies of the dead and we,ll do the same."

The squads left on the double quick, and wishing to see the outcome penrod and the boy scout and the Girls went with them. Half an Hour later, they reported ten of the escaped glandelinians killed but that the other ten had escaped for good. The day relief penrod in preparing to leave the town by boat to go elsewhere observed a paper nailed on trees and posts surviving the flood and going up to one of these this is what they read;

To the public. The city of Poverty row is now under martial law, but as there are not enough soldiers to guard plabes as all are mostly needed to fight the enemy, it is suggested that all male citizens be enrolled in some branch of the public and military service, and therefore to preserve the peace, and to prevent glandelinian vandals from entering which might be likely later on, that all citizens should take arms and aid the few soldiers of the military. All good citizens therefore must carry arms, except they can state the reason why they do not desire to do so, and that the latter permission must be written down from the Mayor, Chief of police, or the colonel commanding. Therefore to keep out vandals all good men citizens are hereby commanded to recieve the delivery of all arms and ammunition from the city, and take Colonel Major's receipt for permits also to carry fire grenades because by all means our city must and shall be free of glandelinian vandals. And when batches of prisoners arive, citizens are hereby requested to guard these at work and to shoot down all who attempt to escape.

Mayor John Altonio.

Darting on their way down another street to get to the point where the p boat was awaiting them, Penrod and his party watched the men anew in their work of rescuing the wounded and dying from the ruins of their Homes. The scenes presented to these great children were almost beyond description and as terrible as things were or what they had seen they wrote down on pieces of paper, which they intended to make a sort of manuscript of and give to superior Civilians when they came to his lines. They came to many spots, where they saw hundreds of screaming delirious women, bruised and bleeding, some of them even bearing the lifeless forms of little children in their arms. Many stern hearted and sobbing, bewailing the loss of their wives and children, and making just impressations upon the Glandelinian enemies who had caused such a disaster, not considering why the Abbiemnian Government did not demand redress, streets filled with floating debris and other rubbish, and among which at this point where some bodies of the victims of the flood which the waters did not carry away all constituting part of a awful picture which absolutely got upon the very nerves of these brave child ad adultors. In every direction as far as they would look, or no matter where they could tred the scene of desolation and destruction continued without a break.

It was certainly enough without the slightest doubts to cause a man with the stoutest heart to qual and even grow ieick, and yet as the children neared from the searchers as they passed them on the way to the boat, that they could not unviel one hundredth part of the misery and horror the destructive flood element brought about by wicked Glandelinians had accomplished.

Penrod and his companions also knew well that as far as it was known the full import, and heaviness of the terrible blow would never be realised for days to come and Gertrude said to Radcliffe-

" Although all those men in the relief parties we pass by on our way to the p boat, are prepared and do see the natural evidences following upon the heels of the mighty flood caused by the Glandelinians, they do not yet anticipate the frightful revelations that are to come yet when the wagons of wreckage are made removed. I do not believed believe all the bodies of the dead are swept away by the floods."

" yes" answered Penrod looking carefully" in these floods which the glandelinians have been responsible for in all parts, like at Mic-ghirther Run, Lake Lake Gellcia, Northern Angelinia and other places including where it is a wilful butchery, a massacre of whole cities and towns full of people without precedent, a gathering of victims they,

that is so ghastly as to be beyond the power of any man to picture or describe. It is more than expected the Glandelinians would ever do, and I don't see how they'll win war by it ither."

"They never shall" said Jennie Lermer determinedly." Our cause is just, that is we suffer so before we can win."

As the party continued on their way, they met others who made reports of things, had come under their notice. There were five hundred killed or drowned in one section the city, one thousand in another, and five thousand in other sections. The list grew larger with each report, and when penrod asked" How do you know this, when most of the bodies are missing entirely?" He answered or one of the men answered-

"We know by one way and that is how many inhabatants there were in those sections before the flood disaster, and how many are remaining now."

Itherefore was a matter of wonder and surprise to these children, and an increas wonder too, that evens single soul escaped to tell the tale at that. Yet to the chil no one seemed entirely sane, most of their reports seemed exaggerating or queer in s causes, and it seemed as if there was rank madness in the air.

All the women and children whom they observed moved in an atmosphere of gloom and even brooding, it was difficult for the adventurers to move and breathe with so mu death, death on all sides, and yet they could not keep their hrown eyes off of those he fascinating corpses which they did come across, even though they were few in number. They riveted their gaze, and a chill sent through the children such as they never h before, and life and death were so often closely intermingled they could not be tol apart. It was a scene to them more than the apotheosis of the most frightful battle of the war they had seen so far.

Penrod came across many who had escaped the flood, who were searching for dea who were missing and they were seeming to do this in such a listless way as to in convey the idea to strangers who did not know the situation, that they did not car whether they found them dead or not.

But penrod and the rest knew it was the langour of hopelessness and despair, were many of those whom penrod and his friends met, who also had lost their all, and they were even merry, even made fun and cracked jokes about their beloved dead. Penr came across one man who stood by the body of a little girl near the ruins. penrod r up and asked;

"Did your little girl die too?"

"The man horrified him by laughing heartily as he s aid;

"Yes. she died in the flood. Oh it was funny to see her as she came out. She told me she liked to drown a thousand times. Say can we all drown, die to da and to morrow and live?"

These words struk struck the ad enturers as queer, but they realized it was in glee of insanity.

One woman who had lost her home and children mistook penrod and his party for her own two boys, and girls, and would have seized them, had not several men come up and taken her away. She was raving mad. Come nearer to their destination they found the streets lined with people half clad, crippled and injured in every manner debris some nobbling as best as they could to where they could or hoped to recieve attentio of physicians for themselves, and common the aid needed for friends and relatives who could not move.

Cardinal John Landis who had recently been awarded as the most popular and belli in the city, was in a sad condition indeed, his two legs were so broken, one rib br ed inand his head badly bruised, but his own condition he declared was nothing. M Priest house with all the priests, and my beautiful church is either in the river o Bay. I am alone in the world now and will have to seek membership in some other ch or try and build one of my own."

Penrod and his friends had observed this day, that all the houses of all promin citizens which escaped total destruction, and which though wrecked were prompt prem safe and strong, were turned into hospitals as were also some surviving churches and churches, and leading hotels. Therefore there was not one good house left standing which did not contain hundreds of injured and one or more of the dead.

Toard noon also of this day, an insane noisy thunderstorm came up from the north and the rain began to pour down in sheeted torrents driven by a fifty mile wind. penrod and his party were forced to stop at a large c clothing store to avoid the storm, and found it packed with injured and sick. The misery of these poor people all mangled and many mangled an and hurt pressing to the points of doctors cared for medical treatment was greatly augmented by this thunderstorm, and the provisions in which they went to seek shelter had been ruined and there was nothingtherefore for g the numerous customers who came hungry and tired. The places also were turned into hospitals and were no longer any ago stores.

further down the street a large resturant which also had been submerged by were serving out soggy crackers and cheese to the hungry crowds. That was all that left. The food was soaked full of water, and the people who were fortunate to get the sandwitches were good and hungry and therefore did not make any complaints and were thankful. For penrod and his followers it was hard indeed to determine which section city suffered suffered the most or especially the greatest damage, and the largest of life. Though some information had come from both the extreme western and southern ctions of the city where the floods had hit the hardest it was difficult to obtain ne right account at that time, and from one portion it was reported that all the houses and that swept away with all their inhabatants, the waters not even leaving behind the foundations of the buildings, or anything whatever. It was nearly impossible however to tell the right things about any sections of the city, but nevertheless the reports that have is indicated that those two main sections had suffered a worse fate than the rest of the city, and that at least one quarter of the city had been entirely swept away. This the small party of adventurous children made their way through streets which but a few hours before were teeming with life and beauty, even though it was the time of a dread war.

Now they were the throughfares of death and destruction.

It did not even seem at all as if they could ever resound to the throbs of quickened vitality again.

It also seemed as though it would take many years to even remove the wreckage of the houses that remained even in hundreds of thousands of Glandelinian prisoners were forcibly employed.....

In to rebuilding, it appeared the work of many ages maybe a full century.

Indeed it appeared as if not only this town but the whole nation was prostrated.

Desolation was everywhere.....

Is marked out on the main charts of the Abbleann war and also Weather Bureau at the city of Angelinia sustained the brunt of the flood which struck Bio Abbleann and vicinity and other cities and towns had a most peculiar course naturally because of the formation of the land scapes in that locality. The nature of true nature of the path of the enormous flood was definitely located south by east of Abuleann, and the second day after the beginning of the catastrophe the center of the flood and the cities of Poverty Gap, Vignon, La Goleta, El verso; El Paso, San Antonio; Delain and many other places and the tail end though destructive enough touched Delight,s Junction and threatended Norma Catherine the eastern section of besieged Vivien Valley. passing on through Abbleann& sorking southeastward and then eastward the flood, made a turn almost its straight west passing through Imperial City, Emerald City, and Glandes Town, and if it had continued on this same course it would have struck Delight's junction just the same but somewhat earlier than it did and with more disasterous effects. The flood because of the nature of the land was heading straight for Delight's Junction all the time, but on the third day since its beginning, when it was south of Gainfuegos (Calverinia) it struck a section of land whose formations caused the brunt of the flood change its course so as to go almost due west, across the counties of North Ann which Ann which it struck with the force of the Johnstown flood through the scods near Heidi Junction Run and up toard the mouth of the Graninia valley to join almost with the flood already devastating Heidi Junction and many other places and spreading all the way across central Calverinia to a distance of over three hundred miles flooding four hundred towns completely under water and giving the inhabitants there barely time to escape with their lives. Here the brunt of the flood made another sharp turn to the southward and headed against almost straight for Delight's Junction.

Was this sudden sharp turn to the southeastward which could not be at all expected Nevertheless the armies of besieging christian soldiers in this locality had almost earning of the coming of the flood but of course could not anticipate the full force or destructive energy it would retain all that distance down from the direction of Ableann city.

The Weather Bureaus and other national war and Weather e departments had sent out the flood warnings to all parts of central Calverinia, and both for the northern Angelinia valleys and southern Calverinia as well as western Calverinia, well knowing that the position as to these floods would not fail to save many lives. As soon as the two floods threatened to make a junction, and as the southern one turned straight northward from Heidi Junction and Big Girl flood the various Bureaus knew the central parts of Calverinia was in danger andturned their at e attention to prevent unusual loss of life.

The various Bureaus were informed that the first signs of the disasterous Northwestern Calverinia flood was noticed on about the June the 16th near the Belladonia levee some distance northeast of Abbleann city. On the 17th it was still in the neighborhood and it was then that nearly three quarters of Abbleann city was inundated and one third of its numerous houses swept away with all the bodies taken from remaining houses and carried away so that only 10,000 bodies were recovered after the waters receded.....

Elsewhere south of Abbleann the flood did not develope any forward moving features during its slow rising through the Abbleann territory and elsewhere, but became logged and jamed with wreckage of every description. During the 18th of the first ten hours in Abbleann city, fifty feet of water remained, and reduced slightly to fourty on the 19th and then rose anew with all the water still pouring from the bursted levee of the immense flood tide of the river Norma ...un. Then the flood moves forward and by the morning of the 20th of June the flood center was ... short distance northwest of Rivera tearing down upon poverty ine, El verso and La polama and the suddenly rising waters had commenced over southern Poverty Row and also in the north and eastern sections, a pressure to the torrent of fifty eight miles an hour believed to be observed from "The Dove" city and fourty miles from the straight north from El verso and a depth of nearly thirty feet, and here the flood was carrying ormormous log jams of wreckage literally before it so thickly intermingled with the bodies of the drowned(not from places but Abbleunn) with it. During the 21th the brunt of the flood reached a portion the country where the conditions of the land scapes and formations of foot hills and meadows m meadows was such as to prevent the movements of the torrent going straight southeastward, and therefore it continued southwest over the low lands sedging many hundreds of thousands of acres of forests before it, and towns like drift.

On the morning of the 22th the flood apparently was central south of San ... and at this time flood signals were ordered up near the region of the besieging ... christian armies which had positions near Delight's junction and during the day ... extended along the whole country section near Vivian gickey and hundreds of miles ... east for the flood was then spreading that way like a plague.

On the morning of the 23th the flood was nearing Delight's junction and ... apparently central at the town of North Ann but coming like a roaring tidal ... sweeping everything away in its path. The population of that town was wiped out, ... thirty thousand people and all the houses were swept away and all the forests in the neight neighborhood and all this wreckage was deposited near Delight's ...nction ... into the wrecked christian besieging positions and in the country all around but ... bodies were never recovered.

This flood of central and eastern Calverinia was predicted or warned of ... startling accurancy by the dead Supreme Person of the Gemini ...hendro perga, and ... forecasted the progress of the war for the following month of June as follows:

This will be for both sides a hotly contested month over Western Calverinia with plenty of battles raging all along the gic-ghirthian coast. First and Second ... June will see first bloody battle of war. From the fourteen to the fifteenth heavy ... will rage near Vivian gickey, causing for both sides great disasters over the region Norma Rum, and unusual exciting moments over the whole country, throughout the rest of the month. On the 10th a great flood will be made by the enemy near Norma ... will rush down the land scapes causing heavy losses from northwestern Calverinia ... the coast line near the boundary of Angelinia which will continue for nearly fourteen days.

BIG SHIP IS SUNK IN FLOOD DISASTER.

HUNDRDS DIE. RIVER STEAMER CAPT CAPSIZES IN RUSH OF FLOOD WATERS UPON VIGNON. RESCUE SCHR DURING TRAGEDY. THE HORRORS OF THE SHIP TRAGEDY.

All of them including the crew ...t with the big boat when the forces of the onrish onrushing tidal wave of water struck ... so suddenly as to tip it over on its side after swinigi swinging it around three times, ... some rescuers on the shore of the flood saved only fifty of them. The rest of the ...r victims were not recovered, though the crowds on shore waited for a long time in the ...pe of saving more victims. F before the torrent sank the vessel the force of the water ...ilfted the ship as if it had been hurled up by a strong derrick, and then it was hurled ...rned in a circular form, and after crushing against several houses in its path, and ...eaming them to automs killing every one inside, went through a frame house as if it was ...t there, and then tipped over on its side. Then after sinking on its side, the boat was ...ried sbor ard violently and there entranded at the edge of the flood, and again slowly ...ghted itself, its keel resting on the land bottom under the flood with just the small ...ger deck jutting grotesquely above the rusning eaves, and battered time and again ... ...y wreckage swirled against it. One time a floating house grounded against it and went to ...tom.

Only fifty or more passengers on the ill fated craft were saved, some in the most ...thrilling rescue by one of the men of the crowds i on shore, who chanced to see the disaster ...m his country house when the sudden flood struck. These rescued were taken ashore at ...Great Great Bend and at other points, while a country fire department had rushed ... every available inmalator squd squad and their prompt treatment with oxygan machines ...ved many lives of these fished out of the water from houses that were crashed ...gainst the foundered ship.

Mayor Angelio of Algroto City formed a jury of members of his ...n who conducted an inquest into the world of tragedies. The States Attorney ...and the governer of the state, and other high members directed seperate inquiries, and ... came to the conclusion that the glandeliniens were fully responsible. The Abbleennian ...ross were to succor the many armies of families of the unfortunate victims of the ...flood, but the fact that the flood also brought on, not one, but hundreds of the most ...ome and terrible marine like tragedies in the world of all ship disasters ever known, was ...ly survivors not only of this boat, but of those who came out alive from wrecked ...n cities and towns so that about 10,000 ship tragedies with the loss of life in ...instances of the whole crew and passengers of every ship secured, but of the ...ewsy Moon, one of the many witnessed this is what happened.

In the morning hour of 10.30 am the Morning or Evening Moon loaded with its ...ge of rollicking happy children, and their mothers, and even men on holiday bent ...ed off from the dock at La Polama city at the foot of Aberdeenia avenue, in Algrove ...rk. There had been even then reports of A...bbleenn and cities north of there being ...eatened by an ormormous flood, but there was no warning of the flood coming down their ...ay. Bright June day sunshine played down upon them, and the cooling breeze which set up ... the ship gained speed was a welcome relief to the sweltering passengers and crew. The trip ... to be made as far south as Mildred greenburg city for the first stop, and then ...d at Angelinia Agathia for $1.15 cents a round trip long as the distance is.

As the boat progressed southward tward Vignon city, running about half way between ...a Polama city and San Antonio, it was noticed on board ship by people that the rivers ...course had disappeared, that they apparently were entering the sea or something, and ...the surprise of all the highest trees topped the water.

Some one said" The river must have bursted a dike"

It was now about eleven oclock or after. suddenly there was a terrible noise of rushing ...waters, the river suddenly rose to an tremendous heights and suddenly a great wall of ...waters came making the ship swirl around once and then go ahead at a most alarming rate. ...Wreckage of broken houses falshed by, one stroke the stern of the boat underwent to pieces ...flinging occupants into the water. In that moment with the suddenness of a squall attaining ...more than ten times a cyclonic velocity, a wave of waters roared up an and struck the ...ship hurling a showe er of deuris, bodies of people and a section of a wrecked house ...on the decks. A tremendous burst of water swept the faces of the those who sat or stood ...on the decks.

...on the northward side of the ship, and these were battered by the flying wreckage.

Terrified these ran to the opposite rail, and all huddled there away from the ...wreckage and flying waters, and others not knowing else to do ran down below decks. Children ...were clinging shivering to their mothers, and the latter still unaware of the real danger comforted the little ones. Two musical bands were playi playing all kinds of instru l instruments, also mandollin and tanjos bre traveling picking out the tune of a lively thrilling piece and the name of it was ironically" All abbioomin Forever Hurr, but soon the noise of the rushing waters ad the crashin of falling houses that struck past them drowned out the instruments but the band went on unheard and unwanted. The rush of all the passengers to the opposite side of the boat did the passengers no good, for the flood swirled i it around like a top, and crashed it into a large floating house full of screaming people crushing it and dragging it under its hull. This crash made the boat list on its side, the fury of the waters increased, and it too now striking the boat on its side was forcing the ship to a side a little further over. Then sideways it again banged crashed into another floating house and part of the wreck with its dead occupants catapulated onto the decks injuring some of the frightened passengers, and as the steamer scarcened from this shock a wave of water still more loaded with wreckage rose nearly to the rail and hurled a torrent of planks and bodies pon e deck with a terrible noise ing a number more of passengers and killing the First mate who was shouting orders to th Wheels man to try and o get control of the ship. The force of the waters however finall engulfed the lower deck and flooded the craft with water, and hurled more wreckage and the bodies of two cows and a horse on board.

Immediately while the whimsr whimpering of the children gave way to the frati screams of both the youngsters and their mothers, a full sized wooden house of great formed and strength crowded withscreaming people on the upper floors crashed heavion against the side of the ship with terrific force and the ship toppled completely over ting both its human freight and the victims of the house which went to pieces from the collision.Hundrr Hundreds of children and their mothers and even fathers were seperate in the melee, as all sought wildly to save themselves, but they were swept onward by the speedingwaters of the flood. some foolishly clung to the si ship and were dro drowned or swept under its wreckage. Some were trapped in a rush as many made for the stairways leading to the other decks and the upper ones or for lifeboats and died then either under the wreckage or of the crashing house or on the ship struggling in a helpl while the swirling waters and tons of swirling crashing wreckage closed over them. Many others who could flung out from the craft and unable to swim drowned. Some were carried the flood into the flooded streets of Vignon and perished there. Yet the surface of the flood for a short time was alive withthose who could swim many of them children paddling bravely but vainly knowing not where to swim and carried off by the flood toard the city but keeping themselves above water just the same and trying to avoid the jams of wreckage that rushed down from every side. Once they almost were struck by a floating house filled with screaming people. Still the wreckage swirled past hitting the ship which was too lig to sink entirely under the flood, the force of the water pushing it on toward shore, and the houses and wreckage smashing violently against it added to the horror and distress of it all.

At this point great crowds of people from far away towns out of the path of the flood came to the shore in their hopes of rescuing people and one man harles glote of lives in the town of Pest and is President of the Iron Works company there joined the horrified crowds. With him was his twenty five year old son james, his secretary Christ gilto, and a guest and his aged but strong abled bodied father. They saw the whole thing and came to aid in the rescue work.

When the flood hit the big ship harles F glote saw the craft was in distress. when the big house hit and captized it he saw it was sinking, and ordered his men to ro to the shore of the flood with all speed. opes were used in pulling victims from the rushing waters as quickly as they could, the men on improvised rafts also got a load when they saw no more on the scene for the present set out for shore and had a terrible time getting there. There they took on soldiers and officials who learning of the tragic and the sudden appearance of the flood had hurried with the others to the shore. Watch ing to the steamer which was washed up toard the shallowest part of the flood the men on shore continued the desperate work of rescue in which they had been joined by many in a number of strong boats which had been carried to the spot. noted swimmers even join the rescuers diving repeatedly for bodies but recovered none. Others soon speeded to the scene just in time to see even the city of Vignon Vignon not so far away, being engulfed by the torrent which was ever and ever rising. some of the bodies of victims were washed ashore and after all efforts were made to revive them and it failed,the bodies were ta to the undertaking rooms of the nearest towns. As soon as the news of the flood tragedy was broadcasted by telegraph over the country, hundreds of scores of persons whose relatives had either gone holiday making or were in the stricken city and had not returned started a search for them through the saftest portion of the flood watching for bodies.

The sad mission reminded soldiers of similiar scenes enacted just a few months ago November when the waters of Lake Belicia were let loose carrying hundreds of thousands to their deaths. Headquarters for the purpose of identifying the few dead bodies recovered and of discovering the missing were established outside the towns by police and soldiers and all inquiries were directed to these places.News of the fate of the big boat, and the of the distant city attracted many scores of thousands of people from near by towns to the floods shore. The most huge of crowds ever seen gathered wit,in view to watch the rescuers bring in the bodies or offer what aid they could horrified over the disaster ger crowds lined the shore from as far north as La Polama and El Verso south of Vignon on the look out for victims and rescued a v few. Traffic also became so dense that no motion was possible around this zone and mounted soldiers were summoned to aid in the work. All high officials of towns and villages also went to the scene directing hundreds of the men of the rescuers and resuscitation. The commander of the evening upon last parthe perished, but assistant Captian Jameson, with his chief engineer, and three or four deck hands were picked up their bodies having been badly battered by the force of the wreckage. The first mate who saved himself told the story of the disaster, and then was questioned of howmany passengers he had, how many life boats and preservers and why they were not used. He declared he and some of the crew had gone to cut the ropes releasing the one thousand life preservers, but that the passengers did not even get the time to put them on. There was only one life boat used on the ship and sixteen children tried to make th to shore in it but the boat was crushed by drift and they were all drowned.

Jennie Colson 14th years old one of the passengers on the ship was on the boat when the disaster occured and rescuers took her to the shoreafter hard work where she told as clear an account as any of the awful mishap.

"Everything was fine when we started " she said" and it was to me just a beautiful trip better than others I have taken. Then suddenly the terrible flood broke upon us and the pressure and power of the water was so great that the high waves of dashing water kept hurling wreckage all about us. It came upon us likea tidal wave. Then the big house came dow down upon us and everything on the other side of the ship crashed as the people ran to the opposite side. The boat then began to tip and the kids were crying wildly afraid, and indeed I was scared plenty myself. I saw the house go to pieces as it hit us with a loud crash as the waters almost came upon the decks and after that I don't remember it not clearly. There was a lot of terrible shrieking and screaming, and I fell into the water, but I paddled my way up and managed to swim and follow the current of the flood untill some one picked me up."

One of the little children on the shore who was rescued was a little boy six years old, and tears came to the eyes of the rescuers when he cried for his two sisters, brother, and father and mother. Then it was discovered that the parents and his sisters and brothers had been rescued, and some one carried the glad tidings to the little lad.

Many families were badly broken up in this way, and one revived woman fought mo t almost frantically to find her husband and two children, whom of course were swept away in the flood. She was taken away to a town hospital before inquiries could be made t as to her name and the e thouse of her children.

Mayor Hendrico of Beldon town had sat down on the shore of the then placid river to watch his wife and four children take the excursion trip to Angelinia Agathia. They had planned to take the round trip, and he told the rescuers later he had prefered to stay ashore for a few days untill they returned. He saw the river suddenly rise, the golden covering of the country beyond by a sea of moving waters that surprised him, and the city becom overwhelmed and then in another moment saw a terrible torrent, come on and the big dashing house strike the ship, saw the boat capsize. Distracted he paced the beach waiting for the first rescue craft or raft to arive, and in doing so stepped after time to the floods edge and was swirled away before t he was rescued in the very flooded streets of Vignon.

He frantically cried out he saw buildings crowded with people go to pieces by hundreds, and then he learned that the bodies of his wife and four children were li lying on the ground dead.not from drowning actually but by the wreckage from the house ceaze top toppled over on deck during the crash. The poor unfortunate man almost crae crazed by grief collapsed.

Another tragic tale and one which should interest the readers to arouse their ire against the glandeliniana was told by Tony Crain of La Polama City. He de clared that four or five life preservers that he seized and attempted to place around his wife and children, was torn away from him by the fierceness of the torrent when he sought to fasten them. Many others may have perished even if the life preservers were secured as the swimmers may have been killed by wreckage which was hurled at them by the raging torrent. While three children were not drowned, but crushed by wreckage, and one floating beam struck off the head of his little girl, and pressed her body so slightly against the side of the ship that her entrails came out.

"I had been a sailor on the Mic-Whirthian seas for many years, and I saw the flood coming as soon as we had gotten off a short distance from the city of La polama and before it hit us I saw the city engulfed and laid low almost in an instant." said Tony. When the flood first struck us I made my wife and children stay on the top deck saying the ship would ride the current through. I believed it would have too if not struck by that house. We were drenched a as the waters hurled spray and wreckage over the ship with the fury of a storm at su sea but I knew it was safer there than in the panic stricken crowds below. The house then struck us, the big boat listed over from the force of the shock and then I cut the cords which held the life belts. At that instant we were all washed dashed into the water. I was able to seize my wife and two of my children but, the other kiddies were lost the minute we were washed from the deck.

Then I attempted to fashen the life preservers on my wife and two kids while being swept onward at terrific speed by the flood and one after another four of them broke in my hands because of the pull of the water, and one had succeeded in placing on her was torn off from her body. The fifth one stayed on and it kept my wife afloat only untill she was washed tward shore, and just as help came it too was broken and pulled from her.

Nothing would work in such a torrent."

Six little children two boys and fourthgys four girls were saved by jensin Hans of West Stern town and among the children he saved was the six year old daughter of the ships drowned ceptian. For many hours Hans was an unsung c hero for after rescuing others he got struck by a raft and went under, but managed to save himself and the others too but had to be taken to a hospital for treatment of a crushed hand and leg, and broken ri the latter which mayhave to be amputated as the physicians said.

Hans said almost wildly;

"I suspect the true nature of this flood, and to HELL with Mendelinia" The children themselves huddled in blankets on shore telling with tears in their eyes the storyof their rescue and weeping for the man who had risked so much to save their lives. When the big ship capsized by the collision with the house, Hans dived into the very flood, being a good swimmer, and swimming to the boat desregarding peril and unfasne unfastened one of the life boats that was almost afloat, and placing the desperately swimming children in it rowed them tward the shore. A drift hit the boat and ceptized it, but having a rope with him he secured them all and swam to shore. Two of the children struck by wreckage at this time were unconscious and were revived by the life guards stationed there.

After that he went to rescue some others in another boat, and succeeded but was overwhelmed by a wreckage drift and though still succeeding in saving them was badly injured. The ship was bought by Ceptian Alsion of the ship company in Pandora for 1,500 dollars tye the first mate told the rescuers. It was three hundred and sixty five feet long or nearly as large as a big lake steamer and was very powerful. He could understand how the house was able to ceptize it and believed it was more from the force of the water in the building. The head of the City covernments was to start an investigation of the condition of the river dikes north of the floods source preceding the accident. So far as his records go one of the levee inspectors said, the levees and dikes were regularly inspeced inspected and was always in good condition, and no charges were ever made that they ever gave way no matter how much water was in the river of themselves. They might have been blasted.

Some of the highest of the inspection engineers were being questioned early on the next morning. Chief of Police Caldwell of Rose Town with Assistant states Attorney and others held a numbervof inspectors at the main headquarters office and it was announced that the inquiry would proceed as long as it was necessary to obtain all the facts, and if the enemy did all this----HELL.

Their early investigation tented to exonerate the levee commission of any blame they said since the levees had been frequently proclaimed safe by thousands of federal Government inspectors and was said to have their full quota of strength and that therein like the year before the flood was brought on by the enemy. The matter and the quality of fitness of the levees was yet to be gone into. Many red cross nurses headed by a girl scout scout director of relief work visited the homes of the wreck victims in the country to offer them aid, but found all people were leaving after the rescue work began the flood was rising more and more and might engulf them too.

Scenes most pitiful and heartrending were enacted on the shore of the flood as rescued relatives of the missing ones made their rounds. One of the most tragic searches was that of Albert Burns of La Grin city who also had been on the boat with his wife and children. On going first to one town, where the f survivors of the ship were a flood wrecked town were huddled together shivering with fright and anxious for news in terror where the children were. No one knew.

Then the weary father took up the terrible task of seeking his children among the dead. At six morgues he journeyed. He did not find them. Finally a life guard on being questioned said- "Your little children were washed down out of our reach by the flood and were found drowned in Vignon." After gazing at him in a grief stricken manner he went off to inform his poor wife of the tragedy. But the father collasped on the way and then when revived had to be given stimulants before he could rejoin his wife to tell her the news. When he broke the news she fell dead.

Louis Bento of La paluma city also was seeking his wife and daughter. On the shore of the flood he came upon the body of the little girl Jennie aged five and he became to lose his reason. He threw his straw hat upon the ground, smashed it and said-

"Oh God what is the use of looking for Annie(His wife wife) She must be dead too."

And he fell in a heap upon the ground.

Saved when her house went to pieces in the Lake Bellicia terror Mr and Mrs Gertrudes, 1876 South Weldon Avenue Angelinia Agathia city, was saved the next year afterwards or eight months later when the excursion ship tipped over in the force of the swirling wreckage and flood waters. The scenes of both hernarrow escapes were surely within signal distane of each other by number of days. Seventeen members of the family Kindred were on the Evening Moon. All but her husband and little daughter were drowned.

Before she plunged from the Evening Moon into the rushing flood waters, Mrs Gertrude threw her eight year old daughter Lorrane into the water with a life belt around around her.

"I was then struck by a piece of wreckage" said the mother" and to avoid dragging my child down if I should comm collasps in the water from the blows I kept away from her. I knew she could swim and after we both struck the water I saw her swimming without any real panic. I knew it was my duty to keep away from her, to avoid the rushing drifts and to keep my mouth closed. I asked some men on a raft to pull us upon their refuge but they refused for the absolute reason they could not risk us on it for it would part and drown us all anyhow. Finally some one on shore threw us a re rope and them too and we were pulled tward the shore and saved.

When we started to go on board the big ship the Evening Moon I said to my husband "I don't like the looks of the river----it is rising so unusually high and overflowing its dikes. And why is the land so suddenly bec being everywhere covered with water."

"He said Oh don't worry about that, a dike has only sprung a leak. But" But but all the rest looked at the water and my wife or mother in law said-

"Oh it does look bad al right, but it'll be stopped. It won't flood the land much. But I don't understand how a levee can be bursted. I believe the river is overflowing their tops instead."

But I know a great deal from my la earlier experience in floods as a result in particular of Lake Bellicia, and I did not like the looks of the river, and of the land everywhere being flooded over so rapidly evennow more faster it seemed to be than the river could have done if it had bursted six levees. And if the river did it would have been lowering but now the water over the land was rising to a level with the river and over and began turning it into a swiftly moving sea and I got scared. So I said before we get on the ship-

"Why not wait untill the water goes down."

They all looked again but the ceptian overhearing me said" The boat is strong and can ride any water." So I went on board. When the fury of the flood struck the boat she was tipping so badly before the force of the water striking the ship sideways that I yelled out to a number of people to go to the othe other side or they would be killed by the wrecked houses and their fragments being hurled aboard.

"For God's sake go to the other side "I hollered" Go to the other side or you will be killed." some obeyed but too late and got a shower and some were injured because when I warned them to go to the other side they wouldn't.

"Get away from there or you'll be killed." I shouted."if you don't look out---My God that house is going to crash against us."

"Some man said" This is nothing," and the words were hardly out of his mouth, before before the house hit the ship and amid the tumbling wreckage and shook the boat keeled over. The screaming at this moment was terrible. It then entered my mind, and I believe I said the words" If it is to be my time to go and my childrens time to go then I'll how to sibait." After that I kept my mouth closed. When the big boat tipped over it did not go slowly but at a sudden rush, and even though the life preservers were convienent not one of us had even time to get into one. The life preservers were below the main deck but within east reach, and they came loose as they should have had, but no one even had time to untie one. The, had many little girls on board the big boat, some of which were about twelve years old. None of these I believe were saved."

When Mrs Gertrudes escaped death in the Lake Bellicia disaster of Last November she jumped from a crumbling house top into the swirling torrent, and was picked up by men on a large raft. Of the Gertrude party saved from that house, was her husband George, and her children, and the lost were her father and mother, two brothers and a sister. Her husband clinging with one arm to the broken piece of house sustained his wife with the other but she fainted and was unconscious a long time after a rescue boat carried her and her husband ashore.

Besides Mrs Gertrudes on the shore of the gigantic flood stood Mrs Jennie Lucnia and her twelve year old son and two ten year old daughters, who lived at La Palaza, on 31th Street. The three children were crying softly for their six year old brother James whom mom mother and children believed were lost. Mrs Loenia and her children were thrown into the rushing current of the flood when the ship tipped over.

"When the boat first tipped before the pressure of the water" said the mother it "It only did it lightly and then righted itself and went on with the flood for a short distance untill it grounded against a large drift. Then came that big house upon us with a rush and that hurled us over. If it had not been for that drift maybe we would have only had a thrilling righ ride.

Just before the slight tip we were watching the increase of the rising waters all over the land and at first the flood was so smooth that it was like a glistening moving lake. After I and my children were thrown into the waters we managed to swim back tward the boat the power of the water pushing us on, but then the drift finally gave way releasing the boat releasingthe ship and hurled it on tward the city at first. My children caught hold of a floating floor of a house and climbed upon it though it sank down almost to the level of the water. I also caught hold of some drift, and then coming near shore called to some one to throw me a rope. He did, and dragged me ashore. He then perused the raft and children were on but it came close to shore also and slowed down and they were rescued. After the big ship sank we tried to grab some life preservers but the flood swept them out of our grasp. After the children had gotten onto the floating floor it swayed so that they were afraid they would be thrown off again and they kept at the corners crawling or crawling from one side to the other but they finally saw it drift on toward shore and called loudly for help until they were rescued."

The girls trembling with grief and nervious shock smiled wanly up at their mother."

One of the incidents of the disaster concentrated itself briefly on the shores of the roaring flood. Here the few bodies which were recovered were laid as they were brought ashore from the Evening Moon. Before evening only night had been recovered. The air was stifling. Firemen from near by, there hurried from the places to the scene with poles and oxygene and priests and sisters of mercy by scores appeared almost as quickly within the town. From the men running the few rescue boats which brought the dead ashore came shouts of" Have you any extra pike poles here?"

The onlooking the throngs shuddered for it knew that the very words meant that in wreck which lay within hailing distance of the shore was being smashed in wreckage pushed upon it like a windrow by the waters and this had to be torn apart in the search for more bodies. Soldier and men came with stretchers and blankets and boats the fire men in first aid manif manipulations of the body. On such body the work lasted fifteen to twenty minutes sometimes half an hour or more. then came the words " no hope" from a sweating fireman, or from a doctor kneeling beside the corpse. Sometimes the throngs of half naked rescuers who were looking on and 1 offering to aid saw men people come down on rafts.

" For Gods sake get them" shouted some fire men. " Rescue them before it is to late quick."

It to reach them was impossible and the crowds fused with anxiety and desperation And mostly they were little bodies that lay on the ground, little girls and boys with the Abbidennian black hair and tanned shoulders and beautiful sweet faces who lay face downward as the anxious firemen, discontinuing their manipulations looked up with tears in their eyes and said " No hope"

Often with a kind of fury and frenzy the fire men resumed their work when with their aching hearts they knew it could not bring back life. They would life a little body head dobward, high in the air, manipulating the chest and abdomen the while. Their breathing could be heard over twenty feet away, and often they had to pause to dash the sweat from their foreheads that streamed down into their eyes and blinded them. Chosen officers frantically would shout to fresh firemen coming on the scene;

" Come on boys for Gods sake while there's yet time. Get in here, and relieve men."

Then a redoubled resumption of the struggle to bring back life untill a fire man up kind of vacantly and said" it's no use Captian the child's gone."

Then the reluctant begring n beneath the furthest trees of a stretcher on which a little body with sun browned shoulders and body. The priests moved away with tears their eyes. The Sisters of Mercy weeping sadly followed them them uttering prayers.

The roar of motor boats bearing bodies and the clang of patrols from nearest town bringing sun blankets and oxygen tanks ceased. The crowds whose angry and excited shouting of imprecations against the Glandelinians had sunk to whispers, worked despairingly to rescued rescue many whenever they came down on rafts, and for every failure there was louder storming and frantic cries and shouts. One third of a mile off shore the ship's upper deck almost buried in drift was slightly visible, and the ships beautiful stars pennant which was still fluttering in the light of the[illegible] setting sun immortalized those on shore.

The air shook with their wild imprecations against Glandelinia, and many ran said "To morrow will see me in the army to avenge this so help me God."

In the blinding fury of the flood and swirling wreckage floes that at the time even before striking the ship was ripping the town of Vignon to pieces, Captain commander of another river steamer, and a crew of sixteen, with a crowd of passengers aboard, and also witnesses of the disaster, and for nearly two hours the only one in the scene pulled nearly fourty survivors of both the foundered ship and others from the town aboard the ship to safty only to be shipwrecked himself.

Working with perfect coordination, every man at the job assigned to him by the commander, the men and passengers who also helped carried dead and alive on board the ship called the Morning Glory until certain there was no hope for those still pinned beneath the ship or amid the swiftly moving wreckage floes. Then the ship steamed away battling with wreckage and floes untill the flood drove her on shore and wrecked her.

Being at the moment also hurled onward by the flood, but in full control of the wheelsman the commander Antonio saw the Evening Moon engulfed in the torrent aside of and then laid low by wreckage floes and the breaking houses. Then acloudburst of rain spray and wreckage eclipsed the distressed river steamer from the view of the morning Glory's crew and the passengers.

" My God they are goners" shouted Antonio." It's a flood of terrible force. Here James take the wheel. Even the city is breaking all to pieces. Heavens look at the houses go with people in it."

Within ten minutes the Morning Glory had reached the ship and lines were thrown to the Evening Moon to be fastened by the flood pushed it on out of their reach and the Morning Glory also rammed it breaking it still more. Then the struggle began. The wheelsman who had taken the wheel managed to get control of the ship before it again crashed in crashed into the Evening Moon, while the captian and a number of daring passengers jumped on board and pushed the survivors up to those on deck. Aboard the wreck there was confusion and pandemonium, they being mostly women and children, and every one kept shouting screaming weeping and yelling and tugging at each other. " Save a child first. Save my mother first." " Save me or save my father" was all that could be heard. Some of them even tore at each other and ripped away clothing in their frantic efforts to get aboard the morning glory, which again was almost carried from the wrecked ship by the force of the waters. Others from panic could not be persuaded to leave the sinking hulk untill they found their relatives, and the rescuers had to fight with many and carry them by force. There were ten rescued from the ship, and then on other struggling people were carried by the flood and deashed upon the ship and were also rescued most of these being children.

The men and women were so exhausted from fright, and being in the muddy water that they did not have sense enough to help at all. After fourty five ot fifty minutes when the captian knew there was no hope for those between decks, they decided to cut away and start for a safe spot, but the waters suddenly increased in force and tore the ship apart almost hurling the morning glort glory itself upon its sides.

The again there was a near panic. with nearly a hundred crying hysterical half drowned people packed on the decks and stuffed like sardines in the cabin the Morning Glory settled into the water, and struck by an enormous drift crowded with yelling frightened men women and children listed untill it was in danger of being turned over.

" Trim the ship" yelled the captian and was struck unconsciously by a flying piece of timber. The mate however took up the cry of "Trim the ship" or we'll all sink," and a flying brick hit him on the neck sending him flying across the deck knocked out.

Yet with the help of the passengers and crew they got the frightened refugees to all stand still, and then with one mighty push the ship righted itself and was flung almost like an oil on the shore among crowds of people who scattered just in time. The captian of this rescuing ship who lives at Angelinia Agathia at Washworth Street and is president of the Catholic goods company was a close friend of Emperor Vivien.

" We did not have any means to give an alarm, and we had no time to even hurl bombs" he said," After it was all over and the crowds of people took us from the wrecked Morning Glory before it too went to pieces as it did, we wondered why those on shore had crowded so near as to risk being hit by us when we were so suddenly stranded, but I guess they did not calculate the action of the flood. The Glandelinians is certainly to blame for this flood. We had a more sea worthy ship than the captian of the Evening Moon, and for twenty minutes before being a stranded we did not know ourselves whether we would survive the experience and felt we had rescued the others in vain. The stories told by the refugees coincided with that told by Antonio his assistant who collapsed from the fright after the rescue was taken to A house on shore. The captian of the Morning Glory was credited with saving the lives of the survivors packed on his ship by his cool fearlessness in preventing a panic even when his ship was threatened the same was as the Evening Moon.

The Evening Moon, and other ships which were sunk, or disabled in the disasterous flood were operating under the official permit that they were also government property and all records showed they were worthy boats, and the investigators had proved that the ships met government specifications. Under its permit the Evening Moon was allowed to navigate any big river necessary. It was a craft of eighty five tons and built at government expense in 1903. It was operated by Captian Henry Antioto and the regular capacity of the Evening Moon is 1,000 passengers and a crew of fourty five, but between May and early june it had been permitted to only carry two hundred and fifty passengers and a crew crew of twenty one; it was allowed to operate day and night during summer seasons and the inspectors certified that the boat carried 2345 life preservers for adults and for many more for women and children, and six life craft with a capacity of twenty persons each, and ten metal life boats and a hundred ring life buoys.

The vessel was propelled by powerful steam engines and drew twelve feet of water.

All federal officials Officials declared on that night they would make a throughout investigation of the flood disaster and report in full to the aurthorities in general and to Emperor Vivien.

The frightful suddeness of the flood which hurled houses against the Evening Moon and overturn it was emphatsized repeatedly in formal statements to the City Government Authorities by the surviving mate of the ill ship soon after the accident. At the earliest possible moment they were taken before the aur. authorities, where they gladly consented to answer correctly and vulunturily all the questions of the Mayor and his aids.

" We were about half way, between La Polama city and Vignon" said the First mate" when the suddeness of the flood hit us and hurled so much wreckage against us, and the boat capsized toward the port side. The was forced to lay for a while over on her side by the house until the latter went to pieces and then she slowly sank. After she filled with water she was forced by the pressure of the water to right herself and came up with the boat deck flush with water close to the shore where the rescue work began. I got through the front window and managed to get up and loosen the life boats and g tget as many people ab aboard them as possible but the boats were sped away by the flood and also capsized and the people thrown out. I threw about fourty life preservers to the people in the water who tried to hold against the current but they too were wisked away."

" Was this serious flood caused by Olandelinians?" he was asked.

" The flood was the worse I have ever seen, but I suspect it was when I think of the floods of last year." was the answer.

" As a matter of fact when you left La Polama city, could you not see the flood starting?"

"At that time sir there was no sign of the flood not even any unusual rise of the river except of what it was from spring rains and melting winter snows."

"When the flood started manesfesting itself it did not capsize your ship at once did it?"

"No sir but the minute it hit it hurled the ship forward like a log and the steering wheels wheelman could get no control. Then it crashed its way through wreckage and floating bodies and came upon a drift that hu hindered its further progress. Then the wild rush of the flood against the shipwrecks than the fiercest sea or in a cyclonic storm hurled tons of spray and wreckage aboard and then came the crash of that big sea that helped to turn it over."

"Did you not have any chances to turn your ships nose toard the course of the flood so as to avoid disaster."

"Yes sir. Twice we succeeded and had ty the helm hard over to face the ship ahead toward the course of the flood but the flood had frightful eddies and whirlpools, and the ship might as well been in the path of a waterspout. We were forced to spin around many times as if we were a top."

"Now as a matter of fact" was the next question" Do you think the flood really was made by Olandelinians?"

" I cannot under stand why it was not" answered the First mate spitefully."I'm positively sure it it was. If I did not think the Olandelinians were guilty I would not risk saying it, and I would not have alluded to the disaster of last year."

Hank Jones of 1035 Sternic Street Angelinia Agathia, surviving engineer of the craft said the first warning he had of the big ship turning over on its side was when the water began pouring into the engine room.

"I got out of the engine room as quick as I could" he continued. "I was then swept away by a tremendous rush of water, and carried into the streets of Vignon. God you should see the wreck there. The city is wiped out."

"What do you blame the capsizing of the ship ship to?" he was asked.

"The big wooden house that struck the ship when hitting her at a rate of sixty miles an hour."

Except for his assistance to passengers he said he could tell nothing more and about the accident as he was swept away , when the Mayor said;

"When you tell me the Olandelinians made the flood do you call this an accident?"

"I mean to the ship sir."

"Neither that either." said the Mayor."It was no accident. Has there any conversion between you, the captian, the engineer or any other members of the crew relative to a flood starting?"

"No sir.The flood surprised us, when the waters started coming the captian told us to tell the passengers to come up on the upper deck for safty. Some of them did but the people made sport of danger. His object in having us tell them come above was to have them safe so the flood would not wash them off the deck."

Children who survived showed great bravery and good judgement in the disaster for when the rescuers told the children what to do they obeyed without question. The grown people especially the women were too frightened and panic stricken to do anything but scream and mill in the water that piled up wreckage near the ships.

Some of the children were even reluctant to climb out of the water not realizing the true nature of the peril they were in. They thought they were at first having a good time and were not hardly alarmed being good swimmers.

One of the rescued men said;

"It was one of the worse boat tragedies I have ever been in."I'll take the sea any time. I've seen many sea storms but not a water disaster like this. Nothing like it in all disaster experiences I have ever been in. And I'meff and I'm off for a christie draft board or recruiting station right now. This disaster will only help to increase the national armies immensely and then see what Olandelinia will get."

while the angry flood waters tossed and swirled debris and wreckage and drift floats ward, and rolled and swirled their big boats back and forth along the edge, many hundreds of men on the next day continued the work of dragging in bodies and of aiding and attempting to rescue, and to recover the bodies of persons reported washed in near more from Vigo Vignon city and in those missing in the foundering of the River steamer Evening moon in which hundreds of persons mostly women and children perished.

Although a most heavy sea of waves on the flood pounded the shore at north b end from in front of which the Evening Moon went down, crowds of sixty thousand people from other near by towns and villiages had gathered to watch the workers and to aid in all ways possible, though there were sight seers also among them. From times to time at articles of clothing, furniture, bedding, playthings, desks, lunch boxes, dining room sets, and other articles probably belonging to Vignon stirred up from the bottom by the action of the water floated in.

The captians of the river guard stations to which this section of the flood badly edged were in charge of the work also, and one of them said if the rest of the bodies were not recovered by night, he would claim that all were washed southwestward to other quarters by the flood.

"A high running stretch of water can really sometimes be a help as well as a hindrance," said the captian."If the waters were stationary the bodies could probably stay buoyed to the surface and it would may take days or weeks before the bodies came to the surface, but with the water running as it is now the bodies should be drifting to shore or carried on down to other points by the current and ought to be some how recovered."

Of the twenty nine bodies taken from the wrecked ship itself all of these were children not one of a grown perso person having been recovered; the eldest child being about ten years old. Seven hours after the disaster the Evening Moon had been swept away by the ever rising flood all the way down to Wildred Broadburg where the wrecked ship grounded. Although it was swept that far, the number of wrecked boats of houses still clinging to the big ship gave mute testimonyas to the force of the speeding houses and water that capsized it.

This flood which had caused 10,000 of the worse marine tragedies in the world, would have ever however in a minute. It even had happened so fast, surviving members of the crew stated, that they could do very little to even save themselves. One minute the river was calm at noria normal flood stage, and the next there the river had been was a sea of raging waters.

How the boat was capsized and broken down by the weight of house and wreckage it seems to be the strangest of boat disasters on record. The Abbiemanian National Steamboat inspectors had been always carefully checking the loading of all kinds of river boats, and punishment has been swept to any owner or captian who violated any of their orders. As one of the witnesses of the disaster described it went as thus;

" When the big river steamer left the wharf at La Polama City, at the foot of Australia Avenue, the sun was shining and a warm breeze was blowing and the sky and land looked so beautiful with the blue and the greens that there was no signs of a coming flood, everybody believing themselves to be far out of the war zone were happy, mostly a host of children to whom the novelty of a novelty of a boat ride was a thing to be talked about for many a day. This was about eight oclock in the early morning.

Within minutes to ten the whole landscape suddenly seemed to have been swamped with swirling water as if it had actually come out of the ground, and the waters of the river started to rise higher and move in an opposite direction which surprised us immensely. Then like a tidal wave came a roaring wall of water which burst upon the boat carrying sweeping clouds of wreckage with it. It is generally agreed, and many others said so too sir, that the flood came from a northeastern direction, and the happy throng turned into a terrified crowd in a second as showers of timbers flew all about the boats and accompanied by clouds of spray. Many of them rushed to the top, others rushed to the port side of the vessel vessel to escape the flying wreckage. Two enormous waves had loaded down with wreckage and as the bombardment made the vessel list over the passengers and I too screamed. Then a torrent caught the ship and whirled it around as if it was a child's toy top, and then carried it on swiftly toard Vignonat a eighty mile an hour speed. We were carried that w far for about six miles, and then was stopped by a tremendous rift of wreckage that had cleded clogged beside a bridge that failed as yet to give way. Then came a big wooden house at the same speed we were made to go, and it made a noise like sareplitting thunder as it struck us, splintering to pieces in a moment, and from the force the evening Moon was first r driven sideways through the wreckage like, and then tipped over on her side throwing most of the hundreds of passengers in the water or upon the drife which parted into many sections by the shock then tye the boat righted itself and slowly sank.

Children and their mothers and fathers were seperated some buried under the drift never to appear. Those of the tots who could swim were hurled against the wreckage and the boat by the swift current of the flood so they had no chance to swim or paddle about, and therefore they clung screaming to the slippery sides of the boat as it rested on the bottom with its top deck flush with the waves, while a perfect windrow of wreckage was being hurled along side of it. Many were carried down with the boat. The death toll would have totaled the whole of the boat had it not been for the captian of another big boat called the morning glory which was, also being carried down by the flood, but the wheelsman had full control of the boat, and avoided some of the worse wreckage floes and managed to get as close to us as he dared, and then he with his crew, and passengers also pulled out fourty of us including myself, but most of them children, and no sooner did so the the flood crashed his boat upon the wrecked on a one and almost upset him. Then the boat was torn apart from o the rescuer and swept away while the Morning Glory also wrecked while trying to reach shelter and made headway against the flood was dashed far on shore by the the action of the water. By this time a matter of minutes another boat arrived partly wrecked and foundered before our eyes with every one on board. There was plenty of work for the crowds on an shore to do. Those who were still clinging to the sides of the half sunken vessel as it was swept onward through the drift were picked up by those on shore by means of rafts and long ropes, and brought to shore. Then they turned their attention to the dead.

And sir, when the word of the flood disaster spread over the town on its side not touched by water, I saw thousands of more people flock to the shores, and the shore became lined up and the mobe battled with several hundred rafts and floating houses desperately in their efforts to rescue unfortunates screaming for help, and for every failure imprecations shook the air. Sometimes the men in the crowds took their chances with the drifts themselves in their efforts to reach the victims and had to be rescued in turn. Many men of fire departments, and their chiefs came down to the shore, and also the head men of the health departments to take charge of those rescued.

As fast as they were wrapped in blankets ambul ambulances and patrols wagons took them to the town to be cared for. The first mate of the ship and one of the engineers were the only two of the crew to survive when they shouted the flood was started by Gladstone down with the horror of the disaster not only to his ship but from the horrif horrid sight of thousands of other dead bodies and so much wreckage passing the ship before it wrecked told the story of the sudden flood. Many of us even of the passengers when to saw the dangerous part of the flood coming out the cords holding the life preservers, and when many of the passengers first fell overboard life jackets also were thrown to them but the flood swept everything away.

One of the victims of the flood who survived however had a word also to say about the life jackets. His wife was saved but his two children, George eight, and jane four, were drowned. He said he put four jackets on his wife before he could hope to save his but even though he put jackets on his children they were swept away beyond his reach. The jackets which were picked up on shore were found firm and staunch, which proved they had tested three times a month, and fit for service, but not in this flood, which respected not even the best life boats.

This man whose name is Hanson said to me he being fifty years of age,

" I have traveled on the the seas since I was ten years old, until five years ago and went through the worse storms ever recorded, but the sea never was so impossible to be steed against like this flood. When I saw the tremendous wall of water coming down with floating houses and wreckage I took took my family to the top deck, but the boat as it rose on the rush of water tilted tilted and wreckage struck me on all over and bruised my back. The boat struck a drift and held and being was swept for miles with it, then again tilted far over and cut the cords which held the life preservers in the rucks. At that instant we were dashed into the water, but who could swim in that awful terrible torrent. I seized my wife, and though the children managed to put three of the jackets on themselves they were swept away and hurled with terrific force against a drift of wreckage who which threw them under and they were drowned. Nothing could save you unless you was on a strong drift."

" I saw five children saved by a man" the witness continued saved by a man on shore who risked the danger of the flood on a raft to reach us. When the vessel was to the force of the crushing house against her side, he gathered up the little ones with scant ceremony and flung them onto the tilting raft, and he paddled to the shore that it took him three hours of hard work to do so, and was forced out of his course, and landed sixteen miles down shore from where he rescued them. Then seven hours after the disaster I saw the flood carry the broken boat away and hurl it onward toward Pigeon Bay. I could see was also being engulfed. As I saw the boat beg there was huddled around the ladder going to the upper decks, were many more bodies. They had been trapped in an attempt to go up. Many personal articles from the boat most of them childrens handbags with money in them and rosary Beads and prayer books which might lead to the identification of many of the passengers still missing were recovered from the flood when they were hurled in toward shore by the force of the rushing waters.

There were hundreds of these found. I had been pulled out of the flood waters about seven months or eight ago, when the Lake Bellcia Dam broke because of the flood. I had jumped from the top floor of a house near the Mic-Whirther as river flood, when the building was going to pieces. A great number of my relatives were drowned in that dreadful flood too.

Before I jumped from this boat I threw my small children into the water insisting as I did not want to drag my little bubies down with me if I happened to collapse, and I knew they could swim, I believed it my duty to stay away from them untill I was rescued. While I was in the water many bodies floated past me which I never could count and they did not come from the boat either. I was before entering the boat thinking of the Bellcia horror lastN ovember and as I did not like the unusual high rise of the river, and the strange amoulnt of water covering the land I said to my husband-

"I do not like the looks of all that water da dear. And the river is rising more than it ever did before and going in an opposite direction." He answered me and said-

" I does look surprising Bify dear, but I do not think there will be any come of harm from it."

Yet as the boat went on he even did not like the looks of the water coming no strangely all over the land. When the big torrent struck the boat she was tipping so badly and so much timbers and wreckage was hurled aboard that I sailed to the people in danger to go to the other side or upper decks, but they had no time to do so, before the big house came against us and hurled us over. The screaming was terrible. Th there was a time for any one to even save themselves, and in such a water the life belts were of no use as the wreckage buried them under. After witness told me a gripping story of SHE SAT AMONG US SURVIVORS with her sight year old daughter. Her mother and two brothers and another sister was drowned. Her father fortunately has had remained home that is if he survived the destruction in La Polaza. The mother and children were thrown into the water when the house turned the boat over on its side.

When the boat tipped the third time before being grounded into the drift, it was also a light one, and many believe the boat would have pulled through if it had not been for the house--then a big wave seems to come with a terrifying rush, carrying along with it an immense wooden house, with screaming people on roof top and inside the upper floor, it crashed against us, and all was over, and what became of those people only God knows. But I'll never forget such screaming. The little girl who was saved swam back to the boat after she was thrown in, cold held of something and climbed to the wreckage of the boat that remained stationary against the overturned boat. Then the drift fortunately carried her to the shore."

As she talked Mrs Gertrudes had suddenly started gazing in horror at the flood, "My God still you look at that " she gasped. " bodies are floating down on the flood, as thick as flies. Oh the flood must have drowned many thousands may millions."

Gruesome tragic scenes were enacted for hours after the excursion boat sank beneath the surface of the flood with its human cargoe, as bodies from other places were hauled in to shore. From the time the Morning Glory was stranded on shore with the last load of survivors untill late the next day, scores of thousands none of which were dry eyed were still at the edge of the flood.

The ghastly scenes included the terrified search of thousands for their loved ones among the missing in the towns flooded within their sight, and some of those even, saved did not know untill next morning the fate of their closest relatives. Within thirteen hours after the Evening Moon, and other ships sank within their view, the first bodies recovered from the wrecks, and from the distant towns were brought ashore about three hundred of them. Even since the beginning of the disaster, fire men and others with oxygen machines had worked desperately, more had come, and doctors and nurses and aid from country and town hospitals had assembled.

Each exert form dragged ashore was immediately given resuscitating treatement. Firemen in an doctors, and even country police and men among the crowds and even women and children worked with a wild frenzy in the stifling heat grim faced and determined to add every possible life from the grip of death. Scores of persons believed dead who first removed from the water, or wreckage floes were revived by the rescue crews soon.

Thousands of ropes were thrown out every moment for tye thousands who gathered watched on in horror worked madly to bring flood victims on shore, while others gave directions often and who always not untill all possible ray of hope was gone, would the registrar crews give up the chance of saving a single life. Then as the last hope vanished time and again the squads stood by while police and soldier stretch bearers waiting in a line at one side reluctantly moved forward, to remove the body to a waiting ambulance. A terrible hatred of all Landelinland was worked up among the crowds and their imprecations against Landelinia was loud and air rending. At the morgues in the nearest town, were the heart rending scenes of relatives searching for their own among the rows of dead reached a climax every few minutes when a father, mother or brother or sister or husband husband or wife screamed or swooned upon recognising the still features of a loved one.

One pitiful example was the search of a soldier, a lit lieutenant in the Abyssinkilian army. He hearing of what town was rused first went to the town where they kept the bodies found and went to the West turner Morgue but found no one. Then he went to the city hall where the survivers were assembled. He could discover no one. Then realising without asking that something was wrong he turned away and started on his terrible journey through the morgues. He could not find his wife nor his children, in either places he visited. Finally in the fifth morgue he found his two sons and daughter, the two boys age, eight and nine, and the girl six, all mangled probably by the wreckage. They came from the town. After standing for a moment in silent grief, the father left the place slowly and continued his tragic search untill he went through ten morgues. In this morgue there were fourty five bodies of men women and children, and the last one in the line was his beautiful wife jane. The poor lieutenant lieutenant tried for a moment to be brave, but failed, failed, and he collasped in a dead faint.

The captian of the Morning Glory Hanson Geraege told his own story of the thrilling rescue.

" When the disaster happened" he said, We too were hurled onward by the terrific flood as if we were plowing through a heavy sea running crazy, yet we managed to get alongside the wrecked steamer and made a thrilling record of heroism in reaching the sin of the overturned ship in time to save nearly thirty or fourty of the survivors even though at that time we too were bombarded by wreckage and nearly turned over by the flood.

We had just left the docks of La polama city a little ahead of the Evening Moon and was heading southward for Angelinia Agathia, when the flood struck us, and though so weathered its fury we saw the Evening Moon reeling over before what appeared to us at that distance a house on top of a mountain of moving drift a combination of wreckage houses. In an instant we realized the danger of impending disaster, and the owner of the ship shouted us to make for the wreck at all speed. A moment later there was a terrific crashing sou like thunder at its loudest, and the Evening Moon was obscured from our view by a solid ridge of wreckage.

" My God Hanson they are gone" h the owner said to me, then he called to me to the wheel. The motors of the ship sounded at their maximum and within five minutes the speed of the flood itself s swung us almost upon the half submerged Evening Moon. I stuck desperately to the wheel to prevent the flood from moving us, as the owner took the chances with danger and jumped aboard the Evening Moon, and in less than a minute pushing survivors up to the passengers and crew on board our ship ship to safty.

Aboard the wrecked ship with the waters hurling more wreckage against it all was pandemonium, for everyboy was shouting weeping and pulling at each other to get free from the wreck.It seemed to me the air was full of cries of "Save my child please don't mind me " or save my mother," and that was all we heard, while others fought in a wild effort to help us pull the relatives out of the wreck fled into which they were hurled. The men were so exhausted from fright and so injured they couldn't help us at all and some of them even fought against being helped unless the loved ones were saved first.

I believe we got about foughty two aboard most of them children. About fourty minutes we realized we were there was little chance of saving any more from the upper decks up in the water, so we put away and just in time as the flood rose higher and now with greater force tearing the ship away from us. Then a panic issued aboard our ship a wooden house also struck us, and with over fourty shrieking, frightened, hysterical and half drowned people packed on the decks and stuffed in the cabins the Morning Glory settled in the water and also listed until we were in danger of capsizing the house continueing to push us, until some hoe or other she ship swung around and the house floated free while the owner yelled" Trim the ship. Trim the ship or we'll all drown.

Then after we were wrecked on shore and peol poo people came and saved us before the Morning Glory went to pieces"

Gertrude Geraldine ten years old had been saved as she clung to a piece of drift. She said-

" I and my mother clung together to a piece of drift when we were flung into the cold water, I tried to stay close to my mother because she could swim and I couldn't. I Held my breath and went down to the bottom and then the upward rush of a current pulled me up. Then we managed to hold to the drift where we were rescued by the Morning Glory. It was heart rending. We saw one woman stuck her head through a window of the house as it crashed against our boat and then she was killed. After we were saved we joined the crowd on the shore looking for father and was rescued at Vignon."

The authorities blamed the sudden flood as responsible for the ship disasters and the wrecking of cities and towns related in other shi cha chapters upon the rebels themselves who are charged with exploding dikes and levees.ge heavily and quickly did flood come and so strong it was the pressure of the water, that the crews of thousands of river ships and crafts with their own baptisms at the hel n had no chance whatever to turn the noses of their ships to ge the direction of the flood. Ships were wrecked in thousands of various ways, some crashing into buildings, buildings crashing into them or the water overwhelming them.

A large committee composed entirely of men experienced in the cause of disasters and their nature was convened by the government Authorities of the state in the state capital building at four thirty in the afternoon, and immedimo immediately afterwards the joint investigation into the cause of the enormous disaster was begun . At the same time three other thorough and independent investigations were under way by high officials of the Federal Government, the States Attorney, and other members of the Offices of the state.

These members went in disguise to the points reported to have been blown up by Glandelinian vandals, to view the source of the flood, while others went to visit the scene of the disaster in the north, especially to what was left of Abbiesann, and also view some of the wrecked cities and towns. Others were sent to make a personal inspection of the surviving cities wrecked by the flood, and also some of the boats and ships found near the shore of the flood. It took three or four days to complete this investigation and then they wrote down and sent to the Abbiesannian National government the following sensational charges;

1. Some of the explosions have either by their force or by the concussions they created formed cracks in the earth for the extent of hundreds of miles, and the whole blame is laid upon Glandelinians who made the mines, and the source of some portions of the flood came from the Mic-Hollester and Norma Run rivers, and also from the Erminie, though the other sources seems a mystery. The forces of the explosions have torn ten mile wide craters in the ground OF TWO HUNDRED feet in depth.

2. A number of Glandelinian soldiers have been seen and arrested near the spot after the disaster, and they refuses refused to talk though they yet do not seem to deny the charge of the disaster.

3. Large numbers of strong wires north of the course of the flood were found extending from some of the craters craters and were in places seemingly inpass inaccessable to Glandelinian miners and this too makes the appearance of the wired a mystery as no battery was found any where near the rear.

4. The only wire of the type used for eletrial charges was found tied to a tree twenty miles from the scene of the nearest crater blast, and the wire is a little over that length fastened so tightly around the tree that it could not have been released, and no sign of a battery was found here either. The glandelinians may have taken the batteries away."

The said members of this, and also some of the Gemini and general Dargar tod took several samples of the wires he considered the connection of explosives under where the explosions were. Dargar said he could observe no defects in any of the wiring, or the destruction of the mines and believed the Glandelinians may have stored enough explosives to blow up a whole city. Results of other investigations chiefly that carried on by Schleader and Dargar heads of the main divisions of the Gemini spy and milit ary inspection service who came to Angelinia Agathia on the afternoon of June the 2e 20th, confirmed the charges of the other investigators to Emperor Vivian and then made straight way to several Vivians lines to join in a important council he decided to hold July 10Th.

While at Emperor Vivians Dargar said;

"As I found twice the number of strong eletric wired the other investigators reported the existance of and one battery necessary for the amount of explosives used to level the levees and dikes of the rivers and dams. The wires were all in an excellent condition, and the battery too was good, with a six hundred voltage power. "

The immediate and independent investigation of the Federal levee inspectors was ordered started in a telegram by Emperor Vivian at Angelinia Agathia and he said;

" Don't leaf leave a stone upturned untill you recieve the real facts of the cause of the catastrophe. It is important to the nation."

The local inspectors had started work before the arrival of Dargar and his Gemini within half an hour after his arrival up north, Dargar accompanied by Schleader and Rodney and while two chief officers, went to the scene of one of the explosions first incident to Abbiesann and made a careful inspection of the crater, big cracks in the ground, and in possession of all the eletric wiring found. On the way then to the spot where the Dargar went on and took away three quarters of the big Abbiesann city of a population of about nine million, pargar commented on the way the Glandelinians succeeded in having implant so much explosives and wires without ever one being detected.

Without no reflection intede intended upon the rebelAbbiesannian government, whose dikes and levees were found to have been in the best of condition there seems to have been great power in the explosions that set off by the enemy miners. Dargar said;

" By all means I was once a mine inspet inspector, not of working mines, but those built to start big explosions for powerful blasting purposes and so on, and though I have very poor knowledge of the Abbiesannian language I can and would have been able to report one of these mines just as these Glandelinians have done, but whether without detection I cannot confirm. It must have taken months of secret work to accomplish it."

After his inspection Dargar called a hearing to be held on the 5th of July, It being the 26th of June at which all witnesses, including members of the wreck and wish caused by the disaster will be questioned. The Gemini leader requested all witnesses to be present without formality of subpoena in order that many versions of the awful tragedy as possible could be heard, as he wanted all the evidence against Glandelinia as possible so Abbiesannia could and would be completely justified even in the eyes of God to strike back with terrible vehemence.

He also requested a retailed report from all Signal Bureaus on the conditions which resulted in the furious flood.

"Since I came over here from America to work for Abbiesannia" Dargar said," I have seen many disasters during this war that caused great sorrow and loss of life, and if all of this bigger one can be proven against Glandelinia, I'm happy to see the result against the wicked a nation. The whole of glandelinia in my opinion for even what I know they have done to violet and her ol sisters alone should recieve no quarter. And yet Abbiesannia must strike for all disasters without striking a blow back."

Witnesses to the destruction of Abbiesann by explosion and flood, including many members of the survivors even children, and persons who aided in rescue work, and officers of National armies in the far north were questioned at all points interviewed for nearly four hours some at the States Attorneys office, some at the Governors Palace, and other points and all questioned generally gave the same details and the same cause so that later when questioned himself the Governor said;

"I sure am not contemplating any immediate grand National Jury actions to charge Glandelinia of any blame whatever in connection with the terrible disaster that has befallen Calverinia and her sister states. For evidence uncovered from all witnesses and others questioned and even grilled for truth, indicated clearly that the disaster was fully designed by Glandelinian authority with the sole purpose to murder or assassinate women and innocent children by flood explosion and fire, and we are to submit the whole thing to the National Tribunal at Angelinia Agathia and Glandelinia shall pay as dearly as it is in our power to make her pay even if her armies in the near future is to reclaim a quarter would not be punishment enough. There is so much evidence brought to my attention that it easily proves Glandelinia put the Glandelinian generals up to the whole thing. This is the greatest wholesale murder ever known in History."

The governer was given a thrilling eye witness account of the disaster by his wife and children who was at the time of the floods beginning in one of the small towns near the edge of the flood and saw houses go to pieces by thousands and many swept away at San Antonio and many ships sink or be grounded to pieces or capsized by houses striking them without any means of saving any one.

"From what my wife and others told me" Said the Government bitterly" I am convinced Glandelinia meant to wipe out Calverinia by flood, as no one in its path had any chance whatever to save themselves, and even our Emperor had a hard battle to save himself for he took was caught in the torrent and lost his horse, his favorite too."

Elder women and children, Mayors of all surviving towns and so on were the first called to the Governors house at Pundord to give their eye witness accounds of the disaster and their opinions as to the cause. All were agreed Glandelinia was responsible. Certain Angelina herself had been questioned by the Mayor in Mildred Greenburg, and by the Assistant States Attorney. She told all she and her friends sent through at Abbieann, how she managed to make cher way down to Mildred Greenburg all what they saw, and voiced high praise for those who had risked more than usual to rescue refugees and even them. many of the refugees questioned told of the suddeness of the flood, and others told of how houses in their cities were mysteriously smoken. Two Cabs of one of the broken up ships said the flood was the worse he had ever seen on record and confirmed other statements to the effect that people in their houses had no chance to escape whatever. He said-

"Our boat went over, but as fortunately had no passengers on board, and the crew managed to save themselves, by means of the ships life boats, and even pulled sixteen women and children out of the water when a house they were in floating toward us collapsed throwing them out. We then managed to get into a sluggish current of the flood and were rescued with them."

Under the governers direction many others were also questioned for the next day and then still others were grilled, while the governer gave orders to shift the trail to the bottom.

"We want to know for positively sure whether Glandelinia was purposely responsible for this flood tragedy." declared the governer." I have been told the explosions that caused many cities and towns up north not touched by the flood and that the whole nation felt the concussion to a slight degree or more, if that charge is proved then Glandelinia shall suffer, we will return to her a like disaster as soon as possible, and give her best armies no quarter. It is likely Emperor Livius will favor that decision anyway and for he has seen as much of the disaster as we."

Opr Opinions as to the cause of the flood disasters varied, some officials said laxity and negligence of the dikes and levees of upper Calverinia rivers were partly responsible for the disaster also because no one observed anywhere what the rebels would at when levees and dikes should be have been strongly guarded according to governmental orders. The governor then said;

"If that charge also is proved, then there is at this time criminal negligence and for those responsible Court Marshall action will be sought. If is likely that the military is looking into that matter any way. Any one responsible will face the same penalty as a guard found asleep on sentry duty."

Among those who blamed laxity of dikes and levees was the States Attorney, General Durgar and Scnloeder, members of the Federal Board of Inquiry that investigated the reason why the enemy were able to p plany plant the blasting materials materials without being se detected.

On the other hand all inspectors of river steamboats who visited the scene of the wrecked river shipping throughout the whole stretch of flood as possible, believed the destruction of the 10,000 h ships was the greatest loss to shipping districts ever companies ever heard of in history.

As long as the flood ever did not go down and continued to rage in all its furylit shores for nearly all its length if I can say it was lined on opposite sides as much as possible with countless thousands of people hoping against hope of rescue victims. Blankets that frequently told a much more grimer tale that poe ever grim were spread lengthwise and the crowds were frantic. Fortunately no Glandelinian planes within sight here, or probably the enraged mobs would have thrown them into the flood. Fullmotors brought by firemen, and town whistles continuing up a terrific clamor could only to be heard. Twilight of the twelfth day, of the flood began to descend over the roaring waters, and the few rescue boats that ventured out into the flood as far as they dared. Hundreds of campfires within a mile began to glare to light up the flood, and gigantic searchlights on the shore hundreds of them which had been erected the first night of the flood began to glare and scar over the rushing waters. Town policemen city officials, news paper reporters, war correspondents, and thousands of photographers took pictures or wrote details. It was many hours since a body , some of the flood victims of towns had now been brought to land. Then silently across the waters, moved coming in the darkness its motion swift and certain. A great split appeared to be on the front of this monsterous queer object plowing swiftly but surely toward land. It was a big wooden house.

As the crowds watched the thing one of the photographers skimmed toward the spot in a boat, and coming where in a moment hollowered out to the crowds;

"The house floated all the way down from Powerty Run, and its got people in it, dead or alive I do not know."

As the house finally grounded, a number started to skim toward it across the dark waters in boats. Lapping slightly before the current they seemed barely to touch the water as they sped toward the grounded house. When they reached the scene, the commander of the river life saving crew had brought his own boat to do rescue work should live persons appear in the house. The shore at this spot was now alive with police officials, various persons, newspaper reporters and photographers.

As the news paper men were first hauled aboard the new house boat if we can call it, they found only one photographer on the scene. Others hoping to rescue someone from the bow of the largest boat. The Commander in charge who hours before had swam with pulled out the dead that floated near shore was at the stern of the foremost boat pulling warnings through a huge magpo megaphone to other private boats, to keep clear in case the huge house would break loose and float off again. Meanwhile a big searchlight and for rescue work hovevered about like a huge white bird, continueing its death hunt.

A searchlight was now directed on the thing, and suddenly the whole thing was brought to view, and the top of the ill fated house began to glimmer in the immense searchlight, which showed scores of people close by broken windows but so still that no one knew whether they were alive or dead when so suddenly surprised by a merciless glare. Life divers and river coast Guards and others under Captain Allenby who did a fine piece of rescue work prepared for action, other started to climb to the windows shouting to the men operating the searchlights to concentrate fully upon the house. In a moment this was done. And across the side discernible to those who were closest the name "Childrens Country Orphan Asylum" showed in gilded letters across a red painted part of a flat roof. Other wordings found at the spot where that might have been the entrance seem to vies almost mocking to the witnesses;

"Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

Then one one then said-

"It is better if it had been written" Suffer little children for what good are they" Utmost pain alst misery and sorrow." and this was said with great bitterness indeed, while some one else shouted loud enough to be heard on shore-

"Remember the flood oh heaven, to Hell with Glandelinia".

Others now pulled alongside of what appeared to be an wooden orphan home in daylight gleaming ghastly in the circles of light from the shore. The building was pitifully in the dark flood waters unmindful of her part in the tragedy. Jaunty it stood in the spot lights. were moments of watching. Then out of the top window came leaning one of the rescuers. In his arm he was cradling a year old infant the tiny face and legs stiff and white like a doll. He shouted down " The place is full of dead kids of all ages, and sisters and two priests. The Glandelinians war on children. Not even soldiers .They are not " BRAVE " enough."

Men men reluctantly went up and soon little bodies were being brought down into the boats antill about sixty were brought to shore. Children of five, six, and eight were found the building resting seemingly haughtily, raising the list of bodies found there to six hundred and fifteen children, , twenty nuns, and five priests.

The crowds silently shook their heads, and wept.

CHAPTER NINTY SIX

BIG RIVER PLEASURE BOAT CONTAINING SIXTEEN HUNDRED PERSONS MOSTLY WOMEN AND CHILDREN SINKS AT SAN ANTONIO IN PATH OF ONT S ONRUSHING FLOOD. 100 AND 116 CHILDREN AND SIXTEEN MEN DROWN TWO MILES OF CITY. SHIP DISASTER SIMILIAR TO MANY OTHERS OF O. 10,000 SHIPS SCATTERED ALL OVER COUNTRY BY FLOOD. HEROES SAVE ONLY FOURTY THREE, WHILE VICTIMS STRUGGLE FRENZIEDLY IN FLOOD AS FORCE OF WATER BEAR THEM ONWARD.

OUTINGA a few out of 10,000 dreadful boat and ship tragedies brought on by the rst tremendous flood disaster ever known, two hundred and thirty four persons were known to have been drowned or killed, when the San Antonio ship known as the Abbeanna an excursion boat lan laden with nearly over a thousand happy picnickers foundered in the dreadful flood a little over a mile off the city limits of San Antonio city in the evening of June the 8th 1918. Those not rescued were missing or drowned. The bodies of the victims about only thirty four of them had been recovered from the wreckage before dark, and only two of them were adults the rest children, and one was a man clinging to his wife who survived. About fourty three were rescued by two heroes and thirty by those on shore, and the wreckage of the boat was tossed on the shore.

The boat carrying fully one thousand sixteen passengers mostly women and children as in the case of many other boats and ships that perished in the flood, was bound from Pigeon city to Angelinia Anathia to where the people were bound. All on board were hurled into the flood by the boat, when the craft like many others was first crushed by wreckage hurled against it, and then parted in two and began to submerge. All the boat and ship authorities were convinced that the bodies of many other victims remained to be recovered either from the water filled hull of the vessel or from the depths of the flood near the one of the many tragedy scenes.

The captian and owner of this boat told officials who questioned him that he had about one hundred and ninty six paid passengers on the ship, and that the number would not include all children under twelve who were required to pay no fares. The survivors and witnesses of the tragedy agreed that a large number of those on board were children within the fare exemption ages.

Like nearly all other ship disasters of this flood, and cost the lives of probably nearly five thousand persons, nearly all of them came without warning. This t big ship was a liner de luxe capable according to its Federal license of carrying two thousand eight hundred passengers. All river ships were inspected and pronounced even safe worth y by government officials and therefore the disasters why result, unusual. Loaded not much beyond beyond half of its capacity, the vessel moved away from the San Antonio docks at two P M. The immense Norman San River showed scarcely a ripple though the sun was unusually high for the season, and the sky held no hint of storm. At that moment there was no sign of flood. Both decks like many other ships suffering a like fate, were crowded with mothers, holding babies, while old older children played close by or watched the changing scenes of the land as the ship sped onward in its course. A ships band struck up a lively noise while the occasional crying of petulant infants mingled with the shouts of the youngsters and the constant orchestration. The Abbeanna had progress to within seeing distance of the broader section of the river, and was about a mile from the city seaward, reaching there at five P.M when a sudden burst of waters swept the decks like gusts of cloudburst rains lashing the faces of all on the forward sides. An ins a instant later a terrific flood of great force was centered upon the huge craft and she was battered fiercely by wreckage. Immense planks tore through the decks striking many passengers down, then came tremendous waves of buried waters the decks striking many passengers down, then came tremendous waves of waters of water, and rocked it dreadfully. Like sudden bursts of loud thunder crashes were at the ship breaking holes in its side, and the roaring of waters and the swiftly moving houses by hundreds added to the terror of the children and their mothers who tried to avoid the flying wreckage. The babies who had only been fretful burst into violent fits of crying and the other children struck by debris flom aboard ship stopped their play and clung terrified to their mothers skirts.

The big bands recognizing the condition of near panic aboard stuck most bravely to their instruments and offered musical competition to the uproar of the flood and the scream ing of the women and children.

In the po pilcot house at the forward end of the top deck the captian of the ship struggled with the wheel himself and tried to keep the ship to the forward direction of the flood, but the force of the dashing waters, and th the onward rush of the debris and floating houses was too severe. Instead of yeilding to the impulse of the steering lines the Abbeanna bounded with bulk crosswise to the force of the flood and bombarding wreckage, tilting bending, away from the force of the water and wreckage. Those of the passengers who had been grouped and lined on the deck and elsewhere found themselves bombarded by wreckage and made soaking wet from sheets of water that was flying on a board.
Naturally they acted as common impulse would make them and either dashed into the cabins or up into sheltered portions of the decks or to the westward and port rails. So it was with those aboard other ships in the same plight throughout the path of the flood.

The rush of the floating wreckage and waters probably moving more than ninty miles an hour pos pushed the ship onward at a speed far beyond what it ever was expected to go and if it had not collided with a number of floating trees which checked its course the ship spu would have only been flung ashore or carried the whole dism distance of the flood. The Abbiewin already yielding and heeling under the rush of water and stabbing terror of the wreckage swirled against her became completely overwhelmed overbalanced and would have as it seemed been turned over like the others but it was a little too large and resisted the pressure manfully but was nevertheless being turn up upon in her hold below water line as she lay stuck in the maze of trees which refused to yeild before the water. At instant later the ship parted in two and within a few minutes both ends began to settle and sink.

Violet hysterical screams of mothers relieved amid piercing cries of little children and the shouts of men. While babies with their weak voices strained in piping terror. All this was added to by shouts of the crew as they strove to loosen life belts and life boats but nothing would life in such a rush of waters which was ten times more than the wildest dream of a hurricane.

A cry incoherent from the captian who found himself drafted across the sill of the pilot house window as his end of the ship flopped shutter.

For a minute the water about the overturned wheel was alive wity with bobbing heads, frantically waving arms and in the midst of the human multitude were a few good swimmers, even among youngsters, several not more than four or five years old, as there were for children who could not swim but no one could swim in this flood.

Mothers struggling futilely to keep their faces above the leaping rushing wave and trying to avoid the wreckage flies again and again thrust high above their heads infants and very young children. As the ship went in two pieces, some of the members of the crew before the ship sank had flipped off the lines which holds the life preservers in place, and hundreds of these floated upon the water and some were seized by women and ren before they were sicked away by the flood who otherwise must have perished.

Only one of the score of lifeboats which the Abbiewin carried and which was launched was caught by some one, the others to the horror of the crew being swept away by the force of the flood.

Three little girls and two too be, were later found in this way down in the streets of the city of Big Girl shool but they were unable to say how they got in them or who put them in. Those who had been able to keep themselves intermittently afloat in the mad sea of water and wreckage had caught a glimpse of hope. A current of the flood acting edgewise was dashing them toard shore. Also the shore was thronged with people waiting to save those whom they could, while the form of some small rescue ship darting the dangers of the flood was bounding toard the sinking wreck from several hundred yards off from shore. It was believed the vessel of salvation was a steam launch of good size owned by the Mayor of the town of Lucas and and his name was Quimbie Alto. With Alto on his boat, were two other men as the other had sighted through the horrible disaster to the Abbiewin.

As the steam launch nosed its way into the midst of the drowning women and children desperate hands suddenly reached out. One mother evidently convinced that her own salvation was utterly impossible attempted to toss the six year old child she had been desperately holding above her head into the launch.

A man who might have been unable to swim or was exhausted got his lips above the water for an instant to shout for aid was struck by a line of floating wreckage and killed. One woman and eight children were lifted from the dashing waves, and then the launch turned and raced for the shore to clear this load for another to take burden. Of these eight taken to the shore only the children survived, the woman dying for she was dead when doctors and physicians bent over them on the dry ground. Back at all risks to the disaster doomed launch went and again it was laden with those reclaimed from death and those who had already succumbed. By this time taking risks other small boats some sent from the river life guard stations had arrived to aid in orde recovering the bodies of the dead and of the drowning. According to the estimates made by rescuers twenty supposititious bodies were to be searched for before daylight waned by divers and members of the river boast guard who would dare dare the perils of the flood who were to drag the flood near the spot where the ship broke in two and sank. The vessel somewhat grounded among those trees was half submerged the water which showed the depth of the flood there to be about twenty feet. The ends of the ship with its end filled with water naturally would sink while still righting itself and then went to the bottom of the water. At this point it was believed at first that the water was about thirty feet in depth but as half of the ship showed above water it proved so far the water was ten feet less. During the night a river dredge which escaped the flood in this location had succeeded in passing cables under one end of the ship after most dangerous and difficult work but no effort could raise it as the pitching of the water would sweep it away entirely and then nothing could be done, and the dredge was almost wrecked itself.

Yet many victims were believed to be trapped in the cabins. The captian who dug to a ce section of the bobbing pilot house after the vessel had foundered to half its height pulled about twelve persons to saw safty on the narrow strip of board just above the wash of the waves. One of the men he hauled out of the water surprised the captian for when he had the man l on the upper side of the ship he discovered he had rescued that man and in the mans arms was the limp form of his little daughter, who had perished with her unfortunate father. Another child belonging to the same father a boy of nine years old had managed in some fashion to cling to a deck rail and was taken off in the launch.

"I don't know where dead and my little sister went" the boy wailed to a Red Cross nurse on the pier. "There was a rush of waters, and a terrible tnundering noise and within ten minutes later the boat was not under any of us and I was trying to swim in the water, there was something I got to hold to and that is all I know. The Captian of the ship did not know that his little daughter was on board. His wife so who regularly accompanied the boat had not gone with him on this trip and until he encountered his daughter among the rescue group on the shore an hour after the disaster, he had supposed she was with her mother.

"It was a sure nightmare of horror," the captian told his official questioners "which included Federal, County and city authorities" but there sure was one particular scene that is sharply outlined against the whole background of such an overwhelming tragedy. From where I and my surviving crew worked hauling in the struggling women and children and little ones in the water, I could see a very young man treading water. One arm was embracing the shoulders of a woman which was evidently his wife. With the other he was supported as he could at best the form of an aged woman which might have been his mother. This sort of battle would mean that all three would be drowned. And even as the thought came to me, I saw the older woman wrench herself free from the uplifting arms and sink to her death. Relieved of his double burden the man was able to swim toward us with the younger woman, and as I hauled them both to the boat top he looked at me with such utter desl despair as I never dreamed could be expressed in eyes.

"Did you see that," he gasped. "She was my mother. She—he chosed to go that way that my wife and I could be saved."

The divers working in the shallow waters of the flood after the boat had been lightly raised sop that somewhat by the dirrect were convinced they had recovered the last body that was not washed away. But there pressed together and smeared with mud in the half submerged cabin the arms and legs of both drushed as though trampled upon in a mad stampede were the bodies of a pair of children, a boy and girl both of them.

Just like at other points along the shore emergency first aid headquarters were established among the crowds, survivors frantic with fear, rushed from one headquarters to that dead to another. As pulmotor experts strove to restore breathing in the body of a little girl, her husband shrieked over and over in a hysteria of grief.

"I want to go with her. I want to go with her."

The father then hurried from body to body to another on the shore, and then then rushed from there to the nearest point south where he heard bodies were being removed there, and then on to neighboring undertaking rooms. In one place he found the body of his wife, in another that of his sister. In a third no encountered the bodies of his children. Mrs Selwood had saved her daughter Angus but became frenzied with grief and then after rushing from victim to victim on the shore she could find no trace of another child Mster eight yrs years old.

While this drama was being enacted on the shore a part of the broken ship suddenly arose from the bottom of the flood like a spector. This was being done as the force of the undercurrent hurled her upward. And on her dripping decks watchers on the shore could dimly discern in the darkness many bodies.

James Gregio of San Antonio Calverinia brought his wife, and three daughters, Sarah Virginia and Ella into the boat that day for a holiday. The family spent the early afternoon of that bright June day in one of the city parks, were far off the children and the excursion boat just getting ready for the trip southward. Therefore the youngsters insisted on making the trip. He saw the little group on board and strolling southward along the beach of the river idly watched the outmoving speck that marked the progress of the boat. Then he saw the flood, and soon after came the word to shore that the Abbiewin had been caughtbin the torrent had had come to some frightful grief. The husband and father hurried to the floods edge and just as he pushed his way through the gathering crowd to the edge of the surf a row boat rowed by a man nosed into the shore. In the boat were the bodies of his drowned daughters and wife. Hours later the frantic man learned that some strange miracle had been invoked in behalf of one of his supposedly drowned daughters the youngest, for she survived.

When the captian of the launch reached the shore with its first load of survivors and started once more for the almost submerged wreck of the Abbiewin, a war correspondent was permitted on board as long as he offered to help in any way he could.

The upper structures of the two half halves of the doomed excursion river ship was about on a level with the surface, and members of the crew aided by life guards were busy frantically hacking at the woodwork to break through and recover the dead. On board the launch was the owner and his small crew who had thrown himself down upon the small deck to rest a few half moments before his beautiful pleasure cruft drew alongside the doth ship. As soon as they came within fifty feet of the rapidly sinking ship the captian of the launch leaped again into the water and down toard the struggling people.

He stationed himself with two of his crew and the other of the crew at his suggestion handed into the boat such as were able to grasp hands of those who were unable to keep afloat. And for what seemed a long long time but was probably only a few minutes they lifted limp bodies also into the boat. The captian and his assistant were carrying from there into his small cabin those he rescued alive and were applying first aid when possible but mostly intent upon loading the boat with survivors so they could hurry back to the first aid station on the shore. The owner of the launch boat was sobbing as he went about his work of mercy. Between c of the children, the agonized pleading of women to save them the desperate hands clutching at him as he swam to their rescue must have taxed its strength to the utmost limit but he kept on.

Three times he pulled himself up on a rope a few feet above the water line and shouted desperately to those in the water;

"Keep calm, you do what I tell you and I will save you. Work your arms and legs and don't grab at any one near you."

And then he would dive into the water again and come back bearing a child or a fainting woman in his arms. Three times he filled that slender little boat built only to thirteen guests with twice that many water soaked bodies and steamed to the shore with the cargo. All hands helped carry them off the boat and they returned again. The fourth trip back they planned to rescue the men. A boy about eighteen was clinging to the side of the broken ship and holding on to the life preserver that was keeping his father afloat. The father in turn was holding in his arms the body of of his wife. She was probably dead by but they begged the captian to take her body aboard. While the captian and his crew were discussing it the boy managed to swim on board the boat, as the men were helping the father aboard.

"We cannot take your mother if she is dead, and leave some one who is alive to be drowned." the captian told the boy. In a flash the lad leaped into the water and the father said back too." Then we will stay" they said. The crew therefore took the mothers body aboard and her loyal son and husband placed her up tenderly and carried her into a little cabin. A woman and child who were too far away for the rescuers to reach when the launch was stationary had disappeared when the captian came to the place they had last seen them. but he believed he saved at least d sixty three.

One of the musicians of the boat told a thrilling story of the breaking up sinking of the ship. The

"The ship was midday between San Antonio and north pond." he said." The flood came so quickly it gave us no warning whatever. At first there was a terrific rush of water. When the disaster threatened we thought we could calm the many hundreds of passengers who threatened to become panic stricken. Most of them were women and children. There were too dozen small babies with these women passengers. Even when the flood finally came along and started the ship going helter and shelter everybody dashed to that shelter they could find. The weight of the crowds hitting the boat on the end side of swining the boat around to then hit her on the side caused it to sink after pushing it into a mass of ittrees which resisting the flood held it fast. There were only two life boats that were used the others being swept away as fast as they had been launched. The poor captian who had his wife and daughter on board had succeeded in launching most of the life saving boats but the flood swept them to pieces. Women were screaming and pleading to us to save their children. I saw one woman go dash clutching her infant to her breast when she found there was no room for her. I believed she was drowned. There were only two decks on the Abbieann. After tye the flood struck the ship I tried to gain the upper deck to avoid the planks hurled ab board by the force of the water striking against the ship but as the boat tilted I was pitched into the water, and how I was rescued I do not know.

Another woman deliberately hurlsed her baby into the only boats that were floating.

Perhaps the most pitiful pitiful sight of the try tragedy, and of all child children rescued in one of the boat disasters of the flood was the case of little Anna Winthworth, aged seven and by her age apperance it was evident she was a an escaped child slave, and now a homeless hungry child, who was taken to the town hall and later removed to a hospital suffering from exposure, excitement and a large amount of foul cold drinks thrown hastily into an undernourished stomach. And she could not remember much about how she came to be on the boat, except that a " nice lady" took her on an excursion and was going to adopt her. Her father and mother she had not seen in weeks. her mub mumblings to questions put to her who were not very clear. Nevertheless the town deputies believed that the shivering pale faced child had been under the care of some protective society after she ran away from the slave camp and had recently been taken by some woman for adoption who might have drowned in the tragedy.

Honored Heroes of the flood boat tragedy included the Mayor of Jeffson ton who in his earlier days was a champion swimmer and diver, and his brother was captian of the river lifeguard at Pine Tree shore according to eitnesses. He was visiting his brother the day of the disaster, and was on the shore of the flood just as the screams of those thrown off into the water from the ship penetrated the air. His brother was already in his bathing suit but the Mayor was wearing his ordinary civilian suit. He daffed it in few seconds and the two jumped into the water and swam to the rescue. The captian of the guards was ahead of them with his men and they worked frantically recovering the victims of the children and carrying them to the daring little boats which had risked all danger to come to the rescue. Diving again and again the Mayor returned with a little girl although his five fingers was cut off in his attempt to battle a wreckage floe the launch saved all he had rescued. As he passed by with the launch he saw the struggling forms of several girls and boys. The two smallest he drew in first, and then he rescued the other children and while doing so the launch was almost capsized by a wreckage floe. As he reached the shore he carried the children to the po pulmotors and only after they had been revived had his hand bandaged. Then he returned to the rescue. After this while on shore he gave all who interviewed him a graphic description of the disaster.

But before he completed his statemenh he seconed from loss of blood and was taken to the hospital.

"I was on the shore when the disaster happened" said the Mayor." The people were crowded at all parts of the ship and when the main c torrent came it looked to me like they started to rush for the cabin s. The captian evidently wanted to turn the boat around and either follow the course of the flood or beame beahe beach it. He started of course to take the boat head down the course of the deluge. I was on the shore alongside of where the boat broke into two pieces, and I took the chances and swam the flood till I got to the last, but in my battle with floal floating wreckage my fingers were cut. I tried to get into a life boat after I got six little ones into the craft and out of the big but, then I started to get dizzy. I had swallowed a lot of water.."

A mother watching over her daughter even in death. Such was one of the many strange sights of fate brought to like in the shore camp fire late that dreadful night, when relatives identified, a woman who was lying on the ground a few inches from her stricken eight year old daughter, as their mother, both victims in the flood tragedy of the wrecked ship. In the hurry and bustle of laying out the bodies, the woman and her daughter had been placed side by side. The shore morgue was throughout the night visited by several hundred chalk faced anxious people who filed in a constant stream past the bodies hastily prepared for inspection hoping that loved ones tready for lost for the evening meal would not be there.

An old gray haired man glanced at the be.l bodies mostly children, then stood with bared head and cried unashamed.

"I lost my little girl and boy in the Lake Sellcia disasterlast November" he told a reporter." My God that November yet months seems to day."

As parents passed by after looking in the faces of little chubby girls and boys that still held a touch of pink in their cheeks, they seemed overjoyed that none was their own.

"Maybe our little daughter is at so of the other shore morgues." one woman said to her husband with tears in her eyes. They stood there for a long time feeling thankful for the surcease offered when they discovered their children was not among the drowned.

Standing near one of the bodies of a man was a thirteen year old girl, whose father was drowned. The child had been rescued and was still shivering from the ordeal. Other shore morgues offered similar touching scenes. Parents who had been at others and other shore morgues missing ones were not among the dead there tiptoed slowly by the be lbodies laid out for all to see. They were even afraid to take the look that meant more to them than anything in the world. If foure were set at rest they wept for other panic stricken parents who had been less fortunate.

At one of these morgues a little girl was identified by her grandmother . after she had visited morgues throughout the shore line in a futile search. One woman whose name was also not mentioned started for Angelinia Agathie on the boat the day of the flood to give her nine year old son a bit of refreshing air as the day was hot. As the wharf she paussed at the home of her brother and gathered up his two daughters and Mr. All were on the Abbieanna and all were lost. A Nineteen year old boy rescued his mother from death in the sinking of the Abbieann and tried in vain to save his father who was already dead. His mother was saved.

"We were all standing on the lower deck when the terrific flood began" he said. "Just as I shouted to my parents the boat broke in half and the two halves went down. I grabbed a life preserver and threw it to my mother who was the first to come up. Then threw another to my father but he did not get a chance to grasp it and was killed by floating timbers striking him;

The captian of the Abbieann who was also owner and master of the big ship, and five members of the crew all of whom succeeded in saving themselves were taken off the all but shattered hulks of the ship and taken to be questioned.

After making statements to the Mayor the bunch were transferred to the Government military authorities where they were further questioned . The captian who said he bought the boat for a million dollars made the following statement to those who happened to question him.

"It was early in the afternoon" when we steamed southeast. There was no sign of the coming flood and the boat certainly was not overcrowded as the government inspectors allow us to carry a little over two thousand passengers. Yes there were government agent inspectors at the pier when we took off. My life saving equipment was more than sufficient and it consisted of thousands of life preservers, and twenty boats. Also there were three large rafts one oneach deck. I have operated the Abbieann for six years. It is a two hundred and two hundred feet long, n hundred feet wide and t thirty feet high below the water line. The captians own daughter was on board the craft when the disaster occured.

One of his first concerns was to see that a dock hand stripped a life preserver around her. The boat was examined by government inspectors four times a month and approved as sea worthy for passenger service. In describing the actual disaster the captian broke into sobs.

" We were about a little over a mile south of San Antonio when the flood hit us." he sailed. It was one of the worse floods I have ever seen. The boat was so battered by wreckage that it broke in two and almost instantly the two ends tilted lengthwise tumbling hundreds into the water and trapping others in their cabins. There were many heads bobbing up and down in the water and I began tossing them life preservers and helping passengers in the only boats that the flood did not sweep away. I pulled out fourteen persons two of whom were drowned, and the crew assisted me in every way. They manned the rafts and got the life preservers to as many as possible.

" Children's trinkets, bathing suits, pocketbooks, and other small persons property mute reminders of the tragedy were recovered by the rescuers when they floated in two shore. Clutched tightly in the hand of a small girl whose body was one of the few recovered was found a blue prayer book and in the other hand the child held a pure. "On the first facts which we have already obtained it appears that more than the usual Glandelinians are guilty, and she ever it is I would say is guilty of criminal neglect In the greatest flood tragedy in the worlds history."

" Such was the assertion four days after of the Governer of Calverinia as a strict investigation of all high and low Calverinian officials had been for those four days continually under way. And the Governments statement was made shortly after many of its flood refugees were grilled for deatils as to the flood and their opinion and its cau The mayor of the city of Poverty Bay and some others nearest to Abbieann were also questioned.

" We are surely going to find out where the fullest responsibility lies." Said Governer Saunders. All persons of surverity in this state had taken a great con sideration into this greatest of all disasters combining millions of horrible tragedie and of which we have no account of as yet, and to even indict these who might be prove proven to be guilty of criminal negligence if our first information is supported by ou Investigation. I have been told that most of the levees in the north, dikes and dams nearly all big levees and rivers dis figuering of lans made in since the Lake Sellis disaster were not even guarded, and absolutely without a watchman or any amount of imp to prevent the Glandelinians in their purposes. If we substantiate that charge made by se of the refugees from the far north of Calverinia first hit by the flood there is sure criminal negligence on the part of the military up there.

The governor referred to a charge made by many of the refugees who lost many love ones in the flood. The governor placed the mayor of Mildred Greenburg city in charge of the investigation and assigned as aids the other mayors of the many stricken cities.

The Captian of the ship sailed the Abbieann and the survivors of his crew were take the mayors office and questioned until early the next day as to the nature of the flood how suddenly it came and the direction of its progress. The men were then released early on their own faithfulness of promish to appear before the state Atten ttorney at the called the next day.

This office also had elected a jury of representive members of the Relief parties and under the direction of Deputy Caldwell was to open the fi first inquest of the flood Police of all cities and towns that survived also gathered material for the governor offices and had began their investigation while the flood was even in its fourth day duration, with the governer and some of the mayors. One of the first acts of the gover was the rigid questioning of Glandelinian prisoners brought t before them, and from the they took written statements which were turned over by mail to governor Vivian himself,

The federal investigation in charge of the government officials was to ascertain determine the condition of the levees and dikes before the disaster. Many a captian ow ship had been ruined in the flood and yet escaped with his life declared their ships in worthy condition and absolutely sea worthy and equipped with boats and life preserv as demanded by marine regulations of the Abbieann government.

The federal inquiry into the disaster was well under way by the fourth day. The National Inspector of all steamboats said during the evening that he and his men surveyed as much as possible some of the few wrecks of flood torn ships but were unable to locate the Evening Moon which might have been swept entirely away.

These ships and boats was just inspected last month." said the inspector. " complete inspections of vessels is required by government regulations and equipment is inspected quite as frequently. So far as we know the loss of vessels by flood was not to fault in the vessels or equipment. No one could a boat of any size survive such a storm that leveles brick buildings to the ground, except a way whole cities. The boats have been out in good many storms and had always been considered a staunch craft. The capital of these ships and boats have always been considered good men."

Charges that one troop of soldiers or its officers had been warned of the dangerous flood breaking loose from the north in ample time to order frightened people from the first towns in its path thus possibly preventing these from meeting a watery death was also made at the investigation. This investigation was conducted at the governors head quarters, while the federal investigation still under way in the federal buildings testimony that dikes and leeves had been strongly constructed and were in a safe condition other refugees from the northern town at the investigation, one a woman and the a heartbroken father who lost three children and his wife hurled other charges at Glandelinians, both declaring that the Glandelinians who had succeeded in making the first blast had been caught in the flood themselves bu but managed to get aboard a raft mak ing no effort to aid drowning women and children struggling in the water. The women addition confirmed the report concerning the warning given the town before the hu water rushing upon it . Hundreds of others testified the same thing, but also adding that there had been no one to guard the dikes and levees before the disaster occured. It was the Mayor of the flooded town of Confection and also of devastated Bonbon who declared they became alarmed by the dangerous rush of uprising water in their streets, and who warned most of the people who there however managed to save themselves and few were drowned.

" All the people were running to the utter stories of brick buildings only as directed" said Mayor Milton of Bonbon." I too told all people to go into a wooden ge over to the top story was so exceedingly dangerous, and therefore I and others were warning them, and we had about two hours to make all the people go into the upper stories of brick buildings."

One of the mayors police told of seeing a number of strange boats on the river "no like No night." They seemed to be in a hurry and were moving at a great speed." he declared. another told of the same incident adding the pair of boats made desperate efforts to get away from the levee and to the other side of the river. Then men were seen to get out and these boats were beached and run off for a certain distance and then disappear. About twenty minutes after the explosion occured. . Added again to th the same stories were those of other people and they declared there was no chance for us anything other than she done to save people.

Another investigator said he believed the dikes and levees were firm and strong absolutely the thrustworthy and asserted the walls and other masonry of dams were not safe and in good condition but such that he could trust any town to be under. In answers to questions of the mayor of Greenburg city, and many other persons, the mayor of Mildred Greenburg recommended stricter military, land and Guardianship for levees and river dikes. He thought he said that the National government should per should permit all levees and dikes such as fulned by explosions to be strongly guarded by armies not unlike the battle field. All the dikes and levees as he said were as of the most strongly constructed ever known and must have taken powerful explosions to blow them down.

The opening of the federal inquiry was made by the supervisor inspector general of all levees and dikes of rivers and dams who arived at Mildred Greenburg on the 26th officially conduct the investigation of the department. He was assisted by mayors of great number of flood torn cities, and all other local inspectors.

The Mayor of Bonbon was the first witness called to the stand. He re e repeated hi original statement that the flood was the worse kind he had ever seen of even experienced. He also declared the leveesxand dikes were strong and that it took many thousands of tons o to even made a small rent in one of the, levees. These statements were borne out by many other witnesses thousands of them, and also by rescuers.

One said;

" I saw Glandelinians tearing away from the levees before the explosion and fired several shots at them bringing a few down. The mayor of Bonbon acted as any mayor should, when reached the scene of flood I saw him directing people to go to upper floors of the buildings although he seemed about to drop from exhaustion at the time."

Other federal inquiry witnesses including the chief engineers of many disabled ships, and some of the prominent people of the flood wrecked towns corroborated the assertion that all levees were strong and that explosions caused them to be broken asunder. All the investigators composed of well known levee inspectors and engineers who were conducted by Governer Saunders of Calverinia to vie view as far as possible the havoc the flood had left and later to inspect the waters of the flood remaining which in its appearance put one all in mind of the ill fated towns and cities in the Lake Sellicia disaster of last year when taking more than probably eight hundred thousand lives?

Earlier in the da, but way up north other head investigators had made a personal inspection of what remained of levees and dikes and had charged the Glandelinians with their wale murder of millions of women and children. After this he regarded the damage and expressed anger upon discovering some of the electric wires extending to one of the mine craters n ar the near the big cracks."

" These wires are full evident proof that Glandelinians did this." he said.

It was the common object of the investigat investigat investigation bodies to involve their inquiries enough information to involve ample foundation for new laws and regulations calculated to prevent another flood tragedy anywhere. Some of the rigid conditions to be sought as a result of the Nation wide or state wide investigation was to be a tightening up of Government laws regarding the stricter enforcement of levees and regulations and a law or ordinance prohibiting strangers to go around near the dikes and levees. Although the leves inspectors noted no fault fault in the construction of the levees they expressed the opinion they did not see how they could have been blasted. One of the Federal inspectors declared all levees in excenn excellent and good condition. Patrol of the spot as close to shore as possible where bodies were hoped to be recovered was still being continued day and night by coast guards in fex small boats, and strong rafts. Although Captian Argrinio in charge of the river o coast guards sha worked without sleep for more than thirty six hours after he had taken a heroic part in the work of rescue immediately after the towns gave way before floods returned to the station in near exhaustion. The flood acting like a heavy sea t tossed the guard boats about throughout the day of work preventing the use of grappling hooks in the grim search for more bodies. To day on the 20th however it was planned to drag the flood as far as it safe to do so. In addition to the investions investigations and the Federal hearing, pla were being made for a special session of all city councils throughout Calverinia to start another investigation into the flood tragedy chiefly for the purpose of obtaining information on which th to base the drafting of ordinances aimed at prevention of suc disasters. At Mildred Greenburg and other places inquiry was also conducted under the direction of the Mayor and more than a hundred survivors within two days told their versions of the disaster as did captians and crews of many ships that were destroyed. Examination of the witnesses was conducted by the Mayor and his assistants.

One of the witnesses who was probably the outstanding hero of the tragedy gave a grafic account of his rescue of nearly two hundred persons. He said;

" I have sailed on seas all my life and never in my experience was there any wa water than the flood that struck towns and villages and said to have swept thousands ships all over the state. I saw one ship completely swallowed up by the flood and it happened so u quickly neight er neither the captian or any one could have prevented what happened. Of that boat no one was saved.

Also there was full accusation that while the people of towns and villages th struck by the flood were being drowned and killed amid their falling houses, or swept to their deaths, two members of suspicious persons within sight of the disaster sat o big raft about one thousand yards away haul headless of cries for help and taking delight of the plight of the non combatants, and this was voiced by one of the survivors and he was backed by many others who I had lost loved ones in the flood disaster. yet the lost astonishing stories of the flood, more it seemed than the destruction of tens a cities, was that more than three quarters of the members of Calverinian River ships dis destroyed or scattered all over the state with loss of life too unaccountable to be believed, and that a full checking up proved not 10,000 but 45,678 ships of all sizes were swept away including five thousand big river steamers. dredges, working ships, pleasure craft, little boats, sailing vessels and even sea steamers coming into the towns to u unload passengers or supplies, and even thirty seven naval warships of its Amphibianians were wrecked more than the agree gale would have destroyed them at sea.

All this was testified by many of the captians who through a luck from Heaven sur even though their crews perished, and more every day came to testify into the destructio of so many ships and the loss of sometimes twenty thousand lives for all ships known.

One captian who lost his ship called the Rose Marie and stricken with grief told he he had taken his wife and four year old daughter for an outing with passengers from Pandora to Angelinia Agathia, a weeks cruise, and how at the inl insistency of the pass he decided to even make the return trip city with her.

As tye, the flood started captian Hans ordered every one below, but never could expect the intensity of the deluge. Everything was all right for several hours until the boat was borne down upon the town of Vignon. The boat crashed at a speed of 100 miles an hour(to his estimation) upon or into a big brick house, demolishing the the structure and the ship killing every one in the house, and all his crew and pass engers in the ship, he alone escaping though through a miracle though he was badly injured losing a hand and his leg broken so he used to come to the interview on on crutches. He said he seized a life belt as soon as the boat forced itself clear the wrecked house to place it around his daughter but she was killed by falling timbers as well as his wife.

The life boats and life belts on my ship were so to speak black with age but my firm nevertheless but there had been s no chance to use them. To tell the truth the ma was not sunk or disabled in a way to even founder but the majority of the people and crew were on deck at the time of the crash, not having gone below when commanded to d and therefore over two thousand were killed. Those sir who obeyed the command were even injured."

Other survivors of the same boat corrobrated important parts of his testimony. Eugene Constantine, president of the Holy cross Corporation, expressed the expert opinion that the government should " Reward Glanuslinia Handsomely for the disaster".

" I am of the opinion" he thundered" that Glanuslinia should be reward the very same a flood for a flood, fire for fire, and sword for sword. No quarter should be given hereafter. This disaster is too much too much in the extreme. We are black faced fools if we stand for this. We stood for others, but shy for this."!

Charles Mc Quimble Thoms who lives at 1056 North Alito Avenue in La Polana city his wife was drowned in a ship disaster detailed his harrowing experiences. His wife was Miss Minnie Thoms and she was drowned with sixteen hundred other passengers when the river steamer the Caldwell was shattered by the forces of the flood at once, giving no one the captian time to escape. Fortunately Charles was not on the boat but he saw the tragedy at a distance. Mrs Richardine Angelinio and her friend Jennie Geraldine

d in Angelinia Agathia were conducted into an apartment in the main when the flood ...s the boat tne, were on as they testified. They warned members of the crew of the ...ger but there was no time for anything they said. One of the crew was killed by a ...w of wood that struck him. As the ship was overwhelmed by the torrent of water ...d turned it completely over on its side and immediately sank it both women said they ...re hurled into the water. The force of the boat keeling over dislodged some of the ...n bales, a and Mrs Richardine Angelinio strapped here un- der companion unable to ...m it was swept onward by the flood, but fortunately was hurled upon the shore. ...gelinio held on to a floating house floor until she floated in past a tall building ...d flood swept city a and was rescued Near the ship declared grew Mrs Geraldine ...n was floated down on a raft, and one of them threw us a rope and brought us ashore ...r great difficulty.

Another captian of an ill f of an other ill fated ship himself took the stand. "My ship was swept for three hundred miles before being wrecked" he admitted, " but ...e loss of life within my view was something terrible. The ship went through a flood ...ed as fast that I expected the boat to be crashed against some building, and that the ...assengers would not have been able to put on the life preservers even if they had been ...ening on them. We were even carrying more life saving equipment than the law even ...requires. But as fortunately were not wrecked in manner to cause loss of life among ...e passengers, but Oh God the sight we observed on the way was terrible. I can even still ...ar the screams of those unfortunate people and especially those little children. I ...metimes almost wish I had gone down with them."

He was asked about the question of the levees of the rivers:

" I saw levee inspectors make a test on May the 28th." He replied and being off ...hat day I went along with them here for curiousity sake. " I saw them make a ...ful examination every where. And they were in excellent condition; such condition ...hat even many railroad lines were on the widest levees."

"How long did they continue the investigation of the levees condition?" he was ...ked.

" until they were positively sure everything was all right. The examination lasted ...ays when usually the time of four hours examination is the usual length."

" How long did you remain on the levees with them?" he was then asked.

" As long as the examination continued."

Another Captian said whose arm was in a sling-

" My boat was caught in the flood further south on June 4th in the evening. ...n the flood there was a local thing something sudden and terrible from which no captian ...orth could have saved a boat of any size; let through the help of Providence no one ...ast on my ship though it was wrecked.

Graphic proof of the power of the flood that swept so many thousands of boats to ...ptic proof of the force of the flood was also presented to Federal Investi ...ors and also scattered them all over the land was also presented to Federal Investi ...ors on the 29th of June by witnesses of a large stone building with walls three ...et thick and a block long and five stories high. One of them said- said

" We sir saw that building once struck by a t telster and of all houses around it ...ntirely had its windows blown in and a part of the roof torn off. Yet in this flood ...ilding been totally wrecked. Only one section of the building is left and is a terrible ...ght."

" There was quite a lot of work for the thousands of investigators to check up on the ...ights of ships thus scattered over the country and wrecked and the strangest part of ...ll was that the most of these ships were found in the debris of wrecked cities and towns ...ong the north as Poverty Bay, and as far south as Heidi junction, Dorothy Gale and ...ale north as Poverty Bay, and as far south as Heidi junction, Dorothy Gale and ...ther cities further south-west in Angeline Vine tute. Dorothy Gale city had the most ...ships and these were badly wrecked, and the city was taking care of the ...ssengers who survived the horror.

Other cities were La Polana, twenty two ships, which were found crashed through ...ofs of buildings, Vignon, 200, some stute, or r groundee I grounded in streets, ...ffers only, one on top of remaining building, El paso 1,000 ships of all sizes, ...rushed in wreckage, or crashed through buildings, and the wreckage jams north of ...ildred greenburg and francis Atlanta presented a wrecked ship shipping yard, no inter ...ingled with ships they were, ships from steamboats, even sea going craft, small sailing ...ssels, and the like, besides one large naval craft, and two gun boats.

In other sections the wreck of ships were seen still floating in the remaining ...ters outside the country, by hundreds perfect wherlicts, and other scattered upon dry ...nd. Nearly every town or city which through struck by the flood and yet survived had ...ll kinds of ships stranded in their wreckage, or found half way into the sides of ...ildings. It was the greatest wholesale destruction of ships ever known of before, the ...ntinent this being over two thousand. This shows that the force of the flood though terrible was unusually freakish, and even hillocks that were not high enough to be free from inundation showed ships stranded on their tops. floating trees had ships stranded among them; ships were even washed into devastated forests, and elsewhere, and some were even stranded against or upon floating strong bridge work.

What could account for this strange action of the flood, which was probably the strangest of all was a mystery. The only river ships not touched by the flood was those belonging to the Mic-Hollester Run River, which though partly edged off by the flood, yet did not receive the flood waters, as the dikes and levees were too high for the flood to pour over, or boostrong for the rush of water to destroy.

The greatest number of ships seemed to have come from the two longest navigable rivers, the Erminie, the Norma Run and the Evangeline St Clare as well as the Aronburg Run, and many creeks of good size. The Calverinians alway loved boating and so that there was no kind of a stream that did not have many craft of all sizes, so that with the disaster to shipping the loss almost was extremely immense though far from absolute estimation, as nothing was yet claimed. Of all the 45,678 ships ruined or destroyed, only fourty five captians survived, and in the majority of them all crews, captians and passengers perished, or whatever people were on the ships. Shipping was even torn from the towns by the floods, and said to be deposited into the wreckage of other cities or towns. The great majority of ships from Abbiemn city were lodged tight in the wreckage of Mildred Greenburg or in the immense drifts north of her, and also scattered all over the flooded section of the state, and the surprising news of steams smaller ships being observed in big trees that resisted the flood was a marvel.

One boat of a large size, a sailing craft was found loged logded in a number of trees that failed to give way before the flood, and it would take immense work to ever get them down. Even big trees were found driven through the sides of large ships that appeared to be ocean going craft, like steamers or conveying ships, and sometimes a wrecked ship had two broken wooden houses on top its deck and still floating in the remaining flood waters. Another strange freak of the flood. Some ships had steamed through a large wooden house and with its wreckage remaining and concealing half its boat stillifloated in the water.

The biggest freak of all was found of two ships that had crashed through the side of one house, while another ship of long size had crashed through these two ships and the house combined, and the whole was still floating in the water, a freak derilict indeed. How many were killed in this strange freak no one could say for as long as the waters remained there was no means of getting to these ships with safty.

The majority of freaks appeared almost similar but one very queer one may also be known about the same ship known as the evening moon after it had been swept way after the majority of living was taken from it.

It was unable to even sink when carried along by the main force of the floods and heading toward Vignon city, it crashed through two wooden houses, shattering this to splinters killing and drowning all within, and then stopped alongside a tall brick building, and was lifted high up by the rushing waters in such a way that when the flood receded it was standing up lengthwise against the building, with the wrecked cabins facing the structures with two of its smokestacks forced through two of the windows as if guns were being ready to fire from apertures.

This might be said to have been the greatest freak of all, but about the scene of four ships found standing on top of one another, and smashed in debris at Big girl pool city, and these steamers of the same sizes too. And the greatest freak of all was that not a soul lost their lives in these ships, and how the force of the flood accomplished this was a mystery when the waters was only deep enough to submerged the position by the wreckage builded up against them. Nevertheless maybe this was the greatest of all, but before I close this chapter let me tell of another, two ships in line were found crashed through a side of a building at Heidi junction, while three more ships were deposited on the roof of the same building, with a freshouse stacked to the top of one of the ships. Loss of life in these ships was total, the rescuers bringing out over fourtteen hundred bodies, and those also of the captian and crews, and the inmates of the wrecked wooden house. This might account that when the to two floods pa met at Heidi junction the waters attained the greatest speed and force so that nothing could be averted, and hundreds of the most marvelious freaks occured in this city, not alone of ships, of houses being forced into another, or sometimes four or five houses driven into each other in such a manner that they floated for hundreds of miles without even breaking apart or drowning the occupants within.

What the speed and force of the waters may have been here is not estimated, but one hundred miles an hour might have been a conservative figure. The only houses in Heidi junction that survived was not in this powerful currentfortunately or otherwise that city would have been also a thing of the past.

CHAPTER NINTY SEVEN.

PENROD AND HIS COMRADES AMID SCENES OF REFUGEES AT FRANCIS ATLANTA.
ENORMOUS NUMBERS FED AND HOUSED IN TENTS. MANY SOLDIERS DROWNED.
ENORMOUS LOSS IN GOVERNMENT PROPERTY. FEAR FOR FRANCIS ATLANTA'S FUR DUFU FUTURE. THE BAD SITUATION FIVE DAYS AFTER THE CATASTROPHE.
A CITY OFFICIALS VERSIO OF THE REIGN OF TERROR IN DA POLANA CITY.

As far as it could be possible just now the big city of Francis Atlanta at which the Mic-Hollester and Pandora and other railroads run through was one of the greatest receivers for supplies sent to the flooded cities that ever was known to have come into a single city, and they poured in by the trainloads for ev every freight train able to enter the city in spite of the war beginning with Wednesday the third day after the flood had receded. Indeed the response to the appeal for aid by the people of the stricken cities and on the part of Abbiemnia and in fact every country in the world to relief was prompt and generous.

One reason that made it very apparent that all relief was necessary was made immediately certain beyond doubt from the appearance of the immense droves of refugees that began to flock into Francis Atlanta from all cities of the flood swept areas from north or south, as soon as boats and trains were able to run to Francis Atlanta after the mass catastrophe.

Penrod and his companions also came with these refugees on one of the refugee trains, and in entering the city, to show they needed no aid, and were not refugees but en route and to the christian armies they presented the papers with which they used to identify themselves during their trips. In addition to these thousands arived from the flooded cities and towns of the great southern disaster raging at the same time, and the authorities of Francis Atlanta were at a loss as to what to do with them, for the numbers of these refugees were greater than the population of the city itself.

Some of the unfortunates were even from points far distant as Francis Atlanta on the east of the two floods and other disasters was the only relief station within location and there were even visitors who had relatives in the flood stricken districts and had come to learn the worse regarding them, others there were who had come to seek refuge from the ravages of forest fires and other sources as well as from the enemy people having fled from Emelantonburg with the approach of Yankeys army upon that city, but the greatest number of all consisted of refugees wounded most sore and sick, almost frantic in their desire to get away, from the stricken cities and get out of sight of the sickening repulsive disease breeding scenes.

In addition there were thousands of the sufferers themselves from even Heidi junction who had been brought out of their misery there to be cared for here.

The general relief committee held a mass meeting on the following day to settle the question of how to care for these crowds of refugees, for every incoming train brought thousands of more people nearly all of them injured or sick, and therefore immediate action was necessary or even the very inhabitants of the city itself would suffer.

It was finally decided to pitch tents in all the big parks of the city and also on the city limits, and there as many of the strangers as possible were to be sheltered and to recieve food and medical treatment. All the hotels, and other big buildings in this city could not recieve one fifth of them. First attention naturally was given to the survivors of the flood; mayor thorn of Francis Atlanta sent word to every borough of poverty bay city that all persons no matter who they were rich or poor, sick or well should be sent to Francis Atlanta as soon as possible, and the Mayor of Angelinia Angeles, Dorothy gale and such other places even though affected by the southern floods, agreed to recieved refugees who could come down to them also. They would be well provided for, they said. The urgency of their message for the depopulation of these cities visited by the flood, they explained, was that until sanitation could be restored in the wrecked cities and towns every body possible should be sent away.

It was estimated that nearly two million of the unfortunate survivors were sent to Francis Atlanta on Tuesday, from Poverty gale, Columbia, Jerse and other places in response to mayor thorn's request. Every building in the city of Francis Atlanta, a city of five hundred thousand people at all habitable was opened and all the seriously ill comfortably housed; and properly treated, the owners of the tenants getting doctors for these unfortunates. All others were made as com fortable as possible, but it was not only food and clothing that these refugees wanted for only relief nearly all of them sought could not be furnished.

They were all grieving for lost ones left behind, fathers, mothers, sisters eyes and children and their sorrows were sympathized by the people of Francis Atlanta so much that afterwards it was known as the city of "Sorrow" nearly every one who came to the city afterwards it was known as the city of " Sorrow" nearly every one who came to the city had some relative or friend missing, but few of them were certain whether they were dead or living. All however were sure they were dead. Penrod and his friends in this city passed through thousands of groups of men who were bare headed and bare foot, with sunken cheeks and hollow eyes, and men other groups the people of the city offering them their homes and sharing with their grief, but what touched the children most was the sights of crowds of women and children with tattered clothing and bruised arms and faces, and more infants and small children with bare feet bruised and [illegible] were among the crowds they seen on the streets of Francis Atlanta, and of the people of the city, doing all that was possible to get them to come in and be taken care of. The women of wealth and refinement with hatless heads, and gowns of rich beautiful satin[illegible] form into shreds, were among the refugees including even priests, nuns and other religious persons all in rags and looking with horror in their faces. At times a man and his wife would pass Penrod and his companions, and sometimes with one or two children and be seen together, but to them such sights were not as often for nearly all who went to Francis Atlanta city had suffered the loss of one or more of their loved ones.

This also caused considerable excitement among the population of the city. They themselves though the refugees then did not, knew the cause of the disaster, and they therefore denounced the enemy as not human, not fighting the war fair, that the Glendelinians to wipe out christiandom were using floods fires and like disaster, and that they did not see why the Glendelinian armies should recieve quarter at all, unless it should be at the point of the sword.

But with all this world of suffering and sorrow there was a marvelous as well as an unusual amount of heroism shown. A week or so before all of these people in happy homes and their families were around them, at this day they, all were homeless, without a cent, and with nothing to look forward to. Yet there was not the slightest sign of whispering or complaining, not even against the enemy who had caused them all this. They were to be seen walking about the streets as if in a trance, and they accepted the kind assistance offered them with heart felt thanks, and apparently greatly relieved at being away from the scenes of sorrow and woe at home. And they were all made to feel at or as if Francis Atlanta were their own beloved city, that they were as welcome as the most beloved of friends, as if they were beloved relatives of the people of the city and that ever everything and every sacrifice in the power of the people in the city of Francis Atlanta would be done for their comfort and welfare and yet they seemed not to understand half what was said to them.

Francis Heller a member of the committee sent from Francis Atlanta to take care of one of the relief stations at Prairie City reported to the Mayor of Francis Atlanta Wednesday as follows(Providing he did not exaggerate in this report which seemed unusually horrible in detail for even such a flood)------

" To the Mayor:

Sir:

On arriving at Quimbo this morning, I was shocked in being informed by the various relief parties I encountered that the largest number of bodies of dead persons ever heard of was found along the coast of Calverinia at various points and also found in the towns of Weid, Bergin, Belivel, Antchutzer, and three others, and that the identification of all these bodies before burial proved they came not from the wrecked cities of Iverso El Verso and others but from Abbiemn itself which proves that the said was virtually wiped out. Fifty six thousand were buried, paste many and to day 200,000 Glendelinian prisoners under guard and also by citizens within less than ten miles extending opposite this place and toward Virginia Corbin City. It is yet ten miles further from Prairie Town to Virginia Corbin city and the bodies from the same city are thicker there as are now them where they have been buried, and one of the burial parties told me that they found the body of the Mayor of the city of Abbiemn. Others inspecting in opposite directions reported dead bodies as thick as enormous log for twenty miles and that only few of these came from other cities or towns, that of these were from Abbiemn.

From all these bodies I'm convinced that all these residents have lost their lives--and rumors came that not a habitable building is left in that big city. It is probable that something unusually big in the disaster has happened there and investigators are being sent to find the details if possible. The city of Virginia Corbin had been wrecked by the flood, the people there have lost all and they are too busy disposing of the dead to look after personal matters and all their homes are ruined. Those who have anything left are giving it to the others and yet there is real suffering there in the population of this town fortunately the loss of life was small. They also took the dead from Abbiemn fr found in their cars wrecked from e and streets left there by the flood waters. I myself have given away all the bread and food I brought for our car of to six hungry children. Large numbers of hom helpless women and children were landed here from Iverso this afternoon and no place to go, not a bite to eat, but with the horrid tales on their lips. To morrow others are expected from the same place. At this point every ten feet along the wreck body lined stretch of flood horror tells of acts of Glendelinian vandalism, not a trunk, valise or tool chest which has not been ransacked. We buried many persons men and women and even children who came down here La Polam also. The flood must have drowned millions of people. Yet no reports are reliable as all communications are destroyed. The main thing we want to find out is what happened to the big city of Abbiemn.

Francis Heller, comittee leader..."""

The Abbiemnian Government so far as it was able, in its efforts to take care of the refugees of the 1 other big disasters furnished only several thousand tents for the camps at Prairie Atlanta which was under the supervision of the Abbiemnian National marine hospital authorities.

To tell the truth the authorities of the Abbiemnian government being dumbfounded over the news of this new disaster, and having all it can do to take care of the victims of the floods and other disaster sorros in the south, and there being millions to be taken care of too, did not hardly believe that the disaster in the central part of Calverinia was really true. Therefore general Mic Hollester Turner was sent first to Francis Atlanta by the War department to investigate the conditions prevailed among the refugees there and also to see if the flood horrors were really true and he made the following official report June the 19th.-

" Francis Atlanta, June the Nineteenth, 1913.

Adjut (djutant general)

Angelinia Washington------ Arrived at Francis Atlanta city at eight P.M. having got there by means of a motor boat. The statements about this new disaster is true sir and it is impossible for any one to properly describe the conditions existing among the regees who have flocked to this city. The flood began at about twelve oclock noon of the 18th and continued with great rises in the water until after midnight and Francis Atlanta was not greatly affected as were other places. The city of Poverty Flat was almost entirely [illegible] inundated, the height of the water being about fourty to fifty feet. The fury of the eddies of the torrent was like a whirlpool and with few exceptions every building in the city is ruined, and thousands are entirely destroyed.

Near Francis Atlanta all the Abbiemnian government property, fortifications except the long range rapid fire battery are practically destroyed by the force of the flood waters. All the barracks of these fortifications have been swept away. Battery Second Artillery, Abbiemnia National Guard lost two hundred men. The officers and their families were swept away, and their bodies have not been recovered. All the members of the 7[illegible]th military hospital corps were lost, and their names will be sent to as soon as possible. Loss of life among these soldiers will probably be more than 2,678 but their bodies are not found. All bridges are entirely gone, waterworks destroyed and all the telegraphe wires and poles have also been swept away.

Colonel Robert Castle was with me in the city and is making every effort possible to get telegrams through. The city is under the control of the committee of citizens and everything is perfectly quiet and the refugees are being cared for. Every article of equipment of property pertaining to battery M was lost. Not a record of any kind is left. The men saved have not even the clothing on their backs and new suits had to be given them at Francis Atlanta. Nearly all are without shoes on hand therefore all the clothing necessary had been pe purchased and temporary arrangements made for food and shelter.

There are probably five million citizens who are homeless and who came from far away towns that have been wrecked and who are absolutely destitute who are being clothed and sheltered and fed in this city and are being well cared for by the citizens of the city. have ordered 2,000,000 rations and tents for only one million people from Poverty Flat and Polama. Have wired Commissary General to ship three million rations by express and yet he says they cannot be forth coming right away as the people south are badly off, and that the authorities do not know which way to turn? Lieutenant General Glendelinia will make his way back to Angelinia Washington with a large number of refugees and actual photographs to prove this is true, and telegrams will be sent to other places.

MIC HOLLESTER TURNER....."""

Captain Charles Aldo De Febuer, Abbiemnian Corps of Engineers when seen after he had completed a tour of the government works around Francis Atlanta made the following statement to the authorities of Abbiemnia:

" The force of the flood waters have caused the river jetties in this location to become either displaced or leveled but they are not seriously breached and it is fortunate or otherwise the river at this point would have burst its own torrents upon the city of Francis Atlanta also. The River channel is as good as before, perhaps better, despite the loss of much water in the north.

Fort St John suffered the loss of its fifteen-pounder implacements, but the concrete walls are all right, though water still so surrounds the barracks. Battery for twenty quarters are all right and unmounted and also in good shape. Barracks of Fort Caldwell Fort Caldwell has been moved many about six hundred feet by the pressure of the water but they are not damaged. At Fort Angelic the battery for twenty long range guns and eighty twelve inch mortars are badly wrecked; and magazines have fallen in. The motors are swept out of the fort and found a mile from the battery. All of the sand parapet has been swept away. The battery for eighteen twelve inch guns also is badly wrecked, for all the gun platforms are swept away and the guns found a mile and a half to the rear of the battery two of them near the shore of the river. The battery for ten seventeen inch rapid fire guns swept away, and guns found near outskirts of city.

Fort Aldo battery for three hundred fifteen pounder guns, concrete intact, but gunswept away. One line of barracks twenty two of them in number have been moved last by pressure of flood waters about one thousand feet on the line or from the line of their foundations but not damaged."

Under the engineer corps are these fortifications built at an enormous expense, also the harbor improvements of Francis Atlanta upon which more than $ 20,000,000 had been expended and these were ruined by the flood..

"I fear Francis Atlanta will suffer a like fate some day, just like poverty Row and Abbieann which are destroyed beyond their ability to even recover" is the manner in which general Mic-Hollester Turner concluded his report, made June the 15th 19th to the war Department at Angelinia Agathia. He declared that mostly all the expensive Government works at Francis Atlanta were wrecked so that any amount of repair was practically impossible. Fortunately during this flood Francis Atlanta city was on considerably high ground so that only about five feet of water was in her lowest sections and a foot in the higher streets so that only basements and lower stores were damaged.

But this gloomy prophecy for the future of the city of Francis Atlanta was also reflected to Governer Turner of Calverinia state and Provinces by the state military treasurer Mandent Jordan who spent four days in poverty Row and other ruined places to invest investigate on the situation for the authorities to see if the truth was told about the devastation. His statement claimed that just now Abbieann city could not be approached, and that more than seventy five per cent of the other cities were desolate and gives little hope for rebuilding while an unknown number of towns in Central Calverinia were swept away. Colonel Jordan who acted as aid to adjutant General Miller, Calverinia National Guard during the inquiry, said in his report;

" The situation at Poverty Row, and also Capulama and other places where I was began the worst of all descriptions cannot be even exaggerated. I am convinced that all the wrecked towns and cities are practically wrecked for all time to come. Fully seventy five per cent of all these cities even their best business districts are irreparably wrecked, and the same per cent of damage is found in the resident districts and all the wreckage is beyond repair. Most of the houses of ar wonder construction has been entirely swept away, and in the river Great river ships are surrounded by the jams of wreckage in the river waters. The great ware houses along the very water front of Francis Atlanta itself are smashed in a one side unroofed and gutted throughout its length their contents either piled in heaps on the wharves or along the streets and this is the only damage in this city except that thousands of small craft and sail boats of which no one knows where they came from have jammed themselves half into the buildings, where they were landed or brought down by the onrushing flood torrent, left by the receding waters. Houses at this point mostly wooden are packed and jammed in great confusing masses in all of the streets.

Great piles of dead animals, rotting vegetation, household furniture and fragments of houses themselves not belonging to Francis Atlanta are piled in confused heaps right in the outskirt streets of the city. Along the river front a few human bodies were seen floating around while intermingled with them were the carcasses of horses, chickens and dogs and rotting vegetable matter, and when they were fished in their identification showed that they came from the town or city of Vignon which was badly swept.

At the lower portions of the city of Francis Atlanta where are located the big wholesale houses and stores the situation was even worse. Immense stores of fresh vegetation had been invaded by the incoming waters and were now being turned into huge piles of most befouling or odors absolutely sickening in its intensity and most dangerous dangerous to health in its effects worse than the foulest stench that ever rose from any cesspool. The flood waters which had entered the lower streets of this big city a depth of five to six feet played at will with everything, seaming in doors of stores depositing a number of human bodies from other towns where they played, and then receding leaving the wreckage of other places also in the city to tell its own tale of more the work had been done. Therefore as a result these great warehouses of the city were tombs wherein were to be found the dead bodies of a few human beings and core carcasses, also defying the efforts of relief parties.

In the piles of debris brought down into the outskirts of Francis Atlanta by the flood and scattered in some instances throughout the very residence portion of the city were to be found masses of wreckage believed to have belonged to North Vignon or Slightis Junction, and in these great piles were found about five thousand bodies of National soldiers, and house hold furniture of every description the like of which was Never owned by any citizen or company in Francis Atlanta and which came principally from Poverty Row and other places.....

Handsome pictures were seen lying along side ice cream freezers belonging to La Paloma City but now in Francis Atlanta while in the northeastern suburbs of the city great masses of debris were found that made it look as if Francis Atlanta was the worse victim of all by the flood. The waters of the floods sweeping many scores of thousands of houses away from other places whirled them around in its grasp or carried them along like log jams and reaching Francis Atlanta piled their shattered frames high in the most confusing masses and dumped their contents on top and in the masses of conglomeration of wreckage making that portion of Francis Atlanta look like Galveston after the hurricane of 19((1900 September the 8th. And yet no building in that city was really wrecked by the flood only the contents of stores being injured. No doubt while being carried along by the flood many men and women and children were thrown around like so many logs of wood, but few of them were left behind by the flood to rot in the withering sun but were carried away into the river or to sea. Therefore I believe that even with the best exertions of all the men citizens of Francis Atlanta it will require many weeks to secure some semblance of physical order in the city, and with all of these refugees now to be taken care of, it is doubtful if even then if all the debris brought to the city by the flood will be disposed of. In the outskirts of Francis Atlanta never such such an immense wreck in my life and the people of the city can thank God it is not of their own buildings. From the river front to the extreme north and east of the city, the flood ware brought death and destruction in its wake and deposited most of it at our own city. Of the cities hard hit there is hardly a family whose hol household is not short of a member or more and in many instances entire families have been washed away or killed. Thousands who had escaped from the flood did so only to become victims of a far worse death by being crushed in falling buildings.

Down in the business portion of the city of Vignon which I inspected the very foundations of great buildings have given way carrying towering structures to their absolute ruin, and these big ruins falling across the main main streets formed immense barricades on which gathered all the floating debris but not a single human body has been found. But though hardly a human body was recovered in any of these places as the flood made such a clean sweept yet some of the conservative men place the loss of human beings in all total at not less than four million seven hundred thousand and possibly 10,000,000, while others say it will not exceed 5,000,000. I'm on my way to Abbieann to try and get in touch of Abbieann city and see if it is true what it is said happened there."

Chief General William Gunloader one of the main heads of the Gemini Abbieannian Spy and Advisor Bureau at Angelinia Agathia, being asked his opinion of the idea of abandoning the resistance against the powerful wicked Glandelinian hordes, replied as follows:!!!!!!

GEMINI SPY AND ADVISOR BUREAU. ABBIEANNIA.
ANGELINIA AGATHIA.
JUNE THE 19th.1((1915.....

" I should not think it wise for any means for the Abbieannian Government to allow the nation of Abbieannia to abandon the resistance against the Glandelinian rebellion. In the say the war is raging now it would be fatal to both the cause and the population, and besides would be like gt peter denying our Lord three times before the Cock crowed.... and crowed.

It is true that the Glandelinian hordes are like the worse of savages, and have caused disasters in this war that is hard for even the very nations of the world to believe. And which makes these nations think their war correspondents and news paper men are all crazy or something, but such disasters can be infrequent if the nation will have things looked into with more care. Within the last three hundred years no flood of disasters severity had ever affected any of our countries of natural occurance. There are many points on both the Mic-Hollester Gun and Erminie Gun and also the Aronburgs and Burke's Gun and points also in on both the Mic-Whirthian and Calverinian sea coasts some of them occupied by many big cities more immense than the size of Abbieann, that could be equally exposed to the force of flood waters should the enemy burst down a levee or dike and exposed also to dangers of great fires should a hurricane of forest fires started by the enemy move in their direction. But it would not be advisable for the nation to abandon the war in so just a cause merely because there is a remote probability that at some future time the enemy may again produce a flood which may be the cause of great great loss of porperty.

We have just passed through the first year of a bloody war that for sustained high first degree battles of terrible violence and of disasters and fire has had no parallel since the world ever came into existence. Records of ornermous battles, great explosions, forest fires, floods, the burning of cities, and the destruction of whole armies and unaccountable loss of life and other war phenomena that have been known in this conflict had broke all records beyond incapable knowledge and has caused all the nations of the world whether christian or pagan to look on in surprise and unspeakable horror.

Yet it would seem that rather than abandon the war means should be adopted at Angelinia Agathia and other similarly high class cities where the Abbieannian Authorities can do things to erect more ornermous armies, and show Glandelinia that there will come a reckoning that she does not expect. Rigid military regulations should allow no other duties abolized but for the crushing of Glandelinian armies, and that all towns that are by the rivers and sea coast for the safty of the people should be abandoned for the time being until the war stays sent out of Calverinia and goes south.

But all the people of Abbieannia should take heart nevertheless as the chances are that not once in a thousand years would she ever be so terribly stricken again by floods of such character if her government would make all the dikes and levees and River and lake dams impregnable to destruction and prevent further loss of life and property by all future floods which ever created by war or natural convulsions.."

General
GENERAL WILLIAM SCHLOMER
CHIEF OFFICER AND SUPREME PEACE OF ABYSSANIA CHAIRMAN WAR BUREAU.

Nevertheless the courage of the High members of the Abbiesannian chief Tribunals and other Government royal buildings and the like, not only at Angelinia Agathia but other capitols under the distressing conditions the Abbiesannian nation was feeling was shown naturally by the utterances of Duke De Goe one of the highest Lords in Angelinia Agathia City, and who was supr. superintendent of the Abbiesannian war department. Duke De Goe was asked on the Sunday following the flood disaster, and while the earthquakes were also investigating the flood horrors down south, and also the forest fires then raging, for an opinion as to the future of Abbiesannia in the war and its outcome.

"I think" he said" That what Emperor Hanson and his brother Robert Vivian have done to unleye armies at Phelantonburg, even though he was not actually successful in the battle had has been wonderful and shows the enemy is no near winning the war than when he started. But for these big floods disasters, just past, including these two big ones now raging, and the forest fire and other disasters it will take the nation ten years before it can ascertain the actual commercial loss alone including other losses. As we are going to straighten out everything. We have at Angelinia Agathia inthe mobolization camps a new army of three hundred million men which will be on the new within thirty days or as soon as the recession of the floods down there will permit, and with that, and the armies also mobolized at Dorothy gale city we can push on the war like a successful rich man resuming business, and handle the Glandelinian armies like they never expect to be handled yet. We are going to stay here ourselves and work it out. The flood horrors will be avenged.

I think that within thirty days at least the war will be carried on in greater measure against the enemy for the excitement caused by the flood is bringing immense mobs to storm recruiting and draft board stations because they are not put into the army quick enough and therefore I'm going to stand up for Abbiesannia. I say let the men in the armies, no matter what defects they might have as long as they can and are willing to fight. And also if it cost me my last cent, I will stand up for Abbiesannia. I'm going to take command of an army soon myself. With our armies mobolizating at Dorothy Gale and Angelinia C Agathia Cities we shall put forth from three hundred to five hundred million men at work, in fighting the enemy, while we are waiting for too many railroads to restore bridges and so on on the roads. We shall bring armies to various points needed by boats and barges and conveyances of every kind and in this way we shall not only carry on the war with greater effort, but we shall also make it a loss to have all home staying citizens become soldiers of the home guards, and if rebels attempt any mischief anywhere near levees and the like they are to give them no quarter under any conditions.

In all matters this nation however holds the advantage over every other nation in the world especially for mobolizating immense armies, and will be able to raise many hundreds of millions more if needed and in forming these millions already at hand have to continue the war through the southern section we must in our efforts do it as same lines employed by the Glandelinian rebels, the way they war with us we'll war with them, and it is bad indeed to my idea that we have to give the Glandelinian soldiers any quarter at all, when it is well known the horrors the Glandelinian armies have committed in the past massacres of children in ways not fit to be pictured. Though having suffered ermormous loss in the battle of Phelantonburg the armies under the Emperors are all right. They are still in the same spot, and Stanley is afraid to advance or retreat. The ever alert christian generals in charge of the divisions under the Emperor have already taken the conditions in hand. The full ermormity of the army still remains reciforcements have arrived, and the broken regiments divisions and other commands with new reinforcements also are intact, and because of these conditions the restoration of the battle smitten army will be more rapid than may be thought, and the advance of the christian armies will be so great and for the courage and fortitude and foresight to look beyond the unhappy events of to day, as victorious and a wicked foe like Glandelinia on her knees begging for mercy. And lucky indeed if one does reciere mercy.

One of the two acounsed officers of Emperor Hanson Vivians command and who was in his earlier days a well known Police of Chief Of Francis Atlanta city arrived at the latter on Thursday and he told all how the battle had come out.

He was asked to make an inspection of the grain elevators of that city for he had also been a builder of them and he therefore made the necessary inspection of the grain elevators and their contents, and then wrote in his reports that not even ten per cent of these elevators had been damaged that the floods around the city had not risen high enough being prevented from doing so by the immense mountains of debris deposited around the northern part of the city. All the docks were entirely intact and the main grain elevator known as the River front Grain Elevator No One was still ready and in the condition to deliver grain to any ships that would be able to move as soon as the conditions of war and shipping permitted it. The wheat in Elevator Elevator Number one had already been loaded into a line of vessels but because of the debris floating in the river these ships were not able to move northward. As soon as the elevator had been emptied of its grain the wheat from Elevator No Five was transferred to it and loaded into other ships. Every little of the wheat in any of the elevators had been injured, not even the conveyers were touched. The city aurthorities had by soon put a large force of men to work clearing up each of the wharves hoping the companies would be ready for resumaniton of business all along the line within eighteen days.

A very serious conflict of aurthority due to some kind of a misunderstandingcaused by the enemy in special brought on a temporary disorganization of the policing of the city of Poverty Row on the three days following the disaster. When general Frankor, adjutant general of the Calverine National Guard arived at Poverty Row city on a Monday morning with about 10,000 militia from Francis Atlanta, he at once conferred with the Chief of police as to the plans of guarding property, protecting the lives of citizens and preserving law and order. An order was then issued by the Chief of Police to the effect that soldiers and citizens e e should arrest all persons who were strangers in the city, and carrying arms, unless they showed a written order of some kind signed by the Chief of police or the Mayor of the city, giving them permission to go armed.

The chief sheriff had meantime , appointed and sworn in one thousand one hundred and sixty three deputy sheriffs. These deputies were supplied with a ribboned badge of aurthority but were not given any written or printed commission untill the day later. Acting under the order issued by the Chief of police, Major Sid Reid of Poverty Row who was appointed as aide to general Frankor issued an order to the militia to arrest all strange persons carrying arms without the property aurthority. Among these might be Glandelinians in disguise.

At the time of the order, some one was shot to death by a Glandelinian prisoner who escaped with many others and who had disguised themselves also as deputy sheriff sheriffs. The result was that about two hundred and sixty citizens wearing deputy sheriff badges were taken into custody by the soldiers and taken to police head quarters. The soldiers had no way of knowing by what aurthority these men were acting with these badges since Glandelinian prisoners who escaped were these as disguise and therefore teling they were Glandelinians in disguise, would listen to no excuses.

General Frankor and the Chief sheriff hearing of the wholesale arrests, and knowing the cause of it, called at the Police headquarters and consented with the Chief. The latter referred General Frankie to the mayor at which place the general and the sheriff held a conference and soon arived at an understanding, and an agreement was decided upon to the effect that all persons deputized as deputy sheriffs and all persons appointed as special officers who are permitted to carry arms and pass in and out the patrol lines should carry their city identification cards with them so that in case they were apprehended by a soldier they could prove they were not escaped rebels.

General Frankie suggested that the deputy sheriffs and special police--and the general police for that purp matter guard the city during the day time, and that the militia should take charge of the city at night.

General Frankie was acting for and by aurthority by Mayor Walter John Antonio, and promptly declared he was there to work in harmony with the city and countyaurthorities and that there must be no conflict between such other. When general Frankie and the chief sheriff called upon the mayor the mayor said that he knewthat the general, the chief of police and the sheriff would get together they could take care of the police work and in the future prevent the escape of more Glandelinian prisoners forced to work in the city at clearing away the debris.

It was also known that people were coming to Poverty Row by the score in the hope of finding lost ones and relatives, and that yet the city with its ruins had enaughto do to watch the Glandelinian prisoners without being burdened with the care of so many outsiders. All deputy sheriffs wearing the badge issued by the sheriff carried arms and made arrests of escaping Glandelinian prisoners and were not interfered with in any way by the military guards.

On June the 24th, it was said that one long trainload after another of provisions, clothing, disinfectants, and medicines were lined up at Pandora City, sixty five miles north east of Francis t Atlanta, all sent to the suffering survivors of the flood stricken cities and towns in the northwest. In Francis At Lanta alone were more than three millions of refugees, all from the cities of La polama, Poverty Row, Vignon, El verso, Plaste and other places. And yet far from this city were many hundreds of thousands of people, friends of the dead and living, waiting desperately or impatiently for news of the missing ones,,, and also an opportunity to help, and these were those who had either trained in or a came to these stricken towns but only a meager ammount of relief had at that time reached these places, small railway communications were still cut off .

Only one telegraph wire had been put up within the three days succeeding the passing of the flood, and therefore only partial communication restored to let the natives of the outside world know that conditions there were far more horrible and terrible than was at first supposed. That also was not all at that. It was not that which was needed it was a more complete connection with the mainland by means of railroads and the river, which of these were not in the possession of the enemy and cut off by him was now also severed by the devastating flood. As the army had used most of the boats, few of these could be pressed into service to carry relief to the suffering, or the suffering to better shelter and safty, and though boats were obtain they were few and very small, and although working diligently night and day the service was inadequate in the extreme. There was only one fortunate thing in this disaster, there were no ghouls to rob the dead, there were no Glandelinians to interfere with the rescue work as in the such disasters, and there were quite a number of Glandelinian prisoners who were of a human heart then supposed, and these did their work with a willing heart, calling them of their comrades who had been responsible for this disaster as the biggest fools in existance existance.

All the refugee people not able to reach Pandora or Francis Atlanta were suffering suffering immensely because of the tremendous heat of the weather, with no shelter, the sick and many of the wounded were dying, from a pestilence that was starting, and for want of medicine and care, the well growning extremely desperate, and in many cases gradually losing their reason.

Even though there were many thousands who could not be provided for immediately because they could not recieve the necessary articles or that they could not be brought in, there were at least a few hundreds who were being supplied as far as possible. At those supplies which had arrived had been of great assistance but nevertheless they were far from ample to provide for even the smallest percentage of the sufferers, estimated many millions probably thirty to fourty. even the rich were desperately hungry and also many were ill with a mysterious and dangerous malady.

An effort had been made on the part of the authorities to provide for those who needed aid most, but even this was found to be most difficult work, as there were so many in sad and forlorn co conditions. And also for fear of ghouls and other Glandelinian rascals a rigid system of issueing supplies was quickly being established in all the flood stricken places, and the regular soldiefs and a number of citizens were being sworn in as policemen. These were to attend to the issueing of rationswhich was to be accomplished as soon as the boats arrived.

Every effort was put forth to reach the dying first, and to check the pestilence but stutting but all sorts of obstacles were encountered, because many of them were so badly maimedand wounded and sick of disease that they were not able to apply to the relief stations and the latter were so burdened by the a direct applications of so many that a day that they were unable to either send out messengers or take care of them all.

The situation was growing worse every minute, everything possible to be obtained was needed for man and beast, and for those ill of disease---disinfectents, proper foods hay grain, and especially water and ice. Scores of more people had died that one day alone as a result of inattention, and many thousands more were on the verge of dissolution for at best indeed it was to be many a day before a single train could be even run toard the ruined flood swelt towns and the only hope was the arival of new boats to transport the goods, and wagons also were badly needed.

The relief comittettes held a meeting and decided that more armed men were the needed to assist in burying the dead of those who died from disease and exposure, to make the glandelinian prisoners work faster in the toil of clearing the wreckage, and arrangements were being made to fill this demand. There were plenty of volunteers for this work, but not enough of ammunition and fire arms and the Abbiennian armies could not hardly supply a soldier because so many were needed to fight the foe. to pay for work at first was the proposition but that was impossible just now, and it was decided go ahead, getting as many men as possible to work as guards to impress the glandelinian prisoners into service and issueing orders for rations only to those of the prisoners who worked or to the refugees.

Word was recieved that refugees who could find no further room in Francis Atlanta city would be carried from the ruined cities and towns to Pandora free of charge, and therefore an effort was made to induce all who were able to leave to go because the danger of a dread pestilence was frightfully apparent.

There were great numbers indeed who were very willing to leave and go elsewhere if they had the chance, and therefore each out going boat that could be secured after having unloaded its provisions was filled with people but only women and children. The safty of the survivors of the flood was the first and greatest consideration and the action of the railroads which could run and which offered to carry women and children refugees free of charge greatly relieved the situation.

The workers and other citizens themselves had their hands full in any event, and the nurses and physicians also because there were so few so many needed in the south to take care of the flood and forest fire victims there, and also who were now work among the army and elsewhere. And even neglect even though which could not be avoided often would result in the death of many.....

It was estimated that for one small town alone not counting the cities and other places wrecked by the flood, say a town of twenty to thirty thousand inhabitants it would be that $12,000,000 would be needed for the relief work, and where this was coming from unless everything also was needed for the flood stricken south, and other war disasters just past, was a mystery and a great and diffucult difficult problem.

The banks of Poverty Row, that is those which survived the flood subscribed, $ 10,000, a small ammount to say for banks, but that was all the flood even left these. To speak frankly for this story only God himself could understand the awful ruin of the calamity. The personal losses of all the surviving citizens of this city, as well as all other towns and cities had been so large that not one was able to subscribe anything. The confiscation of all food stuffs held by wholesale gerce grocers who also had perished in the flood was decided upon early in the day by the relief committee for they claimed that starvation would surely ensue unless the supply was del dealt out with great care. But this was found not necessary as all food stuffs no matter where it was found left by the flood was entirely spoiled and rotting. All kinds of badly needed oils such as kerosene oil was gone, and the gas works and the eletric lights were destroyed as well as all eletric and other aires. The c Committee asked for a ship load of kerosine oil, a ship load of drinking water, and many tons of disinfectants, such as lime and formaldehyde for immediate use, and money and food stuff next, but this as yet could not be forth coming. Not a single tallow candle could be bought for gold or light of any kind procured. No m baker was alive to make bread, and milk was remembered as a past luxury only. Indeed Lisbon Spain, or Messinia Sicily never suffered like these Calverinian cities did, in spite of the earthquake and tidale wave at those places.

For all surviving a towns of central and western Calverinia, what was there to do with? Everything was gone in the way of ovens, and utensils, and it was absolutely necessary to let the outside world kne know the true state of things, and what sort of an enemy Abbiennia was arti striving to bring down to submission in this grave war. These cities like Poverty Row, La Polluma, Riverse, Vignon, San Antonio, Riviase, and Mandro were unable to help themselves.

The worse of it was not only this. In fact(for this story at least) nearly the whole of the noble Province of Calverinia, and half of Angelinia state was prostrate not only by this latest disaster but by the other one in the south, the hundred forest fires raging, and by the shocks and after effects left by the past disasters at Lake Sicilia, and along the Mississirthian Run. The whole Abbiennina country on account of these disasters was paralyzed at the sense of the magnitude of these great disasters, which occured so often and in such time that people hardly got over from the effects of the first disaster and now was for the time being powerless to do anything.

The entire world was more than ever thrilled with horror and alarm. It being absolutely felt that the worse of either of these disasters had ever been made known and it was believed by the nations that the Abbiennians kept out a good deal of the truth as the disasters and their extent.

Still more so there were in the southern disaster many of whom lived in the north, were their cities had been destroyed, and for the little town of La Polluma alone thirty five thousand people had to be fed and clothed for many weeks, and many thousands supplied with household goods as well. But this was only for La Polluma. The remaining population of poverty Row was one million, and these too needed care and provisions and many of them were ill and much money and laborers were needed to make what remained of their residences even fit to live in. During the first week after the flood disaster it was still almost beyond probability to make any estimate of the amount of money necessary to even temporarily relieve the suffering of the unfortunate people of the city of Vignon alone. A million million were rendered homeless hors, all the houses were injured beyond repair and thousands swept away even all the bodies of the drowned were never to be recovered. But it seemed next to Abbiennn, Poverty Row was the next largest and hardest hit by the disaster.

A week after the recession of the flood in Poverty Row occured a scene, that was a rare act of charity though on the contrary it was peculiarly sad. A little girl who had expected some day to go north into fair Abbiennia among the beautiful scenery of the country there was deprived of everything on earth except the few clothing on her back, father mother sister brother, other relatives, home and all. She was left destitute. Her God father too was a sufferer. He lost much of his possession in the flood horrors of the south, also being an adventurer of it, but he stepped bravely forward and took the little girl to his home and adopted her.

On this first week, poverty Row alone began, though other towns did not, to emerge from the shadow of death into which she had been plunged for nearly twenty days, and on that seventh day for the first time actual progress was made toard pressing the Glandelinian prisoners in the work of clearing up the city. The bodies of those killed or drowned in the flood were not found even amid ruins and that proved they were all swept away into the sea. A large number of dead rats were found however when the debris was being removed from the wrecked buildings but there were no human corpses to be see. save those occassionally cast up by the waters of the river itself. As far as could be observed at least, the city had been cleared of, its dead by the force of the great flood.

About a thousand bodies however were taken from the river, but these did not belong to Poverty Row city, but came from La Poloma, but these were burned, thrown into the water, or carted to quick sand sli slough s and thrown in, buried, cremated, hurled into quick lime anything to get them quickly out of sight for the chief danger of pesti ence was threatening especially because of the large number of unburied cattle and animals lying all over the district outside the city whose decomposing carcasses pol uted the air to an unbearable extent. One great trouble however had been the inability to secure more prisoners, or to organize gangs of men to guard these prisoners for the purpose of clearing the the streets as there were so few male survivors as most of the men of all these flooded cities were in the army, and the old remained behind. As a means of enlightment the business manager of the Poverty Row News was asked to send out a statement to the world Associated press for circulation throughout the globe, and he accordingly dispatched the following to the General Manager of the Asso Associated press at the Headquarters in Angelinia Agathia....--

QJUNE THE 23TH. 1913.....
FRANCIS DE ZENIO GENERAL MANAGER OF THE ASSOCIATED PRESS OF ANGELINIA AGATHIA.
NEWS FROM POVERTY ROW CITY AND OUTSIDE DISTRICTS.

A grand summary of the conditions prevailing at poverty Row is more than any one can ever estimate. For this city alone the damage to property is anywhere between fifty and sixty million dollars. The loss of life in unestimated as the bodies are never to be recovered though we have disposed of bodies not belonging to the city. Because of the bodies being entirely swept away no no list can be made. Those picked up out of the water or found scattered along the banks of the river and which have been buried on the ground wherever found or disposed of by burning and sticking into bags, which will reach the horrible total of 33,000 corpses but not one of these belonged to Poverty Row and many have been identified but were of Abbieann, and La Polam as well as from other places. My estimate of the loss, in central and western Calverinia chiefly from the disaster at Abbieann city, and including the other cities and the immediate surrounding district is between 4,500,000 and 5,000,000 deaths. I do not make this statement because I want to cause a sensation throughout the world, or neither do I write this because I am frightened or exci excited. As far as I can observe the loss in property in La Poloma, is about $ 15,000,000. In Vignon it is between $"20,000,000 and 4$ $4,000,000. El Paso $ 100,000,000. El verso the same. San Antinio about $ $56,789,999, and at Landre about 98,000,000. The other towns and villages about probably $ [illegible]r $ 43,678,000 The total must be about if I dare say up to [illegible] 468,678,000.

But the whole horrible story can never never, never be told. The very necessities of those millions living are total for not a single person esop escaped property loss. The property in Poverty Row is almost wiped out, fully one half totally swept away by the flood. What our needs are can be computed by the world at large by the statements herewith submitted much better than I can possibly ever summarize them.

To go back five days after the catastrophe and scenes could have been observed in La Poloma city itself that was more horrible indeed than any manuscript of description could ever m make out. Old men women and children, were dying for want of food, all the ruins were on fire, and hundreds went insane from the terrible st a strain to which they had been subk subjected while this city said to say was the victim of a horrible form of vandalism. In his appeal to not only the country f, but the whole state to for aid issued five days after, Mayor Heidi said fully fifteen thousand people had lost their lives during the flood this information being based upon personal inform and that over 28,292 houses were swept entirely away, with all their house hold goods occupants and the remaining homes and business houses, churches, private buildings and childrens and old peoples homes entirely damaged beyond all home of repairing.

The head man of the Algrotic shipping River company of La Poloma city and one of the countrys best reliable shipping manager, and a saintly old man, said the death list might even be greater than that, and he was backed in his opinion by many other surviving conservative men who had no chance to exaggerate the losses, and who felt and knew they were not being exaggerating and that they were justified in letting the country and the world itself know the fullextent of the disaster in order that the necessary relief might be supplied, and also that the world may know fully what kind of a foe to all christian dom Glandelinia was .....

It was the general opinion of every one who witnessed the disaster, and one saw the stricken towns in quest of loved ones that to hide any of the news of the disaster would be criminal. This shipping manager was not a man a person would call a sensationalist and he well knew that the truth what what the whole world and all the people of the Abbieannian nation wanted at that time, and he said-

" If the people of Abbieannia not in the path of these horrors fell so far that the news papers are deceiving them in anything about the magnitude of the calamity he the they can be justified in closing up their pocket books and to refuse to give anything whatever. And if they are told the truth they would surely respond to the almost generiously. There were many people who came when the chances allowed from afar, some not merely out of curiousity but just to find out if the disaster was as great as with the western and central, and southern Calverinia as stated, and they reported to their friends left behind that even the news papers did not tell one third of it. Even when relief did begin to pour in it was remarkable how the surviving women of La Poloma [illegible] courage and went to work with the very men, although [illegible] city plucked up courage and went to work with the very men either guarding prisoners preparing bandages for the injured, aiding the doctors and nurses in procuring medicines for the sick but also went among the few men who were engaged in burying and disposing of the dead found belonging to some other place and cheered them with bright faces and soothing words. They too had suffered most frightfully but they refused to give up hope. Even the so called sight seers who came to the city to find out if the disaster was really as bad as stated, willingly offered their aid in which ever way they were needed, and they were selected as guards and ther too pressed the prisoners in their work, and I aided the soldiers in shooting down the vandals and ghouls and other Glandelinian vampires and harpies.

The women themselves were everywhre, and even surviving children aided in all they could do, and their presence indeed was as rays of sunshine after the black clouds of the big storm. A regular fleet of river and bay steamers and barges sent down from the coast of Bolowania and Byesinkille proper was plying between La Poloma and Poverty Row City, the latter only sixteen miles distant and which had some railway communication reported with all parts of northern Calverinia and other upper states. As the railroad lines about three of them to Poverty Row city had also been repaired trains were sent there as close in numbers as possible but this did not prevent several hundreds, may thousands from dying of starvation and lack of medical aid attendance and other well needed care.....

A LEADING city official of La Poloma City gave the following version of the awful Night of Terror as the unusual regime of Glandelinian thugs and ghouls was called.---- "I have heard of the ghoulish work being committed by the Glandelinians within the ruined cities and towns which were flood swept in the south, but the south is not alone in its misery. La Poloma city itself is suffering in every inconceivable way since the great flood catastrophe. The bursting of the dikes of the Norma Ann river came first this female and worse of all horrible vandalism. Scores of thousands of these reckless Glandelinian spies and harpies flocked to the city by the first boats and rafts that were able land here, and though the few soldiers here and doing what is in their power these harpies are not being checked here in their work of robbery of the helpless survivers, and of the wrecked houses which they for every haul set afire untill the city is in danger of a terrific conflagration.

On the 28th of this month however, Captian Giacome commanding the regulars at the river barracks sent seventeen hundred men of an artillery division there to do guard duty in the streets and in the wrecks of the houses and all were ordered to promptly arrest all these found looting the houses, and they tried to carry out their instructions to the letter but the more they shoot the more there seems to come into the city. Just three hundred Glandelinian ghouls were shot yesterday afternoon and evening, and no mercy is being shown to vandals and other dangerous sneaking rebel ghouls, and if they were notkilled at the first volley----the regulars of the Abbieannian guard and those of the Calverina National Guard ---- saw that the coup-de-grace was administered.

All of these Glandelinian robbers are ghouls, and when executed were found loaded with spoil-jewelery wrenched from the women in the streets, money and watches taken from citizens when they held up, and silverwear and other articles taken from residence and business houses. Not only had these fiends robbed the citizens out in the streets, but when they offered resistance they mutilated them as well, in many instances. And these robbers were resisted resisted by the citizens and fought them instead of turning up their hands they cut off their fingers and ears amputating them in order to secure the jewlery and money and killing their victims by the score. All of the business organizations of the city also furnished guards to assist in patrolling the streets and fully three thousand men are now on duty out these can do no good, as the ghouls have made so many big fires that our fire departments who hve great difficulty to reach the blazes cannot get them under control and they spread so that the city at time seems doomed.

To day the regulars shot four hundred ghouls after they had been tried by court martial martial g having found all of them in possession of large quantities of plunder and guilty of having set many big buildingson fire so that these blazes could be seen many miles away from the city. The vandals when captured begged for mercy but they did not recieve any mercy whatever and they were speedily put out of the way. These Glandelinian spy bandits as a rule obtained transportation to the city by representing themselves as having been engaged to do relief work and to aid in reparing the wrecked buildings and find bodies of the dead if possible. Even shortly aftet the first f four hundred were shot another party of four hundred were shot at many different points seperately. These Glandelinian outlaws were afterwards put out of the way by two and three hundreds it being their habits to travel in big gange and never in small parties. And in every instance the pockets of these wicked glandelinian bandits were found filled with plunder. Special attention was given the wounded sick and dying. All doctors and physicians physicians though there were too few numbers of them to tell the truth were on duty all the time many of them and even Red Cross nurses not having been to bed since the first day of the floods recessin no longer than one hour at a time. victims who were not badly hurt and who had put themselves aside for those suffering and actually requiring the services of the surgeons did their own part to aid, there being many thousands of sick and injured, ther were few in La Paloma who did not bear the marks of wounds and injuries of some sort.

THE experiences and adventures of those who were in the great and dis disasters flood of Centrail Calverinia and who escaped after undergoing the most frightful peri perils and anxiety, makes very good and interesting reading, at that. Those therefor were, who were fortunate to emerge in safty from this most fearful and extensive flo of the war were indeed unusually lucky and can thank God at that, when it can be considered that possibility that possibly in the whole flood districts concluding in horrible loss at Abbieann eight million persons lost their lives, and hundreds of th hundreds of thousands fell victims to the fury of the flood in the territories adjace to the illfated cities and towns.

One of the best heroes and friends of the Vivian girls walter John starring and one of the chief boy scout leaders of the Abbieannian armies, and who had been a long furlough because of his wounds and health being ruined by hardships, and who had been residing at Pandora City had taken a train on June the First the first d of the flood, and therefore he was a witness when two hundred and eighty six passenger on the Aronburgs Limited train which left Pandora early the same day fr lost their lives. Walter starring happened to be one of the passengers on this train, and fortunately together with a few others sought safty on the top of a high hill and sa saved. The train was one of the most famious on the Abbieannia, Pandinia, and Calveria Railroad, and runs the longest track distance of any train on any roads combined, an also was one of the fastest and most reliable trains in the world. The train reache the region of the city of Abbieann about noon and ran plumb into the flood which ha then completely inundating that big city, and washing away so many of the dead residen who had been killed under the wreck of the buildings leveled by the force of the explosions tearing up the levees. Seeing the terrific fury of the dreadful flood, all preparations were made to run the long train on another line known as the Orange St Clare, and therefore the switching was commenced. In the meanwhile Walter noticed the progress of the flood, the devastation of the immense city in the distance, and noticed that also the flood was rising so swiftly that the trai tracks of the other li were being entirely washed away, and then the conductor of the train after allowing it to stand on the tracks for about five minutes, gave the engineer directions to back it toward Pandora.

This was done, the engine puffing like mad, but the nature of the flood being jammed with wreckage, the scene of terrible destruction being done at distant cities and the tremendous number of dead bodies floating past drove many of the passengers into panic, and a rush was made for the exits.

However the flood increased in depth so rapidly, coming in from the distantcity that soon the water had reached a level with the bottom of the seats within the cars, and huge drift wood and wreckage was being piled up against the train. It was then that as many of the passengers as possible, succeeded after desperate efforts in getting out of the train and wading through the flood to a hillside not far off. They managed to reach this including walter starring, but then as they looked back they saw that other passengers were struggling to get at of the cars. But they could not do so, as the wreck drove more driftwood against both sides, the water acting like a whirl pool at this po and soon six of the cars were pushed off the rails and dove out of sight into the deep part of the torrent it with all within. Seen as they continued to watch the flood

for a time the other fivecars cars stood the pressure of the water and some of the passengers were tempted to go back at any risk and save the passengers of the other train. They did so and walter starring followed. They had succeeded in saving about five women, and eight children, helping them to the hill when Starring who glanced glanced in the dire redirection of the city, was horrib horrified to see it completely under water, and also something with the appearance of a green mountain of long extent coming toard him, and it was intermixed with wreckage of all kinds, and many houses were racing with it on top. For a moment he was rooted to the spot with horror, and then he immediately ran or swam for the hill shouting and screaming to the others to swim for their lives, which they did. As they did they saw that the current was becoming stronger and they strove de desperately to get to the safty of the hill before the force of the flood struck. During this last flight however starring had not failed in getting one other woman off the car and to safty, and had grabbed up two little boys, and with one under each arm started desperately wading for the hill, with the high wall of the flood getting nearer every moment. He waded a distance of nearly two hundred yards but always getting nearer to the hill, and barely managed to place his precious burden on safe ground before the main depth of the flood swept past him and thundered in sp h sheeted spray again taguinst and upon the slopes of that hill like a mad ocean in a storm.

It could never be said for sure how many persons might have lost their lives from this ill fated Aronburg Limited train. Three of the passenger cars left before this rush of water were also carried away and had been crowded with people how many no one will ever know. As far as can be dared to say at least one hundred and eighty were drowned there being about one hundred and ninty six on the train altogether. A dozen lines of freight cars steel ones, was between the Aronburgs Limited on adjoining tracks, but even these did not serve in any measure to protect the famious train. One of the coaches was lifted clear out of the water and landed on the other side of the flood on the slope of the hill. One idea of the terrible force of the flood may be gained by the statement that all the wreckage of countless houses swept away from Abbieann city were intermingled a with big pullman cars, locomotive engines from trains and many round houses, and big houses of all sizes swept past the survivors of the train as if they could never go beneath the surface. The noise of the flood in passing here was deafening added by the thundering banging of the wreckage. To walter starring it looked as if the shore of the land had suddenly sunk below sea level and let the waters of the Calverinian ocean upon the city of Abbieann. The boyscout had never in his life observed such a disaster. Trees by hundreds of thousands floated in the sea wide torrent and the water was full of bodies as thick as the wreckage jam also added by carcasses of all kinds of animals.

One little girl passenger who was traveling with her mother from pandoracto Francis Atlanta to see their father who was wounded at the battle of Calsanria and she had come home to recover had a wonderful escape though her mother was drowned. The coach she was in was loaded with passengers and it was swept before the flood like a crazed and dashed to pieces but she alone was caught in the mad swirl and fortunately in a large open space of the flood where there was no jams of wreckage. Almost all of her clothing was torn from her body, but she was providentially thrown by the angry waters clear of the rushing part of the flood into the edge by the hill side, and one of the men and starring rushed down to the waters edge and managed to rescue her in time. The only caf that survived on this train was the view car. Miss Joein a matron of an orphan asylum in Pandora who was on vacation was a passenger on this car, and when the main force of the flood came she started to leave the coach, and then fearing to venture out into the flood amid all the wreckage and floating bodies returned to the inside. Tward evening when the water slightly subsided walter starring and some of his friends rushed down and waded over to the car, amid wreckage and floating bodies, expecting to find Miss Joein and several others in the car dead but the water had not gone up high enough to drown her, and then, and she was alright though greatly frightened. Nevertyeless she displayed a rare forethought in the face of such unusual danger having tied securely around her waist a piece of her clothing on which her name was written in powerful indelible ink. She had fully expected that the flood would continu continue to rise untill she was drowned, and therefore she wisely did this in order that her body if found might be identified.

So only one train was wiped out of the Aronburg Limited a train whose couches singly was worth from the material made a million dollars, or for eleven coaches swept away a value of about eleven million five hundred thousand dollars.. About fifty of the killed or drowned were from Pandora City as the train took passengers from that city after coming in. Walter starring and those who were saved had to spend over fifty nine th hours on that dismal hillside on almost no rations, and therefore the experience for them, and the few they rescued, besides the sight of the horrible flood they witnessed, and the entire covering over of the city of Abbieann and the whole country around as far as they could see was one they will surely remember as one of the most terrible of their whole lives. At this point the wide deep river was entirely drained, untill it had reduced to a level even with the long break of the levee... buteven this did not stop the progress of the tremendous flow of the waters, as the river at this time hhad been a at its highest flood tide for well to say hundreds of years, and it therefore continued untill the flood had spread over the country side for a distance south and west or north rather for five thousa d square miles and east and west about half that distance.....

A mighty good description of the experience of a foriegner in Calverinia at the time and who was ,(what he claimed) a war correspondent for Peru (south America) as accordingly to this story given by his friend who accom anied him, though his friend was not a foriegner but an Abbieannian.(As Abbieanhian language is spanish) and it went as follows;

" At the time of the flood there was some high wind and rain" said he" and that atfirst made me believe the storm caused it, though at first I could not understand why as the rainstorm was of moderate means and not even enough to cause the waters of river to rise half a foot higher than it was at the time of the disaster. so little was thought even of the storm, that myself and my foriegn acquaintance started dr Crosby treat as he wanted to telegraph to his Confederate at Francis Atlanta city news of the war so far as he had heard of it and , went to help him. The watercame so rapidly that we turned and hurried tward the Orangers otel. We had only half a blo to go to reach it, but even in that short time before we could even get within half th distance we had to wade in water waste deep, and both of us could not account for it, as the storm had only lasted half an hour and raining only hard enough so you could it full and yet not enough to flood the streets like a good thunderstorm generally do

" My friend said to me;

" It might be probable that some great storm had raged up north; because you rem we heard one good loud clap of thunder."

" put that noise as we learned later on was because o the explosion that had ripp so much of the levee away and which had wrecked the big city of Abbieann killing two one there under the wreckage.."

" Within a very few minutes" he went onto say" Crowds of women and children and m old men begun to flock to the hotel for refuge. All of them were panic stricken, mi though many of them succeeded in reaching it though wading in water, I saw six women twenty children who were trying desperately to get to the hotel drown not one hundred feet from us. We were marooned in that Hotel for about twenty days with hardly in rations, and once we were in greater peril when one portion of the upper floor of the el caught fire, and we all had to turn fire men and fight it or be driven into the raging flood to perish. I saw much wreckage float by in this city of Lapolama where we were marooned and also bodies. The water rose as high as the fourth story widow of the hotel on the first three days of the flood, but after that it gradually but quickly began to go down till on the twenty first of June all the flood wa er water had disappeared leaving mud and wreckage. It was the worse time ever had nd hope to never have another."

The war correspondentwas the first to cross a portion of the remaining flood fro La Polama City to dry land after the main force and depth of the flood had subsided. He reached Wheatonia town he found a long passenger train derailed with several feet water all around it. While he waited on top of one of the coaches to for the waters go down the bodies of several men women and even children combined floated against and he tr tied them to one end of the car. When the flood had gone from here he ex one of the cars and counted fourteen bodies of women and children in it. He likewis went into the other coatches and saw dead bodies also. At first he thought the bodie belonged to the passengers of the ill fated train, but in looking over the belong belongings of quite a few of them with the help of rescue parties he brought to the spot he found all came from Abbieann city. how these bodies got into the cars seemed him a profound mystery, but the rescuers believed the force of the water pushed them gradually through the windows and other entrances of the cars and disposeted them on or on the flood or under seats, just as they were found.

Even small childrens toys coming from other places were found within these besides, jewelry and other articles showing the freakish work of the flood itself.

Hanson Joyce who was a soldier on furlough and who belonged to Emperor Vivians command, and who was one of the many who passed through the Lake Belicia Horror of fil November suffered such hardships in the city of Vignon for these terrible twenty days and nights that he was convinced that that flood horror at that time, including the simultaneous Whirlwind Flood disaster were only a mere running over of the " Sin in comparison. He was once of the refugees picked up at Heidi Junction ,the flood having carried him all the way down there, where it made a partial junction with the southern disaster therefore combining the two into one for three days. He finally was sent to Emperor Vivians army even though his furlough was not yet up, and he was called before the " Great christian general" who questioned him on the flood in this way.

" Where did the flood start Colonel Joyce?"

" I ca not cannot tell you fully sir, but Vignón was nearly wiped out!"

" Well sir, tell me of your own experience, as my daughters assembled here like to hear the details."

" Well Your Gracious Majesty, it began raining in Vignon early in the morning not very hard, and the storm lasted half an hour" he said. " I thought afterwards ire that the flood was caused by the rain, though I could not comprehend how it g could y done. I went during the storm to visit my mother and father and little sister, and d been with them for about three hours when I heard cries of excitement outside in the treets and the tell tale sound of rushing waters. I ran to the window and looked out. here was crowds of people trying to reach higher buildings, and torrents of water was rushing furiously through the streets, and therefore knowing that the house we lived in as weak being wooden we quickly joined the group. We got to a high building at bout four oclock and by that time there was exactly six feet of water in the streets nd yards of the city. It grew worse and worse and the current swifter, the water getting hier higher and the current stronger, untill it was almost as bad as the inroads of the ocean upon a sea coast town during a cyclone. Finally we saw many houses being aken off its foundations and demolished with crowds of people in them.

I cannot tell you much more in detail sire of what my experience might have been d tward night the big house we were in was also demolished by the flood which tore away all houses within our sight by hundreds. There were many families in the house, which ncluding a large fivestory frame, and of the five hundred people residing there, myself, nd my little sister were the only ones who could get away."

One of the Vivian Girls suddenly looked serious.

" I believe Colonel" said Joice Vivian looking h at him closely" That either you are half erased from your experience or from excitement exaggerating the story a good deal."

" No princesses I am not exaggerating at all. I'll leave the angels in Heaven to witness my story. There were over five hundred people in that house."

" Go on with the details." Said Emperor Vivian.

" Well sire, I managed to find a raft of driftwood or wreckage, and got on it, going with the flood. I had not got far before some wreckage struck me, and my little sister was knocked out of my arms. I tried desperately to save her, she fought hard to swim to the raft, but she could not reach it, and I could not reach her, and I was compelled to remain there helpless and see her drown.

For days and days I was carried on by the flood, sometimes on a large raft, or only a spar, or a telephone pole and again and again I would be thrown from it be by coming in contact with all kinds of timber, parts of houses, logs, cisterns, and many other things which were floating around in the flood. many and many a knock I received on my head and body, when plunged into the water, for wreckage was s lried against me and this continued untill I was black and blue all over. My being an excellent swimmier was what enabled me to continue and endure to the end. The water moved at a terrific rate of speed, and many houses with people in them on the tops or on the roofs floated by me. At times I would see a house top loaded with women and children and rescuers on the shore striving to save them when the house would turn over and drown them all many desperate attempts were made to reach me by the crowds on shore, who succeed in in rescuing many but I was too far out. I drifted and swam twenty days and nights not knowing where I was going or in what direction. About three oclock in the morning of the twenty first, a ruined flooded city loomed up in the half darkness but in the distance, and I began to fell hard ground, and then I knew it was reaching the shore where a crowd strove to reach me, many with ropes, others throwing me life preservers and frantically shot shouting and wa waving directions. Finally I succeeded in landing and they brought me to a house, where I was given some clothes. I had lost most of mine soon after I started, besides my uniform, and only wore a pair of underdrawers. The scenes I witnessed Sire I dare not tell you before your daughters. They may be able to hear it."

" How long did you su, you was floating on the wreckage."

" I was in the water for twenty days and seven hours, and sire this sensation together with the feeling of all these bruises, I have on my head and body, is not a pleasant one. I managed to save my own life through twenty days and nights of the hardest kind of struggle, getting hardly no sleep whatever, and I thought more than a tyousand times that I was done for, and I also lost all I had in this world------ a relatives who were dear to me, home and all."

Taking the narrative as true the Emperor dismissed him to go to his own quarters.

Henry Selby, a man who in Abbieannia was an english foriegner, but nevertheless a well known merchant at Hendrix street, saved nine lives during the earliest part of the flood. The story of his heroism was told by Ann Antonio Fran of Big Girl Pool Angelinia state, who had a summer home at Abbieannm and who fortunately was in Poverty Row city at the time and not in the latter city.

His statement goes as follows;

" My wife and children were taking supper with a friend at the santa Anna "otel hotel " said Mr Green" "hen an english foriegner whom I knew as Hendro Shelbieto" suddenly rushed into the dinning room as if he had gone mad, and shouted" flood. Flood. God fly for your lives." We thinking he was gone bugd or something went to a window but we did not even have time to see it from there, for the tidal wave of waters there ever it came from was on us in an instant, and almost before we could leave the lower floors of the ha hotel having no time to even go out side across the street to another place the rushing waters entering the building were all arout o us more than five feet deep. As the force of the w water threatened to undermine the hotel we were in great danger, but Mr Ghelbleto struggling against the mad torrents, bore my wife and children first in safty to the St Vincent Orphan ome some five or six six blocks away having miraculous escapes from either being crushed by a heavy log which the rushing waters carried along the path wa, of escape, or by other ed by a wall of a house which undermined crashed down into the torrent near him. Returning as quicly as he could to the hotel, Mr Ghelbleto in like manner brought safely to the St Vincent Orphan Asylum, an aged father and mother of his friend; Mr and Mrs Jones in into quinto. His next act of heroism which nearly cost him his life was to rescue Mrs Mrs Adelaheid Annonia, her two little daughters; one grand chili, another woman whose name I cannot recall. We were thereby marooned in the Orphan Asyla with hundreds of terrified and hungry children, expecting every hour of those terrible days and nights to be our last. We saw houses go away before the flood by thousands every three days inthis city of poverty Row but to our good luck the Orphan Asyla was built of good strong material, even being a fire proof building, and while all the structures around it were swept clean a away, it withstood the flood, but the hotel we left, we never saw again.

Louis Greto who was the manager of the hotel, a six stroy structure, was engaged in the first hour of the flood, and gave up his life in the succesful rescue of al his own wife, and children, and three others besides a little child slave girl he ta adopted."

George Grantio, who was a passenger on the first train that could drive at Agatha ' Angelinia State' from Francis Atlanta' Calvorinia' the 23th of June the three days succeeding the terrible flood disaster, also spent twenty one thrilling and nights in the St Vincents Orphan Asylum in the city of Poverty Row. Besides Ghelbie, and those he rescued, one hundred and sixty two other persons, besides fifty hundred and sixty two orphan children, shared his memorable experiences.

"The orphan asylum, standing as it does isolated and alone" said Gero Said Grantio" was exposed to the full force of the great flood which so suddenly descended upon the city, but the first strongest currents did not come untill the night of the first day of the flood. The force of the flood shook the building so tremendously that very often we were scared by the sound of shattering of window glass. That meant that many of the buildings beyond fell into the flood being undermined and this caused a increase of the shocks that made many of the windows overhead to give way, and we knew hourly that the foundation of the big six stroy structure would give way under the irresistible pressure of the flood. This was the beginning of seventeen hours of awful dread.

The flood continued to rise, and to make matters worse for us, a terrific thunder storm broke out and continued to rage with unabated fury, and the roar of the hurricane wind that always comes before the rainsqualls was accompanied by the sound of crashing glass as one after another of the many windows on the windward side weakened by the shaking of the building gave way before the gale. Fearing the coming of a cyclone to add to the horrors of the flood, women and sisters clasped the terrified children of the home in their arms as if they were their own loved ones, or as though they also expected to be torn asunder the next moment. The men folk began to scan the pillars and partition walls superfonih supporting the floors above and to take up such positions necessarily as seemed to be the best of safty in case if not total destroyed by the flood, the building could be razed by the storm.

The crashing of glass was soon followed by a worse sound of ripping and tearing as the wind tore from the windows the big stripped awnings. Then to add to the terrible confusion, the eletric lights suddenly went out and the building was left in darkness except where the employes stood with their lantrens.

Then many move moved toward the front windows of the building with the settled intention of seeking rufte or other quarters, but they were checked at the windows by the fury of wreckage dashing by, the blidning blinding sheet of rain which was being driving driven by the wind with mighty force, and by the torrent which lay between them and any place of refuge. They appeared to hesitate between a choice of being drowned in the flood or possibly being struck by lightning or a flying section of wreckage or of remaining in the home untill the end.

Soon the question was settled. Even as they looked, the hotel beyond was undermined by the flood as the wind was tearing off a portion of its roof, and it crashed into ruin hurling the remaining inmates into the water. Almost simultaneously a loud wail went up from the people in another big building as the big skylight on top was torn loose by the wind and fell crashing down into the room in the upper stroy causing terrible pandemonium. This therefore seemed to satisfy those in the orphan home that no haven of safty could be found and they determined to make the best of the situation.

Just then above the roar of the wind, the furious crashing of the loudest thunder, the crashing of glass, and the pounding of wreckage floes against the building a new sound was heard. It was that of a wall of a building falling teard the orphan home the structure having been undermined. Every one stood crouched, and prepared to leap to either side as the occasion might require. Every one even the homeless orphans realized the gravity of the situation but there was no shrieking nor wailing, and they held stood the ordeal with such fortitude as to lend c ourage to the most cowardly of men. "Even the babies were mute and clung to their parents necks in breathless despair. Then came another sound of falling brick and suddenly a shower of brick and mortar fell in the rear of the building. Every one thought for that moment that the end had come and that in another instant all would be buried beneath the ruins. Suddenly the sound ceased. The brick had fallen and the lower story of the building remained intact. It was soon learned that the entire wall stood unbroken and that the fall of brick and ortar was but from the collapse of several large chimneys forming the top of the building which had been hit by lightning.

This Orphan ome was in charge of the Sisters if St Angelo and it also had at the beginning of the flood proved to be a h haven of refuge for nearly one hundred and fifty homeless and flood driven unfortunates. Every flood victim was taken in without question the asylum being thrown w open to all who sought its protecting wings.

In the midst of the thunderstorm when it was at its height, the hundreds of more orphan children grew wild with fright, and shouted and screamed like demons untill the nerves of the other refugees were shattered and a real panic seemed imminent. It was then that the Mother Superior rang the Chancel bell and caused a hush in the awful confusion, and when quiet had been restored the Mother addressed the children and told them it was useless for such screaming and crying and of hiding under beds during the storm, and that if they wanted to be safe they should pray from their hearts to the creator of all things so ild hear their offerings above the roar of the great hurricane, which raged with increased fury as she spoke to the awe struck assemblage of orphan children.

The children listened at entirely and finally were consoled as the storm reaching its acme already had passed its own crisis crisis and was rapidly subsiding. Really the panic had been caused by the falling of the north wall of that section of the building which was opposite the orphan asylum; and which wall seemed to tower and at crash toard the Home; the former structure being much higher. Order and silent prayer were brought about by the sisters determination and presence of mind.

Many families that had been seperated by the flood were nevertheless united by the waters of the same flood tossing them into this strong haven of refuge. Wherever heart moving scenes were pr presented by those unions as the half dead mangled and bruised unfortunates were rescued and dragged from the waters by the more fortunate of their families and friends.

The Orphan Home which had just been builded; at a small expense of $23,101,111 had just opened the day before the flood, and over fifteen hundred children selected from three old homes had arived and were moved into the building after a touching ceremony, preparatory to having a better andsafer and fire proof home. The community of nuns comprised sixty sisters, and they too were there administering cheer and mercy to the sufferers many of whom were more dead than alive when brought into the shelter. The children also aided a good deal. The man who paid the money for the building of the home for these children sure need congratulation for the materials that were used for this structure. For the inner walls of the structure sand was used, mixed with lime, pounded fragments of granite and marble, iron and some other stuff which reading d quier enough made the walls though only three inches thick yet strong enough to defy cannot shot. The interior of this home was formed of such decorations columns and pillars and grand staircases as to resemble the interior of one of Emperor Williams Palaces instead of an orphan home and the buildings had innumerable windows and halles of all sizes. Though the lower stree floors of the building was flooded way up to the ceiling of the third story yet the waters despite the current through the building did no harm except in the wa domitories where it pushed all the beds against the walls and pilesthem up high against the ceiling, and stripped every bed of the sheets, and pillows and despoting mud and small wreckage of other structures within the big rooms and entrance ways. But no harm either inside or outside the building was observed showing the strength of the structure and of its magnificent construction.

The Mother superior in speaking of the incidents of the twenty days and nights of the flood said that she believed it was the first time in history of hundreds of fierce floods in the world, that an orphan asylum or any other building like it stood before the 1 sixty mile current of the flood.

The Sisters knew all the time the building would withstand the flood, but the refugees did not expect even the first days to live another hour. The Man who had at the expense of his own riches ordered the material for the building, was a great constructor of bridges, abuildings and palaces, and though always making good money on his buildings which he constructed, never feared any expense at their erection and the cheapest building he ever erected in his career was at the cost of a million dollars, and nine hundred d thousand dollars. These buildings too were of license size, one of them being an five story orphan asylum and five blocks long in Francis Atlanta city worry worth 10,000,000 dollars. It appeared from a distance saying it would be a death trap for the many children who would occupy it. A tornado struck the city two weeks after the children moved in. The building was in the path of it and though all structures in front of it and on both sides was razed, it not only withstood the twistwer a good deall with only a portion of its roof torn off but saved the buildings close t to its rear from harm. Since then he could not answer all the demands for his buildings which were the safest constructions of all."

"As soon as it became known that the building had been made as strong as ...ich the men stricken mass of refugees was electrical(providing they did not receive a shock) men lighted their cigars, women ch... chatted and laughed, and through more than... fell, more glass was shivered during the conclusion of the storm, and a piece of ... hurled upon the roof continued to pound fiercely until nearly three thirty when t... the morning there was no more panic, and all felt that the building would withstand ... fury of the flood, and it did."-"....."

I arose early Monday June the 21th the day the flood had gone down altogether... The most appalling sights I ever witnessed in any disaster, and I have seen many, ... to be observed in the streets of this once fair city. The water on Certrida Street ... ared totally leaving the pavement clear for many blocks north; and seven blocks ... west and east of the Alamo Hotel. The streets were full of debris as if a earthquake ... had shaken the city down, the wires and poles were all down, and the surviving ... were badly damaged as many of them completely moved off their foundations. ... one of the buildings in the business districts were damaged to some extent with ... of the exceptions, noticibly the St Certrudes Pro orphan asylum and the Rollford ... both of which remained intact and went through the flood without a scratch. The refugees came pouring in droves into the heart of the city many of them ...

They were homeless and without food or drink, and many had seen loved ones ... they had died were in the most destitute circumstances.....the Mayor of this city ... cancel recall his name issued a call for a mass meeting which was held on this Sunday ... lock and was attended by a large number of prominent citizens and other ... citizens. Efforts then were taken to furnish provisions and relieve the suffering of the ... refugees and bury what dead they could find. A conservative estimate of the number of ... killed or drowned, is from 11,500 to 40,000. I heard that eight hundred houses ... were swept away with all their inmates, but here nevertheless great numbers of ... bodies were found among the wreckage, El Paso looking like Galveston after the ... storm of September the 8th 1900.

...arly in the morning it was learned that the water supply for the whole city and ... was cut off for some from some unknown reason. I believe it was caused by the ... results of the flood washing away the main water pipes. But at all events the whole city ... was without water and therefore something had to be done by the citizens to relieve ... the terrible situation. There had been many people who had deposited hotely on clothing ... in the salvation tyib but this too had their receivers entirely swept away and there ... was found even one receptacle to be found in any section of the city.

The scenes on the river docks of the city was a terrible one and resembled the ... that of the docks of either Galveston after the hurricane of 1900 after the earthquake ... and fire of April 1906. The small fleet of ships used by fisher men and others and the larger ... coastal ships were dashed to and fro on the docks, and full and fancy were covered with them ... in frightful confusion. The main pier which was also demolished, and the big train ... sheds without elevators were undermined and had caved in; three steam liners were ... also cast off the docks but fortunately was secured to be in partrect; good condition. The ... damage to the shipping interest of this this city is indeed something immense; the ... Southern improvements being entirely swept away.

I tried to get out of the city as quickly as I could; and succeeded in securing ... passage on the first river steep which sailed, the Pandro Gold. We sailed from the ... city second slip at seven oclock ,with seventy people on board. Anderson we got ... away into the middle of the stream river we found a terrible gale blowing and the ... waves were running high dashing the steamer against the ship but under three reefs and ... full head running down, we met our course southward for El Verso Not knowing that place too ... well docked. As we passed ...lmore West we could see some foreign steamer anchored off that ... port there in September 1900 on the 8th, Saturday, indeed I have been in Italy and other places and observed earthquake horrors. I have witnessed disasters caused by earthquake and storms that have committed more damage than any person hardly would believe even when they read it in news papers, I have seen the wrecking of many towns and cities in the United States by floods and tornadoes but heaven knows what can be compared with the scenes I witness in Galveston alone. Francis Atlanta was the nearest point I was to at which working telegraph instruments could be found, the wires as well as nearly all the buildings between here and the very shore of the Mississippian and practically the whole country side forests and all being laid waste by the biggest snowy made flood ever heard of. Why even by friends in this city of Atlanta why I have known me for years won't believe me when I tell them what I saw in Abbieann when I was sent there by the Donation at Angelinia Acadia which has is affected by a big flood down at south almost as big and which wiped Hotel Austin off the map.

When I left Galveston shortly before noon yesterday June the 8st 28th the surviving people there were organizing for the prompt removal of dead animals, and searching gangs for bodies of dead people but none could be found though seven hundred thousand of the population are missing. The distribution of food is given to the few who survived and all the necessary work of a after a period of disaster in Galveston.

The wreck of Galveston city was brought about by a flood so terrible and so that no words can ever describe its intensity, by a flood which not only turned the whole city into a raging sea but the whole country side around it as well into an ocean. The flood investigation bureau records shows that the flood horrible calamity the greatest enormity in both the north and west of Galveston, and southern and Northern Angelinia, two of the greatest floods in the war and two of the worse disasters on record, and even now it is impossible to tell what was the maximum of the horrible list of both flood horrors, combining with a great forest fire raging elsewhere, and a waste of towns burning.

At exactly the flood began at 2 O'clock yesterday morning June the third. We had heard that previously to that, a great flood had been raging north of us, that Abbieann city was almost completely under water, and that Poverty Row was inundated. The first striking news first appeared to come from the north, and another section of the flood was in direct opposition to the force of waters from the west. At this time

It was said that most of the citizens noticed that the waters of the Neches River had been high enough to almost top the levees was lowering considerably, and that the current which was formerly southwest had changed and was going due northeast in great speed. While the waters came upon the west side of the city, the waters came also from an opposite direction and about noon or later it became evident that the city was going to be visited with disaster. In the frontal sections of the city, many smaller residents stood thousands of tenements were being hurriedly abandoned, in many families fleeing to dwellings that were higher and stronger, but even these refugees were in great numbers single engulfed and swept away. But every strong home was opened to refugees which could reach them. The waters were all this time assembly rising, and to make matters worse a wild thunderstorm came on, it rained as one to aggravate the horror and the wind was no fierce for half an hour that the sky cut like a knife.

By the time the storm was ending the waters from the west and north north of the dark the entire city was completely submerged. The sudden flooding of the electric light plants and the gas and electric plants left the city in darkness. To go upon the streets now flooded was to court and play with death. And at its height the storm the waves thunderstorm had been at cyclonic velocity, for fluffs of smoke buildings, cisterns, portions of wooden houses, telegraph poles, and walls were falling, while being blown out and the noise of the wind, and the crashing of wreckage brought the the city from other places by the flood were terrifying in the extreme and added to horror occasioned by the flood. The wind and waters rose steadily, and then the wind cleared up but the flood grew worse, the current undermined many houses and they fell and during all this time the scene indeed was like at galveston during the flood of hurricane, all the people like rats in traps. The whole city was indeed fourty to fifty feet under water, the fury of the flood undermining levees near the city of them gave way according to the fiio flood and heaven alone knows how many lost their lives for day after day the terrible flood continued and for that time the city remained in a top story of a big building thought the whole city and all its population would be swept away. so large a house was safe to drown. but to inquire was to court death in the wreckage, such days and nights of agony accompanied by three thunderstorms and terrible hot waves during these twenty days of flood horrors have been equaled. At galveston a horror was similar to this but not so many people surrounded, neither did it last as long, though here there was no tempest.

On the fourteenth day the flood had gone down considerably, and on the 15th the waters suddenly began to subside at twelve o'clock in the noon time a sweltering hot day with another thunderstorm brewing. withintwenty, six minutes after the flood had gone down the feet and remained that deep until the 21th but before day light the 21th the streets of the city were practically freed of the flood waters, to see none of the ruins of the upper sections of houses whole streets of buildings very few if any of the remaining buildings had escaped any in injury, and there was not a single habitable dry house in what was left of the city. 10,000 houses had been entirely swept away, with all their occupants and hundreds of thousands of others were leveled and piled up in one immense windrow similar like the wreck made at Galveston after the flood and hurricane there. The people who had escaped death went out at daylight the second day, after the flood had gone down, and when they went to view the work of the flood they saw the most horrible sights imaginable. In every block I came to I saw only eight bodies of human beings, four or corpses were in one street and they were only children. I then went to the front side or north side of the city where the flood came and was surprised at the sight I witnessed. However you won't believe me if I tell it, but if not come and see for yourselves. I know all this wreckage is not from the houses of Sandro at all.

Though the whole north side of the city was stripped of every vestige of its habitation, the dwellings, the great river bathing establishments and every other structure having been either carried out to sea or its ruins piled into a windrow and strewn far into the town, according to the war vagaries of the flood, there in front of these buildings once stood a sight unusual to behold. As far as I could see there was a long jumbled up mountain of wreckage in some places nearly as high as the houses surviving in the city. I found a few human bodies in this, and there was fortunes of all descriptions, which later on people who survived the horror said never belonged in Sandro. I believe half this wreckage belongs to Abbieann, Mi Verne or La Grange.

The first hurried glance over the south of the city showed that the largest structures, supposed to be the most substantially built were the only ones where the 5 refugees where sheltered and where they did not perish. The Orphan's Home on Twenty Sixth Street and Aberdeenia Avenue which I saved now next stood like a sentinel amid all the wreckage all houses around it having fallen like a child's house of cards and how many dead persons are in the ruins could not yet be ascertained, while all who flocked to the Orphans are safe. Of the patients in St Joseph's Hospital together with the interns, attendants and employees and sisters in charge, but one are understood to have been saved and the building was said to be swept away into the flood. How it could be is a mystery as it was just as strongly builded as the Orphan's.

The Old Polish Home on Gold Avenue collapsed when undermined by the flood, and many big schoolhouses at which many refugees had taken refuge are masses of wreckage. I passed these big High Schools which are but empty shells, crushed and broken and there were hundreds of men probing the ruins but finding no bodies. Every Catholic church in the city, with possibly one or two exceptions is in ruins. At the forts, 3 in the city, with possibly one or two exceptions is in ruins. At the forts, it is reported 10,000 soldiers are dead, they having been in only temporary quarters which gave them no protection whatever against the flood. The immense river front of the city from end to end is in awful ruins. Nothing but piling and the wreck of great steamers remain, and the river is filled with wreckage of all descriptions as tightly packed as a log jamm. The highest and strongest elevators hundreds of them lost all their contents, and their stocks are so damaged by water that the losses in grain and meat will run into the millions.

The Riverside saving station at Horse Point was carried away, the crew being kept across the river fifteen miles to Gloria city which also was flooded. I met Captain Andrew Swan yesterday and he told me that two of his crew were drowned, and that the bodies of his wife, father mother, and sister are not recovered.

Down the river shore, and all the country north and even within the northern limits of Francis Atlanta city, and even Mildred Greenburg, and Francis Lillian which also were touched by the flood, contains enough wreckage from the other places to rebuild a hundred cities.

Eight hundred persons who were swept across the flooded river during the flood were picked up there alive, six corpses were also picked up, and from the identification found on one of them he was from Abbieann. Inaddition to the living and the dead which the recession of the flood cast up at the north of Francis Atlanta City, thousands of casks, and coffins and immense lumberjams from the cemeteries at Abbieann were floated out of the water there, and Abbieann is about a hundred and seventy five miles north west of Francis Atlanta. That flood sure had force to bring all that down to that distance and yet even as south as Vivian Wicky which was still further.

All the big mills in Sandro, the cotton and grain mills, the lumber mills, the immense million dollar coal consumers company sheds with all the coal, the many gas works, the electric light plants, and nearly all the industrial establishments of the city were totally wrecked and crippled with the contents washed through out all sections of the city so that all windrowed ruins are locked up with coal, coal cars, and machinery of these mills. The flood left a slime about three inches deep over what remained of the whole city. I remained here three days, and fast progress was made in trying to recover the bodies of the dead, even prisoners being brought in by soldiers under guard but the bodies are not yet found, though a few carcasses of animals are found.

Innumerable stories of the escapes of survivers not only of Sandro but those living up there are miraculous. John Heidonia, a lumber mill youngster was buried in the ruins of his firm, and when dug out in the morning after the cessation of the flood had no further injury than a few bruised fingers though he of course was half starved. Johnston Heldonia his father and owner of the Mill was lost senseless when his own house collasped, but was revived by the water, and carried on blocks by the flood, and then managing to secure a floating raft of good size floated for six days and nights amid corpsen wreckage of all kinds and facing all kinds of perils before he was rescued by those who thronged the shore of the flood in the less lookout for those they could rescue. Also a woman who was said to have given birth to a child was carried from her home to a house two blocks distant, the men who were carry her having to hold her high above their heads as the water was five feet deep when was moved and running like a mill stream. Also many stories were current of houses falling and inmates escaping. Hunsonia pornia an editor of the andro evening ews, had his family, and the families of three neighbors in his house when the lower half crumbled when the place was undermined and the upper part slipped down in the water. Not one the house was hurt, and they managed to remain in the upper floor and were rescued days afterward when that section of the house floated in near the shore of the flood and the people onshore took them off.

Of the murmer family six out of seven were rescued after most tiresome effo the other cannot be located and it is not known whether he is dead or living.

Of the anon family only one is known to have been saved. That was the little g Edie anon and she was of foriegn parents but born in bbieannia. Her father mother, and brother were drowned. The family of antonia Hendrois who also met death in the school house is reported found in the river twenty miles south of Mandron town sixty miles of andro Mandro.

The Callon House in the westend, was turned into a hospital, for all the regis hospitals of the city which were mostly on the outskirts of the city were washed away with all their in inmates. Of the Southern Abbieannia Lumber yards little remains but the piling. Half a hundred million feet of number was carried away out of the hundred million feet, and the owner said that as far as the Lumber Company is concern it might as well start over again. Eight ocean steamers all foriegn foreign which been tied up here afraid to go out because of the enemy submarines out in the sea were torn from their moorings and st er stranded in the city. The Aldorn castle was carried over the flats from the fourty Sixth street wharf, Manno Mandro city, Francis Atlanta city a distance of fourty miles, and lies in the wreckage of the Algo Pier rancis Atlanta. A large Norwegian steamer is stranded between Francis Atlanta Mildred reenburg, and another ocean liner but an Abbieannian had been swirled around and through the flooded city of andro and had crashed through the river bridges and now lying in a few feet of water near the wreckage of the city of Abbieann near Francis Atlanta.

The Abbieann Steamship from Sacramento, Concentinia state, was carried from the docks of Abbieann city all the way to Francis Atlanta, and is stranded on one of the docks of that city. The Abbieannian Steamer Alamo corredo was torn from her wharf Poverty ow city, and dashed into the houses of the city, and the bow of the Calverin Streamer known as the Fleming Star which had been previously hurled there is given in isetove in. The stern of the Alamo is stove in, and the decks of the Fleming Star is covered with wreckage of w two houses. Down the river jammed in all kinds of wreck two other foriegn ocean steamers lie as if grounded. Hundreds of schooners, barges, by the score, and thousands of smaller craft are strewn bottom side up or in all on of postures along the slips and piers of rancis Atlanta, and andro city. If gan be found it will take months to tabulate the dead, and the missing, but to get idea of the monetary loss is out of the question for years. It is safe to assume that one half of the property of andro is wiped out, that ten thousand of the are swept away, that the rest of the city is a total wreck, and that the survivors all face absolute poverty.

At Gloria city, a hundred of the residents were drowned and fourty of the were swept away, and there are few buildings that did not or does not tell the story of the horrible flood. For many a score of mile of country side out of the city is a common sight to see wreckage of all description, small craft, as steam river launc schooners and ay even fishing sloops. The lieft boat of the river life saving statio was carried to Francis Atlanta, while a vessel that was anchored in Mildred Harb Mildred reenburg city lies high and dry six miles from rancis Atlanta. o visit the destruction and so many craft are to be seen that instead of just a flood fro the river it appears as if the sea had suddenly poured in upon the whole land all distance in one immense tidal wave. I went afterward to Abbieann city which at four days later, and most of it was swept about. Only one quarter of that city is left, and the desolation reminds me of the Johnstown flood when I viewed what was left of the wreck when I went there. Everything is swept clear, all the near what was left of the city is gone."

"The great and extensive flood which has just devastated, Abbieann, la El erse, andro, and all other cities and towns reminds me of the terrible flood swept so many places near the Mic-hirther Run, and of the awful Lake Gelli Horror in November last year, year, 1913" said Gertrude Angeline who to day was a rancis Atlanta with her friends.." At that time I was with some soldiers going one of the towns and my experience was similar to that of many others who escaped.

ally three thousand were said to have perished in the Mic-hirther Run flood, and hundreds of millions dollar damage was done, yet also the loss of life and property was great in the almost simultaneous Lake Gelicia Horror. When the Mic-hirther flood began in november 1913 we were at a house five miles of a christian camp. The waters of the flood lifted the house off its brick pillars and dropped it in the water and send tilted at an angle of fifty five degrees. With others we took refuge at a house on a hill side, but even there we were driven to the second story. This flood however progressed so slow that gives the reason why the loss of life was so small.
But the other big floods gave no one hardly a chance and therefore the big loss of life resulted. For these disasters there will come a reckoning to the enemy by and by."

The situation of the cities and towns of central and western Calverinia exposed them to the flood when it broke. The formation of the land gave the waters of the flood spring from the bursted levees a free swept over every territory, and in this way way the immense volumes of water was able to pour over the land, and in the rush of waters back to the sea the main flood however swept the city of Abbieann. Never before in Abbieannia,s history, even because of storms had such floods come so severely so that the water inundated the towns even onhigh ground as in the latest two floods, of west, Central Calverinia, and Northern Angelinia. The city of Abbieann was built at the sout northwestern shore of the Norma Run River at the entrance near the sea. The opening of the immense levees west and east of the river simultaneously by the blast which tores the city down into total ruin at once with the destruction of the entire population, between the end of Levee No Ten and the northern section gave the onrushing water a free sweep right into the city first of all. In this way the immense torrent rising several hundred feet high and four miles wide poured immense volumes of water into the already shock thrown city, causing the waters from the opposite opposite break to rise many feet from a back flow and flood the lowlands untill it became a raging sea. In the rush of waters back tward the north from the east break, the flood swept half the city to nothingness and totally leveled the rest hurling the wreckage into river and the Abbieann bay taking all bodies with it. Thus Abbieann city was the beginning place of the probable most terrific flood and explosion disaster in the whole story itself.

Francis Andrews having large apartments in a huge flat building in the city of El verso and whose wife was killed, and for whose body he was searching for was quest ioned by rescuers who said there were three hundred and fifty six families there when the house was undermined by the force of the flood, and he was the only survivor. The rescuers commenced work and depressed prisoners also at the spot but investigation soon proved that the wreckage in which the man had been searching for his wife was not of the flat building he spoke of but that of others, and therefore they believed that that building with its occupants had been entirely swept away and that the wreckage of other structires had been placed there by the flood when it receded.

The police Chief, and his force rescued about one thousand persons on a gaudaturday a week after the flood had begun. They then returned tward the police station when the high waters showed signs of receding. They had no idea that the waters of the flood had swept away the western and northern portions of the city where they lived, and when they returned to the spot where the police station was they found that gone too. They then started immediately for their homes but the entire section of the city there was gone with the flood and the families of the chief of police and his followers had been swept away. The Police hief lost his wife and six children, and his followers everything they had owned besides their own families.

Thousands of refugees every day were being picked up at Mildred reenburg and taken to big buildings, where they were given every possible attention. It was found that all of these refugees were suffering from injuries of all kinds, were half starved, and that many of them had been floating in the water or in wreckage and debris of all kinds for twenty days and were half drowned and ill from exposure. Most of these people had floated in on drifts and rafts, and one of the party came ashore near Mildred reen greenburg city on a piano.

One million one hundred thousand, one hundred and thirty five ammunition boxes fro from amp Jt jo almanna were found near Mildred reenburg, and twenty big army pile driving, large cannons of all sizes howitzers, krupp guns and septometyr and other rifled cannon were driven across the river to within a hundred feet of the town.
The whole country side all around Mildred reenburg was covered with drift of all kinds as thick as log jams, dead cattles, and all kinds of other animals, water craft of all sizes, buggies, wagons, army tents, provision wagons by thousands, quartermaster stores rifles ammunition of all kinds, rifled shells and such like which belonged to a great camp. Searching parties founds hundreds of bodies of soldiers in ermans bayou and buried them. At one big rphan asylum there were about over fifteen hundred people who met death, not children but of grown ups for at the approach of the flood the children had been hastily withdrawn to a bigger and better home, and the men whom women and children themselves took shelter there, but it was undermined by the flood and the whole top of the building came down burying them under tons upon tons of wreckage.

Another of the refugees who arrived at Mildred reenburg on the first relief train, ju t about fourty miles southeast of poverty ow and who also had a sad experience in the flood in El Verso was Hank lonis an engineer of a milling plant at the El Verso Big umber yards. At the beginning of the flood he left the mill to go home..his family consisting of his wife and six children. When his home was washed away on the second day of the flood he managed to get his wife and six children saftly on a large raft which he and himself of drift, and with them he drifted helplessly about for four days. Finally his raft collided with other wreckage and a house then struck it with such force that it was split into three places, and he was forced to witness the drowning of his wife and children being unable to help them in any way. He was rescued from what remained of the raft fifteen days later, a raving maniac, with nothing in the world to call his own.

Hansonia Heidi a Bridge Contracot Contrator who resided at Thirty eight street and Condor Avenue El Paso was rescued by those who were on the shore of the flood in the same manner as Hank Clonia..After losing his wife and children which he desperately tried to save he managed to save himself from drowning by swimming part of the time, and drifting around untill he reached the shore of the flood where a number of the spectators who were there on the look out for victims rescued him. Jenny Andlo a girl of ten years, whose home is in San Anti Antonio had a narrow escape when that city was hard hit by the flood.

Eight hundred houses were swept away here. The little girl was forced out of her top floor window ontothe roof of her floating house, and finally it parted, and three days afterwards she came toard the crowds of watchers on shore in the driftwood. Despite the difficulty she experienced in keeping afloat those three days and nights, she pluckily held out to the end, and reached shore close enough to be rescued by the watchers.

Hendro De Fob an Abbieannian Postal Clerk whose car was attatched to a local train which passed through the territory near San Antonio, not far from Laredo on the gulf following the flood, June the 14th 19 3..... 1913..... wrote to his friends in Angelinia Agathia that at the outskirts of the town of San Antonio the train crew and passengers heard cries coming out of a mass of wreckage high n on top. A number of persons answered the cries, and found a woman fastened under a long roof. They succeeded after an hours work in pulling her out, and then she informed her rescuers there were seven under theroof.. A further search resulted in finding the persons of nine women and six children and one old man, all injured but not fatally, and had been there they said that they had been under the wreckage since the date of June the 26th and no one had passed that way. Their direst suffering was from hunger and mostly from thirst. When the train arived at Mildred Greenburg, the military war prison, all the churches, and a number of houses also had been washed away/...../

Frando Durandio, who was a prominent citizen of Angelinia Agathia City, Angelinia State, and who was among the missing, arrived at home on a Wednesday evening direct from San Antonio, and was recieved with joy by his family. He also observed that his own home town had been flooded. Mr Durandio went to San Antonio on Sunday, the day before the big flood disaster.... and was there during all those terrible nights and days of the flood and untill Tuesday night June the 23th where he aided in the work of rescue, and saw some sorrowing sights which he does not ever want to witness again. He said to his family that all of the survivors managed to get through the horrors of the flood as if by a miracle. He told every one he met in Angelinia Agathia who questioned him about the disaster that he saw many thousands of young men who were black haired on Sunday come out of the ordeal with hair turned completely white on the Tuesday following the abatement of the inundation.

"It would take one hundred and fifty five thousand five hundred men three years he said" to clear the streets and towns of San Antonio so complete is the ruin. The biggest liar in the world could not do justice to the existing conditions of affairs there if he was to risk his life for ffailing to exaggerate. I was in the St Michaels Orphan Home during the flood..The building a big six storey structure so thronged with refugees, the women, nuns and children were praying throughout those terrible days and nights, and above the roar of the flood, we could hear the crash of buildings and the spa splash of the water torrent against the big building. Every hour of those horrible nights we expected that home to go down but finally the flood gradually subsided and at day light Monday morning June the 22th, and many others started out to view the ruins and offer help to those who were in need of it. We expected to see thousands upon thousands of bodies like usual so hearof in the big floods, but after we traveled within two blocks we only saw eight bodies, and as we reached the river where the waters were still high, we remained some time looking at the terrib e jam of wreckage and floating houses and while there about one body per minute passed us floating with the tide of the river near its mouth. Homes that were formly elegant are a mass of wreckage.

There was not a living animal in the city so far as I could see, and even in the city in the rural districts thousands of heads of cattle and horses and other stock were drowned. No cats or dogs survived the flood, and not a single bird is to be seen. Indeed there is no one who can make anything like a real reliable estimate of the number of deaths, for during the two days that I remained in the city after the flood had gone down, the citizens worked madly in the wreckage to recover the dead bodies but only few were found in one big stretch of wreckage and therefore it is believed most of the dead were swept away by the flood beyond recovery. After leaving the town I had to walk five miles from the place where I landed on the other side, before I got out of the wreckage.

At some points the flood waters still remain. The water must have swept the entire central Calverinia for a distance of four hundred miles wide and twenty thousand and dead bodies of animals of all kinds are to be seen all over this territory it claimed some of them also human beings. It seems as if the land had sunk under the for that distance and remained so for twenty days and then gradually lifted and left all the wreckage to tell the awful story. I passed a few dead bodies of human beings as my walk to get a train and indeed the stench in this storm s and flood swept part of Calverinia is awful, and it surprised me more greatly to hear of the big flood that occured down here. It is estimated that over 567,899 hhead of cattle were drowned by the flood waters throughout this immense section."

One of the most pathetic stories of suffering in the city of poverty Row, nearest Abbieann, was brought to light on Friday morning the twenty sixth of June, when the southwestern Abbieannia and Condinia and Calverine Railroad train arrived at Grande Atlanta from Mildred Greenburg. Among the passengers to say in this story, were Mrs Mrs Jennie Johnston of Denmark, and Mr Jonathan Hendrio of Angelinia Agathia. Mrs Johnston came from Overseas to Poverty Row city Calverinia during a four months trip arriving at the latter city on the Wednesday before the flood, accompanied by her husband, Edward Johnston, and his children, Daniel, John, and Jennie Johnston. Mrs Johnston and her Husband and children, Beautiful little Spannish kids took apartments in a fashionable righteous Hotel in the eastern surburbsof the city.

All day Sunday before the flood, and the morning of the Flood June the 1th her husband had remained on watch as the children having gone through a trying experience because of the wicked Glandelinians were suffering from an upset of nerves..or nervious prostration and had remained in their room most of the time in their beds.

When early on afternoon of June the 1th approached he arose and went to the window to look out into the streets and noticed a thunderstorm was due.. When the storm broke in the evening he hoped to see by an occasional fit of lighting whether or not there was danger of Glandelinian armies coming near the city as a was feared, as he knew battles had raged at this place earlier in the war.

When he laid down on his cot couch by the window to sleep. About morning but still dark, the was the strange distant noise like great thunder which shook the house as if there was an earthquake, the plastering ot of the ceiling came down and doors and windows rattled, and as if there was an unusually violent fit of wind, the window out of which Mr Johnston had been peering was literally sucked at as if by a mighty air pump and he and the couch was tal taken along with it. Mrs Johnston so far as she was able to - explain to the passengers on the train instead of being drawn along in the direction of the strange and mysterious disturbance was hurled violently in the opposite direction against the door of her room; and a bushel basket of plaster came down on her head severely injuring her.

She believed she must have laid senseless senseless for about twenty four hours for when she came to her senses she found she was badly cut on the head but yet not so severely hurt as she feared, and found when she arouse that the house seemed to be moving swiftly as if it was a boat. She frantically began to call for her husband. There was no reply and in her fright she fairly shrieked out to his name.. Then she attempted to go down to the lower room where her children lay sleeping and almost fell into the water. Some of the others of the building who had been driven to the upper stories came to her assistance and cared for her untill the house landed near shore and the men on the banks rescued her and the others. Her children had been saved living on the top floor but they never got over the scare as every one of the poor kids had been injured by falling plaster.

No trace of her husband could be found. It was indeed a very strange and mysterious disappearance. She gave the description of of him as much as possible, and a search was kept up in poverty Row city untill Monday Night June the twenty ninth by which time all the wounded had been cared for in the best possible way, and all the wreckage was being cleared and the few dead bodies found buried. Then Mr Hendro brought Mrs Johnston and her children via Mildred Greenburg to en route to Big Girl Mound. Here because of a flood raging at this section also, they immediately retraced their way to another town in the east to Keller Village where they got a local to Evangeline St Clare city, and then immediately took the through Abbieannia Condinia and Calverine train for Angelinia Agathia.

Mr Johnston according to what she said had on his person some very valuable jewelery and quite a large sum of money at the time he disappeared. Fortunately however Mrs Mrs Johnston had enough money on her person to pay her way back to Denmark. She was completely overcome by fright from her twenty day experience, and the loss of her husband, and although yet not having reached the middle age she had all the appearance of being a frail decrepit old woman so terrible had been her recent and trying ordeal. And her children mistook every object they saw for Glandelinians and flood waters coming at them and often screamed in fear on the train. The poor woman was compelled to remain in her berth while traveling.

Sargeant Candonio who lived at 8765 Lovewell Street Dorothy Gale Dorothy Gale city, was one of the christian soldiers on a two day furlough who was one of those very much nerved by the scenes of horror which he witnessed among the ruins of Vignon, and therefore he hastened to leave the stricken city, and arrived in his own Regiment of Reserve Hanson Vivians army Thursday Afternoon Noveh June the 25th 1913.....

He told his comrades when he was questioned by them that even now the sights of the very bodies of the drowned were constantly before him and that for nearly a week after the disaster he had been practically without sleep since he first set foot in that horror stricken city. Mandonio who was a sergeant of a quarter master army store had run from Angelinia Agathis to Francis Olanta, but when he reached the end of his long trip Monday the 22th and saw evidence of a great flood which had left a sea of wreckage all over the country as far as the train had traveled he heard of the disaster at Abbieann and decided to go there, but the relief party he met near Vignon told him all means to get to Abbieann city was cut off, and therefore he decided to go with them to Vignon. The relief train he boarded however was able to go only as far as Mildred Greenburg and from there the goods were transported to the coast itself, and put aboard small steamer bound for Vignon.

Mandonio was accompanied by a military policeman squad, lead by Alphonsogollin, Pollio. Although they were with the relief party, they were forced to stop suspicious strangers several times, and not recieving satisfactory answers turned them over to the pickets at the steamer landings. After much difficulty of getting over the windrows of wreckage, they gained a view of the city and some of the dead bodies, not belonging to the city but which were swept all the way down from Abbieann. While in the midst of the sight seeing, they were accosted by a number of Abbieann Abbieannian soldiers and requested to assist in guarding prisoners who were impressed in the service of the recovery and burning of the dead bodies. They willingly lent a hand and had worked for a day when they were called upon by a commander and requested to go to another post of the city which they did. A small boat then carried them to the mainland and they made a forced march of twelve miles before they were able to obtain a vehicle to take them to the heart of the city.

Reaching the heart of the city late at night, they started at once for a relief and working party, but after that their furlough being soon up they had to return to their respective commands. Alphonsio and his men stopped at Headrick Johnston, and Mandonio went to Emperor Hanson Viviana command.

When questioned about the flood in the tent of his quarters by Violet and her sister themselves Mandonio said;

"I should not tell you little princesses too much of the horrors as you might be able to stand it and it might affect your sleep. But the sights in the wrecked city of Vignon were the most horrible that I ever witnessed. Dead bodies were everywhere and part of the city had been blooted out and 100,000 houses were swept entirely away. On the interior or near the interior north of the main section of the city for a distance of many miles along the front and side houses had been washed entirely away, and only the foundations left. I had been in the city of Chigaco or whatever you call it in America by the great Lake michigaen and it reminds me of the total ruin of that place. Do you girls know the name of the place?"

"You mean Chicago by Lake Michigan?" said Violet.

"Well yes, and even when I left the ruined city the water had not entirely receded, and where business blocks and thousands of fine residences had once stood, were simply large holes marking the foundations. Even these were filled with floating debris and bodies of the drowned. I believe the force of the flood had been so great that it had cleaned the bodies of the drowned out of other cities further noth, and in doing the same with those further south, had distributed the bodies of the former in the lower towns.

The sights indeed were extremely ghastly and as the working parties of the Glandelinian prisoners would arive at one of these awful places and start to drag the bodies of the dead from the pools of dirty water. Every prisoner was expected to assist at the recovery of the dead, and the soldiers corralled Alphonsio and his men and said me, and asked us to help guard a batch of prisoners until our furlough was up. At that time we were standing watching a party of five Glandelinian prisoners working under three guards and they scowled at us. They were lassoing the bodies and pulling them out on the higher places, and piling them on boards with the intention to burn them as soon as possible to prevent a pestilence...

Just just as some of the Abbieannian regulars were helping us guard a batch of Omarian Glandelinian workers a sudden and terrible outcry arose from a bunch of the men engaged in the rescue work. Running quickly to the scene of trouble, we saw what at first we thought was one of the workers in the grasp of one of the Christian soldiers and we were horrified and astonished out of our wits. But coming nearer we saw the man a Mexican dressed in a shabby purl purple uniform and wearing a drooping sombero standing sullingly eyeing another man and cowering him with his rifle, and also pi pointing his pistol at some of the workers crying out in Abbieannian for he could speak;

"Wait boys don't act so hasty. Wait till the evidence is against him first." and he suddenly grasped his prisoners arm and dragged his hand from his pocket, and to the astonishment of all fifteen mutilated fingers which he had hacked ff from corpses dropped to the ground. Each one had one or more rings on it.

"He, he" laughed the Mexican fiendishly. "so you are a vandal too you dirty Glandelinian ghoul."

With the sight of these evidences of crime before them, the citizen workers seemed to go insane with fury, and with cries of Lynch him ' burn him" made for the unfortunate wretch. Before that the Glandelinian prisoner hatch on had been standing defiant and unmoved, but the approaching danger snook him courage, and he sank to the ground pleading off the Mexican for mercy.

But the Mexican was a man of iron heart for Glandelinians, for he had been in the service of Abbieannia since he came to that country, and during the far so far have seen sore terrible and sad scenes than I could ever write here and therefore he had had no mercy and the men were only prevented from killing him then and there by the interference of the Mexican who was a lieutenant.

"Leave him to me and my boys." said the Mexican who was no other but Mexican Pete who had rescued Annie from the enemy in the horror of fire at Pinetown and he arranged his men round the prisoner." He will attend to his case, he, he." and with that he suddenly had the Glandelinian prisoner marched over and placed against a wall not more than two feet away from the bodies he had mutilated. Selecting ten soldiers as a firing party, he lined them up twelve feet from the doomed man, did not even blindfold him and with the word" Fire" ten bullets pierced the ghouls body and he fell dead.

Such is the measure as you princesses know of the speedy justice which is being meted out to vandals everywhere when a disaster occurs and they rob the dead. Beside this case I heard of twenty others where the guilty men were ov only given a short court-marshal then sentenced to death and shot.

I told Alphonzio that I could only remain for two days and then I would have to return and suggested that we do our part now and t leave in the night. He agreed with me, and we gradually had the pri prisoners clear up the wreckage of three houses and we certainly made them work believe me. Then when we left and I got out of the city we hired a small boy to row us to the other side of the river, and from there we had to walk fourty miles before we could get a small rig to take us back to Mildred Greenburg where we could get the only train. It surely will be a long time before I'll want to return to Vignon or other places, and a still longer time before I will ever be able to forget the terrible scenes I witnessed even at Mildred Greenburg. Since I even left there on the train I have been seeing the many hundreds of dead bodies for days lying stark and stiff with looks of terror in ther faces their faces as though they had realized that a sure death was before them, and at night I have dreamed of being one of the Glandelinian prisoners who were forced to handle them. No one lost their lives at Mildred Greenburg but the city on the north side nevertheless was terribly devastated. I tell you princesses there are worse sights than that after a battle, and such things will wear on the bravest soldier, and I will bless the time when I can forget that I was ever in Vignon or Mildred Greenburg, where the bodies from Poverty Row and Abbieann, and some from Vignon and La Paloma were picked up.

At Mildred Greenburg the destruction was more total than at Vignon, a city almost as large. The condition of the awful ruins show that the tidal wave like rush of the flood must have struck the north of the city broadside as the buildings are washed away almost in a straight line back from the suburbs and puts me in mind of the ruin of Lisbon and Galveston put together after the earthquake at the former and the storm at the latter.

The waves of the flood swept away buildings as far as four hundred blocks inland, for a space of, well say Mildred Greenburg is Chicago and the flood swept the houses away as far as staring northfrom Howard Avenue all the way down to Lake Street.

It was a terrible devastation and the statement that no lives are lost at Mildred Greenburg seems doubtful. The ruined part comprised all the best part of that magnificent city, all the biggest city buildings, and the entire business portion of the city were swept away, and nothing remains to mark the spot where business blocks stood, only a few half submerged foundations here and there filled with boards and dead bodies It is as clean swept as Johnstown was in the flood of the broken dam. They saw a million houses or more have been swept entirely away.

The two million surviving inhabitants who were rendered homeless and who are not able to leave the city, are now living in tents furnished by the Abbieannian government and several distributing station stantions have been established and forces of men were busy issuing food and clothing to the unfortunate people and to refugees who came there from other places aggravating the conditions there.

There appears to be no lack of provisions but water is scarce and there is no ice, while we were th were there the heat of the weather was almost unbearable, it being 111 in the shade and the stench from the bodies made the task of the Glandelinian prisoners and of the relief parties anything but pleasant. Water has to be hauled for scores of miles and only by rail the one train line that can run into and out of the city. The electric light plants were destroyed here, and the city is without light, but the moon has shone brightly, and the work of finding the bodies has been carried on day and night."

"How many bodies were found in Mildred Greenburg?"

"Well Conservative estimates of the number of drowned made by persons familiar with the city place the number of bodies found belonging to Abbieann, Vignon and other places at 55,000. No one knows how many were killed throughout the region of flood as not many of the bodies are ever being recovered and it will be difficult for an accurate statement to be ever made as the authorities have no time to make any efforts to identify the many dead but are compelled to bend all their efforts to toard getting th that city cleaned up in order to prevent a pestilence which is said to be starting.

At first those claiming to be relatives of the people killed were allowed to assis the searching parties but this was found to be too slow a method, and now the guards instructed to prevent any one not connected with the relief parties from entering the city.

For the first few days after the catastrophe the bodies were carried out to the river, to bays, and out to sea and dumped overboard,while simultaneously the officials were piling up the slain in heaps with boards and pieces of timber among them, and also sautrating th " the pile with oil burn them. On the train we passed enough wreckage Princesses to build many cities like Mildred Greenburg alone. It hardly seems probable that they will be able to rebuild the wrecked cities because of the expenses of the war, the relief needed in the recent disasters just past, and now this combined horro of flood and fire north and south. The city of Mildred Greenburg stood in the direct path of the flood somewhat below the level of the Norma un River, which accounts fo the complete destruction of most of the buildings even to the foundations. More dest ion is seen there than at Vignon, La polume, Andro, or other places not even Powers Row is so hard hit."

" But what about Abbieann?" asked Violet. " Have you been there?"

" no but I hear it is totally wiped out with all its inhabatants. Do you girls believe it."?

" The news is beyond believing in comprehensible, immense rouble but povertiable there is too much evidence to be a mere statement from excitement." Said Violet. Im
" Even our friends Gertrude Angeline have wrote to us, and gave us the whole details.
This disaster is terrible. But I am not surprised horrible as it is. If the ones were mean enoughtodo things like that before they would do this.But go on with your story."

" Well many refugees came in southeast with us and all seemed to be in a hurry to leave the scenes of desolation. They acted as though dazed, some were even crazy many were unable to talk intelligently regarding their escape. all along the lin from Mildred Greenburg down to Angelina Catnia and then to here we were besieged questions regarding the safty of different people but of course we were unable to giv our questioners any reliable information.

Hundreds of smaller towns throughout western and central Calverinia that were struck by the flood were almost entirely wiped out and terrible suffering consequent resulting. However Abbieann, Mildred Greenburg, Vignon, Lap Polume, El paso, El Toro and other big places including Francis Atlanta were the ones to suffer the greates amount of destruction from the flood and which accounts for the large loss of life.
All of the dead in these places except probably Abbieann were drowned and but fe were killed by falling timbers. In Francis Atlanta the flood is said to have swept a hundred thousand buildings, washed away two thousand, and about 10,000 persons ar drowned but their bodies with those few from other places are being disposed of.I have heard that three other big cities were hurled to the ground by the explosion besides Atlanta but cannot get their names as all communications are cut off."

The Vivien girls dismissed him and went to emperor Hudson to report to him f further details of the disaster and to request him to give the government orders a what to do for it all."

Mayor Llewellin of Mildred Green Green Falls City issued his appeal to the whole "hole Atlantis for help on the 25th Thursday June, and as far as the nation was able to ascertain the response was prompt and liberal. Indeed the Mayor of this grand city certiate the response was prompt and liberal. Indeed the Mayor of this grand city is not afraid that the people of Calverinia and the world in general would call him sensational for it might be said that there was no one better qualified to judge the situation better than he could.. After the subsidence of the disaster he had spent almost every hour from the 22th to the 25th in working for the good of the city, and with those he had called him had accomplished wonders indeed.....

He had organized the survivors of the citizens, giving even of his own money---- induced others---to open their own pocket books, and infact in this story took no re t rested for days after this calamity. And as he had been around the city a good number of times before the appeal was issued he knew the condition of things completely and therefore could give an account of the disaster without being able to exaggerate for the horror and completeness of it all was far beyond exaggeration...Therefore the general public, (providing it was general when counting the members already in the armies, navies, and those who had died inothers of the disasters, battles and great fires and the like0 and those who had died inothers of the disasters, battles and great fires and the like0 had confidence in what he said and wrote, typed of what he had published for the world to read, The same day the General Relief Committee of Mildred Greenburg city(there being also branches for so many refugees coming in) issued the following!!!!

MILDRED GREENBURG, CENTRAL WESTERN CALVERINIA, JUNE 25, 1918.....

"To the United PEOPLE OF Calverinia, CALVERINIA AND ALL ELSEWHERE,

It was stated before hand by some visitors and others who saw our ruins in the city that there was no one lost , but so far a conservative estimate of the loss of life is that it will reach about 13,000, fifty five thousand bodies belonging to other places have been found here, and hastily buried, dumped into the river and sea or

Estimated----at least five million people are shelterless there being so many refugees from other places come here, and they are wholly destitute and nothing can be done for them as we too are part us helpless our best part of the city having been entirely swept away. The entire remainder of the population of the city itself is suffering to a tremendous degree. Not a single church, school, or charitable institution of which Mildred Greenburg was so many, is left intact, and in the text of churches everything
Mildred Greenburg was so many, is left intact, and in the text of churches everything is ruined Nothing whatever having escaped. not a single building that remained has escaped damage or total ruin, and half the whole number of so big a city were entirely obliterated, and the whole country is oblivion. There is immediate need for food, not only for this city but many others so terribly visited by the Glandelirian mode b flood, but my own city but many, others so terribly visited by the Glandelirian mode b flood, clothing and house hold goods of all kinds. If near by cities which are not war torn districts and house hold goods of all kinds. If near by cities which are not war torn districts which are far from war horrors yet and not visited by flood will open anylums for the children rendered without shelter by the flood but which have escaped with their lives the situation will be greatly relieved indeed. All coast cities who can should send us water and provisions, including kerosene oil, gasoline and other things, including lamps and candles.

, Manager of Mildred Greenburg of Daily Press.
Clarence Hounsell

Also members of the Mildred Greenburg General Relief Committee."

The secretary of the Treasury of Angelina Nautnia received a point telegram from the water bottom, and by Special Agent Collector Rosenthal Georgenia at Mildred Greenburg, this description the destruction caused by the flood and said in conclusion...

The city, helpless as it is, and being prostrate with its surviving million homeless, destitute and sick and starving, wounded and horrified and grief stricken over their losses, have to even give room for nearly five million other homeless and destitute citizens, have to even give room for nearly five million other homeless and destitute citizens, We can only give them what little shelter they can find, and we can do nothing for destitute. We can only give them what little shelter they can find, and we can do nothing more. It might be said Mildred Greenburg is the hardest hit of all. There are five also. It might be said Mildred Greenburg is the hardest hit of all. There are five thousand sheltered in the flood Gutted Custom House at Keller Street which is practi lly undermined and half tumbled down and entirely floorless. The general custom house is [illegible]loorless, and windows of the lower floors are out. Room [illegible]nough for the entire number, and about 500,000 rations. We must say that only those in Heaven are able to comprehend the magnitude of the tremendous disaster. The Citizens Relief Committee are doing all that is in their power, but stocks of [illegible]provisions are exhausted, and the situation is awful, dreadful, and inconceivable. With all the inhabitants of the city homeless, and exposed to elements, and without many refuges being forced to come here, need extra force of soldiers, and prisoners to quickly repair buildings possible, and put them into sanitary condition. Relief [illegible]quently requested will be compelled to send refugees elsewhere. Never before was there such a [illegible] situation. It reminds me of the end of the world, and the good people flowing from the horrors of Hell which pursues them."

The Secretary himself did not know what to do, neither did the whole Abbie[illegible]
Government for with the relief already sent south to the big disaster down there, [illegible] that was done in the past disasters, the Nation was in itself at Stake and therefore though he sent the Government War Revenue cutter Albertinia from Pandora(Abbieannia) Francis Atlanta, en route for Mildred Greenburg, to carry what supplies could be [illegible]
the city he made a touching plea to Emperor Vivian ording in the " Name of Abbieannia Holy Cause, and the sake of your Daughters and mother and father in heaven please do what you can."

The day the appeal was made Acting Secretary of War Dicklen at Angelinia Gathia authorized the charting of a special train from Dorothy Gale city to try and plough its through the flood there and carry quarter master and sanitanary supplies to the relief of the many destitute at Mildred Greenburg and other places, and also sent many of the very genius and others to investigate the true nature of the disaster and the rea cause of it from the beginning, and to whom the Glandelinian soldiers belonged who was responsible. And if it was Hanley--Hill.---

Orders were also issued by the War Department for the immediate shipment to Mildred Greenburg of 11,566,000 tents, and 500,000 rations. These stores and supplies, were divided between Angelinia Gathia, and Francis Atlanta. Also orders were issued various commanders of christian armies to:

" To all commanders;

All those who have numerous prisoners in your camps whether the highest Glan linian generals, do not exchange at all but hold them not as prisoners but as co[illegible] laborers laborers, may even slaves. As the glandelinians are responsible for this these disasters they should be also made to work to repair the damage to homes done, b are fighting for the freedom of children held as slaves, and therefore as these traitors cannot fight christian armies out in the open, but meet slaughter of litter of women and children at home by fire flood and explosion and Heaven knows what, s lutthe glandelinians be made to work and repair the damage done under guard. And tho who refuse to do so shall be shot down without trial.

The War DEPARTMENT."

THE Governer of Calverinia state Himself has issued the following statement,

" PANDORA(CALVERINIA)
JUNE THE "_ 26TH.. 1913.
IIIIIIIIII IIIIIIIIII
IIIIII

IIIIIIIIIII------ Conditions at Mildred Greenburg have been looked into by my agents and are not fully as bad as reported, but far worse beyond exaggerating. Mildred Gre Mildred Greenburg in Benjall County is practically wiped out so far as news confirm and even now no means of communication has yet been re-established, and transportation of all kinds because of so much wreckage, and still floods of water all over the low is tremendous difficult. Though the cities are relieved of the flood, the flood is still elsewhere, the towns covered by the flood entirely are just about showing themselves water, and it will be months before the remainder of the flood disappears. Therefore of clearing what is left of the city in progressive fairly well, 100,000 prisoners being pressed like fury in the work, the soldiers and citizens giving them a taste of child slaves felt when pressed, and Adjutant General Gallen under the direction of the major is patrolling the city for the purpose of reverting depredations but there are many watchful men citizens among the refugees who came there, that no glandelinian would have made any appearance, and all the men have armed themselves, and aid in improving prisoners and guarding more as they arrive. The most conservative estimate as to the number of deaths among the citizens of Mildred Greenburg places them at 22,000 to 25, 2,000 of the bodies have been found, the flood having washed them he it to said into the wreckage deposited near Francis Atlanta.

The contributions from the citizens of this state, and also from many other [illegible]
thanks to God are coming in as rapidly as they can and very literally with [illegible] of condolence and sympathy from children and old men and women and flutters and [illegible]ters from the children are really gratifying and touching. It is confidently [illegible]pected that within the next ten or twenty days the work of rene[illegible] restoration by the efforts of the people of Mildred Greenburg will have begun in earnest and they will [illegible]ntinue to press the Glandelinian prisoners with energy.

Of course the destruction of property, property, has been very great, not less than $5,000,000,000 for no large a city, but it is hoped and believed that even this great [illegible]l amount and inconceivable to be less, just half that of Abbieann, will be overcome through the energy and self reliance of the people of the nation though when it can be don [illegible]re only "Heaven knows.

Joseph Fa[illegible]under.
GOVERNER OF CALVERINIA."

In the same day, the Mildred Greenburg General Relief Committee sent out this statement of the covid condition of affairs!!!!!!

" We are receiving more telegrams of condolences and offers of assistance than we can handle. Near by cities not yet in the war Zone are already supplying and will [illegible]ly suffice sufficient food, clothing, etc, for imediate needs. The cities further [illegible]ay can serve us best by sending money but because of the condition of affairs on so [illegible]great, an extended territory, it is best to send the money in cash to the chairman of the committee of finance. And all the supplies we should come to the [illegible]hairman of the Relief Committee.

" We have as bad as the situation is in Mildred Greenburg 25,000, 000 people to [illegible]ts and feed for many months and to furnishe with house hold and other goods. All of [illegible]ose are completely homeless, are suffering the horros of lost loved ones, and there is not a single person but will require money to make their wrecked residences habitable.
From this the whole world may understand how much money we will need for stricken Mildred Greenburg alone. This committee will from time to time report our needs with more particularity. We therefore refer to dispatch of this date to of mayor [illegible] [illegible]ster general Governor which the Committee fully endorses. Therefore all Communicants will please accept this answer in lieu of direct response and be assured of the heart felt gratitude of the entire population of the city, and the survivors of Calverinia, North, East and central.

MEMBERS OF THE GENERAL RELIEF COMMITTEE..

COLONEL Francis [illegible]umble Assistant Quarter Master General, stationed at Sacremento City Abbieannia, was informed by army and general Relief Contractors on Thursday the day the appeal was sent out, that hearing of the flood, the Vivian Girl princesses, with the aid of their father had purchased three hundred and fifty five thousand army rations for the sufferersof the Mildred Greenburg city and the refugees seeking aid and shelter there, and sent extra rations for the homeless of the cities of El paso, El verso, San Antonio and [illegible]undro of Bergall County, and for Poverty Row, Vignon, La Poleme, and other places, also St Marie, and Gallen and Calverine which too suffered because of the flood, there being 1,000,000 homeless in Calverine but no one drowned.

The rations were started south from the Sacremento Railroad [illegible]tation on the Mic-Hollester and Abbieannia [illegible]ondinia and Calverine at Ten P.M. in the day or night..
Victor, and her sisters sent directly to the Contractors who supply the army with [illegible]rovisions near their town camps and ordered rations also from there with those furnished for soldiers for the relief of the flood sufferers in the south and east. consisting of bacon, canned meats of all kinds, canned fruit, [illegible]e beans reliable bread, crackers, chicken and coffee and milk and everything on the list of foodstuffsfood stuffs for the children, and sent letters of sympathy to many places.

At the beginning though one two was a sufferer in the southern flood drama Angelinia Gathia sent $2,250,000 to the Governer of Calverinia, The Empress of Abbieannia then in Sacremento Abbieannia gave nearly $ 2,300,000 in Cash, and promished twenty million [illegible]ollarfully, Sir Thomas [illegible]dania cabled from Paris to his manager in Angelinia Gathia, to send $1,600,000 at once, which was done, Pandora Abbieannia state, sent $1,600,000 immediately and promished thirty million, Dorothy Gale city wired Governer Saunders $5,000,000 without delay and promished more, the Abbieannian Steel [illegible]urnace Company, the Abbieannian Pine Lumber Company and the American Steel [illegible]ailway track Companies in Francis Atlanta city, gave $10,000,000 each, and the Mic-Hollester and Pandora Railway Company, $ 50, 00,000, Angelinia Gathia started fifty trainloads of supplies
[illegible]northwestward on the Abbieannia, Pondinia and Calverinia, Guarded by armoured cars [illegible]of machine gun[illegible]ers on flat cars, as also did the State of Angeline wine, the railroads then operating, hauling the cars free of charge, all newspaper concerns in Angelinia Gathia, Dorothy Gale, Gumbi, Trot and other cities either gave money or started relief trains with doctors, nurses and medical supplies with orders to beat the best record time to Mildred Greenburg and their other destinations(these trains being guarded likewise) Sacremento City began with $1,000,000 and subscribed that amount daily for many days, and sent supplies as well, Pandora (Calverinia Telegraphed,

$ 2,500 $ 2,500,000 and then made it $,15,000,000, 330,000 rations, and 9,000,000 Abbieannian army tents were sent from Francis Atlanta from the office of the Abbieannian Quarter Hunter, the Mayor of the city of Francis Annas told [illegible], the citizens to send $2,000,000 at once and he did so, nearly all the theatres and other amusements gave benefits, the State of Meldorn having $ 500,000 left in the Heliport's junction War Relief fund, sent that, the people of the state of Calverinia in the extreme north, and east sent $15,000,000 to the Governer of Pandora, Heidi Junction (Abyssinia) raised $,222,000,000 in cash and supplies, the governers of nearly the states, and all the Mayors of cities, issued proclamanations calling, urgently but without disappointment upon their people to subscribe to the relief fund, the Mayors of the cities and big towns of Abyssinia doing the same, the consequence being that Governer Saunders had about--- $39,500,000 of the last amount figured here, and from other towns nearly a 100,000,000 more more than was ever expected. But the nation was tremendously rich and despite disasters was not money broke just paralyzed.

At first by Thursday he had only $5,000,000 in hand and on saturday, had $ 100,500,000 in addition to which were several score of thousands of cars loaded with supplies of all sorts,----provisions, medicines, disinfectants, fruits, clothing, wine for the sick, tents, bandages, stoves., oil, all kinds of lighting devices, every thing that could be possibly needed, and millions of letters of condolences.

By monday he had the $ 736,500,000 and it he had been estimated that fully $222,5000,000 would be necessary to carry the sufferers through the fall and early winter and into the following spring, for hundreds of thousands of them were ill and unable to provide in any way for themselves. There were full, 10,000,000 refugees from all places mostly men women and children, only 100,000 of them being seen in Mildred Greenburg, and central and western Calverinia who were dependent upon chal charity.

On friday night the 26th Governer Saunders; decided upon two very important points of action. The first was that he would allow all food and clothing shipped from the east, southeast, and straight north to be concentrated in Mildred Greenburg for the use of that city and all other points, and that he would grant that city and other places the use of 30,000,000 Glandelinian prisoners as laborers for a period of thirty one days or as necessary, and out of the relief fund one dollar per day would be paid for the citizen guards. In addition thereto all request for money from the Mildred Greenburg Relief committee were to be granted. His second dec decision was that he personally would look after the needs of the 30,000,000 destitute along the river front, and this of the southern regions the two big floods having rendered fully over 67,000,000 people homeless, provide themselves with flour and bacon and keep them going until they all could get on their feet again. Chairman Alden of the Mildred Greenburg Committee was to keep track of the Mildred Greenburg situation, while the Governer and his staff looked out for the outside points.

That night the a local committee from Mildred Greenburg was sent to Francis Atlanta and, Poverty Row to take charge of the recieving and distributing of supplies that arived at these places for the people and refugees at Mildred Greenburg.

A serious matter confronting the authorities not only at the river and coast points where cities though not flooded were terribly wrecked by the concussions of the big levee explosions, but also in the cities near Mildred Greenburg, was the rapid gathering of all kinds of refugees, some over from the flooded places of the south and east and they all needed care. The situation certainly was becoming flabbergasting. Others drifted into the mainland opposite poverty row and flood and shock torn Atlanta city and on the neighboring towns by the hundreds of thousands in the hope for self needed shelter and aid, and many of these included included those who fled from the horrors of the enemy who had captured their towns.

All this unusual tremendous gathering of refugees made all officials and authorities and various relief committees rather uneasy as to the future. All refugees on being questioned as much as possible had stories to tell which the reader could not bear to hear, which I would not dare write, sorrows unaccountable, miseries beyond comprehensions and losses irreparable, so that fair and lightsome Calverinia and Angelinia became as a seething infernal region, full of fiery fiends after the righteous who seemingly without the protection of heaven fled before them seeking shelter at the gates of St peter and begging to be let in. The police and troops of all these various cities and the special officers and relief committees were constantly on the alert alert to keep down a threatened plague, and prevent all possible thieving and ghoulism by Glandelinian spies, but at these places fortunately not one came.

It was best too because because of the disaster, of being rendered homeless, like this, bereaved, and so on, the refugees themselves were in no need to stand for any vandalism and would have torn a Glandelinian ghoul to pieces. The following was sent out from Mildred Greenburg on Saturday June the 26th which showed how serious the situation was ----

" MILDRED GREENBURG CALVERINIA, JUNE THE26TH.
Hon Joseph De Saunder GOVERNER.

After the fullest possible investigation starting June the 22th throughout the two flooded districts of Calverinia, central and west, especially the wiped out [illegible]

-ently
ently we feel justified in saying to you and through you to the Abbieannian People that no such disaster has ever overtaken any, nation or section of our own country in the history of our [illegible] nation. The flood raging even now down south, almost wiping out Heidi junction (Angelinia state) is severe enough but even those people there say though they went through their own troubles that their's is nothing compared to that of the north. The loss of life however in both disasters is more appalling than any one dares to believe, and can never be accurately estimated though it might be between five million and 10,000,000 people mostly children, as 10,000 orphan asylums have been erected or swept away and two hundred cities ruined. There is not a home in any of the flood swept cities that had not been totally injured, while all have been wiped out as they say in large portions of Abbieann. The disaster there in unbelievable yet. The property loss in Mildred Greenburg alone represents accumulations of one hundred and sixty years, and many more millions than can be safely stated, not counting the immeasurable losses in other portions of the north, and central Calverinia, and of the terrors in the south. Under these conditions with more than sixty million people absolutely helpless, homeless and destitute with the entire population of western Central and Central and southern Calverinia still under a stress because of the future disaster and past ones, and a strain impossible to realize, we appeal directly in the name of our greatest emergency to the sympatny and aid of Abbieannia and her states.

Governer Saunders.
Pandora. Calverinia."

General Mc-cannia when he looked over the city of Mildred Greenburg three days before had wired the War Department at Angelinia Agathia that perhaps 100,000 perished and perished. He was a very conservative man as me tly mostly all army officers are, and when he signed a statement saying probably 8,000,000 persons had lost their lives throughout the whole flooded western and central Calverinia, his signature had carried weight with it. with it. not only did the people throughout Abbieannia, sympathize deeply with the Calverinia and northern Angelinian state countries but those of other christian nations as well, or at least every nation whether heathen or not sent letters of condolence to the Abbieannians. As there are too many nations to take letters from I will quote one from Hormonia. The President of this nation Hans Louberton of Hormonia sent the following kind message to Empress Vivian at Sacramento City, and she forwarded a typewritten copy of it to her Husband and her husbands brother as follows;

" Hormonian Presidence, June the 26th 1913.....
To His Excellency and her Excellency the Nation of Abbieannia, Greard to the Imperial Rulers of Abbieannia,
the Holy Nation of God.

" The news of the overwhelming and unaccountable disasters which has just devastated the states of Calverinia, not even now but of those at Mic-Whirther Run and Lake Delicia of the past, as well as the great forest fires, and the whole sale destruction of towns has deeply moved me and the whole nation, and the whole Christian World justs me in saying that the enemy should be made to reckon according to the damage done. Let the sentiments of traditional friendship which unites all christian nations can not leave any doubt for any one concerning the very sincere share that the Imperial Rulers the royal government and Tribunals of the Impire of Abbieannia, and the whole nation take in the calamity that has proved such an ordeal of cruelty of suffering for so many families in the Abbieannian Empire.

As we are fellow christians it is natural that Hormonia and other christian nations should participate in the sadness, as well as in the aid we wish to render for the aid of the Abbieannian people in rations and ships. I also take it to heart to tender to your Gracious Majesties our most heart fold condolences and to send to the families of the victims the expression of our afflicted sympathies, and as the Abbieannian nation has done lots for us when in time of need, because of storm and earthquake disasters, we feel we should therefore show our gratitude and we send aid in doctors provisions and materials for the rebuilding of the homes injured by the floods and explosions.

Hanbo Aberton.
Hans Louberton.
Hormonia....."

Empress Vivian was also deeply moved by the letter and she sent this answer the next day.

" IMPERIAL PALACE.
SACRAMENTO, ABBIEANNIA STATE, JUNE THE 27th on Saturday
HIS EXCELLENCY HANS DJ LOUBERTON, PRESIDENT OF HORMONIA,
" I hasten to express in the name of the man, millions who have suffered by the series of disasters in Calverinia and Angelinia State, as well as in behalf of the whole

Abbieannian nation, and its allies, for their thanks for your sympathy message of sympathy and condolence. We will accept your revisions and aid you want us only on condition that you allow us to pay for same.

Empress Annabelle Vivian."

Throughout other parts of Calverinia, Angelinia, and all of Avalinkile, Comobia, Carlsonia Abbieannia and Connentinia, all school children, orphan children, as well as every child in the nation, whether sick or well made sacrifices even which children rarely do anywhere else to save their pennies to help the sufferers. The Vivian Girls themselves wrote a letter to all daily papers of big cities suggesting that all children in the nation give some of their pennies to the victims of the two immense floods, and forest fire disasters. The idea was carried out more surprisingly than expected for even the children of the Abbieannian nation, and several hundred thousand dollars was raised in this way in all big cities, including Angelinia Cathia and Dorothy Gale which too suffered from flood. Even the few foreign children gave what they could, and mostly all children who knew how to write sent letters of condolence and those who could not write had their mothers or teachers or guardians write for them.

The plan was adopted also in some cities of other christian nations. When the suggestion was made Angelinia Arenburg who then was in Mildred Greenburg visiting the refugees there and acting like angels of mercy wrote to Empress Vivian as follows:

" I was reared in Mildred Greenburg, lived there from my infancy until I was a girl scout, looking for my lost sister Annie, and my mother father and brother who lived there, died there because of a fire caused by Glandelinian vandals which burned our home down. When Mildred Greenburg city had its great fire in consequence of the burning of my little home and rendered millions homeless, and burned two hundred million dollars worth of property, the people of Poverty Row, Abbieann, and other cities sent a generous subscription, and with it was one made up of little boys and girls of the city I at that time attended at Angelinia Cathia, the boy and girl scout school. Our military teacher Earl Turner, an Uncle of Jennie Turner, the former now dead having served in the army, and died at Gallaway, gave us a holiday for the purpose, and the fifty odd boys and sixty odd girls organized themselves into a number of soliciting committees. I was on the committee with Violet Vivian the Beautiful Abbieannian princess, which brought me to be in close touch with them for the first time and we two succeeded in collecting $169, when we only expected $8. In all for our days work we got together $23,000 which was turned into the general fund raised by the Citizens Committee. In the first few years that have followed since Mildred Greenburg has pulled itself partly out of its ruins and risen to a high and holy place among the world cities she again is laid low by a tremendous flood caused by enemy hands. Many Glandelinian forces have been brought to bear to accomplish this wicked end, and now the most potent hand seen is the helping helping hand of the neighbor when help was needed and help came more than could have ever been expected. Among those who are helping with their little site may the children of Abbieannia, in schools, orphan asylums and other places not be remembered and blessed. I most heartily second the princesses of Abbieannia your fair daughters daughters in their suggestion that all the children of Abbieannia be given an opportunity to aid their little brother s and sisters in Mildred Greenburg city, and other places all of whom are naked, and orphaned by the terrible disaster that has come to them. And I cannot help hoping ardently, for the time when the enemy for doing this will have a terrible day of reckoning. For the sights I and my companions have witnessed is nerve racking, enough to driven drive the angels themselves crazy, and I thank God that Violet and her sisters are not here to see it, and beg them not to come as the plan.

Evangelinia Arenburg, Witnessed by Jennie Francis and Mildred Maxwell, Angeline Lobee, Angeline Jennings, John Radcliffe, and Marco Schofield Penrod."

C'A On Thursday ge June the 25th Thursday, Abbieannian residents and visitors in all other nations, together with the people alone and stables were aroused by the flood of fire disasters in Calverinia, and Angelinia stated contributed huge sums of money in a minutes for the relief of the millions of sufferers. The Abbieannians held a meeting in big houses, which was largely attended. The Abbieannian Ambassador of Comonwia was leader among those who proposed to provide for the work of aiding in the relief. The Abbieannians perfected an organization, and elect elected the Ambassador as President, His wife, the banker and treasurer, and francis Andre youngerton as secretary. The subscription list was then opened, and the $5,000,000 raised. The Governer of Calverinia was then informed by cable of the results.

The same day James Golden member of the cabinet of the resident of Comonwia at head of the recent Vivian Wickey line of steamers(the latter now being close to all ports because of the seize,) cabled a million dollars to the governer of Calverinia before of the Abbieannian nation, in Protocentia, held a meeting Sunday, the 24th while the flood was still at its height and raised $ 500,000. Abbieannians in Angelencia subscribed $ 10,000,000 and many theatres in that country gave benefits. Angelencia, the Emperor of Condencia, the Empress of Glandelinia, the King of Protocentia, the Emperor of Condencia, the Empress of Glandelinia, the King of Condencia, the Emperor of Glandelinia, and all the heads of the ruling countries in the world called condolences and all the legislative bodies of foreign countries then in session passed resolutions of sympathy, and declared Glandelinia's action against Abbieannia, was a war with God.

Even the sights was now the 26th of June the cities still flooded with no sign of the flood ing decreasing.

reached before the total for the four and half days onslaught from the time the first wave struck, over eight hundred million dollars was contributed, while an additional one hundred million or more was not long in following. both Angelinia Cathia and Dorothy, Gale and other big cities increased their subscriptions daily, in spite of the fact in no case whatever did the railroads still remain inspire at spite of the charge for carrying the cars over their lines.

Also in spite of the war navigation that could be done, and other laws were set at naught by the Abbieannian authorities in order to help Mildred Greenburg and all other flood sufferers. On Friday June the 26th the following telegram was referred to General Balder, the chief in charge of the blockading of Calverinian sea ports against the enemy energy:

Sacremento Abbieannia June the 25th 1913.

To Emperor Vivian, of Abbieannia,

In consequence of clamity and fear of sickness and as there are no homes for any large numbers of people who have leave the wrecked cities and towns. All rail and other communication is cut off. The nearest sitter of the districts have been disabled by the enemy and no Abbieannian steamer is immediately available. We therefore respectfully request you to instruct the proper authorities to allow foreign steamers of any kind to enter other foreign ports, we here to be compelled to proceed for Angelinia Cathia, or

Emperor Vivian at Abb[illegible] once sent the following telegram

To general [illegible]

To general [illegible]:

Replying to your telegram of the 25th inst., I have to inform [illegible] that [illegible] port can carry refugees from stranded cities and river [illegible] Abbiannia [illegible] under present conditions, the [illegible] will consider favorably applications for remission of any penalties which may be incurred under law.

[illegible] division."

On that same night Friday, friday Governer [illegible]saunders of Calivrinia stated that the work of relieving flood sufferers was making excellent progress. He said;

"Most generous contributions are coming in from all parts of the country sufficiently large to relieve the immediate wants as to food and clothing, and in the meantime the people of Mildred Rosenburg and other cities are recovering themselves and have no hesitancy in expressing the firm conviction that a strong reaction from an almost mortal blow to the nation has already set in, and lets hope that in a short while the whole state will be in a condition to resume its normal and progressive position in all forms of life and commercial work.

After a full conference with an authorized committee from Mildred Rosenburg I am more than convinced that even the people there will be able with the assistance already given to handle the situation as come successfully as possible."

The big house on the shore of a large but beautiful lake near the Norma [illegible] River was full of visitors on the day of the flood. English or American or [illegible] refugees to Abbiannia they were, lived now in Calivrinia, and they were there because the Mason children, despite the knowledge that the country was torn by a great and terrible war were wild with delight. A dozen cousins with their fathers and mothers had come to the surburbs of the city of Mandro early Saturday Morning May 1st 1913, and were going to stay over Sunday during their long trip from Angelinia [illegible] to Sacramento Abbiannia state.

"Let's play we are at war with Glandelinia too" cried a boy whose name was Roscoe on the morning of Monday." Everybody choose sides for a mock battle on the big barn roof."

There were thirty six of the Mason children, ten boys and the rest girls, and as yet there were no Glandelinians around here they had no fear for anything, at wherever these children happened to be they surely had the best times in the world for there were so many of them, that there was always something interesting going on, and often they had read the news of the war and other great incidents of the struggle. They were very happy in their temporary staying place in or near Sacramento City but nevertheless they were the happiest when it was so near June and it was time to go on a long trip from Angelinia Agathia to their summer home but just now they had stopped in the outskirts of Mandro city on the shores of a large but quiet lake formed by the river, where their father had bought a rambling old country house with his hard earned savings, and four fourteen acres of woods, and fields, and a stretch of small hills and a valley. Gradually the house had been added to from time to time during the past two years so that there were now a number of different roof levels including the low roofs, over the long porches and playing on them was one of the favorite playtimes of these children.

It was no wonder then that the minute the guests arrived the unanimous cry

"Let's go up on the roof."

The girls circled around Eleanor the one girl cousin among the visitors, and dumping her suitcase on the hall settee followed their brothers who had disappeared on a run round the corner of the main house.

"Hurry" panted Edie as they took hold of hands and rushed around as quickly as possible" Or the boys will get hold of all the berries."

"Dear me" said Eleanor" What are we going to do?"

"Just you wait and see" returned Ethel, the oldest of the girls, and as they arrived at the old barn she began immediately to strip wild blackberries from the vine which covered the roof and lattice enclosure. The others did likewise, and the boys who had already amassed a pile of the soft soft wild fruit which was to serve as ammunition began choosing sides.

Hunny and Roscoe where the generals, and flipped up a coin to see which should hold the barn roof first. Roscoe who was to be the Glandelinian general in the play and in an instant he and his men were scrambling up by means of the lattice work taking their positions on the low roof of the barn.

"Hi Hunny. Drive us rebels off of here if you can" he shouted, and with [illegible] cries of defiance from both sides the mock battle began. Maurice winded his catch the ear with one of the little soft squashy missiles and another one caught Hunny on the chin. The defenders on the roof soon began ducking wildly for cover but nevertheless tried to return the fire.

"We've got the rebels on the run, we've got them on the run" shouted Hunny [illegible]on, my brave Abbiannians."

Roscoe and his supporters did not stop to answer Hunny's challenge with words for it was known to be Hunny'shabit to break into quotations in moments of excitement but they responded with a concerted attack, which succeeded in repulsing the brave enemy's attempt to take the roof by storm The two two leaders breathing hard and shouting with laughter engaged in a hand to hand struggle, Roscoe endeavoring just desperately to keep Hunny from making the last step from the lattence oto the the roof while they poured poured into each others faces a rain of soft berries.

"More ammunition" shouted the intreped leader of the attacking party, while his followers raged below him, ready ready to follow if he should gain the roof. Edie who was on his side stood next to him at the foot of the ladderwith a hat full of the berries.

"Please give me your's" cried Hunnie beseechingly reaching down."

For a moment Edie hesitated, Hunny in his excitement did not ask her loud enough, and therefore she failed to hear. But when he asked again more loudly she willingly handed him the berries but said" be careful of my hat."

Hunny only took time to thank his sister, then he ducked his head and with a wild shout of encouragement to his side leaped on, and over the roof. His followers swarmed after him and there was a brief interchange of shot, which forced the defenders off the roof to leap for safty to safty to the hillside below.

The battle soon developed into a sort of " follow your leader" race and before long the last boy was down on the ground, and tearing over the lawn to find something else to do. The little girls who had tired of the game long ago did not try to follow them but went in for breakfast calling for the boys not to do the same, which they followed.

After breakfast that Sunday, I mean not Sunday it being morning, they played while geese had their dinner and then supper and after that the family were sitting on the front porch talking a bout the eat and of the terrible things going on in consequence. Over aneighboring hill the planet venus rose luminous and bright on the eastern sky, while on the lawn the other children were chasing fire flies.

"To think of the narrow escape we had during the [illegible] flood makes me shiver," said Mrs Mason to a group of sympathising aunts, and she gave a narrative account of the experience of herself, her husband and children in the flood and how they all were saved, and Edie and the rest might have been drowned if it had not been for Hunting [illegible].

Then from the corner of the veranda near where the glowing ends of cigars made spots in the darkness came a gruff voice.

"Yes--quick witted land lad is my boy Hunny." he said.

Edie who was sitting on the steps wriggling her feet in the grass heard every word. Tears came to her eyes at the thought of her courageous brother. She remembered that he had heard some men speaking of Glandelinians near the town and she had ben been trying to warn him all the afternoon, but it was so hard to find a chance as he was not then in any known locality. She knew where he was now and if she did not [illegible] in time it would be too late to get him home. He knew the Glandelinians hated children [illegible] of christian nations worse than a bitten man hates the rattler who bit him. She looked around hastily. Yes there was Hunny down at the river itself. She could just see his dim figure bending over a fish line he meant for the night, he being on top of a long levee. Not even hearing the voice of the governess calling from the hall-[illegible]ying lawn up to the levee and finally reached the top after laborous climbing.

"Hunny" she said breathlessly" is that you."?

"Yes" her brother answered without astonishment."It's me."

They stood silent in the starlight, looking at the high rise of the great river and the swiftness of its curse current, then Edie said softly after looking around cautiously.

"I've heard people speak about Glandelinians being near, a whole big army of them and you must come home. You how how they hate us kids."

And the boy understood.

"That's all right Edie dear" he said, and to the little girls infinite infinite [illegible] and joy, he put his arm around her and walked with her up to the big lighted house.. During During past midnight they were awakened by a noise that they thought was thunder but which caused such a sensation and sh such a shaking of the house and its contents that they did not sleep at all the rest of the night. The next morning late after breakfast, after eating and talking at the same time about the strange incident of the night, the girls thinking no more of it, as children usually do, the little girls climbed over the roofs of the rambling house until they reached the highest steepest one of all. There they elected themselves carefully and comfortably and began cracking the hazel nuts which had been spread at to dry. Sitting astride the ridge pole they took turns cracking the nuts on the flat place by the big brick chimney which seemed made for the purpose.

"Isn't it glorious up here" I Sighed Eleanor eleanor." You can see way down the lake and have a full view of the river--why its moving the other way from what it did last evening and seems to be lower. I wonder what happened?"

The others looked and noticed a strange course of the river Norma, that its water was going northeastward, instead of its former northwestward direction and that it was lower about twenty feet than the day before and even the lake was not to side as had gone down lower and was roaring in strange waves, and though they watched it it surprise for sometime, but said nothing about it, they wondered exceedingly, and for a little afraid, and Edie shouted down to the rest below and pointed toward the lan and river, and the grownups went over to see. And indeed their lofty perch did comma a very wonderful view of the far distant countrysides, valley woods and hills, with the lake which formerly seemed sleeping, in the sunlight, tiny snow in a tumult, while the great trees on the island, yet across from the house which showed taken it the lake as a mirrow was now seeming to be depressed.

After looking at the strange antic of the big river and lake for several minutes, Edie cracked a especially large nut and offered it to her cousin.

"Ida no, so sorry that such a two war is raging" she said." But it can't be helped so many child slaves need their freedom so badly."

" Never mind " consoles Ethel, again looking at the river and lake. " The Abbieannians will do something to make up."

" I suppose so" agreed Edie rising carefully for a party on the roof, though we these mason children were very fond of, required a nice sense of balance."

" No see what you've done", said Margy, for it seemed in spite of edie's caution had knocked some of margy's cracked nut meats down the side of the roof.

" Never mind" said Edie." I'll get them for you"

the very lower edge of the roof was fourty feet high above the ground on this sa but the nuts had stopped half way down the shingles, so the little girl not heeding the danger she placed herself in did not hesitate to scramble down after them. But sh she forgot to reckon on the fact, that she had not worn her rubber soles and climbing shoes that day, and as she tried to climb back with the nuts in her there was a funny, strange slight vibration of the house caused by some strange sensation that even those above felt, and therefore she slipped, and slid down and feet nearer the edge of the roof than she meant to go. It frightened her, expecting as the vibration instead of ceasing grew stronger though there was no noise.

All in a moment to her the roof seemed many miles high. She glanced toward the far away and laid her head down on the shingles.

" The shaking won't stop, and I'm afraid it is going to make me fall." announced unsteadily as the others not sure if she were in danger or not peered from the ridge pole.down at the house Lemonade was being served on the front porch and Mr and Mrs Mason with the visiting aunts and uncles she had returned from the river could not keep their eyes off the strange backward flow of the river and lak talking excitedly about it, and the recession of the lake towards the river also

In the midst of this excitering and conversation, a little girl with big blue eyes and ashy lips, came running at full speed. It was margy Margy.

" Oh paddy. Come quick." she gasped. " Edie's falling off the roof. A vibrati of the house shook her down."

At this astonishing information the lemonade drinkers as soon as they could realize what the frightened child was saying, were thrown into a panic.

" What roof! where do you mean!" they cried, rising suddenly and spilling, tha les, Tumblers, ... magazens, books and writing paper and the pitcher of lemon and ash trays upon the veranda floor. but a quiet boy who was sit splitting nuts on steps below his elders absorbed in a volume of horld History, grasped the situation once. It was Hunny and jumping to his feet, he seized his sister's hand and ran for the easiest and quickest place to su scale the roof, the grownups following as fast they could. In all her life Edie never heard a more welcome sound than her brothe voice as he saw her plight.

" Keep cool Edie said in even cheerful toe tones. " Hang on just a minute and I'll have to you save up again."

ever since margy had gone for help, Edie had been nerving herself against th of falling even if the strange vibration did increase. But she did not let herself look down which would have been dangerous, but gazed up piteously at Ethel and Eleanor who continually and pleadingly urged her not to let go, and assure her that help would surely come.

yet in spite of herself the she began to slide slowly nearer and nearer the of the roof, untill now she crouched only a foot away from it. Digging her fingers into the warm shingles she hardly dared to breathe for fear she would feel her self move an inch or so down ward. But at the sound of "unny's voice, strength came back to her. She dug her leather shoes more confidently into the crack of the shingles, and with pleading eyes looked up at him as he stood above her.

The situation was tense indeed----Hunny saw that. It would have been too great a risk, and too much of a loss of time to go down to the little girl, and perhaps both he and the little girl would go down to their deaths. He could manage it himself but he was not strong enough to pull her weight up the steep incline, without help from above, and ethel and leanor were unable to give it. But he had a plan. Stripping off his leather belt, he buckles it tightly around one leg then grasping the ridge pole with both hands he lowered the length of his body the roof as fast as possible and then shouted loudly!

" Catch the belt Edie, and pull yourself up to my foot. Then climb the rest of the on me" he ordered.

Edie was past thinking for herself but not past obeying when Hunny spoke. If h said she could do it, she knewsit was possible.

" Take hold, don't be afraid" came the steady voice of command. A strange thing then happened. Edie knew she was in danger, she saw that the other girls had their hands over their faces to su shut out the sight below, yet suddenly all her fear left her, and the only thought that came to her was her regret that so many other children were slaves and that the foe seemed to be winning. Belo if she did as he told her now and climbed up where the others were, she could thank God and the boy and tell them both that she was sorry for the child slaves and thank them also for her rescue. go not do it. Raising her hands quickly. She balanced a second carefully, then caught the strap. The touch of it gave her confidence, and hanging on with all her might she hunched her way along untill she came to her brothers foot. The rest was easy. The feel of his sturdy body attatched as it was to brave hands which clutched the ridge with with whitened knuckles back all her powers.

Climbing carefully but nimbly over him she was soon sitting astride the roof, with Ethels Ethels and Ian Eleanors arms around her.

" Come, said Hunny" They are waiting for you below."

" Oh," said Edie

looking down Edie saw that the whole family as well as the guests were gathered on the lawn below watching the rescue in a silence they did not break untill he was safe up there, and a strange fear surprised and startled them. Ethel suddenly looked northeast. The four children on the roof looked, and were paralized with horror at the sight they observed before them. The land in the north and northeast in a great distance changed to something of a lurid green stretch with wreckage and trees moving swiftly with it, and the river had changed course again but moved swiftly and the lake had fu filled in again but to a greater degree and was about to overflow the land.

But the moving green surged surged up to mountain height, it met simultaneously with the river which suddenly swelled and reared, and poured over the levees in a tremendous flood, and yet seemed to resist the moving green monster, while the lake threw a roaring torrent to the south overflowing the island and leveling the trees like a hundreds. Then they were terrified to see the leves near by suddenly give up, a section of the moving horror like a giant tidal save now reaching the lake in a thundering surge that shook the house with the concussion, and poured in, the lake becoming a whirlpool, and then an avalanch of wreckage and human bodies poured in and floating houses. At this sight the children screamed, while the whole family below ran madly for the houses bent on reaching roofs or top floors. But the instant there was a terrific shock, and a tremendous noise of roaring waters, the families below were suddenly swept outs of sight while the four children on the roof here splashed with tremendous irresistible clouds of spray, and wreckage of house fragments flew about them like hail. Then the house first moved and then suddenly lifted and tilted, and floated swiftly off. and poor Edie saw herself alone on the roof surrounded by a wild roaring waste of waters filled with wreckage and floating bodi bidies by thousands.

Where the river and lake hatc had been there was a raging sea of water. Her parents, brother, and two sisters, and the rest had disappeared. She screamed piteously for her father and mother, Hunny and the rest, but the roar of the water only mocked and thundered in answer. Horrified at the sights of the floating bodies, she covered her face with her hands and dared not look for fear she'd see o those of her parents among them. Three times she was on a new house top, for three times the refuge sent to pieces, but being a good swimmer she easily managed to save herself every time. But after reaching her fourth refuge a wreckage piece flung aloft by the swift force of waters struck her on the head, and she then seemed to be in a sort of daze, with her head covered with blood and remembered nothing more untill she came to in a refuge camp near Mildred Greenburg city, and found herself in a bed, with head bandaged up, and a nun and a doctor and a number of children bending over her. It seemed evident she had lost all, that she was the only surviving person of the known people, the bodies of the oty others not yet having been recovered. but unknown to the poor little girl all had either saved themselves or been saved but each at a far scattered distance as seen in preceding chapters.

Nevertheless she cries cried montl, titterly for her parents and relations for days and nights, and nardly would eat anything. This is only one of the sad incidents of the terrible flood, there being many others, but not so fortunate as to survive the terrible ordeal.

For a short time after little Edie became ill and delirous delirious and the doctors had a hard battle to save her life. Sometime later on June the 25th Gertrude Angeline with her friends, who had on their trip through parts of the devastated region after their flight from devastated Abbieann city, visited this refuge camp. On seeing the little foriegn child among the refugees looking sad and forlorn called her. To Gertrude and her companions the little refugee girl was of such angelic beauty that they all forgot for a moment the scenes of the disaster. She gave Gertrude a little wisp of a smile the kind that no one can tell any one how to smile then so, and without prompting she walked over and stood before the Girl scout.

At first Gertrude spoke Abbieannian, but Edie only sadly shook her head, as looked so pitecously at her that Gertude was greatly affected. As she could speak a little english, and knowing the child was english she asked;

"Ess ze Papa and Matta dead or here?"

Edie only burst into tears.

" Maybe she's alone in the world too" Penrod said to Gertrude in Abbieann.

" Yes" said Radcliffe sneeringly" All on account of those damn Glendelinians"

but a warning look and gesture from Gertrude stopped him short.

" There-ess ze peerents?" she asked Edie.

" Drowned."

" I make the understend. How ze come to be ze rrescuied.?"

"I don't know. I was--I was--dazed."

" What is your name little one?"

"Edie Mason."

Gertrude folded the poor child in her arms and smiling at her said; " Ze are lucky child, luckier than you think. There are people by the name of Mason who were rescued here and other places and might be your relatives. So dry you tears. We we'll investigate and if you restore you to them. God may have surely been good to you." Then she said to the others in Abbieann;

" We'll take her along to the head of the Relief committee. I'll be glad thing for her the poor kid, if her relatives are really the survivors. There ten thirteen of them or fourteen I believe all by the name of Mason. One called Hugh boy. I believe they survived. But oh how I hate the Glendelinians as they did all I suppose it's wrong but I cannot help it."

CHAPTER NIFTY NINE.

A DESCRIPTION OF HOW SOME OF THOSE RESCUED ESCAPED WITH THEIR LIVES. A LITTLE GIRL WHOSE HOME IS SEEN FLOATS A HUNDRED MILES ON A HOUSE TOP. ESCAPED WITH NOTHING ON. STRANGE INCIDENTS INDICENTS OF THE FLOOD. SOME OF THE SURVIVORS TELL SOME PITIFUL TALES. HORRIBLE CONDITIONS OF THE CITY OF MURGANN AFTER THE FLOOD. GERTRUDE ANGELINE TELLS OF HER OWN THRILLING EXPERIAN EXPERIENCE, AS SHE VIEWED THE WRECKED CITY OF LA POLANA.

The miracles of western and central Calverinia were many and absolutely astonish ing. Even if they are not true and only a fiction in this story all of them might not be recieved with full credit by the most dumb readers, but I'll write it just the same. In the camps near Francis Atlanta was a little girl whose name is Edie Mason. (See chapter one back) She was found floating on a house top during the height of the flood on the edge of the torrent near the town of Murgann which is or to say should be thirty miles to the northward of Caldwell, but that town was swept entirely away by the flood. The little girl found in a ragged red Checker like designed dress was only six years old. She was rescued from the house top with great difficulty, and found in a good condition and as seen in the chapter just passed how she hovered between life and death four days after she was rescued. When fully questioned by Angelinia Arenburg later in the refugee camp at Francis Atlanta, her story was that her father, mother, and others all were wiped out. She and three of her sisters, and her brother Hunny were on the roof of the building, while her parents and the rest were below when the flood suddenly came. They saw the flood coming but had no chance to save themselves.

There was a crash. The other houses near by were swept into the raging lake which became a sea but the house she was on did not go to pieces, though her brother and sisters were swept off by the heavy spray produced when the flood hit the house like a tidal wave. The little girl said that fearing she would be swept off the roof tied herself to the chimney in which manner she had been found when rescued, but how far she floated she was not sure, but on hearing where she had been at the time of the flood the rescuers knew she had floated a hundred miles, and only a miracle saved the house from going to b pieces when bett battered as it was by wreckage of all description and tossed back and forth by the force of the current.

She had nevertheless been so dazed by hur less, and her trying experience, that she had no idea where the floating house had taken her, but two days later found herself on a cot.

However the child was not so much alone as she had expected. Her mother also saw more of the dreadful flood than fell to the lot of most women that ever lived to tell it. She had with the rest been watching the rescue of her daughter Hunny on the roof, and it had just been completed when she saw the flood coming. The first signs of the danger she said was in this statement made by her to one of her rescuers;

" Just as soon as my son had rescued my daughter, I ha heard a strange noise from the direction of the river and we all turned and instinctively saw that the water which had first slightly lowered through some mysterous cause and reverse in the direction of the current gradually change course again and even rise four feet higher than ever before. Not knowing what was the cause she had then went toard the direction of the lake to view the strange change and it increased so rapidly that she became alarmed and with her husband, aunt and others left the river shore and started toard the house, she said that the noise in the north then was heard and looking that way she saw a perfect wall of towering green moving forward at a terrific rate. She and her husband quickly called to the children to follow her to the hills but only she and her husband succeeded in reaching it before the flood came. Even then when they reached the hill she and her husband waded and swam alternately several hundred yards until they reached the higher hills. Then they went for a house on the top and reached it seeking refuge, but when the flood threatened to engulf the building, they went still higher up, and soon that building too was swept away and the flood kept getting higher and higher. They then had to wade six hundred yards more to reach the last shelter on the highest spot and it was the hardest part of the trip. Here on bare ground surround ed for many days by a sea of raging waters with only a few days rations they remained and did not dare move from the spot untill the flood began to go down.

On the 25th at this spot at the time when the sun had risen the water had so far receded that they went out to the site of their houses by the once beautiful little lake. A big pine tree which alone resisted the force of the flood, but with all the trunches gone looking much like a long hitching post was all that served to locate the place and all here yet was a lake of water, and the Norma River seemed at this spot to have almost been drained. A dead baby lay near the flood. Chic thinking it was one of her little girls she went to examine it, and from the marking on the clothing found that the child had come all the way down from Abbieann. All around there was nothing in sight but wreckage left by the flood, and large lakes of wreckage filled water. Before they could fin. shelter and food they had to travel fourty miles and fillia finally came to Mildred Greenburg which they reached three days later; the fin.

There were instances of devotion of brother and sister to each other of which could be mentioned because though so suddenly surprised by the flood, and unknown to poor the whole Mason family survived but had thrilling experiences nevertheless. At the the the flood struck Glenmore and Ethel were cast off the roof of the house by the fierce into the raging waters. They were seperated. both were in the drift that suddenly came do n down with the flood and both believed they went out in the sun and returned.

Ethel was finally cast upon the drift, and there she was pounded by the fierce and debris until she was pulled into a house, floating in the flood but against the drift had lodged, and during all that three days frightful ride, she desperately held to her younger sister Margy, and when she was onthe drift pile she did all she could by using big pieces of wood to shield herself and her sister from the blows of the planks as much as was possible. She was rescued and came out of the ordeal cut and maimed, but Margy had not a single scratch. They were both brought to Mildred Greenburg.

When their homes when to pieces the others of the Mason family climbed upon the roof of a house floating by. They felt tolerably secure but without warning the roof suddenly parted in two places. They were seperated. The parts of the raft went differ ways in the flood, and for four days and nights they floated on. One of the children off and it disappeared. Not until some time Sunday 25th was the rest of the family except of course poor Edie reunited. even the child was saved, having caught a table and clung desperately to it until it reached a place of safty.

Enough despite his experience which was almost similiar like Edies Mamy did not temporarily lose his reason like his little sister. When he was swept off the roof, he managed to swim the flood to one floating house to a nother and also almo always jumped off in time when it threatened to go under or break in pieces. ach each house broke or fell under in its turn, and then he took to the saved. He finally secured a large raft and being born down to the flood town of Munnorn took shel in a house being able to get in by the upper window the flood being even almost fil with the sill.

Before this Mamy besides being on a house top had also clung to a log, and floated for five hours being frequently struck by floating wreckage, but finally wa able to get to the top of a floating house. Mamy was rescued and the other refugees who were rescued with him were in their night garments but their appearance was indeed similiar to that of hundreds of thousands, there being in the refugee camp at Fresh Atlanta about 100,000 women rescued who when saved clothing had to be at once obtained.

Mamy then went through and also witnessed the horrors the people of the flooded city went through. At noon Sundaythe 14th of June they had sufficient space to move around in comfort, although filled with anxiety and penned in on all sides by the rapidly rising water and the sweeping away of so many houses.

Four hours later where most of the city was giving way before the roaring torrent the thoroughfares filled with water and wreckage were being congested with crowds of drowned women and children, and this almost caused the women in the upper stories of houses to become hys hysterical, the children screamed, and men became frantic in their attempts to rescue those found still living.

The seperation of families produced very sad scenes, when mothers mourned their off springs, and men lamented the loss of all that was dear to them but there was no confusion, only a cle clinging closer together without discrimination of class or sex as they waters advanced foot by fo foot hour by hour.

At night time the misery deepened, and the women and children occupied the upper floors and approaches, the highest portion of the building, but the the water still continued to rise. The men gave the better positions to the women and children. Midnight midnight approached conditions became worse, several women became demented, others kissed each other and said good by. They prayed and sang hymns in turn, and with each announcement that the waters still were rising many women and men were giv up the terrible mental strain and fainted. However the survivors paid a high tribute to the bravery to the bravery in the face of death of the women of the city, and stated that though subject horror had fallen over all, that the spirit of fortitude displayed by the women and even the children nev nerved the men. Indeed the horrors of that night the remaining days and nights were to be equaled on the succeeding days as the water receded.....

Of all the astonishing heroism and dogged tenacity of purpose ever heard of in connection of the Central Alvirnia flood probably none was r greater than that of Mr James Mason. Mr Mason was a compositor on the Angelinia Post, and as probably stated in the past chapter he and his si e and family and other relatives were visiting their cousin by the lake little Edie's father and mother when the flood came down and carried everything away. Early Monday morning June the 22th when the flood had gone down considerably and he and his wife had survived the flood by seeking refuge on the attic while she went for help to the camp he announced to her that he intended starting immediately for Mildred Greenburg and get relief parties to hunt for his children and recover at least their bodies. He went to one of the depots of one of the [illegible] farther east which had escaped the flood, and fortunately found a bicycle, leaving for Mildred Greenburg. He boarded it and proving by the appearance of his clothes

A boarded it and boarded it and proving by the appearance of his clothes that he was one of the flood victims who had survived was admitted free of charge. Never unless this relief train was forced to stop eighteen miles before it reached the city or between it and the train was a vast stretch of water logged with wreckage, and the tracks had been washed away. He walked eighteen miles around the shore or along the shore of it, arriving at the [illegible] widest stretch in about two hours, and saw the city far in the distance. There was no boat available in sight except some big river steamers and barges stranded in the mud far from the water, and even he was not able to secure a skiff or a canoe.

Nevertheless he found a large beam of wood near the waters edge, and therefore procuring a coal hook from some railroad engine that had been washed away from some far distant round house, he got astride the log after an hours work of dragging it and pushing it into the water, and then set out on a perilous and difficult journey across the eighteen miles of flood waters toard the city. Thus he, labored for sixty three hours, paddling aside time again and again immense n jams of wreckage and the like, bodies of animals and tangled masses of trees the sun beating down on him and with his body half submerged in the muddy water.

At last he reached the goal and he pulled himself out of the water and stepped into the outskirts of the once fair city. After having passed on his way more than a hundred dead bodies of the flood victims, the heroic man set about finding a relief party, to help him search for his children, and others. This he did after a lengthy search. He heard from them that they all had been rescued, as a check had been made of all rescued but that each were in different camps, and that even his little daughter Edie had been saved, and that they all had an experience that rarely comes to men or children.

The story of Andrew Weldon was indeed most pitiful. Weldon lived near Twelvth Franklin street in the city of Vignon. He had been looking out of the window watching the waters of the river which surprised him and saw the edge of the flood coming far in the distance. He was alone in his house with his two small children, two girls each of them eight years of age. Hoping to beat the flood, he seized one under each arm and rushed from the frail structure in time to cheat death among the falling timbers of his home when the flood struck.

Once in the open, as the flood poured toard and over the river in this portion with his two babies under his arms was swept into the main flood with thousands of others. He held to his precious burden and by skilful efforts as he was a good swimmer managed to get close to a floating house which was sweeping along with the tide. He succeeded in placing children on the roof of the structure, and raised his six year old daughter to place her on the roof, when along came a tree whose far reaching branches tore the little girl from his grasp and carried her away to her death.

The awful blow stunned but did not render him senseless. Weldon retained his hold on the other little girl, and was whirled along among the thousands of dead and dying in the jam of wreckage hoping to effecting a landing somewhere. Six hours and a half in this jam of wreckage hoping to effecting a landing somewhere. Six hours and a half in this latter brought the desired end. He was thrown toard the shore, where great throngs of people from other places had gathered in the hope of rescuing those who came floating and pushing his way through wreckage and corpses, and stumbling to a footing he got to shore unaided, and then lifted his little girl to a level with his face. The girl was dead.

Weldon remained not, ing until Thursday morning the 25th, when he was brought to Angelinia Gathia city. He had a slight recollection of helping force Mandellinian Alvirnian prisoners work at clearing wreckage and burying the dead found, and force was to obey the command of the National guard. His brain however did not execute its proper functions until Thursday morning morning twenty four days after he found both his little girls dead. Another sad thing for jim was that when thrown into the waters of the mile being carried with frightful velo city down with the flood, he had seen the floating face of his wife wedged firmly between two branches of a tree floating by. Her brother had made a desperate attempt to save her life. The woman was in another home v visiting a friend when the flood struck. Her brother who had accompanied her on the visit seized her and guided her to a hotel a short distance away, but while so doing was killed by a falling building, and she was then swept out of his grasp. Weldon therefore was another left alone in the world, with not even a thing he could call his own.

One of the investigators sent to Marcum by Governer Saunders, of Alvirnia the day after the flood had partly receded to investigate the conditions reported to the governer at Pendera on June the 23th and said in his reports;

" The sanitary condition of the city is very bad. Large quantities of lime have been ordered to the place but I doubt if any one will be able to unload it from the few vessels and attend to its systematic distribution when it arrives as the population had been almost wiped out. A terrible fire resulted after the recession of the flood and great streamers of seething flames ri ariseo from windrows of debris but all burning on top and if there are any carcasses of human beings or animals in the debris these carcasses are being burned thus saving the city from the dangers of a pestilence. There is no outer protection, and it is feared the destruction of the city will soon be complete even though the few survivors are fighting madly to stay the flames as best as they know how. The oder of burning bodies in the wreckage is indeed horrible beyond comparison.

The relief work here is fairly organized but otherwise nothing has been accomplished except the distribution of food and provisions among the few needy the parties the disaster. About three quarters of the city is swept away and the remaining portion totally wrecked and portions afire, and many of the s r survivors are forced to live in houses that are partly wrecked but are continually driven out when these catch fire from the conflagration. Because of the ravaging fires the destitute are now being removed from the city as fast as possible. A remarkably large number of babies survived the flood in this location but there is no food for them and many of these will soon die of starvation.

I am entirely satisfied, after spending four days in Mo gureum that the estimate of dead up to 15,000 is too small..I am positively sure it will far exceed that number. But no one can estimate or ever will know or be able to find out how many lives were lost for so much of the city was swept away and everyone with and every one with it. Only one thousand are said to be left in the ruins not swept on its entirely away and these dead bodies are being got rid of in whatever manner possible. They are burying the dead found far outside the city. At one place ten hund bodies were found and buried on edne Wednesday. But there must be hundreds of dea bodies back on the prairies that have not been found and conditions of land and wate make it impracticable to make a search. Yet bodies have been found as far south as Belights ,unction, and as far as sixty miles south of Vivian Mickey which came fro various towns. It would take a big army bigger than any fighting battles now to clea that territory outside of Vivian Mickey alone.

The waters of the river Norma even to the very bay of Vivian Mickey are still full of dead bodies brought all the way down by the flood and river, and they are now constantly cast upon the beach, while the besieging christian armies whose camps ar were stamped with great loss of life are busy burying all the bodies coming down t h them. On my trip to and from Murcann I passed processions of bodies going seawa
I counted four hundred of them on my trip in from the station, and this procession is kep up day and night. It surely is the greatest of all flood disasters that ever can be known. The captian of a ship who had just reached Mildred greenburg down the riv informed me that he began to meet thousands upon thousands of floating bodies, in hundred miles from port in some sea cout region of Angelinia ,tate state. It seem unusual that bodies floated all the way down there but they have."

One of the most thrilling descriptions of personal experience with the fearful fearful scenes resultant of the dreadful flood ever stirren was that of Miss Angelinia ,tenburg who had traveled with her friends all the way down from Bbiemn city to ,rancis. "tents and then to Mildred greenburg. She at thewrite to of her friends wrote an account of her adventures to Violet and her sisters, it being quite a lengthy letter and very interesting.

She got the letter transcribed to them by wireless telegraph.

SEPARN VIVIANS ARMY.
PHRALIN PHRANTUMBAD.
JUNE TWENTH 1913.
Dear Princesses;

I suppose before this you ill recieve my telegram and know I and my com panions are safe. This has been a terrible experience and I hope I will be spared any more such. We were first in Bbiemn city, and that has been partially wiped out and not one person surviving. The buildings were all suddenly thrown down by the concussion of the explosion as if there had been an earthquake and not a soul escape ed from the wreckage alive. The whole nation to say is just a mervice wreck, and shaking all over from the concussion of the most tremendous war ever known on my record whatever. No matter what place we go or when we are on our way far from a city we cannit see anything for many miles but immense seas of still remaining water logged thickly withb r wreckage among them being a few naked and dead bodies.

refugees are a sight forbidden by war correspondents to picture by means of moving pictures. I suppose I had better begin at the beginning but I don,t believe I can write with any sense.

Friday while on our way toard Mildred greenburg city it began raining and the wind rose a little and fearing the approach of a storm we took to an old fu ned house for shelter. When we finally started again we came to a stretch of water that was between us and the city. The water moved swiftly toard the river in the distance as we watched it debating a way to cross it to the city.

ually we reached the city and the stories we hear from the refugees there is heartfending. One of them told me of the experience he had in the city. I will when the flood started more gradually, but became bad when it reached its height.

First there was water from curb to curb. It rose rapidly an I and my wife and children watched it. It flowed over the sidewalk, and all the men who were I at work began to come home. The water while it crept higher and higher grew to a furious tor e rents finally so all crowded into the hall of the big home, and it rocked like a cradle before the fierceness of the tyrrhnt. Above stood women clock the roof caved in and all the windows were shaken out and the water had risen to a level with the second story and kept creeping up.

Then the men told us we would have to leave and go to a big brick orphan asylum across the street at the end of the block. One of the women refugees who had come to us in some way told me it was her husband and children who had not come home, and the telephone lines were down poles and all. The men told the women that they must not worry bear their skirts, and that they could take only a few things in a bundle as they were going to try their luck with a raft which some others were making by which they hoped to get to the orphan home. My wife took her watch and ticket and what money she had and secreted them in her corset, took off everything from her waist down but an under garment and her linen skirt, no shoes and stockings. It took two men to each woman.. to get her across the street on the small raft and down to the end of the block, the women holding her children with her. Trees as thick as a fencet were whirled down among the fallen houses floating in the water, driftwood of all sorts swept past, and the water looked like the ocean finding chances to reclaim the land once more. It was all by this time. My children were last while one man brought a bundle of clothing. We spent nights and days twenty horrible ones, wet from shoulder to our waist and from knees down totally bared, no one had any shoes and stockings. My little daughter Nelli was while had only a lawn wrapper and blanket, and Annie had a skirt and winter waist. I only had a pair of trousers and a light shift and was barefooted. And my wife had nothing on but a thin lawn dress and a blanket wrapped around her from her waist down. The home besides its little inmates was packed like with people like us.
The home building had a strong foundation and was of stone with walls three feet thick.

We were all crowded on the upper stories and from the pressure of the flood it rocked from top to bottom and the water came into the lower stories. Of course no one hardly dared to sleep the first night. On the 18th the waters gradually had gone down and that ever three hours at night. On the 19th the waters gradually had gone down and by the 20th was gone altogether, and as we stood at the windows watching it fall, we saw the survivors wading the streets and heard children crying for their mothers and for the survivors finding the streets and heard children crying for their mothers and others. But we survived but lost our home and everything. The orphan home was an immense brick building five stories high. We were all crowded on the third and fourth floors while the water came up to the third floor. But the building stood."

As much as a period and others could we waded toward the home the man indicated to us was the water was in the streets still when we entered the city, such a strong flow it evident ly was. The water had destroyed everything inside the lower floors of the orphan asylum. The water had destroyed everything inside the lower floors of the orphan asylum, and the little orphans had not a dry thing to put on, all the food stuff was ruined, and the little orphans had not a dry thing to put on, all the food stuff was gone their bedding too, all the furniture had floated, and everything was destroyed except that the building stood the 201 orphans were without food water and provisions.
except that the building stood the 201 orphans were without food water and provisions.
Some had not had hardly anything to eat for twenty days, and when we came to see them the relief party was giving them whatever was possible.

We were so tired and weak however from our constant travels and offering to aid other relief parties in Mildred Greenburg , we and my comrades went down to a small half wrecked house to take a well needed rest...The scenes about this place indeed was awful dreadful. Dead animals of all kinds lay everywhere, and the streets filled with debris. The telephone poles and wires, and many wooden o he see completely overturned. Hundreds of men and children children and men sitting on steps or curbstones crying piteously for their and children children and men sitting on steps or curbstones crying piteously for those who are lost, or believed to be lost,,, and half of them nearly badly injured, hundreds of wild eyed ghastly naked men hurried by, and with peculiar grins and wild tales told of their wives and children being killed.....

I or my own companions could n could not stand any more and we decided to go elsewhere. As we were preparing to go a woman was brought in, and she fell on a bed with hysterics. As we were preparing to go a woman was brought in, and she fell on a bed with Hunny and Mary an well as well, and eleanor has just now from Francis Atlanta. He was walked and swam all the way. He is nearly all his and though he is a foreigner and an American or Englishman he curses and denounces the Glandelinians something terrible. I cannot blame him for what I plan for the Glandelinians it is best for us not to think. How can the Abblecantian government let this go and not make Glandelinia reckon for it. Just think of the results of the November floods at Mic-Rhirther hun, and Lake Felicia, and other places, and Abblecania stand it so that as I believe other nations think she is afraid o to punish Glandelinia I am coming back to emperor Vivians army on the 5th of June.

As I near the four children of the Mason family; Eddie, Huntington, Mary and eleanor were on the roof of the tallest house when the flood occured. The other three were washed off at the first rush of the flood, and the house Eddie was on was swept away, and the other children drifted on wreckage in another. All of these as I hear except Eddie are reunited and have comforted the lone child making the relief committe to try and restore her to the rest.

One of the Masons believed to be Eddies mother became a raving maniac as a result of her experiences. She is in the refugee camp here at this city, and she with attendants in the hospital for her lost relatives and children and clutches eildly for the . Harry Mason one of the uncles and his wife sought safty in five successive houdre houses which were demolished. They eventually climbed upon a floating door and were saved.

William Robert Mason another of the Masons with five of his boys seeing the flood coming made their way to a water tower and clasping hands one about the other encircled the standpipe to be kept from being washed away. Mrs Hutson Mason and her son George fe floated in the waters ten to fourt, feet deep for three days and nights by dutching wreckage, finally that managed to get into a wooden buthtub and were driven into the bay of Norma and near poverty Bee overnight and they were rescued by an Abblecanian subm r submarine and taken to shore. They were fearfully bruised, but they were comforted when they learned not one of their relatives were drowned though all had trying experiences.

A pathetic incident in the search for the dead occured the day we left. A pair of men discovered in a r wrecked building seventeen bodies. Among these bodies was one which a member of the burial parties recognized as his own beloved mother. The bodies were all in an advanced state of decomposition. They were with great difficulty framed and a large bonfire was built, a literal funeral pyre at which the men assisted, and with spartian like firmness stood by and saw the bodies of the dead reduced to ashes.

On Friday the 20th we left Ja pelano city where we saw sights just a la as at Mildred greenburg and started to walk toward Vignon city. On our way we discovered the bodies of teant, women, and these we covered with debris we found near by to protect them from the vandals until some arrangements could be made for their interment.

CHAPTER 100 ONE HUNDRED.....

ILLAIRE LOSS IN LIVES, AND ENORMOUS PROPERTY DAMAGE SUSTAINED IN CENTRAL CALVERINIA, AND OTHER PORTION S OF BENGAL COUNTY. ONE MILLION VICTIMS HERE AND HUNDREDS OF MILLIONS OF DOLLA IN CROPS SWEPT AWAY. THE MAKING OF ESTIMATES.....

PROPERTY LOSS, of the big cities of Poverty Row, Vignon, Mildred Greenburg, La Palma, El Verso, El Paso, San Antonio, Alexandro and Marcuson was hardly less than $ [illegible] 000

[illegible] $650,000,000 out side of these cities, in Francis Atlantu, and other points in Central and western Calverinia together with the agricultural and stock raising districts the property damage was nearly half that amount, or in the neighborhood of $ 400,000,000. Probably four hundred and seventy five villages and towns were swept entirely away by the flood, two hundred were inundated, and in most of the inund ated places there was loss of life while all lost their lives in the places that were swept entirely away. It could be for this story, at least reliably estimated from reports recieved at Delight's junction fourteen miles southeast of Vivian Hickey, Je the capital city of Calverinia from these places that the loss of life, exclusive of the death list of Abblecania and the other big cities named at the beginning of the chapter could amount to over 1,000,000 people. In many towns the percentage of drowned was stated that in the former cities four hundred big and small towns were swept completely out of existence; and six hundred others affected by the flood or badly damaged.

This was the most extensive flood of all floods on record, even covering that of the bible floods in true stories of history. The scene of desolation in the devastated district was terrible, incomprehension and seemingly terribly exaggerating to re read of.
It was immeasurably terrible to witness. The flood at its height with the almost complete breaking of the Norma San river was over six hundred miles wide, two hundred feet at the depost, and extended as far southward as the town of Gabling some forty three miles south of Delight's junction, and eighty miles south of Gold Junction Angelinia proper, covering a full lengthy distance of over five thousand full miles from Abblecania to the gulf, and making a complete junction with the southern Angelinia horror combining the two into one for sixteen days. The worse of the flood everywhere was the same as the horror of the Johnstown horror, and nothing hardly could withstand it, and many hundreds of miles of the most beautiful forests of all kinds of trees were swept away.
In Calverinian cotton crop in the lower Bengal Counties was completely washed away.
What was true of all other crop including, rice, grain wheat, hay everything on the face of the earth crop that does not grow in Antrium and that is the style. The distress was keenly felt by the planters and small farmers who survived throughout the flood swept region, and this loss was so immense that all the highest estimates in Abblecania were flabbergasted, and felt that their millions were all most beings in Abblecania were flabbergasted, and felt that their millions were swept out of existance.

In Delight's junction the damage had not figured at over $ 10,000,000 the town was fearless for the first bloodiest battle of the war being virtually destroyed and nearly a million people in that section deprived deprived not only of shelter, but of food for the time being but all prospect for crops in the years to come.

On the 27th of June 1913 the Mayor of Francis Atlanta City sent out the following appeal after a throughout investigation of the situation in and around the city of Delight's junction fourty miles off from the seige of Vivian Hickey, [illegible]09

"I arrived in the city of Delight's junction from Mildred Greenburg, after a two weeks trip and indeed a the sight of devastation on every side is beallaeri ing and astonishing. Sixty five per cent of the houses in this town are washed away, and the rest are in ruins leaving nine hundred thousand people with shelter whatever, and even destitute of the necessities of life, and with no means whatever to procure them and despite the plight of their besieging camps became because of the same flood, the soldiers of Antrium army cannot even lend them aid, or aid themselves, being cut off from the railroads by the remaining flood waters which does not go down at this point.

The people need and must have assistance. Need money and building materials to rebuild their homes, and buy stock and implements. They need food, flour, bacon, corn and everything. They must have seed for their gardens so as to be able to do something for themselves verse on. Clothing is badly needed. Hundreds of thousands of women and children are without a change and are already suffering. 30,000 were drowned here, and no good idea may be had of the distresses of the survivors when it is known that the people have to rise sleeping in the treacherous ruins or on the wet ground.
The city big as it was was nit like Johnstown, and out of a city of a population of nearly a million people only thirteen houses in the city of Delight's junction are standing, and they are badly damaged."

The damage at Jennie Vivian city by the same flood was not less than $ 1,000,000 but the news from there was similar to the. The county, districts were strewn with the corpses of persons brought from many other places by the the force of the flood. The prairies around Jennie Vivian City were dotted with the bodies of the dead who from Abbieann city, all brought down that distance by the flood. It seemed incredible, impossible, unbelievable, something like a fable and the relief parties could not understand it. Scores were buried by the soldiers, but at many places the flood still remained and the bodies were left where they as the water was too deep to admit of burial. From this a pestilence was greatly feared from the decomposing animal matter lying everywhere the stench being something awful.

Damage to telegraph and telephone wires and the like outside of these cities and other rural districts.....$10,899,654
Damage to Calverinian cotton crop estimated on an average crop of all counties and rural districts affected, five million bales at $ 60 a bale, around the vicinity of Vivian Mickey, and other places.....$ 300,000,000
Damage to stock was great in the extreme hundreds of thousands of valuable horses, including one hundred excellent race horses, and an extra three hundred head of cattle having perished during the flood, including millions of chickens, 100,000 turkeys, five hundred hundred ducks, and nearly a million hogs and other farm animals, including one million five hundred thousand sheep, 10,000 rams, sixty thousand valuable Milking goats, and a million six hundred steers

In Bengal County and other rural sections there was not a plantation building to be found. All fences for hundreds of miles were gone and the devastation was so complete that the whole of Calverinia faced a famine. In the cities wrecked all the big and most expensive sugar refineries were wrecked. At Camp St John a 100,000 barrels of 60,000,000 valuable tents were swept away and many soldiers were drowned. On one plantation a short distance from the ill fated town of Delightful Junction, a camp full of illiterate Child slaves were drowned but their bodies have never been recovered, the loss being estimated at thirty thousand, fourty thousand, other perished near Vivian Mickey, all girls. The villiages of Little Heddi Field, and Castle in Fort Andre county were destroyed and over fifteen hundred people were drowned, most of the bodies never being recovered.

Every house in all rural districts of the Central and western Calverinia was destroyed, and there was still great suffering among the many thousands of homeless people who were lucky to survive the immeasurable disaster. There was unusual destitution among the people of Malden Bicknell in Bengal County. Malden Bicknell was one of the most beautiful and prosperous prosperous and most righteous towns in south central Calverinia. A foreigner on touring trips had said the way people and children there dressed and lived you would believe you were already in heaven where " you sin no more."

It was wholly destroyed, and the 350,000 homeless ones were without shelter. Fortunately however no one lost their lives in this town but their food supplies were provided by their more fortunate neighbors, and by foreigners, until other assistance could be had. One of the foreigners wrote an account of the disaster, and also slipped a letter through to a Calandelinian army not far off with no mans signal, and this is what it read;

" I read history and of the accounts long ago. I thought the days of savage white people were gone, but I see you Calandelinians out rival the worse of devils themselves. You cannot fight christian armies in the open, you fight non combatants with flood and fire. Abbieannia ought to give you no quarter."

The State Aurthorities heard from the Zaberio County, where several hundred valuable plantations were wiped out, every building of these farms were swept away, and the loss in property aggregated 1,000,987= $1,000,987. Fifteen hundred farm hands, including the farmers and their familes were caught by the flood and all swept away. Over a score of were deprived of home and were injured injured..In addition to the loss of build ings and cottonerops, and all other crops, the entire sugar, and other cane crop was destroyed including corn on this as well as other plantations in that section. Seventeen hundred people were killed in the town of Little Heid, fifteen hundred more persons were drowned at Malehaid and yet not one of their bodies had been recovered. The loss of life and property far exceeded the estimates given in the earlier reports.

The search of victims of the flood at Brookfield resulted in only fifty out of 10,000 bodies being recovered. Brookfield was a favorite country beauty spot, and a favorite summer resort with many foriegn righteous people, and its hotels were filled with guest. They were out on pleasure jaunts when the flood came upon them. There were also many guests in the private houses which were swept away.

The casualties of Calverine city(not Big Calverine) were fifteen thousand. Not one paper reported a hundred dead. They all ranged in the thousands. Valparasico situated near a river levee which broke when undermined by the flood letting in extra torrents, and called desperately for help. Over one half of the town was destroyed beyond recovery. and eleven thousand people lost their lives with a property loss od four million seven hundred sixty five thousand dollars. Reports from the adjacent country showed that many orphan and other children in country homes were drowned or without shelter. Seven thousand rescued child slaves taken care of on a plantation in Virgonia County were drowned who were seeking refuge in wooden buildings in which they sought refuge from the flood.

The town of Virgonia situated on lake Talmesi Talosco was in the full heart of the flood, and it was completely swept away.

Seventeen thousand people were killed in the big towns of Kli Gmal and Illinia in the same County. The new expensive buildings on the Mildred Childrens or Cripples Childrens home owned and operated by the Abbieannian government, were destroyed and destroyed and the bodies of the children have not been recovered. The crops were also wiped out.

Over fifty hundred rescued child slaves were killed or drowned in Bengal County and also in Calverinia and Helenia County, one thousand being drowned on twelve big plantations near the town of Calverinia, where they were taken care of.

Little Turner suffered a total loss of nearly all its buildings, and three thousand were killed or drowned there. There were many thousands of homeless people in Bengal City every house in the big town but to two being swept away by the flood. The terrible people were living out of doors, and camping on the wet wet ground near the edge of some portions of the still remaining flood.

Outside the big cities of Liverty, Joe, and so on down to Mildred Greenburg and Abbieann, the greatest suffering was between Mile Mildred Greenburg and Abbieann, on the coast and river shores of the country. There was no damage at Vivian Mickey proper, ig Big Calverine, or in that immediate section of the country though the flood reached there too, and flooded the streets to a foot of water.

people in immediate relief were those of the regions between Mildred Greenburg and Poverty Row. The planters in these immense sections had everything whatever swept away(though few platers survived) leaving the survivers and the whole of Calverinia, in a state bordering on starvation.

In central and western Calverinia an enormous acreage of all crop including cotton and corn was planted, and everything growing fine promising the most prosperous crops for fifty years, when the furious Calandelinian made floods laid everything low. Goodrich City(Goodrich County) Cornland, Sugar Land, Wimble, Baldern, Cropview, Delightful View, and hundreds of other smaller places not a House was left to mark the place, not a woods of trees was left standing. Many of the farm hands had been brought into that section, including volunteer rescued child slaves willing to work on salery to help the countrys cause, all to assist at cotton growing, and other farming and not one of these are alive now. The children and farm hands were at work when the first signs of the flood warned of the danger. Not one escaped. Of other planters who did survive their clothing and everything was gone. Indeed they were devoid of even the c necessities with which to sustain life.

To begin over again, the surviving planters, would have to rebuild houses, purchase new machinary, and new draft animals. The losses of horses and mules in the stricken districts was a severe blow. Live stock interests were also wiped out. Cow boy ranches were a thing of the past. It looked in these sections as cow boy ranches and their cattle were never there. Out of 100,000 cowboys who tended steers, and crops, only 100 escaped to tell the tale

In the opinion of railway men because of because of this disaster twenty years might elaspe before the farming districts could be restored to their former conditions. The advanced prices of building material on account of its scarcity because of the war was a hard blow for all surviving farmers, who in most instances were owners of farms and if the rich owners of the building and other materials let down prices their materials would become exhausted and other farmers then could get nothing. The rich and poor were hit alike, may the disaster cause 100 rich people werth $36,000,000 to be werth not a penny everything wiped out.

Desperate appeal for relief were received from everywhere in the flood center, and that with the big flood south, and the enormous forest fire raging in a hundred places, and 10,000 forest fires raging in Angelinia, the government was paralyzed. And the season had given promish of producing the best harvest since the farming conditions because " repeat in Calverinia. For all the details that were proved of the disaster, for the testimony of refugees brought down to His camp by relief parties, and the horrible scenes many soldiers observed on furlough, Emperor Vivian said not a word, seemed like a man indifferent to it all. He went about in his military ways of welcoming the foe and all other things as if nothing happened, but officers and generals would say in whispers to each other;

" The Emperor has refused to see any one for the last fifteen days. He is in a rage is angry over the flood. I accidentally saw a protest letter he wrote to the Glandelinian government, and what he wrote looks like a storm is brewing somewhere. I'll bet if we surround Stanley's army, and he sends a white flag for a token of surrender he will receive no quarter."

Five hundred people from Angelinia Agathia were drowned at Little Reid, and Five persons from Francis Atlanta were drowned at Heidi point Mrs Pendre Pedros and her two little girls, her husband Henry, and the five year old son of Count De Biff, her husband was rescued alive exhausted and in a state of terrible nervousness.

Henry said-

" The water cam came up so rapidly that I and my family sought refuge on the roof of our home. I had count De Biffs little son Jack in my arms, and the other children were strapped together. A heavy piece of timber struck me, killing him. Henry then lost one of his little daughters, Clara and while he had her in his arms, he was torn from washed off the roof and in this way little Clara was drowned.

Mrs Pedro's eldest child was was next killed by a jam of wreckage that struck her as she fell in the water when the house slightly tipped, and the younger was drowned this leaving wife and husband the only occupants on the roof. Finally the force of the current tore the house in twain, Mrs Pedro remaining on one half, and her husband on the other. The portion of the roof to which Mrs Pedros clung turned over and was the last seen of her. Henry held to his side of the roof and drifted for fifty miles more so distracted in mind as to care little where or how it drifted. He finally landed about 6 P.M. Monday the 9th.

At Glandelin there were one hundred and seventy five refugee people besides the inmates in a block long, four story Orphanage. The water was deep about it, and though the building apparently was strong enough to stand before the pressure of the water, the only danager was from the jams of wreckage floating about it. So the men and women went in little boats which they picked up in the flood and rowed around the building continually assisting inkeeping the wreckage jams away from the Orphanage, and so to was least. As dangerous as the scene was the children enjoyed it as something thrilling and feared not for their lives, but sometimes swam into the water to aid in keeping the wreckage away. There are no cowards in any part of Abbiesinnia, unless they are not Abbiesinnians.

At Bellington every house in the place was swept entirely away, including two immense churches, except one big Orphanage and that accounts for why there was only a thousand drowned, as the majority of the inhabitants knowing of the floods coming took refuge in the orphanage. Refuge Orphan Asylums in this country were made and built so strong that in most every case they proved to be refuge houses. Not a house in Patagonia survived. On the outskirts of Liberia city sixty long lines of freight cars either empty or loaded were whirled along by the flood fifty miles to Francis Atlanta where they collided with other lines of freight and even passenger cars, killing two hundred and injuring thirteen hundred passengers and trainworkmen and boarding car people sixteen dead children, 100 dead men, and a thousand dead women, the destruction of all houses and the destitut destitution of the survivors is the record of the work of the flood at Little Gloria. From fifty other big towns, came reports that all the buildings were totally wrecked, with many swept away, and most of them reported several thousand dead, and extra thousand injured.

A commercial agent of the Abbiesinnia, Bendinia, and Calverina railroad company, Francis Bargin made a long distant trip of over the line from Mildred Greenburg to Poverty Row on foot, beginning on June the 22th and ending on the 27th and gave a graphic account of his journey which was made under many great difficulties.

" A thousand miles of tracks, of fourty three different long distant railroad lines including my own road, and the Chicago Gilester and Pendora, and all river bridges are gone in all stages of the flood South of Poverty Row" he said. " I walked, waded and swam from Mildred Greenburg city to Poverty Row, and nothing could could be seen in all that country but death and desolation. All rural districts, and the prairies are still covered deep with water for hundreds of miles, and do not think I exaggerate when I say that not less than one hundred thousand horses and cattle are to be seen along the lines of displaced railroad tracks south of Poverty Row. Hundreds of little towns along the railway are all swept away, and indeed the sightbit most terrible that I have ever witnessed. Greats of trees many scores of miles in extent is laid low, and when I reached a point two miles north of Vignon I saw some bodies floating in the water on the rural farms and from that point untill Poverty Row was reached, dead bodies could be seen from the railroad track, floating about the seas of waters over the prairies.

At Poverty Row hardly a thousand houses is left. About 400,000 cars of loaded freight of all kinds that reached Poverty Row on the Abbiesinnia International and Great Northern railroad lines are scattered over the fields, and the prairies, and their contents will no doubt prove a total loss."

On friday June the 26th,... from early morning morning untill far into the night, Governer Saunder's was in conference with many relief committees from various points in the flood swept country. And among the first Committee's to arive was one from Abbiesan. who had come from there to report that that was said about the disaster there was absolutely true these men consulted at lenty length with the Calverinian Governer, and as a result of this conference it was decided that the National adjutant General, general Bainderbury, should be left in command of the remains of that city, with a good part of his army to keep away Glandelinians who might complete the terrible destruction there, and which was to be considered under military rule for the duration of the war, and that his generals was to have the exclusive control not on only of the patrolling of the other flood wrecked cities and towns, but of the sanitary forces engaged in cleaning the city, and the glandelinian prisoners engaged in clearing the wreckage.

It was also decided that instead of looking to the laboring people of these wrecked cities and towns for work in emere emergency an importation of many divisions of glandelinian prisoners, of no b matter what rank to the number of 25,000,000 or more should be made to conduct the labor work among the wreckage, while the people of the flooded towns and cities were to be given an opportunity of looking after their own losses and rebuilding their own property without giving time to any portion of the cities at large.

Also it was belies believed that with the impressed work of these twenty three million Glandelinian Glandelinian prisoners it would require about four months longer to clear the bigger city of debris, and in the meantime the citizens could be starting on their own property and repairing damage there.

Another relief committe from places o in Marsucian County reported that two child n millions were in circumstances very destitute indeed, without food, or clothing, and all their homes had been totally swept away. All the various crops had been swept away, all farming implements and machinery were washed away, and while the rural people had nothing at hand with which to work the fields. A Relief Committee from Los Purgaterio reported 2,567,899 destitute and without homes. Other cities also sent in committees during and as a result Governer Saunders ordered shipments of supplies posthaste..

STOMBUNO
JUNE THE "6 26TH 1913.
EMPRESS OF ABBIESANNIA, PANDORIA CITY:

I wish to convey to Your Gracious Majesty, that every nation in the world is flabbergasted and dumbfounded at the extent of the war disasters in Calverinia, both west and here north, besides in the central portion, and also of the one raging in northern Angelinia. I and my whole nation have deep felt sympathy for the nation of Abbiesnia because of the misfortune that particularly has befallen the big city of Abbiesan, and many other big places of the coast, and central Calverinia, and question and the whole world is mourning with you and the people of the Abbiesannian Empire over the unusually terrible loss of life and property caused by the three enormous floods, which at the first three reports from our war and internationa International news roll reels and newse paper correspondents was believed to be false or exaggerated, but the magnitude of the catastrophe let us hope will be equal by the indomitable spirit of the citizens of Abbiesnnia and of those who survived, who in their long and bloody struggle against an adverse foe and a Glandelinian enemy of unusual meanness and wickedness who try to get the adverse forces of nature to aid them in their unholy war will in the long run prove themselves victorious, and that for such an enemy there will be a reckoning to come that will surprise us as well as the disaster did.

I sincerely hope that the whole Nation of Abbiesannia will rise against such a foe as she never did before and put down the wicked rebellion forever, and free all the child slaves as is desired.

I als Also sincerely hope that the wrecked cities and towns that survived the disasterous flood will rise again to new propserity, in spite of all that such a dreadful enemy like Glandelinian can or will do.

Millian Turnio Fnacisco.
Blemlinia."

The Empress replied.....

CHANDON PALACE, JUNE THE "6TH27th 1913.
His Imperial and Royal Majesty
MILLIAN TURNIO FRANCISO BLOMLINIA-------455678

The message and condolence of sympathy that his has been sent by Your gracious majesty is very grateful to the Abbiesannian nation and its people, which shows that we christian nations stick close together, and in the name of Abbiesannia as well as on bel behalf of the many millions who have suffered bereavement and irreparable loss in the terrible disasters of Central and North Calverinia, and of that in the south of Calverinia and northern Angelinia, and of all disasters gone in the future or past, I thank you most earnestly, and hoping that God will bless all christian nations. I am sincerely yours.

MISS ANNA AMPHENDA VIVIAN, ABBIESANNIA.

Governer saunders came on the 27th to Angelinia Agathia and conferred with Gen[eral] Biff, and other high officials including the generals of the big Mobilisation camps and others on the steps necessary to prevent a continuance of these flood and the horrid war disasters. At the end of the conference he said he believes the authorities will have the situation on hand, and martial law will be a protection every river dike in the country as well as lake and other dams. The floods of the north Alverinia, southern Calverinia, and Northern Angelinia, with Abbiesannia, Mildred Greensburg, and Poverty Bay hardest hit in the north, and Heidi Austria, Big girl Hazel and Cham, Chamberlane hardest hit in the south so far as results in the loss of over thirty million lives and in and the injury of over that many more, and over 100,000,000 m being rendered homeless,. The flood covered five thousand miles of ground, and charges were made that the Glandelinian generals knew of the floods to be made with the purpose to prevent Christian armies moving down from southern Abbiesannia, and Byssinikile..At a mass meeting of all persons the Glandelinian generals are charged with murder and assassination on the greatest First Degree and breaking all laws of civilized military ruling and of war, of which it is said.

"Women and children first to perish. Soldiers afterwards."

The flooding of the countries of Calverinia, in 1918 and 1919 is one of the worst blots on the name of Glandelinia in the whole history of the world, and also a blot on the good name of Abbiesannia in our whole history for not taking steps to stop such a disaster as fits the crime. There can be no excuse for such a breaking of the most primitive safeguards of our big and beautiful rivers and other waterways, and if Abbiesannia herself has a conscious it will solemnly and firmly resolve that such disaster by the dishonorable and cowardly Glandelinia shall ever occur in any part of the nation again. We ask Governor Saunders especially to probe at once into the for the deplorable war showing of the Glandelinian armies, to examine at once into full conditions that created this outrage, and which shocked the whole world, and after this why give Glandelinian armies "Quarter".

CHAPTER ONE HUNDRED ONE.....

THE SITUATION ABOUT FIVE DAYS AFTERWARDS.
NOTHING LIKE IT A IN ANY HISTORY OF THE WORLD.

By the time Friday June the 26th---- practically the sixth day after the flood although outside in the rural districts the waters still did not subside, nor the height of the flood go down where it had been the deepest----had arrived many thousands of soldiers all prisoners to be made to work in any of the stricken cities and towns, while the citizens themselves had somewhat recovered their courage, although most of the streets in every place were still chocked with debris and almost impassable . On every corner was this sign read by every one;

GLANDELINIA SHALL PAY FOR THIS

In the city of Mildred Greensburg large numbers of women ventured out to do[ing] their way over great masses of wreckage. Lendrs the main street ing, picking [illegible] was by that time opened its full length, and three or four other main stress streets were being rapidly clearted cleared, though the stench from the putrefying bodies of the victims of the disaster still in the ruins of many scores of buildings was all [illegible] unbearable.

"Glandelinia shall pay very dearly for this" said the Angelinia Agathia News in a editorial on thursday the 25th..At the first meeting of the highest Authorities in Angelinia Agathia sunday Afternoon the 28th after the great flood had begun to [illegible] down for the purpose of bringing order out of chaos, the only sentiment expressed" in the editorial pages was that the whole of the Abbiesannian nation by Glandelinia had received an awful blow in the back. The loss of life and property in the three or four big floods, now past, now present, that of Mississhirther sun and lake [illegible] ginia, and of the North, and Angelinia State is appalling beyond words---- great that it will require many months to form anything like a correct estimate, with and [illegible] aching hearts but with resolute faces the sentiment of the meeting was that because of the awful chaos and wrecked homes and wrecked business, because of so many dead, and so many rendered homeless Glandelinia shall receive some terrible and unaccountable blow in turn, what that blow is it could not be foretold just yet. But it will quadruple the one Abbiesannia has suffered.

The sentiment also was not that of bury the dead, and give up the ship, but rather bury the dead, succor the needy, appeal for aid from a dual charitable world, and then start resolutely to work repairing the wrecked homes of the cities and towns, and [illegible] leaves safe in the future from Glandelinian bombers and miners. In every cases the work of upbuilding must begin over. In no place was the destruction only partial.

Also the sentiment was, Abbiesannia will, Abbiesannia must strike back, and for a holy cause, and for the freedom of children she is fighting for must survive the victorious in face of all difficulties and fulfil fulfill her glorious destiny. Abbiesannia shall rise and strike like a gattlesnake. If we have lost all else, we still have our great armies, one enormous one is facing [illegible] at Hedrick junction on the Codermine Creek and it is [illegible] the future of this tremendous strife that we must devote the energies of our lives. We can never forget even in the past what the Glandelinians have made helpless women and children suffer, we cannot forget the countless thousands of our friends and loved ones who either found in the angry billows of flood and fire that destroyed them a final resting place, or who died in measures committed by such a wicked and ruthless foe. But tears and grief must not make us forget our present duties. The blight and ruin which have destroyed everything in western and Central Calverinia, and Northern Angelinia, and of the floods of the past are not beyond repair, will not make Abbiesannia give up the fight against her traiterous Sister Glandelinia, we must not for a moment think that the war is to be abandoned against such a wicked world power because of these flood disasters, or forest fires and others, however horrible these disasters have been.

It is a time for the whole Christian Nation to show courage of the highest order. It is a time when all Abbiesannian armies, and even women and children either in the flood districts or out of them, show the stuff that is in them and we therefore can make no loftier acknowledgement of the material sympathy which the world is even extending to us then to answer back that after we shall have buried our dead, relieved the sufferings of the sick and destitute, we will bravely undertake the vast work of restoration and recuperation in the face of the enemy which lies before us, and do this work, and give the enemy back in full measure what she has deen done to us in a manner which shall convince the whole world that we have spirit to overcome and uphold our rights all misfortunes of war, and rebuild the wrecked cities. In this way s we shall prove that Abbiesnnia is worthy of the boundless tenderness being show showered upon her in the heirs and days of desolation and sorrow."

A news paper war correspondent who had unusual facilities for getting at all the state of affairs summoned up the situation on gau gaturday june the 27th just six days after the awful catastrohpe as follows:

" The first six days of the suffering of central and western Calverinia, and also of orthern Angelinia has passed away, and the extent of the two awful flood disasters which the Glandelinians brought on by the bursting of dams and dikes to the whole two city tates of Abbiesnnia seems great greater than it did even when the blow had just been struck. To think of the destruction of Abbiesnn Abbiesnnia a as state seems immeasureable, and no cannot be comprehended or hardly even believ after it has been found true by investigation. This is a disaster. that no one not the very world itself can be able to understand, to believe, to think could really happen. Think of a city of nearlyn 10,000,000 inhabatants who made up the po population of that great city which was wrecked and swept away almost to complete are dead are certain, and that five million of them were scattered all over th country for several thousand miles to be intermingled with the bodies of the dead other places as well. And the money value of the damage to the property of not only the citizens but the Abbiesnnian government is so great that no one can attempt to estimate it within $5,000,000,000 of the real amount.

In more things them can be th ught of the effects of both the floods of Calverinia state, and orthern Angelinia are irreparable beyond any statement or believe belief. It is a hellish scene of disaster. Outside of the cities water still covers35, covers 55,533,000 acres of ground that was formerly covered by many small towns hamlets and villiages, farms and beautiful woods, but which are as never be found or replaced, and which water may never go down or disappear for ma a year.

AAAAAA A large strip of land along the shore of Lake Turner turner(where th children lived) sixty miles long and from three hundred and fifty to four hund feet wide along the south side of the city by the same name, lake purnerwhere th finest residences stood was still covered by the waters, and the lake had been ma ely increased in size and depth. Five thousand houses how had their foundations the lake,,, although before the flood it had a fine lake beach five hundred yards in front of it. This land seems gone forever.

The survivors were indeed stunned and dazed, and as they formed "landelinia prisoners to work hard in clearing the wreckage and bury the few dead bodies found and to make their cities and towns habitable for the living they had at first thought it had been a sure enough natural disaster, and that even yet they could not realize to the full extent what they have lost or guess the suffering that is in store for them and their children when their moments of leisure come and they begin to miss friends and loved ones who are dead.

It is certain now that however Mildred reenburg and her sister cities have suffered, the cities and towns as soon as materialmaterials can be brought in will be rebuilt in the face of the wicked enemy, and it is also hoped these cities will again be the scene of as great a business as ever before. but few of the men of the places can pay any attention yet to the work that is necessary for their restoration for since the twenty first they have been busy compelling the rebel prisoners at the point of the bayonet with the roughest work of clearing the city, clearing away the debris, of burying the bodies which still are being discovered under the ruins each day and of providing for their simplest necessities. I have been through the city of Mildred reenburg, poverty ave and also Vigned, and have met many women who before the disaster were mistresses of splendid mansions who every went provided for who were making their way through the str eets half dazed search of a little food, and esteeming themselves fortunate if their families still intact to gather in the wreckage of their former homes.

And the man who a few days before the flood was the owner of a great and the kind master of many well paid servants and factory workers could be seen compelling Glandelinians to work at the trying task of removing wreckage hauling away to burial the decayed and unrecognizable bodies of the dead, all under them or the direction of armed soldiers and deputy sheriffs, who are there to see that the work is not slighted.

And around every one is ruin. The broken and shattered homes, the contents are articles of furniture, above wall the burning funeral pyres on which the bodies many of the dead are being consumed , make every city and town a place of horror to these whose personal wants are best provided for. The perils from the flood followed for all of those who survived the peril of wrecked homes and water by peril of hunger and a peril of disease. But so far none of these cities flooded only the to life and property from the great hordes of Glandelinian Military robbers and inhuman war outlaws like in the southern cities flooded who were attracted by the helpless conditions of those cities to seek their prey, for the prompt action governor saunders, through the Adjutant general, and of the mayors of the cities in Central and western western Calverinia and the Citizens relief Committee have estab lished proper order and made the horrible scenes of the stripping of corpses and the assaults on persons, as were occuring south, impossible up here. And it was to be hoped that the splendid response of the country to the appeal of help from the surviving cities and towns was to soon remove all danger from suffering and hunger, but the danger of a great pestilence was i orvis still great however, and indeed the fear that every one may fall victims to a scourage of disease is gaining in strength and leading to a general exodi ex exodus of all the women and children and of many of the older men of the cities and towns, who are crowding the boats and the trains which can run to get away to the cities and towns further northeast and north.

Added to the danger from the thousands of decomposing bodies of both men and beasts still which it is believed still lie under the ruined houses and in the territories outsi outside the cities and along the riger shore,, is the dangers from the unflushed sewers and closets in these cities and towns. Until yesterday the 25th it was practically impossible to flush the sewers in any part of the cities on account of the lack of water: and although the condition is now much better there is much of the great evil still,,,

Terrible fevers fevers and other diseases which may soon bred under these conditions will show within ten days it is feared. Many of the doctors and physicians who came to these cities and towns have issued statements to day calculated to increase the fears and apprehensions of the citizens in this matter. Among them is of James Riete national Health Officer who says that there is great danger. He refers to the floods of Mis-Shirther Sun and Lake olicia holiday, November 1912, which covered many country with seas of waters, and that only the severe winter coming on practically forced to prevent a plague who which could have been due Had it been midsummer, even though in the Mis-Shirther Sun Flood the drowned in numbers was comparatively small and insignificent.....

The work of clearing away the debris in the cities by the prisoners has been carried on with a fair degree of vigor, and as more prisoners are arriving it is reported that it will be pushed much faster, as fast as limit will permit, the prisoners working day and night; there being a day and night shift. The 22,000,000 Glandelinian prisoners whom it has been decided to bring in from christian military camps for the work will be compelled to take up the task, without the citizens having to worry about the safety of the remnants of their own property which they are now left unguarded in their work of guardingprisoners.

It is said that the most important need is however, for money to pay the men who help the soldiers guard the desperate Glandelinian prisoners. The adjutant general said to day" I have not a single panney to pay the men who help soldiers guard the working prisoners who are working against their will all day along in the streets and among wrecked houses. I am even not able to say to a single one of these men" You shall recieve your pay for your work." I have not the money to make good the promish and I hope and I believe the country will rapidly relieve the situation.

We must have these cities and towns cleaned up at any cost, and with the greatest speed possible. And if it is not done with all haste, and at the same time well done will, there may be a pestilence, and if it break out in these cities it will not only be central and Western Calverinia that will suffer. uch things spread, and it is not only for the sake of these cities and towns but for there in Abbiesnnia and other states that I urge that above all things we sent and must have money.

Indeed the whole nation has been most kind in its response to the appeal of both Calverinia and Angelinia, and from what I hear food and everything on the line of provisions and dis disinfectants sufficient for temporary purposes at least are here,,, it visits these stricken territories the awful destitution prevailing: of all the poor people here, and of the flood disaster far south, not one rich or poor has anything anything, nay I'm not afraid to say the rich might have been hardest hit.

There is not one person of the thirty million homeless up north who could even furnish a single room in which to commence housekeeping even though they had the money to rebuild the room. These people have absolutely nothing except what is given them by the relief committee. They are in a condition of absolute want, they lack everything, and save for the splendid generiousty of the nation they would be utterly without the slightest hope.

The gang of men in the streets are still finding every now and then badly decomposed bodies. Few of these relics of human life can be recognised, and many of them are naked and without anything about them which would lead to identification. They are disposed of as rapidly as possible, but to the Glandelinian prisoners the work is very offensive and the prisoners engaged in it can not endure it steadily for any great length of time, and have to be relieved by others.

The best work in this direction is being done also in the rural districts outside the city and other places. During the day bodies were found at frequent intervals and just at sunset seventeen were found, in the ruins of one house. It is expected that there will be found to morrow or later as the Glandelinian work gang that to day found seventeen bodies bodies will clear up the wreckage where is is known they that a hundred people were killed, that is if their bodies are to be found.

The soldiers from Dorothy Gale, Angelinia Aguhlia, and francisco,Atlanta who have been here in these towns providing for order and also helping in the work of cleaning up the cities and towns have become exhausted, and it has been necessary to relieve them. The Dondobian Light Infantry from the city of Pandora arrived at Mildred Greenburg to day to take up the work. The exodus from Mildred Greenburg to Francis Atlanta and Pandora and other neighboring cities is still going on. The sailboats on the river north of here are crowded to their fullest capacity, and they are making as many round trips each da. day as they can. ....

" There is never any place in the whole world, wher whether earthquake storm, or flood that had ever made a calamity as to approach any where near the horrors of northern Central Calverinia, and northern Angelinia state combining with the greater horror at Abbiamin, Mildred Greenburg, and other cities."

Such was the declaration of the chief member of the Abbiamnian Treasury Treasury department department saturday after filing a secret report to the government in which as far as he was able with the aid of his assistants he outlined the damage sustained by the Government and made confiden confidential suggestions concerning the advisability of continuing the expenditures that had been made annually.

" These cities and towns both Calverinia, and Angelinian states have to Physicians and Red Cross nurses" he continued and " and the situation is worse the fact that so many are in the army and there are not enough in the state militia. And those also who would rush aid to the stricken regions of both north and south should send quicklime, chloride of lime, carbolic acid and many other disinfectants for their own safty and welfare stay away themselves. Today Mildred Greenburg all the other big cities and towns are gigantic funeral pyres. From the wreckage in every place could be seen ascending high into the air thousands of necks clouds the air is filled with the sickening odor are odor of burning human flesh. But all making one forget even the presence of the unccounted and uncounted dead is the stench of decaying rice, and other vegetable products that lie swelling with the heat of the summer and already putrefying. Powerful chemicals and disinfectants are therefore required to prevent what this is sure to produce---a plague."

In the face of these awful conditions, the cities of Mildred Greenburg, Pandora La polama and so on are burning the dead, burning or repairing the wreckage, and attempting to restore order and bring about a resumption of business.

No words of complaint are heard anywhere. The woe which has come upon Central Calverinia and northern Angelinia state is even too great, too immeasureable for tears and the unusual affliction of the citizens in the heavy loss of dear ones is entirely forgotten as it seems in the heroic fight that is being made for self preservation for the districts and country. Women of wealth steal through the streets with clothing save for a bit of torn and grimy cloth wrapped about them. Men of means are in the same sorry plight and go about their grue some task of making the prisons clean up in a so stolid a manner that it is obvious that these cities and towns have not awakened to the full horror of the situation. There has not been time to think.

" It is not uncomon to hear worn and haggard men refer to the loss of their friends families and their all with so little evidence of concern that it would attract wonder indeed were not were not the scenes of the aiding wise visitors by the terror of the awful situation. Libie surely the reaction that is feared and by those who are leading the effort to make the cities and towns which survived the flood habitable. When this work is completed and there is time to think, not only a heartrending wail of woe will go up from the surviving population of the wrecked cities and towns and glowing desperation to succeed the energy that is now manifested but the Glandelinian prisoners will have to be drawn out before the citizens for their pent fury upon them, for they know Glandelinia is responsible for the full extent of the disaster.

The spirit of the disaster is still increased by the spirit of the people and which can be aply illustrated by Captian Andre Delmis, chief custom inspector of Porty St John. Delmis who is sixty years of age, lost his entire family, son and daughters, his mother and father, Uncle and aunt, two brothers and a sister. The bodies of the sons and daughters were recovered, but no trace of the rest has been found whether their bodies was swept away by the flood, reseat into the sea from one of the dread funeral barges, or buried may never be known. Terrible as was the blow, Delmis was at his post the day following the receding of the flood, attired in a pair of Glandelinian prisoner garb all that he could find to wear, and had it carry his papers with him to identify himself and prove he was not a Glandelinian prisoner. And in them he boarded a big German tramp steamer that arrived in port with provisions for the afflicted, inspected her, and sent her to Sacramento Abbiamin as she was unable to discharge her cargo at the wrecked cities and towns being unable to go through the wreckage jams in the water of the river and ports.

In his report to Angelinia Agathia, the investigation Committees placed the loss of life in the central and western Calverinia and northern Angelinia districts combined at from 6,500,000 to 8,000,000 and sternly and firmly ridiculed the idea that any person could estimate the real property loss at that time, and probably would not be able to do so for many years to come. He predicted that it would be utterly impossible to estimate within$ 10,000,000,000 of the full su correct figure.

His estimate was based upon what was said to be better information than that from any any other investigator in the stricken districts, all of them having made a complete canvas of the cities and towns on horseback, visiting every locality where it was possible to travel instruction from the tax treasury department being to thoroughly investigate every details no one else had made such a canvass.

Vice president and general manager Hobert Sugar of the Internation and Great Abbiamnia, Andinia, and Calverine Railroad after having his own investigators look over the situation in the flooded districts of both north and south, said the railroad losses would be as far as fifty five million to sixty six million dollars for that distance alone. At all big cities river wharves warehouses, depots and tracks were ruined and many cars and locomotives swept away. The costly railroad bridges which crossed streams and rivers, were swept entirely away.

The great Internation and Mis-Hollester and Pandora had nearly twenty five hundred miles of tracks washed out, while the Angelinia Agathia, and sacramento and great northern suffered heavily, with five hundred cars mostly freight scattered all over this far distant territories, and hundreds of locomotives with them. All tracks between Francis Atlanta, and Angelinia Agathia with all of the bridges, was completely washed away, and many brakemen and train crews lost their lives..

In all the big cities, noth and south, all kinds of elevated companies like observed in Chicago Chicago and New York and so on suffered heavily, all street car companies were wiped out, with all surface cars wrecked, and of the elevated elevated lines in the big cities not a car was found intact, and the electric companies powers were ruined.

Natural the question of insurance and banking concerns was one much discussed after the first feeling of horror occasioned by the overwhelming disaster had worn off, and the fact was developed that all the life insurance, and other insurance companies were also wiped out in these cities and towns, and because of that life and building insurance throughout Calverinia and Angelinia state elsewhere outside the zone of flood were somewhat badly hit, but in a greater degree as would naturally be supposed, despite the fac of the heavy death list taken in consideration---after among all the survivors immense property insurance was carried by the business men and property owners of the desolate cities. Many of the big banking concerns throughout the country from having big branches in the ruined cities were hardest hit, and two hundred banks were forced to close.

Although the real loss of life will never be known, a large proprtion of the victims was composed of women and children a class which rarely if ever carried any kind of insurance, but the men the majority of them drowned and crushed were residents of the richer, and not the poorer districts of the cities and towns, for few had a chance to abandon their homes at the first alarm and flee to more elevated places. These victims were caught in their houses, together with their families, husbands, and wives and also children died together.

And the men who worked for a living at trades and in the various branches of employment where skilled labor or not is demanded also carried life insurance, and this is the main reason the surviving life insurance companies sur suffered more than was predicted.

One of the most prominent insurance managers in Angelinia Agathia said on the 17th of June:

" It is probable all life insurance companies and many banks as well will feel the blow of the two enormous flood disasters, in Calverinia, and Angelinia tate, as well as from the forest fires. How much insurance was carried by the victims and surviving is not yet known but it must have been great in the extreme. The large proportion of women and children among the dead will somewhat lighten the burden as they alone did not carry insurance.

The rule requiring the body of the insured to be identified will have to be varied because of the number of bodies never recovered, and otherwise without identification. Unless the rigor of this rule is relaxed by the insurers litigation will be boundless.

Practically an unusually enormous property insurance of flood, fire and storm was carried at the big cities and towns by the river shore. Angelinia Agathia and Dorothy Gale, as well as grandis Atlanta, representives of the largest National insurance companies when seen said in the opinion that the insurance policies against flood losses carried by people of Mildred Greenburg city alone would not reach higher than$100,000,000$ one hundred million dollars, but what the other places carry it was not yet known. The head of one of the leading insurance firms in Mildred Greenburg city which repesented many large eastern, southern, and northern companies said:

" We have carried an enormous flood insurance at Mildred Greenburg city and while my information on this point is limited, feel the flood insurance was very large and have had large numbers of requests for flood insurance policies. We held near fifty million dollars on many big houses in Vignon and our loss will probably be the same in this town. We held twenty five million flood insurance at La Polama

City and about two million at Mandorn..The insurance situation at the other places is tremendous. At many places were was even great loss by fire, Vignon and La Palma and also El verso is burning, and the fire insurance was unusually large.

At El verno four hundred houses were swept away, four thousand were destroyed the remainder wrecked beyond habatitation and millions of dollars worth of property in dry goods, shoe stores, grocery and other business houses-----wholesale and retail was ruined and there was not one house which did not suffer damage the total property losses for El Verso alone being about $ 20,000,000 and heavy insurance was carried, storm fire, and flood. It is the most tremendous disaster that has ever occured, and has caussed hundreds of banks throughout the country to close, and tremendous commotion among the despositers who have money in these banks.

The first message by wire of the details of the disaster was sent out of Mildred reenburg city at 7 P.M. over the wire of the Northern Abbiesnnian Telegraph company. The company laid a cable across the still remaining flood in the country and through it they transmitted the message. The cable was brought from Angelinia Agathia on a passengertrain. Other telegraph companies had several wires in good working order and also had the Eastern Union company.

The Mormonulan Cable company secured both ends of its cable and established communication from Poverty Row with the outside world via the city of Mormonula Friday evening the 26th.

CENTRAL CALVERNIA NINE DAYS AFTER THE FLOOD JUNE THEBOTH 1911.

GREAT CHANGES APPARENT... SYSTEMATIC EFFORTS TO OBTAIN NAMES OF THE DEAD, AND DISCOVER WHERE THEY CAME FROM. MATTERS OVER INSURANCE CREATES A BIG BOTHER.

TUESDAY, June the 30th, with the waters of the flood going down in some places in other parts of Central Calvernia presented a far diff ni different yet sadder appearance then on the monday previous of the 22th.Towns covered over completely by water were appearing in terrible flattened ruins, and it looked as if a calamity had occured with the purpose to wipe out a whole nation. In Mildred Greenburg and other big places even now there are no street cars, and elevated. lines in operation in any part of the cities, and the electric line and water service yet had not been resumed. The situation under the circumstances was little short of the ruin of an entire nation.

However it must not be understood by any means that the remaining portion of Calvernia had been left in anything like its normal condition in the far north, and east, for hundreds of towns were badly wrecked and shaken by the explosion of nothing yet was learned because of the communication everywhere being interrupted, so great a change had been wrought in Calvernia by the dreadful disaster, as such horror prevailed and everywhere chaos reigned that only Mildred Greenburg and Francis Atlanta and the people who had been given them such noble assistance had reason to be satisfied what is seen to be accomplished in the face of such fearful odds. Even the slightest progress made under these circumstances was little short of remarkable. According to statements made by general Homer, Mayor purns of Francis Millie city which felt the shocks but not the flood, and all others there has every good reason yet to believe that the extent of the disaster when it is investigated will prove to be ten times more immejse than it seems now, and if the progress of the work would in a long run even prove satisfactory it would be a miracle.

On that morning the board of health in every big city which was injured began systems systematic efforts to obtain the names of the dead, and the places where they came from, for no matter where the dead were found, they never lived in the city and yet every city had its own list of dead, and so the flood surely commended to itself one of the most re record breaking freaks of all times, washing out the dead from cities and hurling them to points unknown, and bring the dead from Abbiesnnia city to lie in their places. The main reasen the check of the names were attempted was be a because so that information could be used for legal purposes and for life insurance settlemtns settlements.

Therefore an agent was stationed at the headquarters of the central relief headquarters of every city and town to receive and file sworn statements in lieu of coroners certificates. persons who had left the cities and towns had in possession of information concerning the dead, were notified to send sworn statements to the agents.

The steady streams of refugees from poverty Row and other cities was kept up and there was not a departing train that had tracks to run which was not packed to its platforms. And the refugees continued to leave for many days thereafter. And never in the world could any one who might have been there witness or picture more sadder sight, than the picture presented by boat loads of refugees, when the ropes were cut off, and the craft either swung out into the bay or river guarded by tar craft and away from the desolated citiesor towns. There was not a face that was not turned toward the ruin, and there was not an eye that was not mostioned by tears, and the weeping of the children was heartrending. It was a scene well fit for the song" Farewell To Thee." AND so great indeed had been the rush to leave behind the scenes of the flood, that one of the big river craft the St Lawerence had not left her wha wharf a single day at Mildred reenburg City without o being compelled to deay passage to a portion of those who wanted to get away.

At the waterside the most pitiful scenes of all observed were the partings. Husbands came to the gangplank and kissed their weeping wives and children good bye and then turned back to the hard work of reconstruction which confronted them, with breaking hearts.Hundrads of women who were overcome at the last moment were cared for by strange hands, while those who loved them, bound to the cities and towns by a great necessity could do no more than watch from afar and pray.

Instead of waiting untill Mildred reenburg and other cities and towns were reached to begin work, steps were also taken to care for refugees at other points and during fourteen days and nights hundreds of thousands of hungry hungry refugees were fed, while thousands of wounded and sick were being cared for. There was plenty of work on hand for ten times the number of Glandellinians forcibly employed, and yet they were being pressed to the utmost. The area which had not yet been touched embraced three thousand and a half miles of country by river side and sea beach. There was not yet even enough provisions on hand to feed every one in Mildred reenburg for a weekand like a week, and even then there was a great deal of trouble in properly distributing supplies the rush at the depots being as great as if a world famine was threatening to wipe out the whole human race.

It was indeed a great mercy that the weather since the flood had been clear and dry though of course it had been and still was unseasonably warm for a June month. And it rained a single day or night the suffering would have been terrible in the extreme for there was not even a single shelter in any of the ruined cities and towns. There were about twenty sid six thousand soldiers in Mildred reenburg alone doing guard duty and also police duty. The camp on the wharf between the Mildred reenburg Mollen paper gun company and the foot of St Aldre street had been put into such shape by the Glandellinian prisoners and the soldiers a comfertably housed. There were many commands and they kept out the dangerous glandellinian Vandals and ghouls.

The fact that no money was available to pay the men who were engaged in guarding the Glandellinians at work cleaning the streets was a great detriment, in preparing the way not only for rebuilding this city but in the effort to prevent the spread of plagues and pestilences.

As to the probability of a pestilence the Mayor of reenburg said Mildred reenburg City said-

" I and all the rest are in favor of burning as much of the rubbish as possible and of burning it as quickly as it can be done. I do predict the danger of a pestilence and for facts things are coming to that point where a dreadful pestilence may be possible unless prompt measures are taken and I believe there is nothing so effective as fire, gain burn everything and burn a it at once."

All the churches of any size in Mil red Greenburg and other cities and towns being either ruined totally wrecked or washed away, divine services on the following sundays following the disaster were in all cases suspended. Only in one case o was the Celebrated and that was in the streets where it could be done.

At Angelinia gathia and o all other places where masses could be said they were said for the flood victims and the dead and every preat at these Masses preached eloquent and feeling sermons in which they spoke of the awful disaster in both Calvernia Calvernia and northern Angelinia that had be fallen the people because the enemy went to wreck the national armies by flood and fire. After expressing sympathy with the afflicted and distressed, the priests advised all men folk who had not one yet to all go and storm the draft boards for admittance into the army to fight the foe. One of them said in the "ermon and Sermon and it is believed he is right.

" This kind of a war the Glandellinians are fighting, and the way they are fighting it, I denounce as a war against Heaven and Earth, and Humanity in general I as well as against nature and the greatest blasphemy on record. Therefore as you all know the horrors the enemy have committed, the millions dead by floods, the millions rendered homeless by the flood, the irreparable, unestimated destruction to property, it is your duty before God, and to him and his holy Church in general to go out to fight and supress such a wicked foe, a foe that even now surely before the nations of the earth are waging a war for which they do things to which we are sure they deserve no quarter, and should be treated like the wicked nations were in the Middle Ages. It's also a bloody war on innocent children, because they are good, because ab sennia of all ation remains righteous in the extreme, and recall, all nations are laughing at us because we do nothing to supress the Glandellinians from committing these horrors in the future. Therefore all who still do not go quickly to join the army have no sympathy for the victims of the flood, are slackers and chicken hearted cowards. Therefore those in the Congregation who are men who do not think it is advisible to go in the army because of the disaster caused by the enemy raise their hand."

But not a hand was raised.

The priest went on;

"I am happy and comforted to see that you all agree. Therefore in God's name, and for the sake of His Son who died on the Cross for us all let us join hands and do what can be done to end these unatural horrors committed by His animals and ours.

Amen."

Cardenal Galaldi who had been most active in his efforts to relieve the suffering of the refugees who had even come to Mildred Greenburg City recieved a telegram from Archbishop Flanders of Angelinia Agathia stating that the diocese of that city would see that all Children who were rendered orphans by the disaster in that city and other places sent to his care were kindly provided for. But he recieved But he recieved answer that no Orphan daylums needed to even think of recieving any children, as there were no children orphened for the fact that very few children survived.

From many points north and south Angelinia Agathia was the chief chief center of refugees, while Francis Atlanta was the chief center of distribution and also the key to Angelinia Agathia, and all the flooded cities and towns, and expecially were cities. Angelinia Agathia, Dorothy Gale and Francis Atlanta cities were practically the only ways in or out for many weeks. In Angelinia Agathia thousands upon thousands of refugees came, Angelinia Agathia and Dorothy Gale, and scores of other cities were filled with them, but the larger numbers went right through to points in by sprinkle and Abbieannia states, and also further north. Free transportation was furnished to any point, whether they had relatives who would or could take of them or not. All of the refugees who arrived at Angelinia Agathia from both the flooded towns in Angelinia, and Central Calverinia seemtly glad and in such a pitiful condition that the citizens were touched as well as aroused.

Vast as the work is, all are being provided for" said Edwin Allen Jaime of the transportation division dpt of the relief committee. "We have not let any one go through uncared for."

At all places were curiousity was at a discount. People even who had urgent business in the ruined cities and towns found it hard to get permits to go there, and those who were curious international war correspondents of other nations could not get there at all. Camera fiends were absolutely barred and arrested on sight if they did get in. One foreigner was shot for taking a picture of a little girl who was naked, and three International newspaper men who were taking views of the ruins in Mildred Greenburg were rounded up, their cameras smashed and they themselves forced to go to work gathering up the decomposed corpses.

Even Angelinia Agathia, Francis Atlanta, pandora and Dorothy Gale and other Big cities and towns were in a similar state of martial law. Inside surrounded all depots of all trains that only ran northwest, and would not allow war correspondents gather to see the refugees come in, though other are do of the refugees themselves gathered without hinderance as they came only to bring the refugees to their h own homes and gives them shelter. The former however was enforced by enforcement of a proclamation issued by the Mayor of Angelinia Agathia and other cities copies of which printed on large red cards were posted conspicously all over the cities on poles, sides of houses fences and the like and which read:

"NO WAR CORRESPONDENTS, INTERNATION NEWS PAPER MEN AND REPORTERS AND THE LIKE ARE NOT ALLOWED WITHIN THE CITIES TO TAKE PICTURES OR NEWS WHILE THE DISORDER IS IN FULL SWAY. THOSE WHO TRY TO DO SO WILL BE SHOT AS SPIES.

THE MAYOR."

THE catastrophe all but paralized river shipping business, and nearly all railroad transportation business and the like in the flood visit visited section. At all river and sea ports that had been open to the world despite the war all purchasing and other trades stopped, and for nearly three thousand miles along the sea shore and nearly a hundred miles out to sea the waters was thickly ol covered with floating wreckage of every destription and bodies of human beings and animals. Many ews sailors of ships of other nations predicted many houses were floating out at sea very unusual sight indeed from which people still alive were taken off rooftops.

There was no cotton to move. Indeed had the flood come a few weeks later the loss would have greatly increased, as the cotton and other crops would either have been upon the wharves or in warehouses.

Some of the heaviest financial losers were the Gemini National spy, and the Secret Service Societies and agencies. One branch known as the United and with headquarters at Angelinia Agathia, lost three hundred out of a quarters of five thousand

Chapter 102

THE ENORMOUS MAGNITUDE OF THE RELIEF NECESSARY.
SIXTY FIVE MILLION PERSONS TO BE CLOTHED AND FED. SYSTEM OF RELIEF ORGANIZATION. ----HOW THE DISASTER AFFECTED TRADE.

The situation at Mildred Greenburg on Tuesday Night the 30th of June just about nine days after the catastrophe was thus described by a competent aurthority who arrived in the city two days after the once recession of the flood.

"The scenes at Mildred Greenburg and outside is astonishing. For one thing there is enough wreckage deposited by the flood north of Mildred greenburg to build six cities the size of new York in the United States, and fifteen sections of elevated structures believed belonging to either Abbieann or other big cities was deposited within the center or down town district of the city of Mildred Greenburg whose own elevated structures fortunately withstood the inundation.

It must also be possible by this time to give some idea of the magnitude which in every place relief must assume. In Mildred Greenburg city alone there were about 1,100,000 persons in the city when the census was taken a few weeks ago and most of these were women and children. After the flood only five hundred thousand remained, and this latter statement is made after careful inquiry from the best source of information. About thirty five thousands of the citizens have left the city together with hundreds of thousands of refugees who found no means of aid there most of them and a few children to go to friendly cities and towns for aid. Of the whole flood districts of Central and Western Calverinia and Northern Angelinia the total number of refugees is sixty five million and all these must be helped helped and helped long?

"The question is indeed a verybard one to solve, and even the men who know or do not know most of the situation and who have forced the prisoners to labor day and night since they came into the cities under guard of soldiers hesitate to answer.

THE executive head of the relief work whose name is not mentioned here said it was possible beyond the slightest doubts that there was not one person in any of the cities who did not require assistance of any kind. The head of the News papers of every one of the cities declared that a most careful and a conservative men believed that fully two thirds of the surviving and remaining population were even sick and half starving this very day. All others very familiar with the situation were asked for their opinion and they estimated variously the number that must be helped for a long time and that the problem was bigger for aiding than ever before because of the situation not only here but also at the south. Therefore the problem is forced that there are to day in Mildred Greenburg along or along over 1,200,000 persons who not only must be fed and clothed but who are sick and need care and shelter from the storms and the hot rays of the sun. The proper proportion of those who were in the fi fairest circumstances and lost all is more than astonishing, even relied itself cannot be fairly limited to those who formed the poor class before the floods.

One of the best men left Mildred Greenburg city and he said;

"Over three weeks ago I had a good home and a fairly good business which paid me between five thousand and six thousand dollars a month. To day I have nothing, even my wife and children were not spared to me. And I see no way of reestablishing my home in the near future."

This man had a real estate and house renting angecy.

At the Military headquarters one of the prinsipal offiis officials doing temporary duty for the city said;

"Before the awful flood I had a good home and an excellent income. I felt more than rich and I had a wife and three beautiful kids. My house is gone and my business and my wife and children. The fact is I don't even own the clothing I stand before you in. I borrowed them."

Now these were not at all exceptional cases. They are fairly typical. Men who worked hard for wages, who rented or owned good homes and considered themselves fairly well provided for, are as the world goes to day, by dozens of millions millions not only without a red cent, but without food, without clothing, and without employment and having lost all they possess.

There must be fed and clothing these sixty two million untill they can recover from their loss and those who are able work out their temporal salvation. And then some thing ought to be done to help the worthy get on their feet and make a fresh start. Many people will and have left the wrecked cities and towns, but it is plain however that nothing like the number is believed to go. The wrecked cities and towns are stillhome to the great majority. Theybare cities and towns of fine local pride. Poverty Row, Abbieann, and others were some of the most beautiful cities in all Abbieannia, and with their excellent waterways or bays, and lakes were pleasant places to life in summer or wijter winter, therefore those who can stay at these places and life there will do so.

Poverty Row. Pl policies ranged from over one million to three million.

One billion, one hundred and eighty odd million dollars repeste represented the value of life insurance policies carried by all companies in the states of Calverinia and Angelinia at the time of the flood. It was estimated that (456,000 $ 945,000,000 represented th v the life risks carried in the cities and towns by all the regular companies and that over $10,000,000 was carried by assessment and all other organizations. And in all these wrecked places or those completely washed away all insurance company branches of other places were wiped out. And insurance men said it was probable that of the persons killed or drowned in the recent two disasters about 900,000 of them were men and that according to statistics all of them had life polices of an average value of $2,000 dollars. Every company and every assesment and Catholic societies and ational or spy fraternal companies like the Gemini and other war and military Detective agencies divided the losses and all reputable organizations were badly or crippled thereby.

Accurate figures of the ormormous losses could not be made and no one could even represent the calculations of the domestic agenait agencies of the Mutual and utual life insurance empanies in Angelinia gathia, Dorthy Dorothy Gale of the big Cities. In regard to this one of the insurance heads said;

"The most striking feature of the insurance situation at Mildred Greenburg nd all other cities in property and life insurance and the like is the difficulty that will surely arise when the adjustment of claims is taken up. Already thous of bodies of persons from every differen different places found far south as Angelinia gathia, and belonging even to Abbiesnn have been buried withoutbeing identification whatever, hundreds more have been taken out to river or sea and been cremated while the great mass majority of them have been swept by the flood into the sea never to be recovered. Whole families in all these cities have been destroyed in nearly every instance and insurance papers have suffered in the general destruction of property. This state of affiars will make it extremely difficult beyond description for all the beneficiaries to establish their claims, and the fact that everyone of every one of our branch buildings have been wiped out makes the difficulty still greater and quadruples the whole situation.

Our agency properties at Abbiesnn some of the biggest in the world was complee completely destroyed, and we have no accurate report of our other losses in cities and towns so it is impossible to give other than general estimate of what the may be. The railroad elevated insurance in Abbiesnn city is hard hit, for in the city there were elevated train lines as long distanced and as excellent as found in Chicago and New York and other big cities in merica, and the fragments of these railroad structures together with their cars have either been found scattered over the land as far south as Dorothy Gale and Angeline Junction city or in the waters of the river and bay. All classes of people insuring in the regular companies are in general surrounded by conditions that render them better risks in the event of an immeasureable calamity calamity as this, but if my information is correct the better portion of the resident districts of all the cities and towns suffered most and we may hear of the most heaviest losses in all time. On the elevated structures and trains in Abbiesnn city I think we carried between $500,000,000 insurance. In Elevated structures of Mildred Greenburg and Poverty Row and Vignon we carried between thire thirty three million dollars insurance for each apiece. The insurance business in that part of Calverinia could have been exceptionally good because of the cotton values and yet five hundred or over five hundred million dollars of these crops alone are wiped out. I think it is the greate greatest a greatest and most ov whem ovaverwhelming disaster on earth, and will take fifty years for Calverinia to recover from it."

Henry Caldwell southern manager of the Equitable Life of Angelinia gathia s said;

"We have about one hundred million risks in Mildred Greenburg, and though were hoping they are not among the lost we were sadly disappointed. But our reports from Vignon and other places are not in, and though we managed to recieve reports from other cources it seems a score of big cities have been found that were badly affected by the terrible shock of the explosion as Abb Abbiesnn and that three of the singly reported a loss of life up to seven hundred thousand. Everywhere throughout the scene of disaster the assessment and fraternal and other insurance companies the most losses because of the fact that such a war made disaster has caused loss of life greater among the richer classes. Every accident and building insurance company inthe whole nation have heavy losses to meet."

If the country respondes responds to the needs in the measure given to the homeless and the others of the Lake Belicia and Mis-Whirther Run Floods, Heldi junction and all other stricken cities and sections, Central Calverinia will not only be restores restored but will despite the progress of the enemy side of the war not only be restored but will enter upon a greater future than was expected or thought of before the flood disaster.

This is an extrem extraordinary thing to say, and though millions will not believe it, it has nevertheless bu been experienced in the past, therefore it can be expected here. Since the last days of the flood there had no has been no douvte of the restoration of Central Calverinia and also the west. If in the future Central Calverinia in the many years after celebratee celebrates a flood anniveresary the day upon which the courage of the country was reborn ought to be remembered forever.

From a Central organization the relief work has been divided by many sections. A depot and a sub committee were also established in each ward of every city and town. Yet there are so so many fatherless, and so many widows that they cannot be estimated, and there are hundreds of thousands of sick who must recieve dairity.

In every city all the Glandelinian prisoners are working in big parties under the direction of guards and bosses. They are paid only in food and clothing and cannot expect anything else. And in this way the Relief Committee is within the first of the week meeting the needs of the ormormous armies of survivors and at the sesseviime was graudally clearing the streets, and burning the ruins and refuse. A single report made by one of the Ward Committee men to an correspondent will serve to show what scale this plan is being carried out.

"In my ward" said the "Committee man" I have 1,678 prisoners forcibly employed ider strict guard either soldiers or armed citizens, and I am feeding 4,367 prisons.

The system of the Mildred Greenburg relief organization is admirable and more than be expected, and never before was economy practiced to rid rigidly in the distribut im of the nations largeness. Our aim is to distribute no money at this time what ever but to simply with relief funds all of the guards and citizens improcuing the prisoners in the clearing of the city and the crem cremation of the dead untill finally we are in good time able to remove to all wate t extent the ravages of the ding made flood. We employ all men as guards who can work, and we will give food and clothing. All of the men and even many of the women responded to the rule most willingly and went to work guarding laboring prisoners, and to those of the prisoners who were unwilling to work the guards were under instructions to apply the authority of martial law.

Every one of the city of Mildred Greenburg who is able to is at work guarding the prisoners and the contributions which we are recieving from the sympathising cities are going to pay for the most urgent work the enemy imposed pon us by making such a flood.

Six to seven days have already wrought surprising changes in conditions at Mildred Greenburg and many other flood ed cities, indeed each day has been a sort of chapter initself. From the 22th to 26th for the whole of Central and western Calverini ley the whole nation in general was complete paralysis, and many it was said declared because of the disaster Abbiesnnia was going to abandon the war and let Glandelinia go her own way. But it was not so. I hear the disaster has caused such an ormormous increase in men going to the army that the world is astonished. On saturday the 27th came the beginning of realization. Sunday the 28th might have been called the crisis period, and despite the magnitude of the awful calamity the crisis was passed safely. And what has been accomplished since the urturning point Sunday Sunday is amazing even to the world. It is almost as incredible as all of the effects of this visitation are without precedent.

On the 23th the people of these cities and towns did nothing else but go about dazed and bewildered, gathering a few hundred of the bodies which were in their way. On Sunday the born leaders who are usually not discovered in any community until a great emergency arises began to forge in front. And they were not men from one rank in point of wealth or even intellegence. They came from all classes, even foreigners. For example there was an english foreigner who two weeks in the future is to get his second citizenship papers. His name is Hank "orn DornBodies which lay exposed in the streets and which had been brought down here from other cities with all that ormormous sea of wreckage and which were necessary to relove remove somewhere lest they be stepped on were carried into temporary morgues untill five thousand lay in rows on floors, and which could not even be identified. Then a big problem in mortal ty such as no other nation in the world ever faced during a disaster, was presented.

Pestilence which stalked forth by Monday Monday June the 29th and which is beginningto spread with an alarming rate seems about to take possession of what the vandal made flood has left. Therefore immediate disposition of these bodies are or was absolutely necessary to save the living. Then it was that the Relief committee and others who by common impulse had come together to deal with the problem. and they found Hank Dorn, who though he cannot yet understand our "panish language very good nevertheless took y up the most gres grewsome task ever seen away from any of our bloodiest battlefields. But of course he had to have helpers. All the citizens volunteered, but he declined and when one of the Abbiesannians who could speak a little English asked;

"For why see ett that ye say we no should work do?"

He answered;

"You people suffered the disaster. You were rendered homeless, lost your families in the flood, cost all, shocked the nation and the world with the worst disaster in history. Whom do you Sir think was responsible?"

The Abbiesannian answered;

"The glandelinians say make one beeg disaster. They are therefore guilty."

"Well" said the Englisyh English man" they committed the disaster, they are responsible for it, make all glandelinian prisoners do the work and if they won't or start to protest ----Well"

"Why eat ess was good idea" he said that is the Abbiesannian, and soon the prisoners were brought and were impressed into the service at the point of the bayonet. At the beginning the prisoners thought ot very mean to make them work and therefore quite a number had declined to do it and so many therefore were shot that the rest because wise and there was hardly no more trouble. Therefore under the direction of work Dorn these hundreds of bodies already collected and others brought from the immense seas of wreckage deposited near the city----those which were quickest found----were loaded to an river barge and taken far off into the big lake beyond to be cast into the water. Though he was only an englishman yet was he very severe to the glandelinian prisoners and they soon learned to respect him and obey his orders.

The following trade statement....., issued from Angelinia Agathia, June 18th 1903. showed the effect of the two great floods in commercial circles, (not only in Af not also international and General)-----

"The the world record breaking flood dia disasters that devastated Central and Western Calverinia, and northern Angelinia state, almost wiping out every big city and town on the map and doing wide spread damage in other parts of the two states, caused an immense reduction in the volume of business in both Calverinia and Angelinia states business which was to support support the nation in its dire need because of the war, and hundreds of long distanced railroad lines in the two big flood states including the Great Internation Mic-Hallester and pandora and Abbiesannia lines have not yet shwo shown their maximum losses of earnings as yet, but even after the enormous catastrophies catastraphies a great recuperative power is shown.

From many quarters of the extreme east and north north a better distribution of chandise is reported in jobbing and retail circles but train traine cannot bring them to their destinations. The weather in the east and north had continued to be very favorable for the growing corn and other crop, with cutting progressing and there so far generally beyond any danger from the vandal enemy, but in the south and west and central Calverinia damage to cotton, and all other crop and immense fruit trees by the floods is still an unknown quanity. Prices of staple commodities unusually high for the week ending, hoisted by the sharp rise in what cotton is left by the flood, but in manufactured products there is little change, though steady increases of business at the our current level is satisfactory.

Cotton closed last week at the highest price in 100 years and a large short interest was awaiting reaction. Instead there came the news of the overwhelming disaster in Calverinia and Angelinia states, and sensational reports that over 100,000,000 bales have been destroyed throughout the flood region, at sixty dollars a bale. At the Angelinia Stock exchange as well as other exchanges trading far in excess of all previous records of the nations history, and prices in sympathy rose by bounds. Subsequently there were less exaggerated reports from the south and northwest, but nevertheless the market failed to respond and all uplands advanced the price enormously. The rise in all raw material caused sharp advances in cotton goods of all kinds. In one week cotton clothing first sealing at fiftycents a pair rose to six dollars a pair, standard brown sheetig sheetings rose from 4,50 to $1. wide bleached sheetings from $20 $20 to $42. Everything rose in goods through the country and buyers who have have been delayed for weeks were anxious to enter liberalsupplies both instant and di distant."

There were two great appeals which indeed brought a whole lot of money to the flooded districts and they were the following, the first one being by the Red Cross Relief corps, department of Central Calverinia-----

"The most appalling disaster that has befallen Central Calverinia and northern Angelinia, by both big flood and horrible forest fires, and explosion calamities has smitten countless thousands of our comrades in the bigger cities, villiages and on the farm. Abbiesan has been wiped out, poverty now was partly relieved in Abbiesannity alone. In many instances in all the other cities portions of whole families are lost, and all houses not swept away by the torrent are totally shaken, all live stock is killed, and thousands of miles of farms and all their crops of all various kinds destroyed. They Relief committees and the Red Cross are doing what can but their efforts are inadequate. Systematic organization alone can prevent further distress, and we therefore appeal to the members of the Red Cross Department in behalf of the stricken states. The population of both a section have made their last mind and effort to secure for themselves and families surviving homes throughout the community. Their all is involved. Far along in the eveningof their lives they cannot even recuperate.

Even if there was plenty of time to make another crop they have nothing with which to make it, and unless the whole nation helps them they must finally abandon their homes and all. If the principal of our Order--red cross work, charity and loyalty----are of any avail it is now the time for every one to show it. The red cross fraternity means organization against suffering, disease and death---charity means everything and is the greatest of all. Loyalty means standing by our homeless comrades as well as the Holy Iam Abbiesannian flag. They are also our brothers. There fore we expect every post with great confidence in them, every person surviving to contribute something. Remittance and supplies should be sent to all Committee Rulers and to all points where they we will be distributed.

The other was by Governor Michigallen OF Angelinia state addressed to all Members of all organization throughout the Abbiesannian countryp;

"Whereas a tremendous calamity has befallen the country of Calverinia and Angelinia, millions of dead, dying and wounded, and so many more millions of refugees to be cared for by our united and benevolent people of the Abbiesannian nation, and whereas.. Numers of different foriegners are reported seriously wounded and drowned, therefore to care for immediate wants, I deem it necessarily to call upon the whole nation to contribute as much as in their power to help, aid and assist the people of the stricken states. All the associations are able and will take care of all its unfortunate members and I appal the to the whole nation in the name of charity and love to assist every one and the Relief committees and Red Cross in general in caring for the refugees of all the flood wrecked cities and towns. Remit what you can afford by postoffice express money order to all committee branches. And the secretaries of all theses posts will receive and remit your subscriptions. I trust that this appeal to the country at large will be met by a most quick response.

Sincerely;

governor Michigallen.

CHAPTER ONE HUNDRED THREE.

INSANITY FOLLOWS FRIGHTFUL SUFFERING OF THE POOR VICTIMS!!!.
COUNTLESS THOUSANDS OF DEMENTED ONES... APPARENT INDIFFERENCE TO THE LOSS OF RELATIVES. CARRIED THREE HUNDRED MILES IN A TRUNK.. SAVED AS IF BY A MIRACL

As might be read in other chapters of the flood, providing the ones of the flood in the south, but also including the northern and central disasters generally, a horrible of thousands, nay many hundreds of thousands of people, become insane even during the first week succeeding the flood disasters. They had bravely indeed borne the hor of relatives, the hunger and fatugue, had apparently been unmindful of the horrors of the catastrophe, and had as a rule to say given no indications of mental aberratio while the disaster was on, but when the danger was passed, and relief from the ou strain came the over burdened mind gave way.

One of the Abbieannian News Paper men who had a governmental written pass to enter the city of Mildred greenburg, and who also was connected with the publi wrote of many cases which came under his his observation. The second Sunday follo the ending of the flood June the 27th he wrote in recounting his experiences.

" Not counting the outside towns and cities, there are at least 1millio greenburg 5,678 persons there whose minds have become unbalanced or unbalanced al many have lost every vestige of their reason, there being hundreds of raving mania among them one of whom came under my personal observation.

His name is Fernandio Seesmann an Orlegner and a German who worked in the as a Electrical engineer. Though a "orlegner he was a catholic like t all the Abbie people are. He occupied a room above me in one of the ruined hotels, and kept m awake nearly all night as he made a whole lot of noise, and kept shouting, and praying, and talking to himself so loudly that I believe you could have heard him blocks. I at first believed he was drunk, and therefore I and several of the oth the hotel went upstairs to his room to get to get him to be quiet.

We were astonished to find the door to his room open and the way he was talk then you would have thought he had a group of friends with him. As we looked in, h was pacing the floor in a circular form and swing his arms around wildly, and kep calling on God to strike him down, and continually denouncing the whole human rac and ba blaming himself for the whole flood, stating out loud that he had bloc the d dikes up and destroyed so many children and other people. He had lost his fam and home and by a miracle saved himself. As soon as he was out of personal danger he commenced rescuing women and children, and saved eighty people accordi a number who knew of the circumstances. Then over the loss of his family and hom he became insane. As we stood by the door watching him, one of my followers thinki he had drank too much liquor called to him, telling him that he was keeping all th others awake.

He stopped in his pacing and looked at us. He had the look of a fiend. He went for us, and we had to run for our lives for he secured a large knife and made to attack us yelling-

" The glandelinians ain't satisfied with dear destroying my own home and chi but now come to threaten me. I'll kill a every glandelinian in the world."

He then created so much excitement at the hotel that every one was rushed out all fleeing for their lives, and about twenty policemen were detailed to surro the place and capture him dead or alive. He saw them surrounding the place, and thinking them glandelinians

" shouted " You dirty murderers of Chi christians and women and children get me if you can." and then he leaped out of a three story window to an adjoining building. His fall was somewhat broken but his body struck a bay window in my own room. He was of course badly injured, but he continued his mad flight, baffled all his persuers though they chased him for miles and escaped.. This occured at eight o'c in the morning and is an illustration of the conditions that are prevailing not on in Mildred greenburg but throughout the flood swept country.

A man whose wife and two children, a girl and boy, each of seven and six years age were drowned in the flood, had been searching in vain for their remains for fou days and nights without hardly any sleep, and yesterday located the bodies near the wreckage sea in the waters of the flood some distance outside the city. Soldiers had also seen these bodies and they took it them in charge. He calmly helped the throw the bodies on the flames and soon they were burned to a ers crisp. Since then the man had been found wandering around the streets, asking every one he If they had seen anything of his wife and children, and where they could be found. When asked if his home was safe, and his family had survived he answered

" Yes my home is still there" pointing toward where there was still a vi sea of waters with jams of wreckage. everyone is safe."

Finally knowing he was insane soldiers were sent to take him. The man gradually demented was bound after a desperate struggle. He had made a most frantic effort to get away from the soldiers but to no avail. In the courseof my rounds I even saw a family of sixteen half naked, and they appeared crazy and would look into the face of every stranger with a vacant stare that was pitiable in the extreme. They were then hurrying in the direction of the places where provisions were to be distributed. They had lost their homes, and some of their loved ones, and even the ragged clothing on their backs was not their own. I mentioned one little girl thinking she was all right but she tried to denounce me as a Glandelinian spy regardless regardless of the uniform I wore. When I asked another if hermother was living she told me" she was a rat, and her mother was a tiger. I asked her how she made that out and then she started to cry and answered

" We are all different kinds of animals. You are a cat, I'm a mouse, and that" pointing to a wrecked house " is a dead cow."

There were thousands of people in a similar condition. There were many funny ones too. There were a two who I met who were in charge of soldiers and one of them thought he was a locomotive engine, and the other thought he was a bird. The soldiers told me these two men had lost their families, mother and fathers, brothers and sisters, home, everything they had in the world. There was another, who thought he was St Peter and was asking every one he met if they were ready to go to heaven, stating that he had the key of heaven and could only let in the good. He was a man of only twenty one years of age" and all he had was swept away.

Another peculiar almost comical one was a man whose name was Francis Pedro who also had been very active in saving life during the first few days and nights of the flood, but he became insane because of the awful scenes he witnessed. His friends first noticed his condition, when they found him in his room walking around on all fours, and when asked what he was doing he told them that he was a Lizard.

However at first theyh two thought he might have secured some brandy somewhere and was so drunk as to have this illusion and therefore they took him and almost bodily put him to bed, put an ice cap on his head, and gave him a draught of strong coffee without milk or sugar.

Soon afterward he became exceedingly violent. The person engaged to watch him till he became" Sober" was compelled to leave the room for a short time, and on his returned heard queer noises from the room, and found pedro had secured possession of a long sword and was attacking everything in the room with it, and yelling—" I'll lick the whole world. I'll lick the whole world. Come on and fight, every one of you."

It course to go into the room meant death, as his friend went out to get several others, and when they came and had disarmed him he wrenched the shutters off his room and leaped out upon a pile of wreckage and thence to the street. He was seen running toward the direction of the still remaining flood outside the city, and it is believed he might have thrown himself in and was drowned.

Another case was that of a young girl who was caught in the flood, and with many men and children found refuge in a large stone orpganage Orphanage. As the flood gradually subsided the poor woman started for her home feeling sure all was safe. She found a sea of wild waters covered with wreckage sweeping over the site of her home. A few days later, among the first victims carried into the temporary morgue were the little mother, brother, and t o two children. These were quickly followed by her father, her brothers wife and children, and her two sisters, and a grand mother she loved dearly. The shock overthrew the girls reason, and she is now a serious wreck, without a relative in the world, and thinks every one she sees pass by is some of her relatives and clutches wildly for them. Her home is Hold Bossen."

The St Marys Gigantic Orphan asylum in the city of Mandorn in charge of the Sisters of St Anne proved a haven of refuge for nearly 10,000 homeless and flood driven unfortunates. No one no matter who they were or what nationality or sect or race was refused admittance to the sheltering institution. Prisoners and Abbieannians were taken in without question and the asylum was thrown open to all who sought its protecting wings. On the fifteenth day of the flood the hundreds or more of the little inmates grew wild with fright and screamed and hid under beds, or fled to the roof of the building and shouted and yelled until the nerves of the other refugees were shattered and a panic seemed about to come. Nothing could be done to quiet these terrified children, and even though the Mother Superior rang bells and sang hymns they could not bring a hush in the pandemonium pandemonium. Finally some of the refugees especially women succeeded in getting a great number of the children pacified, and then one of the women addressed the children, and told them that if they were good, and have and did not create such scenes, God Himself would take care of them, that the flood would not rise any higher and that if they wanted to pray they should do so from their hearts and the Blessed Lord would hear all and grant their petitions in spite of the flood and its fury, the flood raging and increasing in depth and fury even as she spoke to the awe stricken children.

The elder children I n listened quite attentively and when one of the priests told that that all those who wished to recieve Holy Communicat Communion and resign themselves to God could do so providing they were in the state of grace, every one of the children asked that the sacrament be administered. The panic among the children had been precipitated by the falling of the North wall of that section of the building in which the children and many other refugees had sought refuge. And also because day by day the flood had increased in force and depth untill the building pondered as it was shook as if thereceed an earthquake. Order and silent prayer was brought about by the determination and presence of mind of the women refugees.

Many families that had been seperated by the dangerous flood were also alter united by the same flood tossing them into h this haven of refuge. Hundreds of hr heart rending and moving scenes were presented by these sad unions as the half dead mangled and bruised unfortunates were rescued and dragged from the racing waters by the more fortunate members of their families.

This was another one of trainwrights buildings, builded at his hand and plan and had just opened two days before the beginning of the flood, and fourty two hundred Delegates from all parts of the country had arived at the New Home to see the children come in and to recieve them cordially, preparatory to taking up their new quarters. The community of nuns comprised one hundred and fourty holy sisters and they too were there administering cheer and mercy and sympathy to and for the sufferers many whom were more dead than alive when brought into the shelter. Within this religious Home were over three thousand orphan children many war orphans, and rescued chil slaves held there untill their parents if living claimed them.

All around this immense six story structure every house no matter what size was entirely swept away by the furious waters but not the home and only a part of its wall fell through some mysterioid mysterious explosion.

Mother Camillia the superior and a very holy nun in speaking of the horrors of the awful days and nights within the walls of the orphan home, said that she believed if the water had rose as far as above the top story of the structure it would have remained there, and all its im inmates would then have been forced to seek shelter on the roof. For the fury of the flood, and the strength of the current it seemed a miracle that the building withstood the flood the pressures of the water when it can be known water got into the rooms and interior of all the floors of the first three stories and tore out, all the glass and drew all household articles to one side of the walls and stacked them there as if they had been piled up by an light of day, and it was voted therefore that none of the people should leave the world without Holy Communion and Extreme Unction.

But the building withstood the twenty one days of the flood, though the curse of the flood was on the fifteenth day. After that it gradually started to go down.

Mrs Phillium Henry Mason, was one of the few mason people stated in previous chapters who had an experience that was horrible though she lived through the flood. Only a chapter or was learned of a reporter as told by Mother Camillia.

When she had been standing watching Henny rescue his little sister Edie the flood came like a tidal wave giving no one a chance to escape to higher ground, and she saw it first turn the beautiful lake into a raging sea pouring jams of driftwood in into it and turning it into a whirlpool, she was thrown on the mercies of the torrent when she and all the others were caught it in it and were swept away. The whole party of mason people and children were together in one spot watching Henny rescue his sister on the roof when the flood hit them. The force of the waters tore Mrs mason onto a roof of her house and as the waters carried her away on the roof of the wrecked cottage and toward the sea where the lake had been she lost all trace of the other members of the family and relatives but never lost faith and courage.

The roof struck some obstruction and the next instant Mrs Henry Mason was hurled from her improvised raft and landed in a large wooden trunk which was rocked on the waves. Cramped up in the trunk, the poor woman suffering agonies no one can tell protected to a limited extent and was afforded some warmpth. On when the boat the trunk bumping against driftwood untill the crude bark was hurled between trees and there is it was wedged tight, the flood continuing swiftly on with almost express train speed, the force of the waters being probably fifty to sixty miles an hour. The trunk might have gone over two hundred miles for she was in it fully and night, untill it came within sight of the city of Mandorn. The crude bark was then hurled against the big Orphan asylum and was pulled into the building..

While some of the women refugees were attending to the women another chapter in this family's history was being enacted just outside the walls of the Orphan home.

In a large floating tree which had been swept into the immense yards of the home a young man one of the masons a brother of Mrs Mrs Mason battled with the wreckage and waters while clinging fast to the limbs of the tree. He knew not where he was and he could but merely observe the outlines of the orphan home. While not knowing his chances of life or death he heard the plaintive cry of a child near by reaching out with one hand he caught the coat of a little boy. The child had the the mill race be buoyed by the force of the current and had not had time to realize peril. The young man in the tree was Mrs Henry Masons brother and the child was come to him on the waves of the flood was Mrs Mason's youngest son. A few minutes afterwards a rescueing party was sent out from the Orphan home in lieu of the loud cries for help and found the young man and his neiphew nephew and brought them the sheltering institution. A reunion of at least a part of the family followed a few minutes later. The others of the masons were swept down all the way to Mildred

Greenburg on all sorts of wreckage but not o a one of them perished as all however were excellent swinn swimmers and were able to take hold and secure themselves on all sorts of reliable wreckage.

Absolutely destitute save for a very fr few personal effects on their person and with nerves shattered by four weeks of horros and privations and sufferings, Mr and Mrs Mason and their children including Henny and Edi reached Angelinda Gathia Sunday morning June the 29th from the flood swept districts of central Calverinia, only to see that parts of Angelinia Gathia were flooded and with streets so full of water that people went about in boats.

"Yes indeed I'll say we were more than fortunate." Said Mrs Manson as she leaned wearily back in her rocking chair and o tenderly contemplated the two youngest children at her side. " It seems to me as if I had just been having an awful dream, and despite my own horrible experience when I think of the thousands of hundreds of thousands of children who were killed, and of the hundreds and hundreds who lay dead and stark naked right before my eyes, I fell as though I ought to more than thank God for our narrow escape, and that we all ought to be satisfied no matter what comes. I passed on the train a large camp of Mandelinian soldiers, who tried to stop the train and capture us all but were unsuccessful. No one can imagine a more cruel and more fiercer looking set of soldiers."

Mr Mason himself said-

" The reports from Central and western Calverinia are not b half as appalling as the situation really is. what we cannot and even do not believe even though we know it is true, the terrible destruction of Abbiewan, city and of its whole number of inhabitants, and of three other big places where they say seven hundred thousand died apiece. We left the ill fated city of Mildred Greenburg Wednesday afternoon June 14th, first going by boat to Francis Atlanta city, and by rail to Big Girlknoul. Here also aterrible flood was raging, and as the train could go no further we had to get off and went to the city of Albny by carriage where we waited for a train to take us here, and only got one after a whole days wait. The condition of the city of Mildred Greenburg at that time was awful, there yet being no improvement whatever, and never ill will , or my children and my poor wife forget the terrible scenes that met our eyes as the boat on which we left steamed out of the river docks and went down its stream southward as far as circumstances would allow. In some places the river was choked with wreckage and dead bodies, and the stench from the land side where bodies lay in thousands amid wreckage was horrible.

The sudden coming of the flood gave us no chance whatever. Inresided with my family by Lake Gurn about fourteen miles away from the outskirts of the city of Mandorn. The flood came when we were out in the field watching my son rescue his youngest sister Edie when she came near falling off the roof. I paid an enormous price and went through lots of hardships to build the additions to the house I bought in the country, the latter which I saved up money for fourteen years to purchase. Yet the house and all others by it were swept away, and with it went everything we had in the world, even our mortgage papers, our citizen ship papers, money and all. From Mandorn we weresswept down all the way to Mildred Greenburg and only the fact that all of us happened to be good swimmers mainly saved the lives of us all. My children every one of them won prizes over in England, America and other places for their championship at swimming. The distances were swept I cannot say but the soldiers who aided us say Mandorn is about five hundred miles northeast of Mildred Greenburg. My wife floated four hundred and fifty miles on a trunk and was rescued in an Orphan asylum in Mildred Greenburg city.

Yet we call the fact of our being saved a miracle for it seems strange that not one of us, even our most distant relatives who came to visited us were drowned.

When we came to the city on drift and other obstructions wewere we were rescued by people in upper stories of houses. When the drift carried us into the stress streets the water was up to the third-floor windows of thevbig houses. I and my brother and others assisted for five days in the work of rescue. In one pile of debris we found a woman who seemed to have escaped the flood because of the height of the jam w but who was injured and pinned down so she could not escape. It took twenty four hours to rescue her. The streets present an appearance that is extrsely grewsome. Every available carriage wagon and every vehicle that survived in the city is being used to transport the dead all of which were found not to belong to the population of the city, and it is no uncommon thing to see a load of bodies ten deep. The stench in the city is awful nauseating. There is enough wreckage north of Mildred Greenburg , to rebuild cities the size of New York, Chicago, and every big city in the United States combined and yet be plenty of more left. Where all that wreckage came from is a mystery. Since the awful flood the only water that can be used for drinking purposes is that brought in trains and yet it is little better than no wate. water at all.

Yet that city had been so quickly and strongly placed under martial law that no Glandelinian ghouls have entered the city to rob dead bodies, and like down here the christian soldiers would show no quarter whatever and have orders to shoot on sight if even Glandelinian prisoners shirk their work or try to run away. This has a wonderful effect and keeps disreputable characters from coming near the city.

Every one of the Glandelinian prisoners who are being brought to Mildred Greenburg is made to work at the point of the bayonet, and the punishment for a refusal refusal is about the same as that given to ghouls and vandals. A few fourteen Glandelinians shot in one day. They had tried to sneak away from their guards. Then were confined in the basement of a building six Glandelinian prisoners one of whom was a Lieut lieutenant colonel who were found by soldiers. They had run away from their guards to shirk work and these men have probably been executed by this time.

In the work of rescue we found many whole families who had been tied together with ropes, and in many instans instances mothers or fathers had their babies clasped in their arms.

Scores of thousands of the unfortunate are are still struggling into Francis Atlanta every day and their condition is most pitiable. Hundreds have lost their reason. The citizens of Francis Atlanta Atlanta are doing all in their level power to meet the demands of the sufferers and every available building in the city has been converted into a hospital. When we arrived in Francis Atlanta Atlanta Atlanta we did not expect Hardly have clothing to cloth cover us and therefore the citizens fitted us and we started us southeast. The fear of fever and some dreadful plague drove us from Mildred Greenburg."

CHAPTER ONE HUNDRED FOUR.

A SERIOUS DANGER FROM FIRE.....A GREAT SCARCITY OF BOATS TO CARRY PEOPLE TO OTHER REFUGE CITIES. ENORMOUS NUMBERS OF GLANDELINIAN PRISONERS IMPORTENTED INTO MILDRED GREENBURG, AND OTHER CITIES. UNTOLD SUFFERINGS AT MURCAAN.... EXPERIENCE OF A MAN FROM LONDON..... THEFLOOD HORRORS DROVE WHOLE ARMIES OF REFUGEES CRAZY.

One of the most seriousdangers which Mildred Greenburg, and the other surviving cities and towns faced for many days was fire. Not a drop of rain had fallen during the eleven days succeeding the dreadful flood, and the hot winds and blistering suns of these hot June days made the wrecked houses, and buildings and seas of windrowed wreckage all over the country so much tinder piled mountain high in every direction. In nearly all parts of every wrecked city and town the fire hydrant were buried under fifty to sixty feet, in some places a hundred feet deep under the wreckage, and as yet the very water supply at best was only of the meager kind.

The fire departments of all Mildred Greenburg, Poverty Row and all other places though quite large was nevertheless badly crippled and would have been utterly useless to stay the flames should they once start. And there was no relief for at but Mildred Greenburg nearer than Francis Atlanta, and that was fifteen hours away.

The same situation was with the flood torn cities of the south, including Mill junction, and with the enormous forest fires raging at the same time and in view of all the then existing conditions it was no wonder that the cry was throughout the three hundredwrecked cities, and many towns" Get the women and children to Twinkle, Abbieannia, anywhere off the flood torn landscapes" nor was it a wonder that for any of these places that with one small boat, or train able to carry only two to three hundred passengers and making two trips a day, people fairly fought to be taken aboard.

All during sunday June the 26th fears were entertained by the authorities that even this service would be cut off, and all of the wrecked cities and towns left without any means to get the women and children refugees to places of better safty owing either to the tremendous forest fires then raging, the roads remaining portions of the flood or to the trouble with various Glandelinian armies known to be close by.

Even up to now the sanitary conditions could not improve. General Heidonia Greatheart who is a great surgeon besides a general who sent hundreds of Red Cross nurses and doctors to the stricken places to care for the sick and wounded was proceeding with great dispatch. Yet more physicians were need. needed and yet could not be had and though he requested that about four thousand outside physicians come to the central portions of Calverinia, and northern Angelinia with as many Red Cross nurses and work for at least three months and if needed longer, there were not that many to answer, and those who were in the armies could not be spared as the battles recently past had caused the enormous numbers of hundreds of millions wounded and crippled.

"Hell could itbe said even now" declared General Greatheart "that the ev end of the world has arived. No such a disaster ever came upon the world before."

The electric light service of every surviving city and town in the flooded districts of the the nation was not exactly to say completely destroyed, but a thing of the past, and every electrician said it might be years before any of the wrecked cities or towns could ever be lighted again. such an awful magnitude of the disaster.

"Aglorious wide modern Mildred Greenburg to be rebuilt in place of the old one" was the cry raised by the surviving citizens, but it seemed a task beyond the power of the nation itself to even removed the wreckage of the city and the debris deposited earth of it by the flood."

The total number of people fed in ten wards of this huge city was 116,000 and the number was increasing slightly. no accurate statement of the amount of supplies could be obtained as they were put into the general stock as soon as brought in. and distrivuted distributed as soon as received.

THEwhole state of Angelinia, and also Calverinia recieved a great scare Friday night the 26th, when it became rumored that the big forest fires were heading for the ruins left by the floods in northern Angelinia state, and which was spreading so fiercely over other big forests and even over high grassy plains, and to threaten scores of big towns, and hundreds of villages where it was said all the relief trains were coming in to be transported north or south, and that many towns where other relief trains were also tracked were burning with their precious supplies of food and clothing.

The scare mainly grew out of a $100,000,000, fire in Angelina junction because that town was partially tu touched by the forest fire, and which was turning out to be the largest and most dangerous foret forest fire the world had ever experienced, soon dreamed of.The fire reached the city that is its outskirts at about noon, but was not observable until nightfall, when the glow in the sky could be seen for more than two to three hundred miles,.....Therefore all places where the excitement and anxiety was the greatest were reassured by telegraph and by other kinds of messages that such an enormous southern calamity was so far absolutely out of the question, that the relief supplies at all places mentioned were safe, and that as far as the forest fires were no city exactly were in its path, and that towns were turned beforehand. Nevertheless the whole nation was shocked beyond measure by this tremendous trp triple disaster, forest fire, and two big floods beginning the same day and in the same month, though the fires of course were of longer duration, and the was no signs of theirending but were growing worse and worse..

One of the features of the efforts to relieve the people of the many stricken cities and towns was really the long delay in getting supplies to the places where they were needed most....Trainload after trainload was in Francis Atlanta, pendere Francis Anna, and other places which could have assisted materially in the hel5f relief for the stricken in Central Calverinia but on account of the limited transportation facilities they could not be hurried there...going from Francis Atlanta to even Mildred Greenburg there was only one track track, and it was of light rail, in Angelinia Agathia and Dorothy Gale cities could not be moved fast or promptly because of still remaining flood waters, fire, and the enemy in general and also as there were not enough trains or boats of light draft in Angelinia Agathia Lake Waidi could be used from Mildred Greenburg but it was impossible to get the for the purpose.....

The general committee of public safty at the city of Mildred Greenburg being that there was not enough laborerers that is prisoners working in clearing away ruin decided on june the 26th to import Glandelinian prisoners. This action however was only taken with the consent of the aurthorities and the local Trades Union. Even skilled mechanics and citizens of the city had been busy helping the deadwithout pay but were relieved of this work and replaced by the Glandelinian prisoners. According to Hendrx Jurgur the Head Jemini of Angelinia Agathia's Societies, who with a number of Excellent doctors investigated the health situation there was more danger of fever and pestilence than ever before.

" The water supply is adequate" he said" and even that little title liab to contamination. Nev ervious prostration, hysteria, and mild dementia occurs among thousands of the wealthy class, due to shock, exhaustion and grief. Among the poorer classes the use of spoiled food during the earlier part of the week following the recession of the flood, and even now, has led to serious intestinal trouble. Two hundred and fourty two cases of heat prostration have occured among working Glandelinian prisoners. But so far the danger from danger from the unburied dead is mostly to the people who handle them."

Baron Francis De paul arived at Mildred Greenburg on June the 30th with nearly five millios dollars cash from Governor Saunders to be expended in hastening the clearing of the debris, and the burial of the bodies. Baron De paul arived to find that there was no means to bank the money as banks in the city had been totally wiped out and for sixty five hours it rested in the drawer of a small table of an old brass bed house, guarded by soldiers armed with machine guns...

Mildred Greenburg city passed the first Sunday following the disaster buryi the dead and also ag clearing away debris, as so did other survin ors surviving citi and towns. The order of the Mayors of each place that all Glandelinian prisoners should labor to the limit of their speed ane strength was carried out to the lett " We are thankful" said governer Saunders of Calverinia on Sunday, the 27th was told of the arival of the Angelinia Agathia relief trains at Francis Atlanta." you can't make that statement too strong to the people of Angelinia Agathia this day this despite the fact that their city too had been hit hard by the southern flood We are therefore thankful aga n and gain again. The people of Angelinia Agathia well as other places are among the best and staunchest friends of Abbiesania in the world in times like this, going to the aid of the stricken even though the they also stricken.Yes despitothe conditions of the land left by the flood, and the the fury of the war is gaining, and in the face of the defiant enemy we still sail the flood swept Calverinian and Angelinian cities and towns again, and like Agathia we'll make them better cities and towns than they ever was before the disaster. We shall never forget the kindness of flood swept Angelinia Agathia so generiously to t eur relief, and we all thank the people of the whole nation from the bottom of our hearts.....

Arrangements were completed in the face of many obstacles by the Abbiesania and Calverinia railroad June the 26th whereby it was able to establish a and boat line to Mildred Greenburg, Poverty Bay, and some other flood swept towns from Mildred Greenburg and Delight's O Point. This helped somewhat in getting relief to the refugees and in sending supplies and food, and more efficient the is guard duty. Jennie Angeltoria the head of the Abbiesanniam Red Cross League arived at Mildred Greenburg at that. day. Captian Wigly superintendent of the Poverty Bay Life Saving station returned from a trip along both sides of the city and reported that he saw a sea of bodies going out into the bay. He declared the life saving crew at San Antonio had taken from the beach 11,181 bodies and buried them at different point s along the river shore..

After suffering untold privations for over twenty eight days on the outskirts of Wurcean an isolated city a few miles east of Poverty Bay Arch Bishop David Francisco, twenty priests, and one hundred and ten nuns, and 51 fifteen hundred children reached Francis Atlanta June the 24th famished, and nearly naked, but overcome with amazement and joy at their miraculous delivery from what seemed to them all certain death. The force of flood waters gradually wrecked the orphan asylum, Op Orphenage church and priest home; Annh anninilated or swept away entirely their neighbors, and destroyed every particle of food and provisions and shelter for miles and hundreds of miles around, yet they passed through tye terrible day and nights raisingtheir voices above the roar of the flood and the crashing of falling houses in singing hymns and in prayer, and in saying mass. And through it all not one of the priests, nuns or children was injured even to the extent of a scratch.

When the flood struck the St Jules Orphenge the waters rose so fast that it was impearing into all the windows before the priests nuns or even children realized their danger. per that moment the only means of escape was the upper floors to which they hurriedly dispatched themselves; but they were driven to floor and to floor till at last the roof was their only refuge. The building was three stories hi high. Still the flood continued to rise, and therefore the priests manages to secure enormous quiles of drift from the jams and securely fastened lots of ropes which they had brought up with them to use incase of emergency and then they placed the children upon these. Then seeing some forthemsev for themselves they got on and had paddled a god distance away when a terrible noise told them the home was falling to pice pieces before the terrible pressure of the torrent.

Before they had gone far another family of refugees were seen on the top of a floating house and the priests prepared to give them assistance, but the house turned over and they were drowned before their very eyes. With difficulty another party floating on a raft were saved from drowning, and when safe on the securely made raft, they floated on.

With the remainder of the clothes like they rescued four others, lashing a half year old to boy and a fourteen year old girl in a large floating tree. One younger and younger child the Arch Bishop secured with a piece of his shirt; and lifting a form to the raft he fastened her to a stick of wood. While the flood ceased and over them onward the nuns on the other rafts clung to the orphan children; while the priests prayed. In other floating debris another family they had rescued from drowning found a precarious footing. When the night had passed, and the waters had tossed them ashore with green wreckage and dead animals and the corpses corpses of people, they nearly dead with exhaustion, set out on foot to seek assistance. They were too weak to continue far and sank down on the plain while the Arch Bishop pushed on alone. Fifteen miles away on high rise of ground a farm house was found and securing two teams the Arch Bishop returned for his half dead party, who had been driven further up by the continued spread and rise of the roaring flood.

For nineteen days they remained at the home of the hospitable farmer surrounded by the flood s which all but almost reached the farm house, and then when the waters had entirely receded set out to find a hamlet or make their way over the wreck strewn fields to Waidi Point. In the heat of the burning sun they plodded on along the edge of the flood still remaining in the open fields and plains to a considerable depth like some inland sea subsisting only upon some dead chickens which they found in the flood and which they killed and ate raw, until finally they came upon an abandoned and overturned sailboat half floating on the water but still fire and intact. With a united effort they succeeded in bailing out and launching the boat, and with improvised distress signals displayed managed to sail over the remain ing wreck strewn flood all the way to Poverty Bay. There because there was yet no provisions or relief foods they were unable to secure anything even clothing, finding all the survivors there worse than they, but they were given alittle food from a recently fou flooded store, but food which was water soaked, and transportation to Mildred Greenburg.

Clad in an old pair of trousers not belonging to him, a tattered shirt, an old torn hat and torn shoes, and with all the orphan children and these rescued in even worse plight, the Arch Bishop, nuns and orphan children rode into Francis Atlanta, dirty, weak, and half starved. Here every one of them were sent to his hospotal buildings and other places, including private homes and cared for. Then they were sent to Pandora Calverinia where they had friends and relatives, who aided them until the catholic church and other Orphen Asylums came to their relief. Because of what they sent through many or nearly all of the orphan children throughout the flooded districts were adopted by sympithaing people of the nation.

Thoughthe city or of Wurcean had a death list of its own of about about 10,000 the city nevertheless reported that up to June the 27th 115,000 bodies had been swept away to sea or river from towns near by of which they could not tell, and that did only only 1,000 bodies had been found and buried out of this enormous number and many were still lying amid the wreckage. Assistance here is badly needed. It was a fact generally commented upon and merely emphasized by the experience of the Arch bishop, the orphans and the rest; that while a train was being rushed to Millbrook Greenburg and other cities and towns , they could not hardly come because of the remaining flood and of big fires, or the deep and treacherous it seemed as if the sufferers were being neglected. The relief trains that were able to run were forced to traverse flood & swept section where fainting and n nearly naked survivors sat on the wrecks of their homes and hungrily watch the provisions whirling past them; while because of the depth of the remaining there was little prospects of aid reaching them.

Hamte Jacobs of London England who returned to the latter city many days after the disaster; reached the Queen Hotel Gardens the Saturday Evening with the Terrible Sunday morning June the 6th the last when the terrible horror began. He said he had gone through the thirty four great disasters in his day. He had seen the destruction of Galveston; America in a hurricane; he had seen earthquakes ruin whole cities low; he had seen towns and villages slide into the sea or be swept away by river floods; and had seen great loss of life; and had even experienced the disasters as one of the surviving victims. He had been caught at Galveston; had gone through the horrors there; had seen the big Messinia city earthquake and had escaped with his life, had been at San Francis during the earthquake and fire had gone through thirteen deadly and powerful tornadoes and yet escaped with life though seeing buildings laid low in the twinkling of an eye; but he said that his experience at Marseant(Calverinia) was the most terrible in his life, the most awful twenty days and nights a man could imagine; but the most dreadful was from the 10,th to the 16th when the flood was at its height. And the most horrible sights he witnessed after the recession of the flood.

He stated his experience thus:

"The night before the disaster May the 24th 1908st 1913 when I reached the hotel water was already coming into the streets; also a thunderstorm was raging but it was blowing rather hard; and when asked him ; the clerk said we were in for a fashioned gay thunderstorm of long duration, but that he was sure it was not the sort of the flood; that recently there had been the noise of explosions somewhere and that earthquake shocks of some intensity but that he could not comprehend it either nevertheless. Then I asked him if his roof was firmly fixed; as I feared one of the terrific typhoniccforms that usually came in from the sea and commit so much and he said; " Well the storm don't be quite as bad as that; as this is not the year and season for such storms; but by the next night at the same time there was six feet of water in the rotunda; and the skylight had fallen in when the building was could continually shaken by the pressure of the water; and the servants had been shaken to pieces, and the place was crowded with refugees who arrive from all points of the city in boats engons; drays and rafts and passed wreckage. That night there was little sleep yet no one realized the extent of the disaster until the next day. There we were surrounded in the building with the water for twelve days rising higher and higher; and quite a number of the refugees in the hotel went mad anxiety and fright.

On Sunday morning the 24th of June one could walk on the higher streets as had the water gone down. I took a walk to the lower section but it still was a flood and also the plains for miles and miles was one great lake litter of overturned debris of all kinds and corpses. Beyond that as far as you could see there appeared to be a perfect ocean upon which wreckage and bodies of all sorts floating. As far as a few bodies could be seen. I met one little old woman who burst into tears at the sight of a little girls doll; and a small toy rocking chair; her dead grandchildren property mixed in among the floating wreckage in the sea of waters. She had lost all her family, and all her relatives including her husband and brother in the flood. At first I too like many of the survivers did believed it had been a terrific manifestation of nature and it was nearly thirteen days after before any of us the real facts and then you ought to have seen the excitement among the survivers. If it had not been for the soldiers guarding them while at work the survivers would mobbed all the Glendelinian prisoners.

Yet people for the most part benefit of their senses from the universal horror and a single funeral would have seemed more terrible---more solemn---than a pile of cremated bodies. No one did any looting here though the tale of looting in the southern cities flooded near the Angelinia borders might have been true; but as I passed northward in a sailboat I heard some shots ring out which told some looter prisoner was paying the penalty for trying to escape from the work allocated to him. These cities wrecked by the flood will rise again on their old sites; and with as much difficulty as is at present believed . most of the people will prefer to try and live in the far Northern cities for the time being until the sea recedes from that section of Calverinia. At least 50,000 persons were perished in Marseau and 5,000 others were found who were believed to be from poverty new...

as of the most difficult operations known to medical history, and one of the most rare cases, was performed by Doctor Claytonia and Sessions Tuesday morning June the 30th at a hospital in Dorothy Dale city.

Frank Pulhill of Mildred Greenburg, a bigwig not far from Francis Atlanta was carried five hundred miles on floating house tops, among wreckage and on rafts and during his struggle among the wreckage for life suffered dislocation of the cervical vertrebrae; his head fell forward on his chest and he had no power to raise it. It was a case of plain broken n kehnock neck and the physicians operated success fully but after many hours. They then placed the neck in a plaster cast, and it is believed the man will live for many years to come.

Three fourths of all the people of every town and city wrecked by both big floods who applied for relief were mentally dull; yet the physicians declared that with proper care most or all of the might be cured.

A little eight year old girl as pretty as a fairy was brought in to the general relief station in Francis Atlanta Friday night the 26th. The relief corps found her huddled up in a empty freight car ten miles from the city, on the edge of the still remaining flood laughing, and singing; and saying the funniest and strangest killing things to amuse herself. On investigation it was found she had been swept three hundred miles on the flood; and though she survived she had lost her father mother and their relatives. Yet the doctors said that they believed and hoped that food and care would restore her to reason.

It was over a week and three days after the flood around Marseau before those from the outside really began to find out what the awful calamity was to the people in this desolated city. The first shock was wearing off, the long list of dead and missing continued, the news that the enemy caused the flood was getting to be circulated like a new story; and the sick and suffering and other refugees were distilling into places of refuge. Scores of thousands of them had been sleeping on the open prairies near the edge of the remaining flood ever since the disaster; most of them in fact, men with broken arms and legs, or eyes gouged out, sick women and ailing children. They crawled out of the wreck of their homes and would lie down on the ground to die. Hundreds of relief parties found such as these every day, and brought them into the hospitals as fast as possible, one relief party going near Vignon found 53,678 people in the vinivity of La Pare which was wiped out entirely, homeless, helpless, tearless; and one tenth of them stark mad and raving, it was a sight to cause a stone statue to weep. One of the members of the relief parties telling a foreigner aiding in the rescue work and finding, he could only speak english spoke in as good an english as he could perform and asked)

"Well sir; some to speak of as disasters is " Well" said the english man I can't say what I think of the disaster, either that I think of the Glendelinians who could cause it, at least , dare not say it here in so righteous a country it would be stoned."

"But the Abbiennian continued," if you were in my place what would you do under the circumstances."

"I'd repay the Glendelinians pay in the same way." promptly answered the english-man.

Friday June the 4th a man another foreigner rode up to a hospital at Francis Atlant inia and told the doctors he had just come from Bengal county, the open by the Illinois and told the doctors he had just come from Bengal county, the open by the Illinois river name.

" Said he" the fp folks there are starving. There is not a pound of flour left, and the children are crying for milk. There are so many sick people with a mysterious pestilence there we don't know what to do, and it is spreading fast. One by one and down and down."

At first none of the doctors understood him and as the man too could speak only english an interpreter had to be brought and finally being told where the doctors said they could go at once, the man on horseback then leaned over his saddle and tried to speak , something in his face frightened the doctor, who called to Gabrielle, who ran out and caught him. He was in a dead faint. When they had brought him to he laughed sheepishly.

"I'm not sure if I know what is the matter with me." he said. " I have never been taken this way before." The doctors looked at each other tearfully and also the eyes of the nurses were full of tears. The man had not tasted food for eighty four hours, and he had ridden one hundred and fifty six miles in the broiling Calverinian sun. More troops were also called for on June the 30th by governor Saunders of Calverinia to relieve those on duty at the cities who were worn out by their hard work. The response was n prompt and hearty.

DEAR FRIEND AND MEANS

The engineer who brought our train down from poverty Bay the spent the night before grouping around in the wrecks along the track with helpers to clear away debris so the train could go on, and everywhere within our view were people and speak looking for lost relatives and friends. There was a young man in front of the car, and he had fleetedall these twenty days and nights with his wife sitting and mother on the part of the roof of hi. His little home, which he had owned in thirty years and saved nearly every penny to buy. He told me he had first lost his mother, and then his children, and at last had almost his wife good by at night on the 20th and told her he could not hold on any longer but he did held on dazed and half conscious until day broke and showed him that he had lost his pistol of afriend. He did not s we know when the woman that he had loved pled.

Every man on the train; even many soldiers---there were no women there---o left home the that he loved in the terrible war disaster, and was going acro the remainder of the lives by toast to try and find some trace of his family. The soldiers were with, and said their government was full foolish to allow the many to get away with it.

As the train neared El Paso city, near Mildred Greenburg a series of pro friends leaped up accompanies by great clouds of smoke, and I heard one poor old say to a soldier near here " what a terrible fire eir. some of the ruined cities must be burning."

A man who appeared to be a real 'oriegner who was passing on the along the of the railway coach heard the wo n woman but he stopped alongside of me and look down and looked into my face, his face like the face of a dead man, but he laugh "burning towns" he said to me. " Why if that poor old woman only knew, she is a mother, and don't know what is burningover there; and I'm afraid when she learn the truth she'll go mad; it is my wife and little children---such little innocent ren too. Why the tallest was not as I high as this---he laid his hand on the bac of the chair but some distance down---and the little one was just learning to talk she called my name the other day, and now they are burning over there---why as mother who bore them. Such was such a little tender, delicate thing, always so frightened, and now she---she---she---she---is only but there all gone with the children two of them were babies, and they are burning."

The man laughed again but more wildly and began to walk back and forth down the isle in the coach.

"That's right" said the marshall of the state of Calverinia, taking off his broad soldier hat and letting the sunlight shine on his strong face. " That's right we had to do it. We have burned over 10,000 people to day, and to morrow we shall burn as many more. Yesterday we were forced to stop burying the bodies at sea, river or land, and we had to even give the Glandelinian prisoners working on barges whiskey to give them courage to do the work. Most of these bodies are from many places, although they are terribly few compared to the numbers drowned or swept enough they are great enough. The men carried out hundreds of the dead at one time, men and women and---and---and children, all piled up as high as the barges could stand it, and even though these were buried and the men went out far enough to sea, there are so many bodies among the debris in the sea that other bodies drift upon the shore for hundreds of miles; bodies have been picked up in the harbor of the city of Angeline junction five thousand miles away, and many of these being identified as have come from Abbieannj city poverty bay, and all the other places."

"Look" said the man who was still pacing the car touching my shoulder with his his shaking hand as the train ran alongside a wide stretch of the remaining flood waters. "Look there."

Before I could even have time to look or to think I had to realize where he pointed, and saw floating in the water the bodies of old women, and men and younger women intermingled with children and crowds of people on shore were striving to pull them out. A little further on we saw a large group of strange driftwood. We drew closer and found it to be thousands upon thousands of wooden stave with names painted out upon them and floating on top of them were marble stones. We learned that this was all that remained of Mildred Greenburg for many many years to come. Leaving the corpses, finally the train could go no further, and we waited for the boats before we could secure a boat; finally we pushed up at a little recently left shore before we could secure a boat; finally we pushed up at a little recently left shore before we could secure a boat; finally we pushed up at a little recently left shore

The awful abomination of desolation reigns on every side. The big houses which were topped to the very roof are dismantled by the force of the flood, their roofs gone, windows broken, and the high water mark showing inconceivably on the highest buildings. The big elevated train structures like those seen in Chicago, New York and other cities in the United states are swept out of the city of Mildred Greenburg with all the trains and other property. The little houses are all gone, either completely gone as if they were made of cards, and a tordano had sucked them into the skies and carried them away tothe far beyond or they are lying in heaps of kindling wood covering no one knows what horrors beneath.

The main streets of the city are sure pitiful to behold, heart rending beyond words and thought. Imagination not being able to make it perfect. Here and there a heap of some sort is left standing. South Helter street looks some a dreary jam with only one or two straggling teeth protruding. The merchants are losing their little stores of goods that have been left them and are spreading them on the sidewalks in the bright hot sunshine trying to make some little headway of their small capitol. The waters rushed through the these stores as it did through the houses in an irrestible avalanch that carried all before it. The wonder is not so little of the city of Mildred Greenburg is left standing, but that there is left at all. I believe no one can explain the reason. The big scow and piles of wreckage every deatr description, so passed that night, served as a sort of levee and saved worse, of the flood go around the other way, a t acting as a sort of dam and turning protected the city to some extent. Otherwise it would have been entirely swept away. Every street corner has its story, its history of horrible sorrow and misery, of human agony bravely endured. The eye witness of a thousand hundred deaths has told to me and my companions and told us some of their heart rending stories, and not a single one of them has told of a cowardly death.

The women and little children met their fate as did the men,... bravely, on the most part with astonishing calmness.....A young woman told me that she and her husband and four children went into the upper section of their home and climbed up the attic stairs to get away from the flood, and that she and they knelt there, in many hours day and night and prayed. On the 10th of June the flood grew worse and carried the whole house away and her husband and children with it and yesterday buying the 25th she went out to the place where she last had seen her husband at children, but they were no where in sight. She told me how beautiful her little children could sing, how good, gentle and obedient they were, and how when they sang hymns, everybody were very quiet and listened, even the priest paying had to stop to listen until they finished singing. She told that they had for the little children in past flood and other ear disasters. Her husband was found, tricted in the branches of a tree, four hundred miles south of Mildred Greenburg she recognized him by a locket with a weary Beads which was inside, and which around his neck---the locket and weary Beads she gave him before they were married, married. It also had her picture and a lock of one of the children's hair in it. The woman told me all this without a tear or a trace of emotion. No one seems to cry here.

They will stand and tell the most hedious stories, stories that would turn the blood in the veins cold with horror without the quiver of an eye lid.

A man, one of the members of the relief Parties sat in a telegraph office and told me how he had lost six beautiful cows, a herd of sheep, fifteen hundred chickens, huge and horses, even six excellent race horses which had never lost a race and had him lots of money and friends. He then went into minute particulars, told how he had built his beautiful home, how much it has cost him, and how long he had worked hard to save that sum, and how it was strengthened and made firm against all kinds of winter and summer weather. He told me then how the awful flood had come and on the third day had swept it all away, and how he had climbed over a mass of swirling wreckage and found a number of friends lying in the curve of a big roof in the form part of the flood and how they two had grasped each other, and what they said)

He told me how much his whole stock had cost, and why he was so fond of them, how hard he had tried to save them. He then told me how his wife and children were him; how he had loved them, describing them in character and appearance and finally said to reassure him, "You have surely saved yourself and your family, therefore it is foolish to complain."

The man astonished me by staringet me with blank unseeing eyes.

"My I did not save my family" he said. " They were all drowned. I thought you knew that, I'm not talking much about that."

" The hedious horror of the whole thing.. has benumbed every so the sensitive JENNIE FRANCIS TURNER also arived with Gertrude Angeline, and the girl and her mentioned in the terrible destruction of "bbleann city, and entered entered Mildred burg the same day ,one the 26th from Poverty Row where she too had a seat trying to ling her during her trip through the wrecked and ruined city... SHEE SHEtold her story in a most wonderful and graphic way,...../

It is as follows----

" I have been in Mildred Greenburg with Angelinia Arunburg, penrod, and the others for at least three days and have seen things that we never want to observe again anywhere. Buildings ever, where so far as we could see had gone down or been swept away no more odi mielle before the force of the death dealing flood. About 1:30 oclock I told Gertrude that at any cost we must make our way over the sea like ridges of wreckage to get into the city proper which was about half a mile away from the edge of it all. At first she declined, but around the jam the water had fallen during the recession of the flood until in the lower quarters of the city it was only only five feet, and as we hurried toward the jams the wind blowing strong from the northwest tore down my hair and I was blinded for the time. I had some argument with Gertrude before she would yield to my entreaties to go over the jams but finally she consented and I now almost feel like asking a man to give me a kick for ever thinking of such a thing. The hardships we had gone through during that trip was terrible. I was reaching the highest top of the sea of wreckage turned my eyes to the west and northwest and for fourteen long miles there was not a building standing, everything belonging to the city having been swept away. How we ever finished our trip of the over the wreckage by morning and reached the city I do not know. When we got down into it waded through the remaining water in the streets, and every few minutes were carried off our feet and dashed against the still floating debris.

Being somewhat hungry the building we were trying to reach was a save and during the whole flood it had stood, and the water had gone down so that even the foundation could be seen out of the water. We hurried to the upper floor but no matter where we went not a big of the food stuff either in tightly sealed boxes were dry and we had to subsist on canned goods and even some of these were ruined. We came to another part of the store where the flood had broken through and there we heard a number of refugees there had a mad run to escape the swirling waters. We, them reached the first floor, and there shrank into a corner but finally were driven to the second and third and then fourth flood yet expecting every second to be carried to their deaths. How it happened I nor Gertrude nor the rest can never tell but this and as other building were the only ones left for miles around. As it were several people were killed in this building we were in looking for food, and the other house that was left standing.

After a time we left the building and went to the spot we observed where no houses were standing and we were soon on the edge of the still remaining flood which stretched away as far as eye could see like the ocean itself, and it was covered in places with wreckage as thick as thousands of immense log jams. As we stood there we witnessed sights we did not expect, and that I pray God will never make others see. Whirling by on this jams of wreckage bodies more than I or my friends dared to count were crushed and mangled between jimbles of timbers and debris. There were crowds of people there with ropes hoping for the chance to rescue some still alive, but men women and children went by sinking, floating, dashing on. I knew not where, but none of these were alive. I wanted to close my eyes but could not. Angelina Ishee shrieked, and Gertrude and Radcliffe looked solemn and fervidious and Gertrude looked white in the face and was unable to speak. I cried aloud and made a desperate attempt to leave the spot and go somewhere to hide myself from the scenes but I was parralised to the spot and all I could do was watch the terrible scenes.

Babies, on such pretty little ones too were carried on and on, gowned in nicest clothing or naked, their eyes open, staring in one mute terror above. Thank god they were with Him now. I was partly blinded by tears but could still see through the mist. little arms seemed to stretch toard me and my friends asking assistence but there beyond the crowds of people stood, not lending assistence to any one because no one so far passing by really were alive. How, caused I knew not. I must have almost fainted while standing there for I was awakened with-

" Here girls this is no sight for you. Better come away," and we saw a party of soldiers urging us kindly for our sakes to go. When I found we soon could get out of the awful ruin I declared would go at all costs. I thought of the army, and wanted to telegraph just like thousands of others that I was safe. It was three days before we could get away from Mildred Greenburg however, and then it was in a most terrible confusion. One hundred and eighty two persons were put on a small boat and started for Francis Plants. The day we left the militia was out in full force. I could hear the sharp report of a rifle and the fall of some soul as he paid the penalty for either refusing to work or trying to escape the guards. Later I saw the soldiers with their glistening rifles leveled at scores of Glendelinian prisoners who refused to work and saw them topple forward dead. Oh they had to shoot these terrible beasts for their cowardice were responsible for the disastere, and therefore they were shown no mercy when refusing to repair the damage dones. The soldiers therefore came and killed them and it was well, as we made our way toard the boat that was to take us rapidly from the city of Death, I saw hundreds of great black clouds of smoke rising in the air, and we knew the cause of it. Upon the top of flaming boards thousands of bodies were being rescued to ashes. It was best for the odor that arose from the dead bodies was simply awful. Still it made our hearts sore with a sorrow never to be equaled as one witnessed little children tossed into the midst of the missing flames. Do you wonder I cry. Before me and my friends no matter which way we turned could see dead bodies, their cold eyes gazing at me with staring intentness, I close my eyes and stumble forward, hoping I might escape for the moment the sight of the dead bodies, but no, the moment I would open them again, right at my feet I would find the form of some poor creature.

Coming to Francis Atlanta on the only train running I read the papers. They are mistaken , far wrong. They only say five million are dead. It will be more than 10,000,000. I know, am perfectly right, every one in Galvera Greenburg talks excitedly of the other cities ruined including Abbeville, claiming 12,000,000 15,000,000 and 18,000,000 dead, in the flood of Central Galverinia alone not counting that of the west, but it will be at least 10,000,000 at the very least.

I believe the worse sight , and my conscience ever I witnessed was the thousand eight hundred bodies of little children alone being carried out to sea ded. in the briny waters. Huge barges were tied at the wharves and loaded with unknown dead. And as fast as one barge was filled it made its way out from the where and weighing the bodies , the Glandelinian prisoners under guard cast them the waters.

"Oh those eyes, that I might put them from my mind. I can see those little children were babies go floating by dead, dead. God alone knows the suffering my friends went through. Thousands yes thousands of poor little souls were carried over the brink of death in the twinkling of an eye, and I saw it all. I knew the Glandelinians were wicked cruel, but never believed they dared, had the nerve to bring on such a disaster as this, when they know the consequences."

In the city of Muroman alone, not counting all other places in the flood sections, north, and south, as was well as that of the west, twenty thousand people were fed and cared for daily for many a day with the supplies which poured in from all parts of the country, and which came with little hinderance by the way at that as all trains were guarded. This number was cut at least to one half by December 1th. The estimate cost of the aid extended after the first ten of suffering was about $ 40,000 a day for the people who survivied in Muroman twenty thousand out of thirty. The great bulk of the aid went to the four thousand men at work guarding glandelinian prisoners who were cleaning up the wreckage at the point of the bayonet, digging for bodies, and cleaning up the streets. Through them it went to their families providing they had any left. So soaked bodies man wished to escape the work, but no citizen despite his rage was allowed to do it, any extent of cruelty to the prisoners, and only could punish them by death if they deliberately refused to work, or ran away. The business men in proposition and position to resume were allowed to attend to their stores and their clerical forces were not interfered with. Outside of Muroman for all towns and villages, either north south west or east in Galverinia, or in orthern Angelinia the total number of refugees fed and cared for were still sixty million. The total amount to feed one day, would be about $120,000,000 and it would be from June the 25th to December first over 10,860,000,000 dollars combining the two disasters together. This is being absolutely incomprehensive and fabulous proves the awful magnitude of the disaster when so far the cost of the war out side of the disasters is nearly ... five million dollars already. On Tuesday June the 30th the last day of the month the citizens and soldiers guarding the Glandelinian prisoners in the debris and street cleaning work was put upon a cash basis the wages being one dollar and fifty cents. Time had been kept from the beginning though the records were not complete and all were paid for the full time they worked. But this did not apply to Glandelinian prisoners who had to be made to work at the point of the bayonet, or those when brought in volunteered their services. This aid was given as far as in the form or of orders for tools for mechanics that were not yet in the army, for those who had homes they wished to repair, etc. Heretofore practically every able bodied glandelinian prisoner had been made to work whether he wanted to or unless he worked he either got no food or was shot. The first few days consisted of rations which were given according to the number and needs of the survivors family regardless of the amount of work his prisoner accomplished. other supplies began coming in they had been added. In every one of these towns north or south the work of distribution was conducted systematically. There a central Committee, of which an Angelinian officer was chairman. Then there committee for each one of the many wards. As fast as goods or provisions arrived from the north and southeast they were placed in the central warehouse from the different ward chairmen took the , and they were issued to spu supply depots different depots, women and children predominating at least six to one of the one of the applicants passed in review before the ward chairman and those who did not need something badly.

" I want to be released from this disagreeable work as I am a dignified prisoner of war." said a big Glandelinian officer.

" Your comrades are responsible for this disaster, and you cannot escape work unless you don't want to live" replied an officer in charge of the guards.

" For the Lords sake I tell you I am a colonel in Manleys army, I ain't responsible for the disaster, and you are not acting like christians."

" Is that so" replied one of the citizens with a sneer. " well because of this disaster I lived on jacklin Avenue and I lost everything. If you do not want to work any so and you'll face the firing squad."

But the newly brought prisoner still protested.

"Go out with this man and face him to the firing squad" ordered the officer to the citizen. In this way many a Glandelinian prisoner was brought to his reason and the colonel went to work as willing as the rest. Near the fourth Avenue distribution station where clothing was given away to people waiting in long lines, a Glandelinian prisoner who had been allowed to rest a minute from his toil, by way of revenge pointed out different ones of the Nationals men women and children whom he alleged ought to work in the wreckage with him.

" Those men are able to work as well as I am" he yelled." I don't care how great a disaster is to be we Glandelinian soldiers in this city are not to blame, and don't deserve to be made to work as if we were slaves."

" What's the trouble?" asked a by stander.

" Oh he is mad because he has to work, and he don't like work. All Glandelinian soldiers are lazy."

So far no Glandelinian soldier had been required to work inside, but a strong feeling developed to compel Glandelinian soldiers to also work cleaning up the houses that remained standing. There were plenty of people who would be willing to guard them, but as long as there were families with children it was hard to trust rebel soldiers inside, when there was no telling what horrible things they might do to the children. so no one would permit Glandelinians to come in and clean up the partially ruined houses.

" Our food stuffs or supplies of it is still being very short." said the head chairman" and we are terribly short of clothing. Also no one has any idea of the contents of the cars in the road coming to us, and often we cannot even tell if any thing is coming to us until the cars reach Francis Atlanta city. We have been able to increase our supplies somewhat with the money that is coming in to us by purchasing of local merchants in lines where there was a shortage. What do we need most. Why doctors and nurses, more than money. Even if we have all the money we can use and are able to order just what we need and gett get better value than the people who are buying it we need doctors and Nurses most of all, and they cannot be obtained.

" One of the most remarkable things attending the Central Galverinia disaster was the same fortitude of the people there as observed in the other past and present flood disasters. Their loss in relatives, friends and property had been so overwhelming that it seemed too much to be expressed with outward grief.

There were two men who had not seen each other since the disaster and this day met happened to meet in the street.

" How much and easily did yo. Happen to lose?" they asked by common impulse.

" I lost every bit of my property, home and all, but my wife, and my children was through safe and sound!"

" I was not quite so lucky. I lost me my home but also my wife and children were drowned."

Then there was an expression of sympathy from the other, but nothing approaching either from either.

" The Glandelinian prisoners are making good progress cleaning up and burying the dead." remarked the one whose losses were the heaviest with apparent apparent ... serenity a pleasant smile. The other one then made a light answer and then passed on. The people of the city of Muroman had seen so much death, suffering and other horror like they appeared to be absolutely hardened to it. The announcement of the loss of a mother friend seemed to mean very little to a man who had seen the dead bodies of his neighbors and townspeople hauled to the wharves by the cray load.

Not even in this city were any services ever attempted for the dead, until nearly seven months after the disaster had passed. The Right Rev H.D Harlonia priest in charge of St James Catholic Cathedral, which was entirely swept away by the flood, said it was utterly impossible to even think of it. Every thing is gone, the Holies of holies, everything used to read mass, and priest and lay men had to join in the work of guarding prisoners in the work of cleaning the city of dead bodies. I don't expect there will be memorable services for years. The best for us priests to do is to go north, and all the survivors also and remain out of this part of the country until untill wicked Glandelinia is crushed."

Arch Deacon Caldwellians Church was among the few which was comparatively little damaged. He set the value of Catholic property in the city at about $30,000,000. Included in this loss was the Angel guardian Orphanage which was badly damaged. It covered eight blocks between Twenty Second and Thirty Fourth streets. It was the finest orphanage building in the country, and successfully had sheltered the little orphans and six thousand refugees during the flood. On account of the sad state of things the city like the others still was not able to improve in its sanitary conditions. The smell fro the ooze and mud with which most of the streets were filled were stronger ten days after the tragedy than that which came from the debris heaps containing undiscovered bodies. When these heaps were being burned and the wind carried the smoke over the country from the cities and towns the odor for hundreds of miles was very much like that which afflicts Chicago when refuse is being burned at the stock yards, and no worse.

Every business man in Murcean city talked confidently of the future of the city despite the enemy and the war, though many of the clerks announced their intention of going away to join the army as soon as they can reach the nearest Draft board.

"I'm not going to let the enemy get away with this kind of disaster" said a clerk in one of the principal stores." I'm sick and tired of the whole business. Big floods last year with frightful loss of life and property and now this. Abbiesnia should strike back, and strike hard."

The North western Telephone and tele raph Company which is a branch of the Aronburge" system early began to rebuild its telephone system there.

"This will take us eight months and in the meantime we will give no service save long distance" said the superintendent of construction." We will install a emergency system the same that that in Angelinia Agathia, and Pandora, and because of the war, and the enemy put all wires under ground. We will have to employ fifty thousand men if necessary to do the work in ninty days and if not able to obtain that many because so many are even now going into the army from excitement of the time we will have to draft, comen. The company's asses in Calverinia are $45,000,000 $20,000,000 here, and $40,000,000 at Francis Atlanta and the rest at other plac Another such disaster and our nation will be bankrupted."

Residents were greatly pleased at this announcement as it shows a co confidence of a foriegn company in the future of Murcean.....

Phillima Angelo a Angelinia Agathia "ews Paper "porter returned to Agathia Agathia from the flood stricken districts of Calverinia, "onday June the 29th S said;

"I left Albertinia night before last, and things then in the neighborhood wa in a dreadful state, and outside the cities and towns the flood has not gone in particle. Murcean is about fourty miles distant, and the refugees were pouring in the direction of Francis Atlanta in the greatest numbers ever concieved. Many ha to do people have lost all they had.

The Right Rev Phillima Andre Bruno, an Abbiesnnian Catholic Priest, and his entire family of priests and nuns were killed, and it is reported to me that Angelo, the widow of Andre Angelo was also lost as well as a large number of School and Catholic Sunday School teachers employed in all religious schools in Francis Atlanta more relief committees have been organized. The

The Right Rev Bruno was well known in the cities of Angelinia Agathia, Fra Atlanta, Dorothy gale, and Pandora having preached many times from the pulpit of t St Thomas Catholic Church on Albino and Grace street, Angelinia Agathia city.

Merle Johnto publisher for the Grand Appeal, Angelinia Agathia city, re a little from Murcean from John Caldwell saying that about fifteen thousand child lost their lives inthe flood, mostly orphans, and that fully 100,000 were made homeless in three other cities near by.

Caped up in a house for twelve days that collasped on the twelve being carried along by a final deluge of water, Hander Turner brother of Alfred T 8765 Agathia street Angelinia Agathia city, his wife, and four children, and hi grandson and daughter met death in the flood at Murcean Murcean. Miltonia grand son of John Turner was in the building with the family at the time and was the of the many occupants including one hundren and sixteen women and ten men kno have escaped.

Alfred Turner, manager of the Religious Catholic Church Goods Company, 1069 Merri Street was dumbfounded and grief stricken when he recieved the first information disaster for he had no idea of his brother being in Central Calverinia. Hander was a retired business man, and very Good and Religious, and had the finest and lovable children on record for thousands of families. He had taken his family thinking to be safe from the ravages of the enormous war.

On September 1111 On June the 29th, Mr Turner recieved the following letter Langorn Abyssinkile state, where the Turner brothers had lived in childhood!!!!!!

"We have just recieved a letter from Miltonia Father, mother with the child and grandchildren, including Miltonia went to Murcean from Beautiful Springs Abyssinkile, where they had been previously stopping. They were so delighted with Murcean on reaching there, that they sold their return tickets and decided to remain about three months. They were at first in a large house near the city limits, but moved further away and to a much larger and stronger one when the waters suddenly came and began to rise. All at once the water came down the street like a tidal wave bringing a wave of houses and debris. They started to build a raft, but before it could be got together the house started to float. It had floated for twelve days me as far south as Delight's Junction when it went to pieces. Miltonia was struck ith something and knocked out into the raw water. He came up caught a large piece of ti ber, and clim bed to a roof of another floating house and thus managed to float on unt still it drifted into the flooded encampments of a portion of the besieging christian ces near Norma Father,ne ehere,ne was rescued. He saw no one escape from the ilding as it collasped. He do not belie e the bodies have yet been recovered.

have wired f for more better news regarding the bodies but have heard nothing the news...

On June the 22th came this news as written in the Angelinia Agathia News...

June the 22th.19[illegible]

East of Heidi Junction.

While floods are devastating Heidi Junction, Callilies Farm, and ig Girl Knool, an unusual flood of some kind which came down from the north like a ropical cyclone was central near Extreme Western Angelinia and apparently made a ection with the big flood down here. The flood set in Monday morning the 22th and was f raging firm increased sevel severity the next day. It came down like a sea mingled ith geavy cyclone like rellers thickly jammed with wreckage of houses and floating ebris of all sorts, and a strong northeast current of the flood was moving at a errific rate.

All the telegraph poles were washed away.

The flood became to make a junction southwest of Heidi Junction city where terr ble loss of life occured, and the speed of both torrents continued high. During the night for three hours however it commenced falling, showing fourteen feet, 10 inches in depth. At eight oclock the next morning the depth of the flood was again rising and soon it had again reached its worse depth then recording 45 feet, 27 inches. Even then the flood continued to increase and to spread during the ne next four days and at four oclock that awful afternoon the current was running more than sixty miles an hour, and logged with wreckage and human beings as thick as bees on a million hives.
Buildings formely withstanding the flood conti began to fall or were swept away and gradually the flood began to fall recording finally 29feet, and six inches and remained to that height for ten more days. The flood remains even now but it has gone down to a depth of eight feet along its shore and is moving with some speed."

A correspondent at St Johns fifty six miles northwest of Heidi Junction telegraph as follows the same day;

From all quarters of Extreme Western Angelinia, and some location of even reports of wide spread total devastation wrought by the flood of the last two ents the outcome of the North, West and Central Calverinia flood no horror sweeping ent and partially joining the main one created by the destruction of the Dikes of the Aronburge Run. Lake Selicia is reflooded, and made into a raging sea and the new flood pours out from the broken dam flooded the spots ones which were devastated last fall and so far sixty five new towns and two cities are reported inundated, and over 200 small villiages and hamlets completely wiped out.

Thirty one thousand lives have been reported lost so far. This list of fatalit is comparatively small compared to other places is due to the fact that most of the inhabitants fearing the approach of the enemy have fled to other spots further north or east. Many vessels in Lake Selicia are still missing however, and it is feared the death roll may be enlarged. The new flood joining that of the one down here had reflooded the Aronburge Run increasing the extent of the disaster down here, so that the flood was pushed so far southeast as to even embrace Angelinia Agathia, and Dorothy gale, and go so far as to devestate Jessicia, Pandora and poly Norma when it is expected at first these cities might escape from the former flood. Dorothy gale city has suffered severely, and all the river finishing craft within the city and outside have been driven into the streets of the city which added to the hea fishing seasons produced by the unusual unusual and noise of the war makes the con dition of the fishing folks pitiable in the extreme.

In Big Girl knool city, the whole of the river fishing premises have been totallt destroyed. On the North Branch over six hundred and fifty vessels have been hurled and battered against the still standing houses, two hundred being a total loss. The River steamer has been wrecked at Heidi ,unction being driven clean through a brick building by the force of the flood. The bark gerle anthracite laden from Pandora is dismantled and dele dereliet off Heidi ,unction.

Around this once beautiful city, the two floods joined hands and raged with the greatest fury. Here the main floods also seemed to center, though for hundreds of miles in i width and a thousand long in the Gallii gallilies and the flood beam a raging sea.

Two hundred and fourteen men from Big Girl Knool Fishing schooner Helena Call were landed at River Baou bayou Monday morning the 29th their ship having foundered from buffetting in the wreck of houses debrie and the like in the rapidly swelling Mic-chirther-ban river which threatens another flood because of the unusual amount water running into it from the big flood. The men drifted about on the sinking hulk for days without food, water or shelter and only by incessant pumping kept her afloat. They were as well off as on a sinking ship caught in a ripping typhoon. The raging waters were constantly sweeping the decks and the entire crew were lashed about the rigging or bulwarks. They were untimately rescued by people from houses close to the scene who went with ropes and other articles and after great difficulty drew the perilled ones ashore. one man perished from exposure. nother was hit on the body wreckage and sustained a skull fracture. One had his leg torn off, and another has been almost gutted and died of his injuries. The survivors say the flood caused awful damage throughout Calverinia and Angelinia. It seems many river vessels did not escape the disaster when theire the finest of the fishing fleet succumbed.

Angelinia renburg, who before leaving Francis tlanta wrote of the situation at Mildred renburg on june the 28th Sunday!!!

It would be impossible to exaggerate the awful scene that meets my eyes ever,where. my friends and companions are dumbfounded. The situation could not be exaggerated by the biggest liar in the world. and it is probable that the loss of life will exceed any estimate that has ever been made so fae.

In those parts of the once beautiful city where the destruction was the greatest, there still must be a hundreds of bodies under the debris, even though the majority of the drowned were swept ab away beyond recovery. At the northeast end of the city first struck by the flood and which was swept clean of every vestige of the thousands of splendid residences, and railroad yun viaducts that covered it the ruin north and east is now inclosed by a towering wall of debris, eighteen miles broad at its narrowest, lathy at the widest and the wide length of half the city of the flood under which many bodies may be buried. The ree removal of this has scarcely been started, and will take years. and the story that will be told was the sea and mountain of debris from so many cities and towns is remob removed may multiply the horrors of the fearful situation. As s usual in great calamities, the surf surviving people are dazed, and speak of their losses with an unnatural calmness that would astonish those who do not understand it. I do believe there is danger of a great epidemic. But the nervious strain upon the people in this city as well as throughout the whole scene of flood as they come to realise their condition may be nearly as fatal. They talk of friends, and relatives who are gone with tearless eyes making no mention to the loss of property. But these people will break down this terrific strain, and the Red Cross is nervious because of the small force of compentend workers which it has brought to their relief. Portions of the business portions of the city escaped the greatest severity of the flood and are left fairly intact. Thusdis it is possible to purchase here nearly all the supplies that are be wanting. The mayor of the city has offered to the Red Cross as headquarters the best surviving building possible, but yet despite the tremendous horror of the situation, and the unusual extent of the great tragedy rel relief is coming in as rapidly as the crippled transporation facilities will permit. No one however will need to fear after seeing the brave and manly way in which these surviving people Mildred renburg are helping themselves, that too much outside will need to be given. In reply to the question in what is most needed, I would say, The most immediate needs are surgical dressings, the ordinary medical remedies, and delicacies for the sick, and mostly doctors nurses and surgeons which are slow in forthcoming.

One good point of the o these two big floods of which have is of it arousing the nation to such an extent that the draft boards are being stormed everywhere by applicants who wish admittance into the army, and of those who are re, rejected for slight defects of either threatening to mob the draft boards for admittance or of stealing their way into the army. The nation is aroused to an extent that mighty and wicked Angelinia did not expect.

Reported dead fifty times, and their obituaries printed in papers in every big city in Calverinia, Abbieannia, Angelinia and other states, including Angelinia Agathia and Dorothy Cale, Hendrc ose, wife and three children, one a boy and the others being girls between two and six years of age, formerly of Angelinia Agathia were found on the afternoon of June the 28th 1918 after having passed through a thrilling experience. Mr and Mrs Ross were the persons in search of whom Mrs M.D Herring, No 5678 Grandonia Boulevard, Angelinia Agathia, went to the city of Francis Atlanta.

Mrs's Ross,s story of her experience in the disaster was surely a thrilling one, and one she will never forget as long as she lives. She was at the time in the town of Shell near Poverty Row, and with her husband and three children, she was seated at supper at the place she was visiting at her brothers on Welvfth Twelfth Street when the flood came upon them. Here it came swiftly and with the force of a tremens tremendous tidal wave. She seized a handkerchief containing her jewelry worth $4so,000 from a bureau, and placing it in her bosom, went with her husband and children to the second story. There they remained untill the water reached them, and then were compelled to flee to the third and last story. At still it did no good, the water oc continued to rise, and they leaped into the roof and starting to move the house it continued to rise, and they leaped into the darkness of that terrible first night. They alighted on something who which they thought might have been a big wooden cistern, upon which they rode the entire night, and the whole next day and night, clinging with one hand to the top of the cistern. A good number of times Mrs Ross lost her hold, and fell backward into the water only to be drawn up again by her husband or son who also was grown.

Timbers swept forward by the flood crushed against their queer boat, people on all sides of them were swept past or were crushed to death or drawn into the swirling waters, but with grim perserverance the Ross family held on, and rode out the two days and nights.

Mrs Ross was pushed off several times by her excited and half demented husband but young Ross's presence of mind always saved her. With her feet crushed and bleeding, her clothing torn from her body, and nearly exhausted, the woman was finally taken from her perilous position several hours after the cestern started drifting toward the shore of the flood.

Her companions were were without clothing and were delirious, and for two days her husband was nearly a madman. They were the only persons saved in the entire town from which the had been swept. They were taken to emergency his hospitals where they remained in a der delirium untill Wednesday July the First. Mrs Ross lost her jewelry and jewelry, and the family a wealthy a week or so before, was penniless. They had to appeal to the city authorities authorities for aid, and got but little because there was litt little to give.

The terrible scenes and happenings in Francis Atlanta, Western Calverinia, the great amount of damage done, and the intense suffering of the people there as a result of the recent flood were vividly portrayed in a letter from Angeline Riches to Violet, and her sisters, the former being at the latter city with Gertrude Angeline and the others at the time. Violet and her sisters rei received the letter the eve of the fearless andextremely terrible battle of Ca Cederine.

She wrote as follows:

"Much has been written about the damage done to Poverty Row, Abbieann, and other cities, and I suppose things things there are so terrible that little thought is given to other places. But right here in this city the damage is so great that one could not even believe a hundred years and half a century and a hundred million men could repair it. Furthermore the suffering ners is indeed the greatest I ever read of heard of, and to make additions to it all, hundreds of thousands of refugees are here from Poverty Row, and other places and notwithstanding its own suffering the city is being taxed to the limit to find places for all of them when so many of the buildings of the city too is wrecked, and a great fire is raging along the River front where hundreds of big warehouses are burning.

Wednesday morning the first contingent arived. There were about eighty thousand, and never in my life have I seen a more forlorn dejected and suffering lot of people, and they look as if they were victims who have just been on the way to the waten regions and were grief stricken over their norrible fate to come . There were thousands of sick among them and these were cared for in the hospitals and also in private homes and the greater numbers of them were assigned to places that were most badly wrecked by the flood. But they apparently are not able to quiet themselves or unless so tired out and weak from loss of sleep and food that they absolutely re fuse fell down exhausted.

I have seen them roam the streets without hardly clothing enough to cover their nakedness men women and children, all being hollow eyes and sunken cheeked and on the were verge of despair. It is terrible to realize how many families in every city and town have been so horribly broken up.

I n and my companions have often listened even against our will to the most horrosing tales that we are terrified and absolutely sick, and wish we were even now back within the christian lines. The reports of the newspapers have not been exaggerat so cholote even not telling the whole truth, and there is really nothing any person can say which will express the situation. When Inarived in francis Atlanta from Mildred renburg at 11.30 Oclock sunday night there was not even a light in the city, everything indeed being in total darkness. It had been reported on the train that 17,000 lives had been lost even here at Francis Atlanta but this we ourselves believe to be at first to be a gross exaggeration. But , , Gertrude Angelina and the rest of my friends, have changed our minds. We now believe it much more than and that it may go to thirty thousand. We groped our way through the darkness stumbling over piles of debris half as bad as that we observed in the city of Greenburg, looking for a place to sleep, and after some difficulty succeeded in a place that seemed to have escaped the full fury of the inundation. Upon lighting match we found the place denuded of everything, the paper was stripped from the ceiling and was hanging in long shreds from the walls. It was damp but warm soon came in, and standing there in the darkness gave me a harrowing account of she had heard of the refugees in the city going through during the flood, the of which the newspapers already have described. All the other people belonging to the house have gone elsewhere, and therefore Gertrude, and , and the other scouts were alone in the house. That night we all together were compelled sleep in one good sized and only dry bed we could find in the house in a tolerably dry room but all the windows in the house had been torn out by the waters, as building was so damp and cold that we were almost afraid to sleep there. At height of the flood the waters had reached to the second story and all the rooms the building in the lower section were even still flooded. There was not a room the entire building that had not been severely damaged, and the houses around the rear had been completely wrecked. The ruins were toppled over and leaning out next door neighbors house.

There is scarcely a structure in Francis Atlanta which escaped the fury of flood. With the exception of the Geline Orphan Home, and its Cathedral, every was leveled, and all big buildings were damaged to some extent. The streets for many days even after we left were filled with debris the same fashion as Greenburg, telephone and telegraph pi poles and wires that even did not belong the city, huge piles of brick and timber tin roofs, roofs entirely furnished every description, beds and bedding, and all kinds of miscellanious things, expensive furniture from fur furniture stores, trees, thousands of immense trees expensive and good ready books, bibles, dishes of every description etc. At Riverside a little river resort near here, only two houses out of thousand were left standing."

ANGELINE RICH RE

The general Manager of the Riverside and Grand Southern Railroad, Frank Cesis arived in Angelinia Agathia June the 30th from Vignon. He was one of those in general office connected with the Grand Union station at Vignon during the grand and escaped without injury. He said the accounts of the disaster at Vignon city in no ways exera exaggerated. The debris in all of their streets he declared to thirty feet high, and most of it did not belong to Vignon at all but other place He said evidence shows that 100,000 houses of the city was swept all over the south of the town and that the city was covered half by water for more than thirty days, and for twenty days to a depth of fourty to fifty feet. He went to the top of a high building Monday morning, and was compelled to remain there until the 26th without hardly a bite to eate eat and bad water to drink. He was in the hospital recovering from the effects of his long confinement in a small room these harrowing twenty-eight days.

CHAPTER ONE HUNDRED SIX....

TOTAL DEAD AND MISSING AT POVERTY BOW AND VINICITY, NOT COUNTING THOSE KILLED AT ABBIEANNE, AND ALSEMINE BY THE EARTHQUAKE SHOCKS FROM EXPLOSIONS ABOUT.....10,313,736.

Ten billion dollars necessary for Relief to carry the sixty million survivors THROUGH THE SUMMER BEFORE WINTER COMES ON. ANOTHER EYE WITNESS TELLS OF THE FLOOD. SWELLING THE LISTS OF CITIES RUINED BY THE CENTRAL CALVERINIA FLOOD. INCOMPREHENSIBLE DISASTER INDEED. GOVERNER SAUNDERS SENDS HIS THANKS. UNUSUALLY GHERSOME SCENES AND HARROWING INCIDENTS BEYOND BELIEF. COMPLETE RUINS AND SEAS OF SCATTERED DEBRIS FOR THOUSANDS OF MILES. COMPARATIVELY FEW CHILDREN LEFT THROUGHOUT CENTRAL CALVERINIA AND NORTHERN ANGELINIA.

It was given out from Poverty Bow, and other places on Tuesday June the 30th, that so far as could be ascertained on that date, the loss of life in the greatest catastrophe ever written, combining only of Central Calverinia alone, and not including that of the south was as follows;

IDENTIFIED	4,475,000
UNIDENTIFIED	300,000
MISSING	2,000,000
TOTAL	6,775,000
DEAD IN CENTRAL WESTERN AND SOUTHERN CALVERINIA	3,064,952
NEAR AND ABOUT VIVIAN WICKEY	1,563,952
TOTAL GRANDIE	9,608,736.
THOSE WHICH WERE PICKED UP FROM THE COUNTRY	COUNTING
GENERAL TOTAL ADDING TO MANY OTHER BODIES PICKED UP NEAR THE RIVER, AMID WRECKAGE AND FROM HOUSES	11,363,736

The horrifying news reached Pendera, Calverinia, and Angelinia Agathia, late on the afternoon of June the 28th that Delights junction, a big Riverside resort thirty miles northeast of Vivian Wickey, at which early in November 1912 the first bloodiest battle of the war was fought and which was near the north flood of the Norma Ann River and in the southwestern corner of Wickey County, Calverinia was entirely destroyed by the thirty day flood of the 31th of , ay and ending June the 28th.

The place had about 1,000,000 residents, many of them national soldiers. Not a single house was left standing, all the wreckage of that city was mostly swept with in the smashed encampments of the besieging national armies, and more than 400,000 dead bodies were found by relief and exploring parties, mostly all animals such as horses and mules, but wherever the inhabitants of the city went no one could tell. They either were swept away by the flood into the sea or else the inhabatant s escaped mysteriously to high places. General Manager Evangold of the Mic-Hollester and Vivian Wickey Railroad also recieved information onthat date that more than six hundred miles of that road north of Delight's junction, and the portions not destroyed were in between Wickey Point and Delight's junction, and the portions not destroyed were in are in possession of the Insurgents.

After looking over the situation carefully, the decision was arived at June th the 30th 30th ten days after the dreadful tragedy that to only take care of the millions of refugees, not counting the means to restore the cities and towns would req require about five to ten billion dollars if not more, such was the opinion of all the highest Lords and men of authority in the Abbieannien States, and it was indeed a cost tremendous sum when it comes to realize the enormous extent of the damage done and the terrible unaccountable and incalculable loss of property. And yet this did not mean that the huge sum mentioned would come anywhere near restoring the refugees to the condition and healthier situations before the flood. Far from it. And the question arose," With the huge sum it takes to carry on the Supression of the wicked Glandslinien rebillion going on, the huge loss already before flcods came would not this sun alone almost bank rupt the nation. But Count De Biff did not intend to say any such thing. He was asked;

" According that you say it will take five to ten billion dollars, to burn the dead, clean and purify the streets of the flooded cities and towns and public places, take care of the needy and clothe and feed the living, where do you think all this money is to come from when it costs so much to feed and supply the armies, the restoration of damage done in other disasters and the like. And if that sum is alone needed for the sixty million refugees, to dispose of the dead, to remove the r... and to do what is right for the living, what is going to be done for the soldiers in the armies, many millions too who may have lost loved ones in these big floods, and which news is just now being withheld from them for fear they'll become unmanag... and committ horrible massacre massacres of glandelinian soldiers?"

Count de Biffs reply was;

"It surely will take over 10,000,000,000 dollars to relief the refugees alone, not counting the disposal of the dead, to remove and restore the ruins and so on. Where that is all coming from God only Knows. We do not need to only feed and clothe but we must have some means to help all the people, for there is not one single ni... among that sixty five million, who have have not lost everything in property, cloth... and other belongings. To restore their homes will require every dollar of $1,000,000,000. It cannot be helped and the money must and will come from somewhere or all these people will perish before they can get to far off cities for relief and cure. It is the most terrible disaster ever heard of. My heavens that flood covered the land like a new ocean. It must have been more than the river that has that. No one seems to know exactly where the flood came from but the river is mainly blamed. But surely all that water could not come from the river. Seems impossible! I'll investigate the source of the flood as soon as investigations can be made.."

There were then on the scene, throughoutthe region of both floods less nurses physicians than required, it was somewhat fortunate so far however, for the many injured were recovering from their hurts, which were largely superficial. Bu... countless men women and children were suffering from severe nervious shock, ... disease, and found it impossible to sleep, and besides the terrible hots day add... to the discomfort and miseries. Food was coming in by boatloads and carload... than it could be handled at many places indeed in such generous quantities that... further doubts were entertained about supplies.

Estimate s of the unusually enormous number dependent upon the relief ... varied. For the city of Mildred Greenburg the mayor made it nearly 4,567,888 and ... them being refugees from other towns and cities, while other authorities put it ... as 15,000,000. The total throughout the country was about 65,000,000. In the business center of the city of Francis Atlanta the streets were being cleaned ... opened. At all the buildings still showed marks of water but goods were displayed, and business in some degree was being transacted. The city was ... assuming the bustling enterprised appearance, and the principall streets were ... electrically lighted. Stenches no longer assaulted the nostrils, except in the ... circle of destruction, where much mess of debris deposited from other towns and ... still remained untouched. Cremation of all the dead still being found was being ... more r rigidly, the glandelinian prisoners being made to work hard and fast, but ... would nevertheless be many days before the sorting parties get out the last of ... bodies.

The whole twelve ten miles length of the river front by the city was cleared ... completely. The horrors b of the western portion beyond the city limits were just ... learned at a Ben Luis. one hundred and eighty one thousand bodies, bearing ... ipations that proved they came from various towns; only two thousand of these ... Francis Atlanta were buried or cremated on June the 27th. Between twenty t and ... thousand bodies were counted among the piles of a long railroad bridge between ... Atlanta and the river. In Cincinnati's vacuition about 100,000 were said to have ... lost but not one of them were recovered. The further the men outside the city went ... in the Francis Atlanta section the more numerous were the dead inclining ... animals. Fires were burning every three hundred feet on the river shore for six hundred miles, and along many of the streets.

The mayor of Francis Atlanta made a statement on that day of casualties and needs of the people of Francis Atlanta basing his conclusions on the most reliable information which has come to him. The Mayors statement beeam follows;

"It is almost impossible to speak definitely as yet of the needs of our people. For every kind of disaster in the world since its beginning, whether small or large, whether causing great loss of life or not would not compare to this recent disaster if they were all put together. We are broke the majority of us, and I fear for the cost of the war, the recent terrible expeisnes of the big war disasters in the past year with the destruction of thousands of miles of our forests and the like the disaster we are now facing in both north and south and Central Alverinia, as well as north Angelinia will if not making the whole nation go broke be a terrible drain altogether. Francis Atlanta city must have suffered in my estimation based upon all reports I have 2 $220,000,000. We now need money more than anything. From the advices I have recieved, I believe the shipment of disinfectants and food supplies now on the way will even now not be sufficient to meet the immediate needs. There is a terrible shortage of Red Cross nurses and doctors, and as the majority of these are in the various armies they cannot be obtained because of the enormous numbers of wounded to be taken care of. And by the time these are used up even then be able to regain our transportation facilities and stocks and

...ds, and therefore we won't be able to use the money to any advantage even if we ...e get the proper amount. It is also impossible to even state how much money has ...ached us so far. We have recieved from the governer at Pandora about $100,000,000 ...h cash. That is from the general Fund. All the special contributions have come in ...m every Rich person and big Business concerns and all other channels. We have in ...is city about one hundred and fifteen thousand to three million glandelinian prisoner ...at work sparching for bodies, clearing the streets and burning the debris. Of this ...enduous work which is not even now being done as fast as it ought to be in the ...s interest of the living, there is even more than there should be to keep three ...illion prisoners employed for fourty months, although I believe we shall and ought ...o have the principal streets clear in ten months or the longest if two years.

I hesti hesitate to say how much it will take to put Francis Atlanta where ...er people can take care of themselves, not counting the refugees who have come ...re there. Certainly not less than $300,000,000 will be a moderate estimate. There ...s not a building but is damaged, not a house of those left standing, but will have ...o be reroof ref reroofed, new foundations put in, new floors and so on, and there is ...ot one that will not need to be straightened on their foundations. If Francis Atlanta ...ould even get $100,000,000 it would be used perfectly to enable at least the inhabitants surviving the disaster to become self sustaining.

It is true Francis Atlanta is represented as being one of the wealthiest and ...iggest cities in this part of the Country. But all our rich people had everything ...ere and are crippled, may wiped out of everything. The people of moderate things, who ...ad homes and worked hard on small or large salaries and saved desperately on their ...alaries to make and own little homes with no exception are completely ruined.

The class dependent upon labor must be furin furnished something to do for ...

The class dependent upon labor must be furin furnished something to do for ...ages or must suffer worse than they are now.

Dr Baldo, and others who have been among the people more than I have say ... from their own estimates that in this city alone thereare over 8,000,000 helpless ...ho must be fed and clothed and carried along for a long year to come, even far after ...hat might be called immediate needs have been been met.

There is a terrible contagious disease starting in many places and we do ...not anticipate any help for the refugees if this gets a good start, as there is such ...a scarsity of doctors. and added to this hundreds of thousands are suffering ...from shock, surrow and exposure in this city alone, and from injuries recieved ...among the ruins. The city of Francis Atlanta I am convinced fully lost of its own ...inhabitants fully 55,000 persons. Down to the river front, outside the city limits ...were scattered between 22,000 and 35,0000 persons, and half of these belonh belonged ...to other cities and towns. The northwesterly section of the city seemes to have ...been swept clean of all habitations, and the greatest number of people perished ...there.

One of the most motley crew of Abbiesnnian regulars ever seen at attention ...lined up before general Francis Aldshe was to be observed near Delight's Junction ...the second monday after the world record breaking calamity. The whole army of the ...two encampments of Delight's junction about 10,000,000 in number, and the troops of ...eighty four Batteries each of three hundred men apiece cerebattered her batteries. If ...my one could been there you would have though it was an army of all noboes gathered ...from all parts of the lastest country in the world, these soldiers were so much in rags. no two men were dressed alike. Parts of uniforms which bore no ne semblance to any uniforms were not even sufficient to cover nakedness, and in hundreds of ...thousands of cases there were bad rents which showed the bare anatomy on dress ...parade.

The members of these eighty four batteries came out of the flood with a loss ...in men, bthat only two hundred and twenty eight men came out alive. One of these ...regulars floated from Delight's junction six hundred and fifty two miles on a door ...another was carried on an outhouse into the very sea and rescued by a war cruiser. The survivors had been barracked in the ruins of their barracks encampments since the ...day after the recession of the flood the 26th. Here the flood continued twenty ...eight days. They had to be sent to the main line of seige to be outfitted and armed ...for arms ammunition and provisions of every kind even their wagon trains and hundreds of the barracks were swept away per day. The officers and the 10,000,000 men ...but everything, and had to get oitlmen plothing to cover them untill they could be sent to the proper place to be armed and reuniofr reuniformed.

Hendro Louis of Angelinia Agathia had undertaken to see that general gentonia ...frenteries two little boys and girls and wife did not suffer. It was also believed the ...men of Angelinia Agathia would take a personal interest in this case, General frenteris came to Delight's Junction to take command of the army there, general Heid having been relieved to serve in emperor Vivians army against Manley at Gedernine ...and this general came from Angelinia Agathia where he was well known. He was one ...of the most reliable generals of all military armies having been in the army since he was a drummer boy at the age of eighteen, and at the time he took command at Delight's junction he was fifty. His family consisted of his wife and four children, two boys and two girls. In May General Frenteris was sent to take general Heids place and took possession of his headquarters. General Heid just left in time to escape the flood himself. His wife, and children were with him in the headquarters. when the flood made his headquarters no longer safe he placed Pedro and Pedro, little fellow of six and eight on a large raft at the door and went back for the others. The raft bu carried half a mile and was rescued by other soldiers whose camp was to night to be flooded. General Frumterio his wife and two daughters were the ones lost. The hea ters building were swept away by the time he went back to the others and they were killed in the debris.

Adjutant general Pedro Vivianis said yesterday evening June the 29th:

"In my opinion the situation is rapidly getting worse, the people still find themselves dazed and shattered as a result of the flood, and there is a terrib plague threatening, which is aggravated by the heat and dryness of the weather. Al there is an abundance of energy remaining as might have been naturally expected, th amount of it is not being concentrated as the people are brooding, and even soldier now have to even guard the citizens even women and children for fear of violence Glandelinian prisoners. The citizens are enraged, they now know what and whom is re sible of the disaster, and the cries of " No quarter" continually ringthroughout the streets of the cities ruined by the flood.

The prisoners are now in a reign of terror and have to even be guarded for protec tion. I am for one, with the citizens but just now to do anything rash rash would not help matters much considering the Glandelinian armies have many of our soldiers a prisoners. Yet it has been the policy of this office to concentrate energies and the efforts have been most gratifying. We have a large number of Glandelinian prisoners in Francis Atlanta alone at work, possibly two million, not counting the other place what is most needed for every point of the field of disaster is money. Millions upon millions of persons who owned their little homes have had them destroyed. They are now dependent upon the generiousity of all nations and pe upon the relief committees to prepare for the rigors of winter and to refurnish their homes with necessities. No man who has not been an eye witness to the desolati which has swept over both Galverinia and Angelinia the last five to eight months at least since last November up to now can have the faintest conception of its means.

Even all other nations though they being christians sympathize with us all thought the disaster as a joke and I'll tell you why: They believed it a fable, be it was not even one tenth as be big as predicted and that most of us excited by th greatness of the war were exaggerating it a good deal. We have observed that ma rely sent all kinds of deleg delegates over here to secretly investigate the situation, and now what these nations have mostly heard from these, they are sayi and cannot comprehend it as all, and fear this means the world is really coming to a end. They cannot comprehend such an enemy we are fighting, and do not know how to the Glandelinians are able to gain the aid of nature in this way.

Even what surprises them most is that our big cities are so hard hit, lik
Abbiennin, Poverty Row, Vignon, Vivian Dickey even, Delights Junction, Mildred Francis Atlanta, Angelinia Agathia, Natal Junction and a score of others and th whole region of gengal gunty, and all sections of Gallilee is completely sign with terrible loss of life. Francis Atlanta lies on the shore of where the Riv Normd now is at its largest about a mile from north to south, the city covering as much ground as Chicago Chicago in area and about equally if not more impo Poverty Row and Francis Anna and Mildred Greenburg. Along the northern side for distance of three miles every house has been absolutely demolished, and million tons of brickage and furniture of every description has been brought down to ru other places, and such as of these unfortunates as were not killed or drowned, are now without a cent."

A graphic description of the flood was that given by H. L Antonio a prominent citizen of Francis Atlanta. He said:

" I reached Home after wading in water up to my neck, it having risen to the depth in the lowest parts of the city within six hours. I made immediate preparation to take my wife and three children where I felt their safty would be assured in water began to rise so rapidly that in fifteen minutes we were driven to the third floor and then it was impossible to leave the house, and finally we were warned the roof, it fortunately not rising any higher after that. At this time neighbor Sessman's house adjoining mine, belonging to a German who had becomin became an Abbiennian citizen went down with husband, wife and children. Then down came came a whole row of small cottages floating like boats two or three of which str a telephone pole and stopped directly in front of my house. I heard children crying and women screaming in every one of these houses. I and those who were in the ro with me managed to rescue those who were in the two houses nearest us, but the words " Oh god save us" which came from the further houses I can still hear ringing in my ears.

Soon another cottage came sweeping by and carried away the gallery of my house soon fourty other houses floated by the section of the city where my home was within two days more became a sea of waters and floating debris, and every day and night I could see thousands of struggling forms in the water. We rescued as many as we could but by at least the fourth day as expected it would be our turn next. I kissed my wife and children good bye, and as I did so my eldest boy said with evident confidence:

" Father we are not going to die yet. See the flood is showing signs of going down. It seems to have fallen two feet. Then came the piercing screams of some other, the shrieks of children, followed by a loud crash, and another house turned over on its side, and was driven past by the fury of the flood. The current was running like a race horse. But the water had by that day lowered to a level with the third story window, but nevertheless for days the waves had kept knockingus about until we were completely completely exhausted. Then the water began to go down still still we were completely completely exhausted. Then the water began to go down still further, I looked about and could not see a house for three miles, there was nothing but a flood of water in every direction. Inthe morning we found our house had been carried about two no miles and dee deposited into one of the citys railroad yards.
We all of us escaped without even an injury and all we suffered was from dire hunger not having diff sufficient food in the place but what we managed to save during the first few days of the inundation. At the main city the waters rose to a depth of fifty five to ten feet; and was not quite so destructive as in the lower sections."

On June the 27th up and down the only running track of the International and Great Northern, the Abbiennia Bondinia, and Galverine, the Mis-pellester and Pandora, and their connections, the wires were carrying the official information that Angelinia Agathia, Pandora and Dorothy Gale cities would be a main Terminal and safe enough land for port of relief centers for all stricken places of the flood area for the year to come as soon as what traffic was not harmed by the flood or the enemy could be resumed for further orders. The vice presidents and general Managers, and General Agents had mastered the railroad wreck, they had set the time for the running of the first long distanced train into Mildred Greenburg or Francis Atlanta, and the time was Friday the 28th. By that date according to the engineers, temporary bridges over rivers and streams that were washed away by flood would be ready for use. It was ready to the minute.

The news that the roads had declared readiness to accept freight for all flood swept towns and through them under any cost and difficulties, was recieved by all helpless men and flood refugees as tidings of great joy, and it added greatly to the improvement of spirit. For several days after the flood the prediction was that the trains would enter any of the flood torn cities for fifty weeks, and that the time might be sixty three weeks.

Equally exhilarating with the action of the railroad men was the act action taken by all the High Lords of Abbiennian Commons that all means to make restoration could be done and that the enemy should be made an example of. The entire stock of food and grain in the city of Francis Atlanta, except that burned by the conflagration was saved.

The number of persons that left Poverty Row up to June the 30th was stated at relief headquarters was over 5,000,000 of whom 5,000,000 were then in Francis Atlanta being cared for as much as the city could care for them. Others had gone into the interior of the State, or to other states as far north as Abyssinkia and Con-stinia, and Dondobia. The number coming up on all the trains that were running further north, out of the war zone showed no falling off whatever.

Also new arrangements made at Francis Atlanta enabled people to get out without any red tape and they took the advantage of the opportunity to do so. Governer Saunders had now taken charge of the relief work here, at all points, and money and provisions were being given out when needed and where needed, more than provisions and clothing.

The Abbiennian embassy at Se toria yesterday morning one of the Abbiennian states, cabled $5,000,000 to Governer Saunders on June the 27th. General Jack, gets grantia Chief president of the Abbiennian Red Cross Society, state of Abyssinkia, in the city of Altonia recieved on Tuesday morning, June 26th a telegram, from Angelinia Greenburg, and signed by her friends, who was at that time in Francis Atlanta as follows:

" everywhere I go with my friends finds greatest immediate needs here to be surgical dressings; surgeons Red Cross nurses, medicines of all kinds, and all delicacies for the sick. Great epidimic str starting, and all people worn out with suffering and exertion, who need tender care and proper food. Greatest disaster in the world.

Building material was badly needed at every city but its delibery even just now seemed absolutely out of the question owing either to forest fires, the hinderance of the enemy, the remaining flood, or of lack of railway communications with all points connecting with flooded territory. There were yes to be said millions of most pitiable cases of absolute destitution. Many thousands of half cemented persons positively refused to leave their wrecked homes and as persistently rec refused to accept offers of relief extended to them. In too many instances to be believed for even such a disaster parents who had lost children, still occupied ruins of their former home and surroundings had brought them to a state of mental and physical collapse. The numbers of those who had gone insane a as a result of their experiences would never be known but in every lot of refugees sent out of the stricken cities and towns there were many thousands of insane men women, and even children. The victims first made ll glight of their losses, and laughed immoderately when telling of the deaths of relatives and friends in the flood and raging in their ravings between sorry the enemy did not wipe out the ensle of Abbisennia. It was a very short step from this to uncontrollable madness.

The state illibia troops did splendid work in patrolling cities and towns after the flood and many of the men were of the belief that they should be allowed to relief return to their camps for rest, and troops sent from other parts of the state to fill their places. The fears of a dreadful epidemic was not allayed by the presence of the distribution of mec medicines and disinfectants and thousands many went to seek succor elsewhere, nothing being able to eliminate the treasnins situations. On June the 28th Francis ... had reported a loss of $1,000,000, Mel Calverine nearly 4 $ 7,000,000 and other cities the following property loss:

Governer Saunders of Calverinia, sent out the following expression of thanks on behalf of the sufferers of both Calverinia and Angelinia state and as the representative of the people of his state:

"In behalf of the surviving people of the devastated State of Calverinia I desire utmost to express my acknowledgement to the people of Abbisennia for the ready and generous response they have made incoming as far as things will permit to aid of not only the people but the afflicted State in general. The number of deaths in the Central Calverii Calverinia, and northern Angelinia floods, the amount of destitution, and the loss of property is far greater than had been at first anticipated, and would have almost bankrupted a nation as large as the united plans and Kroops together. The Secretary of the navy has placed as many vessels as can be ed at my disposal, and in turn I have placed some of them at the disposal of the of the surviving but wrecked cities. The addition of these boats cutters and the to the boats already loaned by the imperial government, will give us five boats at Mildred Greenburg, and other placen, to handle all supplies and passengers to and from other cities, and anticipate that their presence there ought to relieve the awful situation to a certain extent. The city authorities at every place are up full control and there are no glandelinian ghouls as pre predicted in the cities of the southern flood horror; and every effort is being made to bury all the dead found, to remove the debris; salvage the more saving portions of the wreckage to rebuild the ruins, and to make all places sanitary. contributions of the most ernormous amount are needed

, and I and all others shall see that the money is used to the best advantage f the sufferers, and that there even shall be no waste of the magnificent contri- ations coming from the many free hands and ger generious hearts of a sympathizing ations. o idea can even be possibly concieved as to the frightful crush, of railroad ruins from the northeast, bearing relief supplies in and around Pandora, a place that is as far as the trains just now can possibly go, the latter being but sixteen miles east of Poverty now but seperated from it by a sea like stretch of water chocked with debris. Owing to the small number of vessels plying between francis Atlanta and Mildred Greenburg the shipment of supplies to points most necessary was necessary necessarily aggravatingly slow.."""""

Grewsome scenes and soul harrowing incidents of the time immediately following the great flood in La Polama were graphically portrayed in a letter from the Aunt of the Vivian Girls who was in that city at the time visiting some loyal friends and who were caught in the city in the awful flood but escaped with her life. She had been in La Polama city on what might be called an Empress's vacation for several weeks, and left Angelinia Agathia for La Polama city the very first week before the flood and reaching the doomed city just in the prompt time to participate in the terrible experiences. Her letter to Emperor Hanson Vivian follows, and proves to him the flood was a fact as he had much doubted about the disaster at first as something just fiction:

Headrick Junction,
Wednesday June the 24th 1918.
Dear Husband and Loving friend:

Have not had a single moment to even think of writing, and even now am not able to collect my thoughts to tell you of the horrible disaster that has been. Thousands of dead in the streets—the sea shore and the big Ocean beyond for hundreds of miles green with wreckage and dead bodies. Thank God my beautiful Helens are not here to witness these scenes and beg of you to ask their pate father to see they do not come here to see it. The whole city is demolished and the country around for many leagues wiped out. Not a drop of water—food is scarce. If help does not reach us soon there will be great starvation for everybody.

The dead they say according to what I hear are not hardly being identified at all—they only throw them on drays, or wagons and take them to barges and boats where they every day are loaded like cordwood and taken out to sea to be cast into the seas.

I was at the wharf this morning for only two twenty minutes and saw eighteen barges loaded tight down with their gruesome freight, mostly women and children. All of the bodies are dreadful, every one nude and half decomposed. God alone knows who they are, and what town they came from for they all did not belong here. If they did then La Polama must have been a city of a million inhabitants and been wiped out. The sea or bay outside the city is terribly full of dead cattle, horses and other animals together with human corpses and those lying on the shores and further off or throughout the flooded country are blistering in the hot sun. There are so many dead throughout a distance of hundreds, and hundreds of miles that it will be impossible to remove one third of them from the debris and remaining flood waters for weeks. Its the country both north and south, central and west is frightful beyond words. I saw thirty eight bodies taken from one horse and what surprised me exceedingly is that how they got there is a tremendous tremendously mystery for only one of this bodies belonged to this city, the others having come from Poverty now according to their identifications. Every one is striving to get the bodies buried, or cremated for fear of the plague.

I never expected to get out alive, but thank God God and His Blessed Mother not one of us were killed. On the very first day the flood rose to its greatest depth in this city, and we were driven up four flights, driven back to the top stairs, and stair by stair by the great flood waves. So sudden had the flood come that we at first believed it was a tidal wave, but as are quite a distance from the sea, and the fact that the flood came down from the north gave us other causes. Outside Outside the city the current of the water was said to have been moving at hundred and fifty miles an hour, and the debris swept past us in perfect waves and floods. Never shall I forget the night as darkness settled upon us. I thought of you dear, and of your brother, and his beautiful little daughters, and prayed that they might be comforted. The roof of our building is now gone, the walls have fallen around us, and all the houses outside within our view were swept away, but we still have a floor, the water has gone down on the 22th to a depth of thirty feet, and shows signs of going away altogether now.

I was nearly drowned on the first day getting to my place of destination at 8 oclock Monday morning the first. Three women who were marooned with me are almost crazy, and are in a dangerous condition. I have lost everything, even the picture of my neices and yours which I always carry with me, and a beautiful sacred Heart Picture which I prized so highly, and am now wearing clothes borrowed from those who were more fortunate. The stench is terrible beyond words to tell. Scores of thousands of survivor horses and cattle without owners are in the most pitiable condition imaginable, not a drop of water for for them to drink since 4 saturday morning. And the surviving people------I wonder exceedingly that all the survivors throughout the two flooded sections of the nation is not mad or insane at the unspeakable horror.

No account can exaggerate it. It is absolutely necessary that everybody in the Abbieannian nation do what they can.

Nearly all my help, that I [illegible] is my loyal and good kind hearted servants with me through thick and thin every where I go are drowned, My assistant Varlet, whole family, my bookeeper and secretary and a number of servant girls coneided. The town is under martial law to protect it from mobs of Glandelinian vandals [illegible] same so far. Last night however a Glandelinian prisoner was arrested for trying sneak away from his work. The armed military is at our house and I am guarded like prisoner so the Glandelinians do not try any thing around me. They have had their many of the Glandelinian prisoners to make them understand that they are to help to make up for the disaster caused at the order of their generals.

My butler who survived the disaster is next in command and is doing such work that I am proud of him. I too have done what I could to help the dying and wounded.....

After leaving the city we passed through Vignon, El verano, El paso, San Antonio, Mundro, and Marcan where in all these towns combined about 209,412 were swept away with all the people in them. 10,000 lives were lost at Marcan. We started our homeward way on the 23th and by the 29th of June had reached the city of Mildred Greenburg where ruin was equal to that of Francis Atlanta or worse. We were on the highest point of the ruin and wreck of all kinds of houses and [illegible] debris at Mildred Greenburg it was packed just like the wreckage of the city of Johnstown in America against that bridge but of a million times a greater degree. It is believed that was what only saved the city of Mildred Greenburg from being totally swept away. For miles and miles and hundreds of miles north of the city all was a sea of wreckage fifty to a hundred feet high, and northeast of the for hundreds and hundreds of blocks, reaching into 10's of miles not a house of the huge city remains, not a building but is completely demolished, houses just torn board from board and torn up on our trip all the way to Mildred Greenburg the as far as eye can see was covered with water thickly smashed in floating debris and I believe this extends for thousands of miles. I have climed over the wreck fourty to a hundred feet high, to get to the city of Mildred Greenburg and

I think because of this sea and wall of wreckage Mildred Greenburg and Atlanta of which also confronts this wreckage were more fortunate than any of the other cities and towns. But nevertheless great loss of life is here too. With the exception of one of my companions all were calm as we viewed this immense sea of wreckage though I reckon everybody quaked inside------I once did.

Where all this wreckage comes from I cannot tell, but it must have been Abbieann, Poverty spa, and every city in the path of the flood north of here, other places and all the towns swept by the dreadful flood.

The Miracle city as Mildred greenburg is now called, and which was from such awful destruction by the flood as other cities was as I heard when the matter of no much talk was a noble and large city, Chicago size in [illegible] in the number of house, but a little more in population. It's downtown districts southern limits remains still half injured uninjured except that the lowest have been badly torn from their foundations or badly spalled on the upper sides against the highest walls by blows frm from the wreckage swirled through the city that this city remains so as well as francis Atlanta, ten miles southeast is [illegible] solely to the accident of this wreckage jam forming in the north, and not to any other cause, and if it was not for this, according to the force the flood had the cities east and west not a bit of it would be here now.

Had the torrent which was and ftest here than any where else in the whole struck either one of these cities before the jams of wreckage gradually formed at the gradual beginning of the flood, the full force of the raging waters would swept both these cities, and even Vivian mickey and other big places further away as if they had been built of pieces of cardboard leaving no track or foundation behind, but fortunately the wreckage jams gradually builded up by the gradual [illegible] of the advancing debris before the front of the torrent formed exactly parallel with the path of the flood, which hence struck the wreckage mountain full, and passed the whole of the spoils gathered in every town and city for hundreds of miles into one inextricable mass miles wide and hundreds long, it acted then as a sort of barrier so that the worse of the flood had to pass around, thus sparing most of the two cities, though elsewhere the flood going on moved at a rate of sixty hundred miles an hour.

But even then had the flood come in one big tidal wave like torrent at the start this wreckage then would not have accumulated so quickly but would have itself struck the city with the force of millions of tons moving at a nearly sixty miles per hour rate. But the flood at first came gradual, and as gradually accumulated this wreckage sea, which consisted as follows;

1 every tree of whole forests and glens and parks the flood had touched in its whole course, with no exceptions, including a of hundreds of thousands of large fir and pine and oak trees, all of which were stripped of their leaves and bark and small limbs all at once.

2 All the houses of hundreds of thickly settled town and villages and hamlets three miles long or one fourth to one fifth wide, or larger, including all the [illegible] wreckage of the cities of Abbieann, Poverty spa, Vignon, La paloma, Marcan El Paso, San Antchib, Mundro and other places including all furniture of every description, Adding 1 with elevated structures trains and railroad tracks and ties, and every kind of merchandise of all stores and furniture warehouses.

3 Half the human beings, and all the horses cows, cats dogs and rats that were in the houses or out in the rural districts including fences, window glass, telephone and telegraph poles and wires.

4 . Many thousands of miles of telegraph wire, that was onstrong poles for use, and many times more than this that was in stock in all the mills of the cities and big towns, all lumber from big and small lumber mills, every ton of coal and coke, gravel, crushed stone, and blocks of wood, everything seen on railroad freight cars or what is seen in coal companies concluding all machines, and every kind of freight car imaginable;

5.. perhaps three thousand miles of track and track material of fifty railroad lines including ten hundred railroad bridges, locomotives, pig iron, brick stone, passenger coach coaches of all descriptions by countless thousands, boilers from probably a million factories, one hundred thousand steam engines, heavy machinery from every factory and concern, all kinds of spoils of large manufacturing towns, including millions upon millions of books from all publishing companies, stores and the like.

6., Water tanks of every description, gasoline and other oil tanks, hundreds of thousands of whole houses big and small packed closely closely together, tin cans of every size and description, clothing of all des descriptions from all stores, and other wreckage which would take millions of sheets of paper to write down. All this was accumulated in one immense inextricable mass, probably three hundred to five hundred miles across fromeast to west and thirty miles in width and a hundred feet high, and what a big fire would start here if one began. Hundreds of thousands if not a million human beings dead or alive, must have been caught in this terrible sea of wreckage, and rescue parties are there yet fighting desperately to release all they can reach. Eye witnessed described to me the groans and cries which came from that vast holocaust for nearly a week after the flood had gone down something unbearable to listen to, yet which could not be escaped. Hundreds undoubtedly suffered a slow death by torture or suffocation je t we cannot doubt that the vast majority of men women and children in that fearful jam, which covered in width in front of Mildred greenburg fully thirty miles, with the least depth of ten feet, and perhaps more were already dead before the rescue work there began.

Hundreds of thousands are working desperately to rescue those still living. It will probably take twenty years to remove all that wreckage.

Even when climbed over that wreckage thousands of persons were struggling in the ruins and imploring for God's sake to release them. Frantic husbands and fathers stood on that immense windrow every one being more than anxious to save all they could, and even when glandelinian prisoners were impressed by the soldiers they raved, cursed and blasphemed untill the air appeared to tremble. But the soldiers of the citizens knowing the cause of the disaster, and enraged at the [illegible] before them were hard hearted, and shrieking they would command-

" go to that place you dirty Glandelinian skunks, to get those victims out or we,ll riddle you with bullets.

So desperate was the situation here, and so rebellious became some of the prisoners at the tedious condition of the work that under the circumstances it was necessary to secure more organization and more severe measures, and when some of the Glandelinians refused to work the citizens advanced advanced upon them, threatened to shoot them or dash them into the raging flood far beyond.

One man who was trying to steer a float upon which his wife and child sat on a mattress lost his hold, and in a moment the craft swept into a sea of raging waters and swirling debris and never again appeared. The agony of that poor man was simply heartrending. He raised his arms to heaven and screamed in his mental anguish, and after tearing his hair and moaning like one distracted vowed he would have vengance on every glandelinian for the disaster.

Ever since the beginning of the floods recession and even while it was at its height here every effort had been made on the wreckage jam to save ever, b every person possible, and we have the satisfaction of knowing that fully 20,000 were saved. But to get down to the bottom of the immense wreckage mountain was just then impossible. One young woman was found under the dead body of a relative.

Aforce of citizens attempted to extricate her and succeeded in rescuing every limb but one leg. For six hours they labored, and every moment the waters crept higher and higher and the jam of wreckage was moving about a foot an hour. I myself was on the point several times of ordering the men to chop her leg off. It would have been much better to save her life even at that loss than have her drown. Fortunately it was not necessary but the young lady's escape from mutilation or death she will never realize.

The flood claimed not only the living among the victims but also the dead. Hundreds of coffins by thousands and tombstones of every description and all varieties of statues from Catholic cemeteries were among the wreckage here..

BOTH, Mildred Greenburg and Francis Atlanta proper is in a large plain like valley formed by the junction of the Norma Run and gunbeam creeks flowing into or through the city of Vivian Hickey from the northeast and east, just above the Gorgona plains and hills. The movement of the flood accumulating all the debris and pushing it gradually forward hermetically sealed these two cities in the mud and the adjacent wreckage piles from Abbieann poverty pow, and other cities; for an enormous dam as I said before a hundred feet high, these two cities and all country around serving as a bed of a make up reservoir which i should judge to be nearly large enough to hold the entire contents of the floods were terrents ing down from the northeast, except that it was already filled ten feet deep by heavy beginning of the flood.

Because of this huge wreckage jam one offshoot of the main torrent is deflected southward by the hill end of the jam, and went th touring through the heart of the town of city of St Marie, but in the main because of the same jam, the direct main force of the torrent did not strike the southerly sections of the city of Mildred greenburg. It struck first against the huge jam, and thus lost much of its greatest energy in this direction, flowing thence southwestward in a huge mass, which striking the east of Francis Atlanta tossed houses all about in most fantastic way so that this part of that city itself looks like a child in village poured out of a box had hazard, the houses are not torn to pieces jointly.

About half the loss of life in Francis Atlanta was in this district, for all the east of Francis Atlanta which was on lowest ground became speedily like twenty or more feet deep, and stayed for for twenty two days and nights, and it was here and not in the direct path of the flood, that all the " receding, of people from roofs and floating timbers occured. Nothing of the kind of course was possible in the flood itself, though people in throngs the shores of the inundation as the as huts aroles in the hope of rescuing some one. Likewise after the break in the city itself had occured, and the flood began to recede either from Mildred Greenburg or Francis Atlanta it was from this district chiefly n that so many countless of people were carried off down the deluge on floating wreckage and housetops. All that came within the direct path of the huge flood, was fast within the huge jam. The existence of this ormormous naturally flood made Mildred Greenburg and Francis Atlanta reservoirs naturally broke the continuity of the flood discharge in this location and turned transformed it into something not greatly different from a ordinary but very huge and heavy but gently moving sea upon land. Delight's junction many miles south of Francis Atlanta was badly wrecked, with the loss of thousands of lif lives, but in the main from Delight's junction down past Heidi Junction to the ceased to be so very destructive. It took out almost every small town and village and made it came to for one hundred and fift/ five miles before joining with the flood further south and did other minor damage, but the big jams of wreckage so long and wide saved millions of lives by equal equalizing the ormormous flow.

Thursday am Bell. Had something to eat this stormy morning and a little rainwater. Coffee is plenty but water scarce. To day the fleas slipt off the bodies as they take hold to drag them from the ruins. They are piling them in great heaps now and burning them.

The horrors multiply and diseases are raging everywhere a dangerous plague on. I have seen Glandelinian prisoners shot down in the streets by the citizens and the soldiers because they grew rebellious and would not work. The stench is untold. and last night the awful smell kept us awake although we were utterly exhausted and we closed the windows. It fills your throat and mouth and dazes your head. One aches so.

The horrible experiences it will take years to tell and more than a life time for me to ever forget. If you could be here you could feel that the dead are worse than refugees and spies have ever told you. It is so pitiable to see so many husbands with a look of despair in their eyes, searching for their wives and children in this city of La Poleana and most pitiable of all, the comparatively few children although they are enough, God knows to be left orphans and homeless...looking into every ones eyes with frightened appealing eyes of their own. It is heart rending.

No 1 am much better off. I am safe so please don't worry. I hope to hear from you soon. Best love and kisses from your loving darling Wife.

CHAPTER ONE HUNDRED SEVEN.

CALVERINIAN AND ANGELINIA INHABITANTS FOOLISHLY REFUSED TO HEED THE LESSONS TAUGHT BY THEIR EXPERIENCES IN THE PAST YEAR. CARELESSNESS IN FAILING TO PROVIDE AGAINST THE RECCURANCE OF WAR CATASTROPHES. BAD SIGHTS NEAR DELIGHTS JUNCTION.

THE SHOCK OF EXPLOSIONS NEAR ABBIEANN CITY FELT OVER THE WHOLE STATE OF CALVERINIA, AND SOMEPARTS OF ABBIEANNIA AND DOES GREAT DAMAGE---- MANY LIVES LOST.....

Although Calverinia, and Northern Angelinia states had been struck three or four times with floods which committed incapable damage, and occasioned ormormous loss of life; even this experience was not enough to convince the surviving inhabitants of these ter states that it might happen again. Only a few of the more cautious had any idea after the last ormormous disaster of taking steps to prevent its repetition.

Just asked if anything would be done to make future floods impossible they might probably quote the old saw--

" Oh We'll build stronger dikes and levees" and seem to think that will settle it altogether. In the Heat sentenced they would compare the damage done in the Lake Bolivia and Mis-Whirther Run floods of last year with this latest disaster.

" No indeed" said Holden Francis, assistant Abbieannian national Engineer" The people cannot go on living in security as they did before inbelieving in dikes and levees or series of jetties, even if it is of the good old Holland plan. Not when this war is raging and the enemy can make up explosives that will not only blow asunder levees but wreck cities and shake the whole nation by the con cussion concussion. I was six years city engineer of Pandora and following the flood of the Lake Solicia terror a man drew plans for a new dike two hundred feet high and extending all around the lake. I refused to give this plan consideration because of the fact the enemy can blow such a dike or dam wall down. The Legislature h gave authority to bond the cities near rivers and lease it being some months before the first great flood of the war occured, and the people at Angelinia Agathia said;

" Oh it is useless to build such things now. The enemy could level one in a hurry and did not build. And it is seen all too true.

The construction by the government of two immense jetties of the Aronburgs ha, one one hundred and eighty miles long, extending for the purpose of making a narrower and deeper channel for boats coming into Chamberlains river harbor harbor made the necessity of good work more apparent, and cost a more hub huge im than the world it self itself will believe, and in this late flood down there us which all but swept Heidi Junction away the enemy mining engineers blew those dams. In the flood of this kind one of the remaining jetties pockted the water and turned it over the southern end of the state of Calverinia where it flooded the region of Alilles Run.

This was the place where scores of big towns were towns were literally washed away leaving hardly enough of the foundations of any of the houses to indicate that buildings ever stood there. In that part of the country the water rose to a depth of nearly a hundred feet.

Of the most peculiar instance of all disasters was that of the north, concerning the wreckage jams at Mildred Greenburg, Murcaan and Francis Atlanta. Had the houses of the various cities and towns north of there demolished by the flood not formed into a great jam similar to an immense sea of log jams many feet high but extending across the main path of the flood for several hundred miles this ormormous body of water would have swept over the entire three big cities and the number of dead and property loss would have been inadequately quadrupled.

It formed an ormormous dike many miles of wide and hundreds long and had it not been for that wreckage dike the two cities of Mildred Greenburg and Francis Atlanta might not be here now."

According to Mr Francis The Calverinians had the wrong idea about river dikes and levees protecting them from floods in war time like this.

" This flood was a disaster caused by the Glandelinians" he said" just such as happened twice last November, but will never compares to thi these two later ones. Still we never know when one may come again, and we should prepare accordingly to prevent it."

Colonel Hanson a member of the Mildred Greenburg Re lef committee had given some time in the past to consideration of pe projects to prevent war time inundations. He favored the " No quarter system to enemy soldiers" but said because of fear for the soldiers held prisoners by the enemy, nothing would ever be done.

" You never heard of a man whose wife is murdered by an assassin letting the matter go did you." He asked." What we want is not dikes and levees to keep all the water from flowing over the land. We want guards numbered enough to watch every dike and levee on the land with machine guns and cannons and gas bombs before Glandelinians blast them. It was the force of great explosions at levees every time that wrecked cities and towns. Look at Hickey Lumsin last year for instance. And the towns leveled by the explosions at Lake Solicia."

The work of extracting bodies from the mass of wreckage at every point along the stretch of disaster continued without pause pause. tuesday, the 30th of June over 45,000 bodies were taken out of the debris which lined the river front between poverty Row and Vignon a distance of two hundred miles. Yet with all that had been done so far to recover bodies buried beneath or pinned to the many tons of debris the work had scarcely started, even though the majority of the bodies had been swept away, into the sea by the flood. There was no time to dig graves,----nay if there was there was hardly no land outside any of the cities, for though the flood went entirely in the cities, the flood only abated entirely in the higher places, the streets still having two feet of water, while on all the country outside and for the flood had extended into the lower sections was still a deep inland sea and remain ed for a year to come. Therefore the putrefying flesh, tainted and bruised beyond identification was to be consigned to the flames as quickly as possible.

Glandelinian prisoners for this gruesome work were brought in fast. Glandelinian prisoners who had tried to avoid the dead under ordinary sanitary conditions were forced now to work with a vigorious will and energy in putting it away.

Under one pile of wreckage on the day of Tuesday morning, twenty one bodies were taken out and cremated. This was in Vignon. In another pile in the of Murcau, a man pulled out the remains of four children and a dog and, did not minute gazed steadily upon them, then ordered the Glandelinian prisoners to cast in the fire. They were his own wife and children. As they slowly burned he stood them until they were consumed, and then resumed his work in pressing prisoners work of removing other bodies.

A large force of Glandelinian prisoners under strict and stern guards were engaged in removing the dead from La Polaca and other towns, each located about miles west of Poverty Row. At this point the water for days ran to the height of fourteen feet at its lowest, and nearly two hundred at its deepest, and the flood at its edge near the shore hung up in trees and fences and sides of houses were the bodies of men women and children, which the Glandelinian soldiers were working fast to collect and cremate as possible. Outside of these towns the wreck strewn and water log logged country, side the searching for and cremating bodies that either perished or found lodgement there was also being prosecuted vigoriously as possible....

Indeed the situation throughout the whole of central and northern Calverinia extending from Belgi junction(Angelinia() to Abblesann was possibly worse than in any other section of the whole nation. Violet, and her sisters, who as at the being not only Princesses, but also the presidents of various branches of the Red Cross Societies issued an appeal on June the 28th to the whole Abblesannian nation for money and supplies for the sic sick and wounded and homeless. The chairman of the relief committee center throughout the whole station stated in writing and cabled that the greatest sufferers from the flood were the people of limited means, for their own homes in the varies various towns and cities. There were tens of millions of these people who owned mortgaged lots and had been constructed by the loan companies, and though their property was swept away, the companies though also heavier sufferers were protected by liens.

The Chairman advised that a fund be raised for all these people who had suffered in this way, that they might be able to restore what took them years and yearsto accumulate, and was taken from them even in a single day or night of the long flood. Even the resources of the unusually numerous sub relief and main relief stations scattered throughout the cities and towns and rural districts were taxed to their utmost capacity, and unusually long lines of people waited their turns for provisions and clothing. There was not a single person among them who owned the clothing they had on their backs. At Francis Atlanta city, a force of deputy Abblesannian Marshalls under Marshall Concentinia was guarding the entrance the heart of the flood district, and keeping back all people who could show no good reason to go there, not that the people generally would do wrong, or come for sight seeing, which Abblesannians in all conditions never do after a disaster but only to help from their hearts, but to keepa strict watch out for Glandelinian convicts To keep them out the only means was to keep every one out.

Refugees were daily leaving the cities and towns a majority being women and children. The whole flooded country was under strict martial law, and would remain so now for a year or more. Many persons did come from other cities and towns, so numerous as to make a person believe they were only curious idlers and sight seers but they came only to offer help and work at the wreckage but were turned away by the guards who said;

" All the work you need to do for us is to send provisions and money. The Glandelinians were responsible for this disaster, let them work. Their prisoners shall toil and get nothing but food and clothing for it. They are slaves until the damage is cleared away. They are lucky this is all that they are being punished."

There was no place for a glandelinian prisoner who would not work. He must or face the firing squad, and they generally went to work.

...I cannot look for the start of the rebuilding of all these cities wrecked by ...d throughout western Calverinia, or Northern Angelinia to be under way by even ...latter part of three years." said governor Saunders of Calverinia, on June the 28th ...anders the State capitol. " The work of cleaning the cities and towns,(there ...e hundreds of them totally wrecked if not swept away,) and the whole country of the ...ealthful refuse and burying of the remaining dead will never be completed by that ...e unless the state drafts all the Glandelinian prisoners held by all armies, and ...l the available labor in the country not in the army can be applied to their ...building, and the restoration of the country to its normal conditions.

I have seen the wreck and ruin caused by a hundred cyclonic storms of the ...e-Abblesannian seas upon land, but they never committed one tenth the havoc of this ...ful, not even the two devastating storms that Hit Abblesannia twice in one ...dred years and both on an Easter Sunday. Even the havoc they made is nothing at ...all compared to this. This ruin is dreadful beyond comparison and I cannot believe ...all the water came from the River Norma Run. North of Abblesann there were twenty ...normous lakes formed in by huge walls strongly constructed and , believe these might ...have collapsed by the concussion of the explosion letting loose the lakes to join ...the floods of the river to devastate the land. At least this will soon be found ...as investigators are being sent for the locality of those lakes.

So enormous is this disaster that if all the Sixty million laboring people ...of Calverinia were to get together in to work in earnest,prosperity would not smile ...on the land for at least ten years to come. Arrangements are being made with the ...government to have all prisoners held by armies recently engaged in battle, to send ...all Glandelinians under strong guard to work under the direction of the military ...authorities, and an account will be kept of all work done; and no laboring prisoner ...will receive harsh measures if they work willingly and do not rebel.

It is just to do this as the Glandelinian authorities are responsible for this ...free outrage on record. The money and food contributions coming in from a generous ...people and the aid from the soldiers have been a great help to the destitute people of both Calverinia and Angelinia as it has has relieved them from their suffering a ...great deal and it can be hoped to be applied to the improvement of their own property ...and putting again on foot their business enterprises.

Fifty five dollars a day, is being offered to the mechanics who will come to ...the wrecked cities they are so badly needed and with the assurance from reputable ...Medical labors to who are not in the army till Fidia to the flood zone and do their ...work as possible.The telegraph and telephone companies and railroads have been wonderfully ...prompt since the great disaster. They have not only given money but everything ...necessary been transported to the flood zone free of charge, while those desiring to get away from the harrowing scenes of their flood stopt cities have been transported free. The people of Calverinia, and Hofthern Angelinia will never as long as they live, forget the generous relief they received and will long remember the kindness of these companies with grateful hearts. It is also an assured fact that a few more trains will be running into Francis Atlanta this week, and if the enemy do not intercept the communication with the outside world, Francis Atlanta at least should be able to assume her normal condition.....

When one of the relief trains reached Delight Delight's junction which is forty ...five miles northeast of Vivian Lake, opposite mildred Greenburg, it was found ...that of the population ,and the soldiers of the camps that survived the flood the ...majority were sick, and severely homeless and completely without shelter. Most of ...them were bruised and cut and maimed, presenting as pitiful a si sight as if they ...were all wounded in battle, their limbs lacerated and bleeding. As all mourned the ...loss of those dear to them.

Many of the dead, and here the whole country side was strewn with them,and their faces and heads mutilated so that it was impossible to learn the n Names those she found their resting places in the crude graves hurriedly dug. There were so many that it was evident they did not all come from Delight's ,unction? A head ...board was placed on the grave in every instance giving as nearly as possible the age and accurate description. It was found necessary in many instances to bury three and four hundred in one long trench. Those who survived the wreck were homeless and had nothing to eat, for nearly a week and as most of them were injured it was impossible for them to organize any kind of movement on their part, and many of them were people who came down on floating wreckage from other towns. Life sustenance was furnished these survivors in order that they might not swell the list of the dead... ...most of the bodies found in and around the vicinity of Delight's junction were supposed to have been washed down from other cities and towns from by the main flood....

When the explosion occured that Hovided the whole city of Abblesann to the ground with a record breaking loss of life never written of or heard of ...in all annals of disasters, the shock went through in varying degrees of force through all sections of Calverinia, Dondonia and Concentinia,--- the path of main destruction cmoot committed to towns and villiages being to the extent of nearly a hundred miles. Yet the earthquake waves produced by the explosion seemed to have crossed northern Calverinia, southern Abyssinikia,, northern Angeline Vine glab, Southern Concentinia,, southern Abbiamnia, northern Angelinia state, Northern Dombobia and southern Triponguella creating shock and waves wherever it was felt. Throughout all sections where cities and towns were not severely injured, injuri, 1,000 cities, of moderate size, a score more of towns and villages and all and homes reported the breaking of windows, the jumping of dishes from tables and pain the swaying of house hold hanging fixtures, and freaks of all kinds that was most ingly astonishing and worse than the mysterious manifestations of fabulous gnom and phantoms. Wagons in streets jumped up and down, street cars left the rails, fences vibrated, steeples rocked, and a strangling singing noise was heard in all electric wiring. It caused hundreds of thousands of people to perform strange antics for the moment, stopped the running of all machinery in factories, and sto clus clocks, and brought on a million freaks, both funny and serious, freaks tha would not be believed by a half wit if he was told about them.

It caused great loss of life and property in Northeastern Calverinia, over a million people being killed in three big cities, or at least seven hundred thous killed in each, and even destroyed many vessels of the eastern coast of Calveri by bringing on a freak tidal wave.

The following dispatches show how wide spread was its dreadful fury in the badly effected;

Calverinia Eastern or Southwestern Abyssinikia

June the 1th----- Endless damage was done here, and at other near by towns an villages and unaccountable strange freaks by some strange concussion which is to have been produced by the violent explosions near Abbiana volcanic early last Reports from Crystal city a summer resort on the Abyssinikian border near Lu Luturh say that every high building has been razed, every dock has been destroy and all the boats on shore being completely jammed together from the effects great violence of the long distanced reaching air waves. In this city the air w seemed to have the effects of a windstorm blowing one hundred and seventy miles hour and reports of great property loss and fatalities have come in. The cause this convulsion is being investigated.

St Joseph , Calverinia, extreme north June the 1t 1th.---- The steamer St Jose arrived here at three oclock this afternoon from -----shore Abbiamnian city to have been. She left that place at 9:1t oclock yesterday morning, and the reports of a fearful disaster affecting the whole city last night. The captain was here from Abbiamn and was on the dock waiting to meet her husband and the touched the dock. All that day, anxious watchers sailed on the docks and at the highest point of the river for a mile glimpse of the boat, fearing it in the path of the enormous flood that started to day! Many people had friends and relatives among the passengers and crew, and as the morning hours were anxiety became intense. The captian states he believes Abolamin city is no

Lucrane, June the First.-----As a result of the furious air waves and tidal of probably an extensive earthquake which affected this region last night, telegra and telephone lines were prostrated in all direction from this city to day. The seemed of sixteen seconds duration, the air waves seeming to attain a velocity sixty mile miles an hour. so day the excitement over the news of the disaster has west is exciting and heart rending. Up to noon today many of the big river pa steamers which left Calverinia city for Abyssinikia state last evening for this port have not been heard from. They were here did here at four oclock this morning and its now after noon. The passenger steamer State of Calverinia has here this same hour from poverty Row has not arrived at noon. The steamer Germain of the Pandora steamship company's fleet lost her smokestack off riverport Abyssinikia because of the air waves. Her barge was swamped and almost sunk be but both reached port later and the captian reported a strange and sudden lowering of the river before before had been up to flood tide because of melting spring and winter snow ruins. The river had been to the near top of the highest levees, and had lowered about thirty feet almost in an hour. The captian thinks something is wrong. The Vivian passenger boat has not yet arrived, having been in shelter at long range the earthquake and was stranded, the water suddenly going so low that she cannot be floated.

Les Petour, Calverinia June 2th------ In the concussions of earthquakes yesterday morning early, two cities are said to have been wrecked. Yesterday the river Schuchner, Norma stranded near Heidle island because of a sudden lowering of the river, and all other river shipping there is not able to move.

Ava Maria----Calverinia June 2th------ Something like wind which could not be felt seemed to have reached a velocity of one hundred and thirty four miles an hour from the northwest at six midnight, being accomplished by a earthquake shock of seconds duration that made queer freaks. Many vessels are stranded in the river

THE WORLD MORE SUSPICIOUS THAN SUPPOSED. PEOPLE OF ALL ABBIEANNIA GIVE MOST GENEROUSLY TO AID THE SUFFERING THROUGHOUT THE FLOOD ZONE... MISS MILDRED GREENBURG CITY THE BIGGEST ONE HIT OUTSIDE OF ABBIEANN LAY DIRECTLY IN THE PATH OF THE FLOODS BY WIDEST AND WORST TORRENT, WITH NO WAY OF ESCAPE FROM COMPLETE RUIN EXCEPT BY THE BRICKACE RIDGE. WHAT IS CALVERINIA'S FUTURE. ALL CENTRAL CALVERINIA CITIES BEING IN DANGER. CALVERINE TOO FLOODED???----FLOOD FORETOLD. FEAR FLOODS OF LIKE CHARACTER WILL RECUR.

Perhaps it may be said that all the nations in the world, whether christian or not, at first did not believe that the disaster was of any such extent, but though they received the news exceedingly and even at first made sport and fun of the whole thing as being a kind of a big exaggerated fiction this cannot prove by all means that the world was as bad as it is painted or so heartless and indifferent as any number ofpe might etc would have every one else believe.....Ordinarily men and women and children too have enough to do in attending to affairs of their own, expecting are of course todo the same and consequently they do pay very little attention to what is going on, providing it is not any unusual incidents but when their hearts are really really touched they drop everything and rush to the rescue of the afflicted.As it was in the case of northern Angelinia, and Central Calverinia as the evidence of the disasters were brought to light.

Therefore the catastrophies almost simultaneous in both these sa states added by the tremendous forest fires raging in over a hundred different spots shocked the world beyond comprehension when all evidence proved the horrors to be more than true and it also served to bring conspicuously into notice other chilling incidents, as the rapid numbers of new enlistments more than a hundred fold draft and recruiting stations could handle in a month, and also in some of the worse sides of human nature which is always the common result of appalling disasters whrt whether created by devastating wars, storms or earthquakes great floods and fires.

The millions of surviving people of both these sadly afflicted states were not suddenly overwhelmed by the almost unprecedent fury of the floods. Hundreds of thousands were drowned and swept away into the sea to never be recovered, hundreds of thousands of others were killed whose bodies were found but whose in identification and they came from various towns and cities far away. Scores of millions lost their homes, their all, and places of business. They were suffering with hunger and stricken with a dreadful pestilence. All were brought to a common level by dangers of every description which would take volumes to tell here, death in all its most awful and terrifying form , and for the whole nation burdened by the tremendous and awful costs from these disasters an outlook of terrible uncertainty.

And yet, especially in the southern disaster in the midst of all this ruin and suffering the survivors of Heidi Junction, and other places were harassed by Abbielinian thugs and thieves and ghouls in soldier uniform who looted or set fire to property, assaulted and murdered citizens who resisted them and despoiled and mutilated the dead,,, in a shockingly savage manner to secure every kind of jewelry rings and even money. They even gutted their victims to use their hearts and other organs as trophies to show their comrades they were successful.

Devoid of any feeling og of sympathy or pity, and probably war hardened and relied upon this awful disaster caused by their still more wicked comrades as an opportunity to enrich themselves not for their own sake but for the use of their Abbielinian ungodly cause. As soon however as the surthorities could recover from the first shock of the disaster, every surviving place in the south was immediately placed under strict martial law and the troops and the armed citizens and even the women and older children surely did not hesitate to kill every one of the vandals caught in the comission og his infamious work. Public opinion also sustained this prompt form of punishment, and it was a species of law in America of southern lynching to which no objection was ever raised.

Up north in the Central Calverinia flood disaster there was no vandals, because for the first reason, the flood remaining outside the cities after going and made the way unapproachable for these ghouls, and another reason because every place was almost instantly under guard as soon as the floods went down.

The disaster also brought into prominence the exultant greed and ironry passion of a portion of human nature. The Glandelinians also taking advantage of the fact that all points of the two flood zones was cut off from bridge and railro railway communication with the mainland sections not injured by flood, or ravaged by and conspired to secure absolute control of all transportation facilities by water and railroad, with the evident purpose to prevent relief and provisions from reaching the flood victims and refugees, and even attacking fiercely with cannon and rifle fire those who were seeki seeking to carry relief to the suffering people. There was a more inhuman and wicked armyof wretches ever organized. Again all the fresh provisions in some of the cities and towns were ruined, leaving only a few Glandenburg Southeastern Abyssiniklie June 1th---- The tail end of the earthquake shocks struck this section with great force about 11:15 oclock last night and continued for about fifteen miles. The loss of windows and furniture property is heavy. A church steeple crashed to the ground killing two persons.

Nurnerburg Middle Calverinia-June the 4th The Calverinian steamer [illegible] Lillie of the Valley went aground at eight oclock this morning west of the [illegible] Life station on the Norma Run river, which seemed to have suddenly lowered [illegible] from its high water stage. Air waves of strange force came from the northeast, [illegible] earth concussions did considerable damage to the town and killed one thousand people and injured ten thousand. I have heard shipping on the north strand of the Norma Run suffered heavily, either going aground or being swept away in a flood, and many of the crew being drowned.

South Bend City Calverinia- June the 5th ----the shocks and air waves did much damage to the city here early last evening. Several vessels are reported [illegible] by a tidal wave.

used and dried articles which were available for food. Then Glandelinian agents [illegible]-ed as the owners of these came in, bent upon making profit for the cause out of the necessities of the christian citizens, pushed up the prices, raising bread three dollars and eighty cents a loaf, and bacon to nearly five dollars a pound.. [illegible] mayors of the cities, and also the Governer also however proved themselves equal to the emergency, confistigated the food supply, reduced the price to almost nothing, arresting the would be owners, and had troops sent in great numbers to drive back all rebels who were in possession of communications with the stricken districts, and capturing many prisoners compelled them too to work in the wrecked cities at the point of the bayonet.

For the Glandelinian point of vies this was the dark side of human nature, but let us go to the christian side of human nature the picture has itsbright side also. The news of the awful disaster, had hardly appeared in public print on [illegible] newspapers and in books, before countless millions of people throughout the country, and the world in general were immediately busy collecting relief. The Chief Executives of every Republic, the Governers of every states in every nation, as well as the Emperor of Abbiesania, the governers of these states, and all the mayors of every surviving city issued their appeals to the people whose sympathies were so quickly aroused, and whose very hearts and hands were enlisted genrl generiously in the work of relief.

Every one of the far off countries sent their offerings, every city and [illegible] in the world where Abbiesanniens were living as tourists contributed hugely, and all crowned heads hastened to enble sympathy together with immensely more substantial evidences of their kindly feeling.

Without the slightest delay of any kind instently and spontaneously, the [illegible] machinery of chairty began its work. In the presence of such a dreadful dreadful [illegible] of wars horrors involving suffering and death for over five thousand miles of land in both sections singly, the brotherhood of man asserted itself and all things else were forgotten. Only the higher and nobler attributes of human nature asserted itself.

Private people, all business houses, every great corporation, municipal state and national government vied with each other, as they did when the fire swept over Princtown, and the flood from Lake Selliq Selicia and Mic-Chirther Run swept over southern Calverinia, and Northern Angelinia in expediting relief to the flood ruined people of Central and Northern Angelinia states.

Day by day despite all efforts of the enemy to prevent it trains running [illegible] the only line open sped to Francis Atlanta from every part of the country, loaded with all kinds of supplies and provisions, and the telegraph wires carried orders for money testifying to the gradual enormity of the great work of relief, [illegible] to the higher and nobler instincts of human nature, when it is appealed [illegible] by the claims of humanity. If there were any the ghouls of Central Calverinia were few in number. Its generous sympathisers were to be counted by the hundreds of millionsThe scope and rapidity of the Central Calverinia and Northern Angelinia relief work all over the country of Abbiesania afforded a spectacle at once gratifying and noteworthy. and the quick movement of the men citizens throughout the nation to [illegible] Draft Boards and recruiting stations for munitance into the army was also gratifying as well as thrilling. It shows how the nation was still affected and aroused by the disaster. Trains laden with food for the sufferers were rushed toard the stricken states from every quarter of Abbiesania, and all soldiers from every camp or mobolisation camp yet yet called to the fighting armies further south, rushed to the scenes of disaster to take charge and stop the work of Glandelinian ghouls, and vandals.

From Pandora to Angelinia Agathia, nearly every city, regardless of size, contributed its largest quota to the generous cause, and all doctors that could came to do what they could. Even from across the fierce Mic-Chirthian seas to the [illegible] Atlanta Ocean the Liverpool and Paris funds came being on the list of $10,000,000 [illegible] within a week after the unaccountable disaster, the relief committees of Central Calverinia and Northern Angelinia were in possession of a magnificent relief fund that went t far toard alleviating the physical sufferings of its homeless scores of millions.

Here may be observed a social Phenomenen that may well give pause to all critics who are always desiroys to inveigh against all commercial and industrial age, claiming the rich tight with their goods and money, and not caring whether others starve or not.

Even a long series of these kinds of aid and of liberality are not at all rare in the United states either. A long series of them might be compiled within the period between the Chicago fire and the disasterious Porto Rican hurricane. And if it does not do wrong to say even money and letters of Condolence came from here also. There was in this story, throughout the world, not any single christian nation excepted that did not sent letters of s m sympathies. Singly and in the aggregate they are also a striking negative to the charge of sordid commercialism in the individual and national life of the Abbiesnnians. The modern Abbiesnnian making different trades with all nations is making more money than ever before, he is righteous and God Loving, he has a soft generious heart as well as a business head and he is giving larger sums to noble causes, than were ever given before.

Probably the increased willingness of the people to help stricken communities Central Calverinia and Northern Angelinia he due more to the railroads and telegraph lines than to anything else. Modern charitt is the child of modern conditions These indispensible adjuncts to commercial enterprize alone makes widespread relief possible. And if the telegraph and the news paper and all correspondents had not placed the sad picture of Calverinia's and Angelinia's misfortunes at once before the eyes of Abbiesnnians from ocean to ocean and to nationalities of every part of the world despite all the enemy does to prevent it, there could have been no such national and worldy impules of generosity and sympathy. And though declaring themselves not naturally at war with Slandelinia, nor having no intentions whatever to interfere in the war, nevertheless all christian nations throughout the world severed all relationship and communications with Slandelinia, declaring her as a nation gone mad with hydrophiobia and that for all christians its safer and wiser to keep of the mad dogs tracks. Maybe t hs worse insult could any wicked nation ever receive and yet she had all she could do at that to fight Abbiesnnia, to go and resent it.

Early in or late in 1912 about november a forest fire of unusual proportions brought calamity to many inhabatants included by floods and this disasters b combined, adding to the horrors of Irlentown and Lake Selicia tha it was a month before the news reached the world because of all attempts of the to sever all communications, and if it had not been for the christian soldiers and their artillery guarding all railriads railroads running running teard the rails of devastation it would have been another month before relief could have been to the sufferers. The impulse to give cannot thrive under such circumstances, but have been tender hearts in all ages but only in Abbiesnnia as well as in the United States and elsewhere in our time have the means of quick and uninterrupted communications made human sympathies effective across continents. The railroad, the telegraph and the newspaper have lengthened the arm of charity quite as much as that of business.

The horrible incident of Central Calverinia and northern Angelinia is a fine example of the way in which these agencies BIND all sections of the nation together in increasing solidarity.

The great value of the National Abbiesnnian armies, and the remarkable correctness of their quickly driving to each destination after the disaster, the remarkable moderateness of the observations of their generals and other officers, and all their signal corps, may all military things considered, was demonstrated by the events proceeding and succeeding the two ernormous floods. Christian spies overheard Slandelinian generals planning to have dikes somewhere in the north that to create and make a disasterous flood, and these spies gave the evidence to their generals who gave warning of the approaching danger days for the real facts reached itself throughout Central Calverinia and Northern Angelinia. Even the signal and the weather bureau anticipated the course of the ernormous northern flood course from the vinicity of San Domingo city fourty miles north of Abbiesnn, when it reached the vinicity of Mildred Greenburg where it made a deflection no human skill could have foreseen or believed.

Neither the army, the signal corps, nor the Weather bureau were caught however. It sent out its flood signals both for northwestern Angelinia twice, the already flooded section and for southwestern A Calverinia and when the flood turned from the north of Mildred Greenburg, Vivian Hickey, and Francis Atlanta of the ernormous wreckage jam formed by it and moved southeastward in one ernormous moving sea loaded with wreckage and human beings, the Bureau turned its attention to southeastern and Central Angelinia states and the northern Border, and on the morning of June the 25th nearly twenty fours ours after the beginning of the disaster warned the people of northern Angelinia of its coming to join the flood already raging in the south and devastating thi - thirty cities, and during that day its signals all along the Angelinian and Calverinian boundary line, thus giving all people time to flee for higher grouns and the hills.

Of course the observers could not know what terrible energy it would retain all the way down while crossing the northern Angelinia border. Perhaps still greater accuracy in forecasting was displayed by the bureau and the army signal corps in the warnings given out to river craft on Tuesday morning June the 10th. Though nearly all lines of communications in Calverinia and Angelinia states were cut off by flood, fire, disasterious explosions and the enemy, and horrible battles, the bureau and the military signal corps kept track of the flood as it swept through the middle about Heidi junction with the disasterious force of the Johnstown flood, and into the east portion of Vivian Hickey and all besieging christian camps and soldiers in that locality, and gave timely warning that it would turn abruptly southeastward, across southern southern Calverinia and thence across Northern Angelinia state to join the flood at Heidi Junction. It further predicted the furious destruction which prevailed throught the whole course and extent of the flood, the maximum velocity of the torrent, the changes caused by the flood in rivers, and the amount of damage done and the loss of life. Every river captian had ample warning given him. So swift was the speed and progress of the flood that very few escaped despite the warning given them.

The appalling nature of the wreck and ruin and countless horrors to which Central Calverinia, and Northern Angelinia States were reduced naturally led to some talk of allowing the entire number of inhabatants abandon those territories altogether and till the arm of the war swung off some other way or receded further south. An army officer concluded his report to Abbiesnnian National Imperial headquarters expression of the opinion that all the cities and towns and all countryside in he stated was absolutely destroyed beyond the ability to recover, that not even the Angels in heaven can comprehend the awful horror and extent of the disaster, and many railways were said to be in favor of leaving the two flooded sections of the battle to the sport of the tremendous war storm and heading a movement to remove all encampments to cities and towns further north, such as in Abbiesnnia proper, and Appalachia, untill armies big enough are created to hurl the Slandelinian vermin out of Calverinia for all time.

It is natural to say however that all the refugees of Central Calverinia and Northern Angelinia should consider the advisability of abandoning such a perilous section of the states untill the war is either over, or the enemy is thrown out of the country entirely and never can get another foothold, especially also as there can never be any complete security against a disaster like these two floods as long as the war continues to rave and roar with volcanic thunder and all its other unknown and unspeakable scourges and horrors.

But it is safe to say that these ruined cities in their proper time will be rebuilt out of the old wreckage at their same spots. Mank Mankind in Abbiesnnia is not fast to desert any spot on the face of the earth because of a sudden and most rare confusion of war as this.

The region of Mis-Whirther Run was not abandoned because of the disasterious flood that killed 10,000 people and destroyed many hundreds of millions of dollars worth of property in November 1913. similar flood disasters in Northern Angelinia have not induced the survivors to abandon a single city.

Even hundreds of thousands were swallowed up in the flood of Lake Selicia the same month, and year it did not change the site of the cities and towns that were devastated, nor will these still more disasterous floods ever cause the survivors to change their habitat. This history therefore shows all Abbiesnnians are at as tenacious as Europeans and Americans in this regard. Abbiesnnian peasants continue to cultivate all land in spite of all past war disasters already known and the inhabatants of Irlentown were not disheartened, when the forest fires committed awful ravages and drove ernormous christian armies in panic before it.

The leading business men of these regions emphasized a point when they began to talk of rebuilding as good as possible from what can be salvaged of the old wreckage which had escaped general attention at that time. They were exceedingly anxious that commercial bodies steamship owners, brokers and those interested in the commerce of towns and cities in Calverinia on river and sea fronts should be as considerate as possible in their treatment of the flooded sections that is to say there should be liberalities in the commercial sections.

Therefore these men urged that the unusual extent of the great disasters should be taken into account when adjustment of contracts took place and in all business arrangements untill all cities and towns devastated by the waters could regain their feeling. The business men of all afflicted cities hoped also that their business associations would apply a like spirit to all commerce affected by the floods. And they were not astonished or disappointed as the results showed.

The big cities and towns were just entering upon the busy season, especially for supplying the fighting christian armies with rations and so on. There were for one town with a population of thirty thousand from two to three hundred ships under sailing contracts with the ports for the months of June, July, August, September and December. All of these ships were when the flood came on the rivers, and all were ruined. Even this paralysis meant much unusual loss and the derangement of countless contracts. It was a time which called for generious policy not for strict enforcements of the letter of agreements. The cities and towns only asked what their business men thought was just, that thereby the shock to commerce might be mitigated. When the time came these cities and towns found that they had not asked too much as they recieved all the consideration and aid they could wish.

All representives of the railroad systems which connected these ruined cities and towns with the outside world before the occurance of the disaster agreed in saying in a meeting held at Angelinia Agathia that the residents of the states, just to defy the enemy would rebuild in the same spot in spite of the terrible experiences. They believed that both Calverinia and Angelinia states injured financially though he their citizens hadcbeen would see their flood swept towns a cities rebuilded out of the olf old wreckage and with new provisions and materials without the aid of outside capitol. Also the new energy and courage displayed by these people is what is to be expected as the same in a nation full of Abbiennia and American like pluck. Though stunned and prostrated under the two mm most fa and extensive disasters that had ever overtaken an Abbiennian community during the whole war so far, and which will probably never be outranked in all other disasters, Calverinia and northern Angelinia only took a few days to regain thei breath. They simply have reasserted the same indomitable courage and will pow by which Americans themselves in times past built a great nation where there a Indian and wild beast infested wilderness a century ago.

Just like what had been observed in Galvestion after the flood the term watts seen in every Calverinian and Angelinian flood wrecked city is " glean a make the Glandelinian prisoners work like they worked the child slaves." Desp grim humor there lies a stern determination that is also one of the proudest of the Abbiennian race.. therefore there is no reason why a greater and a gr

This plan will it is believed materially decrease the danger from the floods made by the enemy mining dike vandals. It will also be wise if this work be done to construct spillways on all levees which will be also heavily guarded an untoward fate Calverinia and Angelinia should now begin by adopting all practical means for defying the enemy with success and all he might try in h to gain his end in favor of the war on his side.

Even though the expense and delay willl be greater it will pay to give th remaining dikes levees, and dams all possible safe guards from further blasting by Glandelinian vandal engineers.

it is ever evident now the government will surely take steps to prevent its repet ition by using stern measures with the enemy. The same commercial advantages that first tempted Calverinian and Angelinian settlers to these cities and mak them the most thriving centers of the nation are still present.

Men who owned Real Estate in these flooded pron provinces of the states will not abandon them even though the improvements thereon have been reduced to a tota wreck. Even the imperial government to defy the enemy and all he may do will not hesitate to see to the rebuilding of all cities and towns on so precarious a site, and even private interests were or are not likely to abandon a city two or villag or rural district even for so terrible a disaster as that of Central Calverinia and Angelinia states.

ost of the war disasters, which have recentlybeen described in the earlier parts this usually great war occured mostly in the westward section of either the states Angelinia, or Calverinia, but the worse of these disasters have occured mostly the state of Calverinia itself, and even for these slightest war disasters there e no storm described in the story, that could ever compare with one.

October and June were so far the worse mo months of tyese kind of disasters
d the first of these disasters occured in the south of October between the 16thand
th there the city of Holendale and seventy eight big villages, and three cities d been destroyed by an enemy made flood,where it was predicted, though the real ue never will be known) that over 900,000 lives were lost added b added by re, and the wrecking of towns by terrific explosions. The flood was a general vision of nearly four hundred miles of the country, and probably the Glandelinian ilitary engineers who had blown up the dikes in the levees of the Ulo-pellester n river never had been captured though they too were also responsible in the fact devastating fire at Schleds town and perryville gave a loss of fourty thousand n the month of November, of the same year, so far as may be observe if had not n my accuracy in the first two years of the war up to June the 1th 1915, least, fifty seven or seven great disasters occured in the state of Calverinia ost of these of course might have occured around and in the vinicity of vivian Hickey during the great seige prevailing there, but the disaster of O ember 19th 1915 occured at Holendale and wrought havoc over four to five hundred les of Calverinian country, hundreds of miles from Vivian Hickey. and the Glandelinians stood for that. The disaster at Schleeder town and perryville of novem ber 11th was more ernormous and it was in this disaster, that these two cities re flooded with great loss of life and property while many to n towns and villages the whole country side was destroyed beyond recovery, and that lubaba Belicia was turned to a more stream so much water went out. It was the first most serious disaster of any kind ih in the war.

With these two big disasters, I'm not afraid to say that two conditions favor their occurance. Throughout all portions of the Angelinian state and Calverinia, where big rivers or lakes, and also seas and the like abound, nothone of these or any of their construction walls or dikes have been properly guarded. Of course it might be believed that the enemy would not have been mean or wicked enough to purposely and without the slightn slightest feeling for others, or the consequences cause such a big disaster, or have the nerve.

Certainly to say during the early part of the war, Glandelinia had captured the city of Vivian Hickey, and since then, a terrible danger lay over that section of Calverinia, more christian armies than I dare state here have been having their eyes on Vivian Hickey, all their purposes was to recapture that as its downfall would probably mean the crushing of the wicked Glandelinian rebellion, and it might have been this.
condition exactly which brought on these terrible floods, so make such a flood, the Glandelinian glandelinians believed would prevent so many christian armies converging upon the territory of Vivian Hickey. But just the same the glandelinians did not have any regard of whom the main sufferers of the floods were to be, and anyway if they did known did know they surely did not worry th the least bi least bit.

But the main org origin of this main big flood can never be fully settled, it is certainly evident; and the reader himself may also suspect that it certainly did not all come from the Norma River alone. That would have been impo possible as big as that river is. Maybe if I dar dare to say it, if a wave from the Sea the height of probably over four hundred feet high would have swept the land the the length of the same extent of this flood the accompanying horror of the flood then would not have been equaled. Even if the flood produced by the sea itself have been forced to great distances, it could not have been compared to the terror of this inundation. Here would the terrible phenomena of this Central Calverinia flood, the tremendous speed and force of the raging waves loaded down with wreck of unknown weight and size, rushing forward like a hurricane tossed and thrown sea, the wrecking of countless houses, the drowning of nations of people, and the force of surging waters that seems to be damned from Hundreds of millions of sing heavenly tanks with the force of twice a hundred million hundred million tim.

Almost all in an instant this horror occurs and slowly and very gradu it seems. The waters of a big flood takes days and t days to go down. There are twenty to thirty days of this gradual drop of an enormous flood, but when the about who inhabitants who survives seen all the horror done the whole phenom as well suggest a reversal of all that all that has gone before.

No disaster probably of any kind, storm, fire, or earthquake, ir twisting tornado is confined to a narrow track, and has no long drawn out

A big fire, either that of a city, or a forest destroys totally but there is chance for fugitives to escape with their lives. And the climax of these disasters can sometimes be reached in a single moment; from the beginning a flood of any kind, the whether big or small, extensive or narrow, grows and sometimes when it has reached its height nothing can withstand it.

It is one of those terrible blows borne from the bosom of the seas that nearly has taken every city and town of Northern and Central and Western Calver and Northern Angelinia off the map. The great distant flood of the burst Lake Bellicia in November 1 is 1912 nigh frightened the whole of Calverinia of Schlesdertown and Perryville and hundreds of other little towns and villages and the destruction of over one million lives and countless millions of dollar of property and the simultaneous Miamirither Bun River Horror, and the loss too to three thousand lives; and hundreds of millions of dollars worth of prop has kept Calverinia and the whole Abbiamnian nation weepy ever since.

But to say since the recent inevitable flood disaster of June 1913 for it to suggest rebuilding the wrecked cities and towns will probably meet with its robation of many of the sympathising Abbiamnians who are and are still giving to the stricken people.

But even if it does happen the abandonment of Central Calverinia and Angelinia because of the enemy liable to make fut future floods comes to struggle. Ever since the country was settled or even dikes and levees had its silent citizens had been committing truthfully that never since then had the of big loads ever broke through and come over the land causing death and destru happen again if all dikes and levees are either lowered gradually to let the during the wet but take their own course of flooding, or have them be strictly strongly guarded that the enemy can never make a flood of like disaster again.

But they gave no consistent reason for their belief. The cities are floods of the past has been as boundless as this one if not so catastrophic; the such a relentless enemy still hung over the archipelago of river dikes and war storm brooding calm but their belief is spreading, and the sympathising the towns and cities will be rebuilded and develope as the old settler never to see them grow, when they squatted there in open country and wilderness sixty to seventy years ago.

The settler stock of Central Calverinia was of queer nature: The national tlement settlement of this portion of the country, especially by the rivers and as hereinbefore and perhaps was a sort of captian Streeter Origin: The only was that the first people that founded these towns and cities and sent things unheard of labor horrors and troubles as the first settlers of our country bought the land at extensive prices from the Mother country which established a town site company to attract immigration. The main states of the Holy further North as flat as and beautiful, probably as The garden of Hay thousands of miles away. But deep water was between them, especially Ocean and to the north and south was an agricultural country that any nation of world would love to own and possess. So the settlers waited: They held to their ions, tilled the land builded bulldid homes, and traded city with

In this way Central Calverinia developed not only in growing prosperity

the character of its people that all would love to enjoy the company of. It treated and cared for exceedingly by its mother country for years after the Calverinia shores began to be peopled. It got full connections with railroads the Mother country, and when the year of 1890 came Calverinia was the most utiful and prosperious and righteous daughter in the country of Abbiamnia, and the most prosperious river and sea coast cities, untill it almost outranked the sperity of the other company in everything it she possed possessed. In the ars between 1900 and till the war a new element was started by Abbiamnia which en then had surprised the world: Abbiamnia was not satisfied with the change of ings in Calverinia, and therefore the then conditions in Calverinia was frowned on by Abbiamnia, everything was not as it should have been. The rivers were one turbing element. Though no loss or life occured they kept continually overflowing land ruining crops; and the mother country in behalf of her loyal and righteous ughter did not like it;

Therefore the clamor for dikes and dams were met with and levees and dikes were ade that only severe earthquake shocks of long duration or terrific explosions alone uld ever rent; then a new series of beautiful and strong dikes had been completed long the norma un; Miss, Missouter un and other rivers in 1904 and when new dams had been established under great difficulties, trying labors, and unusual expenses, affairs had come to a pass when the daughter and her mother found relationships still closer together, together and therefore in 1905 Calverinia also became a state.
Angelinia long before this was a state and did her share to aid her sister and both are perfectly confident of their holy and loving mother.

"This country of Calverinia is not what it used to be a score of years ago" said the conservative.

"No" said another. " it is beautiful, a land of righteous people prosperious, and a god which even those of heaven would surely be glad to possess."

" As a matter of fact" the young Calverinian business man would say" Calverinia needs time to reward her Mother Country for all she done for her."

This was the situation in 1910 when even the Government began to expend enormous sum of money for all Central Calverinian cities and towns and farms and other places.
This was the situation slightly altered by time, when enormous and beautiful railroads were built to all connections with the far distant cities of Angelinia and when the government appropriated $6,200,000,000,000 for the deepening of all river harbors, of Centrail Calverinia, the improvement of railroads, and when export trade from river towns approached the mark of $100,000,000,000, annually, and this virtually was the Calverinia state, as well as Northern Angelinia, now like two sisters frustrated with partial paralysis caused by an enemy and h their beautiful cities and towns in ruin.

No wonder Abbiamnia was, not only grief stricken, but more angry than ever before. Throughout the whole nation the popu population of men folk stormed recruit boards, and recruiting stations in every city and town to get into the army; to avenge the disasters, and all those who were rejected for slight defects mobbed the slums or enlisted into the army. Many recruiting places in all cities were destroyed mobbed and their members tarred and feathered or stones because the applicat were rejected for slight defects. Never in any case in all causes throughout the world since the beginning of time was a nation ever so hotly contended or aroused.
Even now though continuing the war, Abbiamnia was trembling with fear.

In rebuilding these wrecked towns and cities it has been suggested, that as much as materials can be obtained because of the war that all the wreckage that can be salvaged should be used. The plan is feasible in every sense and it is intended that the value of the towns and cities so would more than reduce the cost.

Never ever Central Calverinia may decide it will have departed from several historic instances of water swept cities and towns and country side in building and restoration. In addition to the abandonment of Shaw Meadale of Southern Calverinia and the past descriptions of Quarry Ville and Schlesdertown which the people to defy and despite the enemy retained, and restored.

But this section was again overwhelmed by the flood of Northern Angelinia, not because that flood was to have been so extented but because of the overwhelming push of the northern flood that joined twenty miles west of Heidi junction between Glorium and Chamberlain.

The region of Lake Bellcia was overwhelmed on the 24th of June just about 3 days after the floods struck Mildred Greenburg Heidi junction and other places.
Heaven maybe knows how many more lives were lost in this territory and Perryville and Schlesdertown were nearly wiped out this time. The description of this part of the flood would be near about the same as the Northern section of the flood that had laid over Central Calverinia waste.

On the noon of the 24th when the day seemed more serene and beautiful than ever before, a sudden change far in the distance north of the recently drained Lake Bellcia touched the blended olo colors of the plains and low landscapes-----the strange moving motion of something stranger in color. First the whole distant land seemed to rise bodily at the sky, the undulated horizon line of the land o landscapes lifted to a strange straightness, the line darkened to a strange green and approached

——a monstrous wringle of something mysterious, finally proving itself to be immeasureable fold of freewater loaded with millions of tons of wreckage movin as swift as acloud shadow pursued by sunlight. So the flood rushed on, like a u hurricane heaping the ocean against the land. First rivers were merged int became lakes, sea marshes changed to oceans of water, and the remains of the hig which since the past disaster remained only a large river was now a roaring ocea water pouring over its own remainingdikes and roaring through the opening like the ocean through the Holland dikes when the whole of Holland is being wiped out.
The Aron Arenburgs Run River first rose sixteen feet above the highest water mar in its history and threatened to overflow anse its levees and pouring through in broken abysses in its torn dikes like Niagara falls trying to wipe out Lake Erie.

One hundred and ten miles away Glorlannia to treme trembled at the towering ma of the Arenburgs Run. All small lakes bursted their own bounderies. For ten days and nights the roaring torrents continued, thousands of cottages in Angelina and Junction city were swept away. The trees bent their heads to earth or were lifte the roots. And still the fury of the flood grew louder and deeper and swifter with every passing hour. Far off monsterous forests swamped by the flood seemed tear wildly at their own roots——shivering like tethered creatures that hear b night the approaching howl od of destroyers.

And swift in the desolation of this flood the wreckers come, the spoi lers of the dead——savage skimmers of the flood horror——glandelinian vandal hyb to follow up the advantages left by the fate of floods. There is plunder for all and men. Her betrothal ring will not come off Guiseppe, but the delicate hand may easily, your oyster knife can severe the too tendon.

Over her little heart you will find it——Valentic——the locket held by the fine, swiss chain of woven hair..... Jump, the fastenings of thes diamond necklace are much too complicated for your poon fingers, tear them out.

Suddenly a long mighty silver thrilling fills the ears of all, there is still hurrying and scurring, swiftly one after another, the overburdened luggers and wings and flutter away. Thrice four t times the great cry rings through the gr air, and over the green flood sea, and over the far flooded landscapes and citi and towns——sheet lighting of flood breakers——and over the weird wash of a mill corpses coming to shore.

It isthe steam call of the relief boats, hastening to rescue the living gather in the dead.

The tremendous war tragedy is over."

Central Calverinia is wiped out. According to Chief General Hendrs Darger, th
Supreme person of the powerful bureau of Christian Secret Agent spies, assi Mildred Greenburg, Francis Atlanta, and Poverty Bay were in the face of the fall force and brunt of the flood, and hundreds of other places not touched by the fl
,e yet had been in the same danger and been protected to a great extent by the w mers. Enormous drifting wreckage which the flood carried at many sections of it edge. It was apparent the Central Calverinia flood was went to have struck my where from the north to the southe southeastern boundary line of Calverinia, a down to the southeast, croped Angelinia Agathia and Dorothy Gale a anywhere within the path of the rushing waters. This flood in its onward course, haps one thousand six hundred miles wide, had a vertex of o six hundred to seve hundred miles in width. It was in this vertex of the flood that so much land be laid in waste. It is this fact that will also lead more strongly than any other the rebuilding of cities and towns in central Calverinia. With an expert bulleti of $100,000,000,000 annually with the Mother Country and other nations , will not remain pri prostrated long. There is a type of man in its population that will defy the enemy in his reeking face, and that will not be driven from their towns because of a war flood and forest fires. And there are more than fif thousand miles of land which the vertex of such a flood may may waste itself thi harming other cities and towns, and both conservatism and commercialism will tak the risk that hundreds of other cities at river fronts and sea fronts are subj continually taken.

At the same time there are those who see for Calverinia a better existen and a state though almost dying now will be like her Mother by and by. It will better than it ever grew before, it will be the home of people whose fur fortune were before swept away in a terrible war made deluge. Calverinia shall bear the brunt with Abbieannia in making Glandelinia pay dearly for the outrage. Her ship shall strike like a thunderbolt, and Glandelinia will never be forgiven or be allowed to return to her former home and mother and will be an outcast wild in the face of the earth, like Cain was who killed his brother.

Ever since the outbreak of the great intercene war, Calverinia has had to contend with the fears of the rebellious and wayward sister Glandelinia. The grim and violence of the war between the months of Novem November 1913, with the fl and the disasters following at every single day showed that these fears had bee increased following the destruction of G Pullaway and other places and fires and dreadful mas a massacres of children, and the horrible pelge of Vivian Hickey early in 19 2. But months and days will not wipe out the flood that disaster neither will a thousand Centuaries. Hundreds of thousands of rers may leave the Central section of the state only to enlist in the army ut redressfrom Glandelinia for the disaster, millions have been killed there, and killed in the streets of cities and towns; or buried in the rivers and the sea .

eath rate of 1,200,000 drove Sperry ville and Schleedertown from the map of erlinia in 1912. Five to 10,000,000 or more deaths of the 100,000,000 population Central Calverinia, and Northern Angelinia must have its influence upon the living.

For with the assurances of the Abbieannian Military signal, and weather bureau's may be recognized that in the strange course of the war there had been strange lods in which extremes might have been repeated from Natures great laboratory.
ervation has put this period of repetition a at every other month. And according this , first in the case of Forest fires the range of maximum a d and minimum s been within such a period starting since June 1912. Without question early the war, Central Calverinia, and even the city of Calverine had been in the track certain abnormal but not infrequent war made forest fires, which failed to be lected from the Mid-Hollester and Carle Osborne forest regions. This one with ved steadily from the south for nearly two weeks kept to its northward course, and ch straight into the regions of the Mid-Shifthian Run where a terrific rainstorm unately arose to overcome the Red plague.

In the southeastern Calverinian forest fires which destroyed Brentown and other places and wiped out many hundreds of miles of forests; and even which even is still burning as fiercely as ever with no check to it in di night, a new lism seems to have been established, yet its repetition may be looked for within next month. As a fact of understanding, indeedthe average period between the urrence of these maximum forest fires, and flood disasters has been less than two ths.

General Hendre Darger one of the head Persons of the Gemini was always an observer the periodic war disaster horrors, and his own theory held in great measure th the observations of the signal corps and the Abbieannian Weather Bureau's.
"It is a general proposition" said general Darger "it means just this much, se that Angelinia Agathia has a big flood disaster on June the 18th next year.
hin two months after we may expect another war disaster of the kind. It may not in Angelinia Agathia itself, the flood may be two hundred, or three hundred miles y, on any side of it. But in the same general territory about the same time it l be repeated. Suppose a terrible battle, or a great victory for one side or the er occurs, its repetition may be looked for within another two months. So with rems of the fury of battles, influences on armies, and all the other actions of military of both sides. They too have their cycles, and the every other month ere rest of them. But in the case of Sperryville and Schleedertown one of its st greatest floods was experienced in jun November 1912., and the second in June 3, and in some ways these historic facts almost tend to confirm general Dargers servations.

Abbieann's destruction, and that of all other cities and towns o of Central erlinia had already been predicted. The disaster had been foretold a week before actually happened. Every seaboard city south of Abbieann and north of Abbieann ich had not been flooded had suffered from almost a destructive convulsion because of volcanic blast like explosions. Mid-Shirther Janet, New Glory, Godfrey, St atine, Savannah, and Berlin, North Calverinia states were partly wrecked. Emerald , Sandmore, Agathia, and two others suffered in various degrees, including Philadelphia, , while Caldwell suffered less, but the destruction at Seaman and Altern erlinia was the grandest horror and occasioned grave loss of life.

The secondary shocks produced by the explosion was felt on the Mid-Agathian and Calverinia sea coasts, and perhaps had extended some distance along the Calverinian sea coast of Angelinia and Angeline vine states. At some sports nearest the zones of the blasts the shocks had been terrible, with great and unaccountable s of life, extending from North Calverinia down along the coast toward Vivian ay, it was calamitous. Lower Calverinia suffered severely along the coast. San go and Coronado in Central Calverinia but on the coast suffered severely, cially the latter. The destruction of cities and towns was sudden and brief, within twenty to thirty seconds, and not far from midnight May the last. Starting Abbieann, as ar already described with such disasterious and bloodcurdling ects, it was felt far southward, and so suddenly had the disaster come that the vivors thought it was an earthquake shock and an ernormous ernormous tidal wave d developed along the Calverinian coast. The central western coast of Calverinia lt it the worse and the shocks severely injured Havana Junction. It's sister ster city Venesuela bound to Calverinia as a beautiful and magnificent seaport was alled partly by the flood and terribly shaken by the concussion so that its bitant inhabatants thought it was a natural earthquake. The destruction of the ildings was immense but no loss of life was reported. The total destruction of chief Central Calverinia city Aberdeen was greater than that of Abbieann by the cks and her total population of 112,000 were said to be destroyed.

From north Angelinia tate back to the lower shores of Abbieannia herself, all coast line cities were severely shaken, Vera Cruz(Concentinia state) suffered with equal severity, but the city of Abbieannia realized only a severe shock. Tampico and Watsonora suffered severely in Calverinia, Pandora, Abbiannia state was overwhelmed, and Constantinia is in a dangerous condition---the question arising between total and partial destruction with great fires burning in a hundred places. I will only say that indeed this was the most awful calamity on record. The flood torrent movingsouthward caused it that Calverine city had only its rebound, the ... and flood passing up the Angelinia Agathia region from one hundred to two hundred miles struck Dorothy Gale city, and Jessicia with destructive force. As the flood turned Lake Bellicia from a drained pond into a mighty roaringsea, Perryville and Schleader, town and other places never touched by the first Lake Bellicia horror suffered most severely and were more than half destroyed. Lake Bellicia city ... loss.

Southern Calverinia was entirely submerged for thirty eight days without ever showing any sigh signs of going down the least bit, the city of Chamberlain ... half submerged, and Lucille Hixson city suffered more severely, Port Arthur ... was wiped out. Lorianna suffered as much as Dorothy Gale, Angelinia Agathia and Rosa cities suffered, but not disasterously, Jessicia suffered very disastrously on its low grounds, Dorothy Gale, and Zambi much more severely on their ... , their spires toppled, and their large buildings were severely injured, and Dorothy Gales grand city hall was totally destroyed. The injury affected about one fourth of the city.

But along the main course of the flood the damage was more great than ... will ever conceive. Alanta Collis city was destroyed, and the Evangeline St Clair river flowing through that section from a small stream a hundred feet broad, ... seventy miles wide, and Evangeline St Clare city protected by its bluffs was ... from any severe calamity though its lower streets were ravaged. The rising tide affected Clarianna, and Heidi junction to a redoubled fury preceding the flood. Heidi junction being the most unfortunate of all the largest cities in the path of the flood, everything in its wakest sections being overwhelmed and ... like the town of Johnstown and the remains re remainder cooped up like ... during the hurricane and laread of the gulf but for a hundred times long period. ... Goddenden below its lowest sections were flooded and all its water ... suffered. Still more will the last of cities grow that were ruined as will be ... in last part of next chapter.
